Toronto

TORONTO IS THE focal point, the very heart of the industrial, commercial and financial activities of the Province of Ontario. More than half the manufactured products of Canada, and 26 per cent of Canada's field crops, come from that province.

But Toronto is a distributing centre of more than provincial importance. Her commerce extends to all these enormous territories, east and west, reached by Canadian Pacific. The products of her factories go beyond Canada's shores to the markets of the world.

Toronto has immense manufacturing establishments, large and small, numbering over three thousand, and some of the largest commercial houses and banks in the Dominion. With its towering sky scrapers and imposing buildings, the city is distinctively North American in the intensity of its activity and energy; through its crowded streets throbs continually a vast hum of business. Its harbor accommodation is on a magnificent scale.

Toronto is also a centre of culture and learning. Its universities and other educational institutions are widely known; its charming residential districts, its art galleries, libraries, churches and theatres very effectively support its title of "Queen City". Nor must Toronto's famous "Fair" be omitted from this brief chronicle.

Founded towards the end of the eighteenth century, Toronto owed its growth to the immigration of United Empire Loyalists; and it was their sturdy patriotism, and the undaunted tenacity of their descendants, that transformed Ontario from a wilderness into what it is now, the most populous province of Canada.

So widespread are her activities that transportation which "Spans the world" has become a vital factor in Toronto's future. There is a bond of common interest linking the activities of the Queen City with the greatest of the world's carriers—the
