Big tournament attracts top teams

ALDERGROVE - Full capacity crowds packed Parkside park all weekend as the annual fast pitch tournament got underway. Sponsored by the Aldergrove Lions and the Aldergrove Mens Fastpitch, the tournament attracted 13 teams and offered 24 games in the three days of play.

The winners of the three-day tourney were the Squamish Chieftain Blues. The Squamish Chiefs defeated Delta Tri-Power 3-1 in 11 innings to take the championship but the story of the tourney was Delta Tri-Power.

Defeated early in the tournament, Tri-Power still had a chance at first place, but coming in from the losing side, they would have to win every game. Well, on Monday they won four games in a row and almost took out the Squamish club in their fifth game. This team showed stamina not often seen at this level of ball.

Third and fourth places were taken by Valley Gravel Sales Hombres and Aldergrove Nite-Movers respectively. The Hombres were the Tri-Powers fourth game and Aldergrove lost it by one run in the last inning.

The tournament provided three solid days of exciting and suspenseful baseball. There were many fans sorry to see it over and already looking forward to the next time.

Steal that base: Surrey RCMP try to prevent a theft but even throwing from the prone position, Aldergrove Nite Movers managed to steal second base and they also stole the game 8-7.

No trace found of missing girl

ALDERGROVE - Ten days ago little Teri Lynn Scalf disappeared without a trace while she was playing with other children outside her mother's townhouse apartment.

The seven-year-old girl has not been seen since she wandered off from her playmates at 12:30 p.m. on Sunday, July 24.

It is like she has been swallowed up by the earth.

An intensive search carried out for six days by police, search and rescue personnel and civilian volunteers failed to come up with even a small clue that could possibly lead the searchers on the trail.

A door-to-door canvas in Aldergrove also proved fruitless. Nobody had seen the smiling blue-eyed child.

Search parties, on foot and in the air, found nothing. A police tracking dog also came up with no results.

Last Friday the official search was called off, and little Teri Lynn is now just another missing person.

But throughout town, and especially in the townhouse complex at 32 Avenue and 276 Street people are concerned. They cannot accept the fact that a small child can disappear so swiftly and completely.

Neighbors of the Scalfs met last week to discuss the seriousness of the situation. When the meeting was over they had formed a special neighborhood volunteer corps whose members will keep a close watch on the many children in the townhouse development around the clock. A curfew for the youngsters was also introduced.

This, of course, does not bring Teri Lynn back.

All that her family can hope for now is that somehow - as mysteriously perhaps as she disappeared - Teri Lynn will come back.

Anyone with information, be it ever so trivial, is asked to contact Langley RCMP at 534-4184.

Teri Lynn again is three feet nine inches tall, has blonde waist length hair, blue eyes, and a missing front bottom tooth. When she disappeared she was wearing a light orange tank top with glue and gold trim, the words "USA" on front and "14" on back; white shorts with red trim. She was barefoot.

Fred Philps to defend championship title

VANCOUVER - There may once again be family rivalry in the professional hand milking competition, Monday August 22. Fred Philps of Mt. Lehman, who took the championship at the Pacific National Exhibition last year for the fourth time, just ahead of his son Bob, plans to compete again this year. Prize money is $400 for the most milk obtained in three minutes, with second and third prizes of $200 and $100 each.

The Barney McGregor showmanship class, open to senior herdsmen of all dairy breeds, takes place Sunday, August 21. Breed competition begins Monday, August 22, when the feature breed, Ayrshire, together with Jersey, are shown in the Agrodome. They are followed on Tuesday, August 23, with Holstein and Guernsey judging, and the Holstein sale at 4 p.m.

"Food in perspective", an educational film produced by the B.C. ministry of agriculture, will run daily in the livestock area for the full length of the fair.

The judges for this year's dairy show are Malcolm MacGillivray of Victoria (Ayrshire, PNE feature breed for 1983); Dale Cole of Vegreville, Alberta (Jersey); Floyd Sandell of Bellingham, Wash. (Guernsey); and John McKitrick of Columbus, Ohio (Holstein).

Chairman of the PNE's dairy cattle committee, Aldergrove farmer Bruno Giacomazzi, has announced that the members of his committee for 1983 will be Andy Ness (vice-chairman; chairman of hand milking competition); John Blair (Holstein); Don Hendrickson (Jersey); Dick Kootstra (Ayrshire); Oscar Nordman (Ayrshire); Don Ricka (Guernsey); Hugh Savage (Jersey); Gene Wautier (Holstein) and Peter White (Guernsey).

Local computer whiz kid now heads new university program

FORT LANGLEY - In the fast-track world of computers, Rick Sutcliffe of Aldergrove has been making a name for himself.

Until recently he was teaching computer science at Mountain secondary school in Langley, and this fall Sutcliffe moves to Trinity Western to take the helm of its university-level computer program.

But besides teaching computer science, Sutcliffe is an active innovator in the fast-changing field. He recently signed a contract for a utility program he designed which extends the range of BASIC (Beginners' All-purpose Symbolic Instruction Code), the 'language' used to command most popular computers.

He also writes a column in "Call Apple" a magazine for computer enthusiasts.

Sutcliffe organized the computer science program at MSS, recognized as one of B.C.'s best.

A high-priority task when he joins the family at Trinity Western this fall will be the development of a B.Sc. program with a computer science major.

The world of computers has begun to look a little like the gold rushes of a century ago. As the use of mico-computers in homes and offices expands, those who design useful new programs -- the instructions which tell a computer how to perform its tasks -- can reap rich rewards. Computer users pay from $50 to $600 for commercial copies of such programs, and computer clubs and magazines abound with stores of amateurs who became overnight millionaires.

But Sutcliffe's main interest is not in the overheated atmosphere of the computer 'gold rush'. He wants to prepare people for careers in the computerized world of the future.

The American Association of Education predicted that computers will replace books as the principal means of disseminating information at universities within 20 years, and said there will be 20 times as many computers at universities in 1988 as there were in 1980.

In his address to the graduating class at MSS this year, Sutcliffe pointed out that if automobiles had developed as rapidly in the past decade as computers did, everyone would be able to buy a Rolls-Royce for $2.75, and it would be guaranteed to deliver half a million miles to the gallon.

As the cost of computers has come down and their capacity has increased, the ubiquitous machines begin to take increasingly important roles in both business and home life.

Sutcliffe wants to prepare computer experts who will be able to help Canada guide this wave of the future, and not simply be swept along by it.

Drop in inflation

OTTAWA - The annual inflation rate plunged to 5.4 percent in May, the lowest in more than a decade, Statistics Canada said last week.

The rate, which measures the change in consumer prices from a year earlier, is the lowest since December, 1972, when it was 5.1 percent, and continues a year-long unbroken deceleration of inflation.

The rate was also down more than a full percentage point from 6.6 percent in April.

ICBC's fate not yet decided

VICTORIA - The fate of the Insurance Corp. of British Columbia will be decided before the end of the year, consumer and corporate affairs minister Jim Hewitt says.

Hewitt says the corporation is under review, as are other crown corporations, agencies, boards and commissions, and once that review is completed the cabinet will decide its fate.

The minister was unable to say when the review would be completed, adding that it has been underway since the May 5 provincial general election, "but I would hope it will be this year."

He was not prepared to say if any segments of the corporation would be turned over to the private sector because "all that does is cause concern in the staff of ICBC."

"I've said to senior management that it's business as usual until the policy of government changes."

Hewitt branded as speculation and rumor reports that he had ordered a 15-percent reduction in staff at ICBC.

"The corporation as a crown corporation has been asked to review its operations to ensure that efficiencies are created and that the motoring public gets service for the least possible dollars spent on administrative costs."

He said ICBC is no different than other ministries and other crown corporations such as B.C. Hydro.

The minister said it would not be possible to slash staff across the board because the number of employees is determined by the number of claims processed.

"If we could reduce the number of accidents on the road, we could reduce the number of staff because we wouldn't need them."

The B.C. Day long weekend was taken up haying for many local farmers. The break in the weather provided the time to get in most of the local crops. -Rick McIlwain Photo

ASK ANNABELLE

Dear Annabelle,

I have just returned from town after shopping. My husband and I live in a small trailer court near town so we have a little car. I am so nervous and agitated when I get home I can hardly make my tea. Zoom, zoom, they come at you from all sides. Left and right, up and down, they don't seem to fear for their lives. I am speaking of children on bicycles. Where do they think they are going? All summer long I live in fear of hitting one of them. I don't breathe easy until September comes and they are back in school, and then I only go out between 9 and 3.

Signed: Someone's Mother.

Dear Someone's Mother,

I'm sure a lot of us who drive in town fear for the lives of these young people. I wonder if they got their driving habits from their parents? I can't really give you any advice on what to do now but be consoled with the fact that summer holidays are half over. And I certainly hope you haven't thought about the dreadful possibility that these young folk on bikes today are the car drivers of tomorrow. Lord save us all....

Dear Annabelle,

So you really think a letter about flying saucers is funny? I have seen flying saucers many times going over us. All you have to do is lie on your back outside at night and you can see dozens of them. Open your eyes, Annabelle, and you will see them too. I keep hoping one will land and you will see them. Maybe they can use your column on Uranus. I hope so, because with your tunnel-vision you should have that experience.

Signed: A Waiter for Truth

Dear Waiter,

Sounds to me like you have done most of your waiting in the pub, Bub. Great idea about going to Uranus though. I wonder if the pay is better there.

Dear Annabelle,

I read your column regularly and really look forward to receiving the paper on Thursdays. I think your mixture of sound common sense and sense of humor make it the best thing in the paper. I don't have any real problems but I thought I'd write and tell you you're wonderful.

Signed: E. MacM.

Dear E,

Gosh, thanks.

Bikers, cyclist killed

ALDERGROVE - Three people are dead following two unrelated motor vehicle accidents over the long weekend.

Bill Anderiini of Aldergrove and Robert Bohnke, 25, of Langley died when their motorbike collided with a truck Sunday night. Accident occurred at the Livingstone Road-48 Avenue intersection at 10:30 p.m. Both riders were rushed to Langley Memorial hospital where they expired. The driver of the truck was not injured.

Monday night at 9:05 two young sisters were riding their bikes on Fraser Highway. An east bound vehicle clipped one bike causing the rider to be thrown off and her head struck the windshield of the car. Dead on arrival at Langley Memorial was Susan Collins, 14, of 19690 - 50 Avenue, Langley.

Both accidents are being investigated by Langley RCMP.

Cool evening, nice time

By OPAL THOMAS

Aldergrove - First the news I wrote last week and forgot to deliver to The Star.

The visitors to the Saturday night dance were May Hallam from Burnaby, Flo Prost of Coquitlam, Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Peturia from Tomahawk, Alberta. Birthdays were celebrated by Bob Coutts and Tim Thomas.

The door prize was won by Georgina Emerton, and the spot dance by Georgina Emerton and Charlie Reid.

Now for this week.The day was hot but the evening cooled and the crowd was not too big. The fans cooled enough for pleasant dancing. The tables were carried outside and lunch served in the parking lot. Visitors were Len and Addie Baker, Mike and Betty Horrgian and Jennie Weir from White Rock, Mr. and Mrs. Herb Cunningham from Chilliwack. Sylvia Turpin was welcomed back after a 2½-month stay in Maple Ridge hospital.

The 50th anniversary of Emily and Fred Elmore and the 48th anniversary of Opal and Tim Thomas were celebrated.

The door prize went to Bob Coutts, The spot dance to Agnes and Bill Minty. Many of the activities are still on at the hall during the summer months.

Scholarship awarded to local man

TULSA, Okla. - Giovanni Marchisio, a graduate of Scripps Institute of Oceanography, has been named a recipient of a scholarship from the international Society of Exploration Geophysicists (SEG foundation).

The announcement of the Aldergrove man's scholarship was made this week by Don W. Green, chairman of the SEG Foundation scholarship committee. It was one of 107 scholarships awarded by the foundation for the 1983-84 academic year.

Marchisio is currently working toward a Ph.D. in geophysics. SEG is an international scientific and educational organization with over 18,000 members in more than 100 countries. Foundation provides scholarships each year to deserving students entering the study of the earth sciences.

Gov't. moves to protect farm lands

VICTORIA - The provincial government has awarded a $397,835.00 contract for major repairs to the Mud Bay dikes in Surrey. Contract was awarded to Bray Enterprises Ltd. for the reconstruction of approximately 4.8 kilometres of existing dikes requiring clearing, excavation, filling, bank protection and seeding.

"The threat of floods has been well demonstrated in this area," environment minister Tony Brummet, adding that this project will protect prime agricultural lands.

Completion of the repairs is expected by October.

This is one in a series of major flood protection projects announced by the government earlier this year. The program, involving 20 projects, will cost $36-million over two years and will create the equivalent of 1,250 direct and indirect jobs in private industry.

Farr's cows are far out

YPSILANTI, Mich. - An elderly farmer facing drug charges said he fed marijuana to his five cows to give them the "munchies" and "make them lay down," police said.

Clinton Farr, 66, was arrested by two state troopers as he was harvesting pot from a field behind his home, police said.

Farr told the police he "utilized the marijuana to mix in with feed for his cows; that he once read that marijuana will make them either lay down after eating or get the munchies and eat more, thus making them beautiful."

Police confiscated 1,150 plants along with two 30-litre containers and five grocery bags full of dried and processed maijuana with an estimated street value of $24,000.

Resident receives bioengineering degree

COLLEGE PLACE, Wash. - An Aldergrove resident recently received his degree from Walla Walla College as part of its spring commencement exercises.

John Haluschak, son of Michael and Marj Haluschak of Barriere received a bachelor of science degree in bioengineering on June 5 from WWC.

Walla Walla College is a private, four-year college in southeastern Washington and is operated by the Seventh-day Adventist church.

Hypothermia; a killer

An unexpected spill into the water can be fatal. In British Columbia where most of the waters are cold throughout the year, falling in the water is more than an inconvenience. It can lead to death by hypothermia: the rapid cooling of the inner body.

"The sypmtoms of hypothermia are shivering, numbness in the hands and feet, confusion, followed by unconsciousness and death," warns Bruce Miller, program coordinator for the Red Cross water safety service.

"Hypothermia can occur, not only as a result of immersion in water, but by exposure to cold air," says Miller.

The Canadian Red Cross urges fishermen, boaters and other sports oriented people to follow these procedures:

-Wear a government approved lifejacket or personal floatation device (PFD).

-Don't overload your boat.

-Always sit when shooting, casting, urinating or starting the motor.

-Carry a change of clothing in a waterproof bag.

"Should you fall in cold water, both the help and huddle positions boost survival time by 50 percent. However, both are good only when wearing a lifejacket or PFD."

So, be waterwise and play it safe when having fun this summer. It can mean the difference between life and death.

Alder CATS have returned

ALDERGROVE - The CB club, that was in operation here a few years ago, has now been revived. The Alder Cats are here to serve the public as their name implies: community alert team service. They are available to the RCMP and Central Fraser Valley search and rescue to help look for lost children, do parade patrols and traffic patrols and are presently helping in the search for Teri Lynn Scalf.

They will be holding bottle drives, car washes and paper drives and would appreciate the community's support. Funds raised by the club are donated primarily to charitable organizations within the community. A coffee break is being held at the Faithful Restaurant on August 3 at 7:30 p.m. to solicit new members to make the public aware that the Alder CATS are back in operation. Door prizes will be offered and a raffle will be held. The raffle prize is donated by Warkentin's Jewelers. Door prizes have been donated by other businesses in the community.

Bankruptcies decline

OTTAWA - Personal and business bankruptcies declared in June totalled 2,861, down from 3,474 at the same time last year, Statistics Canada reported last week.

There were 787 business bankruptcies, as opposed to 2,074 personal cases.

So far this year there have been 20,148 bankruptcies, up from 19,539 declared between January and the end of June last year.

The most business bankruptcies were reported in Quebec with 294 and Ontario with 229. In both cases, wholesale and retail outlets were hardest hit.

Quebec has reported 2,096 business bankruptcies to the end of June while Ontario was had 1,617.

Goodbrand gets contract

VICTORIA - A $486,520.00 contract has been awarded to Goodbrand Construction Ltd. of Aldergrove for dike reconstruction on the lower mainland. The contract includes construction of the Clearwater Creek floodbox and the reconstruction of some 2.7 kilometres of dikes needing excavation, clearing, filling, bank protection and vegetation seeding.

Environment minister Tony Brummet said the contract was awarded following the expenditure of $40,000 in emergency repairs in March.

"The threat of floods has been well demonstrated in this area," said Brummet, adding that this project will protect valuable agricultural lands.

Completion of the repairs is anticipated by October and work will begin immediately.

More people are moonlighting

By LAWRENCE BRUNER

Canadians who hold more than one job or work overtime account for 20 percent of the non-farm work force, say two Concordia University researchers, even though Statisitics Canada says the figure is just eight percent.

Management professors Muhammad Jamal and Ronald Crawford also report that, contrary to poplular belief, moonlighting and overtime do not have significant adverse effects on employee's well-being or productivity.

The Concordia researchers' findings, reported in Human Resource Management magazine, are the results of questionnaires answered by more than 400 blue-collar employees in six companies in Montreal and Vancouver.

The responses to the questionnaire revealed that 62 of 403 employees were moonlighters (15 percent) and 20 employees (about 5 percent) were overtimers.

The researchers learned that overtime and moonlight earnings are often paid "under the table". So this income activity eludes Statistics Canada says Crawford, because it is not recorded in wage or tax reports on which the federal deparent bases its statisitics.

The researchers say their own survey understates the full extent of overtiming and moonlighting because it did not take into account irregular moonlighting. Another omission was barter, or payment made in the form of goods and services. An example, Crawford says, is the roofer who fixed the roof of an auto mechanic, who then pays the roofer by fixing his car. Such arrangements are common, he says.

The researchers also point out that the survey did not include managers, who are considered to be non-moonlighters in the traditional sense. But managers often hold directorships in more than one company and may also spend many hours a week working on their own investment portfolios.

The prevalence of extended work hours may seem alarming, but the authors say there is little cause for concern. Their report challenges the common belief that overtimers and moonlighters are unproductive.

Their survey included a standard U.S. questionnaire which asked the employees to rate thier own productivity as perceived by their supervisors, by co-workers and by themselves.

The responses indicate that productivity levels are perceived as almost equal for those who work extra hours and those who do not.

The survey attempted to ascertain the psychological effects of moonlighting and overtiming by asking each employee to fill out a standard "industrial mental health" questionnaire.

The questionnaire measures such factors as anxiety, sociability and self-esteem. The responses showed that the average moonlighter and overtimer are as healthy mentally as other employees.

Another standard questionnaire revealed that there were very little differences among average moonlighters, overtimers or normal employee's perceptions of the quality of their lives. Nor were there any differences in their reported intentions to quit their jobs.

However, differences were detected in employee's levels of "social involvement", or community activity. Moonlighters and overtimers achieved higher "social involvement" ratings than other employees. According to the survey, they belonged to more voluntary organizations, attended more meetings and held more offices than average employees.

These findings convinced the researchers that moonlighting and overtiming do not create significant personal or productivity problems and should not be heavily regulated or restricted as they are now in some companies.

The researchers say they are not sure why moonlighters or overtime workers suffer few ill effects, but do note that, due to shorter working hours, most of these employees still work fewer hours per day than did the typical regular worker of a generation ago.

They caution, however, that the picture may become less rosy if unwilling employees are forced into moonlighting and overtiming because of a recession or depression.

"Whether or not this will generate more problems among overtimers or moonlighters remains uncertain," their report says.

The hatchet rule

It is strange that the provincial government, a Social Credit government which has ruled this province for almost three decades, has suddenly found a lof of deadwood in its public service sector.

One would have thought that an efficient government would have found, long ago, that it had too many employees, or that some services were redundant.

The cynical view, of course, is that, so long as the provincial covvers were being filled by taxes, the provincial government didn't care a fig about numbers, efficiency, productivity, or anything else.

The even more cynical view, one sprouting from the government's legislation empowering it to fire anyone anytime and without giving reason, is that the Socreds have become embittered by the political roles played by teachers, the government employees' union and others and is out for bloody revenge.

One government employee in Fernie put it this way last week: "The only way I see to keep my job is to buy a membership in the Social Credit party."

For the sake of democracy, of decency, the government should reconsider its legislation and make sure that reasons for any firings are defendable in open court. -Fernie Free Press

Teachers flunk

The State of California now requires persons wanting teaching and administrative credentials to take a standard test in basic reading, writing and math skills at the 8th grade level. 7,000 took the first test but only 57 percent of candidates for full-time teaching passed.

Broken down?

Filling in a government form, a local businessman read: "How many employees do you have broken down by sex?" He wrote "None that I know of, our biggest problem is alcohol."

Hi-tech industry will not offset lost jobs

NEW YORK - Seventy years ago, Henry Ford set up a crude assembly line to produce Model T automobiles at his factory in Highland Park, Mich.

It was the beginning of the last major revolution in American manufacturing.

Through mass production, Ford cut costs, paid his workers more and for almost 20 years grabbed half the auto market in the United States.

Over the decades, production methods were refined, moving into the age of computers and industrial robots.

Now another breakthrough seems on the horizon in the race to the automatic factory.

It is the flexible manufacturing system, enabling computers and robots to turn out batches of highly specialized goods with hardly a touch of the human hand.

The so-called "sunshine" or high-tech industries are supposed to generate hundreds of thousands of new jobs by the early 1990s, but that may not be enough to offset the job losses due to automation.

In Henry Ford's case in 1913, he needed mass production to make cars people could afford. Between 1908 and 1929, Ford sold more than 15 million Model Ts.

In 1914, Ford raised the minimum wage for all this workers to $5 for an eight-hour day, from $1.50 for unskilled and $2.50 for skilled workers. It was an unprecedented move and raised a great hue and cry among industrialists, who thrived on cheap labor.

Industry today is undergoing structural changes even more startling than Henry Ford's belt-line methods were just before the beginning of the First World War.

Under conventional methods, assembly lines are relatively rigid and high in labor costs. Each machine performs a single function. If you want to change a product, the machines must be rebuilt or replaced, and often rearranged. Workers may have to be retrained.

Such systems work well in the mass-producing industries which turn out large numbers of identical products -- television sets, toasters and cars.

But Gene Bylinsky, a Fortune magazine editor, predicts that as U.S. corporations shift these operations overseas to use low-cost labor, American industry will increasingly emphasize production of small batches of highly specialized goods.

In the new flexible systems, machines on the line are directed by a central computer. Robots handle the parts. Remotely guided carts carry away the finished product.

The computers can be reprogrammed to switch to another product, and the machines take on new tasks.

Bylinsky writes in The Race to the Automatic Factory that this flexibility is useful in a variety of "batch production" industries.

He notes that 75 percent of all machined parts, the components of sophisticated equipment, are produced in lots of 50 or fewer.

Farm tractors, planes, and main-frame computers also are assembled in small numbers.

Bylinsky says General Electric Corp. uses flexible technologies in a New Hampshire plant that turns out 2,000 different versions of its basic electric meter.

While U.S. firms were the pioneers of flexible manufacturing technology, it is the Japanese who are far ahead in actual usage.

Bylinsky estimates that American corporations have bought only 30 flexible systems. A single Japanese firm, Toyoda Tool Co., owns more. Yamazaki Machinery Works operates a $20-million automated lathe factory that employs 12 workers and a night watchman.

A comparable conventional plant requires 215 employees and four times as much machinery.

But Bylinsky says U.S. firms are finally showing interest in the new technology.

Some civil servants are even courteous

By BOB WENMAN, MP

As a member of parliament sitting on the side of the opposition, part of my function and that of opposition parties in general is to provide constructive criticism of the policies and operations of the present government.

The bureaucracy of the government naturally receives much of the criticism as it provides the mechanics for the ongoing operations of government policy. Contrary to popular belief there are civil servants who are industrious, dedicated, caring and courteous as well as those to the contrary of which we hear more often. I have had experience with both cases while representing my constituents and I like to give credit when credit is due.

Consider the following: Although vitamin B17 (amygdaline) is used in many other countries as an alternative treatment for cancer, in Canada under the food and drug act it is classified as a "new drug" and therefore it can only be imported for personal use and not for resale. When Mrs. Siegrist, a cancer patient in Aldergrove, attempted to bring the drug through the Aldergrove border crossing for her own personal use, she ran into some bureaucratic red tape. She called my office in Langley informing me that her medication was being held at the border. Several phone calls were then made to various government departments in order to resolve the dilemma.

As a result, the drug inspection service officers in Vancouver called the Aldergrove customs office in order to have Mrs. Siegrist's medication released. Due to what appears to be overly restrictive regulations under the food and drug act, a separate permit is still needed for each time Mrs. Siegrist requires more vitamin B17. Within the confines of present regulations, however, individual bureaucrats were quite helpful. I was particularly pleased with the response received from Harry Dodd, the supervisor of the Aldergrove border crossing, who in concern for Mrs. Siegrist, promptly telephoned her to help solve the situation.

In another case, a secretary from a local business in Surrey wrote my office in exasperation after long suffering in regards to the poor postal service they were receiving on RR 4. I immediately wrote to post office officials requesting an investigation. After receiving letters and petitions from constituents as well as a letter from myself, and after reviewing the service rendered, the Surrey post office has plans for improvements. As well as replacing the contractor responsible for the poor service, Canada Post will also provide door to door service for the business area on RR 4. I trust that constituents in Port Kells will be receiving more efficient service, particularly the business sector who will be receiving door to door service beginning in the fall.

Considering the importance of prompt service, the co-operation of the post office officials in improving and extending services is no small matter, particularly for those small businesses who rely a great deal on Canada Post. I would like to commend Mr. MacIver, post office area manager for retail and delivery, for his prompt response to my representation for a solution to the problem.

A bureaucracy gone amiss

By ROGER WORTH

In a not-so-funny way, the seemingly inevitable growth of bureaucracy in Canada is stifling the nation's entrepreneurs, as well as ensuring that many new jobs will not be created.

The bureaucrats, and the millions of civil service employees who follow their orders, are the "nine-to-fivers" that have the duty to carry out the wishes of our duly elected representatives.

They work for the government agencies and departments that dispense unemployment insurance, collect taxes and buy everything from soup to ships in addition to the thousands of other transactions that occur between governments, businesses and individual citizens.

Without question, bureaucrats are needed. These are the people who are hired to protect our interests, as well as our dollars, all the while supposedly seeing that public money is spent responsibly and that rip-offs are kept to a minimum. Yet there comes a point when we may have too much of a good thing.

It has recently come to light, for instance, that Ottawa has nine bureaucrats sitting behind desks in the nation's capital overseeing a $70-million foreign aid program in Bangladesh. Meanwhile, these people are giving orders to only three Canadian field workers in that country. Something's amiss.

Says one of the Bangladesh field workers: "It can cost $100 worth of telex cables to Canada to justify a $25 expenditure."

This top-heavy management situation is not unusual. The armed forces, for example, has more corporals than privates, and the number of senior federal civil servants earning more than $60,000 tripled last year.

More important, perhaps, is the way the highly placed bureaucrats view the business community, particularly the small business sector. Even the smallest businesses are now forced to spend about 10 hours per week on red-tape, paperburden and government forms, many of them designed to keep the bureaucrats happy.

It's true, governments claim they are reducing this maze of paperwork, but it is still an important factor in any business operation.

Then there are the bureaucratic investigators. These are the people who oversee tax collection, unemployment insurance, workers' compensation and a multitude of other government programs.

Complaints about their heavy-handed methods of operation abound, and there have been repeated suggestions that the bureaucrats simply don't understand what makes a smaller firm tick.

That, in fact, may be the case. Few civil servants have experience in the business world, and many seem to believe all businesses are out to grab as many dollars as they can, legally or illegally.

Naturally, that is not true. Yet it is an attitude that stifles many smaller firms from expanding, and forces others to throw in the towel. For these entrepreneurs, the bureaucratic paper maze has developed into an obstacle that cannot be overcome.

An apple a day

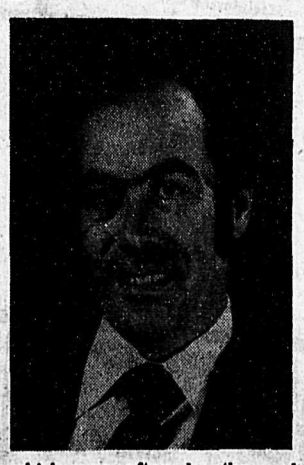
OTTAWA - Our ancestors knew eating an apple a day did great things for our health.

A recent study by Agriculture Canada tells us that increasing that daily quota would do a lot for the health of Canada's economy too.

The completed report, called "A study of Canada's apple industry", covers every aspect of the industry. It will be discussed at a conference here on August 11 and 12 with federal and provincial government representatives and members of the industry.

New legislation superior to old one

By BOB McCLELLAND, MLA



The introduction of the new human rights act and the elimination of the human rights branch and the human rights commission has created a storm of controversy in British Columbia, much of it due to a flood of inaccurate information and comments made by people who have not taken the time to read the new legislation.

These protests would have you believe that, the provincial government had eliminated human rights altogher. This is not the case. The new act, which will supersede the former human rights code, will result in more efficient resolution of human rights disputes and at the same time help to heighten the public's awareness of important human rights issues. Some human rights complaints have taken as long as five to six years to conclude. To me, this means that the system was not working to protect the people it was designed to protect. Under the old system, human rights officers attempted to negotiate a settlement while at the same time acting as an advocate for the complainant, a process which was often lengthy and frustrating. The new legislation contains an expedited dispute resolution process so that true human rights complaints can be dealt with quickly and fairly.

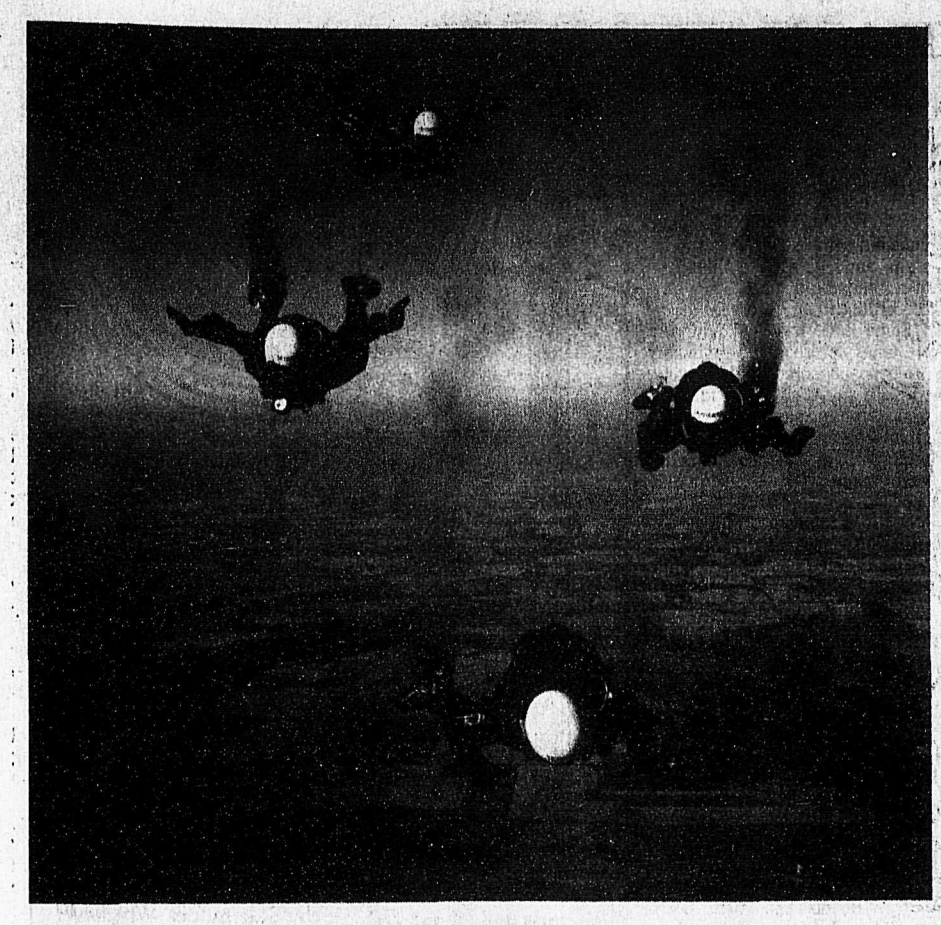
The new human rights council, to be appointed under the act, will be able to dismiss frivolous or vexatious complaints or those better handled in another manner. Some complaints are actually collective bargaining or employment standards issues and might better be handled through other legislation. The council will conduct investigations into valid complaints, seek resolution where possible, and will refer unresolved cases to the minister of labor. The minister is empowered to appoint a board of inquiry to look into an unresolved case and the board will have the same powers it had under the human rights code.

The new act includes a provision which prohibits discrimination on the grounds of physical or mental disability. This provision was not included in the code.

Appointments to the council will be made as soon as the new act becomes law. The ministry of labor is continuing to accept complaints and will hold them for the council's attention. All boards of inquiry underway will continue until they have discharged the matter before them. Human rights complaints can be filed at the branch offices in Burnaby, Victoria, Prince George and Kamloops or any office of the employment standards branch of the ministry.

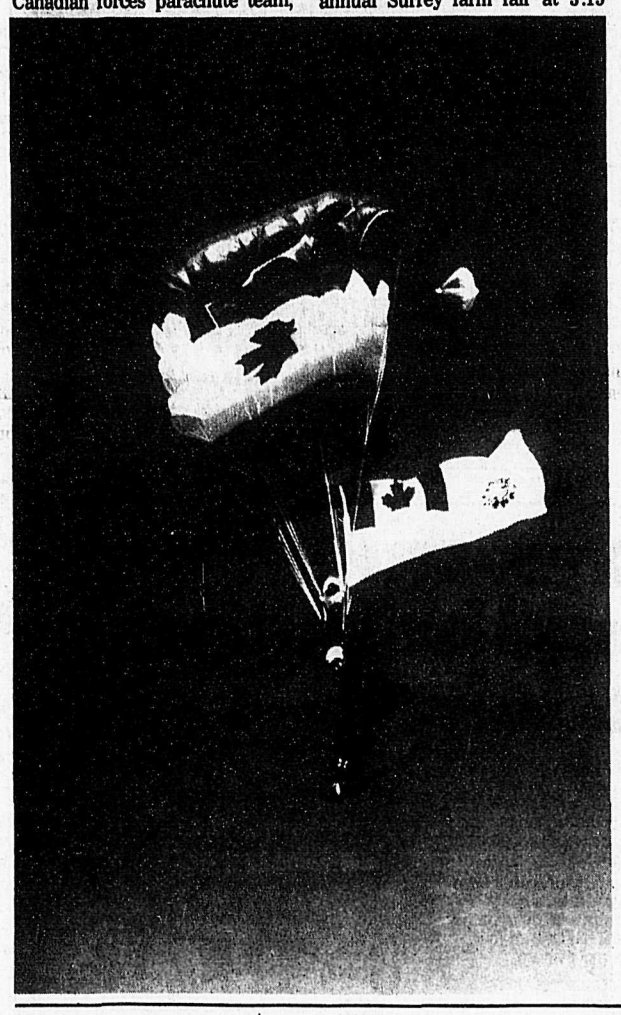
Unfortunately, because of the uproar surrounding these changes, there are some people who mistakenly feel that they are no longer protected from discrimination. This is regrettable because the code remains in effect and when the transition to the new council is completed the people of British Columbia will have an even stronger protection of their human rights.

I will be meeting shortly with representatives of business groups, women's organizations, ethnic and cultural groups and organizations of the disabled. Through these meetings I hope to dispel the uncertainty and the fears that have grown up during the past few weeks. These meetings will give me the opportunity to explain the act in some detail and respond to any questions and concerns these organizations may raise. I believe that after concerned individuals have had the opportunity to study the legislation they will find that it affords all British Columbians greater protection against discrimination. I hope all British Columbians will support this legislation.



The amazing Skyhawks will drop in on farm fair

CLOVERDALE - Skyhawks, the Canadian forces parachute team, will be performing at the 95th annual Surrey farm fair at 3:15 p.m. on Saturday, August 6, and at 2 p.m. on Sunday, August 7.



Team is made up of volunteer service personnel representing a wide variety of military occupations in the regular and reserve forces.

Since 1971, the Sky Hawks have performed each year in many airshows and exhibitions across Canada and abroad. Last year, the team completed some 2,000 parachute descents before an estimated two million spectators.

Each member is an expert parachutist with 150 to 1,500 jumps to his credit. He can fly his body through the air under absolute control, performing aerobatics and formation flying as he falls. He can vary his rate of descent and move across the sky in any direction at speeds from 190 to more than 320 kilometres per hour.

Normal jump altitude is 10,000 feet above ground, about three kilometres high. To assist the spectators in following the Sky Hawks' descent, jumpers trail colored smoke from cannisters attached to their boots. Using an altimeter and stop watch, the parachutist will freefall for up to 45 seconds before activating his manoeuverable main canopy at a height of 2,200 feet. With this steerable parachute, the jumper will then control his descent for a pinpoint landing.

When not on tour with the Sky Hawks, members pursue their individual careers in their respective trades in the Canadian armed forces. Team is based at the Canadian Airborne Centre at Canadian forces base Edmonton.

Callers checked

Paula Redpath, a B.C. Tel operator, formerly accepted long-distance calls billed to a third number without checking to see if, in fact, the third number was legitimate or that the people at that number accepted the charges. But, due to a notable increase in fraudulent third-number calls, B.C. Tel is now asking Redpath and her fellow operators to verify the charges by calling that third number. If it is busy or there is no answer then the coin telephone caller has the option of calling collect; paying by coin; placing the call later; or using a long-distance calling card.

Public to be sworn in?

MURRAYVILLE - Township council has the authority to hear public testimonials under oath, says Ald. Dan Williamson, and should request that the public be sworn in at public hearings.

Williamson says he doesn't accuse anyone of telling "untruths" at public hearings, but he nevertheless has trouble accepting some of the things he hears.

Trees create danger

ALDERGROVE - Trees and powerlines can be a dangerous mix.

For B.C. Hydro the combination is a constant problem. Trees that grow into powerlines can become energized, creating a hazard to the public at ground level, and tree trimmers or children climbing a tree can be in danger if the branches are close to the line.

During storms branches are often blown onto the lines, causing power outages and again creating a hazard.

"These problems could be avoided if people would select the right tree for the right place when landscaping their properties," says Dave Chetwynd, Hydro's distribution operations engineer.

When selecting a tree, the most important point is: How tall will it grow? If it is to be located near a powerline, Hydro suggests that only a small tree or shrub should be chosen.

Volunteers dedicated, unselfish

LANGLEY - During the past year, board members of the Langley Community Services have included some of the most dedicated and unselfish volunteers ever available in any community, acccording to an observer.

Some have travelled hundreds of miles promoting community projects sponsored by the society, without any thought of financial remuneration, paying for car and other expenses out of their own pockets. No public funds or government grants were ever used to reimburse these volunteer board members, whose main concern is that needy families may receive the maximum amount of help available, both financially and morally.

"At least one board member is known and appreciated for spending up to 50 hours in one week alone to ensure the success of a program," according to the same spokesman.

"During that same week, he travelled over 200 miles to help ensure the success of the program; and did not submit a memo asking for repayment of travelling expenses," he continued.

They do not just attend board meetings; but many are involved in more hours than some highly paid social workers, said another concerned society member.

"On the whole they seek to be fair to both staff and volunteers alike," he said.

"If there is a general lack of interest and support in the programs, it is most certainly not to be found at the board level."

They have done a good job, in good faith and in a responsible fashion, although handicapped by a mounting deficit position and other difficulties apparently inherited from previous years, which are now being brought to light.

Such board members are a credit to any community; and an inspiration to hundreds of other volunteers in this area, especially in times of serious restraint and cut-back of social programs.

This view was expressed by members of the society and other volunteers.

"As another fiscal year comes to an end, we again wish to express our heartfelt thanks to the board members, staff and volunteers," they said.

Brideshead Revisited

The 11-part series, "Brideshead Revisited," which has won unanimous praise and record-breaking audiences and was adapted from Evelyn Waugh's most successful and popular novel, is the story of Charles Ryder, a painter who falls under the spell of a wealthy, aristocratic family, the Marchmains.

In episode five, "A Blow Upon A Bruise," airing Monday, August 8 on "Great Performances" over PBS, Charles Ryder (Jeremy Irons, pictured left) returns from his artist's studio in Paris to stay at Brideshead Castle for the New Year of 1925. Lord Sebastian Flyte (Anthony Andrews, pictured) has just returned with Mr. Samgrass (John Grillo) from a visit to the Near East.

Lady Marchmain has forbidden drink to be served in the house, but Sebastian has other plans. He persuades Charles to lend him money to pay for his liquor and, late that night,

Sebastian makes another drunken appearance in the drawing room. The next morning, after Lady Marchmain accuses Charles of being "wantonly cruel," Charles leaves, believing he will never again return to Brideshead.

Music and romance at Abbotsford theatre

A musical comedy that was first produced in a little 135-seat off-Broadway theatre in 1960, that filled those seats every night for more than twenty years, while it went on to become an international success in Europe, South America, the Near East, and Australia, is coming to the Country Playhouse at the Laurel Street Arts Center from the 6th of August through the 27th of August.

This is the "The Fantasticks," a harlequinade written by two young men from Texas, Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt, on the basis of a half-forgotten old French romance.

The Gallic original was "Les Romantiques," Edmond Rostand's first play, written in 1894 when he was 26 years old, which was more or less a buried footnote to the career of the man who later wrote "Cyrnao de Bergerac," until Jones and Schmidt dug it up as a plot for "The Fantasticks."

This plot is merely about a boy and girl in love, but it was the mockingly sophisticated style of telling their romantic story that seemed to captivate the show's audiences around the world. The boy and girl are separated by a wall which their seemingly hostile parents have put up. The necessity to climb trees on each side of the wall to have their secret meetings, the need to plot behind the backs of their feuding fathers, only adds piquancy to their romance.

Actually their fathers are the best of friends who fondly hope that their children will marry. They have forbidden meetings of their progeny out of the certainty that youngsters will be contrary. They expound this wisdom in one of the show's hit numbers, "Never Say No!" which states that children will always insist on doing what they're forbidden to do.

In order to find a way in which their pretended objections can be overcome, they hire some actors to stage an attempted abduction of the girl in the moonlight, so that her beau can gallantly rescue her. This will make the girl see her suitor in an even more romantic light than ever, and will force the "reluctant" parents to consent to the match.

After this moonstruck episode goes off as planned, the musical then transfers its principals to a world of bright, disillusioning sunlight. Youngsters and fathers grow irritated with one another. The boy and girl can only find happiness after they discover that the world is not composed entirely of moonlight and honeysuckle, and the theme is developed that "without a hurt the heart is hollow."

Marie West and Colin Nickle will be seen as the pair of sweethearts, Norman Slack and Brian Brown as their fathers, Kim Stebner doubling as the narrator and the hired abductor and Ted Marshall in the long but non-speaking role of the man who arranges the scenery and props and is himself a prop at times (his arms form the wall separating the lovers during one of the songs.)

Bill Green is directing this midsummer night's impromptu, and Mic Booth is arranging the backgrounds for its shenanigans.

A diamond ring, a King snake, and a sewage treatment plant

NEW WESTMISTER - It was late at night when the lady phoned the Iona sewage treatment plant and said she had accidentally dropped a ring into the toilet and could the men working at the plant keep an eye open for it.

It was a nice ring, she said, platinum with diamonds. Worth about $15,000.

It was never found. It could in fact still be in the Vancouver sewer system, having never made it to the plant.

A six-foot King snake made it once. Probably someone's pet that died and was unceremoniously dumped into the sewer. When it surfaced at Iona the worker who found it nearly had a heart attack. He called for help and someone else removed it. It was sent to a lab for identification.

The Iona plant is located near the mouth of the north arm of the Fraser River and is operated by the Greater Vancouver regional district. It is one of four GVRD treatment plants.

Workers at Iona don't get as many calls as they used to asking if, by chance, they have recovered items flushed down the toilet by mistake. But they still get some.

They've had calls about false teeth.

"If they could see what things look like after they've been in the sewer for a few days I don't think they would want them back," says Larry Tenney, supervisor of operations at Iona.

Birth certificates are a fairly common sighting at the plant. So are credit cards.

Money, both paper and coins, used to be seen frequently but since the plant's method of operation was changed a couple of years ago its recovery has become rare.

'Disappearances' tells of vanished Canadians

TORONTO - The trouble with stories about people who disappear is that the endings often are unsatisfactory. But, in compensation, truth, is stranger - and sometimes more gripping - than fiction.

All these strengths and weaknesses are nicely balanced in Disappearances, a collection of true accounts of Canadians who have simply vanished, by Derrick Murdoch, a reviewer of crime literature for The Globe and Mail since 1964.

Murdoch calculates that on average about 240 persons go missing in Canada every day, but the vast majority will be "Located" - a term that includes those who will be corpses by the time they are found. Some of the missing, however, are never seen again.

In his book Murdoch has strung together an odd but representative selection of cases - sad, puzzling, bizarre or incredibly frustrating - to illustrate the scope of the problem and the staggering number of police manhours spent on some searches.

Some of the cases attracted national - even international - attention, others were barely noticed.

There's the woman whose own freezer became her coffin in which she lay preserved along with the peas and the ice cream. Or the case of the three legs identified as belonging to the same man.

Stories that build to the disappearance and then evaporate are frustrating, but readers will enjoy the yarns that have no ending.

For instance, the case of Lisa Golding who acquires a young husband, a young lover and a stepfather in Halifax and constantly flits from one to the other.

After she disappears, the suspicion builds nicely until finally it is the husband who breaks, making a run for it and then attempting suicide.

And there is the case of the plain, middle-aged woman who disappears, we discover, simply because her young nephew hated her.

The comic-tragic tale of Fred Johnson, the young, seemingly wealthy Toronto businessman, began with a slapstick chase, a fat, ugly man pursuing him through the ground floor of his mansion while the victim howled "you've got the wrong man."

The things everyone found out about Johnson and his financial dealings after his "kidnapping" were far more interesting than anything anyone knew when he was still around. But why was he abducted, and is he still alive?

Another among those with unsatisfactory endings is the retelling of the famous Marion McDowell case which, in the mid-1950s, held Canada fascinated. She was parked in a lover's lane with a boyfriend when, the story goes, he was attacked and she disappeared off the face of the earth. It was a tantalizing case, revived when a famous retired Scotland Yard detective was brought in to have a crack at it, but Marion was never found.

Murdoch tells the tales in an easy, straightforward manner, resisting any temptation to overdramatize stories that on their own are dramatic enough.

Disappearances, by Derrick Murdoch, published by Doubleday Canada, 204 pages, $17.95.

Church built In 36 hours

FORT ST. JOHN - On Saturday it was a plywood floor sitting on a piece of land.

By Sunday, it was a church - constructed, and landscaped in about 36 hours by more than 2,000 Jehovah's Witnesses.

At 1:30 p.m. Sunday, they sat down for a Bible study outside their new Kingdom Hall.

When the study was over, workers put the finishing touches inside and outside the building and laid sod. By 8:30 p.m. the last of the workers were picking up their tools around the completed church.

The estimated toatl cost of the one-storey structure will be less than $100,000 with land. The new 240-seat auditorium replaces an older 140-seat building that the group hopes to sell.

Large congregation

ALDERGROVE - A convention of more than 500 people closed here on the weekend.

Members of the Christian church from Vancouver and the lower mainland came together for the four-day event at the Lyle Fair property in North Aldergrove.

Congregation was camping in trailers and tents, and several large gospel tents were erected to accommodate the Christians.

A spokesman said he estimated the crowd to number about 580 people.

Farmers too independent

WINNIPEG - An agriculture rights activist from Wisconsin says the trouble with farmers is that they are too independent.

Sister Thomas More Bartels told a meeting of the Manitoba Egg Marketing Board here that farmers have little influence beyond their own farmgates and need to exert more political pressure.

"Look at the great effect of the intervenor role in politics of people like Ralph Nader," said Bertels.

"There are 2,500 intervenor agencies in Washington influencing federal policy, many of them anti-mechanization, anti-pesticide, anti-animal farm," she said.

MacDonald cow superior

BRANTFORD, Ont. - A Holstein cow owned by Reid F. MacDonald of Aldergrove has been awarded a 'superior production' certificate by the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Association.

Youelldene Trans Fawn, classified as 'very good,' yielded as a junior four-year old, in 305 days on twice-a-day milking 14429 kg. milk, 356 kg. fat, and tested with 2.47 percent butter fat.

Cook lunch while you fish

Want a hot, thermos-cooked lunch waiting for you when you return to camp after a morning of fishing? Here's one recommended by Janet Groene, an experienced thermos-cook and author of the popular book Cooking On The Go.

Janet suggests placing your favorite noodle, meat or vegetable dry soup mix (not creamed varieties) in an Aladdin wide-mouth thermos at breakfast time. Add boiling water according to package directions, cap and tip gently to mix.

Take a second wide-mouth bottle and slip in a few hot dogs. Cover them with boiling water and cap the bottle.

Expert says more men shopping for food

RICHMOND - Who are today's consumers?

"Mrs. Consumer is no longer as significant," John Morris, economist and vice-president of Safeway Stores, Oakland, Calif. told a food marketing conference here last week.

"Thirty percent of the shoppers are men, 64 percent of teenagers make food purchases each week. There is less use of shopping lists, more call for smaller portions and exotic foods. Today's consumers are better educated and have travelled the world.

"Our customers are changing. The market is more diversified and we have to target our products accordingly."

Morris provided his portrait of the new consumer for 160 food industry representatives attending the conference saying there are more people over 64 and fewer under 18 in the marketplace. Two-income families and single parent families are increasing.

Consumers, he said, are more skeptical about claims made for products but they are also willing to try new foods. They are more diet and health conscious and are looking for foods with high nutritional value--lean meats, fresh fruits and vegetables and natural foods. To serve these diversified needs of customers Safeway has several types of warehouse, gourmet, specialty and farm markets.

Morris said that because Canada has a favorable image in the United States, that is, it is perceived as a country of "clean air and clean water", Canadian firms looking for markets in the U.S. can "play and build on that image" by emphasizing the purity and quality of Canadian food products.

"Canadian beef is preferable to U.S. and Canadian pork is lean. Processed meats are superior and Canadian no. 2 bacon is adequate to compete with U.S. no. 1," he said.

Morris, who was instrumental in setting up the Canada Safeway export development department, said that food companies who want to do business in the U.S. should do their own market research, identify their target customers and deliver what they promise.

"In exporting you must recognize the need for reciprocity. Products move two ways. That is an essential ingredient but there are exciting opportunities," he said.

"Targeting the food market challenge" was the theme of the conference which was sponsored by the B.C. agricultural services committee, including representatives from provincial and federal government and universities in co-operation with the agri-food industry in the province.

Commune life foundered as time wore on

DAVENPORT, WASH. - The flower children who two decades ago founded Tolstoy Farm are entering their late 30s now, are married, with kids, and don't believe in free love anymore.

Like many quests for utopia, this commune in the heart of eastern Washington wheat country, has fallen short of its original ideals, some residents said recently.

Shared living quarters have given way to private homes with a slightly middle-class flavor.

Government by consensus remains intact and business meetings usually follow a potluck dinner and volleyball game.

Residents are beginning to take jobs outside community and the farm has a shortage of children willing to carry on their parents' legacy.

The farm was started in 1963 by a handful of people who followed the dream of Huw (Piper) Williams, an Edwall, Wash., farm boy they met on a peace march in Washington, D.C.

Williams was inspired by novelist and social theorist Leo Tolstoy, who wrote of living in harmony with the land in loving co-operation with all humankind. Williams' parents and grandparents loaned him the land until he could buy it.

"To find new answers, you need experimenters," said Williams, now 40. "That's what all young people are good at. We didn't have anything, but we shared it."

Founders had hoped for no bills, no taxes and no need for money. Everyone was to work for the good of everyone else. Love was to be free and shared. Open marriages were encouraged.

Pat Reed estimates the average age of farm members was 18 when she arrived 17 years ago. Today, it's 35, she said.

The farm's communal spirit suffered a major blow when the group's living quarters burned in the late 1960s. Farm lore says the arsonist was an angry visitor. The blaze led to a move toward single-family dwellings, and residents began to value their privacy.

Some blame the isolation of rural life for the failure of many early farm marriages. Others fault the concept of free love. Monogamy is preferred now.

"Most of us found out monogamous relationships are more satisfying in the long run," Williams said.

AUGUST EDITION

Food for thought

Canada is the bread basket of the world. Canadians have heard that phrase so often, they seem to take it for granted that our farmers rate among the finest anywhere.

Yet the nation's food producers have very real problems that are little understood by ordinary Canadians.

Consider what's happening at the present time. With spring planting just around the corner, many farmers are scurrying to banks, seeking loans to pay for the fertilizer, seed and other necessities. In the fall, when the crop is harvested, the farmer sells the commodity, pays off the bank loan (including the interest), retains whatever is left to cover wages and other costs and (hopefully) earns a fair return on a heavy investment.

That's the way the system is supposed to work, but relatively low food prices and high interest rates in recent years have cut profits and, in some cases, have resulted in very real losses.

Yet the hardy farmer persists, even when governments add uncertainties such as proposed massive changes in the freight rate system that may or may not be costly to producers.

Our fishermen are in the same leaky boat. With the low prices they are offered for their products, the fishermen are having difficulty surviving. In fact, things are so bad, it now seems clear that governments will be forced to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to bail out the industry in atlantic Canada.

The winners in this high-cost, low-price equation, of course, are the nation's consumers. While Canadians spend about 23 percent of disposable income on food, West Germans lay out more than 30 percent and the Japanese pay out a whopping 35 percent or so of their income on food.

It's true, farming and fishing are generally considered risky businesses where producers can earn big returns if everything goes according to plan. But in many cases, producers haven't been winners in the 1980s.

Aside from economics, what's important, but little noticed by Canadians, is the fact that as a country we are indeed self-sufficient in food. And for that, we can thank our farmers and fishermen. Whatever their problems, they always seem to meet our demands for foodstuffs with lots left over to sell to other countries. They deserve to be treated with respect.

TODAY'S FASCINATING FACT

In New Brunswick, just outside of Fredericton, there is a smallish postal code area known as EIE IEO.

All together now: ee-eye-ee-eye-ee-oh!

You will not be surprised to know the district includes the MacDonald farm.

DAIRY AUCTION SERVICE

New farm service is now located in Abbotsford

The well-known farm auction business operated by Paton and Smith Farm Services Ltd., and now under new ownership has moved into the McClary Livestock complex on Sumas Way.

The business was founded in 1970 by Ian D. Paton of Delta and the late Norm Smith of Milner.

The business has specialized in dairy sales, farm dispersals, quota brokerage and livestock appraisals.

With this move, the business plans to expand its monthly dairy sales at the McClary sales facility to a weekly basis. All dairy animals sold are veterinary inspected and catalogued as to sires and production on dams. Paton and Smith will continue its sale management services along with the provision of a regular weekly market for farmers with good dairy animals to sell.

While Ian D. Paton, D. Ag., will continue his association with the business through his affiliated company, Ian D. Paton and associates Ltd., son Ian L. Paton and McClary Stockyards managers, Soren Jensen, P. Ag. and Charlie McClary, have incorporated a new company called Paton and Smith Farm Services Ltd., and will be equal partners in the business. Although the new company will lease office and sales facilities in the complex owned by McClary Holdings Ltd. the two businesses will function as separate corporate entities.

Ian L. Paton graduated from U.B.C. in 1978 with a Bachelor of Physical Education degree and presently serves as secretary for the Delta-Richmond Holstein Club. He has been manager of the old Paton and Smith Farm Services company for the past 3 years. Ian will serve as president and manager of the new Paton and Smith Farm Services in Abbotsford.

Ian D. Paton will continue to provide auctioneering and consulting services to Paton and Smith Farm Services Ltd. through his company I.D. Paton and Associates.

GARDENING IN THE VALLEY

Too much nitrogen–weak plants

By DON ANSON

I have often written about the dangers of feeding too much nitrogen to plants. Unfortunately this is fairly easy to accomplish in this area because we have so much poultry manure available and one of the least expensive liquid manures is fish manure, also very strong in nitrogen.

Too much nitrogen results in lush, good-looking but weak plants that are readily receptive to pests and diseases.

However, one must not get away from the fact that nitrogen is the most important food element for all plants. You cannot get green leaves without nitrogen.

What many gardeners do not realize is that nitrogen is not present in the minute particles of mineral soil from which plants get their phosphates, potash and some trace elements.

All nitrogen comes from the air, some from rainfall and some which is extracted from soil unless the stuff was applied very regularly at a great cost.

That is the main reason why we need so much humus in the form of manure, compost, peat, sawdust, seaweed and half-rotted material in our soil. There is no way that this material can be quickly leched away by rainfall and as long as it is there, there will be beneficial bacteria working full time breaking down the organic material and releasing acceptable nitrogen for plant nutrition. What is more, this is easily the best form of nitrogen and plants will not get it in overdoses.

If the organic matter you add is very high in carbon content, such as sawdust, wood shavings, straw or hay, soil organisms working to break this material down may compete with the crops for nitrogen. That is why you should always use the addition of a high nitrogen fertilizer when using a dressing of such materials. It could be an inorganic fertilizer such as nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia or by poultry manure or fish fertilizer.

If anyone is considering heavy use of sawdust or similar material to add body to the soil, I would suggest they aim to mix in about 50 pounds of ammonium sulphate for each 1,000 square feet of the material laid on three inches deep. Such a mixture would rot fairly quickly. It could be laid down in the fall and dug or rototilled in in the spring.

Lack of sufficient nitrogen is readily evident by stunted growth and poor leaf color although this also results from poor drainage. Too much nitrogen shows up with lank, lush top growth with sparse roots, flowers or fruits. Neither of these will show up if the soil is generously supplied with plenty of humus.

Probably the most effective development in the plant food field over the past decade is a form of synthetic fertilizer that supplies nitrogen safely, at a uniform rate, and over a far longer period than was possible before even with natural organic fertilizers such as blood meal. This is a combination of urea and formaldehyde. Urea-form is the name given to this unusual chemical. It can be prepared so as to make nitrogen available to plants almost as rapidly as that from urea, or to make it available over a two to three year period.

Controlled availability of nitrogen constitutes a major advance for farmers but is of less importance to gardeners. Urea-form fertilizers ration the amount of nitrogen automatically and thus avoid supplying overdoses at any one time. Another important aspect is that these fertilizers will not burn plants.

So-called burning of leaves and grasses is caused by the withdrawal of moisture from the leaf or blade by particles of the chemical remaining lodged.

Floral arrangements

ALDERGROVE - Mrs. Ulmer of Mission, expert flower arranger, will be at the August meeting of the Aldergrove Agricultural Association to give pointers in entering flower arrangements in the fall fair. Also speaking at the meeting will be Bill Franklin giving tips on entering flowers and plants and Ray Amundson giving standards for fruits and vegetable entries.

This type of meeting has been requested to help better understand the rules and standards for entering produce in the fairs. The general public is invited to attend.

The August meeting is held at the Aldergrove Elks hall at 7 p.m. on Thursday, August 4.

Are you a farmer?

By R.G. COFFEY

Do you own a small acreage where the deer and the antelope roam and are thinking of doing some hobby farming? Well, under certain circumstances you may be able to save some tax dollars.

The term "hobby farming" is not used for tax purposes, the term used when the main source of income is not farming is restricted farm losses. Now before you run out to deduct the cost of your two chickens and one pig it should be noted that the tax department does have some general rules as to what is and what is not farming for tax purposes. The phrase used is that the operations must be reasonably expected to show a profit within a reasonable period of time. This is not to say a profit in the first year, depending on the type of operation it could be up to four or five years before those deductible losses become profits (ie: nut tree farm). The other factor is that the operation must be economically viable, therefore a one beef cow operation would not qualify. Now that all that is said, there is no exact number or size that is the boundary between just a hobby and a farm business. That decision should be made in concert with a professional tax advisor.

Now that it has been decided that you are a farmer, what can you deduct as expenses? Basically, all costs that relate to the farm operations are deductible. It could include not only the costs of items like cattle, pigs, sheep, feed or veterinary fees, but also a portion of your mortgage interest, property tax, insurance and utilities. The principle is that any cost or expense paid that is related to the farm operation or property used in that operation is deductible. After adding up all your expenses paid during the year and subtracting any farm income received, you will most likely have a loss in the first years of operations. Now the good part, that loss can be used to reduce your taxable income and thus increase the tax refund. But there is a catch, the amount of the loss is restricted. The first $2,500 of the loss is fully deductible and half of the next $5,000 for a total allowable deduction of $5,000. If your loss is greater than that, then the balance can only be deductible against future farm income for up to five years.
