AFTER MANY YEARS.

The Great Northern Hill properties taken up.

The St. ELMO, TRUE FISSURE & BLUE BELL Secured by the Broadview People.

Shipment of ore gave values of 113 ozs. Silver. 32 per cent Lead. and $3. 60 in Gold.

A deal of far-reaching effect was consummated this week through the instrumentality of A. G. Fraser, of Trout Lake, whereby The Ohio Mines Development Co. have secured the "St Elmo", "Blue Bell" and "True Fissure" properties on the Great Nortern Hill.

The purchasing Company are the owners of the Broadview group adjoining the above-mentioned properties, and the development of that property has convinced them that there was big money in getting control of the whole hill.

There is still remaining the Great Northern group, and we understand that a deal is now on which will mean the transfer of that also. The local owners of this property are willing to ter on the terms offered, and we feel satisfied that if the absentee owners were conversant with the condition of affairs, they would not hesitate to accept the offer made. It is true they have a big proposition but it means a big expenditure in the shape of trams, mill &c. as well as $150, 000 00 for development to handle the proposition profitably.

The Ohio Mines people have enough, however, to make preparations for extensive development. They intend going ahead, and as soon as conditions warrant, putting in power plant, compressor, concentration plant, and reduction works. What this means to Trout Lake and Ferguson, can only be comprehended by those of us who have travelled the hard and dusty road of adversity during the past few years.

The proposition, as it stands today, is one of the most promising in the province.

On the "True Fissure" there is a 90 foot cross-cut, and 40 feet of drift, in which there is some good ore, running about $35. 00. On the surface the vein has been stripped, and is exposed for a distance of 1300 feet showing a large body of concentrating ore without a break. There is enough ore in sight to keep a plant running for an indefinite period.

On the "Blue Bell" a cross-cut has been run for a distance of 160 feet, and the lead drifted on 93 feet to the north, and 33 feet to the south. In the drift there is about four feet of shipping ore, and the cross-cut shows a good 20 feet of concentrating ore.

The "St. Elmo" has two cross-cuts, one 86 feet, and the other 35 feet, also a 47 foot drift. In these workings there is exposed the same lead of concentrating ore as in the "Blue Bell," 20 feet in width, and from 18 to 20 inches of clean ore, a shipment of which gave values of 113 ounces in silver, 32 per cent lead, and $3. 60 in gold.

This—in a small way—gives an idea of what the Company have to work on, and we feel justified in saying that under conservative and economic management, the proposition will not only 'make' money for those interested, but will be a big factor in the general production of British Columbia.

The vendors of the properties are: "Blue Bell"—Jack Stauber and Messrs. Hammersly and Dickson. "True Fissure"—Tom Downs of Revelstoke, and "St. Elmo"—A. W. Edge; Hugh McPherson; Tom Taylor and J. A. M. Aiken.

Will Crawford and family leave in a few days to take up their residence in Vancouver. Will,—or Rusty, as he was familiarly called—has been identified along business lines with the transfer and stage line between Trout Lake and Camborne for some years, and the many patrons of that line will be sorry to see him depart.

In sporting circles he will be badly missed; as a hockey player he was pre eminent, both in the Lardeau and Slocan, in fact, as an all round athlete, he was hard to beat.

An 'at home' was given at the Oddfellows Hall on Thursday night, to bid Mr. and Mrs. Crawford farewell. It was largely attended, and largely demonstrated the esteem in which they are held by Trout Lakeites.

Quotations for metals, Dec. 5th: Silver—69½, Lead—£19..10..0.

Died: at Vancouver a few days ago, Ellison, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Eisner, late of Trout Lake. Great sympathy for the bereaved parents is felt by their many friends in Trout Lake.

Mrs. Arthur Gowing and family, returned from Rosslard on Monday after a visit to friends.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Matters never looked so bright for the towns of Trout Lake and Ferguson, as they do at present.

The opening up of the Great Northern hill, with the subsequent erection of trams and reduction works, the erection of a new saw-mill at Trout Lake City, and the operation of the one already built at Gerrard, will create a demand for labor that is unprecedented.

It also means the construction of the road from the foot of the Lake to Trout Lake City, which in itself will be a big factor in the advance of the whole northern part of the district.

The possibilities are big, and the united efforts of the business men of both towns will go far in the consummation thereof.

The telephone service to Revelstoke is being well patronized.

Mr. Cowan, the manager, states that the line will be kept in good shape, and that the public will not have any room for grumbling in future.

* * *

The charge made by the Hon. Rufus Pope that the sum of $7000. 00 was recently paid for a judgeship, should be thoroughly investigated. It is the proud boast of Canadians that the judiciary of Canada is above reproach.

Mr. Pope's charge is one that cannot be over-looked. He must make good," and while as opposed to the political party who has made the appointment, and against whom the charge is made, we sincerely trust that the allegation has no truth in it.

The agitation of the Canadian as well as the English press, for the appointment of a Canadian to the post of Great Britains ambassador to the United States, will meet with the approval of all Canadians. The fiscal relations between the two great peoples of North America, should be administered by men who are conversant with conditions.

The "political pot" is beginning to boil, and many "bubbles" (candidates), are beginning to come to the surface. It is an open question as to the date of the election, but we believe that at whatever date it occurs, the present government will be returned by a good working majority.

During the last three years, the McBride government has made good. Whatever they have undertaken they have carried through successfully. They went up against a treasury that was empty, and a deficit that was fast putting the credit of the province below par. Increase of taxation, one of the most unpopular of measures, was necessary to meet present requirements, and put the finances on a sound basis. Without hesitation such a bill was introduced, and while the poor man had to pay his 'shot", the Corporations had to bear the "lions share." As a result of this bill many of the big financial concerns delivered an ultimatum to the government, "call off your tax, or we will leave the country." The "bluff" did not work, and still they are here, "making" money, and paying taxes, without going bankrupt. The big spending department (Lands and Works) has been thoroughly reorganized, and for every dollar spent, there is an equivalent given. Three years ago the province was in such a position that her securities went begging at a ruinous to day they are being sought for at a good price.

The Masquerade Carnival at Ferguson was a success. The crowd was not so large as anticipated but those who did attend, were loud in their praises of the condition of the ice and also the efficiency of the management.

The "festive season" is here, and every person—from the smallest child to the grey-haired adult—looks forward to a time of pleasure and enjoyment.

Concerts, balls, childrens' entertainments, and social gatherings are the orders of the day. Among the many we find that the 'Camborne Miners' Union' have arranged to hold their annual ball on Christmas night. The members of this particular association are renowned for their prodigality in the entertainment of their guests. Their motto, "Nothing too good for our visitors," has won for them a reputation second to none in the Province. If you don't believe it, go and find out for yourself. CASE 113

By... Emile Gaboriau

CHAPTER VIII.

WHEN Raoul de Lagors spoke of M. Fauvel's extraordinary dejection, he had not exaggerated. Since the fatal day when, upon his denunciation, his cashier had been arrested the banker had been a prey to the most gloomy melancholy and absolutely refused to take any interest in business affairs. He who had always been so domestic did not mingle with his family except at meals, when he would swallow a few mouthfuls and hastily leave the room. Shut up in his study, he would see no one.

The day of Prosper's release, about 3 o'clock, M. Fauvel was, as usual, seated in his study, with his elbows resting on the table and his face buried in his hands, when his office boy rushed in with a frightened look.

"Monsieur, the former cashier, M. Bertomy, is here with a friend. He says he must see you on business."

The banker started.

"Prosper!" he cried in a voice choked by anger. "How does he dare"—

Then remembering that he ought to control himself before his servant, he waited a few moments and said in a tone of forced calmness:

"Ask them to walk in."

If M. Verduret had counted upon witnessing a strange and affecting sight, he was not disappointed. Nothing could be more terrible than the attitude of these two men as they stood confronting each other. The banker's face was almost purple with suppressed anger, as if about to be struck by apoplexy. Prosper was pale and motionless. They stood glaring at each other. M. Verduret curiously watched them with the indifference and coolness of a philosopher who in the most violent outbursts of human passion merely sees subjects for study. Finally, the silence becoming more and more threatening, he decided to break it by speaking to the banker.

"I suppose, monsieur, you know that my young friend has just been released from prison."

"Yes," replied M. Fauvel, making an effort to control himself—"yes, for want of sufficient proof."

"Precisely, monsieur, and this want of proof, as stated in the decision of 'not proved,' ruins his prospects and compels him to leave here at once for America."

At this information M. Fauvel's features relaxed as if relieved.

"Ah, he is going away," he said.

There was no mistaking the resentful, almost insulting intonation of the words "going away."

"'t appears to me," continued M. Verduret, "that Prosper's determination is a wise one. I merely wished him before leaving Paris to come and pay his respects to his former chief."

The banker smiled bitterly.

"M. Bertomy," he replied, "might have spared us both this painful meeting. I have nothing to say to him, and of course he can have nothing to say to me."

This was a formal dismissal, and M. Verduret, understanding it thus, bowed to M. Fauvel, accompanied by Prosper, who had not spoken a word.

When they reached the street, Prosper recovered the use of his tongue.

"I hope you are satisfied, monsieur," he said in a gloomy tone. "You exacted this painful step, and I could only acquiesce. Have I gained anything by adding this humiliation to the others?"

"I have," replied M. Verduret. "I could find no way of gaining access to M. Fauvel save through you, and now I have found out what I wanted to know. I am convinced that M. Fauvel had nothing to do with the robbery."

"Oh, monsieur," objected Prosper, "innocence can be feigned."

"Certainly, but not to this extent. And this is not all. I wished to find out if M. Fauvel would be accessible to certain suspicions. Now I can say 'Yes.'"

Prosper and his companion had stopped to talk more at their ease near the corner of Lafitte street, in the middle of a large space which had lately been cleared by pulling down an old house. M. Verduret seemed to be anxious and was constantly looking around as if he expected some one. He soon uttered an exclamation of satisfaction. At the other end of the vacant space he saw Cavaillon, who was running bareheaded and so excited that he did not even stop to shake hands with Prosper, but said to M. Verduret:

"They have gone, monsieur."

"How long since?"

"About a quarter of an hour ago."

"The deuce they did! Then we have not a minute to lose."

He handed Cavaillon the note he had written some hours before at Prosper's house.

"Here, send him this and then return at once to your desk. You might be missed. It was very imprudent in you to come out without your hat."

Little Cavaillon ran off as quickly as he had come. Prosper was stupefied.

"What!" said he. "You know Cavaillon?"

"So it seems," answered M. Verduret, with a smile. "But we have no time to talk. Make haste."

M. Verduret suddenly stopped before a door bearing the number 81. He led the way up the steps and stopped on the second floor before a door over which was a large sign—"Dressmaker." A handsome bellrope hung on the wall, but M. Verduret did not touch it. He tapped with the ends of his fingers in a peculiar way, and the door instantly opened as if some one had been watching for his signal on the other side—a woman of about forty. She quietly ushered M. Verduret and Prosper into a neat dining room with several doors opening into it.

"Well?" he said by a look.

She bowed affirmatively.

"Yes."

"In there?" asked M. Verduret in a low tone, pointing to one of the doors.

"No," said the woman in the same tone; "over there in the little parlor."

M. Verduret opened the door pointed out and pushed Prosper into the little parlor, whispering as he did so:

"Go in and keep steady."

But this injunction was useless. The instant he cast his eyes around the room into which he had been pushed without any warning Prosper exclaimed:

"Madeleine!"

It was indeed M. Fauvel's niece, looking more beautiful that ever. Standing in the middle of the room near a table covered with silks and satins, she was arranging a skirt of red velvet embroidered in gold—the dress she was to wear as maid of honor to Catherine de' Medici. At sight of Prosper the blood rushed to her face, and her beautiful eyes half closed, as if she were about to faint. She supported herself by the table to keep from falling. Her weakness lasted but a moment, and the soft expression of her eyes changed to one of haughty resentment. In an offended tone she said:

"What has induced you to be watching my movements? Who gave you permission to follow me, to enter this house?"

Prosper would have given worlds to explain what had just happened, but he was powerless and could only remain silent.

"You promised me upon your honor," continued Madeleine, "that you would never again seek my presence. Is this the way you keep your word?"

"I did promise, but"—

He stopped.

"Oh, speak!"

"So many things have happened since that terrible day that I think I am excusable in forgetting for one hour an oath torn from me in a moment of blind weakness. It is to chance—at least to another will than my own—that I am indebted for the happiness of once more finding myself near you. Alas, the instant I saw you my heart bounded with joy. I did not think—no, I could not think—that you would prove more pitiless than strangers have been; that you would cast me off when I am so miserable and heartbroken."

Had not Prosper been so agitated he could have read in the eyes of Madeleine—those beautiful eyes which had so long been the arbiters of his destiny—the signs of a great inward struggle.

It was, however, in a firm voice that she replied:

"You know me well enough, Prosper, to be sure that no blow can strike you without reaching me at the same time. You suffer, I suffer with you."

"You drove me away," said Prosper, "and to obey you I told every one that I had left you voluntarily. You told me that an invincible obstacle had arisen between us, and I believed you, fool that I was! The obstacle was your own heart."

As white and motionless as a statue, Madeleine stood with bowed head before the storm of passionate reproach.

"I told you to forget me."

"Forget!" exclaimed Prosper excitedly. "Forget! How can I forget? Is it in my power to stop by an effort of will the circulation of my blood? Ah, you have never loved! To forget, as to stop the beatings of the heart, there is but one means—death!"

"Good heavens, this suffering is beyond endurance! Prosper, if you only knew"—

"I know but one thing, Madeleine, and that is that you no longer love me and that I love you!"

He was silent. He hoped for an answer. None came. But suddenly the silence was broken by a repressed sob. It was Madeleine's maid, who, seated in a corner, was weeping.

Prosper had been so moved at finding Madeleine that he had not noticed her. He turned in surprise and looked at the weeping woman. He was not mistaken—this neatly dressed waiting maid was Nina Gipsy.

Slowly and almost unconsciously Madeleine had put on her wraps, which were lying on the sofa. When she was ready, she approached Prosper.

"Why did you come here?" she said. "We both have need of all the courage we can command. You are unhappy, Prosper. I am more unhappy. You have a right to complain. I have not the right to shed a tear. While my heart is slowly breaking I must wear a smiling face. You can seek consolation in the bosom of a friend. I can have no confidant but God."

Prosper tried to make a reply, but his pale lips refused to articulate. He was stifling.

"I wish to tell you," continued Madeleine, "that I have forgotten nothing. But, oh, let not this knowledge give you any hope. There is no hope for us. But if you love me you will live. You will not add to my already heavy burden of sorrow the agony of mourning your death. The day may come when I can justify myself in your eyes. And now adieu, adieu!"

She kissed his forehead and rushed from the room, followed by Nina Gipsy.

Prosper was alone. He seemed to be awaking from a troubled dream. He tried to think over what had just happened and asked himself if he were losing his mind. When M. Verduret entered the little parlor, he strode toward him and in a harsh, threatening voice said to him:

"Who are you?"

The fat man did not show any surprise at this burst of anger, but quietly answered:

"A friend of your father. Did you not know it?"

"This is no answer, monsieur. I have surrendered my will to a stranger, and now"—

"Do you want my biography—what I have been, what I am and what I may be? What difference does it make to you? I told you that I would save you. It is essential that I save you."

"Madeleine has ceased to love me, and of what importance is anything else?"

His heartbroken tone aroused M. Verduret's sympathy, and he said in a kind, soothing voice:

"Then you suspect nothing? You did not fathom the meaning of what she said?"

"You were listening!" cried Prosper fiercely.

"I was. It was a presumptuous thing to do, perhaps, but the end justified the means. I am glad I did listen, because it has enabled me to say to you: Take courage, Prosper. Mlle. Madeleine loves you; she has never ceased to love you."

"She loves me, she is free, and yet she shuns me."

"She is not free. In breaking off her engagement with you she was governed by some powerful, irrepressible motive. She is sacrificing herself—for whom? We shall soon know, and the secret of her self sacrifice will discover to us the secret of the plot of which you are the victim."

As M. Verduret spoke Prosper felt all his resolutions of revolt slowly melting away and their place taken by confidence and hope.

"If what you say were true!" he mournfully said.

"Why do you persist in obstinately shutting your eyes to the proof I place before you? Can you not see that Mlle. Madeleine knows who the thief is?"

"Impossible!"

"She does, but no human power can tear the secret from her. She sacrifices you. But, then, she almost has the right, since she first sacrificed herself."

Prosper was convinced, and it nearly broke his heart to leave this little parlor where he had seen Madeleine.

"Alas," he said, pressing M. Verduret's hand, "you must think me a fool! But you don't know how I suffer."

For a moment Prosper was silent, then he said:

"I have finally decided. My honor is a sacred trust for which I must account to my family. I am ready to follow you to the end of the world. Dispose of me as you judge proper."

That same day Prosper, faithful to his promise, sold his furniture and wrote a letter to his friends announcing his intended departure for San Francisco. In the evening he and M. Verduret installed themselves in the Archangel.

The World's Future Population.

It is now claimed by some statisticians that the world will be overpeopled at the end of the year 2072, when the population at the present rate of increase will be 5,994,000,000 people.

Butler Wanted the Brief.

While E. C. Carrigan was in General B. F. Butler's law office a lady came in to ask some advice. As the general was not in, Mr. Carrigan questioned her and told her he would submit her case to the general, which he did.

The general was to leave the next day for Washington and told Mr. Carrigan to prepare a brief of the lady's case and show it to him the next day.

Mr. Carrigan sat up half of the night writing his brief. The next morning, about fifteen minutes before Butler was to take his carriage for the train, he told Mr. Carrigan he would look at his brief and give his opinion.

Mr. Carrigan began by saying: "General, I have made a most careful study of this case. I have the points all in my head and can state them to you in three minutes."

"Let me have the brief," again said the general, somewhat sharply.

"But, General Butler," said Mr. Carrigan, "I had a brief prepared and intended to show it to you, but I have left it at home on my table. However, as I said, I have all the points of the case in my head."

"Young man," said the general, "the next time you have a brief to prepare for me bring me the brief and leave your head at home on the table."—Boston Herald.

The Great Lake Cities.

Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit and Milwaukee, with Duluth and Superior thrown in at the head of the greatest lake and many thriving ports on Lake Erie added, are a unique section of the urban life of America. Their rate of growth is the highest maintained in any group of cities. Their death rate is phenomenally low. Their proportion of home owners is extraordinary. Their totals and gains in savings bank deposits are almost unparalleled. They are handsome cities as a group, full of enterprise and activity, fairly eloquent with the spirit of prosperity and progress.—Cleveland Leader.

Horses In Argentina.

Traveling on the Argentine pampas is interesting if not entirely comfortable. Men there are scarce, but horses are plentiful. Often sixty horses are driven in the same team. The driver is perched thirty feet from the ground. The wagons are sometimes fifty feet long and fifteen wide, while the back wheels are fourteen feet or so high.

Apples and the Throat.

By ordering his patients to eat heartily of certain fruits and forbidding them to touch others at all, Dr. Nadal, one of Paris' most famous scientists, is treating the throats of the great opera singers. There is no medicine at all in his treatment. In some cases he adds nothing to the patient's diet and secures results by forbidding them to eat apples and pears. According to Dr. Nadal an apple or pear each day is enough to keep the sensitive throat out of order all the time. A singer of course notices the first symptom of throat disorder in the form of congestion of the vocal cords. These, instead of being white and thin, like a tendon, become red and swollen with congestion of blood. The high notes become difficult and the quality of the voice is impaired.

As the Oil Rubs in, the Pain Rubs Out.—Applied to the seat of a pain in any part of the body the skin absorbs the soothing liniment under brisk friction and the patient obtains instant relief. The results of the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil have surprised many who are unacquainted with its qualities, and once known it will not be rejected. Try it.

Clock Inscriptions.

In former times it was the custom of clockmakers to inscribe on the dial plates of their clocks quaint verses, one of the most common being the following:

I serve thee here with all my might
To tell the hours by day, by night.
Therefore example take by me
To serve thy God as I serve thee.

Another favorite inscription was "Tempus Fugit," or "Time Flies," and thereby hangs a tale. A well known English clockmaker who flourished toward the close of the last century, on being asked by a customer whether a certain clock was of home manufacture, replied: "Oh, certainly. Don't you see the name, sir—Tummas Fugit? I often have his clocks through my hands."

Letters like this must bring hope and comfort to all mothers who have feeble or sickly children. Baby's Own Tablets will cure all the minor ailments and can be given just as safely to a new born baby as to a well grown child. NERVOUS SYSTEM BROKE DOWN SHE WAS WEAK AND DISCOURAGED

NOW LOOKS AND FEELS WELL AND WOULD HARDLY BE TAKEN FOR THE SAME PERSON —THANKS TO

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. John Armstrong, Heather Brae, Alta., was in very poor health for over four years after the birth of her first child. She was what might be caled a nervous wreck, weak, downhearted and discouraged. Writing for her, Mrs. D. D. Burger, her aunt, of the same place, states:—

"Mrs. Armstrong had great weakness, heart trouble and indigestion. In fact she was run down in every way and seemed to lose hope of ever getting well again. She was scarcely able to drag herself about.

"The persistent use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has proven of marvellous benefit to her. She feels real well now, is looking fine and fleshing up, so that one would hardly know her for the same person. You may use her name in recommendation of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for we are all very grateful for what it has done for her, and never lose an opoprtunity of saying a good word for it."

Professional men, as well as laymen, have been puzzled over the mysteries of the nervous system, but this much is certain: that nerve force is created from pure, rich blood, and, with the exception of accidental injuries, diseases of the nerves arise from a thin, watery condition of the blood.

On this principle, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food was prepared, for this great food cure actually forms a certain amount of pure, rich blood every day. Not only is this treatment scientifically correct, but the enormous success which it has attained has proven it to be unequalled as a cure for all diseases resulting from thin, watery blood.

When you cannot sleep well, suffer from nervous headaches and indigestion, brain fag, irritability, trembling or twitching of the nerves, and feel downhearted or discouraged, turn to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as the most certain means of restoring vitality to the nervous system, and of avoiding nervous prostration, paralysis or some dreadful form of helplessness.

PERCENTAGE MILK.

Every Cow Puts Into Her Milk a Definite Per Cent of Butter Fat.

It might be supposed that the richer the milk the greater its advantage as a food for babies and children, especially as it can be so easily reduced. But those who understand the chemistry of milk know that its degree of digestibility depends upon the size of the fat corpuscles it contains—the smaller the size the more digestible. The milk of the Guernsey and Jersey breeds of cows is unsuitable, even when modified for infant feeding, because it contains fat corpuscles of large size and greater indigestibility than that of other breeds. And even of the milk of the other breeds that which is adapted to one child may not be to another, and in cases of illness the family physician is called upon to prepare for each of his infant patients a separate formula dependent upon the percentage of butter fat in the milk to be used as a basis.

Special Classes of Milk.

These facts, together with the difficulty of obtaining proper milk for babies, induced the proprietor of a farm near Boston to undertake to provide several classes of "percentage milk," a special 6 per cent milk for the use of thin invalids, convalescents and for the "milk cure," a 5 per cent milk for general use (in the family, etc.), a 4½ per cent milk for children after their second summer, a 4 per cent and also a fat free milk for babies. It is possible to guarantee a positive and practically unvarying percentage of fat in each or any of these classes by the selection and grouping of cows according to the quality of their milk as ascertained by the Babcock test.

This enterprise, according to a writer who makes the foregoing statements in Farm, Field and Fireside, is the first and only one known to the writer to take advantage of the fact that every cow puts into her milk a definite per cent of butter fat, a per cent peculiar to herself, which varies but slightly except for a short time at the beginning and ending of each lactation, and that no known methods of feeding can more than temporarily influence this fat content.

Official Tests In Indiana.

The dairy department of Purdue experiment station has established a system of official tests for the dairy herds of its state. The plan is to send out representatives from the station to conduct these tests for any breeders who desire them. Benefits which have been derived in other states where this plan has been tried amply justify the effort. The first official test has been completed. T. H. Jackson of South Bend, Ind., submitted six of his well known Holsteins to a seven days' milk and butter fat test. One of his cows, aged two years and four months, gave a seven day yield of 316.8 pounds of milk. Another made a record of 408 pounds. Applications have been made from several breeders of Jerseys, but these tests have not been completed. Mr. Hunziker, head of the dairy department, says pedigrees are much like titles. Unless they are backed up by the performance of the individuals holding them as well as by the performance of their ancestors they are of little value. Official tests are made for the purpose of determining and recording the performance of each individual.

Feeding Value of Skim Milk.

A correspondent of the Dairy Record has carried on extensive experimental work for a number of years from which he concludes that skim milk has a value of 20.4 cents a hundred pounds—that is to say, when hogs are bought and sold at the same price and corn is worth 25 cents a bushel and oilmeal is worth $1.50 per hundredweight skim milk is worth 20.4 cents per hundredweight. The feeds were fed in the following proportions: One part of oilmeal, six parts of shelled corn of fairly good quality and twenty parts of warm skim milk.

Dairy Talk of Today

Never mix cold cream and warm cream together. After the cream is cooled to the temperature of well water, say 50 degrees, then the two can be mixed. Emptying warm cream into cold cream nearly always develops bad flavors. If the cream is kept cool until delivered at the station or to the cream hauler it ought to reach the factory in splendid condition.

Put the cow that is to calve during these hot days in the stable and give her hay. Keep her out of the hot sun.

A good, clean, thick bedding in the stable is good for the cows and good for the milkers.

You enjoy a variety of food. So does the cow. It can be produced by sowing mixed pasture grass.

By a long list of experiments it has been proved that it costs $3.50 to make a calf gain a hundred pounds the first year, $7.10 the second and $11 the third.

A writer in Kimball's Dairy Farmer says: "At no time in the memory of the writer has there been such necessity for the adoption of the silo, and the memory of the writer dates back to the time when the silo was first placed on dairy farms in the United States. He has continually used them on his own farms to store feed in not only for dairy cattle, but for hogs and horses as well, and in no case has he ever found lack of profit in the feeding. He is the first man in the country to have fed silage to hogs with data as to results and the first man to have advocated silage to the general farmer. Today there are many such farmers to give favorable testimony to the value of silage both in the pen and feed lot."

Superstitions of Fishermen.

English herring fishermen are, many of them, remarkably superstitious. For instance, on some fishing boats whistling is forbidden, and neither milk nor burned bread is allowed on board. Furthermore, not even the name of that unlucky animal, the hare, may be mentioned, and a common method of punishing an enemy is to throw a dead hare into his boat. Some of the fishermen believe in luck attending an odd numbered crew, but the good fortune may be neutralized should one of the number have red hair.—London Standard.

THE WINDOW CURTAIN.

Originally It Was For Use and Not For Ornament.

The real purpose of the window curtain is to regulate the amount of light admitted to the room and a curtain so arranged that it cannot be drawn backward and forward at will is but a meaningless accessory. It was not until the beginning of the century that curtains were used without regard to their practical purpose.

The window hangings of the middle ages and of the renaissance simply were straight pieces of cloth or tapestry hung across the window without any attempt at drapery and regarded not as part of the decorating of the room, but as a necessary protection against drafts.

It probably is for this reason that in old prints and pictures representing the rooms of wealthy people curtains are so seldom seen. The better the house the less need there was for curtains. In the engravings of Abraham Bosse, which so faithfully represent the interior decoration of every class of French house during the reign of Louis XIII., it will be noticed that in the richest apartments there are no window curtains. In all the finest rooms of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the inside shutters and embrasures of the windows were decorated with a care which proves that they were not meant to be concealed by curtains. In fact, it would be more difficult to cite a room of any importance in which the windows were not so treated than to enumerate examples of what really was a universal custom until the beginning of the nineteenth century.

It is known, of course, that curtains were used in former times—prints, pictures and inventories alike prove the fact—but the care expended in the decorative treatment of windows makes it plain that the curtain, like the portiere, was regarded as a necessary evil rather than as part of the general scheme of decoration. The meagerness and simplicity of the curtain in old pictures prove that they were used merely as window shades or sun blinds.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Consols by the Pennyworth.

It may not be generally known that a pennyworth of British consols can be purchased. Consols are not like shares, which are invariably of a certain denomination—£1, £5, £10, and so on—but can be divided up to any extent. It consequently happens that very small amounts of this lordly stock are bought to make up round sums, but no one can be registered at the Bank of England as a holder unless he has acquired enough to bring him in fourpence a year in dividends, and less than £1 will purchase a sufficient amount for that purpose.—London Saturday Review.

Feeding Poultry Through the Molt.

When my birds began to molt last August, I at once adopted careful feeding and management. In the morning the fowls had a mixture of two quarts chopped corn, two of oats, one each wheat, barley and rye. This was fed in the scratching shed, where the birds worked for it until evening, when they received a mash of two quarts each corn meal, ground oats and wheat middlings and a pint each of cottonseed meal and beef scrap. These were mixed dry and then dampened just enough to make it stick together. Ground bone, oyster shell, grit and charcoal were constantly before the birds.

These mixtures were fed for three weeks, during which the birds did not stop laying and got through molting quicker and better than I have ever known them to do before. During the succeeding months they kept up laying and were in excellent condition. This was due to reasonable feeding and proper care.—American Agriculturist.

Better Work With Separators.

While the merits of the farm separator are quite generally understood, dairymen in many instances fail to properly appreciate that it is invariably applicable to their own individual conditions and that to every one separating cream from milk it offers a means of better and more satisfactory results.

The advantages of the farm separator over the gravity system are too numerous to give a full or extended enumeration, but those of most importance are more perfect separation, greater value of skim milk, saving of time and labor, saving of ice and a better quality of butter.—American Cultivator.

The Ears of Insects.

Simply because a bee has no ears on the sides of its head it is no sign whatever that it is wholly without some sort of an auditory nerve. This is proved by the fact that grasshoppers, crickets, locusts and flies all have their ears situated in queer places—under the wings, on the middle of the body and even on the sides of their legs. The common house fly does its hearing by means of some little rows of corpuscles which are situated on the knobbed threads which occupy the place which are taken up by the hind wings of other species of insects. The garden slug or shelless snail has its organs of hearing situated on each side of its neck, and the common grasshopper has them on each of its broad, flat thighs. In some of the smaller insects they are at the bases of the wings and in others on the bottom of the feet.

COULD SCARCELY WALK.

A Rheumatic Sufferer Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Rheumatism is rooted in the blood—that is a medical fact every poor rheumatic sufferer should know. Liniments and outward applications cannot possibly cure rheumatism. They are a waste of money, and while the sufferer is using them the disease is steadily growing worse—is slowly but surely taking a firmer grasp upon the entire system. Rheumatism must be treated through the blood. That is the only way in which the poisonous acid can be driven out. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood and thus cure rheumatism. Every dose of these pills helps to make new rich red blood which sweeps the poisonous acid from the system, loosens the aching joints and muscles and gives the rheumatic new health free from pain. Among those who can bear witness to the truth of these statements is Miss Dorsina Langlois, of St. Jerome, Que., for weary months she suffered from rheumatism and had begun to think she was incurable. "I could not straighten up" says Miss Langlois, "My limbs were almost useless, so stiff were they. For many months I endured such pains as only rheumatic sufferers can understand. Although only thirty years of age the suffering I endured actually made me look like an old woman. I used liniments and tried several medicines but got not the slightest help until almost by chance my attention was directed to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began taking them and in the course of a few weeks I could see they were helping me. Little by little the pain began to go, and the stiffness to leave my joints. I continued taking the pills for several months when every symptom of the trouble had disappeared. I have not felt a twinge of rheumatism since, and I bless the day Dr. Williams' Pink Pills came to my notice."

Dr. Williams Pink Pills never fail to cure rheumatism because they go right to the root of the trouble in the blood. That is why these pills cure all the common ailments due to poor and watery blood, such as anaemia, headaches and backaches, indigestion, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, general weakness, and the distressing irregularities that afflict women and growing girls. If you need a medicine you will save money by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at once. See that the full name Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People is printed on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

Its Only Use.

First Small Boy—I wish I had that 5 cents back I spent for candy. Second Small Boy—What would you do with it? First Small Boy—Buy more candy.

Baldness.

Dot—Father, why do men get bald sooner than women? Father—Because they don't wear their hair so long.

A Cause of Righteous Wrath.

Perhaps the most striking instance of what unnecessary ringing at the doorbell can produce in the way of exasperation is to be seen in the wording of a notice on a brass plate in a street leading out of a well known west end square. It is on the door of the corner house, and this is how it runs: "This house is No. 64A —— street, and not No. 13 —— square. That house is round the corner. Do not ring here." One can dimly imagine the state of nervous tiredness to which that householder was reduced before he sat down to compose that notice.—London Chronicle.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

She—Oh, where am I?

He—The strain was too great and you fainted.

She—It must have been the high altitude. Did—did you kiss me while I was unconscious?

He—Well, I'll admit that I did take one.

She—One! Why, I counted seven before I came to!—Woman's Home Companion.

Overstepped the Line.

At Willesden, a woman who obtained a summons for assault against a man, said that last week her daughter's young man struck her and she said nothing, but when he sent his brother round to strike her, well, it was too much. (Laughter.)

THE FIRST RADIUM.

Its Production Almost Made Paupers of Curie and His Wife.

When Professor Curie was run over and killed on a street of Paris not long ago the entire world recognized that it had lost one of its foremost experimenters. Yet it was only six years ago that the wonderful element, radium, which he and his wife discovered, passed almost unnoticed among the exhibits in a Paris exhibition, and a famous chemist, the physicist, found the lucky help of a stranger, se[illegible] him only throu[illegible] in Paris, says street gamin. [illegible] of the

In the 1900 exhibition [illegible] London Truth, the compiler [illegible] catalogue and the jurors entirely [illegible] looked the tiny vial containing its speck of radium, which the Curies had sent. An exhibitor of diamonds, annoyed because its presence spoiled the color of his jewels, had put it out of sight. An English visitor, however, who had read a reference to the discovery in an obscure journal, hunted it up and later set out to find the discoverers.

He went to many places, the Mines School, the Sorbonne and elsewhere, but no one in any of them could tell him anything of the Curies. At last, by a strange chance, he ran across a gamin who had heard of radium from a chum who worked as an attendant at the City of Paris industrial laboratory, where Curie then worked. By this roundabout information the Englishman was brought to Professor Curie, who was a little amazed, but pleasantly so, to find that some one was at last interested in what they were doing.

Mme. Curie, he said, had herself pounded in a mortar with her own hands all the pitchblende from which the speck of radium had been obtained. Pitchblende was costly, and she had not wasted a grain. She had ruined her hands in the work.

They were then spending every penny for pitchblende. Mme. Curie had given up gloves entirely and was wearing very old and badly patched cheap shoes and old fashioned clothes. The professor had on old shoes and a threadbare coat—his only coat. Their little girl was dressed as cheaply. But by their economy and their diligence they had enriched humanity incalculably by their discoveries in radio activity and their isolation of radium itself.

IN PORTO RICO.

No One Who Is Anybody Will Stoop to Manual Labor.

Porto Rico has its problems, social, political and economic, but none of them will prove more difficult of solution than that of labor. What needs to be done is to make labor honorable where it has been held in disrepute. This is to overcome ingrained prejudices, a task for a Hercules. Mr. Bowles' recent book, "Down In Porto Rico," pictures the condition of labor as it is in the island today.

To carry a package on the street is indicative either of poverty or lack of breeding.

A family must be very poor if they cannot afford several servants. To do any kind of housework cannot be considered by the lady of the house. She sits in the parlor dressed in loose garments and spends much of the day in idly rocking to and fro in a rocking chair. When she goes out shopping, either she is accompanied by a servant who carries her small purchases or she hires a boy to carry them for her. If she is so poor that she must do some kind of work, the fact must be carefully concealed from her neighbors.

Among the men there is the same contempt for manual labor. The merchants must of necessity be busy men, but they are very careful not to degrade themselves by doing any kind of common labor. They object to performing work that can be done by an employee. Business men do not carry bundles home at night. They seldom lend a hand when some little mishap occurs or when repairs are needed. They are gentlemen, and menial tasks are for common workmen.

The same spirit is shown among the mechanics. When a plumber is sent for he usually comes attended by his man. His business is to tell the man what to do, while he himself stands by and watches him. The farmer does not go out to work upon his farm. He mounts a horse and rides round, telling his laborers what work must be done.

Ask a common laborer to carry your hand luggage to the boat or to the station and very likely he will come at the appointed hour with a colored boy, whom he orders to take up the load and carry it, while he himself receives the money and walks by the side of the boy.

How the World Pays.

Knicker—I think the world owes every man a living. Bocker—Perhaps, but he has to take it out in trade.

Uncle Prosdocimo, looking at his two little nephews playing at taking a fort, promised 2 cents to the victor. (Five minutes after the fort was taken.)

"Well, one of you is a clever captain. How was the fort taken?"

"Oh," said one, "I promised Gigi a cent if he would surrender."—Il Mondo Umoristico.

M. Duraplat—Why have you taken only one return ticket instead of two? Mme. D.—For economy's sake, my [illegible] Jules. You see, you are so ill. [illegible] take a return for you would be foolish.—Le Pele Mele.

Would Be Tenant—Yes, this little flat is not bad, but 3,000 francs is dear. Haven't you anything under that? Janitor—There is the cellar.—Rire.

Mistress—How could you be so stupid as to stand things on a freshly painted table?

Servant—Please, ma'am, master just put something there.

Mistress (in great wrath)—If the master is a fool, then at least he has the right to be, but you haven't, you silly girl.—Wiener Salon Witzblatt.

Dangerous.

"Would you like to see my aquaria?" asked the naturalist.

"Well, if he's securely chained I might, but I'm so afraid of wild beasts," replied the visitor.

Great Combination.

Suitor—I cannot boast of wealth, but I have brains. The members of my literary club will tell you that you'd have the smartest debater in town for a son-in-law. Father—And I can assure you, my dear fellow, that you'd have the greatest lecturer in the town for a mother-in-law.

TROUT LAKE CITY

THERE have been fortunes made by judicious investment in Real Estate, and more fortunes will be made than ever the next two or three years. The one who reaps the harvest is the original investor, for he has his money on a certainty.

Now let us point out to you that there is no better spot on the Continent to buy Real Estate than TROUT LAKE.

Trout Lake is the prettiest spot in the Kootenays; as a pleasure resort it has no equal. Boating and fishing may be indulged in the year round; while big game in abundance is to be found on the hills. Its climate is superb, there being no great extremes, it being mild in winter and cool in summer. It can boast of some of the finest hotels and residences in British Columbia. Its streets are well laid out and graded. There are two excellent general stores, and a glance at the advertisements in this journal will show that all trades are fairly well represented. Write with confidence to Agents.

IT has never had a "boom"—its growth has been steady. It is the head of navigation, and the terminal of the Lardo branch of the C.P.R. All roads (in the Lardeau) lead to Trout Lake. It is the commercial centre of the richest mineral district on the continent, and has banking facilities provided by the Imperial Bank of Canada; first class school accommodation under the direction of S. Shannon, B.A.; a good water system; government offices; County Court sittings; Methodist Episcopal and Anglican churches and cottage hospital.

There are valuable ranch lands on the outskirts awaiting settlers. Its lumber resources are magnificent, and a band saw mill with a capacity of 60,000 ft. per day is at the head of the lake. The mines tributary are proving out bigger producers every year, with new prospects opening up rich bodies of ore.

There will be a big rush this year, so if you would know more, write at once to either of the agents at the addresses below.
