COLUMBIAN SUPPLEMENT.

VOLUME VIII. NEW WESTMINSTER, B. C., JUNE 24, 1890. NUMBER 121.

A CASE OF BLUFF.

How a Cool M n Won Twenty-Two Hundred Dollars at Poker.

A little game of draw played at one of the leading hotels in Denver has been a subject of interest to semi-sports lately, says the Chicago Times. The players were prominent men—one a leading and wealthy cattle-man of Colorado, whose figure has only recently assumed aldermanic proportions; one a Congressman from Georgia, and the third a scion of the cotton aristocracy of New Orleans. A three days' siege was agreed to. A room was engaged and office hours arranged. They were to begin playing at one o'clock in the afternoon and quit promptly at ten. Lunch was served in the room, and a new deck was to be used for each deal. The limit was placed at $100, but it was optional with any one of the trio to declare the limit off at any time. The first day's play resulted in favor of no one particularly, but the very first hand dealt on the second afternoon found two sets of threes and a four flush out. The blonde from New Orleans had three and knew what they were worth, so he opened her up for $100. The big fellow from Colorado had the same sort of a temper, and promptly knocked off the limit by depositing $500 worth of ivory on the table. Our Congressman with the anxious face looked solemn, but had not dreamed of any black cats, so he "saw" what was going on. In the draw Mr. N. did not improve things, but looked as expressive as a last year's base ball. The Colorado man made fours, and the Congressman got the right color and shape. One hundred went out as a feeler. Mr. Long Horn made it an even $500. The Georgian thought an ace-flush good, and raised him $500 more. Mr. N. laid his cards down on the table.

"Is my paper good, gentlemen?"

"Certainly," was the reply.

In a moment more a check for $5,000 lay on the table. The silence was saddening. Cattle were not very high that year, and four ten-spots were quietly laid down. The Congressman from Georgia thought so, too, and his beautiful flush joined the discards. Mr. N. coolly raked in the $2,200 pot and passed his hand over to me. He had three duces.

TIPS ON TABLE TOPICS.

IF WINE is served, do not attract the attention of every one to the fact that you do not drink it. The time for a temperance lecture is not at the table of a friend who has done you the honor to invite you to her house. Quietly shake your head and let the matter rest.

IN THE old country you begin to eat as soon as you are helped, but in America it is better taste to wait until the others are ready. This is a mooted question; different localities have different customs. Do not ask for a second help of any thing at a dinner party. Of course at home and where there is but one principal dish this rule is not obeyed.

ALWAYS take the food offered in a course, even if you not wish to eat it. It is much better to quietly wait and talk while the others eat than to call the attention of the whole table to your likes and dislikes. Never pile up your small dishes upon your plate when the servant comes to remove them. Never fold your napkin unless you are making a stay in the house and have a napkin ring provided for you.

LETTUCE, when served without dressing, is always pulled to pieces with the fingers. Water cress is also taken in the fingers. It is usually served in a shallow basket, or dish, upon a folded napkin, which covers the bottom and sides. Heaped up with the delicate green herb it makes a very ornamental dish. Asparagus is eaten both with a fork and also with the fingers. But the former is perhaps the most elegant way. Celery is always taken from the dish with the fingers.

IF individual salts are not used then take some salt from the large salt stand and place it on the corner of your butter-plate or on your plate. When corn is served on the cob, take it in the fingers. Some housekeepers provide little doilies for the purpose. The etiquette of eating a soft-boiled egg is rather a vexed question. The English eat it directly from the shell, using a cup made to hold the egg upright and steady. Americans usually break the egg into a cup.

BE careful not to monopolize the table talk. Do not interrupt others. If you are a dyspeptic do not talk of what does or does not agree with you, but quietly eat what you can, and say nothing about it. I know a celebrated man who eats nothing but potatoes, crackers and chocolate. But so nicely does he manage, in chatting gaily, and making jokes while the others eat, that very few people have observed his scrupulous care as to diet, and he is one of the most delightful "diners-out" that I ever knew.

IT is always proper to help yourself to bread, cheese and lump sugar with your fingers, if tongs are not provided. Never use your own fork or knife or spoon to take from the common dish. If a plate of hot, unbroken biscuit is passed, you may break one off with your fingers, and also for your neighbor. When dishes are passed, help yourself as quickly as possible, and never insist on some one having it first. It is supposed that the carver knows what he intends for each guest, so you must take the plate that is offered by the waiter.
