PREFERS HIS OWN OPINION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MINER: John Robson's letter, in your last week's issue, is inaccurate. Possibly his studies may not have included the subject with which he deals. The case is simply this: I held for a period certain administrative offices in this district. Mr. Tunstall succeeded me, and his succession to these administrative offices was, of course, gazetted. But I held at the time of mr. Tunstall's succession, and still hold, a judicial office, namely, that of stipendiary magistrate for the whole province. I believe I am the senior magistrate. My first commission as a magistrate is dated 31 years ago, and, though I have had both civil and criminal jurisdiction, no decision of mine has been quashed. For this I seek no credit but the credit of having diligently studied every case on which I have had to adjudicate. I have always felt the grave responsibility of sitting in judgment on a fellowman, who, perhaps, but for certain accidents of life, might have been judging me. The Gazette notice, which mr. Robson copies, refers solely to the administrative offices mentioned. It could not have included the judicial office, because the office of a magistrate is only determinable—as I supposed everyone knew—either directly, by writ under the great seal, for good cause shown and stated, such as proved criminality, or malicious, corrupt, or oppressive action in his office, or indirectly, by a new general commission from which the name of the magistrate is omitted. This is the A B C of constitutional practice. The rule, in its application to inferior judges, is deduced and established from the positive declaration in the act of settlement, in the reign of William III, with reference to the superior judges, who cannot be removed while they properly demean themselves, or without an address from both houses of parliament. There is, as a matter of law, this distinction, namely, that the superior judges do not, and magistrates do, hold office, nominally, during pleasure, but this is merely to avoid formalities and inconvenience, in the case of the latter, when for good cause, it becomes necessary to remove a magistrate. They all are on the same footing, so far as the will of the crown is concerned, according to constitutional practice, which has the force of law. Magistrates are not answerable to the executive government. The independence of the judiciary—as well the inferior as the superior judges—is one of the main buttresses of our English freedom. The subject, lately, has been much discussed, in connection with Irish affairs. You may remember that the heaviest charge which the Gladstonians could allege against mr. Balfour, was that he was trying to instruct or influence the magistrates, who, for this reason, were cleverly nicknamed "Balfour's Removables." There is, in Ireland, and in the Northwest Territories of the Dominion of Canada, and limitedly, in our districts, an anomalous mixture of administrative and judicial functions, which very easily expose a government to the odious charge of interfering with the judiciary. In England it is the queen's bench division of the high court of justice which exercises a general superintendence over the conduct of those to whom the administration of criminal justice is committed. The whole subject is interesting and branches in various directions, but I cannot trespass further on your space. However, I ought to add, as relevant to the subject being discussed, that it was stated clearly by the lord chanceller, last year, in a debate in the house of lords, that a magistrate of a larger jurisdiction (say the province) is not expected to act, and, indeed, cannot properly act within a sectional area (say West Kootenay) for which a magistrate has been specially appointed, unless such latter is, for any reason, unable to act. This is precisely what I have done here, on the particular request of the local magistrate or justices in each case, and generally with loss and inconvenience to myself—but I suppose we all must consent to perform some public duties. Doubtless, in my old (I am sorry if I must say my "former") friend, mr. Robson's experiences on all sides of politics, and in your own Odysseyan wanderings, you both have learned something, but, in a matter of constitutional law and practice, I prefer the opinion of the lord chancellor, and the result of my own not restricted examination of the question which has been raised in the correspondence above referred to. Your obedient servant,

Nelson, October 29th. G. M. SPROAT.

COURT OF REVISION.

Mr. justice Walkem held a court of revision for the lists of voters for this part of Kootenay on the 27th and 28th instant. The list includes voters for the Dominion house of commons and has no reference to the local assembly. Great patience and care have been bestowed upon the lists which will be published for the information of the community. Considering the infancy of this place, the lists for Nelson, Ainsworth, and Balfour are unexpectedly large and compare favorably with those of the oldest districts on the Mainland. They bespeak a good population—say 2000 at least—in these towns. We expect to see five times this number in less than two years, as mining operations now projected and under way will by that time, if not before, make this locality known far and wide for its enormous mineral wealth. A miner, who saw the first rush to Leadville, states that in his opinion the discoveries are far richer than those found there. But, in the case of Leadville, capital accompanied the first prospectors and thus led to a speedy development of that rich section. Had the same good fortune befallen us, mills and smelters would have dotted this country and have converted our ores into a negotiable currency, which it will take a little longer, under present circumstances, to set free and bestow upon the public.

Good, Solid Men Becoming Interested.

Several of the solidest men in Westminister have acquired interests in the lake country. This week Alexander Ewen, John Hendry, and T. J. Trapp, accompanied by W. C. Hayward of Victoria and George T. Kane of Kaslo City, came in to take a first look at their investments. They went up as far as Ainsworth and Kaslo City, and report themselves as satisfied with what they saw. They go out tomorrow by way of Little Dalles and Spokane Falls. No 3 men have done more for Westminister than messrs. Ewen, Hendry, and Trapp, and they deserve all the good luck they have had.

NO STRANDED HUMAN WRECKS.

There is one point of difference between the Slocan excitement and all others that have occurred on the Pacific coast in the last 30 years. The point of difference is that there are no human wrecks stranded along the trails leading to the lately discovered Eldorado. Every man is either an ingoing millionaire in prospective or an outcoming millionaire in reality, and if the excitement lasts another month there will not be a poor man in the Kootenay Lake country. When not owners of mines rivaling in richness the famed ones of the Comstock, they will be the owners of corner lots in townsites that are sure to develop into wondrously prosperous cities or of lands that will be as fruitful as those of Chilliwhack on the Fraser. Nelson today has half a hundred men, who, like colonel Sellers, have schemes with millions in them. Tom Ward is one of the wealthiest of these, Arthur Dick coming second, and George Bigelow third. Tom and Arthur, born and bred on farms, have their millions tied up in meadow lands at the lower end of Slocan lake; George, profiting by past experiences in towns like Laggan and Donald, where millions were made in reality, has his in corner lots in a townsite somewhere over on Lower Arrow lake. Others, like Jim Delaney, Jack Walsh, and John Tolson, have prospects of untold undeveloped millions on Little Slocan lake. All this goes to prove that the days of Cariboo—days that are dwelt on so fondly by every old-timer in British Columbia, from judge to day laborer—are on the eve of returning.

The news from the district goes to confirm previous reports. A number of men will winter there, taking in their supplies by way of Slocan river. The Slocan is about 40 miles in length, and is reported having about one-third good boating water as to two-thirds bad. The trip can be made in 3 to 4 days with boats carrying from 1000 to 1500 pounds of freight.

Holds Regular Meetings.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MINER: In your issue of THE MINER of the 17th, you state that miners' unions were organized last spring at Nelson and Ainsworth, and for a time the meetings had a fair attendance, but of late no meetings have been held. The above statement, mr. Editor, may be true as regards Nelson, but as regards Ainsworth, allow me, as a charter member of the Ainsworth union and a regular attendant, to deny the above statement. No regular meeting night has passed since its organization that the meetings have not been held, and very well attended. The last meeting reported 63 members enrolled, 35 of whom were present. The union here is a live one, and is here to stay, is in splendid condition morally, intellectually, financially, etc. Respectfully,

WILLIAM HENNESSY,
President Ainsworth Miners' Union.
Ainsworth, October 16th, 1891.

Hope to Keep Communication Open all Winter.

The steamer Lytton will be kept on the route between Revelstoke and Robson as long as the stage of water will permit and afterwards be run between Little Dalles and the mouth of the Kootenay river. Captain Gore has been on the sick list for a week or two, and captain Short did not like to make the run from Robson to Little Dalles fearing that he would be unable to bring her back over the rapids above the mouth of the Kootenay. Captain Gore is again in command, and the Lytton will run down to Little Dalles on Tuesday (November 3rd); returning north, will pass Robson on Wednesday. The river between the mouth of the Kootenay and Little Dalles is all right, except in a few places, which with care can be navigated. The Columbia & Kootenay railway will be operated as long as the boat is run; and, in fact, it is thought that communication via Little Dalles will be kept open all winter.

A ROWBOAT WITHOUT OARS.

In rowing a boat the avearge man is apt to become cross-eyed in looking over his shoulder to see if he is going on the right course, to say nothing of the time he loses in zigzaging to keep in the right direction. He is also apt to be just a trifle clumsy in handling the oars, skimming with one and catching a crab with the other. A new and simple devise has been patented by Charles E. Fox of Minneapolis, Minnesota. It is designed not only to propel a boat with great facility, but to afford the operator the very desirable advantage of going face foremost. The device is readily applicable to any rowboat. The primary object is to run the boat by a screw propeller, the shaft of which passes through the stern of the boat through a packed bearing, the shaft being inclined slightly so that the propeller wheel is submerged. At a suitable point in the boat is a vertical yoke frame secured to the bottom of the boat, the frame carrying at its upper portion a double crank shaft provided with a central sprocket wheel. Below this is journaled a second shaft carrying a sprocket wheel and a bevel-gear wheel, which engages a horizontal bevel that turns a short vertical shaft which is journaled to a step bearing below. This shaft, by bevel gear, causes the screw shaft to rotate. This arrangement is satisfactory in every respect, and will allow the boat to be propelled in very narrow channels.
