THE DELTA TIMES

Vol. 1. No. 4. LADNER, B C., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1903. $1.00 a year

The Delta's Great Show

A Very Successful Event and Well Patronized.

The Delta Agricultural Society held their 16th annual exhibition on Saturday last, the 26th September on their spacious grounds, under rather unfavorable circumstances. The weather for some time previous had been very unsettled, rain having fallen for several days just previous to its opening, and lots of grain suffering in the fields conduced to dishearten the farmers and made itself felt in the scarcity of exhibits.

All the exhibits, though lacking in quantity were of decidedly good quality. The root crops were excellent as also was the fruit, and very hard to beat, no matter where raised.

The most noticeable display was that from Trenant Park, there being sixty entries, many of which took first prize. If more interest were displayed in individual exhibits, it would tend to increase the number of exhibitors and would be an inducement to improve the quality and quantity of farm produce grown by each farmer.

In fruit the exhibits were very varied and of excellent shape, size and coloring. It has been said that the Lower Mainland was no good for apples, but last Saturday's exhibit belied the statement.

The ladies' work department contained some very excellent specimens of needlework and lace work, work of an order one would expect to meet from professionals and not ordinary farmers' wives and daughters.

The specimens of work by the little ones are a credit to any community.

Following is the list of prizes, the programme of the races, also that of the Band:

Night Before Battle

The meeting last night was quiet and orderly. William Leary occupied the chair and introduced the speakers W. H. Ladner, Thos. Forster and John Oliver.

For a full report read the result of the poll this evening, which we will publish free soon as possible.

Took a Header.

Sir William's horse took a header off the steamer Transfer on Monday morning, and came near being the cause of a deckhand named Johnson losing his life.

A band of horses was being embarked for the Westminster Fair, W. H. Ladner taking his along for use, when Mr. Hollinshead's stallion made a bite at him. Mr. Ladner's horse preferred the river to such treatment. After reaching the water he made a landing under the wharf. Johnson, in endeavoring to bring him to the road, had to swim the horse up the slough a short distance, in doing which he became thrown off, thereby nearly losing his life.

Chris. Johnson, another deckhand, jumped to the rescue, and not only saved his fellow countryman and co-worker but showed us again that not all men live for self alone.

OATMEAL MILL.

Some time ago it was brought to our notice that a movement was on foot to start an oatmeal mill in the Delta, now we are asked what about it? What has become of the promoters? Have they suddenly become weary in well doing? What is wrong, anyway? If it is still a live issue let us hear something about it so that we may impart the information to others.

We wish to draw attention to the fact that many have not been heard from regarding their old receipts. For the information of those who might have overlooked the notice, we repeat it—All subscribers to the News will be supplied with the Times for the balance of their subscription; all we ask is that the last receipt be forwarded to us that we may complete our mailing list.

We had intended issuing a supplement containing the exhibition matter but unforeseen obstacles prevented such being done.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Fraser, of Eden, Man., paid a visit to Mrs. Honeyman on Tuesday last. Mr. and Mrs. Fraser have been doing the Sound cities for the past two months. They are seeking pastures new and may settle here if they can find room.

Twenty years ago last Tuesday the wedding took place at the Fraser homestead of Mr. and Mrs. Honeyman, the event being recalled on meeting.

Owes His Life to a Neighbor's Kindness.

Mr. D. P. Daugherty, well known throughout Mercer and Sumner counties, W. Va., most likely owes his life to the kindness of a neighbor. He was almost hopelessly afflicted with diarrhœa; was attended by two physicians, who gave him little, if any, relief, when a neighbor learning of his serious condition, brought him a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which cured him in less than twenty-four hours. For sale by F. J. MacKenzie.

Wm. Alexander lost a valuable horse on Monday night. He had hoped to bring him up to 1500, when he would have been worth $250.

A Remarkable Record.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a remarkable record. It has been in use for over thirty years, during which time many million bottles have been sold and used It has long been the standard and main reliance in the treatment of croup in thousands of homes, yet during all this time no case has ever been reported to the manufacturers in which it failed to effect a cure. When given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even as soon as the croupy cough appears, it will prevent the attack. It is pleasant to take, many children like it. It contains no opium or other harmful substance and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by F J. MacKenzie.

NOTES FROM ENGLISH.

The young son of Mr. and Mrs. Hartnell is seriously ill with an attack of typhoid. The doctor is in daily attendance.

The sad death occurred, yesterday, of Mrs. Blair, the wife of John Blair, of Vancouver. The deceased had undergone a serious operation at the Vancouver Hospital, and died soon after. Their many friends extend heartfelt sympathy to the sorrowing family in this their second bereavement during the last two weeks.

The harvesting is again on after a week's delay on account of the heavy rains. Many farmers still have their oats on the field and are still waiting for the threshers. The ranchers declare that this is the wettest and latest harvest they have had for many years.

One of Mr. Stirtan's horses met with a very painful death last week. The horse had been put out to pasture with a rope round its neck. Catching its hind foot in the rope it strangled itself.

SING THE DRYDOCK.

ETTING A WARSHIP IN AND OUT IS A DIFFICULT JOB.

Error of a Few Inches In Calcu-ation May Hopelessly Ruin the essel—How the Risky Undertak-ng Is Carried Into Execution.

A drydock is a huge basin in which a sel may be placed and from which the ter can be exhausted in order to expose hull for inspection, cleaning and re-ir. Its sides are sloping and arranged steps like an amphitheater. Entrance effected through a passage that can be sed. The big Brooklyn dock is 500 feet ng when the caisson that closes the en-ance is in place, 130 feet wide at the top d only 50 feet at the bottom and has a pth that insures 25½ feet of water on threshold, or sill, at mean high tide.

It is a far more delicate job to put a ves-into a drydock properly than the un-itiated imagine. Upon the precision th which this undertaking is carried in-execution depends the very life of the ip. An error of a few inches may re-it in injuries that will cost thousands of llars to repair, if they do not hopelessly in her. The aim of the officer in charge this work is to get the ship in such a sition that when the water is pumped t of the basin she will sink down on to series of carefully arranged blocks along e central line of the dock. The Ore-n, for instance, has a displacement of out 10,000 tons, and her weight is all orne on 870 of these supports, called keel blocks." This is about 120 tons to block; hence the need of evenly distrib-ting a vessel's weight on these blocks.

The outline of one vessel differs from nother, however, and an arrangement of ocks that would exactly suit one would e sure to wreck another. It is custom-ry, therefore, at naval docks to prepare n elaborate "docking plan," in advance henever a ship is to be docked. Draw-ngs of the vessel herself are carefully con-ulted in order to ascertain the precise hape and length of her keel, the position f the struts that support her screws (if he be a twin screw vessel), her rudder nd her bilge keels, if she has any. The fficer in charge of the task—he belongs o the construction bureau—also has meas-rements of the dock into which the ves-el is going. He then makes a plan in hich the position of the ship is predeter-mined to an inch—to a tenth of an inch, n fact. The keel blocks are all arranged n advance. On either side of the dock on he stone coping chalk marks are placed o indicate where her bow and stern are to come.

The great floating steel dam, or caisson, hat serves as a gate to the dock is first hauled out of the way. Stout tugs then eize the vessel and work her around grad-ually into the basin. If the vessel is a mall one, like a torpedo boat, perhaps ropes in the hands of a dozen men will uffice. When she is nearly in place, the aisson is swung back across the opening. Water is then admitted to sink it until it rests on the bottom. Subsequently, when steam pumps have exhausted the water rom the basin, the pressure of that out-ide against the caisson holds it firmly in place.

Meantime the officer in charge is direct-ing the final stops in the task of placing the ship. Lines have been run from the bow and stern of the vessel out to the sides of the dock and thence to huge capstans. By heaving away on one of these and slacking up another the ship can be moved forward or backward, and the right com-bination of strains will bring her to any desired position.

Opposite the bow and stern, on either side of the dock, at the chalk marks previ-ously left there, have been set up portable stands called "battens," by means of which one can sight across the dock and tell whether the ship is correctly placed longi-tudinally. Another set of battens at the head of the dock and on the caisson give the range for determining if she is cen-trally situated with reference to the sides. In this latter inquiry the officer's assist-ants are guided by plummets adjusted at the middle of lines that stretch across the dock at the bow and stern and that sag enough to allow the plummets to go an inch or two below the surface.

It is also necessary, if the burden is to be borne as it should be, that the ship shall stand upright and not have any "list." In case she is tilted over, even slightly, to one side this difficulty is over-come by shifting the weights on board be-fore the pumping out of the water lets the ship come down on her supports. From the sides of the dock against each side of the vessel are adjusted spars, called "shores." These occupy a nearly hori-zontal position and are designed to pre-vent tipping over sideways when the ship finally rests on the keel blocks. If the ship is evenly balanced, the shores will press very gently against her, but if she is not properly balanced there is danger that they may punch holes in her sides.

It takes about two or three hours to pump out the small granite dock at the Brooklyn yard and about five hours to empty the big timber dock. As soon as the water is out the ship's sides are care-fully examined. Men on scaffolds that swing from her sides scrape off the tiny snailshell-like barnacles and the long, hairy weed that they find there. This is done with a brush in which the bristles are of wire. Whenever, as rarely happens, the surface of a ship is found to be corrod-ed a sand blast is employed to clean the surface, but this operation is costly and is seldom needed.

Two or three coats of paint are then ap-plied in rapid succession, special composi-tions being used that dry quickly. One of these is designed to protect the plates from corrosion and goes next the metal. The outermost coat is intended to prevent or discourage fouling. Various trifling or important repairs are made while the ship is in dock, and if any great weights are to be removed and restored a huge der-rick is brought into play. The cleaning and painting can be done inside of 24 hours, and if there is a hurry electric lights can be placed so as to enable men to work under the ship as well at night as by day.

Removal, like admission, must be con-ducted at high tide. The dock is gradu-ally filled. The shores are taken away, and the ship is held in place only by moor-ing lines. As the water comes in she is lifted off the blocks. Some of the water in the hollow caisson that dams the en-trance is also pumped out to float it. The caisson is swung out of the way, and then the ship is cautiously hauled out.

OLD HOUSE OF COMMONS.

An Amusing Story Told by a Habitue of the Lobbies.

Mr. Frederick Gale, who was a habitue of the lobbies of the house of commons for 40 years, narrates some of his curious ex-periences. Referring to Bellamy's kitch-en so vividly described by Charles Dick-ens, and to the members who were wont to frequent it, he says: "You got the best chop and steak and cold meat and salad in the world, and the parrot who called 'Order, order!' and 'Chair, chair!' and all the prics of the house, and the im-mortal 'Jane,' who chaffed every one, as described by Dickens, were still there, and members of the government might be seen eating their dinner at a real deal kitchen table. 'Give you a kiss,' Jane asked of a young member, who was chaf-fing her, 'you, a younger son, and only a borough member? Why, I boxed a duke's ears for asking such an impertinent ques-tion yesterday.' There was a very differ-ent house of commons from the present one in those days."

An amusing story is told of Lord Palm-erston, who had just had a stormy in-terview with a deputation which came to memorialize him on the subject of the wine duties. Just as they were leaving the room a sudden thought struck him, and he called them back and said: "Per-haps, gentlemen, a recollection of my boy-hood may help you. When a boy, my grandfather took me with him to stay at Lord Pembroke's. After dinner his lord-ship said: 'I hope you liked my wine. I did my best to please you. As a member of the government I ought not to tell you that I get my claret and champagne direct through a smuggler. I am answerable for the port, as I made it myself.' Old Pam had hit the bullseye, and the deputa-tion retired with much laughter."

The reminiscences that center in John Bright are equally amusing. For exam-ple: "I call to mind hearing him in 1868 in the house of commons on the appoint-ment of a new bishop of Manchester. Quoting from memory, as I do through-out, he said: 'You wanted a new bishop of Jerusalem a short time ago. How did that holy man go out? With his staff and his scrip, like one of the apostles? Not a bit of it. He went out on her majesty's steam frigate Retribution and landed, un-der a salute of 18 guns, not far from the spot where Simon lodged with the tan-ner.' "—Fortnightly Review.

A CORRECTED CARLYLE STORY.

How the Chelsea Sage Avoided Lead-ing In Family Prayers.

Mr. A. Carlyle writes: "A much per-verted account of the following incident has for years appeared at intervals in newspapers. The story when correctly told is not without interest and even humor and is very characteristic of Carlyle. In the autumn of 1874 Carlyle and his niece, Miss M. C. Aitken, were visiting at the house of Mr. Patrick Swan, then provost of Kirkcaldy and at a date long anterior a pupil of Carlyle. On the Sunday even-ing Mr. Swan and his guests were assem-bled after dinner in the drawing room, and some one proposed that Carlyle should read aloud for the entertainment of the company—a rather large one. He readily consented, and seeing the Bible lying on the table he opened it at the beginning of Job, his favorite book.

"No sooner had he seized the Bible, however, than in marched the servants one after another, and Carlyle perceived that he was, as it were, trapped into conduct-ing family worship. How to get out of the dilemma? There seemed nothing for it but to read and to keep on reading and to await what time and chance might bring. He began with the first chapter of Job and read chapter after chapter, making re-marks now and again on striking passages. After this sentence, 'Is there any taste in the white of an egg?' he exclaimed, 'God bless me, I never knew that was in Job!' or 'I had quite forgotten that was in Job.' A little while after that his niece came forward to the table, and touching his arm whispered, 'Uncle, do you not think you have read enough for one night?' He gave her a pleasant smile, but continued reading and expounding. After two or three more chapters had been overtaken his niece again came forward and said quietly, 'Uncle, you really ought to stop, you see, the servants are all in the room, and they'll have work to do yet.' On this being said, or whispered, to him he sud-denly rose, shut the book with emphasis, saying loud enough for all to hear, 'Well, if I'm not to be allowed to read more, I suppose I must stop,' and walked out of the room with an air of offended dignity. On going to his room soon afterward his niece found him laughing and rejoicing at his happy escape. His first words to her were: 'I hope, lass, thou's not offended? I could not see how else to get out of it.' "—Athenæum.

How to Be Successful.

The successful man grows up from the boy whose motto is—everything in place against the time of need. Whether in the school room, with the lesson prepared hours in advance; in the workshop, with all the tools in order, no matter if he knows they will not be required for days to come; in the warehouse, where a thou-sand and one things can be found to oc-cupy the spare moments, or in the world of mind, where the importance of storing the brain with useful facts is taken into consideration, the successful career of the future is being laid with a firm foundation.—New York Ledger.

The law which at present governs the practice of medicine in France forbids the simultaneous practice of medicine and pharmacy even by a person who may be in possession of diplomas in both subjects.

HE'S A JEWEL.

No Better Man For His Business Could Be Found.

"There's the best collector in Detroit," and the head of the firm indicated the man on whom this praise had been bestowed.

"He doesn't look it."

"No, nor anything like it, yet I believe that his appearance is about 90 per cent of his stock in trade. Just size him up. Did you ever see a more ingenuous face? He got his job just as he gets money from debtors that are bad pay. He came right to me and asked for employment. I told him we were not in need of any one and followed the usual form in telling him to call again. He took the invitation literal ly, walked around the block and dropped in to make another application. 'You told me to call again,' he said. 'Want a good man?' I did the usual thing once more, carelessly asking him to call again. An-other trip around the block, and he put in his third appearance, once more informing me that he was a good man in search of a job. I tried him, and he proved a four time winner.

"Then it struck me that he would make a collector if he carried his persistency in-to his work, and he has proved a wonder. He has realized on old accounts that we had given up as hopeless long ago, simply wearing debtors down to where they would rather pay than be bothered any further. One sharp rascal who makes no pretense of paying his debts told our phenomenon that he would have to get up very early in the morning to get anything out of him. Our man was at that fellow's house at 2:30 a. m., routed him out and actually got the money. He never tires and never lets go. Another maddened debtor told him to sing for his money, and 'Old Reli-able' simply took a stool in the office and sawed away on 'Old Grimes Is Dead' till he got the cash. He's an odd stick, but he's a world beater."—Detroit Free Press.

Pierre Loti.

Pierre Loti, who is on the retired list of the French navy, says: "I could easily have obtained advancement, but I thought it better to leave that to others who in-tended to make their career on the sea. I only remained in the navy from taste and because I consider that a man must have a post of combat in time of war. In peace I confess that the navy was my favorite pastime—I would say 'sport' were it not almost a blasphemy to employ the term in this connection."
