MANILA AMERICANIZED

It is only a little more than eleven years since Admiral Dewey fought the battle of Manila bay. It is not quite eleven years since the occupation of Manila by the American troops, and it is only eight years since American civil government was established in the islands. The achievements of American rule in that short time have revolutionized the life of the islands from the topmost circles of society in Manila to the everyday life of the dog-eating, head-hunting savages of the mountains. More has been done in a decade than Spain accomplished in over three centuries.

America found a subject people which had absolutely no part in the government, and which for years had been in a constant state of insurrection against the authorities, America brought about peace by making war effective, and put down the bandits and thieves, as well as the political insurgents. Today the Philipines enjoy a tranquility never before dreamed of in the islands. The Philipinos have been granted almost complete autonomy in municipal affairs and have been granted a large share in the legislative, executive and judicial government of the islands.

America found a people which had never enjoyed free speech or a free press. Men who spoke for the liberty of their countrymen were executed without trial. Persons who complained of the corruption of the government were cast into noisome prisons. All that has been changed. The press is free, the right of free speech is guaranteed, the right of petition is assured and men may talk of independence as much as they please unless they advocate riot or rebellion.

America found the church and state so combined that there was great difficulty in demarking the province of one from that of the other in government. Complete separation has been accomplished, the right of every man to worship as he sees fit is guaranteed, the lands of the religious orders were purchased and held for settlement by freeholders. And all of this has been accomplished peacefully.

America found a fluctuating money in use and replaced it with a fixed and stable currency upon the gold standard, so that in every part of the islands the money is the same and its value known.

Americans have constructed hundreds of miles of highways and are unceasingly pushing the work of new construction. They have built bridges and culverts of steel and concrete, and have connected widely separated communities by easy transportation.

Where was one short railway is now more than 500 miles of good railway lines

America found 90 per cent of the people in absolute ignorance. Now there are half a million pupils in the public schools. A model postal system has been inaugurated and every town and village is supplied with a regular mail. Eleven years ago Manila was unpaved, today it is one of the finest cities in the Orient. The prisons which under Spanish rule were conducted like the prisons of the middle ages, have been converted into reformatory institutions, and are clean. The judiciary and civil service were entirely controlled by favoriteism. Now they are maintained as part of the judiciary and civil service of the United States. The old taxation system has gone. It laid the burden on the very poor. The Americans have established a system that secures the necessary revenues by a levy upon the people in proportion to their ability to pay. Besides these manifold reformations, the Americans have taught the rich and poor alike that honest labor is not disgraceful, and the old dislike of work has been superceded by business-like endeavor with prosperity as a natural result.

Always go around with a long face and complain of hard times, especially to strangers. This kind of preformance always creates favorable impressions.

DOCTOR SPANKIE'S DEPARTURE

On Thursday last Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Spankie left on the C. P. R, for Vancouver, and were seen off at the station by a number of their friends. The Doctor was so essentially a part of Greenwood that it will be some little time before his place will be filled. He was born at Kingston, Ontario, and graduated from Queen's university, after which he moved to New York, to study further, and practice. It was in 1896 that the genial doctor first moved west, to Banff, as assistant to Dr. Brett at the sanatarium.

Remaining at Banff until November 1899, Dr. Spankie then moved to Greenwood. That was the year of Greenwood posperity. Everyone was making money, and the doctor built up a large practice here. He made a big circle of friends and like many others he made a goodly sum of money. But he spent his money in the town, and encouraged the efforts of several of our smaller mining companies by putting his money against their experience, and some day these same properties will make the doctor a rich man. He has always shewn his faith in the district and has evinced a public spirit which is a good example to those who are left.

In 1903 Dr. Spankie went to New York for a holiday, but he returned with a bride. The townspeople turned out to welcome the popular doctor home, and the city band serenaded him. Since then the doctor and Mrs. Spankie have made Greenwood their permanent home.

The doctor has won the esteem of all with whom he has had to do, especially those who have had occasion to experience his extreme kindness and readiness to assist those who were unfortunate.

For the past year he was the British Columbia Copper company doctor.

Before leaving the doctor was the recipient of an illuminated address from the citizens of Greenwood, and a banquet given in his honor at the Imperial hotel. Mrs. Spankie was presented with some choice cut glass by the ladies of the town, and this week several farewell parties have been given for her.

The Doctor and Mrs. Spankie carry with them to Vancouver the heartiest good wishes of everyone in Greenwood and its neighborhood.

MIDWAY ITEMS

Thomas Hardy visited Greenwood on Wednesday.

The Harris Minstrel show favored Midway with two performances during the past week.

J. R. Jackson attended the Spankie banquet at Greenwood last Saturday and says it was the best ever.

Mrs. J. M. Davidson, from Nova Scotia, is spending a few weeks visiting her son, Joe Davidson, C. P. R. station agent.

Misses Kathleen and Ethel Ferguson arrived last week from the coast, where they have been attending school during the past year.

The extensive irrigation plant being erected by George Lee, is fast nearing completion. By means of a large current wheel set on the rapids opposite the old sawmill site, he hopes to be able to furnish sufficient water for the twenty acres of young orchard recently set out.

SPAIN'S THRONE IS TOTTERING

The history of Spain has been a series of wars, plots and intrigues for the past 500 years.

In the third century, B. C., Hamilcar Barca, the great Carthaginian general, after whom Barcelona was named, conquered Spain. A century later the Romans drove out the Carthaginians, but it took them 200 years to subdue all the native tribes. Then for several hundred years Spain was the granary of the Roman empire, and filled the treasury of the holy city with gold and silver. This was an age of general prosperity. Next barbarian tribes desolated the peninsula, and after the downfall of Rome it was conquered by the Visigoths. About 460, A. D., some three hundred years later, the Saracens ruled Spain, after a series of wars, and after them the Franks The Moors were the next invaders, and until 1031 were the dominant power. As is the case today, their dominion was the result of a futile effort on the part of Spain to rule Morocco. It was during the Arab Moorish regime that several separate states sprung up, and the last of these, Granada, which rose to great brilliance under the Moors, was captured by the armies of Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492. The Moors have never relinquished the hope of recovering Spain.

Spain dominated the world under Ferdinand and Isabella and reached out and secured vast colonies in America. This was Spain's brightest era. The next ruler, Philip II, essayed to conquer England, and the destruction of his Armada was the downfall of Spain's naval supremacy.

Next came the war of the Spanish succession, and Spain was only saved as a separate kingdom by the powers who stopped the French invasion. Steadily Spain has declined in power. Though Napoleon's brother once sat on the Spanish throne, it was the stubborn resistance to French dominition that showed that Napoleon was not invincible and ultimately led to Waterloo.

In 1859 Spain fought Morocco with indifferent success, and ten years later Spain was a republic. After another decade the father of the present king came to the throne and for the time being blasted the hopes of the Carlists.

The present reign has not been a happy one for Spain. The war with the United States stripped her of her few remaining possessions, and now a disastrous war with Morocco, civil war and wild anarchy at home are completing the decline of the last of the great Latin powers. With the pretender, Don Jaime, proclaiming his claim to the Spanish throne, mutiny in her army abroad, and domestic anarchy rampant, bloodshed and arson rife, the intervention of the powers alone can save Spain from a reign of terror unequaled in the history of the world.

THREE CHEERS AND THEN SOME

The complimentary banquet tendered to Dr. J. E. Spankie on Saturday night was a scene of exceptional enthusiasm and brilliancy, and was attended by 50 representative citizens of Greenwood, Midway, Boundary Falls and Eholt.

At 9 o'clock, the guest of the evening, accompanied by Judge J. R. Brown, the chairman of the evening, took his seat. Rousing cheers and "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," started the ball rolling. Never in the history of home hospitality was such a table spread in the Hotel Imperial.

After the wants of the inner man had been satisfied, the chairman proposed "The King God Bless Him," and the loyalty of those present was attested by the united singing of the national anthem with highland honors. The toast list was long and ably carried out, and the speakers vied with each other in their appreciation of the doctor and his good services to Greenwood and the district. Songs, recitations, sallies of wit and wisdom, were the order of the evening, want of space alone prevents our presenting them in full.

In the wee small hours, "Auld Lang Syne" and "God Save the King," brought an exceptionally enjoyable evening to a close. During the evening the doctor was presented with an address signed by those present, and letters were read from several who were unable to attend.

In his own carriage, and with the banqueters as motive power, the doctor was escorted home with three cheers, and then some, and then some more.

GENERAL NOTES

There are 100,000 men idle as a result of the labor strike in Stockholm.

Incendiary fires at Everett this week have resulted in a loss of nearly $200,000.

Nelson has raised $6,000 for advertising purposes to be spent during the next twelve month.

Bills are already out anouncing a monster celebration for Labor day at Hedley, Sept 6th and 7th.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier, of Canada, has been invited to act as the principal orator for Seattle day at the A. Y. P. E.

The first official visit of the Russian emperor to England on Monday last was the most spectacular ever witnessed at Cowes.

On Saturday last a most distressing wreck occurred on the Coeur d'Alene electric line, over 100 people being seriously injured, while 15 were killed.

Over seventy distinct shocks of Earthquakes have been felt in Mexico, and several towns are utterly destroyed. Thousands of people are destitute.

Castor and Carmangay are the two latest C. P. R. towns to spring into existence in Alberta. $50,000 worth of lots were sold at auction first day at the latter town.

FIRE DEPARTMENT

The annual meeting of the Greenwood Fire department was held at the City Hall on August 2. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, J. D. McCreath; vice-president, A. E. Braithwaite; secretary-treasurer, R. G. Hargreaves. The new chief is A. E. Braithwaite, with T. McArthur and A. F. Thomas as 1st and 2nd assistants. After the meeting the boys had a fine supper and spent an enjoyable evening.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY

While the party press accuses the Liberal government of extravagance and worse, places a false interpretation upon the resignation of Mr. Lumsden, chief engineer to the Transcontinental Commission, unjustly represents Mr. Fielding as adding heavily to the public debt, nothing is said of the system of government—old age annuities.

This is neither a party nor a political question, excepting one may truly say it is a boon conferred upon all the people by the Liberal government. It is a subject of such wide-spread interest that every community will be interested to know something about it.

Sir Richard Cartwright, minister of trade and commerce, was primarily responsible for the measure known as the Annuities Act, 1908. This act solves the problem of securing comfort and happiness in old age at a very trivial cost, and everyone is eligible to share in the advantages which it offers. Many men have been ruined, or have seen their hard-earned savings disappear through improvident investment or unwise speculation. Others have wasted their savings in many ways. By the purchase of an annuity such experiences are impossible.

This annuity scheme of the government should appeal with special force to the wage earner and man of small means. Many people of limited resources find difficulty in securing an investment upon good security. The security in this case is the Dominion government with its vast resources.

THE GREAT SPHINX

(BY A BANKER.)

Guarding the approach to that arid and barren ocean of driven sand, the Libyan desert, and almost beneath the shadow of the mightiest structure ever erected by man upon this earth, stands that strange wonder of the ancient world, the Great Sphinx. And well might those superstitious and deluded worshippers of crocodiles and mummied cats, of Osiris and Horus and Ptah, regard the impassive monster with awe and with the profoundest reverence; well might they look upon it as endowed with tremendous authority and power, and with the absolute control over their destinies, both in this life and in the realms beyond the tomb. For to us even, of this more intelligent age, emancipated from those insensate delusions which held those mighty ancients in an iron grip and sunk them down in abysmal and benighted ignorance, it is a thrilling experience to stand at sunset before the towering, majestic form of the stupendous figure. Now, starting as it were into life as the golden rays merge into carmine, and the passionless vissage is gradually mantled with a suffused ever deepening blush as though the life-blood were coursing through it; now, as the great red luminary sinks lower and lower, the roseate hue of vitality fading away into a sullen and lurid, empurpled lividity; and now, as the gloaming advances and the stars of heaven one by one shine forth, the massive features of the image darkening ever blacker and deeper, until the rising moon again rekindles on it a ghostly and unearthly pallor.

Hoary with age a thousand years before Menephtah's generals, vainly pursuing the Israelite host, perished ignominiously in the Red Sea, the blear, stony eyes of this sculptured monster of the past—a huge and stupendously colossal man-headed lion, its pedestal a rock-hewn temple—have looked out with the same impenetrable, visionless gaze upon some of the greatest events of this world's history; the triumphant progresses of the great Rameses; the headlong flight of Pharoah Necho, driven back by the invincible forces of Nebuchadnezzar; the return of Shihak with his plunder from the Holy City, Jerusalem; or the victorious triumph of that mighty ruler of a world-empire, Alexander the Great.

MAKE HASTE SLOWLY

High School, or no High School? That is the question. Whether it is better to let our rising generation train for and pass the Entrance examinations, held in this town each year, and then go away to the larger centers to attend High School, as has been the program heretofore, or to make an early application to the powers that be for the establishment of a High School of our own, and try to keep our youth and beauty at home.

Greenwood has an efficient public school, as proved by her success in the recent annual examinations, when all five of her candidates were successful. Midway had four successful out of five candidates, and Phoenix three. This makes a total of twelve this year in the district, which would feed the high school, if located in the near future in Greenwood. Does this entitle Greenwood to make immediate application to the superintendent of education?

There is no necessity to dwell on the advantages of having such an excellent institution located in our midst. The advantages are obvious. Parents who are loathe to part with their boys and girls, after they have left the public school, could keep them at home, and the town is the loser when its young people spend the greater part of the year away. Then, again, a High School is an additional attraction to families and home makers, and an ornament to any town where such an institution exists. There are no disadvantages.

But while we have an excellent beginning this year, with twelve scholars to form the nucleus, does the average school attendance at present in the six schools in the district, and the population of the town and district, warrant a high school being established today? If it does, let us have one at once, if we can procure it Places with a far greater school population, and consequently a greater number of entrance candidates have had to wait a long time before their applications were granted, and have experienced considerable trouble to maintain the requisite number of scholars to keep the high school up to standard requirements. Of course no injury can accrue from our making application, but at the present juncture would it not be better to go easy and apply first for permission for the principal of the public school to take the work of the first year in high school, in conjunction with that of the entrance class, until such time as we can boast of a larger school attendance in the surrounding district, and consequently a larger field from which to draw material for the High School, and assure ourselves of the permanancy of that most excellent adjunct to the attractions of the Boundary.

A GOSPEL OF THRIFT

The Laurier administration has done much for the welfare of Canada and its people, but one recent act of the Ottawa government will redound to its credit for all time. While the British government is providing for the old age of its thriftless citizens and placing a perpetual tax on the industrious with which to pay pensions, the Canadian government has evolved a new gospel of self help, and presents a plan whereby every man and woman may provide an annuity for old age and the days when they can no longer earn a living. The British plan encourages pauperism by providing pensions for the improvident, who spend their wages without thought of the morrow. The Canadian plan educates the boys and girls of Canada to lay by even as small a sum as 25 cents weekly, so that when they reach the age of 50 to 60 years they are assured of an annuity that will at least make them independent of charity from their friends or neighbors. It begets a spirit of pride instead of dependency. And the larger the amount put by weekly the larger the amount of the annuity. The government plan provides that no less a sum than $50 a year can be paid, and the most that anyone can receive is $600 a year. It depends upon the individuals themselves how much to provide between these amounts. Like every habit, the saving habit grows. Once the person puts by in the savings bank a small amount every pay day it becomes a habit, and with the incentive offered by the government it will be a matter of pride to continue the same, and when old age comes creeping over us what a blessing the annuity will be to those of us who have not acquired a fortune.

The plan is simple and easily understood, and the name of Sir Richard Cartwright will be blessed in every home where advantage is taken of the annuity. The Ottawa government has hit upon the right plan to educate the people that an independent annuity, earned by individual thrift, is preferable to a pauperizing pension roll.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance company of New York has begun the distribution of 3,500,000 copies of a volume called "A War Upon Consumption," The book is for the "Use of Its Industrial Policyholders." Thus, what has come to be known as the social programme in life insurance is inaugurated on a gigantic scale.

Big British interests are in a panic over the threatened boycott of English goods in India, even more than they are over the Anti-British demonstration planned throughout the country August 7th. If the boycott could be made permanently effective England might still be able to hold India, but it is doubtful if it would be worth holding. The country has wonderful resources of its own, and enterprising German, French and Chinese firms are keen to break the English monopoly of trade there.

That Canada has determined upon a navy to cooperate with the Imperial Navy in defence of the Empire, was stated by Hon. Dr. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works. "I look forward to seeing a number of first class vessels of war, of purely Canadian origin and manned by Canadians, stationed on both the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards. The question of a Canadian navy and dry docks on both the Pacific and Atlantic will be discussed as soon as the delegates to the Imperial Defence Conference return from England. The outcome of the conference will be a decision to construct drydocks on both the Canadian seaboards capable of accommodating the largest battleships."

CAVES OF ARIZONA

Great caves, larger than the far-famed cave ruins of Kentucky, with chasms and vaulted chambers in which an office building could be stowed away and surrounded by ancient and mysterious ruins never before visited by white men, have just been discovered by Prof. Edgar L Hewitt, the archaeologist, in the northeastern part of Arizona.

The caves have long been told of by Indians, but white men doubted their existence until a Navajo guide led Prof. Hewitt to them. Hewitt says the caves, ruins and natural bridges were found without difficulty and were exactly as the Indian legends had described them.

Some of the caverns he and the guide visited were large enough to contain the Singer building, and others contained curious formations unlike anything he had ever seen. Several natural bridges between hills in the vicinity were so large as to make the rock bridges of Utah and Virginia puny by comparison. The ruins contain relics, household articles and remains of a race of which the archaeologists have been in ignorance.

Transcontinental and interstate railroads operating in Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana and British Columbia announce a rate of one fare for the round trip from points in the Inland Empire on trains arriving in Spokane on August 12, when the irrigation and industrial army of 10,000 uniformed men will have its parade, beginning at 4:45 o'clock in the afternoon, in connection with the 17th session of the National Irrigation congress during the week of August 9. There is also a rate of a fare and one-third for the round trip, effective on August 8, 9 and 10, with a minimum selling rate of $1. The final limit is August 16.

AN ANCIENT MINE

At Falum, Sweden, are the headquarters of a company with a history so remote that the date of it origin cannot be definitely fixed.

An original purchase deed dated in the year 1288 has to do with a sale of stock in the present company, and charters given by King Magnus of Sweden and Norway are dated February 24 1347. At that time the rights granted by King Magnus' predessors were referred to as very old. The original business was the manufacture of copper, and the mine at Falun, "Stora Koparberget" (the great copper mountain), has been continuously worked for nearly 700 years. In this time it has yielded about 500,000 tons of copper, 15 5 tons of silver, 1.2 tons of gold, the whole representing a value of 1,000,000,000 kroner, or about $277,000,000.

It is not alone in the coinage of silver that the question of ratio is vital. A Pittsburg woman has lately discovered that in the matter of borrowed eggs it is of considerable importance. When eggs were selling at 50 cents a dozen she borrowed a dozen from her neighbor. She returned the same number when they were selling at 20 cents a dozen. The lender was not satisfied with payment in depreciated currency, but demanded 50 cents' worth of eggs. It took a policeman to compromise the matter, and an alderman put the women under bonds to keep the peace. Every housewife with a borrowing neighbor will regret that the grave questions involved in this controversy were not settled judicially.

Even a dirigible airship is not qualified to climb a tree.

The strength of a child.

It is surprising to find how few parents know the great strength giving qualities of good oatmeal. Most of them think of it as a food for the sturdy and brawny man, and overlook its value as a food for children. Every now and then a mother will take to feeding her children on Quaker Oats and will be astonished at their improvement in strength and vigor. Of course, she tells her friends, and they prove it for themselves, but every mother in the country should see that her children are strong and vigorous. Plenty of Quaker Oats, eaten often, will do it.

Put up in two sizes, the regular package and the large family size, which is more convenient for those who do not live in town. The large package contains a piece of handsome china for the table. Making Quaker Oats is a Canadian industry.

The Copper Consumer needs the book for every chapter it contains. It tells what and explains how and why.

The Investor in Copper Shares cannot afford to be without it. The Copper Handbook gives statistics and general information on one hand, with thousands of detailed mine descriptions on the other, covering the copper mines of the entire world, and the 40 pages of condensed statistical tables alone are worth more than the price of the book to each and every owner of copper mining shares.

Price: $5.00 in Buckram with gilt top, or $7.50 in full library morocco.

Terms: The most liberal. Send no money, but order the book sent you, all carriage charges prepaid, on one week's approval, to be returned if unsatisfactory, or paid for if it suits. Can you afford not to see the book and judge for yourself of its value to you?

an intuitive knowledge gained in a significant formative period. He saw more clearly than the townfolk who in a general way had known Hugh Stires all their lives. Week by week Harry had seen him regain lost ground in his father's esteem. Day by day he had seen him making studious appeal to all that was romantic in Jessica, climbing to the favor of each on the ladder of the other's regard. Hugh was naturally a poseur, with a keen sense of effect. He could be brilliant at will, could play a little on piano, banjo and violin, could sing a little and had himself well in hand. And, feeling the unconscious chord of romance vibrate to his touch, he had played upon it with no unskillful fingers.

Jessica was comparatively free from that coquetry by means of which a woman's instinct experiments in emotion. Although she had been artist enough before the cloistered years of her blindness to know that she was comely, she had never employed that beauty in the ordinary blandishments of girlish fascination. But steadily and unconsciously she had turned in her darkness more and more to the bright and tender air with which Hugh clothed all their intercourse. Her blindness had been of too short duration to have developed that fine sense-perception with which nature seeks to supplement the darkened vision. The ineradicable marks which ill governed living had set in Hugh's face, the self indulgence and egotism, she could not see. She mistook impulse for instinct. She read him by the untrustworthy light of a colorful imagination. She deemed him high spirited and debonair, a Prince Charming, whose prideful rebellion had been atoned for by a touching and manly surrender.

He began to play

All this Harry had watched with a painful sense of impotence, and this feeling was upon him today as he stared out from the study toward the white porch glistening in the sun.

At length, with a little gesture expressive at once of helplessness and puzzle, he turned from the window, took his violin and began to play. He began a barcarole, but the music wandered away through insensible variations into a moving minor, a composition of his own.

It broke off suddenly at a dog's fierce snarl from the yard and the rattle of a thrown pebble. Immediately a knock came at the door, and a man entered.

"Don't stop," said the new comer. "I've dropped in for only a minute. That's an ill tempered little brute of yours. If I were you I'd get rid of him."

Harry Sanderson laid the violin carefully in its case and shut the lid before he answered. "Rummy is impulsive," he said dryly. "How is your father today, Hugh?"

The other tapped the toe of his shining patent leather with his cane as he said with a look of ill humor:

"About as well as usual. He's planning now to put me in business and expects me to become a staid pillar of society—'like Sanderson,' as he says forty times a week. How do you do it, Harry? There isn't an old lady in town who thinks her parlor carpet half good enough for you to walk on. You're only a month older than I am, yet you can wind the whole vestry and the bishop to boot around your finger."

"I wasn't aware of the idolatry." Harry laughed a little—a distant laugh. "You are observant, Hugh."

"Oh, anybody can see it. I'd like to know how you do it. It was always so with you, even at college. You could do pretty much as you liked and yet be popular too. Why, there was never a jamboree complete without you and your violin at the head of the table."

"That is a long time ago," said Harry.

"More than four years. Four years and a month tomorrow, since that last evening of college. Yet I imagine it will be longer before we forget it."

Harry did not speak. An odd confusion blurred his vision. Perhaps to cover this, he crossed the room to a small private safe which stood open in the corner, in which he kept his tithes and his charities. When Hugh, shrugging his shoulders as if to dismiss the unwelcome picture he had painted, turned again, Harry was putting into it some papers from his pocket. Hugh saw the action. His eyes fastened on the safe avidly.

"I say," he said after a moment's pause as Harry made to shut its door, "can you loan me another fifty? I'm flat on my uppers again, and the old man has been tight as nails with me since I came back. I'm sure to be able to return it with the rest in a week or two."

Harry stretched his hand again toward the safe, then drew it back, with compressed lips. He had met Hugh with persistent courtesy, and the other had found him sufficiently obliging with loans. Hugh's lowered gaze saw the arrested movement, and his cheek flushed.

"Oh, if it's inconvenient I won't trouble you for the accommodation," he said. "I dare say I can raise it."

The attempt at nonchalance cost him a palpable effort. Comparatively small as the amount was, he needed it. He was in sore straits.

"It isn't that it is inconvenient, Hugh," said Harry. "It's that I can't approve your manner of living lately and—I don't know where the fifty is going."

The mark on Hugh's brow reddened. "I wasn't aware that I was expected to render you an accounting," he said sullenly, "if I do borrow a dollar or two now and then. What if I play cards and drink a little when I'm dry? I've got to have a bit of amusement once in awhile between prayers. You liked it yourself well enough before you discovered a sudden talent for preaching!"

"Some men hide their talents under a napkin," said Harry. "You drown yours—in a bottle. You have been steadily going downhill. You are deceiving your father—and others—with a pretended reform which isn't skin deep. You have made them believe you are living straight when you are carousing; that you keep respectable company when you have taken up with a besotted and discredited gambler!"

"I suppose you mean Dr. Moreau," returned Hugh. "There are plenty of people in town who are worse than he is."

"He is a quack—dropped from the hospital staff for addiction to drugs and expelled from his club for cheating at cards."

"He's down and out," said Hugh sullenly, "and any cur can bite him. He never cheated me, and I find him better company than your sanctimonious, psalm singing sort. I'm not going to give him the cold shoulder because everybody else does. I never went back on a friend yet. I'm not that sort!"

"You never had a friend, Hugh," said Harry steadily. "You never really loved anybody or anything but yourself. You are utterly selfish. You are deliberately lying every hour you live to those who love you. You are playing a part—for your own ends! You were only a good imitation of a good fellow at college. You are a poor imitation of a man of honor now."

Hugh rose to his feet as he answered hotly: "And what are you, I'd like to know? Just because I take my pleasure as I please while you choose to make a stained glass cherub of yourself, is no reason why I'm not just as good as you! I knew you well enough before you set up for such a pattern. You didn't go in much then for a theological diet. Pshaw!" he went on, snapping his fingers toward the well stocked bookshelves. "I wonder how much of all that you really believe! I imagine your friends don't call you 'Satan' now?"

"No," returned Harry quietly, "they don't call me 'Satan' now."

He went back to the safe.

The movement set Hugh instantly to regretting his hasty tongue. If he had only assumed penitence instead of flying into a passion he might have had the money he wanted just as well as not.

"There's no sense in us two quarreling," he said hastily. "We've been friends a long time. I'm sure I didn't intend to when I came in. I suppose you're right about some things, and probably dropping Moreau wouldn't hurt me any. I'm sorry I said all I did. Only—the money seemed such a little thing, and I—I needed it."

Harry stood an instant with his hand on the knob; then instead of closing the door he drew out a little drawer. He lifted a packet of crisp yellow backs and slowly counted out $100. "I'm trying to believe you mean what you say, Hugh," he said.

Hugh's fingers closed eagerly over the crackling notes. "Now, that's white of you after everything I said. You're a good fellow, Harry, after all, and I'll always say so." He pocketed the money with an air of relief and picked up his hat and cane.

Just then from the dusty street came the sound of carriage wheels and the click of the gate latch.

"It's Bishop Ludlow," he said, glancing through the window. "He's coming in. I think I'll slip out the side way. Thanks for the loan, and—I'll think over what you've said."

Avoiding the bishop, Hugh stepped toward the gate. The money was in his pocket. Well, one of these days he would not have to grovel for a paltry $50. He would be his own master and could afford to let Harry Sanderson and everybody else think what they liked.

"So I'm playing a part, am I?" he said to himself. "Why should your holiness trouble yourself over it if I am? Not because you're so careful of the governor's feelings, not by a long shot! It's because you choose to think Jessica Holme is too good for me. That's where the shoe pinches. Perhaps you'd like to play at that game yourself, eh?"

He walked jauntily up the street—toward the door with the little barred window.

"The old man is fond of her. He thinks I mean to settle down and let the moss grow over my ears, and he'll do the proper thing. It'll be a good way to put my head above water and keep it there. It must be soon, though."

Chapter 4

INSIDE the study meanwhile the bishop was greeting Harry Sanderson. He had officiated at his ordination and liked him. His eyes took in the simple order of the room, lingering with a light tinge of disapproval upon the violin case in the corner and with a deeper shade of question upon the jewel on the other's finger, a pigeon blood ruby in a setting curiously twisted of the two initial letters of his name. There came to his mind for an instant a whisper of early prodigalities and wildnesses which he had heard.

"I looked in to tell you a bit of news," said the bishop. "I've just come from David Stires. He has a letter from Van Lennap, the great eye surgeon of Vienna. He disagrees with the rest of them. Thinks Jessica's case may not be hopeless."

The cloud that Hugh's call had left on Harry's countenance lifted.

"Thank God!" he said. "Will she go to him?"

The bishop looked at him curiously, for the exclamation seemed to hold more than a conventional relief.

"He is to be in America next month. He will come here then to examine and perhaps to operate. Poor child! It will be a terrible thing for her if this last hope fails her, too, especially now, when she and Hugh are to make a match of it."

"Will she go to him?"

Harry's face was turned away, or the bishop would have seen it suddenly startled. "To make a match of it!" To hide the flush he felt staining his cheek Harry bent to close the safe. A something that had darkled in some obscure depth of his being whose existence he had not guessed was throbbing now to a painful resentment. Jessica was to marry Hugh!

"A handsome fellow—Hugh!" said the bishop. "He seems to have returned with a new heart—a brand plucked from the burning. You had the same alma mater, I think you told me. Your influence has done the boy good, Sanderson!" He laid his hand kindly on the other's shoulder. "The fact that you were in college together makes him look up to you—as the whole parish does," he added.

Harry was setting the combination and did not answer. But through the turmoil in his brain a satiric voice kept repeating:

"No, they don't call me 'Satan now!"

The white house in the aspens was in gala attire. Flowers—great banks of bloom—were massed in the hall, along the stairway and in the window seats, and wreaths of delicate fern trembled on the prim hung chandeliers. Over all breathed the sweet fragrance of jasmine. Musicians sat behind a screen of palms in a corridor, and a long scarlet carpet strip ran down the front steps to the driveway, up which passed bravely dressed folk, arriving in carriages and on foot, to witness the completion of a much booted romance.

For a fortnight this afternoon's event had been the chat of the town, for David Stires, who today retired from active business, was its magnate, the owner of its finest single estate and of its most important bank. From his scapegrace boyhood Hugh Stires had made himself the subject of uncomfortable discussion. His sudden disappearance after the rumored quarrel with his father and the advent of Jessica Holme had furnished the community sufficient material for gossip. The wedding had capped this gossip with an appropriate climax. Tongues had wagged over its pros and cons, for Hugh's past had induced a wholesome skepticism of his future.

There was an additional element of romance, too, in the situation, for Jessica, who had never yet seen her lover, would see her husband. The great surgeon on whose prognostication she had built so much had arrived and had operated. The experiment had been completely successful, and Jessica's hope of vision had become a sure and certain promise.

The operation over, there had remained many days before the bandages could be removed—before Jessica could be given her first glimpse of the world for nearly three years. Hugh had urged against delay. If he had stringent reasons of his own he was silent concerning them. And Jessica, steeped in the delicious wonder of new and inchoate sensations, had yielded.

So it had come about that the wedding was to be on this hot August afternoon, although it would be yet some time before the eye bandages might be laid aside save in a darkened room. In her girlish, passionate ideality Jessica had offered a sacrifice to her sentiment. She had promised herself that the first form her new sight should behold should be not her lover, but her husband. The idea pleased her sense of romance.

It was a sweltering afternoon, and in the wide east parlor limp handkerchiefs and energetic fans fought vainly against the intolerable heat. There, as the clock struck 6, a hundred pairs of eyes galloped between two centers of interest—the door at which the bride would enter and the raised platform at the other end of the room where, prayer book in hand, in his wide robes and flowing sleeves, Harry Sanderson had just taken his stand. Perhaps more looked at Harry than at the door.

He seemed his usual magnetic self as he stood there, backed by the flowers, his waving brown hair unsmoothed, the ruby ring glowing dull red against the dark leather of the book he held. But Harry Sanderson was far from feeling the grave, alien figure he appeared. In the past weeks he had waged a silent warfare with himself, bitter because repressed. The strange new thing that had sprung up in him he had trampled mercilessly under. From the thought that he loved the promised wife of another a quick, fastidious sense in him recoiled abashed. This painful struggle had been sharpened by his sense of Hugh's utter worthlessness. To that rustling assem-

MINES AND MINING

The Lucile Dreyfus mine at Danville is being surveyed for patent.

The mica deposits of South Dakota occur in similar rocks to those in which merchantable mica is found in Idaho, pegmatite dikes and veins.

Manager D. McIntosh has installed a compressor for the Greenwood-Phoenix tunnel and air drills will be working in a couple of weeks. Over 240 feet were driven by hand.

Figures, which have just been published, show that the mineral output of Rhodesia for the month of April has been declared of the value of £237,214, as compared with £219,242 for March.

The C. P. R. has completed the location of the line for the spur from Hartford Junction to the British Columbia Copper company's Lone Star mine near Danville. The line will be about twelve miles long and is estimated to cost $300,000. Construction will begin as soon as the plans are approved by the division officers at Nelson.

Newfoundland is a land of surprises. Mr. Walter Monroe is resident secretary of the Newfoundland Oil Development Co., Ltd. Their oil wells are situated at Parsons Pond, on the Newfoundland coast, and have been examined by an English and American expert. On their most favorable report, both as to the quantity and quality of the oil, London financiers have taken hold of the business and put up a large capital to work the oil wells.

A party of prospectors has left Prince Albert on a six months' trip to the country lying between Isle la Crosse and Athabasca lake. They have been sent out by the Lands branch of the Canadian Department of the Interior, and will work their way across to Fort McMurray by water, and return by dog trains. The object of the expedition is to discover definitely what coal deposits are in the north, and to find further outcrops which the Indians report to have found from time to time.

The big Monarch lead mine at Field, B. C., which has been under bond to the Vancouver Mining & Smelting Company, Limited, has been bought by a syndicate of mining men representing both eastern and western capital, and the work of developing the mine on an entirely new basis will be started at once, and a carload of new machinery is being shipped to Field. The mine has been worked in the past from a surface level at a point about 700 feet above the C. P. R. tracks. It is estimated that at least 10,000 tons of lead are in sight, while it is difficult to place a limit on the extent of the mineral in the mountain. Recent examinations have convinced the new owners that the ore body is very much greater than was at first estimated. Samples taken from all parts of the property average in value over $25 per ton.

SMELTER BLOWS IN

The B. C. Copper Co.'s smelter will blow in tomorrow. Shipments of coke are coming in slowly, and the company is waiting till there are 2,500 tons on hand. The company has, so far, 60 men employed at the smelter, and 160 men at the Mother Lode mine. The small crew at the Oro Denoro are engaged in diamond drilling. There are 20 men working at the company's properties in Wellington camp, under Harry Johns.

When President W. H. Taft visits Seattle the latter part of September, to attend the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, it is predicted that the largest gathering ever known on the Pacific coast will congregate. Special arrangements are already under way to provide special entertainment for not only the president, but the crowds also. Three previous presidents have visited Seattle while in office—Hayes, Harrison and Roosevelt. Each visit was a memorable occasion. The records for crowds established on these visits are certain to be shattered when "Big Bill" comes, not that he is a stranger to Seattle and the Northwest, but because he is so well known and so well liked here. Many prospective visitors will put off their coming until the visit of the president, when they "will kill two birds with one stone." The president will leave the east September 15th, stopping en route for brief visits in Denver, Salt Lake and Spokane. Owing to Mrs Taft's poor health, he will not be able to make the contemplated trip to Alaska this year.

An official census of Calgary has just been issued, and the population is shown by it to be 29,265. Two years ago a similiar census showed 21,000. The encrease is regarded as very satisfactory, especially in view of the accompaning increase in general prosperity and the flourishing condition of all local business enterprises. Calgary's growth in population is not only rapid but along the best possible lines.

After having made a journey from Tailem Bend to Lonton on the Murchison river, the crown lands commissioner of South Australia reports the "discovery" of 1,000,000 acres of good agricultural land on which 700 farmers could be settled if the country were opened up by a light railway. Another party reports having found 2,000,000 acres in the northern portion of Eyre's peninsula.

JUGGED VENISON

(A Bachelor's recipe)

Wash well and put in a stew pan about four pounds of venison steak without water, set on back of stove, being very careful it does not burn.

Add salt and pepper to taste.
One or two apples quartered.
One onion sliced.
Celery salt.
Three or four whole cloves and alspice.
One teaspoonful vinegar.

Let same simmer four or five hours, keep well covered.

When cooked enough, add enough water to make a gravy and put through cullender, after taking out the meat.

WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE

Suffrage meant at first the hoof or pastern of a horse, so called because it bends under and not over like the knee joint. This joint is brought into play when a horse wants to rise on his legs, and when standing, it supports him. Figuratively voters are the pastern joints of a candidate for Election, one who wants to rise on his legs, because they support him.
