MURRAY MURGATROYD JOURNALIST

By Morice Gerard

Sir Richard smiled one of those smiles which have less joy in them than many a sigh.

I'm afraid that nothing short of a doctor's certificate would be sufficient to justify absence to-night.

They ate their breakfast in silence each busy with his and her own thoughts. At its conclusion, Maud said—

Cannot you send a telegram?

To whom?

To Mr. Murgatroyd.

I don't exactly like to do so. It was one of the stipulations at the outset, that I should not appear in the matter. He may be landed in some imbroglio. Telegrams are among the most dangerous and damaging impedimenta of our present advanced stage of life.

Nevertheless, as the morning wore on, Sir Richard decided to risk it. He worded the telegram indefinitely.

Shall be glad to hear arrival in London. Wire.—Hanley.

The telegram was sent to the Falcon. An hour passed; there was no answer. Hanley walked his room restlessly impatient. A second hour dragged its slow length away. Still no reply. Then he determined to wire to the landlord of the Falcon at Tormouth.

Is Mr. Murgatroyd staying at the hotel? The answer was prepaid. The reply was prompt enough this time.

Mr. Murgatroyd left early this morning.

He was no nearer the solution of his difficulty.

After lunch—a meal on that day to both father and daughter in name only—he ordered his horse. Maud wished to accompany him, but the statesman preferred solitude.

Maud spent the afternoon in her private boudoir, in which she had received Murgatroyd on the night he brought her watch back. The work she had in her fingers was not exacting. There was ample opportunity for thought. Much of it went to Murgatroyd, who had captivated her fancy, and to whom the very anxiety and doubt of the last fortnight had lent a halo of additional interest. She could hardly be said to be in love with him. She was stirred to intense interest; and that sort of interest between a beautiful girl and a handsome man in the maturity of his mental and physical vigor is capable of becoming something deeper—given a reason.

As the day darkened and the lamps were lighted, Maud had a curious revulsion of feeling. The wave of doubt disappeared; the tension of anxiety was removed. Her father came in to tea with a haggard face. Maud met him with a cheerfulness which was not feigned.

Something tells me, dad it is all right. You will come out triumphant, as you always have done; and this time will be only an ugly dream. I know it; I feel it.

I wish I could too.

Nevertheless he took his tea more brightly, and afterwards talked on other subjects, especially Maud's presentation by the Duchess of Shropshire on the following Thursday. Although her dress was ready, and in the house, he had not seen it.

Should she go and put it on? Her father pinched her cheek.

I'm afraid I shall not prove a sound critic, but—I should like to see you.

So Maud went.

When she returned he could hardly believe his eyes.

Why, little girl, you do look—stunning. There! there's no other word for it. What a lot of admiration you will get! The daughter of poor Sir Richard Hanley, he added grimly.

They won't say that, said Maud. Then, after a pause, I am not so sure of the admiration—and she thought of Murgatroyd.

I wish the first was as certain to be right as the second to be wrong of your guesses.

When Sir Richard dressed for dinner his valet thought him more cheerful than he had been for days.

As he stepped into his brougham he bought the last edition of the Pioneer. It was just the fillip he wanted.

Why, Murgatroyd might have written or inspired it himself.

And he was nearer the mark than he knew.

CHAPTER XI.

Run to Earth

At twenty minutes past nine there was a sharp knock at No. 34, in the Tavistock Hotel. It was the private sitting-room occupied by Mr. Muller, who was having his after-dinner cigar, with a magnum of Leoville, a favorite claret of his, by his side. He had barely time to say: Come in, expecting to see the waiter, when Murray Murgatroyd entered.

Muller glanced at the new-comer with his strong keen gaze, and then flinging the cigar into the fire, half-smoked, sprang to his feet. For a heavy man Muller was singularly agile. He read in the face of the journalist that a fence was about to begin without any buttons on the foils.

The two men stood facing one another, half a dozen paces apart, with only the corner of the table between them. They were not ill-matched in height and breadth of shoulders, but Muller carried more flesh, and was the older man by an appreciable number of years. Intellectually, they were both singularly capable antagonists.

Muller was the first to speak.

This is an intrusion, sir; an unwarrantable intrusion. If you have come again about those papers, my answer is the same as before. I have not changed one whit. You shan't have them, sir; more than that, if you do not quit this room, a private room, the proprietor of this hotel ventures to call it, instantly, I will have you turned out; and Muller advanced a step as if about to put the threat into personal application immediately.

Meantime Murgatroyd's quick eye had been taking in the apartment. His principal apprehension all along had been lest Muller had deposited the papers and the incriminating plans and maps elsewhere during that evening. He did not fear the result if the documents had not been put beyond his reach. Murgatroyd's eye lightened when he saw on a little table in the window a small dispatch box, which had evidently been recently taken out of the portmanteau; for by its side was a traveling writing-case. On the dispatch box was clearly written to a perceptive imagination: Private documents, inquire within. Murgatroyd fully meant to inquire within. The proof was all the clearer to his mind by the fact that when Muller spoke of papers his glance involuntarily rested for a second on the dispatch box, which was at right angles, about an equal distance from each of them.

I shall not go, said Murgatroyd, until I have said what I have to say. Neither will you turn me out even of your private room. His tones were quiet, but very determined. He laid a half-sarcastic emphasis on the last two words.

We will see about that, exclaimed Muller, taking a pace backwards towards the bell, which was an electric button on one side of the fire-place. He kept his eyes on Murgatroyd, although turning half from him.

I think you had better hear me out. A touch of that bell will not bring the person you expect, but some one quite different, whom you do not expect.

Muller paused! There was something in the other's tone which convinced him in spite of himself.

I do not understand you, sir. You have forced yourself into my private room; I order you to go out; I don't want you; I have heard what you have to say before. Once for all, I hate you and your country.

I am quite aware of that, interposed Murgatroyd, with still more sarcastic inflection of the voice.

If you do not go out of the room, I will have you chucked out of the hotel. If no one else does, I will do it myself.

I don't think you will—not if you are wise.

What is the meaning of this bluster? If I ring this bell, of course the servant who attends to this room will come.

On the contrary.

Who else should, pray? You seem to have a powerful imagination—most journalists have, I believe.

I am not imagining now.

Muller flung out an oath. He had flushed fiery red to his temples, the color showing wine-deep through his blonde skin.

Say what you mean, sir, and have done with it. Who would come, pray?

A gentleman who ought to be standing here in my stead, if I were not—for reasons of my own, I confess, not connected with philanthropy, or even love of you—so lenient towards you.

Muller strode forward, until the two men were within arm's length of one another.

Murgatroyd did not give an inch. Muller glared at him, but he took no notice, only showing by the firm set of his mouth, and the hard look of his eyes, that the tension of his self-command was great.

You really give yourself away too airily. You might so easily have made me think it was special regard for myself which clothed you with this rare clemency. Perhaps after this long introduction you will condescend to enlighten me a little more. First, as to your object in coming here uninvited, and certainly unwanted; secondly, as to this mysterious individual, who seems remarkably like thunder, alarming to the uninitiated, but not dangerous. All this mystery would be highly interesting in a novel, but seems a trifle out of place in real life.

HAIR CAME OUT IN HANDFULS

Scalp In Very Bad Condition. Dandruff Could be Seen Plainly. Lost Most of Hair. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Cured.

42 Lippincott St., Toronto, Ontario.—"About a year ago I had a very bad attack of typhoid and my scalp was in a very bad condition. The dandruff could be seen plainly and I lost most of my hair. My hair fell out gradually, but after having it shampooed it came out in handfuls. I used Cuticura Soap to shampoo my hair, then rubbed the Cuticura Ointment into the scalp. The dandruff was very soon removed and my hair stopped falling out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured me." (Signed) Miss E. Chamberlain, Mar. 31, 1912.

HANDS COVERED WITH ECZEMA

Anse du Cap, Quebec.—"About one year ago my daughter had her hands covered with eczema. It broke out in a rash. She was unable to put her hands in water and she used to scratch them until they were red and inflamed and cracked and used to bleed. She was unable to sleep by spells from the pain and burning. We tried several remedies without receiving any relief. After she began washing with Cuticura Soap and applying Cuticura Ointment she got relief at once and after ten days' treatment was entirely cured.

"My baby when teething, broke out with pimples on her face. After three days' treatment of Cuticura Soap she was cured." (Signed) Mad. D. Coubure, Feb. 12, 1912.

Etymological Dispute

A chefonyear is a sort of bureau.
Tain't nothin' of the kind. It's a man what drives an auto.

If you were as strong, proportionately, as the beetle is, and were a man weighing a couple of hundred pounds, you would be able to lift with ease 400,000 pounds. For a beetle can lift a weight that is just 200 times its own weight.

Or if you could jump about with the same ease as the grasshopper you could spring over the tallest building in the Chicago loop district without much effort.

Or, again, if you wanted to be nearly as strong as the bee you would have to drag after you a load weighing 4,000 pounds.

It seems, apparently, from such observations made by naturalists that the greater in size the animal the greater is the muscular energy needed to move it about, and that there is not much left for outside force.

PANTRY CLEANED
A Way Some People Have

A doctor said:

"Before marriage my wife observed in summer and country homes, coming in touch with families of varied means, culture, tastes and discriminating tendencies, that the families using Postum seemed to average better than those using tea or coffee.

"When we were married two years ago, Postum was among our first order of groceries. We also put in some tea and coffee for guests, but after both had stood around the pantry about a year untouched, they were thrown away, and Postum used only.

"Up to the age of 28 I had been accustomed to drink coffee as a routine habit and suffered constantly from indigestion and all its relative disorders."

Tea is just as harmful because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"Since using Postum all the old complaints have completely left me and I sometimes wonder if I ever had them."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled)

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

Miss Mary Thearin is apparently the oldest unmarried woman in all the world. She lives in Denver, Colo., and not long ago celebrated her 101st birthday.

Really she is a most wonderful woman, according to the reports of her friends and relations. She claims never to have been sick a day in her life, and furthermore, having lived in single bliss all her life, vigorously insists that she never regretted it.

Evidently she is of the opinion that unmarried women are just as happy as married ones—that, in fact the unattached women are likely to get a great deal more out of life, for they are not as apt to spend their days bound down to domestic duties and labors.

Miss Thearin is still perfectly healthy and expects to continue so to enjoy a number of more years in the same cheerful state.

A Remedy for Bilious Headache.—To those subject to bilious headache, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are recommended as the way to speedy relief. Taken according to directions they will subdue irregularities of the stomach and so act upon the nerves and blood vessels that the pains in the head will cease. There are few who are not at sometime subject to biliousness and familiar with its attendant evils. Yet none need suffer with these pills at hand.

How to Save Your Tires

A tire manufacturing company gives this advice about the care of motor car tires:

The idea seems universal among motor car owners that the tire cost of their equipment far exceeds all other costs that they have to deal with. It is true that the tire cost must necessarily be greater than any other cost of running connected with the machine but is far from necessary that the cost shall bear such a ratio to the other expenses as is generally the case today.

This is especially true where pneumatic tires are used. If tires were loaded only to the maximum loads for which they were designed, if they were kept inflated always to the pressure called for by the tire manufacturer, if they were not run in ruts, if they were properly and quickly repaired when damaged, and if they were run on wheels which did not wobble, their cost of upkeep would be cut in half.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper

One of the reasons why English is expected to become a world language is that English people refuse to learn another. A correspondent sends the following example: At Muscat, at the entrance to the Persian Gulf, there lived for many years an Englishman, supposed to be the only, or almost the only Britsh resident on the 1,500 miles of Arabian coastline from Aden to Kowett. It would seem that he could hardly have escaped knowing Arabic. Yet he confessed that he could not speak a dozen words of that language.

But how do you carry on your trade some one asked.

Oh, he replied, the beggars have to learn English.

Oh, that my son should wish to marry an actress! shrieked the proud mother. Now, ma, don't take on so, urged the undutiful heir. She isn't really an actress; she only thinks she is.

Married Men Live Longest

Married men live longer than bachelors or widowers because they have loving wives around to say: One nip's enough, John and to see that hubby gets his dose of quinine when he comes home with wet feet.

The Journal of the American Medical Association reaches this conclusion in its current issue, published recently. The journal also comments on the fact that married men, deprived of their wives by death or the divorce court, pine away and die at a speedier rate than bachelors.

Undoubtedly the lower death rate among married men is partly due to the fact that married men live much more regular lives and consequently avoid many of the dangers of irregular living, says the Journal. This view would seem to be corroborated by statistics as to the mortality among married men who have lost their wives either by death or divorce. The mortality rate among widowers and the divorced is almost double that of married men of the same age.

Because mister, replied the boy, it was your dime I lost.

Woman Is As Old As She Looks

No woman wants to look old. Many in their effort to look youthful resort to the "beauty doctor's" prescriptions. Their mistake is that they visit the wrong department in the drug store.

Beauty depends upon health.

Worry, sleepless nights, headaches, pains, disorders, irregularities and weaknesses of a distinctly feminine character in a short time bring the dull eye, the "crow's feet," the haggard look, drooping shoulders, and the faltering step.

A Post-Impression

George Luks, whose paintings of children and old people made a recent sensation in a Fifth avenue gallery, was talking about the post-impressionists.

But Luks, said a magazine editor, what is a post-impressionist?

With a jolly laugh, Mr. Luks replied:

A post-impressionist, my dear fellow, is an artist who aims to give you the post-impression that he has orders for more pictures than he can paint.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions.

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Interesting People

Of King Nicholas of Montenegro somebody writes that he stops people to examine their guns and pistols, and rates anybody who carries them unloaded—which recalls an anecdote related of himself by Count Moltke, when, in 1856, he accompanied the crown prince of Prussia to Moscow to attend the coronation of Alexander II. At a ball in the kremlin Moltke was introduced to a group of picturesque potentates from central Asia, with their girdles stuck full of daggers and pistols, in the present day Albanian manner and he begged to know whether these firearms of theirs were loaded. Why should I carry them if they were not loaded, replied the spokesman of the party; and in a letter to his English wife Moltke confessed that he had never experienced such a set back all his life. Here at last, he said, I have found 'un homme serieux,' a man who is what he looks and means what he says.

All along the road to Lexington from Cambridge, Mass., there are monuments to rebel colonists who slew British soldiers on April 19, in 1775, but the most striking is that which is raised to the memory of Samuel Whittemore. He was 80 years of age at the time and he killed three British soldiers with his own hand. The stone records that for this he received punishment of three kinds. He was shot, he was bayoneted and he was beaten. He was then reasonably enough left for dead. The old fellow must have had a magnificent constitution and a spirit which the most devoted optimist must envy. For the inscription goes on to say that he recovered and lived to the age of 98.

Mr. Roosevelt's successful count of his glasses to win his libel action contrasts present customs with those of England 80 years ago. G. W. E. Russell recounts: Mr. Gladstone, conspicuous from his Oxford days for his moderation in the use of wine, told me that until Sir Andrew Clark limited him on grounds of health to a certain number of glasses he had never thought of counting them. One drank what was put in one's glass without counting or questioning.

His Bequest

One of the briefest and queerest wills on record is that of an old western farmer, who though reputed to be rich, died penniless. His will ran: In the name of God, amen. There's only one thing I leave, I leave the earth. My relations have always wanted that. They can have it.

Blankets of Bark

They have trees for blankets in Ecudar, and they like them, too. They are fond of the firm touch of the bark against them as they sleep.

We would probably think they were 'zero in covering,' and we would doubtless work up in a much bestiffened condition if we slept under a wood covering.

But the native Indians are most enthusiastic, according to J. Jameson, a traveller and lecturer, who has recently returned from those parts.

The blankets are made from the bark of a tree which is cut particularly thin. It is pounded and moistened and then pounded some more and put out into the sun to dry. And a most desirable and economical blanket it is, lasting anywhere from two to five years.

Armed with guns and huge gamebags, the two Irishmen sailed forth in search of sport. It was their first venture at shooting, and they were dreadfully keen.

Suddenly Casey spotted a bird and taking aim, prepared to fire the fatal shot. Then Pat seized him by the arm frantically. For mercy's sake don't fire, Casey! he yelled. Sure, an' ye have forgotten to load yer gun! That's as may be, my lad, retorted Casey, but fire I must. Begorrah, the bird won't wait.

A huntsman called on Hodge to settle for damages done by a run to hounds and found only Mrs. Hodge at home.

Has your husband, he inquired, made an examination yet?

That he have, sir, replied Mrs. Hodge, with a curtsey.

Rather a cursory examination. I suspect?

Oh, dreadful, sir. Such langwidge I never heard—never.

Between the woman who wants a husband and the woman who wants to get rid of one society in many a town is kept amused and interested.

WHEN AN AIRMAN SHOULD QUIT

Once the Nerve is Gone a Man Should Fly no More

He who flies constantly must look to one personal risk, which may vary according to the characteristics of the individual. This is the danger a man may incur by becoming a little careless while in the air. There is the possibility, in fact, that familiarity may breed—not actual contempt—but a temporary relaxation of vigilance, and piloting an aeroplane needs such watchfulness, such minute precision, that any staleness on the part of the man at the wheel, or lever, represents a peril that is very real.

The pilot who flies a great deal should remind himself constantly that there is no room for error in the handling of aircraft.

A loss of confidence not difficult to understand is suffered by an airman, sometimes, after he has been the victim of a serious fall, and in similar circumstances a jockey, or say a racing motorist, may be robbed of nerve and when a pilot does lose judgment, as the outcome of a bad mishap, his wisest course is to cease to fly. With a broken nerve, he is a menace to himself and to others as well.—Claude Graham White, in the National Review.

A Homely Thing

An enthusiastic young settlement worker, in her kindness of heart, decided to take to the seashore a little six year old child who had never breathed purer air than that of a city street.

Jennie's delight will do me good, she said to those who expostulated with her. It will help me to rest in my vacation to see her growing rosy. How she will enjoy it!

But it turned out that Jennie was a young woman with views of her own. As the train drew into the station of the seaside resort they could see from the car window a wide stretch of beach and sea.

Look, Jennie, exclaimed her philanthropic companion. There is the ocean!

Bursting into tears, Jennie flung herself, sobbing into the arms of her friend. Oh, my, ain't it homely, she cried.

The Man With Asthma, almost longs for death to end his suffering. He sees ahead only years of endless torment with intervals of rest which are themselves fraught with never ceasing fear of renewed attacks. Let him turn to Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy and know what complete relief it can give. Let him but use it faithfully and he will find his asthma a thing of the past.

On the Lion

A Baltimore man, interested in the education of the young, recently visited a kindergarten in that city. After the first exercises the visitor was asked to put a few questions to the pupils. To a boy of 5 the caller said:

Have you ever seen a lion's skin?

Yes, sir, came in ringing tones from the youngster.

And where? asked the visitor, impressed with the child's earnestness.

On the lion, answered the boy.

A girl exclaims: How romantic! when she hears of an engagement; a man: How tedious.

TIMELY AID

Western Recognition of the Great Work the C.P.R. is Doing for Canada

The confirmation by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy of the intention of the C.P.R. to expend $100,000,000 in the extension of its lines and perfection of its system in the west, comes at the present time as a piece of very welcome news indeed and furnishes moreover, ample opportunity for the people of Canada to review the situation and examine into the relations which subsist between the Dominion of Canada and this great corporation. When the evidences of a world wide trade depression which is now coming on are to be seen on all sides and the money situation is becoming all the while tighter, the announcement of a gigantic expenditure of this kind, and at this particular tim appears like a veritable rift in the clouds before the storm has had time to break.

We have all heard the C.P.R. damned for one thing and another and many of us may have done a bit of it ourselves at times when we didn't happen to think that things were coming sufficiently our way; but nevertheless where is there another corporation that has so thoroughly identified itself with the interests of a country as this mammoth railway and steamboat company has done? Neither is this the first instance when British Columbians in various districts and at various times have seen infant industries nursed along by the company in a way that was truly paternal, and it does not detract from the situation in the slightest where it may be seen that in doing so they were merebuilding up profitable business for themselves in the years to follow. It is now twenty years since they placed a steamer on Okanagan Lake that was far beyond the capacity required at that time, and many a lean trip was made before there was business enough to justify the expenditure. Any settler on the shore of Okanagan Lake had only to moor a log or two at the shore to serve as a wharf and display a white flag when he wanted the boat to call, and he and his little bit of produce or belongings was taken aboard. The mining industry in the Boundary was fostered along the same way, and when it was a matter of life or death to mine owners to determine whether the low grade ores of the Boundary could be made to yield a profit, the C.P.R. did their part to help out the situation by giving a rate of 35 cents per ton for the transportation of ore to the smelters at Greenwood, Grand Forks and Boundary Falls long before there was any other road to share this business with them.

In fact, Sir John A. Macdonald, farseeing statesman as he was, builded even better than he knew when he tied up with the men who risked their fortunes in the gigantic scheme of giving Canada a railway from ocean to ocean; and any aid which he and his parliament were able to give at critical periods to help it through, was bread sown on the waters, which is since coming back in countless ways and this latest manifestation in the expenditure of $100,000 in the extension and improvement of their system in the west at this particular time is but another magnificent instance of the policy they have seen fit to pursue and the national sentiment which has inspired it. To do the right thing at the right time is a happy faculty that is unfortunately not possessed by all, and neither are all in a position to do it, but it is fortunate for all that those who are in a position to do so, have the will to do so.—Hedley, B.C. Gazette.

They were in the antique section of the art museum and were gazing at a mummy swathed in its cloth. Auto or aeroplane accident, evidently, one man remarked. Guess it's the former returned his companion, for see, there is his number, and he pointed to a card reading 'B.C. 87.'

Doctor—For dinner you should take forty minutes.

Timid Patient—Would it be dangerous to add a bit of meat and some vegetables?

A lot of us in our secret souls are rather glad when we find we aren't getting what is coming to us.

WILSON'S FLY PADS

Will kill every fly in your house or store. All you have to do is to get the flies to the Pads.

Directions in each packet show how to do this.

Caring for Caged Birds

Vegetable food of some kind is a necessity for the caged bird. A lettuce leaf, water cress, a small piece of apple, a grape or a small thin piece of raw potato if there is nothing else should be given every day. The staple food should be canary seed mixed with a small percentage of rape and golden millet, but occasionally, in cold weather add a little hem seed.

Should the bird's nails grow too long, take him in your hand, loosely, but firmly, hold his feet in a cup of warm, soapy water for several minutes to soften the nail, then cut the extreme end with a pair of sharp nail scissors.

A bird should be accustomed to having a bath every morning. The best best plan to encourage this is to remove the bottom of the cage, put a small dish of water on a sheet of paper, and set the top of the cage over it. Many birds have to be coaxed into taking a bath, and if your bird has not been accustomed to it, it will help matters to remove the seed and water dishes. After he has bathed hang the cage in a warm pleace so that there may be no fear of the bird becoming chilled.

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.

Gentlemen,—In June, 98, I had my hand and wrist bitten and badly mangled by a vicious horse. I suffered greatly for several days and the tooth cuts refused to heal until your agent gave me a bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, which I began using. The effect was magical; in five hours the pain had ceased and in two weeks the wounds had completely healed and my hand and arm were as well as ever.

Yours truly,

Lord Ballyrot in Shangland

Having finished my repast in a public dining room you know, I arose and requested of the waiter that he regain my hat and my walking stick. The fellow summoned a boy in uniform and addressed him like this:

Hey kid, this gent wants his lid and his lumber. Go over to the coat-tree and shake off the fruit until you come across a gasstove toque and a yellow wagger-mast. Don't worry, Mister. The kid'll fetch your freak kelly and your groper.

My word!

Nothing but Beach

Mildred was sitting on her father's knee watching her mother arrange her hair.

Papa hasn't any waves like that, said the father laughing.

Mildred, looking up at her father's bald pate, replied:

No, no waves; it is all beach.

I ordered this steak not well done, said the impatient guest. I know it answered the intellectual waiter. But the cook is one of those people who believe that no matter how small a thing is it should be well done.

Neuralgic Condition Of the Nerves

In this age of nervous disorders neuralgia is fearfully common. The first thought is of neuralgia in the head or splitting headache, but neuralgia may affect any part of the body in which there are sensitive nerves.

The teeth are often blamed and extracted in error, when the cause of the trouble is in the impoverished condition of the blood and the starved nervous system.

While neuralgic pains are usually sharp and shooting, and consequently difficult to locate, the seat of trouble is usually sore and tender under pressure.

Neuralgia is pain and as such is the symptom of a disease—nervous exhaustion. The nerves must be restored before cure can possibly be effected.

In many cases neuralgia is easily curable by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. The patient is thin and bloodless and needs tonic treatment to form new, rich blood.

The application of cloths rung from hot water will afford relief from the suffering, and the regular use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for a few weeks will completely overcome the neuralgic condition.

Powerful drugs are to be avoided, because of their injurious effect in further weakening the nervous system. The Nerve Food cures by building up the feeble, wasted nerve cells, and for this reason is of lasting benefit.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1913

There is some liklihood of there being a racing matinee at the track on Saturday, Oct. 18. Some of the fast horses hereabouts are still in training, and if sufficient money to make attractive purses is forthcoming, a fine afternoon's sport will be had. Shorty Graham, of Nanaimo has apparently backed down in his offer to race his pony against Mr. Covert's mare.

The Cumberland News comments on the neglect of the Courtenay Fair management to send complimentary tickets to the press. This is an oversight that many societies in Courtenay are guilty of. It is not that editors are not able or willing to pay their way, but newspapers generally give notices beforehand and always give reports of any gatherings held, and it is but fair that this courtesy be extended to them. It is beneath a newspaperman's dignity to go to the wicket and ask for free admission.

A Choral Society and Glee Club is going to be started this fall in Courtenay. A number of ladies and gentlemen have already given in their names. Anyone wishing to join is requested to speak or write to Dr. Crompton. As it takes several weeks to get music, those wishing to join must be prompt. It is hoped that all those musically inclined will join. All voices are wanted, soprano, alto, tenor and bass. First class voices not a necessity. A meeting will be held next week to decide on the season's programme.

Water the Horses

This is the time of year when the horses, the motive power of the farm, suffer most. You would not get the hired man to follow the disc harrow, the plough or the binder long if a jug of cool water was not at hand frequently—why expect the horses to go for five or six hours without a drink? You say you have no water in the field. Then take some with you. Get a clean barrel or two. Put them in a wagon or truck—fill with water and haul to the field each morning and noon. Take a pail along and water the horses two or three times each forenoon and afternoon. Even if you only give them half a gallon each it will greatly refresh them. You should just as soon attempt to cut a harvest without twine as to cut a harvest without a barrel of water in the field for the horses.

CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS ARE INCREASING

Over 100 New Papers Started in 1912

We have just received from the Publishers, A. McKim, Limited, Montreal & Toronto, a copy of the 1913 Edition to their Canadian Newspaper Directory. This work shows that within the last year over one hundred new papers have started to publish in the Dominion. In fact so quickly is our Canadian Newspaper field spreading out that A. McKim, Limited, have decided that it will be necessary in future to publish the Canadian Newspaper Directory annually instead of biennially as before. This Canadian Newspaper Directory gives full particulars of practically every publication in Canada, and is intended as a guide to advertisers, in selecting papers best suited to their requirements.

The work before us is most comprehensive, and gives the population of every newspaper town and the circulation of practically every paper in the Dominion. In all it describes 1,688 publications issued in Canada and Newfoundland, of these 152 are Daily, 1,281 weekly or semi-weekly, 232 monthly and 23 published less frequently.

This issue also contains a list of the principal British publications which will be of much value to the many Canadian Firms now advertising in the Old Country.

The firm of A. McKim, Limited, who are easily the leaders in the Advertising Agency Business in Canada are to be congratulated upon the splendid service rendered both to publisher and advertiser through this very complete Directory. The price of the work delivered anywhere is $2.00 per copy.

A House Fly as big as a Cat

Many thousands of people have seen the big glass mosquito at the American Museum of Natural History in New York. Now it has a companion in a house fly 64,000 times as big as the one we are so often adjured to swat or starve. This model has cost nine months of work and study on the part of Ignasz Matausch, a Hungarian modelmaker in the service of the museum. The proportions have been preserved with the minutest care, Mr. Matausch having made his drawings and casts for the head and body and various members of the insect from dissection. Larvae and pupae of the fly are shown in models molded on the same scale, as are the eggs, which appear as little cucumber-shaped pieces of paraffin about two inches long. A real fly's egg is just visible to the naked eye. The same artist has painted an enlargement (1,500 diameters) of the hairy foot of the fly, showing the typhoid bacilli, of which the insect is the common carrier, one the claw-like tip of the member.

Two Immense Cables

For the purpose of hauling across the submerged pipes for the Capilano partnership pipe at Vancouver, two steel cables, twenty tons' weight each, have been conveyed to the north side of the First narrows. English vs. Continental Banks

The London correspondent of the American Banker contrasts British banks unfavorably with Continental banks as to the accommodation provided for travellers and others who have business with banks. At times he says in the English bank, the client has to discuss his business on foot at the counter, while on the Continent splendidly fitted reception rooms are provided and the utmost consideration is shown to customers.

Weed Work for 1914

Now is the time to plan for a better kind of weed work for 1914—a kind that will be effective. It seems to the provincial department of agriculture that the most effective work could be done by appointing a good man to take over the whole work and devote all his time from the 1st of February. Arrangements have been made to hold a short course of three weeks' duration for the benefit of the men who will be doing the work in this matter. At the short course will be taken up lines of work that will in a way fit a man for general agricultural work. In other words, the weed work will be done on the basis that ninety per cent of the work is educational.

Rainy Weather Made Popular

One of the large London insurance companies has lately issued a novel insurance policy against bad weather. It is primarily for the benefit of travelers who make trips in the spring and summer through England, and who complain if their trips are spoiled by variations of weather.

These policies are called, naturally enough, rain policies. The more you pay the greater, of course, is your compensation if it rains. You can pay $5 a week, and if it happens to rain for more than two days out of seven you get $40 for each such week.

There are four different classes, and all are arranged proportionately to the amount paid down.

HEREDITY IN HANDWRITING

Science Wakes up to a Fact That the Public Have Long Realized

Non scientific persons have long realized the remarkable similarity in handwriting of members of the same family, sometimes lasting for half a dozen generations, and now, it seems, science is at last waking up to this suggestive fact in heredity. Sir Rickman Goodlee, president of the Royal College of Surgeons, said recently:

I have lately been reading old letters dating back to the early part of the eighteen century, and I have been struck with the way in which mere handwriting is handed down from father to son, and mother to daughter.

It is impossible to trace quite clearly my great-grandfather's writing in that of my cousin's and father's and my own. If mere handwriting is thus transmitted, together with the tone of the voice and the shape of the nose, the question arises whether any one need be ashamed of his defects, sorry for his misdeeds, proud of his success, or satisfied with the consciousness of virtue. We may feel the long arms of our ape-like ancestors stretching out of the past and molding our characters. We may read all that has ever been written about free will from the time of Aristotle, and we may hug the notion that our actions have been predestined from the nebulous state of our planet.

But it makes no difference to us. We are still doggedly convinced that by taking thought we can add one cubit to our stature, or at any rate prevent it being one cubit less.

Miller's Worm Powders prove their value. They do not cause any violent disturbances in the stomach, any pain or griping, but do their work quietly and painlessly, so that the destruction of the worms is imperceptible. Yet they are thorough, and from the first dose there is improvement in the condition of the sufferer and an entire cessation of manifestations of internal trouble.

Woolen Cloths

The first woolen cloths manufactured in England were produced by a colony of seventy families of Dutch cloth-workers, who landed in England July 26, in the year 1331, having been induced to settle in England by a liberal grant from Edward III. Worsted manufacture was commenced in Norfolk a few years later, and the industry so launched soon reached large proportions. Every effort was made to protect the infant industry, and in 1463 it was enacted that no cloth but of Wales or Ireland should be imported into England. In the seventeenth century, during the reign of Charles II, a law was passed that all persons should be buried in woolen cloths. In 1700 an act was passed by parliament, prohibiting the importation into England of Indian muslins, chintzes, and cottons, which were threatening to supplant woolen cloths in popularity. It was not until the last century that cotton replaced wool as the staple commodity of English manufacture.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dystentry and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Trouble

The grand vizier was lolling among the cushions of his silken divan, drawing lazily from his jeweled chibouk, when a mameluke craved admittance for two of the Sultan's officers. The door swung open and the pair came forward and salaamed.

Speak, said the Grand Vizier. What message does the commander of the faithful honor me withal?

Without speaking, one of the officers handed a silken package to the premier. He kissed it respectfully and opened it. Then he gave a cry of alarm. It was the bowstring — the sign that he was under sentence of death.

What have I done to merit this? Speak, he cried.

You have insulted her gracious Majesty the Sultana.

Aha! This is another case of Potiphar's wife. The Sultan has been lied to by a scorned woman. Listen and I will tell you the real truth. The Sultana wanted me to elope with her and I refused.

That, O effendi, is the trouble.

Ready-made Medicine.—You need no physician for ordinary ills when you have at hand a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. For coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchial troubles, it is invaluable, for scalds, burns, bruises, sprains it is unsurpassed, while for cuts, sores, ulcers and the like it is an unquestionable healer. It needs no testimonial other than the use, and that will satisfy anyone as to its effectiveness.

Alfalfa Fireguards

Much of the loss to crops, buildings and other improvements, caused by railway fires in cultivated sections of the Prairie Provinces, could be avoided if farmers would raise some non-combustible crop on a strip of land adjacent to railway rights of way. Alfalfa is suggested in this connection, since this crop will not burn and a narrol strip will form a thoroughly efficient fireguard. Where clover can be grown successfully, it will answer equally well. The growing of potatoes, beets, or other root crops will serve the same purpose, where local market conditions will permit. This would be a step in the much to be desired direction of diversified farming. —C. L. in 'Conservation.'

A Story of Fate

Cupid Plays Odd Pranks

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The first day of spring was warm and bright, with a faint mist of green over the trees and shrubs in Linda Greer's garden.

"I never knew such a forward spring," mused Linda as she shook her duster out of the sitting room door. "The yellow bush is in bloom, and I smelled violets down in the orchard this morning. I wish—I wish I didn't have to enjoy everything alone!"

She looked wistfully down the straight aisles between the apple trees in the tiny orchard. Robins tripped jauntily over the short green grass, and bluebirds were flashing around the fences.

All the rare promise of spring was in the air, a promise that the summer would fulfill with its mated birds and blossoming flowers and ripening fruit.

Linda sighed a little and closed the glass door regretfully.

It was sad to be alone—the last of a large family and without one congenial friend to share her delight in birds and flowers and trees.

A tall, thin form came slowly down the long, hilly street and passed Linda's house. It stopped a moment and leaned over the fence to admire the daffodils and crocuses which made a circle of purple and gold about the old house, then passed on with studious head bent above a book.

Linda blushed like a girl and leaned dizzily against the window frame.

After a little while she roused herself and flew indignantly about her neglected tasks.

"Linda Greer, you're the biggest fool," she scolded herself roundly. "Here you are forty-five years old tomorrow and fluttering like a goose every time James Irving walks past the house!

"As if he hadn't been walking past the house twice a day for the last fifteen years! 'Tisn't likely he could get to and from his office without going by here, and yet—you're always a-fluttering, a-fluttering"—

Linda viciously thumped a teacup into the china cupboard, and to her dismay it splintered into fragments. While she was removing the debris a timid knock sounded at the kitchen door.

"Here's the mail, Miss Linda," said little Berton Sawyer when she appeared at the door.

"Thank you, Berton; here's your penny," said Linda kindly, supplementing the penny with a seed cooky.

When Benny had crunched along the graveled path out of sight Linda sat down by the glass door in the sitting room and looked at the weekly paper.

A couple of letters lay in her lap, but she did not look at them. They were doubtless circulars from some advertising firm. Glendale folks received many such.

When she had scanned the village news Linda put the paper aside for a more careful perusal and picked up her letters.

One was from a manufacturer of washing machines, and Linda threw it into the wastebasket.

The other was in a plain envelope and directed in a strong masculine hand.

With puzzled eyes Linda opened the missive and read it with reddening cheeks and wildly beating heart. She read it a second and a third time, and then it fell fluttering into her lap.

"Well, I never!" she gasped, covering her face with her hands.

Glendale, April 1, 1908.

Dear Miss Linda—I have long cherished the deepest affection for you, and I will never be really happy until you say you will marry me at once. Will you answer this so I can hear from you in this evening's mail? Respectfully yours,

JAMES IRVING.

So read the letter which Linda Greer received on that spring morning.

* * * * * * *

James Irving had come to the village when Linda Greer had passed the boundary between young ladyhood and old maid, while he had passed middle age. He lived the life of a recluse not from choice, but because he had no taste for the trifles that absorb boys and girls.

He had met Linda soon after his arrival and had been attracted by her. Had his affairs been in a state to warrant marriage he might have permitted himself to visit her often, but he was poor, and being well aware that any attention a man of his age might pay a single woman would cause remark he was constrained to do what looked to Linda like avoiding her.

Had she not noticed in him a liking for her she would have considered his keeping away from her simply as a mark of indifference. As it was, the evidence of his good will in one respect and his action in not cultivating a friendship between him and her puzzled her. She could never make up her mind what to think of his treatment of her.

A dozen years passed, at the end of which Irving was beginning to feel that life without a home was scarcely worth living. At this time his affairs began to pick up, and within another year or two he had accumulated enough to own a house. This was his condition at the time Linda Greer received the letter containing a proposition of marriage.

* * * * * * *

James Irving closed his desk and put on his hat. He bundled together some documents and tied them up with a red tape and placed them in his safe.

He locked the door of his dusty law office and made his way down into the street.

A little crowd in front of the postoffice denoted that the evening mail was in, and groups of giggling girls and smart youths watched Mr. Irving as he opened his letter box and took therefrom a number of letters.

Thrusting them into his coat pocket, he took his slow way homeward to his boarding place. He paused a moment for another glance at Miss Linda's garden, and he did not see her tender eyes beaming at him from behind the parlor blind.

Up in his quiet room he sat down by the window and opened his letters.

Two of them pertained to business, several were from old friends in distant cities, and the last one was a small envelope addressed in a prim, ladylike hand with faded ink.

A faint, delicate perfume as of dried rose leaves assailed his nostrils as he carefully opened the letter:

Glendale, April 1, 1908.

Dear Mr. Irving—I received your note this morning. You press me for an immediate answer to your proposal of marriage. I have never dreamed that you cared for me at all, but I will say that my answer will be what you wished me to say. Yours truly,

LINDA GREER.

Mr. Irving read this letter with manifest astonishment. His eyes were distended with surprise and unbelief, and a flush of anger overspread his fine features.

"A scurrilous trick on somebody's part," he muttered fiercely as he scanned the letter for the third time. Then he relapsed into deep thought.

He wondered who could have insulted the gentle little lady by forging her name to such a letter. Some village wit, doubtless, had conceived the coarse jest. He hoped that Miss Linda would not hear of it.

As he dressed for supper a sudden thought assailed him. Was it possible that some joker had forged his name to a proposal of marriage to Miss Linda and she had taken the matter seriously and that this letter was really from her?

He turned hot and cold at the bare thought. He would go and see Linda Greer, and perhaps he might gain some clew as to what had really occurred. It was a delicate matter—a very delicate matter.

He finished dressing, and without waiting for supper he made his way down the village street in the sweet April dusk and opened Linda's garden gate.

He walked slowly up the path, inhaling the spring odors of garden and field, and turned around to the side door.

This was the first time he had ever entered that garden, but for years he had stood afar, wistfully gazing at the one woman in the world for him and whom his poverty had prevented him from seeking out.

As he mounted the steps to the porch the door opened hurriedly, and Linda Greer precipitated herself out of the entrance.

"Oh, you!" she breathed hurriedly. "Did you receive a letter from me?" she asked, with a certain nerve excitement which sat strangely upon her.

"I—I believe I did," stammered James Irving, taken aback by her sudden question.

"I want it back again!" she cried fiercely. "It was a mistake. Hulda Lansing has just been here"—she paused and choked down a little sob—"and she says it was a trick of some of the girls and boys. Oh, oh!"

Linda broke into angry sobs, and in a trice James Irving's shyness vanished, never to return.

He took Linda into his warm embrace and kissed the top of her brown head with tender, lingering touch.

"Don't you believe one word that Hulda Lansing says," he soothed gently. "You are the only woman I ever loved, Linda, and your answer to my letter has made me the happiest man in the world."

"Your letter!" murmured Linda amazedly.

James Irving lied without a tremor of conscience.

"My proposal of marriage was genuine," he said gravely. "I have loved you for years, and you will not keep me waiting long, dear?"

"No," sighed Linda happily.

"Thirteen" Pursued Him.

When the misfortunes of Gustaf Adolf IV. of Sweden were on him the king pointed out to the queen how the number thirteen had influenced his life:

"Even the name G-u-s-t-a-f A-d-o-l-f IV. is thirteen letters. * * * I am the thirteenth king of Sweden from the time of Gustavus Wasa. At the age of thirteen I became king, and I reigned thirteen years after attaining my majority. I was made a prisoner on the 13th of March. It is now twenty-two times thirteen since Gustavus Wasa was elected king of Sweden in 1523, and seventeen times thirteen years since the death of Charles XII. in 1718; these added together produce the number 1809, the current year. * * * If you transpose the numbers one and three, which stand for thirteen, they make thirty-one, which is precisely my age now."

Curiously enough, he died in room No. 13 at the Weisse Rossli, St. Gallen—the date, Feb. 7, 1836.—"An Exiled King."

High Price For Straightness.

One of the most difficult problems in practical mechanics is to make a straight edge. How difficult it is may be judged from an incident that occurred in the shop of a celebrated astronomical instrument maker.

A patron asked what would be the price of "a perfect straight edge of glass thirty-six inches long."

"It cannot be made perfect," said the instrument maker, "but it could probably be made with a limit of error amounting to only a fraction of a wave length of light."

"How much would that cost?"

"About $40,000."

It turned out that the customer wanted the straight edge for a scraper and that an error of one sixty-fourth of an inch would not bother him.—St. Louis Republic.

The Water Vine.

Containing a quart of clear, pure water to every foot, the water vine, a black, snake-like, leafless stem, dropping from the ceiba and mahogany trees to which it has climbed, is one of the wonders of the Guatemala jungle. When the stem is cut the water spurts forth in a refreshing stream. Moisture is drawn up from the soil and filtered through the pores of the plant.

Must Be High Class.

"You have a beautiful manor house, but you ought to have a little village for the peasantry as we do in England. It adds to the landscape."

"All right," said the multimillionaire, "but it must be a restricted affair. No peasant admitted earning less than $5,000 a year."—Kansas City Journal.

His Misfortune.

"You have no one to blame but yourself for your unlucky business ventures," said the stern parent. "I advised you to look before you leaped."

"I did look, dad," explained the repentant son, "and I didn't leap. I got dizzy and fell."—Buffalo Express.

An Awful Threat.

Father—You have no sense. I'm going to cut you off with a million. The Son—If you do I'll disgrace the family by riding around in a second hand auto.—New York Globe.

No Compliment.

"Dining in a real home must seem pleasant after life in these restaurants," remarked the hostess, fishing openly for a compliment.

"It is a relief not to have to watch your hat and coat all the time," responded the dense old bachelor.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Worse to Come.

"The opposition candidate is perfectly wild. He says you have been telling lies about him."

"You just think he is perfectly wild. Wait until after my speech tomorrow. I'm going to tell the truth about him."

HAZARDOUS MAIL ROUTES.

Postmen In Some Countries Are Never Sure of Their Lives.

The camel postman in the Sahara hasn't any cinch—that is, if he has a family he's anxious to live for or happens to be leading a care free bachelor existence, for he needs all the nerve that he can possibly summon on every trip that he makes, for the wild tribes regard him as their particular prey, and he never does know when he starts out whether or not he is going to reach his destination.

Neither has the postman in some parts of Switzerland the safest job in the world. In fact, in several places in that country it is considered just about the most dangerous profession that a man can enter.

You see some of the postoffices are situated at a height of 7,000 feet. There is even a letter box at the summit of Languard, which is nearly 10,000 feet above the sea level. Here all sorts of disastrous things have happened to unfortunate carriers of mail. Three have been crushed to death by avalanches and a large number swooped down upon and killed by fierce eagles.

Then in India the postman always has to be on the lookout for snakes. It is claimed that within the last year 150 were killed by snake bites and twenty-seven eaten by tigers.

Queer, isn't it, when in this country the business of being a postman seems about the most harmless and least dangerous of any a man could pick out?

In parts of Siberia they have only two mail deliveries a year, while in the interior of China they have no regular delivery or regular postman.—Chicago Tribune.

Primrose Cures.

The primrose of old was credited with a medicinal as well as a superstitious value. Even now in some country parts of England a decoction of primrose leaves is supposed to restore a failing memory, and in 1654, when Culpeper wrote his "London Dispensatory," the primrose was regarded as an almost universal panacea, curing "convulsions, falling sickness, palsies, etc.," and strengthening "the brain, senses and memory exceedingly." And even the healthy did not disdain to eat it, for primrose pasty was once a popular Lancashire delicacy.—London Standard.

Cane Chair Seats.

Washing with hot soapsuds in which salt has been dissolved will tighten a cane seat in a chair which has stretched until it sags.

Caste In India.

Hostility between caste and caste is gradually disappearing in India. A Brahman has no longer the slightest hestitation in taking the hand of an "untouchable" and securing his thumb impression on the promissory note executed for a loan.

Trinidad's Cheap Labor.

Labor is so cheap in Trinidad that it does not pay to buy lawn mowers, as coolies will cut the grass with a small sickle or knife at a trifling cost.

The Roman Aqueducts.

The Roman aqueducts were marvels of architecture. The Anio was forty-three miles long; the Martio forty-one, of which thirty-eight miles were on 7,000 arcades seventy feet high, and the Claudia was forty-seven miles long, the arches being 100 feet high. The aqueducts brought 40,000,000 cubic feet of water daily to Rome, and the various sections of the metropolis were supplied with water by means of 13,504 pipes.

Guatemala's Safety Valves.

There are nineteen volcanoes in Guatemala.

Anthrax.

Anthrax is a disease from which sheep suffer. Human beings catch it from infected hides of wool, and for that reason it becomes known as "wool sorters' disease."

Columbia River Bread.

Along the Columbia river a kind of bread is made by the Indians from a moss that grows on the spruce fir tree. This moss is prepared by placing it in heaps, sprinkling it with water and permitting it to ferment. Then it is rolled into balls as big as a man's head, and these are baked in pits.

Greenland Women.

Many Greenland women are bald on the sides of their heads, owing to their method of dressing the hair, which is pulled back tightly and held in place by a ribbon.

Nero's Fish Pond.

Beneath the basilica of the Flavian palace in Rome Professor Boni found two narrow stairways, leading to a "piscina," a water reservoir consisting of five large compartments. It is still intact, covered and well preserved by water tight cement. The reservoir dates from the time of Nero, when it was used as a pond for sea fish, with the object of breeding exotic fish for the emperor's table.

AUTHOR AND SCIENTIST

DR. W. D. LE SUEUR HAS HAD A DISTINGUISHED CAREER.

Biographer and Litterateur, Who Has Just Concluded His Term as President of the Royal Society of Canada, Is Also a Scientist of Wide Repute and Was on the Staff of a Scientific Journal.

The annual meeting of the Royal Society of Canada concluded recently after an important session. The president for the year just closed was Dr. W. D. Le Sueur. He was elected to the society just ten years ago. In 1903 he succeeded the late Dr. Fletcher as honorary secretary. In 1911 he was promoted to the vice-presidency and in 1912 to the presidency.

Dr. Le Sueur was born in the city of Quebec in the year 1840. Forty-six years of his life were spent in the postoffice department where for many years he held the position of secretary. In 1863 he obtained the degree of B.A. from Toronto University and in 1900 that of LL.D., from Queen's University, Kingston, Ont. His tastes lay in the direction of the classics, history, and literature but his mind must also have had a scientific turn, for during fourteen years, from 1887 to 1901, he chiefly conducted the editor's table of the Popular Science Monthly of New York. He was a leading contributor to The Canadian Monthly in the '70's and '80's and to The Nation of Toronto.

He was an early student of Herbert Spencer and an article he contributed to The Canadian Monthly on Spencer's Data of Ethics was highly praised by the philosopher and was at his request reprinted in The Popular Science Monthly as an extremely effective presentment and defence of the views contained in that work.

As early as the year 1871 he contributed to The Westminster Review, then a quarterly, an elaborate article on the great French critic St. Beuve, who died not long before. His interest in French literature has always been keen; and his own literary style has probably been influenced in some degree by his admiration for the conciseness, perspicuity, and the delicate allusiveness of the best French prose.

In 1906 he contributed "A Life of Count Frontenac" to The Makers of Canada series. He also acted as editor of three or four books of the series. Having been asked to write another volume for the same series, namely, "A Life of William Lyon Mackenzie," the rebel leader of 1837, he did so, completing the work in the spring of 1908, but the book has never been published and has been the subject of litigation up to the present time, which, needless to say, has not diminished public interest in it.

The subject of Dr. Le Sueur's presidential address to the Royal Society of Canada was "History, Its Nature and Methods."

Raises Chickens on His Roof.

The architectural enterprise of Mr. Woollard, who has a fowl farm on the roof of his home in Mincing Lane, London, will commend itself to all thrifty housewives.

The average man may be content with the regulation allowance of chimneys and slates on his roof, but it is two and a half years ago since Mr. Wollard, caretaker of Market buildings, Mincing lane, put together some boards and wire netting and added a fowlhouse to the flat part of his roof.

Fowl keeping in the city is a profitable business. Mr. Wollard has seven birds—one Houdan, two Wyandottes, three White Leghorns, and one Cambridge game, which has just hatched out five chickens. He estimates their joint board and lodging expenses at one shilling a week, and can rely on an average supply of six eggs a day.

Cautious.

"Darling, do you love me for myself alone?" "Why, certainly, Charles. But you really have that $50,000, haven't you?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Well Classified.

"How did you list the money that fortune teller got from you?"

"I put it under the head of prophet and lost."—Baltimore American.
