"THE MOUNTIE"

The scarlet coat of "The Mountie" for nearly seventy years has been the symbol of law, order and justice to Canadians, native born or immigrant.

Since 1873, eight years before the start of construction of Canada's first transcontinental railway—the Canadian Pacific—at first in the western plains, later during the gold rush to the Yukon of 1898, and finally, across the Dominion from coast to coast, the history of this force of constabulary has been a thrilling story of tenacity, endurance and high courage.

Organized originally as the North-West Mounted Police with the simple equipment of horse, lance and carbine to handle Indian unrest and protect settlers in the North-West Territories, the Force played its part in maintaining order during the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway across the Prairies. Van Horne, then General Manager, wrote to Lt.-Col. A. G. Irvine, North-West Mounted Police Commissioner at Regina:

> "Without the assistance of the officers and men of the splendid force under your command it would have been impossible to have accomplished as much as we did. On no great work within my knowledge, where so many men have been employed, has such perfect order prevailed."

In 1904 its name was changed to the Royal North-West Mounted Police. In 1918 it was assigned the duty of the enforcement of Dominion legislation for the whole of Western Canada, west of Port Arthur and Fort William. In 1920 this jurisdiction was extended to the whole of Canada, and the name of the Force was changed to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the headquarters being transferred from Regina to Ottawa. Regina, however, is the Training Centre for the entire Dominion.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police today, among its other duties, enforces the laws against smuggling by land, sea and air; is responsible for the suppression of traffic in narcotic drugs and exercises supervision over aliens. Its strength on December 31st, 1939, was 3.875. On the outbreak of war authority was granted to re-engage 500 ex-members of the Force and 2,500 special constables, if required.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police today makes use of every known scientific aid to police protection in its well-equipped laboratories and pursues the enemies of society ashore, afloat and in the air.

Just as "The Mounties" played an heroic part in the carving out of a new democracy on the western frontier so, today, they play a part in the preservation of that democracy at home and, as one of the Provost Companies of the Canadian Army, overseas.
