MURRAY MURGATROYD JOURNALIST

I will answer both your questions. I have come with that purpose, Murgatroyd said with studied coldness.

In that dispatch box you have papers which I have undertaken to procure.

I hope you were well paid beforehand, with a stress on the last word. You won't get much out of payments by results.

Murgatroyd went on unheeding.

It was within your right to accede to my civilly-put request, or to refuse it.

Oh, you admit that! Then, in heaven's name, why are you here? I tell you, as I told you before in Devonshire, nothing will induce me to help one iota either you or your employers.

You had a right to refuse me holding no official position. My impression is the Government could have compelled you in the Court to produce documents for inspection which were of international import.

Muller ostentatiously yawned, and pulled out his watch.

This is rather a late hour to discuss points of law, is it not? he asked with bland good humor; which was almost more exasperating than the sarcasm which had gone before.

Murgatroyd again took no notice of the interjected remark.

Circumstances have totally changed since we last met. I found you an enemy to my country. I now know you to be a traitor—a traitor prepared to sell his treachery to the highest bidder. Murgatroyd no longer holding himself in reserve, flung out the words into his antagonist's face.

Muller turned white to the ears—white as his shirt-front. Then he struck Murgatroyd full in the chest with his clenched fist. The blow was doubly effective from its violence and from the fact that it was unexpected.

You liar, Muller hissed out, as he struck. Murgatroyd reeled with the effect of the blow, staggering backwards, and would have fallen, but the wall at the side of the room saved him. Muller stood with arms outstretched without further movement. He had been carried away to do more than he intended.

Murgatroyd steadied himself by a violent effort. Then he sprang upon Muller, and the two wrestled together in the narrow space the room afforded. Muller was the heavier, but Murgatroyd had had an English public school and 'Varsity training, which his after-life had strengthened rather than undermined. Round and round they went until Muller caught his foot against the leg of the armchair in which he had been sitting when his visitor arrived, and fell, striking his head on the table edge. Murgatroyd was dragged down upon him, and the two falling shook the lower rooms, in one of which Inspector Murphy was waiting the turn of events. In a couple of seconds he was at the door of the room above, pending off en route the waiter to the floor, who had been attracted in the same direction by the clash.

Murphy turned the handle of No. 34. It opened. He had almost expected it to be fastened. Then he looked in. Murgatroyd was kneeling by the body of his late antagonist, and with a nervous hand undoing his waistcoat to feel his heart action.

Can I help you? asked the Inspector coolly.

I believe hte man is dead'

Not he. It takes more than a knock on his thick skull to settle Mr. Muller, I can assure you. Here, help me lift him on to me sofa. He is only stunned a bit.

The Inspector had raised the fallen man's eyelids. He was a connoisseur on the subject, as much as any doctor.

Can you get some water from one of the bedrooms?

Murgatroyd, immensely relieved, went off eagerly. Some seconds elapsed before he could find an unlocked door.

Meanwhile Muller's eyes opened, and he saw a big, strange mon looking down upon him.

Who are you? he said.

Inspector Murphy, of Scotland Yard, Mr. Muller.

CHAPTER XII

Creckmated

An extraordinary change passed over Muller's face when he heard the name and official title of the stalwart man before him. Physically he was no coward, but for years he had had a morbid fear of the iron grip of the police. It had not prevented him running the risk, and placing himself in the utmost danger, for that was second nature to him, and his profession and livelihood; but the day of Nemesis had haunted his thoughts and imagination day and night. He was a naturalised British subject. In the dispatch-box on the table beneath the window was sufficient evidence to convict him of treason-felony. Muller's very prosperity accentuated his dread of the doom which awaited him when the culminating secret of his life of treasonable conspiracy and sedition was disclosed, as he felt now it would be in a few moments. He had never feared Murgatroyd, but he feared Murphy; for Murphy was the physical embodiment of the law which he had outraged and set at defiance. Murphy saw the look of fear on Muller's blonde round face, but was at a loss to understand it. He knew enough against Muller to have secured him a warrant; but what he knew was less than nothing compared to the actual facts, which would have sufficed to condemn twenty Mullers. He was powerless, too, practically without a warrant. Whereas Muller had endowed the Inspector with a warrant in imagination the moment he had heard his name. Neither of the men understood the position of the other, and it was as well for the success of Murgatroyd's plans that this film of mystification prevailed. Had Muller known that Murphy was only a reconnaissance in force, he would have plucked up courage at once. Had Murphy known that absolute, definite proofs of treason of the worst kind rested in that dispatch-box, on which his eyes rested directly he entered the sitting-room, nothing but death itself would have parted him from Muller until he was legally secured.

Muller lay and gazed at the Inspector; Murphy stood over the prostrate man and regarded him with keen scrutiny. Neither spoke. The silence, short as it was, was becoming oppressive, when Murgatroyd came in with a jug of water in his hand. Murphy turned to him.

Mr. Muller has recovered from his faint. I told you his head was thick enough. I will leave you two for a few minutes to finish your business. If you have any difficulty—here he half turned to Muller, speaking at him though not to him—call me; I shall be within ear-shot.

Inspector Murphy had divined, so far at any rate, that Muller was afraid of him, and not of Murgatroyd. But the idea did not rouse his suspicions to the real truth; for the police are quite accustomed to the atmosphere of respect.

After the Inspector had left the room, Muller shook himself and sat up. He seemed still a little dazed with the fall, but nothing else.

Is he coming back?

Not unless he is wanted. In that case he will have charge of the matter instead of me.

Murgatroyd too had read the signs of the times, and more distinctly than Murphy, because he had more data to go upon to form a judgment.

Muller shifted uneasily. His face was still white; he looked curiously unhealthy and repugnant. Only his color as a rule rendered him passably good-looking. The sense of defeat which appeared in his eyes and about the corners of his mouth, and the paleness combined, suggested the high-placed criminal.

I want three things. In the first place, the loan of the Transalpian documents. They shall be returned to the address you select.

Why not here?

Because you will not be here.

I don't understand.

Muller passed his handkerchief over his brow to wipe the dotted beads of perspiration from it.

You will directly, Murgatroyd answered coldly.

In the second place, you will destroy all the maps, plans and treasonable documents contained in that dispatch-box.

Muller was about to protest that there were none such in his possession but Murgatroyd waved him to silence. How the latter had obtained his information was the mystery of mysteries. Muller could only imagine that one or more of the three men had gone straight to the journalist and sold the secret. He did not trust any one a hair's breadth; yet he had relied upon their fear, for his vengeance would be terrible, and he held all their lives in the hollow of his hand. This questioning passed rapidly through his mind in the pause before Murgatroyd advanced his third proviso.

In the third place, you will leave England before to-morrow night. If you return within ten years, all the information in my possession will be placed in the hands of the police.

Muller gazed at him sullenly.

You are a hard task-master, now you have got the upper hand, and he brought his fat fist heavily down on the table.

If you make a noise Inspector Murphy will come in; you will find him a harder one.

I shall have to get the key from my bedroom.

You will not go out of my sight; I will come with you—if it is really there.

Murgatroyd did not believe for an instant that Muller would be separated from that key; he felt sure he had it about with him.

PIMPLES SPREAD FROM ARMS TO WHOLE BODY

Also on Face. Began to Ooze Water-like Matter. Torture of Itchiness. Pimples Festered and Enlarged. Cured in Two Weeks, Thanks to Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

Mt. Elgin, Ind. Institute, Muncey, Ontario.—"I suffered from skin trouble for two months before taking Cuticura Remedies.

The trouble started from itchiness on the back of the hands. When irritated, this itchiness turned to pimples. These pimples soon began to spread up the arms, from the arms to my whole body. They also came up on the face. Having spread over my body they became irritated by my clothing. They began to ooze water-like matter. Then began an almost killing torture of itchiness. When I scratched I seemed to scalp the pimples and make them extremely sore. They festered and enlarged, then they opened and left sore spots. These spots became scabbed and sore beyond expression.

"I sent for a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment which I received quicker than I expected. I was much relieved at the first application. I continued applying the Cuticura Remedies for two straight weeks, then I was completely cured, thanks to Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) John Jamieson, Mar. 6, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold throughout the world. Send to Potter D. & C. Corp., Dept. 55D, Boston, U.S.A., for free sample of each with 32-page book.

He Lived There all Fight

An anxious father got wind of the rumor that his son was leading rather a convivial life in Town. But the son strenuously denied the charge in letters to his father. Still unsatisfied, the father made an unexpected visit to his son's lodgings, and giving the bell a manly pull, was met by a grim-faced landlady.

Does Mr. James Smith live here? asked the father.

He does, replied the landlady. Bring him right in.

THE "BLUES"

A Lady Finds Help from Simple Food

Civilization brings blessings and also responsibilities.

The more highly organized we become the more need there is for regularity and natural simplicity in the food we eat.

The laws of body nutrition should be carefully obeyed, and the finer more highly developed brain and nervous system not hampered by a complicated, unwholesome dietary.

A lady of high nervous tension says:

"For fifteen years I was a sufferer from dyspepsia. I confess that an improperly regulated diet was the chief cause of my suffering. Finally nothing that I ate seemed to agree with my stomach, and life, at times, did not seem worth living.

"I began to take a pessimistic view of everything and see life through dark blue glass, so to speak. My head became affected with a heavy creeping sensation and I feared paralysis.

"Palpitation of the heart caused me to fear that I might die suddenly. Two years ago, hearing Grape-Nuts so highly spoken of by some estimable friends of mine, I determined to try it.

The change in my condition was little less than miraculous. In a short time the palpitation, bad feeling in head and body began to disappear and the improvement has continued until at the present time I find myself in better health than I have ever enjoyed.

"My weight has increased 20 lbs in the last year and life looks bright and sunny to me as it did when I was a child."

Not for Him

An unexplained incident with a humorous side occurred at a railway station. A train was drawing out from the station when a man came running along the platform. Smith! Smith! Smith! he shouted.

In a car at the rear of the train sat a passenger, who, hearing the cry, thrust his head out of the window. Immediately the runner on the platform struck him a smart blow across the cheek.

Every moment the wheels were revolving more swiftly, and before the insulted passenger could call an official the train was clear of the station. He went at once to the conductor's quarters.

What kind of an outrage is this? he demanded. Here am I, an innocent passenger, sitting quietly just as the train pulls out of the station. Suddenly a man runs down the platform shrieking Smith! Smith! I look out of the window, and he reaches up and almosts knocks my head off! Now, I want to—

Pardon me, interrupted the conductor. Is your name Smith?

No it isn't and that is just what makes—

Well, then, sir, what did you look out of the window for? There was not anybody calling you, was there?

Worms in children work havoc. These pests attack the tender lining of the intestines and if left to pursue their ravages undisturbed, will ultimately perforate the bowel, because these worms are of the hook variety that cling to and feed upon interior surfaces. Miller's Worm Powders will not only exterminate these worms of whatever variety, but will serve to repair the injury they have done.

Horse Always Lost

The passenger inside the cab suddenly put his head out of the window and exclaimed to the driver: Get on, man; get on. Wake up your nag.

Shure, sor. I 'aven't the heart to bate 'im.

What's the matter with him. Is he sick?

No, sor, 'e's not sick, but it' unlucky he is, sir, unlucky. You see, sor, every morning afore I put 'im in the cab, I tosses 'im whether 'e'll 'ave a feed of oats or I'll have a drink of whisky, an' the poor baste has lost five mornings running.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper

Difficult to Catch

An Englishman who was appointed to an important post in China got married soon after. Amongst the recipients of the usual little cardboard boxes containing a piece of wedding cake was a Chinese merchant with whom the bridegroom had an outstanding account for goods supplied. After the honeymoon one of the first persons the newly-wedded husband met was his Celestial creditor.

And how did you like the cake? said the Englishman, laughingly, after the usual congratulations.

Ah, ha! returned the Chinaman, with a cunning leer, me no such a big fool to eat him, sah. Me put cakee in fire. Burn him up. He! he.

Oh, that's too bad! said the Englishman, very much hurt. You might have tasted it at least, out of compliment to my wife, and myself. Why didn't you?

Me too clever, sah, said the Celestial, with the same cunning smile. You owe me monee, sah! sendee poison cake; I eat him; I die; you no payee up. Houp-la. He! he! he! I know you Engleesh.

I Should Worr,

Mrs. Smith was repeatedly reminding her husband that she owned the silver, that she owned the furniture, that the piano was her own private property, and so on until poor Smith began to wonder what she'd claim next.

The other night Mrs. S. woke in alarm. Strange sounds were heard in the lower parts of the house, and quickly rousing her husband, she cried:

John, John! Get up! There are burglars in the house!

Eh? inquired Mr. Smith, rubbing his eyes.

Burglars downstairs, repeated Mrs. S.

Burglars? said Smith, as he turned over. Well, I should worry. I don't own anything.

Officer (to recruit who has missed every shot)—Good heavens, man, where are your shots going?

Recruit (nervously)—I don't know, sir; they left here all right.

Championship of United States

Shooting against a field of more than three score of the leading 'short arms' marksmen of the country, Peter J. Dolfen, of Springfield, Mass., registered the winning score of 469 out of a possible 500, the second highest score made in thirteen consecutive years in this event, and became champion revolver shot of the United States. The contest for the championship was designated as Match 'A' in the United States Revolver Association's League and was participated in by members of revolver clubs in several large cities between the two oceans. The shooting was conducted under the management of U.S.R.A. officials on the ranges of the various clubs and the targets forwarded to the Association's headquarters at Washington, D.C., for the final decisions.

Fifty shots were fired at 20 yards on the standard American target by each contestant, Mr. Dolfen shooting Remington-UMC metallic cartridges in making his exceptionally high score. The retiring title holder is Dr. J. R. Hicks, who made 453 out of 500 and fell into third place.

The new revolver champion is a possibility who has been looming large on the horizon of the sport for some time. Mr. Dolfen is a consistent maker of remarkable targets in his work on the Springfield teams. Last year he was made one of the American contenders for world's championship honors at the Olympic Games at Stockholm, and in competition with the picked shots of many countries won second place in the individual pistol match with 474 out of a possible 600, this score being exceeded only by A. P. Lane, another member of the American team who, shooting Remington-UMC ammunition, won the event with 499 out of 600, establishing a new world's record.

Wise mothers who know the virtues of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator always have it at hand, because it proves its value.

Safe From Disturbance

A spider one day was crawling down the aisle of an old church, looking very disconsolate and with a decided limp, and on his way met another spider, who accosted him as follows: Well, old chap, what's the matter. Lost a couple of fat flies, or is your liver out of order?

Neither, dear friend. The fact is I sleep under the pulpit cushion, and the vicar will persist in banging on the cushion to emphasize his points, and I am suffering from three broken legs.

Oh! I am sorry for you; but if you don't mind sharing my bunk you are quite welcome.

And where may that be?

In the poor box. Nobody ever disturbs me there.

A Slight Mistake

The tourist stood and gazed in wonder at the hill—such a hill. It was amazing! lovely! gorgeous! magnificent! enough to make an emotional poet swell with ecstasy. The beautiful flowers studded here and there among the deep-green fields, opening out their gaudy petals to drink the warm rays of the summer sun were splendid.

The tourist almost ran past the girl who was sitting there—to climb this fairy mountain, but he had scarcely taken two steps up its sloping bank when the girl jumped up with a scream. You—you brute! she shrieked. How dare you trample over my hat.

Knew Him Well.

A certain cantankerous old gentleman not long ago advertised for a coachman, who was required, among other qualifications, to possess an intimate acquaintance with the neighborhood; but, to his great surprise, he received not a single application for the vacant post.

I cannot understand it at all, he said, as during a chat one day with an old hostler at the local livery stables he had mentioned the fact.

Let me see, said the latter, as a gleam of intelligence flitted across his face, ye hadvertised, I believe, for one as must be well acquainted with the neighborhood, didn't ye?

I did, replied the old gentleman, shortly. I want some one who knows his way about.

Ah, that explains it, was the answer. Ye see, they who knows the neighborhood well knows ye, too.

HAD A STROKE OF PARALYSIS

And Found a Cure in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

It is always better to prevent serious diseases of the nerves. There are many warnings, such as sleepessness, irritability, headaches and nervous indigestion.

Prostration, paralysis and locomotor ataxia only come when the nervous system is greatly exhausted. Even though your ailment may not yet be very serious, there is a great satisfaction in knowing that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will cure paralysis in its earlier stages.

Mrs. R. Bright, 215 Booth Avenue, Toronto, writes: "Two years ago my husband had a stroke which left him in a weak, nervous condition. He started taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills, and we saw the good results almost immediately. They have made a new man of my husband and we cannot speak too highly of them."

Her Misapprehension

He (desperately) — Tell me the truth. Is it my poverty that stands between us?

She (sadly)—Yes.

He (with a ray of hope)—I admit that I am poor, and so, unfortunately, is my father; but I have an aged uncle who is very rich and a bachelor. He is an invalid, and cannot long survive.

She (delightedly)—How kind and thoughtful you are! Will you introduce him to me?

I am sending you some manuscript, wrote the budding authoress. I also inclose a letter of introduction from the vicar, one from my teacher, and a paragraph from our local paper, telling of my adoption of a literary career. Is there anything else I might send you to interest you in my writings?

Dear Madam, wrote the perspiring editor in reply, you need send me but one thing—a good short story.

The Scientific Farming of the Woodlot

"There is no part of the farm which will give bigger returns for so little expenditure of time and labor as the woodlot." This statement in the July number of the Canadian Forestry Journal, i. made by Mr. B. R. Morton, B. Sc. F., the silvical expert who is engaged by the Forestry Branch at Ottawa to demonstrate to the woodland owners of eastern Canada just how these bigger returns may be achieved. But if it is not possible to obtain such expert advice, there are yet three ways in which the farmer, by the exercise of ordinary common sense, can vastly improve the composition, production and reproduction of his woodlot.

The first thing necessary is to improve the character of the crop, which can be done by cutting down and using for fire-wood all diseased and deformed trees, as well as such species whose presence in the woodlot is not desirable. Only too frequently is the method of cutting exactly the reverse. The best trees are cut, often for purposes for which an inferior wood would serve, and the poorer species are left seed-in the cut-over areas and to gradually crowd out the better varieties. Before cutting, the farmer should consider first the use to which the wood is to be put, and second, the species-composition of the woodlot which is most desirable. Firewood probably yields the best returns for a small acreage and for this purpose rapid-growers such as poplar, ash and elm should be encouraged, which should make an annual growth of from one-half to one cord per acre. Basswood too, will be in increasing demand because of its rapid growth, because it coppices readily and because of its value in small sizes for the manufacture of excelsior, cooperage stock and other small articles for which the wood is particularly adapted. Maple reproduces readily, and although not a rapid grower, it nevertheless yields a substantial revenue when it becomes large enough to tap. Soft woods like spruce, balsam and pine grow much more rapidly than hardwoods and might be advantageously grown for fuel or pulpwood.

When the most suitable species have been selected and the weed-trees removed, the woodlot must then be thinned until the crowns of the best-formed remaining trees are seen to barely touch. An acre can only produce a given amount of wood each year and the fewer trees there are to share this yearly increment, and yet fully utilize the crown space, the more rapid will be the growth of these trees.

The third requisite in the scientific farming of the woodlot, is that the cattle be kept out, especially after heavy cutting, when reproduction is most desired. Cattle are just as injurious to a young crop of tree-seedlings as they are to a young crop of grain. They may indeed eat the grass in the woodlot, but they would just as soon, if not sooner, eat the young and tender hardwood shoots, and the same can be said of sheep. Even coniferous seedlings are not immune so that certainty in reproduction is only assured by fencing off the cut-over areas. Dr. Fernow predicts that "There will be a time when the woodlot will sell the farm or will be a necessary part of the farm to make it valuable. In the seasons when his other work slackens the farmer could very easily improve his woodlot in anticipation of this time of increased wood values.

To Men Who Live Inactive Lives.—Exercise in the open air is the best tonic for the stomach and system generally; but there are those who are compelled to follow sedentary occupations and the inactivity tends to restrict the healthy action of the digestive organs and sickness follows. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills regulate the stomach and liver and restore healthy action. It is wise to have a packet of the pills always on hand.

Willie's Threat

Willie was a little fellow of eight, who with his mother, stayed at the house of an aunt without having made provision to sleep. There being no small boys in his aunt's family, Willie was put to bed in one of his little cousin Deborah's nightgowns. He was very indignant at having to wear anything with so many frils and so much lace round the neck and on the sleeves.

I won't stand it, mother, he protested loudly on the second night. I won't wear anything so girly! I'll run away, you see if I don't, before I'll put that thing on again. Why, rather than wear that—that horrid nightgown—I'll sleep raw!

Requisite Knowledge

As a country physician was driving through a village he saw a man amusing a crowd with the antics of his trick dog. The doctor pulled up and said:

My dear man, how do you manage to train your dog like that? I can't teach mine a single trick.

The man looked up with a simple rustic look, and replied:

Well, you see, it's this way: you have to know mor'n the dog or you can't learn him nothin'.

Marvellous

I have been taking some moving pictures of life on your farm, said the photographer to an agriculturist.

Did you catch my laborers in motion? asked the farmer.

I think so.

Ah, well, science is a wonderful thing!

Wrong all the Time

A political speaker was attacking the Government with more venom than reason. A man at the back of the hall at last cried out: You're wrong, sir! A little nettled, the orator continued without heeding.

Presently, in answer to another strong assertion, came again: You're wrong sir! The speaker looked angry, but continued on the war path.

You're wrong, sir, again rang out.

Angrily addressing the persistent one, the orator cried: Look here, I could tell this man something about this Government which would make his hair stand on end!

You're wrong again, sir! came exultantly from the critic as he stood up and removed his hat. His head was as bald as an egg.

No Pigeon

The old lady was about to make a railway journey for the first time, and when she arrived at the station she did not know what to do.

Young man, she said to a porter, who looked about as old as Methuselah, can you tell me where I can get my ticket?

Why, mum, he replied, you get it at the booking-office, through the pigeon-hole.

Being very stout, she looked at the hole in amazement, and then she burst out in a rage.

Go away with you! How can I get through there? I ain't no blessed pigeon

Risky

Builder's Man—Hi, guv'nor, that new row of 'ouses in Maple Grove are all fallen down like a pack of cards.

Builder—Idiot! Didn't I tell you not to take the scaffolding down till you'd put up the wall-papers?

Waiting at the Church

A young man lived at some distance from his bride-elect. In the eventful day he set off for the station in good time, but, being delayed by friends, he missed his train. Then he bethought himself of a telegram.

Don't marry till I come—William! was the message he wired.

The Real Worry

Chief of Detectives—Now, give us a description of your missing cashier. How tall was he?

Business Man—I don't know how tall he was. What worries me is that he was $12,000 short.

Hospitality

And did you enjoy your African trip, major? How did you like the savages?

Oh, they were extremely kind-hearted! They wanted to keep me there for dinner!

Rejected Cabinets

Irate Woman—The photographs you took of myself and husband are not at all satisfactory and I refuse to accept them.

Photographer—What's wrong with them?

Irate Woman—What's wrong? Why, my husband looks like a baboon.

Photographer—Well, that's no fault of mine, madam. You should have thought of that before you had him taken.

Not Hurt Socially

I wouldn't associate with him. I understand he's served a term in prison.

That's true, but it was for an offense involving a million dollars or more; nothing really disgraceful you know.

Must Chew the Pill

Is there any way you can suggest by which we can cure her of her infatuation for him

Oh, yes, that's easy. Just—

I mean without letting her marry him?

Not that I know of.

Easy Marks

Some men haven't any more caution when they happen to get a little money than to show it to the family.

Right

The teacher had been telling the class about the rhinoceros family.

Now, name some things, said she, that are very dangerous to get near to and that have horns.

Motor-cars! replied little Jennie Jones, promptly.

Writer's Cramp

Pa, what is writer's cramp?

It's being cramped for money, my son. All writers suffer from it.

Critic (as the composer played his last piece)—Very fine indeed. But what is that passage which makes the cold chills run down the back.

Composer—That is where the wanderer has the hotel bill brought to him.

Constipation

is an enemy within the camp. It will undermine the strongest constitution and ruin the most vigorous health. It leads to indigestion, biliousness, impure blood, bad complexion, sick headaches, and is one of the most frequent causes of appendicitis. To neglect it is slow suicide. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills positively cure Constipation. They are entirely vegetable in composition and do not sicken, weaken or gripe. Preserve your health by taking.

George's Error

On a wet, cold, February day, George Farmer stood coughing before a chemist's window.

His eye rested on a placard, which said:

No more Coughs.
No more colds.
25c. per bottle.

George entered the shop. The chemist said he could guarantee the anti-cold remedy, and the young man bought a bottle.

Two days later he returned again through mire and sleet.

I have drunk the mixture, he gasped, and it seems to have plugged up my throat, I can hardly breathe!

The chemist started.

You drank it? he cried. Why man, it's an indiarubber solution to put on the soles of your shoes.

GOOD BLOOD THE SECRET OF HEALTH

To be Healthy You Must Keep the Blood Rich, Red and Pure

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are useful in any disease caused by thin or impure blood, and the list of such diseases is astonishingly large. Anaemia literally means a condition in which the blood is thin and watery. In rheumatism the blood becomes thin more rapidly than in any other disease. After an attack of la grippe or acute fevers the blood is always thin and impure, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the tonic to use during convalescence. When the blood is poor and thin the stomach suffers. The food ferments, gas and certain acids form and the trouble is pronounced indigestion or dyspepsia. The nerves receive from the blood all of their nourishment to keep up their energy and repair waste or damage. Some forms of paralysis are caused by thin blood. The progress of locomotor ataxia is stopped in many cases when the blood is made pure, rich and red. This is only a partial list of the troubles having their origin in impure, watery blood, and all can be cured by supplying the blood with its missing constituents.

This is exactly what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do. Their chief mission is to make rich, red blood, and this good blood reaches every organ and every nerve in the human body, thus driving out disease and bringing renewed health and strength to thousands of weak, despondent people.

Ask your neighbors. There is not an inhabited corner in Canada where Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have not restored some sufferer, and all over this country there are grateful people who do not hesitate to say they owe health—in some cases life itself—to this great medicine. If you are ailing begin to cure yourself to-day by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Sold by all dealers in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Co., Brockville, Ont.

Epsom Salts

A distinguished foreigner visiting Epsom Downs in Thackeray's company noticed many men dressed as sailors who were not, to native and experienced eyes, the real article.

Ah, said the visitor, these are, I suppose, what you call your British tars?

Oh, no, replied Thackeray. Only Epsom salts.

Pupil—Please, teacher, was it a man or woman?

According to Passport

An amusing story—which shows the value of the passport system—comes from Russia. Prince Metchersky, who is a journalist by profession, was commissioned by the Czar to investigate certain agrarian troubles. The Prince went to Roumania, and there obtained one of the permits necessary for taking livestock across the frontier.

Then he went to a Russian frontier post and presented the document to the official as his warrant to pass. The official could read but little to Russian and knew no Roumanian, but the big document, with the coat of arms and seal, greatly impressed him, and he cheerily put the Russian official stamp on it.

His investigations ended, the Prince went back to Moscow, and at the first opportunity presented the passport to the governor, saying:

With this document I entered Russia, and traveled about for five months yet you must admit that the description of me is scarcely correct or flattering.

The amazed governor read that the Prince was one black sow, full grown, with one ear partly torn away.

Mlle. Gaby Deslys, the French dancer, is an exceedingly slender young person, and for purposes of better demonstrating her art she wears, when on the stage, exceedingly slender clothes. A person from the interior who had seen the lady, came forth to tell about her.

What does she look like? asked a friend.

Well, said the visitor, if she'd shut one eye she'd look like a needle.

Children, said the minister, addressing the Sunday school, I want to talk to you a few moments about one of the most important organs in the world. What is it that throbs away, away, never stopping, never ceasing, whether you wake or sleep, night and day, week in and week out, without any violition on your part, hidden away as it were, in the depths, unseen by you, throbbing, throbbing, rhythmically all your life long?

And during the pause of oratorical effect came a small voice: The Gasmeter.

One day an Irishman met an Englishman and accosted him thus:

Do you know in what month of the year my wife talks the least?

Well, I suppose when she catches cold and loses her voice, said the Englishman.

Not at all. It is in February, said Paddy.

Why is that? asked the Englishman.

Because February has the fewest days.

THE ORIENT QUESTION

At a recent meeting of the Westminster Presbytery a long resolution in reference to oriental emigration was passed. Stripped of its verbosity it says that the oriental is an undesirable citizen and that some means should be devised to restrict his flow into British Columbia. Also that the wives of the Hindoo's now here should be allowed to come into the country.

The orential population is now 1 to 9 and as there are practally no oriental women here, this is equal to about one oriental workman to every five white men. No white labors can go to the Orient and compete with the orientals, yet the orientals can come here and compete with white men and get comparatively rich. So long as the orient is open for the entry of traders and missionaries the orientals have a right to demand entry into the countries that send traders and missionaries to bother them, outside a few missionaries (who could be better employed at home) very few Canadians are in the Orient. If the Canadians would come home and stay home Canada would very soon be in a position to stop oriental emigration, and to control or get rid of those we now have in our midst, who despite the well-meaning verbiage of philanthropist and soothsagers, the orientals are not desirable citizens in a white man's community. Their ways are not our ways and their manner of living is a menace. All the same it is true that some orientals are better neighbors than some white men, but if this is to be made a white man's country, we must exclude the brown man.

In former years when the government inspectors were looking for tuberculosis in the cattle hereabouts it has been customary to pass over herds owned by the Japanese, who were not delivering milk to the creamery. This year a change has been made and all herds are being inspected. So far this year nearly a dozen cows found suffering with the disease have been destroyed. The government should go a little further and compel all dairies to be put in a sanitary condition. Cumberland citizens are largely supplied with milk produced in dairies which are barred at the creamery. It might be a good move on their part to have the sources of supply looked after.

Campbell River

About a hundred men are to quit work at Campbell River to-day, Tuesday, owing to the closing down of the International Timber Co's., Camp. For quite a time now there has been a slackness in the timber trade: the price offered for timber having reached such a low level. Trade altogether in British Columbia has not been brisk for many months now, but, it is to be hoped when affairs in the East are of a more settled character, work will continue as formally. The camp reckons to open early in the New Year.

Campbell River and surrounding district sustained a loss when Mr. Allan, the reverend minister, left at the close of last week for the East, to complete his last year of study in the ministry. Although our Scotch friend had only worked in the district for five months he had gained the good will of the people, and more especially of the young fellows around the camps. Through the genuine kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Thulin, a card party was held at the Willows Hotel, where about fifty guests assembled to bid farewell to their departing minister.

The Rev. J. Hepburn who hails from Eastern Canada, and who has already been out of college two years, is to take up the duties of the late minister.

Twenty-Five Years Ago

(Victoria Times)

Major Rodgers, C. E., of Kicking Horse and Rodgers' Pass fame, arrived in the ci y last evening from Seattle, and is staying at the Driard. He said the railway to Bellingham Bay was a certainty of the future. Were Victoria to secure connection with there, via Saanich, and another ferry, it would be an incalculable value to the city. The major knows nothing about the Seymour Narrows plan, although, he agrees that $500,000 would be a big inducement.

The Difference.

The Pessimist is he who sees
In clouds naught but distress,
And in their opaque mysteries
Discerns mere inkiness.

The Optimist admits the cloud,
And yet his glance pursues
The misty rifts that are endowed
With irridescent hues.

As a result of experiments made in Leicestershire by biologists, not yet completed, a new race of horses is being developed for the army.

Scientists have found 56 acres in the oceans where the water is more than three miles deep, ten where it exceeds four miles and four where the bottom is further than five miles.

A scheme is on foot to establish motor busses in Victoria. Shares ar: to be sold at $10 each and the f re will be from 2 to 5 cents according to distance travelled. A similar scheme between here and Bevan and Mine 8 should prove a profita'le investment.

One for Mathematician

A noted mathematician, considered by many a wonder, stopped at a hotel in a small town in the English provinces. There were a number of travelers staying there and there was also a gathering of medical men. One of the doctors thought it would be a joke to tell the mathematician that some of the M.D.'s had decided to kidnap him and take out his brains to learn how it was he was so good in mathematics. He was then asked by them what he was going to do about it. He replied: Why, I shall simply go on without brains just as you doctors are doing.

AN UNUSUAL ACTIVITY

President of Eddy Company Takes Cheerful View of Business Situation

Mr. W. H. Rowley, president of the E. B. Eddy Company, with twenty-five or more branches in Canada, with resident agents in every large city from Halifax to Victoria, and with sixteen or eighteen thousand customers and correspondents in this country, takes a very cheerful view of the business situation.

Mr. Rowley told The World yesterday that their business throughout Canada was better during the first half of 1913 than for the same period of 1912, that is, sales were greater, although profits are less. Larger sales show increased consumption; smaller profits indicate greater cost of material, higher wages and cut prices by senseless rivalry.

The chief channel of the distribution of Eddy's wares is through the wholesale grocery and jobbing trades. Until a few weeks ago, buying was done with great caution and only for immediate needs; now, however, there is less feeling of anxiety than earlier in the year and since the middle of June business is flowing more freely and goods are more in demand.

Correspondence from every city in Canada shows that business in all lines is becoming stronger and healthier. The 'hand to mouth' buying of a few weeks ago is succeeded by unusual midsummer activity because the wholesaler's stocks got low, the retailer's shelves were bare, but now there is a better, surer and more easy feeling among buyers; and the necessities of life, such as matches, buckets, tubs, paper bags and paper of all kinds are in good demand for daily use.

Mr. Rowley said: "The majority of the orders received at the works at Hull for a month past are marked 'rush,' 'hurry,' 's.a.p.' while nearly every order calls for quick delivery, and that while the demand for goods, the lack of supplies and material, high wages and cost of making will keep the prices firmer, I expect to see higher lists on many lines and an end put to cut prices, although our lists do not vary very much, taking one year with another.—The Toronto World.

A Bouquet

A poetical old shopkeeper was always doing kind things and saying lovely ones. One spring he was having his shop repainted. He told the painter to leave a certain corner untouched for the time being; he explained that the young people, at that season did all their courting there and he didn't want them to get smudged.

But, objected the painter, these young folks would be fools not to know the smell of fresh paint.

Young fellow, said the old shopkeeper, you have never had a girl, that's plain. If you had, you'd know that when folks are in love, everything—wet paint included—smells like violets and roses.

CAPT. F. R. DESJARDIN,
Schr. "Storke," St. Andre, Kamouraska.

He lay upon his dying bed,
His time was nearly o'er;
And with a feeble voice he asked,
What is the latest score?
Weep not for me, my boy, he cried,
I bow to Heaven's high will;
But tell me quickly—tell me—is
The home team leading still?
No, said the boy, they muffed a fly,
Then said the old man, let me die.

One day a young colored man of sporty appearance dropped in at a country livery stable and said he needed a job. He looked promising, so he was set to work greasing the axles of a buggy.

In a remarkably short space of time he reported the task finished.

Look here, said his new boss, do you mean to say you've greased all four of them wheels already.

Well, rejoined the new man, I've greased the two front ones.

And why haven't you greased the two hind ones?

Well, said the new man again, so long's the two front ones goes all right the two hind ones jes' nachelly got to foller!

Nothing Extraordinary

An American tourist in England was out sightseeing. They took him aboard the old battleship Victory, Nelson's flagship. An English sailor escorted the American over the vessel, and coming to a raised brass tablet on the deck he said, as he reverently removed his hat:

Here, sir, is the spot where Lord Nelson fell.

Oh, is it? replied the American blandly. Well, that is not surprising. I nearly tripped over the darned thing myself.

Unwarranted Pride

Professor (coming from his club, holding up his umbrella to his wife)—You see, I haven't forgotten my umbrella.

Mrs. Professor—But my dear, you didn't take your umbrella with you; you left it at home.

Won the Wager

At a certain club the other day two members were arguing about will power. The conceited man, who was in the habit of boring all present with his pointless tales, said that his will was stronger than that of his friend.

You are wrong there, said the quiet man, and I will prove it in this way. You go and stand in that corner and I will will you to come out of it. You will against me, and I'll wager I will have you from that corner before I have commanded you a second time.

The smart one took up the challenger and put himself in the corner. The quiet man said, in a commanding voice:

Come out of that corner.

The other grinned and shook his head. The quiet man sat down and looked at him steadily. Five minutes passed, and then the man of will said, with a sneer.

Hadn't you better give it up! I don't feel any influence at all, and I can't stand here all the evening.

There is no hurry, said the quiet man, and I have a very comfortable seat. There is no time-limit, except that you are to come out before I ask you twice, and as I don't intend to ask you again until this day week, I think you'll soon begin to feel the influence.

The smart man came out.

An Oil for All Men.—The sailor, the soldier, the fisherman, the lumberman, the out-door laborer and all who are exposed to injury and the elements will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a true and faithful friend. To ease pain, relieve colds, dress wounds, subdue lumbago and overcome rheumatism, it has no equal. Therefore, it should have a place in all home medicines and those taken on a journey.

Our Funny Children

Little Ralph, an only child of four, had been permitted to stay up one evening when his parents had company. At the table he made a quaint remark, at which all the guests laughed. He instantly saw that he had made a hit, and with commendable enterprise sought to follow it up.

Dad, he shouted, what was that other smart thing I said yesterday?

Not Guilty

Mistress—Bridget, whatever becomes of the cutlery? I am continually missing some. Really, I suspect the dustmen as they come through the scullery.

Cook—Faith, marm, ye're wrong there entoirely. They're too honest at all. Why, they brought back thray knoives last week that they'd found in the dustbin!

Case for a Good Lawyer

Why are you so sad? an acquaintance asked a young man whose aunt had just died. You never appeared to care much for the poor lady.

I didn't said the youth dolefully; but I was the means of keeping her in a lunatic asylum during the last five years of her life. She has left me all her money, and now I have got to prove that she was of sound mind.

Pshaw! exclaimed Miss Yerner impatiently. I am sure we will miss the first act. We have waited a good many minutes for that mother of mine.

Hours, I should say, Mr. Slowman retorted crossly.

Ours? Oh, George! she cried, and laid her blushing cheek upon his shirt front.

A Valuable Secret

Father Dooley had just tied the knot and looked expectant. The bride looked sheepish, and Pat, shifting from one foot to another, looked guilty. At last he began:

I—I—don't like to be mane, father, but I changed me clothes in a hurry and left me money in me other pants. Then he added, in a whisper: Take me down in the cellar; I'm a plumber, and I'll show ye how to fix the gas-meter so't won't register more than forty per cent.

At the Supper Table

The young man who had taken the debutante in to dinner was talking art.

Are you fond of etchings? he asked.

As a general rule, yes, she answered, looking up into his eyes with an engaging frankness that threatened havoc to his heart; but, she added hastily, as he started to say something pretty, not my to-night, thank you. It is rather late. A small piece of jelly will be sufficient.

Enough Said

Brown—What did your wife say about your being so late home the other night?

Jones—Nothing at all. She just sat down at the piano and played 'Tell me the Old, Old Story.

When he comes soft soaping around with an ax to grind just suggest to him that he get a motor attachment for his jaw and do the whole job himself.

His Explanation

At the breakfast table the other morning he was relating to his wife an incident that occurred at the Club the previous night. The chairman offered a silk hat to the member who could stand up and truthfully say that during his married life he had never kissed any woman but his own wife.

And, would you believe it, Mary?—not one stood up.

George, his wife said, why didn't you stand up?

Well, he replied, I was going to, but I look awful in a silk hat.

The Optimist

Crash! Down the kitchen stairs fell the entire trayful of crockery from the dining-room. Not even the salt-cellar remained unbroken.

In the dining-room sat husband and wife, staring blankly at each other. What did it all mean? But this was a time for action, and the mistress rushed to the door. Jane, Jane! she cried whatever have you done?

Jane smiled. Oh, mum, she replied, it's only the dinner things, mum. What a good thing I hadn't washed 'em up!

The Garnet Heart

What It Meant Was a Secret Until Its Capture.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Melville, having worked his way through college and received a legacy of $500 a few days after graduation, concluded to spend the money in a trip abroad before settling down to his life work. To take the outing on so limited a sum he was obliged to economize in his traveling expenses and proposed to do a good deal of walking. Switzerland being the favorite country for pedestrians, he took steamer for Genoa, from which city a short railroad journey brought him to Geneva.

At the hotel where he put up in that city was an American family, consisting of father, mother and a daughter about twenty years of age. They were tourists drifting from point to point as the spirit moved them. Something in the appearance of the young lady attracted Melville's attention, not to say curiosity, mingled with admiration. On her face was a sadness, indicating that she had suffered; vindictiveness, pointing to some injustice that had been inflicted upon her, and there was an air about her of indifference to everything and everybody.

But Melville's curiosity was especially excited by an ornament the young lady wore upon her bosom—a stickpin, the head of which was a garnet heart. It was not in her neckwear, but stuck in her dress directly over her real flesh and blood heart.

Melville had intended to walk eastward around the north bank of Lake Leman, stopping frequently by the way, but on the morning of his departure he saw the American family leaving for the lake boat, and he yielded to a temptation to see more of the girl who had attracted his attention by making a part of the journey himself by water. So, going down to the landing, he took passage for Lausanne.

There is a quick telegraphy between two young persons of opposite sex, and very little time was required for the girl to perceive that Melville had especially noticed her. He spoke some English words with his American accent in her hearing, and this made her aware that he was a fellow countryman. He scraped an acquaintance with her father, hoping that it might lead to an introduction to the daughter, but in this he was for the time disappointed. When the boat reached Lausanne, Melville disembarked with regret that he must leave the object of his curiosity unsolved.

The next day he walked to Montreux, and the first person he saw on the piazza of the hotel as he mounted the steps was the girl of the garnet heart. As their eyes met it seemed to Melville that he saw in hers that revengeful look he had noticed, though it suddenly gave place to one which he could only account for as an invitation for him to seek an acquaintance.

Such impressions are usually vague and readily give place to others. Of the two mentioned Melville remembered only the latter. He was by no means sure of his interpretation, but he proposed to act upon it at the first opportunity. From the hotel register he learned that the family name was Huntington. Melville again addressed the father and found a bond of fellowship in that they were graduates of the same university. Thus followed an introduction to the family.

Alma Huntington on learning that Melville was fond of walking sympathized with him, telling him that she was devoted to it herself. Throwing aside conventionality, she accepted invitations to go about with him freely, unaccompanied by a chaperon. Melville found an additional feature in the puzzle in an evident disapproval on the part of Mrs. Huntington of his attentions to her daughter. This disapproval did not appear to result from any antagonism to him personally, nor did the lady appear to blame him for the growing intimacy with her daughter. It was plain from the mother's treatment of him that she was holding Alma solely accountable for it.

It was also plain that Alma was bent on following her own inclinations. When she suggested a morning walk with Melville to Villeneuve and back or an excursion on the lake her mother would look pained rather than angered, and when her efforts to induce her daughter to desist met with ill success the good lady would sigh as one much troubled.

What all this meant Melville was at a loss to discover. There was evidently something back of it of which he was unaware. The young lady was evidently bent on an affair with him, and her mother was trying to dissuade her. Had the girl really become attached to him? He did not believe that she had. Her interest in him had come too suddenly and developed too quickly. Now and again, while resting on their walks, turning his eyes upon hers, he would catch her looking at him with a singular glance that he could not interpret. Then she would arise, and as they strolled on would put her arm through his confidingly.

The Huntingtons lingered at Montreux, and Melville lingered too. Alma was pleased to remain, and she apparently dominated her family. For Melville there was something so curiously fascinating about her that he could not tear himself away. And every day that fascination grew stronger. He wished that he dare ask her to solve the mystery hanging about her, but something in her manner, he knew not what, prevented him. Once he ventured to refer to the garnet heart, but she gave him a look so strange, so forbidding, that he stumbled in his speech and was silent.

At last Melville, seeing that his attentions, or rather Alma's encouragement of his attentions, was producing something that looked like discord in the Huntington family, resolved to depart. He announced his intention to Mrs. Huntington before speaking of it to Alma. The mother appeared grateful to him.

When he announced his intention to depart to Alma they were standing on an eminence overlooking the lake. "Clear, placid Leman," as Byron has described it, its bosom dotted with various kinds of craft, was spread out before them, and the view had its effect on Melville. He did not wish to leave the girl who in so short a time had become so much to him. She did not hesitate to dissuade him from his purpose, and she was aided by their beautiful surroundings. After a long silence between them, during which she was waiting for his decision, he said:

"I will remain on one condition. I love you; assure me that my love is returned."

As he spoke the words he turned and faced her. A struggle was going on within her, but what that struggle was he could not tell. She put her hands to her face to conceal it from him. He waited for her emotion to pass. At last she took away her hands, and, looking into his face with an expression entirely changed from that seeming revengeful spirit he had at times noticed, she drew the garnet pin from her bosom and fixed it in his scarf.

No words passed between them, only a caress. Then she added, "Go to mother; tell her what has occurred and she will explain what has naturally been a puzzle to you."

When Melville told Mrs. Huntington that he had captured the garnet heart she gave a deep drawn sigh of relief.

"You have broken a spell, Mr. Melville," she said to him, "that I am very happy has been broken. When Alma was passing from childhood to womanhood she met one of those young men who consider a girl's heart a thing to be played with. He may have been excusable on account of his youth; in many cases such flirtations are innocent. But Alma is a girl of deep feeling. When she discovered that what was an absorbing passion to her was a mere matter of amusement to the man she loved she was so far broken down that we at one time feared for her reason. Her love was turned to hatred, not only of the man who put no value upon it, but of all men.

"Not long after this I noticed the garnet heart on her bosom. She never explained its meaning to me, but I knew. Indeed, her actions since she has worn it have confirmed my interpretation—a challenge to men of her class who might be inclined to repeat what she had received from the one she first loved. These tournaments of the heart have worried us. We have tried to prevent them. Your having captured her signal of revenge indicates that you have ended a condition which should never have existed."

Melville accompanied the Huntingtons in their tour, which they adapted to his requirements. Indeed, they were making it entirely on account of the daughter they idolized. Melville was too deeply in love to blame her for her past unreasoning desire to punish him for the fault of another. Indeed, the fact that he had succeeded like a knight of old in slaying the dragon and winning the imprisoned maiden was a matter of pride with him.

Mrs. Melville is now a young matron bringing up a daughter, whom she watches with the utmost care. She declares that a young girl's heart needs more guarding than the great war chest of the German empire. After she had become old enough to feel ashamed of her youthful freak she asked her husband to return her the garnet heart. But he declined and has never since consented. He says he prizes it more than he would a medal of honor acquired in battle. Therefore the strange situation exists in the family that what the wife considers a token of her folly the husband cherishes as a decoration for his prowess.

Shy, but Ferocious.

No European has ever been able to meet in their own dwelling places the Kukuhuhus, a shy, yet ferocious tribe of New Guinea. Other tribes of the country, while they have a great fear of the Kukuhuhus, manage to do a bartering trade with them. They bring salt, earthenware, dried fish, etc., and deposit them in a certain indicated place. They then retire for a few hours, being notified to do so by a curious cry from the distance. The mountain dwellers then descend to view the goods offered for sale. If they want them they put down other goods, such as skins, feathers and other jungle produce, next to those articles wanted by them. Then they retire in turn, and when the way seems clear the coast dwellers approach again. If the latter are satisfied with what is offered in exchange they take the goods put down by the mountain people and go away; if not satisfied they retire again as before with empty hands.—Argonaut.

Memory Erased by Sandbag.

Writing on "Confessions of Self Robbery and the Retroactive Amnesia" in Case and Comment, Professor E. B. Delabarre of Brown university tells the interesting fact that a concussion or blow from a sandbag will erase and drive from the brain or the memory occurrences happening within from three to five hours previous to the concussion, but will not disturb the impressions on the mind of previous occurrences. The author describes the effectiveness of this knowledge in securing complete confessions from "self robbed" individuals as follows: "I talked the matter over with J. B. Hume, at that time chief detective for Wells, Fargo & Co., and he forced a number of self robbed agents who were short and reported sandbagging robbery, to confess because a sandbag would not show any marks, but as they in each case told all particulars up to the blow of the sandbag he made them own up."

A Blunder Transformed.

In the "Memoirs of the Prince Imperial," the ill fated heir of Napoleon III., it is related that as the prince grew up he developed royal tact to a marked degree. On one occasion he met the well known author, Alberic Second, and, mistaking him for Marshal Leboeuf, remarked, "I am delighted to shake the hand of a friend of my father." When informed of his mistake and seeing that Second was a little put out over it, he begged M. Filon to find him again and give him this message: "The prince knows he made a mistake, but has nothing to change in his phrase." "I managed to carry out my commission," adds M. Filon, "before many witnesses who, like myself, saw the delight of the amiable writer."

The Mystery.

Visitor—I understand that you had an amateur dramatic performance in the town hall last night?

Native—Yes. The Sock and Buskin club played "Little Mac, or the Mountain Mystery."

"Ah! And what was the mystery?"

"As near as I could make out the mystery was how the audience stood it till the last act was over."—London Tit-Bits.

Too Kind to Lose.

"Your husband is willing to allow you the custody of the automobile, the poodle and the rubber plant, with liberal alimony, while he takes the children and the graphophone."

"Stop the divorce!" sobbed the wife. "I'll never get another husband like that."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Ring Difficult to Wear.

"What do you think! Maude's gentleman friend offered her an engagement ring by telephone and she accepted it."

"Well, she can do as she likes, but really, I do not believe that I should care to wear a telephone ring."

THE EGYPTIAN SCARAB.

Curious Sacred Symbol That Has Endured for 8,000 Years.

The scarab, like the swastika, is a example of the curious persistence with which certain forms of symbolism have held the popular imagination and endured from the earliest times down to the present day. It is now used as a decoration for clasps and buckles and also as part of a headdress or fastening for cloak or gown, with the peculiar oval beetle worked either in beads, enamel or metal.

The use of the scarab as an emblem of the ancient Egyptian religion can be traced as far back as 6,000 B.C. It was, in fact, commonly employed in connection with religious observances, archaeologists being of the opinion that when strung together in numbers, as found on ancient monuments and in papyri, they represented the rosaries used by worshipers in prayers.

The practically invariable presence of the scarab among the wrappings of mummies and in the decoration of mummy cases points to its having been regarded by the ancient Egyptians as an emblem of resurrection. This symbolic interpretation is, in fact, connected with the old belief that beetles arose from the dead, a belief which doubtless owes its origin to the habit of these insects of rolling their eggs in balls of sand, so that when the young are hatched they have the appearance of issuing unaided from the earth. Scarabs found in tombs usually bear some inscription from the Egyptian "Book of the Dead," referring to the exchange of an old heart for a new. Hence arose, no doubt, the custom of placing scarabs over the heart of a dead person, the preservation of whose body they were supposed to secure. In many cases the heart was removed altogether when the body was embalmed, and was then replaced by a scarab.

The earliest scarabs were formed of soft stone; later examples were made of pottery or engraved on pieces of hard granite. In color they either resembled that of the green Egyptian cockchafter or were of that fine, deep blue so characteristic of Egyptian pottery beads. The back is always in the form of the sacred beetle and the flat base is engraved in various ways, according to the period to which the scarab belongs. Some bear the names of Egyptian Kings, while others are engraved with the portraits (rather impressionistic in style!) of Queens and various royal personages. Amenhoten III. was accustomed to issue his royal edicts on the face of enormous scarabs, especially constructed for the purpose, and smaller ones were used by him as gifts or to convey to friends the assurance of his good feeling.

The meaning of those peculiar spiral decorations which so often appear on scarabs as well as on ancient eastern monuments, such as Cleopatra's Needle, has been entirely lost sight of, but that all such devices had a specific meaning, however obscure, has been well established by antiquarian research.

During the thirrd century B.C. scarabs were frequently fashioned from gold and precious stones, and the fact that they were wrought in certain fixed sizes seems to point to the fact that they represented money values and were employed as a medium of exchange. But for whatever purpose they were used, their mysteriously sacred character always remained, and this has endured wherever they are found, without regard to century or to country.

The Queen's Gown.

Brilliant though the dresses were at their Majesties' fourth court, that worn by Queen Mary outshone them all. Her Majesty appeared in gold, her gown being of Indian gold brocade, with a colored flower design interwoven, and an embroidered panel of colored diamonds, the train being of Irish lace lined with gold tissue. As one courtier put it, "Her Majesty was a picture of magnificence."

It may further interest lady readers to learn that fashion decrees that green figs, black currants, and strawberries, at $1.15 each, will be the predominant millinery effects this season. Every kind of flower and fruit, in fact, is being used for hat trimmings in England, the flowers being so perfect and expensive that one can pay $5 for a single artificial rose.

Elephants Rarely Sleep.

It is doubted whether, in the wild state, elephants ever lie down. Gordon Cumming thought he had found evidence in marks upon the ground that the adult bulls did stretch themselves out at full length for a few hours' rest at about midnight, but he contended that the young and the cows always remained on their feet.

Another authority, Selous, has expressed doubt whether even the old bulls lie down. He tells of one herd that was known to have kept moving and feeding throughout 24 hours. "Except when rolling in mud and water," he says, "it is likely that an African elephant never lies down in its whole life."

Too Much For Him.

Howell—Did your boy pass all his entrance examinations?

Powell—He was conditioned in the college yell.—Woman's Home Companion.

Coming Out.

"Jameson is a man who will come out on top some day."

"He's getting bald now, isn't he?"—Puck.

For the Children

Princess Mary, King George's Only Daughter.

Princess Mary, only daughter of the king and queen of England, recently celebrated her sixteenth birthday. She is a pretty girl with a clear skin, very blue eyes and curling golden hair. She used to be much of a tomboy, insisting on joining in her brothers' games, but she is growing more sedate. Though very fond of jewelry, she is not allowed to wear any except a string of pearls on state occasions and a little gold chain and locket in the home circle. The pearls were her mother's gift to her at the time of the coronation, and the locket was presented to her by the Prince of Wales, her brother. Queen Mary, who is very firm with her children, has let it be understood that no one is to give Princess Mary jewelry of any sort until she is seventeen, which will be a year hence. So the princess must content herself with what she has for awhile.

To Impersonate a Dwarf.

For this humorous deception a table should be arranged between two rooms separated by portieres or in a deep window recess. One of the performers then puts her hands into a child's stockings and little boots or shoes. To disguise her face put a small piece of court plaster over one of her front teeth, darken the eyebrows with a little water color and arrange the hair in some unaccustomed fashion. Add a little rouge and powder to the disguise. Then put on a bonnet and shawl. As two performers are required, another young lady, carefully concealed by the window curtains, stands behind the first and, passing her arms around her, supplies the dwarf's arms and hands. The table is then drawn up, and the booted hands rest upon it, and a perfect dwarf appears to stand upon the table. She may introduce herself as Mrs. Melchizedek Stady Canton and speak in favor of extending woman's rights to all women less than four feet high, etc.

Bird Ventriloquists.

Ventriloquism is not confined solely to the human race. There are many birds whose notes it is almost impossible "to place."

Take the cornerake, with its harsh "Crake, crake!" One moment the sound is by your feet, the next fifty yards away. The grasshopper is another offender in this respect. Its sibilant note is hard to locate.

The English sedge warbler goes one better. Not only is it an accomplished ventriloquist, but it will mimic or parody the song of other birds. In a lesser degree the robin and the crow possess these powers, and foreign doves come under the same category.

In Brazil the bell bird is exceptionally skillful with its voice, while the chickadee invariably deceives the listener. Canada boasts of a partridge which is known to deceive sportsmen as to its whereabouts for hours on end.

Lighting a Lamp With Water.

When a bit of potassium the size of half a grain of corn is dropped into a tumbler of water some of the oxygen of the water leaves its hydrogen owing to the intense heat which the chemical action produces and combines with the metallic potassium, causing a violent bluish flame. When the piece of potassium is placed on the wick of a coal oil or alcohol lamp the flame produced by touching the potassium with a bit of snow or ice or a drop of water will inflame it.

What We Wash With.

It is said that the ancient Britons were the first makers of soap and that the Romans when they conquered this island took the invention back with them to Italy.

Most of what we wash with is made from fat, but in foreign lands there are natural soaps. There are the soap root of Spain, the soap berry of Chile and the bark of the Peruvian soap tree.

PULLIR' TURMOTS IN THE RAIN

Oh, the joys of agricultural life
Are many and they're fine—
Working daily out o' doors
All when the skies do shine!
But there's a job—an awful job,
That allus gives me pain,
Its pullin', pullin', pullin', pullin'
Turmits in the rain!

The sun will shine a minute, then
Of wet we'll have a scud,
And all of us pore hired-men
Are to our knees in mud
Ther' is no worser job on earth,
On hill er dale er plain
Ner pullin', pullin', pullin', pullin
Turmots in the rain!

The chap what's plowin' 'cross the lots
He has a joyous job,
But we hev got the limit in
Our task so help me Bob!
The very cattle loaf and chew
And grin out in the lane,
They watch us pullin', pullin', pull in'
Turmots in the rain.

Injun summer'll soon be here,
All with its golden sky,
An' like as not this turmot field
It will be nice and dry;
We dasen't take no chances though
We give our backs a pain
A-pullin', pullin', pullin', pullin',
Turmots in the rain!

Mr. Richard Carter, Jr. is home from Nelson and New Westminster where he had been with the Comox District exhibit. At Victoria the Comox exhibit was far ahead of anything on the Island, but was beaten out by Chiliwack, which had four or five times as large an exhibit. At New Westminster all the districts on the mainland sent in large exhibits, some of them as much as two car loads, while the Comox exhibit was small it was good, the butter being the best shown. The Province has to say: Comox, the most western district showing, has some fine grains, grasses and hops. The buckwheat is particularly good. The butter from this section wins the admiration of all beholders.

Duck and Snipe---Island Electoral District, Vancouver Island, and Islands adjacent, Sept, 14 to Fe, 28 1914,

Columbian or Coast Deer, only over one year, Sept. 15 to Dec. 15.

Monday was the last day for the receipt of application to be put on the Voter's list. The Court of revision for this distrcit will be sitting shortly.

Bright chestnut, which is the equivalent of red hair in children, has quite overcome all other tints among hackneys, and is associated with the mental quality that is called "fire". It is a master color in more than one respect, indicating a viking spirit.

One of the encouraging signs of the faith that is growing in the future of Vancouver Island, is the extension of railroad building by the E. & N. Railway. It is confidentially expected that the steel from Mc.Bride Junction to Courtenay will be laid and the line ready for operation sometime early next year. With the completion of this section it is understood the company's management will be iustructed to proceed farther towards the north end of the Island. This will open up a vast tract of fertile land and in the end mean a larger farming population.

None of Harry K. Thaw's treaty rights as an American citizen were violated when Canadian immigration authorities forcibly deported him a few weeks ago. That was the ruling of Soliciter-General Joseph W. Folk of the state department.

To stimulate cattle raising in order to avert the meat famine they say is imminent, the American Meat Packers Association voted to raise $500,000 with which to conduct a campaign of education among the farmers and cattle raisers.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

POWELL RIVER LOCK-UP

SEALED TENDERS, superscribde "Tender for Powell River Lock-up," will be received by the Honourable the Minister of Public Works up to noon, of Wednesday, the 15th day of October, 1913, for the conversion of present school-house at Powell River into a lock-up, constables' quarters, and Court-room.

Plans, specifications, contract and forms of tender may be seen on and after the 1st day of October, 1913, at the office of Mr. J. Baird, Government Agent, Cumberland, B. C.; the Provincial Constable at Powell River; or at the Department of Public Works, Victoria. B. C.

Intending tenderers can obtain one copy of plans and specifications, by applying to the undersigned, for the sum of ten dollars ($10), which sum will be refunded on their return in good order.

Each proposal must be accompanied by an accepted bank cheque or certificate fo deposit on a chartered bank of Canada, made payable to the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the tender, which shall be forfeited if the party tendering decline to enter into contract when called upon to do so, or if he fail to complete the work contracted for. The cheques or certificates of deposit of unsuccessful tenderers will be returned to them upon the execution of the contract.

Tenders will not be considered unless made out on the forms supplied, signed with the actual signature of the tenderer, and enclosed in the envelopes furnished.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

J. E. GRIFFITH,
Public Works Engineer.
Department of Public Works,
Victoria, B. C., September 30th, 1913.

The present school house at Powell River will be converted into a lockup and residence for the constable. Tenders for rebuilding same are being asked for by the Government this week.

On Wednesday, Oct. 15th. The Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture will hold an auction sale of one hundred and six head of choice grade dairy cows at the Exhibition grounds Victoria. In view of the increased demand for milk about to be created here by the establishment of the Condensed Milk factory, this should be a good opportunity for some of our farmers to increase their herds.
