Destroy Noxious Weeds

Editor Review.

Sir:—I would be obliged if you would kindly afford me space, through the medium of your paper to call the attention of farmers and land owners generally in your district, to the necessity for waging a vigorous campaign against noxious weeds, which are becoming so prevalent in many of our best farming districts throughout the Province.

All Provincial Constables and Forest Guards have been again appointed as agents for this Department towards the enforcement of the provisions of the Noxious Weed Act. In addition, Noxious Weed Inspectors have been appointed in different districts of the Province, whose duties will be to carefully go over their districts, see that farmers and land owners are taking the necessary steps to destroy the weeds growing on their lands, and in the event of non-compliance with notices served on them, to institute proceedings against them.

The Department is determined to use every legitimate effort to have the provisions of the Act strictly enforced, and we look for the whole-hearted co-operation of the farmers themselves in this most important matter.

I would also draw your attention to the attached statement, which has been drawn up in the Department with regard to the Noxious Weeds which are listed in the Act. Methods of destruction are outlined and I think that the publication of same would be of material benefit to the agriculturists of the Province.

I have the honour to be sir,
Your obedient servant,
Wm. E. Scott,
Deputy Minister.

Instructions re Destroying Noxious Weeds

The following table shows that weeds may be divided into three classes:—Annuals, Biennials, and Perennials.

(1) Annuals complete their growth in a year. The prevention of the formation of seed for one year, followed by careful cultivation to kill all young plants, will soon eradicate Annuals. In addition to this, all seed in soil should be encouraged to germinate in order to complete control.

(2) Biennials require two seasons to complete their growth, the flowers and seeds being produced during the second year. Due notice should be taken of this fact when fighting weeds of this class.

(3) Perennials are plants which continue to grow for many years, being propagated by underground root—stalks, stems, etc., as well as by seeds The aim in fighting perennials should be to prevent any growth from being made, hence starve the root systems.

There is no known weed which cannot be eradicated if proper measures are taken, Never allow seeds to ripen, and if they do, encourage them to grow so the plants may be killed by cultivation.

The following shows the name of weed, time of flowering, time of seeding and method of control:--

ANNUAL

Russian Thistle July-Sept. Aug. Nov. Harrow grain crops as late as possible; hand-pull weeds from waste places. Prevent any seed from ripening.

Wild Mustard or Charlock, June-Sept. Aug.-Sept Plant clean seed; rotate crops; induce dormant seeds in soil to germinate by giving good cultivation. Hand-pull.

Tumbling Mustard, June-Aug. July-Sept. Same treatment as for Wild Mustard.

Ball Mustard, June-Aug. July-Sept. Same treatment as for Wild Mustard.

Stink Weed, May until frost comes, July until frost comes. Destroy plants before seeds ripen. Encourage seed in soil to germinate and then kill young plants with harrow.

Ragweed, July-Sept. Aug.-Nov. Hand pull from grain fields, and mow from roadsides before seed ripens.

Blue Bur or Stick Seed, June-Aug. July-Oct. Sow clean seed; hand pull from waste place and mow young plants to prevent formation of seed.

Dodder, June-July Aug.-Sept. Sow clean seed; hand pull when it appears; if in small patches cover with straw and burn.

Wild Oats. June-July July-Aug. Rotation of crops with clean cultivation of the hoed crop. Induce seed to germinate in spring and then kill young plants.

BIENNIAL

Bull Thistle, June-Aug. July-Sept. Plough or cut down before flowers open. In pastures cut below crown of plant. Prevent formation of seed for two years.

PERENNIAL

Canada Thistle, June-Aug. July Sept. Plough deeply just as flowers open, or mow then and plough as soon as new growth appears. Use short crop rotations.

Perennial Sow Thistle, June-Aug. July-Sept. Prevent leaf growth by ploughing field frequently or by digging plants. Use cultivated crops.

Couch or Quack Grass, June, July-Aug. Plough shallow in June remove root-stalks, use cultivated crops.

Mr. James Burns, of Ladysmith, has a tree that supplies the strongest possible proof of the profits to be made in raising cherries, From this one tree Mr. Burns has already taken 300 lbs., and there is still remaining on the tree at least half that quantity, making a total of 450 pounds. Placing the sale price at the low estimate of eight cents a pound, the return from the cherries would be $36. A man with two or three hundred cherry trees would not need to worry very much about making a living.

It was confederation that gave British Columbia her first real start in the life of prosperity which she has enjoyed with practically no set-back for more than thirty years. The fathers of confederation builded better than they knew, and as each succeeding Dominion Day comes round, every true Canadian should give some thought to the occasion and endeavor to realize the influence of confederation on the life of the nation.—Kamloops Standard.

The Nanaimo city council has turned down the proposal made by the Motor Bus Company, some of the aldermen believing that the concessions asked were out of all proportion to the expenditure to be made by the company.

The five-year-old son of Mr. G. Woodcock, of Nanaimo, was killed yesterday by the falling of the brick chimney of a wash-house which collapsed when it was struck by a ball with which the little fellow was playing.

The Talisman

By L. T. Meade

Ward, Lock & Co., Limited
London, Melbourne and Toronto

"Now, my child, just sit down by the fire and tell me what has happened."

Barbara did not go near the fire. She did not even look at it.

"I brought you this," she said; and she held the little black box in both hands and then put it on the table close to the lawyer. "I found it yesterday," he continued. "It explains itself. It is full of letters, full to the brim. If you will kindly read the letters, you and dear Mr. Sunningley, you will know what it means, and I would much more rather not speak about it. It is—it is one of the things that can only be repaired in one way."

"My dear child, what do you mean? Barbara, you must let me speak to you as a father. You have found a little, old, japanned, black box, in an out-of-the-corner of your father's study, and from your manner, my child, you seem to think that there is something dreadful in it. No doubt I can explain it to you, my dear. Of course I can, not a doubt of that. My dear little girl, there are secrets in all men's lives. Life, Barbara, although short, is also long. A vast deal can be crowded into an apparently uneventful life. Even one year in a life which numbers, say sixty years, can influence the whole of the rest of it. But we people of the world, dear Barbara, take no notice of these sort of things. Your father, dear fellow, was one of the best of men. You are surely not going to rake up what may have occurred in his youth?"

"There is nothing," said Barabara. "He—I mean, it—is all right, I mean there is nothing. Read the letters, and you will know what to do."

"Then take a comfortable seat by the fire and I will read two or three. Even one or two, read by my practised eye, will give me a clue to the whole of the mystery. What do you say, Barbara?—what are you trying to say, my dear? How dreadfully white and ill you look."

"I am not ill, indeed I am not, and I have nothing to say, I mean—it is of no consequence—I mean that I need not stay. The letters will tell you what to do. The money—the insurance money—and—and—even the money that my brother had—I don't want any of the money that my mother had—I don't want any of the money. The letters will explain. I have given you the little black box, and you will exactly understand what to do. Good-bye—I know you are in a hurry; your clerk said so, and—I have nothing more to say. You will act on the letters, won't you? You will be sure to do that?—good-bye."

"Barbara! Miss Chance! You must not run away in that fashion. It is unreasonable, it is wrong. Your father and I were such old friends, and Horace Sunningley was his cousin. I tell you what—you must come with me to my house in Wentworth street and spend the night there. My wife wil be deilghted to receive you, and so will my daughters. I shall read the letters quietly here and give you my opinion afterwards. My dear child—what? You won't come?"

Barbara shook her head.

"Well, then, at what hour may I expect you tomorrow? I can't do anything without consulting you. You understand that?"

"I think you can, when you have read the letters. Good-bye."

Barbara turned swiftly. In a flash she had opened the door. Parkes was somewhat crippled with rheumatism. Beside fleet little Barabara, he was, as he expressed it, "nowhere." He followed her as far as his room door and heard her running downstairs. She ran very fast. He rang his bell with a sharp sound, and a clerk appeared.

"James, follow that young lady; go at once. If she has got into a cab, get into another and find out where she is staying. If she has not got into a cab, ask her to come back to me. Say, James, that I must see her. Don't delay a moment."

James, his face beaming with pleasure at this unexpected break in his day's routine of drudgery, flew downstairs after little Barbara. He came back presently.

"Well, where is she?"—Parkes' tone was anxious.

"I don't know, sir."

"I told you to follow her."

"When I got to the door, sir, she was nowhere to be seen I inquired of the hall porter; he said he saw the young lady go out, but did not take any notice. There were no cabs on the stand, either, sir; he said that."

"James, you are a perfect fool. Now if I had gone—"

"I did my best, ineded, sir. The young lady had vanished."

"Well, don't wait now. Ask Mr. Sunningley to step in for a moment. Sunningley appeared.

CHAPTER III.

"Sunningley," said his partner, "here's a nice state of things!"

"Yes—what? You seem put out, Parkes?"

"And I have good reason to be. Barbara Chance has been to see me."

"Of course," answered Sunningley, "I noticed the dear child as I was going through the clerks' room to my own. I was about to speak to her, but an important client had just arrived; but I meant to come out again to give my little cousin a welcome. What's up with the child, Parkes?"

"I don't know. Here's a box—she has brought it to me—she discovered it in her father's library. She wants me to read the letters—the box is full of letters. The child has evidently fallen foul of some mare's nest, but the queer thing is that I couldn't induce her to stay. She left the box in my hands, gave me explicit directions according to what was expressed and desired in the letters, and would not promise to come back. The father left the poor child the miserable sum of one hundred a year, she will not touch a penny of it. She says that when I have read the contents of the box I shall know what it means. She is evidently not coming back. Sunningley, what is to be done?"

"It would be well to read the letters," said Sunningley, "they will probably explain."

"Oh, folly!" replied Parkes. "A dead-and-gone thing of that kind to rear its head like a snake at a crucial moment like the present, and a child like little Barbara to light upon it, a sensitive, high-principled child! I don't know what is to be done!"

"Have you no suspicion of what the letters contain?" asked the other man.

"Yes, and no. I think I may say yes, and no. There was a period, beyond doubt, ages ago, just before and after little Barbara was born, in the life of Humphrey Chance, which might have meant anything or nothing. He alluded to it once or twice when talking to me; but when I questioned him later he invariably turned the conversation. It happened years ago, and I really cannot tell beyond rumors. But even granted that in his long life there was something—something, we will say not quite straight, is it to affect little Barbara now that he is dead? He married his wife, I know, after a very short engagement, and she only lived until Barbara was a little over two years of age. Barbara must now be close on twenty. Whatever Humphrey Chance did wrong, it took place before he became engaged to Barbara's mother. Well, I don't know what to think; but surely little Barbara Chance ought not to be punished for a dead-and-gone crime."

"Oh, then you think there was a crime?"

"I can't tell, I am certain of nothing. I am dreadfully put out. I wish I could destroy these abominable letters without reading them. But she has put them into my hands as a trust; she has asked us both to read them."

"Well, of course, we will read them," said Sunningley.

"Will you read them first, then?" said Parkes.

"If you like, yes; I will take the box home with me tonight and read the contents and let you know what I think in the morning."

"Thanks, Sunningley, thanks, you are a right good fellow. I'm glad you will do this, it will lift a decided weight off my mind."

"I will do it, naturally, for the child is my cousin."

"Of course, of course."

Sunningley took the little box; he left the room. Parkes went back to his own luxurious house in Weymouth street, but between him and repose there came that night the little face and the earnest voice of Barbara Chance. His wife was giving a dinner party of some magnitude; but the lawyer, as a rule, a most popular man, was distrait; he was, indeed, considerably off his guard. During dinner he did not talk with his usual animation, and people thought that he was not well, and remarked to each other that Parkes was beginning to break up. His wife also observed that something was wrong with him, but she was too wise a woman to speak about it, hoping that this, like many another cloud, would pass away in slumber during the night.

But if Parkes slept at all that night his sleep was disturbed by dreams, and those dreams had to do with Barbara and the black box. He felt very much inclined not to go near the offices the following morning; but that would be to act as a coward. Accordingly he went to his office at the usual hour, and, sitting down at his desk, began to examine the morning's post. His confidential clerk came in and out of the room, the girl who acted as typist appeared at the usual hour to take down directions for several letters which had to be written, went away, laden wih work, and the confidential clerk came in again.

"Do you happen to know, sir, if Mr. Sunningley is coming today?"

"No," said Parkes, his heart leaping to his throat. "Hasn't he come yet?"

Idaho has only one peak having an altitude greater than 12,000 feet, that is Hyndman peak, near the Blaine-Custer county line. The elevation of this mountain is 12,078 feet. There are, however, several unnamed peaks near Hyndman peak whose elevations are greater than 12,000 feet, as shown by the contours on the Hailey topographic map published by the United States geological survey.

DID THE WORK
Grew Strong on Right Food

You can't grow strong by merely exercising. You must have food—the kind you can digest and assimilate.

Unless the food you eat is digested it adds to the burden the digestive organs have naturally to carry. This often means a nervous breakdown.

"About a year ago," writes an eastern lady, "I had quite a serious nervous breakdown caused, as I believed, by overwork and worry. I also suffered untold misery from dyspepsia.

"First I gave up my position, then I tried to find a remedy for my troubles, something that would make me well and strong, something to rest my tired stomach and build up my worn-out nerves and brain.

"I tried one kind of medicine, after another, but nothing seemed to help me.

"Finally a friend suggested change of food and recommended Grape-Nuts. With little or no faith in it, I tried a package. That was eight months ago and I have never been without it since.

'Grape-Nuts did the work. It helped me grow strong and well. Grape-Nuts put new life into me, built up my whole system and made another woman of me!"

Valor

Blowhard sat discussing upon valor to his ragged cronies.

"I," he blew, "fear no man who lives."

"But thou fearest me," rasped a midget vixen. "Home with thee!"

Blue gilled, he followed his wife, the crowd loud jeering.

Within she turned to those who soon filled the doorway.

"Mark ye," she blew, "that it is I who fear no man—"

"But thou fearest me," squeaked the littliest mouse in the county.

With a shiek of mad terror Dame Blowhard leaped chairward.

THE ONLY MEDICINE FOR TEETHING BABIES

Mrs. Alcide Charland, Ste. Sophie de Levrard, Que., writes: "I am well satisfied with Baby's Own Tablets which I used for my little one during the teething period. I know of no other medicine to equal them." Mrs. Charland's testimony is that of thousands of other mothers. Once the Tablets are used a mother will give no other medicine to her little ones. The Tablets are guaranteed to be absolutely safe and are not only good during the teething period but cure constipation, colic, colds and simple fevers—in fact they cure all the minor ills of little ones. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

It is a Liver Pill—Many of the ailments that man has to contend with have their origin in a disordered liver, which is a delicate organ, peculiarly suspectible to the disturbances that come from irregular habits or lack of care in eating and drinking. This accounts for the great many liver regulators now pressed on the attention of sufferers. Of these there is none superior to Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Their operation though gentle is effective, and the most delicate can use them.

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Years, Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of womb and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully for years until I began taking your medicine. I also recommend it for nervousness and indigestion." — Mrs. HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station, Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

"I cannot say too much for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, for there are no medicines like them. I have taken them and I recommend them to all women. You may publish this testimonial." — Mrs. STEPHEN J. MARTIN, Chesterville, Ontario, Canada.

Canadian Steamer Goes On Rocks, 12,000 Landed

Canada Struck at High Tide Off Cape Chatte in Dense Fog.

Rimouski, Que., July 12.—The steamer Canada, of the Gaspe line, on her return trip from Montreal to Campbellton, N. B., struck the rocks of Cape Chatte last night in a dense fog, a half mile east of Cape Chatte lighthouse, The Canada carried about 1,200 passengers for Quebec and Montreal, and a general cargo. The weather was calm and the grounding caused little exitement on board. All the passengers were placed in boats and landed on shore about half a mile from the stranded steamer. The steamer Strathcona left late today to try to float the Canada. As the Canada went on the rocks at high tide it is anticipated that the work will be difficult.

Scotland Has Corps Of Volunteers Who Would Help Ulster

London, July 12---Thirty thousand Orangemen, accompanied by forty bands, celebrated the twelfth at Blantyre, near Hamilton, Scotland, on Saturday. The procession took an hour and a half to pass a given point.

On moving a resolution pledging support to their fellow Protestants in Ireland, Rev. James Brisby, of Glasgow, said he was glad to know that Scotland was responding to the call of the arms, that already there was a corp of Ulster volunteers in Scotland,

Fred Dane, Canadian Trade Commissioner and formerly prominent in Canadian Orangeism, said the same lodges in Canada that furnished material for the South African War were ready and willing to send troops to Ireland when needed. There were numerous free fights during the day, but the disorder was not serious.

The Daily Empress says the Ulster volunteers on Saturday morning captured at Enniskillen station a consignment of arms and ammunition seized in Londonderry on Wednedsday. The consignment was being conveyed from Londonderry to Dublin under an armed guard of ten policemen. At Enniskillen station 100 volunteers surrounded the guards with a ring of revolvers and removed the cases swiftly to waiting motor cars. The police were powerless to intervene.
