The boy, Bradley Nickerson, had never ridden in a stagecoach before, and after ten or fifteen minutes of jolt and roll he decided that he never wanted to ride in one again.

Suddenly Captain Titcomb, who had been silent so far, spoke.

"Heavy sea on tonight," he observed. "'Pears to me Barney'd better take a reef. She's rollin' consider'ble."

The boy laughed and said, "Yes, sir."

"Goin' all the way to Orham?" asked the captain.

"Yes, sir."

"Got folks over there, I presume likely. Friends or nothin' but jest relations?"

"Relations, I—I guess."

"So! Well, I've got a good many relations over there myself. Fact is, I've got relations, seems to me, 'most everywheres. Father used to have so many of 'em that when he went visitin' he used to call it 'goin' cousinin'.' My name's Titcomb. What do they call you when your back ain't turned?"

The boy laughed again in a puzzled way—he scarcely knew what to make of his questioner—and said that his name was Bradley Nickerson.

"Nickerson, hey? That settles it; you're a Cape Codder. Minute I meet anybody named Nickerson I always know they've got the same kind of sand in their boots that I have. Is it Obed Nickerson's folks you're goin' to see?"

"No, sir. I'm goin' to live with Miss Priscilla Allen. Her and her sister. They was some of mother's people."

"Sho, well I swan!" muttered the captain. "Prissy and Tempy, hey? Then Dan wa'n't foolin'. And you're goin' to live with 'em?"

"Yes, sir. Do you know 'em?"

"Who—me? Oh, yes! I know 'em. I'm a partic'lar friend of theirs—that is," he added cautiously, "I call on 'em once in awhile jest to say 'How are you?' Why? You didn't hear any of them fellers at the depot say anything 'bout me and them did you? No! Well, all right, I jest thought— Oh, yes! I know 'em. Nice folks as ever was, but what you might call a little mite 'sot in their ways.' Do you always wipe your feet when you come into the house?"

"Why—why—yes, sir, if I don't forget it."

"All right. It's a good habit to git into, 'specially if you're goin' to walk on Prissy's floors. Sometimes I've wished I could manage to put my feet in my pocket when I've been there. I wonder if I knew your father? What was his name?"

Bradley told his father's name and in response to the captain's tactful questioning a good deal more besides. In fact, before long Captain Titcomb knew all about the boy, where he came from, how he happened to come and all the rest. And Bradley for his part learned that his companion commanded the coasting schooner Thomas Doane, that he had been a sailor ever since he was fourteen, that he had a marvelous fund of sea yarns and knew how to spin them and that he (Bradley) liked him.

By and by the captain noticed that the boy's replies to his cheerful observations were growing rather incoherent, and, suspecting the reason, he ceased to talk. A few minutes later he leaned forward and smiled to find his fellow traveler, who had slipped down upon the cushion, fast asleep.

When Bradley awoke Captain Titcomb was standing on the ground by the open door of the coach.

"Good night, Brad," he said. "Here's where I'm bound for. You've got a five minute ride or so more 'fore you git to the old mai—that is, to Prissy and Tempy's. I'll see you tomorrer. You and me's goin' to be chums, you know."

The door was shut. Mr. Small struck up "Camptown Races," and the stage bumped on again. This time the boy did not sleep, but, holding on to the strap, tried to peer through the snow crusted window. He saw a light here and there, but little else. After a short interval the coach turned a sharp corner, rolled on for perhaps twice its length and then stopped.

Mr. Small opened the door, and Bradley, looking past him, saw the side of a large house and a lighted doorway, with two female figures, one plump and the other slender, standing in it. From behind them the lamplight streamed warm and bright and sent their shadows almost to his feet.

"Come on, bub," said the stage driver. "Here's where you git out. Miss Prissy," he shouted, "here's your boarder."

CHAPTER II.

THE plump woman, whom Mr. Small had addressed as "Miss Prissy," was counting into the stage driver's palm a sum in small change from a portentous black wallet that fastened with a strap.

"Good night," said the driver, pocketing the money, with a grunt and a jingle. Like the boy, he had been very careful not to step off the mat. "Good night, Miss Tempy. Snow's lettin' up a little mite. Guess 'twill be clear by mornin'. Good night, Brad."

The plump lady closed the door behind him just in time to shut out the opening notes of the "Sweet By and By." Then she dropped the hook into the staple, wound the leather strap carefully about the wallet, placed the latter in a compartment of a tall chest of drawers in the corner, turned the key upon it and put the key under the alabaster candlestick on the mantel. Then she turned to the boy, who, holding his carpet bag with both hands, still stood uneasily on the mat, while the slim lady fidgeted in front of him.

"Bradley," said the plump lady—she was dressed in some sort of black material that rustled and wore a lace collar, jet earrings and a breastpin with a braided lock of hair in the center of it—"Bradley, we're real glad to see you. I'm Miss Priscilla; this is my sister, Miss Temperance."

"Yes, Bradley," coincided "Miss Tempy," "we're real glad to see you." She was the younger of the two and was gowned in what the boy learned later was her "brown poplin." Her hair was not worn plain, like her sister's, but had a little bunch of curls over each ear. She also wore a hair breastpin, but her earrings were gold.

Bradley shook the extended hands, Miss Prissy's red and dimpled and Miss Tempy's thin and white, with two old fashioned rings on the fingers.

"Won't you—won't you set down?" ventered Miss Tempy after a rather awkward pause.

"Why, yes, of course," said Miss Prissy, "and take your things right off—do."

Bradley placed the carpetbag on the corner of the mat and pulled off the shabby overcoat. The jacket and trousers beneath were also shabby, but it was at his shoes that Miss Prissy glanced, and, oddly enough, their condition served to break the formality.

"My goodness me!" she ejaculated. "Jest look at his poor feet, Tempy Allen! Come right over to the stove this minute and take off those shoes. They're soppin' wet through."

"No, ma'am," protested the boy. "They ain't, honest. They only look so."

"Don't tell me!" commanded Miss Prissy. "Go right over to the stove this minute."

Bradley reluctantly obeyed, stepping gingerly across the spotless oilcloth and taking as long strides as possible. It did not add to his comfort to see Miss Tempy shake the melting snow into the center of the rope mat, fold the latter carefully together and disappear with it into the kitchen.

Miss Prissy piloted him to the chintz covered rocker by the big "airtight" stove. Then she proceeded to unlace the patched brogans, commenting in an undertone upon the condition of the stockings beneath.

"I'm 'fraid," said Bradley fearfully, "that I've got some snow water on your floor, ma'am."

"Don't say a word. Thank goodness your feet ain't so wet as I thought they was. Put 'em right on the rail of the stove there while I go up to the garret and get those slippers of father's. I'll be right back."

She hurried out of the room just as her sister entered it by the other door.

"Now, set right still," said Miss Tempy, bustling about, with the steaming teakettle in her hand. "I'm goin' to make you some pepper tea. There's nothin' in the world like pepper tea when you're likely to catch cold."

"Pepper tea" was a new prescription for the boy, and he watched with interest while Miss Tempy turned some milk into a bowl, flooded it with boiling water, added a spoonful of sugar and vigorously shook the pepper box over the mess.

"There!" she said, "Now, drink that, every drop. Ain't you hungry?"

Bradley, with tears in his eyes, the result of the first swallow of pepper tea, gaspingly protested that he wasn't hungry, not very. The sight and smell of the loaded supper table were so tempting that the denial was rather half hearted.

"Not very! When did you have anything to eat last?"

"Mr. Bartlett—he's the s'lectman at Wellmouth—gave me a sandwich at the depot 'fore I started, ma'am, and I bought a turnover at Harniss."

"My sakes! Prissy"—to her sister, who came rustling in—"he hasn't et a thing but a sandwich and a turnover since morning. Now, come right over to the table, Bradley, and set down."

As the boy ate he looked about the room. It was a big room, with a low ceiling, spotlessly whitewashed. The oilcloth on the floor was partially covered with braided rag mats with carpet centers. On the window shades were wonderful tinted pictures of castles and mountains. The table was black walnut, and there were five rush seated chairs, each in its place against the wall and looking as if it were glued there. The sixth of the set he occupied. Then there was the chintz covered rocker and another rocker painted black, with a worn picture of a ship at sea on the back. There was another ship over the face of the tall wooden clock in the corner. This craft was evidently the Flying Dutchman, for every time the clock ticked it rolled heavily behind a fence of tin waves, but didn't advance an inch. On the walls were several works of art, including a spatter work motto, a wreath made of seashells under a glass and an engraving showing a boat filled with men, women and children rowed by a solemn individual in his shirt sleeves, moving over a placid sheet of water toward an unseen port.

"Cap'n Titcomb," remarked Bradley, whose bashfulness was wearing off, "came over in the coach with me tonight."

The effect of this announcement was remarkable. Miss Prissy looked at Bradley shook the extended hands.

Miss Tempy, and the latter returned the look. Strange to say, both colored.

"Cap'n Titcomb?" faltered Miss Prissy. "Cap'n Ezra Titcomb?"

"Yes, ma'am. He talked to me 'most all the way. I liked him first rate."

"Why—why, I do declare! I didn't know the cap'n was expected, did you, Tempy?"

"No, I'm sure I didn't!" exclaimed the flustered younger sister. "Did he—did he tell you why he was comin', Bradley?"

"No, ma'am, but I heard him tell the man that drove the coach that he had shore leave for a week 'cause his schooner was laid up for repairs. He said he knew you, though, and that he was comin' round to see me tomorrer."

Average Wages In Canada.

The Census and Statistics Bureau has issued a blue book as to wage-earners in Canada by occupation according to returns of the last decennial census. The average yearly earnings at regular work of all classes of occupations is $387.16 for males and $181.98 for females. Trade and transportation pays an average wage of $503.62 for every male employe. Professional men, including clergy, Government employes, musicians, teachers, engineers, etc, earn $676.88 per year on the average. Average earnings of males employed in manufacturing $403.14; in agriculture, $297.55 in domestic and personal service, $272.46. Of the whole number of wage-earners, 814,930, the males constitute 81.75 per cent., and the females 18.83 per cent.; and, comparing the totals of all wage-earners of both sexes by classes with the totals of all classes, it is found that the agricultural class gives employment to 8.93 per cent., the domestic and personal class to 25.61 per cent., the fisheries class to 0.91, the forestry and lumbering class to 2.02 per cent., the manufacturing class to 33.83 per cent., the mining class to 2.93 per cent., the professional class to 6.34 per cent., and the trade and transportation class to 19.37 per cent.

English Jurors' Remuneration.

The scale of remuneration of English common jurymen is absurd. In a civil case in England a common juryman is allowed 5 shillings ($1.25) a day for "a view"—that is, for inspecting any property or thing in dispute—but otherwise he is, in law, not entitled to any remuneration. It is usual, however, in the high court to give him a fee of 1 shilling and in the counties 8 pence. Special jurymen receive much higher remuneration. The fee in the county court is 1 shilling a case, in the mayor's court 2 pence and in the London sheriff's court 4 pence.—Chambers' Journal

ROYALTY FOND OF OYSTERS.

Some Delicacies Favored by the Prince of Wales.

The chef to the household of the Prince of Wales, M. Cedard, has been chatting to a London journalist upon the dishes most favored by the royal family.

"It is difficult to say which is the favorite dish," he remarked, "but I think oysters would make a very bold bid. These are served to their Royal Highnesses almost daily.

"As a rule, however, both the Prince and Princess prefer plain dishes, with a predilection for the French cuisine, as compared with the English, while the time-table of the day's meals is:

Breakfast at	9.30 a.m.
Lunch at	2.00 p.m.
Tea at	5.00 p.m.
Dinner at	8.30 p.m.

"After a visit to the theatre or the opera," continued M. Cedard, "their Royal Highnesses simply have a light supper. That is all.

"And the little princes? Ah, Prince Edward, Prince Albert, and Princess Victoria lunch with the Prince and Princess of Wales, but the little ones partake of breakfast with their tutors and governesses.

In the evening the little princes and their sister are given no actual supper, no elaborate meal, but they may have a few daintily-cut sandwiches, a little game, or something of that kind."

Then M. Cedard suddenly thought of another delicacy liked both by the King and the Prince of Wales.

"This is caviare," he said. "but, as is the case with the oysters, it has to pass the doctor. He has to satisfy himself that everything is pure before it is allowed to reach the royal table."

DEBTORS GO TO JAIL.

Statistics Say That In England, Imprisonment for Debt Is Increasing.

It will come as a surprise to many people that imprisonment for debt in England is steadily increasing. Figures demonstrating this are given in Part II. of the Civil Judicial Statistics for 1905, just issued. During that year 11,427 debtors were imprisoned in England and Wales, as against 11,096 in the previous year, and the average of 10,218 for the five years including 1905. Twenty years before 1905, the report states, there were only about one-third as many warrants of commitment issued and about one-half as many debtors imprisoned.

There was an increase in 1905 of petitions for divorce — 752 as against 720 in 1904—but the figures were not so large as in 1902 and 1903, when they were 889 and 824 respectively. Of the 752 petitions in 1905, 323 were presented by wives, as against 429 in 1904. Decrees nisi were granted to wives in 261 cases and to husbands in 362 cases.

The total number of appeals, actions, etc., heard and determined in all the civil courts of the country during 1905 was 479,165, against 497,334 in 1904. Of these, however, county courts were responsible for 472,123 and 489,929 respectively. In the section devoted to probate matters it is incidentally mentioned that the total wealth of private persons in the United Kingdom in 1905 liable to death duties was computed at £7,833,300,000. During 1905 the gross value of estates admitted to probate was £261,110,000.

Maori Legends.

Many of the old Maori tales have to do with a mythical monster, called "Taniwha," usually described as a great lizard or crocodile, although it has been many centuries since any of the Polynesian race can have had direct knowledge of the existence of such an animal. This is the legend of the two Taniwhas, the guardian monsters of the two Maori tribes; one on the east coast, and one on the west coast of the North Island of New Zealand in very ancient times. The Taniwha living in the Bay of Islands once went a-roving to see a bit of the world, and swam around the North Cape to the west, where he was hospitably entertained.

The wandering Taniwha professed to be very grateful for the hospitality and kind attention shown to him, and when his visit was ended he pressed the other to accompany him home. The guileless and amiable west coast Taniwha accepted the invitation, and away the two friends swam around the North Cape and down the east coast to the Bay of Islands. The roaming Taniwha was a perfidious villain. He lured his confiding guest to a place where the Maoris had spread a great net, and the visitor was caught, dragged ashore and killed by the people who made a great feast of the carcass.

The Tallest Trees.

Australia rivals California in the matter of possessing the tallest trees in the world. The California "Big Tree"—Sequoia Wellingtonia—sometimes grows to the height of from 300 to 325 feet, with a trunk 25 or more feet in diameter. The tallest American tree is the red wood—Sequoia sempervirens—which in some instances has attained the height of 400 feet or even more. In Australia the tallest trees are found in Victoria. There are, indeed, records of Australian trees approximating 500 feet in height, but these are taken to be exaggerations. It seems well enough established, however, that there are trees in Australia which tower upward of 258 feet into the air. Trees have been found in Africa which fall not much short of 100 feet in height.

COAL PROBLEM IN THE WEST.

People Have Not Learned Necessity of Stocking Up for Winter.

An advance of 15 per cent. in prices is a little detail which is presented for the consideration of the coal consumer in the prairie provinces, and he is thereby enabled to realize one of the benefits of an agreement between operators and men in the coal fields. Quotations are 90 cents to $1.50 per ton higher in Regina, and this increase practically applies to the whole Province of Saskatchewan. All grades of western coal are included. Prices are still below the level at which Pennsylvania coal can compete in these markets, but the difference is slight, and it is possible that more of the American product may be used in future.

During the strenuous days of the last coal shortage the companies and the railways were attacked for their inability to provide a sufficient supply of fuel. It was argued that the public must be served, no matter what the cost might be. In fact, it was proclaimed that the consumer should have the coal, because he was prepared to pay for it, even if the price were $20 per ton. But a revolution in the weather has worked a change in popular sentiment. Now that the summer, or an advance copy of it, has arrived, and balmy breezes are being wafted over the prairies, the disregard for values in the coal market is less apparent. Complaints are heard, in fact, because the public is called upon to pay the increased wages which the miners in the mountains receive. It is considered unfair that the consumer should be forced to settle for the advances which the operators have chosen to give to their men. When the winter comes back these complaints will probably congeal. The scramble for coal will take the place of academic discussions on the economic phases of the subject.

Railway Pays More.

It is interesting to know that the Canadian Pacific Railway is contributing its share of the increased cost of producing coal. It is by far the largest consumer of steam coal in the west, and its requirements seem to keep pace with the output of the mines. It obtains its coal at a great reduction, of course, because it enters into contracts to take delivery of a large quantity from each mine every day. The advances in wages have made it necessary for the railway company to pay 10 per cent. more for its coal, and this means a large additional expenditure. Thousands of tons of coal are consumed by locomotives alone on the divisions west of Winnipeg, and nearly all this fuel comes from the mines which were affected by the recent settlement.

Consumer Should Stock Up.

There are not many indications that the warnings which have been issued with respect to another shortage of fuel during the coming winter are being respected. The people of the west do not often cross a bridge before they come to it, and they do not intend to worry very seriously over the coal outlook until there is some urgent need of concern. It is more than possible that a wail will arise next November about the scarcity of fuel, and Governments and railways will work overtime in the effort to relieve distress. Much of this trouble would be obviated if the individual consumers would show enterprise by stocking up during the summer. It is easy to deliver coal, both from cars and from the wagons, during such weather as this, and the transportation companies and coal trade would welcome an opportunity to supply the needs of the public now. The unwillingness of the public to accept delivery is a disappointing feature of the situation.

No Demand Just Now.

One firm in Regina has several thousand tons of coal in stock, for which it would be glad to receive orders, but there is very little demand. There is no doubt that the money stringency is partly responsible for the dullness in the retail trade, prospective buyers being unwilling to tie up their coal money for several months on the presumption of a shortage. The optimistic spirit of the country inclines to a hope that next winter will not be severe, at least not so severe as the last, and that the coal problem will present fewer difficulties. The activity in the trade will not come before October, unless a great missionary campaign is undertaken by the coal merchants, the railways and other institutions concerned.

Instinct In Plants.

Climbing plants have two opposing methods of describing spiral growth. The plants that turn to the right in the northern hemisphere reverse this trend in the southern hemisphere, and therefore, for the sake of consistency, it may be preferable to describe the two kinds of spiral tendency as respectively "clockwise" and "counter clockwise," which latter can be shortened to "counterwise." The honeysuckle and the hop turn "clockwise," while the convolvulus and the scarlet runner bean twine "counterwise." Experiments made by growing scarlet runner beans in opaque cylinders, to discover whether the deviation of the twist was innate or merely from the direction of the light, disclosed the fact that the plant possesses an inclination resembling the instinct of animals, of proceeding in a given direction, and resents any attempt to force it otherwise.

PUT NEW BLOOD INTO THE ARTERIES

And the Feeling of Weakness and Fatigue Will Give Way to Health and Vigor

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

At this time of year nothing is of such great value to the human system as new, rich blood. Feelings of languor and depression, headaches, sleeplessness, irritability, impaired digestion, nervousness—these all tell of thin, watery blood and a run-down system.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is, above all else, a blood-building restorative which puts new blood into the arteries, and by so doing lays the foundation for health and vigor.

It sharpens up the appetite, strengthens the nerves which control the flow of digestive fluids, forms new, firm flesh and tissues, and gives vigor to the vital organs of the body.

Mr. Fred H. Gould, Purdy, Hastings Co., Ont., writes. "I was troubled with nervous headache, which at times was very painful and caused much suffering. It has been thoroughly cured by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I can recommend this treatment most highly and believe that as a general system builder it has no equal."

Mrs. W. Chappel, Barrie, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a means of building up the nervous system and improving the health generally and have also found it a good remedy for female troubles.

"We have used Dr. Chase's Ointment as a household remedy for all kinds of sores and cuts and think it is a splendid ointment."

You can be sure that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is doing you good because each dose goes to the formation of a certain amount of pure, rich, red blood. It cures by the building-up process, and its cures are therefore thorough and lasting; 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Valuable Conch Shell

There are evidently a number of mysterious properties about the conch shell in its relation to Indian religious rites and ceremonies that require investigation. For instance, a conch with its spirals twisting to the right instead of to the left is supposed to be worth its weight in gold. Some years ago a conch of that description was offered for sale in Calcutta with a reserve price of a lac of rupees placed upon it. It was eventually bought in for £4,000.—Allahabad Pioneer.

It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

An Irishman was displaying a full line of samples of dress materials, and the prospective buyer had handled and rehandled them, discussing their merits and demerits ad nauseam, asking finally, "Are they fashionable?"

Might Have Been Worse

A young woman settlement worker who is well known in Boston's social circles observed that one of her proteges had a "black eye," and, guessing its source, she wished to be sympathetic and said kindly, after speaking of the woman's eye: "Never mind, Mrs. Mc——, everything will be all right. Your troubles might be worse."

"Sure it might be worse," answered the woman, philosophically. 'I might be like yourself, Miss, with no husband at all."—Boston Record.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

Many brief and telling replies are laid to the account of Douglas Jerrold. It will suffice to recall one. "What is going on?" said a bore, stopping Jerrold on the street. "I am," and the speaker suited the action to the word.

Akin to this was the answer of John Wesley to the blustering swaggerer who pushed him on the path, with the insulting remark, "I never make way for a fool."

"I always do," said Wesley, quietly stepping aside, and then placidly pursuing his way.

A similar anecdote is told of Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, who, while walking in St. James park, was accosted by an effusive stranger, who grasped his hand and said:

"Hello, Lord Kitchener. I bet you don't know me!"

The general gazed at him unmoved. "You win," he remarked laconically, and walked on.—Bellman.

WIRE WOUNDS

My mare, a very valuable one, was badly bruised and cut by being caught in a wire fence. Some of the wounds would not heal, although I tried many different medicines. Dr. Bell advised me to use MINARD'S stronger as the sores began to look better, until after three weeks the sores have healed, and best of all, the hair is growing well and is NOT WHITE, as is most always the case in horse wounds.

Workmen's Compensation.

The new Workmen's Compensation Act came into force on Monday, July 1st.

Roughly speaking, every person employed in manual labor, all domestic servants and persons employed otherwise than in manual labor whose remuneration does not exceed $1,250, come within the act. For all accidents to these employers are liable. The compensation for partial or total incapacitation cannot exceed $5 a week. Subject to that limitation, the basis of compensation will be 50 per cent. of the average week earnings. So long as an employe is incapacitated the payment goes on though it may be renewed by the purchase of an annuity equal to 75 per cent. of the annual value of the weekly payment. When death results from an injury the maximum compensation is fixed at $1,500 and the minimum at $750.

Australia's Wine Crop.

The 1907 vintage must rank as one of the finest Australia has ever had. Abundant rains were the chief cause of this fortunate result.

In northeast Victoria the phylloxera is gradually getting a hold and is destroying the vine by slow degrees. They are being reconstructed on resistant stocks, however, and it is hoped that the output will in a few years be greater than ever.

In South Australia an excellent crop is reported from all the widely separated districts. Certain varieties have failed, but others have given a more than usually abundant crop, with the result that the quantity will be about the same as last year, while the quality will be infinitely better.

Health of the Human Race

The methods for the prevention of disease, which have developed wonderfully in the last few years, lead me to believe that the outlook for the elimination of the white plague is very hopeful, writes Dr. Senn in Leslie's Weekly. Those affected will be isolated, and if this is done, prevention may be used until consumption will be a thing of the past. The great work to be done is in medicine, for surgery long ago has reached almost its limit of perfection. Simplification in surgery will develop, but I think no great discovery in that branch of the profession remains to be made. In fact, I think that the greatest triumphs of surgery have been attained, and to make them more accessible will be the work of the future. As the medical profession in late years has discovered the causes of the worst diseases, it will only be a question of time when preventives will be generally used. The outlook, then, is that the human race will be better physically than it has ever been.

A man went to a boxing instructor and asked him how much he would charge him for twenty-five lessons. The instructor told him his terms, and the lessons commenced. After two lessons the pupil, who was somewhat the worse for wear, remarked to the professor, "You see, I wanted to take enough lessons so that I could learn enough about the manly art to lick a man. I've changed my mind now. I guess I'll send the fellow down to take the rest of the lessons."

Just the Thing That's Wanted—A pill that acts upon the stomach and yet is so compounded that certain ingredients of it preserve their power to act upon the intestinal canals, so as to clear them of excreta, the retention of which cannot but be harmful, was long looked for by the medical profession. It was found in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are the result of much expert study, and are scientifically prepared as a laxative and an alterative in one.

"Yes," said the girl who makes collections. "It is one of the best autographs I have in my collection."

"But are you sure it is genuine?"

PERSISTENT WITCH HUNT.

Woman Undergoes Ordeal to Refute Accusations of Killing.

A remarkable tale of native superstition and credulity was told at the Magistrate's Court recently, when eight Mashona natives from the Mirewas district underwent preliminary examination for committing certain offences under the Witchcraft Suppression Ordinance, says The Rhodesia Herald. The eight natives were all relatives, and the father of some of them died recently. Not being quite satisfied that death was due to natural causes, appeal was made to a certain native named Chibanda, who the prosecutor stated was a well-known witch doctor, though this fact was not elicited in evidence. The outcome of the incantations was that two of the sons, Mapira and Katiwa visited a neighboring kraal and accused a native woman named Kajiwa of having bewitched their father and caused his death.

They demanded of the husband of this lady that she should undergo an ordeal to test the truth of the allegations. The husband asked for three days' grace, saying he wanted his wife's uncle to be present at the trial. When this space had elapsed Chitandaria, the husband, accompanied by his wife and her uncle, a native named Denti, set out for the kraal at which the ordeal was to take place. On arrival the party were directed to a small spruit below the kraal, where the eight natives sat in conclave.

Chibanda was master of ceremonies, and sat cooking some liquid in a pot When the medicine was cooked the lady was told to take a draught. It was explained that two draughts of this medicine would act either as an emetic or a burgative should the woman be a witch. Two draughts were administered, but left the lady undisturbed.

Chibanda thereupon again piled the medicine, evidently determined that the oracle should work, and after the unfortunate female had taken 21 doses nature rebelled and the medicine acted in its dual capacity. On this five of the natives sprang up with assegais and kerries, crying: "There is the witch who killed our father. Let us kill her." But the husband and uncle came to the rescue. After some discussion the bereaved sons agreed to be compensated, and as a first instalment the uncle handed over a kaffir hoe, telling them if they killed his niece he would inform on them. The lady and her relatives then went back to their respective kraals. Three days afterward the two natives, Mapira and Katiwa, revisited the lady's husband and demanded the witch to be handed over to them to be killed. This he refused to do, and later the woman escaped to the native commissioner.

Lively In the Tenements.

A young woman new to mission work on the east side, New York, was lately moved to comment sadly upon the monotonous and cheerless existence of the inhabitants of the tenements.

"I suppose there is little brightness and recreation in your lives," said she to an eleven-year-old girl.

"Oh, I don't know about that," answered the girl. "It ain't so dull as you might think. Dere's always somethin' doin' to keep us from gittin' blue. It's lively sometimes, all right. For instance, las' night the people on our floor was a-cuttin' up high. Dere was a gentleman next to us what had de tremens, an' de lady right across the hall from us was jagged so she nearly bit her sister's ear off."

Hurt His Feelings.

"I told you that poor young widow," began Mrs. Nuritch, "that you'd give her boy work if"—

"Well, I won't," interrupted Nuritch. "She sent him today with a note that said. 'I must find employment for my son, even if he works for a mere pittance.' The nerve of her callin me 'a mere pittance.'"

A Use For Poetry.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "It is a great conversational convenience. It enables people to quote instead of being stupidly original."

Toronto—According to an announcement made this morning by George C. Gibbons, K. C., of London, Ont., chairman of the Canadian section of the International Waterways Commission, negotiations are in progress between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with the Imperial Government a party to them, looking to the arrangement of a treaty between the Dominion and the Republic for the settlement of all international waterway questions.

Austin, Texas—The International Harvester Company of Wisconsin pleaded guilty yesterday to a violation of the Texas anti-trust law, and paid a fine of $35,000. The company also agreed that an injunction be entered forbidding it to operate in Texas.

September 8.

Dublin, Ireland—That the Government is apprehensive with regard to the coming winter in Ireland and is doubtful regarding the loyalty of the Constabulary since the Belfast agitation, is revealed in the present strenuous efforts to recruit the forces. The number of the Constabulary has been steadily decreasing for the past four years. The authorities have set aside a part of the Dublin military barracks as additional quarters for the men, and to all officers throughout the country there has been sent a circular instructing them to hasten to secure suitable candidates.

September 9.

Paris—The Echo de Paris' Madrid correspondent says it is rumored in military circles that France has proposed to Spain to send a Franco-Spanish army of fifty thousand men to occupy the Moroccan ports and go as far as Fez, if necessary. The correspondent says it is stated that Premier Maru and General Martitgui, chief of the headquarters staff, are opposed to this plan, but that the Minister of War, General Primo Rivera, supports it.

The Eclaire's Madrid correspondent says that Great Britain's influence contributed to a modification of Spain's attitude towards Morocco, Great Britain persuading her to co-operate effectively with French action and to conform to her rights and obligations as recognized by the treaty of Algeciras.

The correspondent of the Matin at Madrid says it is believed Spain will decide to send 5,000 infantry and 500 cavalry to occupy Tangier, Tetuan, Rarache and establish a police force.

Munich, Bavaria —The International Peace Congress began today in the presence of 250 delegates from all the nations of the world, and will last until Sept. 14.

Number of cases, 21; number of deaths, 10. These are inclusive of the cases in Berkeley, which proved fatal. Attention is called to the fact that thus far the death percentage is very low, less than one-half. The standard death rate for the plague is about 80 per cent.

Sept. 11.

Toronto, Ont.—Condemnation of existing conditions in Ontario Canning Factories forms an important feature of the report of Dr. C. A. Hodgetts, of the Provincial Board of Health. At some of the Canneries the employees are housed on the premises; it is claimed the bedding was far from clean, and in fact, many stables were in a more cleanly condition.

There will be no change this year and Thanksgiving Day will take on Thursday the same as has always been the custom in Canada, as well as in the United States and Great Britain.

"A Hundred-point Man."

The other day I wrote to a banker-friend inquiring as to the responsibility of a certain person. The answer came back, thus: "He is a Hundred-Point man in everything and anything he undertakes." I read the telegram and then pinned it up over my desk where I could see it. That night it sort of stuck in my memory. I dreamed of it.

A Hundred-point man is one who is true to every trust; who keeps his word; who is loyal to the firm that employs him; who does not listen for insults nor look for slights; who carries a civil tongue in his head; who is polite to strangers, without being "fresh"; who is considerate towards servants; who is moderate in his eating and drinking; who is willing to learn; who is cautious and yet courageous.

Hundred-point men may vary much in ability, but this is always true—they are safe men to deal with, whether drivers of drays, motormen, clerks, cashiers, engineers or presidents of railroads.

He is more interested in doing his work than what people will say about it. He acts his thought and thinks little of the act.

The Hundred-point man looks after just one individual, and that is the man under his own hat; he is one who does not spend money until he earns it; who pays his way; who knows that nothing is ever given for nothing; who keeps his digits off other people's property. When he does not know what to say, why, he says nothing, and when he does not know what to do, does not do it. We should mark on moral qualities not merely mental attainment or proficiency, because in the race of life only moral qualities count We should rate on judgment, application and intent. Men by habit and nature who are untrue to a trust, are dangerous just in proportion as they are clever. I would like to see a university devoted to turning out safe men instead of merely clever ones.

Everyone knows that for anything to become known, it must be talked about. For an article to become popular its virtue must be made the subject of a public announcement. That is advertising! Consequently if the survival of the fittest applies to business principles as well as it does to other walks of life, the better the advertising—the better the publicity—the better the results. Good results mean good business, and good business is what every merchant advertises for. Local Items.

The Advent Christian Church of Mt. Pleasant have secured the services of the Rev. Chas. P. Kittredge of Manchester, N. H., as their permanent pastor, and will commence his work in Vancouver Sept. 22d. Elder Kittredge comes with excellent recommendations from former charges. After graduating from the University of Maine in 1893, he took a post-graduate course at the Colby College, Wattsville, Maine, in 1895; afterwards taking two years in the Newton Theological Seminary at Newton Centre, Mass. He has just closed a very successful period of 18 months for the Advent Christian Church, Manchester, N. H., and severs his connection with them only after an earnest appeal from the Vancouver church, and the description of the city and province, he felt the opportunity for gospel work greater here than in New Hampshire. Elder Kittredge is an earnest and eloquent speaker. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend the Advent Christian Church on Seventh avenue.

The Anti-Asiatic Demonstration.

The anti-Asiatic parade on Saturday last was a huge success, several thousand men being in line. As the parade passed along men standing on the sidewalks stepped out and fell in line, and by the time the parade arrived at the City Hall it numbered between five and six thousand. There were a number of banners inscribed with various mottos: "Stand for a White Canada," "Steamer Monteagle will arrive Sept. 11 with 900 Hindus, 1,100 Chinamen and a bunch of Japs," and winding up with "What shall we do to be saved?" There was an effigy of Lieut.-Gov. Dunsmuir which was burned in front of the City Hall. The hall was packed and a large crowd was addressed in front of the hall. A third crowd marched up and down Westminster avenue to the music of a fife and drum band until someone shouted out "All in line boys for Chinatown," which was enthusiastically responded to. On arrival in Chinatown a wholesale smashing of plate-glass windows took place, then a march to the Japanese quarters took place and more windows were smashed. The police made many arrests Saturday and Sunday nights, and by Wednesday quiet was restored. On Tuesday the Orientals bought all the revolvers, knives and ammunition they could, until the authorities notified the hardware men to stop selling to them. After the events of Saturday it seems strange the hardware merchants would sell weapons to the Orientals. It is to the credit of Mount Pleasant hardware men that they refused to sell weapons or ammunition to the Orientals. On Tuesday all the Chinese employed as domestics, cooks and in all lines refused to go to work, through fear or a desire to show hom much the community depended upon their labor. A couple of Japs were injured by flying stones and one white man was stabbed by a Jap and two injured by being attacked with glass bottles.

While the destruction of property resulting from the rioting on Saturday night, the 7th, is to be regretted, yet it shows the pent-up animosity of the whites towards the Orientals. It should have the effect of waking up the Federal authorities to the necessity of prohibiting the importation of any more Asiatics. The increasing number of Orientals coming to this country partakes little of the qualities of an immigration for the development of the country's resources. It is a wholesale importation, an invasion to be looked upon with grave solicitude. Wherever there is a white man or woman at work for wages, whether in domestic service, the factory of farm, there is an opening for an Oriental. No matter how low the wages may be, the Oriental can afford to work for still lower wages. This servile labor must be prohibited if we are to have a "White Canada."

EVICTION IN IRELAND

FAMILIES OUSTED FROM COTTAGES OF FOREFATHERS.

Large Display of Armed Police—Tenants Offer Stubborn Resistance—Hurl Stones and Sticks at Their Enemies — Tussle on the Rocks—Camera Fiend Has Lively Time—Women Lead the Fray.

Evictions on the Leahy estate, at Kilmacowan and Gowlane, near Castletown, Berehaven, recently took place, when about a dozen holdings were visited.

A stubborn resistance was offered, notwithstanding the grotesquely large armed police force, to the number of close on 400 men.

This excessive army of constabulary, brought together at very considerable cost, for the purpose of ejecting about two dozen families of starving peasants, has been severely commented upon, and instead of being instrumental in the preservation of peace, had the effect of driving the very poorest of Irish peasantry to desperation.

Women Lose Their Heads.

At sight of the hated invaders the women of the village lost their heads completely. With shrill cries in Irish and English, they rushed down on their laggard menfolk and told them what they thought of them for hanging back from the fight.

At last the men made a rush on the police. But pelting rain and the sight of men with rifles are poor helps to valor. The rush was a half-hearted affair. They came splashing through the muddy street, but stopped irresolute when within a short distance of the police.

At this the women were terribly put out, and rushed on the policemen themselves, courageous as suffragettes, shouting, "English dogs," "English cowards." They were promptly arrested, whereupon they shrieked as they were in the arms of the policemen, "Dirty English cowards, would you hit a woman!" The policemen took it very well, used the women with as little roughness as possible, and released them later.

Photographers Victims.

Then occurred the most exciting incident. A party of villagers, about two dozen altogether, had climbed to the top of some rocks overhanging the houses where the evictions were taking place. From here they commenced to hurl down good-sized stones and heavy sticks. A party of police stormed the rocks and had quite an eventful time before they managed to reach the top. Here they fell upon the wild Irishmen, and, after a business-like tussle on top of the rocks, in view of the whole excited village, managed to arrest the men.

There were a few comic interludes. The army of police was followed by a rear-guard of amateur photographers, anxious to get snapshots. They were fair game to the infuriated villagers. What they could not do to the police they did to the cameras, and every amateur who tried to get a picture when the trouble was hottest had his instrument promptly taken from him and danced upon. Fragments of plates and cameras strewed the muddy road.

Explorer Enters Parliament.

The young Earl of Ronaldshay has been returned unopposed to the House of Commons for the borough of Hornsey. He stood in the Unionist interest, and the Liberals did not put forward a candidate.

Besides being a politician of no mean ability, he is also a sportsman and traveler of renown. He has explored the Himalayas thoroughly, and is quite at home in that majestic region of the eternal snows. On the fingers of one hand could be counted those Englishmen who know more about Persia than he does. He has, in fact, "a practical working knowledge" of all the northwest, north and northeast borders of India, extending from Persia to Thibet.

The results of his travels in these alluring lands are to be found in two books, "Sport and Politics Under an Eastern Sky" and "On the Outskirts of Empire in Asia." Lord Ronaldshay was for some time on Lord Curzon's staff in India, and somehow or other one cannot help seeing in him a future viceroy.

Noble "Black Sheep."

It is only fair to say that "black sheep" in the English House of Lords are not more numerous than in other walks of life. Some of the blackest of the flock are those whose crimes never reach the newspapers.

About two years ago one of the scandals that afflict all highly organized and wealthy societies became public in consequence of procedures before a criminal court. In the course of this trial correspondence was impounded in which the names of no less than six peers were implicated. Blackmail to the extent of $200,000 was paid by one of them to the accused to prevent the mention of his name. As for the other five peers, the decision of a committee, composed of a law officer of the Crown, a representative of the King, and a Cabinet Minister, was that it was better that no prosecution should take place, as the public scandal would be so great as to counterbalance the advantages of bringing to justice a group of corrupted debauchees.—Arnold White, in Everybody's.

Britain's Debt to France.

One of the chief debts to France is that she nourishes our ideas, transforms them, makes them her own, just as she transplanted and transmuted the flower of the renaissance in an earlier day. With all our national vanity we never dispute the parentage. It is only territory and diplomatic prestige and commerce about which we quarrel with our "sweet enemy."

SUMMER AILMENTS

Can Best Be Banished by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People

In summer your blood gets thin and watery. You feel simply wretched—tired, worn out, dull, your nerves are irritable, your whole system is out of gear. There is just one medicine that will give you strength and vim to endure the fag of even the hottest days—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They have helped thousands. Perhaps your neighbors have already told you they have helped them. They're the medicine that makes that pure, rich, red blood that everyone needs for good health—they never fail to do that. Mrs. L. A. Carriere, the popular stewardess of the Jacques Cartier club, Montreal, Que., says: "For two years I was a constant sufferer from general debility. The least work fatigued me and sometimes I could not work at all. I could not raise my hand above my head without feeling pains in all my muscles. I was very weak and sometimes became so dizzy that I would fall unless I could lean against something for support. While in this condition I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I did so and by the time I had taken ten boxes I was in perfect health, and am now able to look after all my duties without the least fatigue. When I began taking the Pills I was a great sufferer—today I feel as if I never was ill—thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills strike right at the root of anaemia, debility, rheumatism, indigestion, the secret ills of women and growing girls, etc., when they make new blood—they do just that one thing, but they do it well—good blood always brings good health. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Man Eating Canal.

Perhaps the greatest waste of human life ever recorded was caused by the cutting of a canal in China. The work was begun in 1825, and, though the canal was twenty-three miles long, eighty feet wide and twelve feet deep and passed through forests and marshes, it was finished in six weeks from its beginning. No fewer than 20,000 men worked at it day and night, and 7,000 died of fatigue.

THE LONDON "BUS."

Favorite Vehicle of British Metropolis Severely Criticized.

Did you ever see a fat man losing ground as he runs to catch a train? Probably. If so you have seen the nearest human equivalent to the speed of a London omnibus. The London omnibus—or "bus," as it is commonly termed—is not a thing to be considered lightly. There is something so solemn and awe-inspiring in its steady lack of speed that words fail the passenger who fain would hurry; and anyway his thoughts could have no legitimate expression under existing laws.

The fat man losing ground while running to catch a train is liable to an attack of heart failure. So is the London 'bus passenger who feels that a train must be caught, or that a destination must be reached within any given time.

After one has seen a London 'bus he realizes the mechanical ideal that has inspired designers of challengers for the America's Cup. The 'bus is built on solid, substantial, British lines, resisting obstructions to the last degree—air, water and mud.

For centuries the world has known and respected the resisting qualities of the British troops. When they have met their foes, have they wavered or faltered in fighting every inch of the ground? Never! Something "has got to bust" when Britons go into action—sometimes the Britons themselves, but the balance of victories is on their side.

The London 'bus is British from its rain swept top seats to the place where the springs ought to be, and when it meets a sea of mud, think you it fears to give battle? Not while it hangs together! Onward plunges the gallant 'bus through torrents of garment wrecking substance; bouncing, bumping, lurching, shaking, palpitating, heaving, rocking from end to end and side to side—an invaluable training for an ocean voyage—and at the end of a few hours reaches a point somewhat nearer its destination than it was before starting—unrecognizable but triumphant.

Agassiz, pre-eminent as a naturalist, after seeing a single detached bone, could reason out the whole structure of the animal of which that bone had been a part. What Agassiz was to animal life all Londoners are to vehicles. They see a fearsome mountain of mud approaching. The foreigner thinks it an evidence of a landslide, but even the small Londoner knows it to be a 'bus, and the expert adult can tell by the texture of the mud what route it has passed over.

If that brilliant but misguided map maker Napoleon Bonaparte had had a loyal fleet of London 'buses when he tried to cross the English Channel Admiral Nelson's name would have appeared only in the appendix to naval history. It so happened, however, that Nelson had in his service several boatloads of men well qualified to drive 'buses, and their resolute methods of driving through obstacles won Trafalgar and made famous the saying, "England expects every man to do his duty."

Although the all conquering spirit of the London 'bus has imbued British armies for hundreds of years the symbol itself has not been used in warfare. However, the War Office and the Admiralty may yet advocate the use of squadrons and batteries of 'buses to dislodge future enemies from exceptionally strong positions. Waterloos and Balaklavas could be won easily with 'buses to do the charging. What would a few thousands of mere men avail before vehicles that had bidden bold defiance to London streets?

Port Arthur would hoist the white flag when it heard the 'buses coming. Gibraltar, if in other hands than English, would take to its heels.—New York Herald.

The Lottery In Austria.

"In Austria-Hungary," writes a Vienna correspondent to a paper in Hamburg, "playing in the various lotteries is so general that the people who do not buy a 'chance' or a fraction of one for every drawing are exceptions. When a man makes his calculations for the year's expenditures a certain amount is charged to the lottery account with the same belief as to the necessity for the investment as though it were rent, coal or church dues. In addition to the individual playing many men and women are members of lottery associations, to which they contribute a certain sum annually, for which they participate with the other members in the various drawings. Sometimes when people of moderate means have gambled for years without seeing any return for their investment they stop. But there are thousands who have not yet made the first step who are recalled to the ranks by items such as this, which appeared last week in a Vienna paper: 'The first prize in the Hungarian class lottery, valued at 600,000 marks, was won by a lottery association in Warsaw. The association has twenty-four members, all poor.'"

There are 200 species of roses in existence, though perhaps not more than fifty clearly defined families. Of these families only two are of American birth. There are thousands of varieties, however, and of these our enterprising rose growers have contributed by far the largest proportion. The eagerly sought black rose is still unproduced, though a New York florist has a dark red one which in some lights has the appearance of black velvet.

They Cleanse the System Thoroughly—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills clear the stomach and bowels of bilious matter, cause the excretory vessels to throw off impurities from the blood into the bowels and expel the deleterious mass from the body. "It isn't making much progress," replied his friend.

"Progress! I should say not," said the impatient man "It would be a fierce job to take a moving picture of this train."—Denver Post.

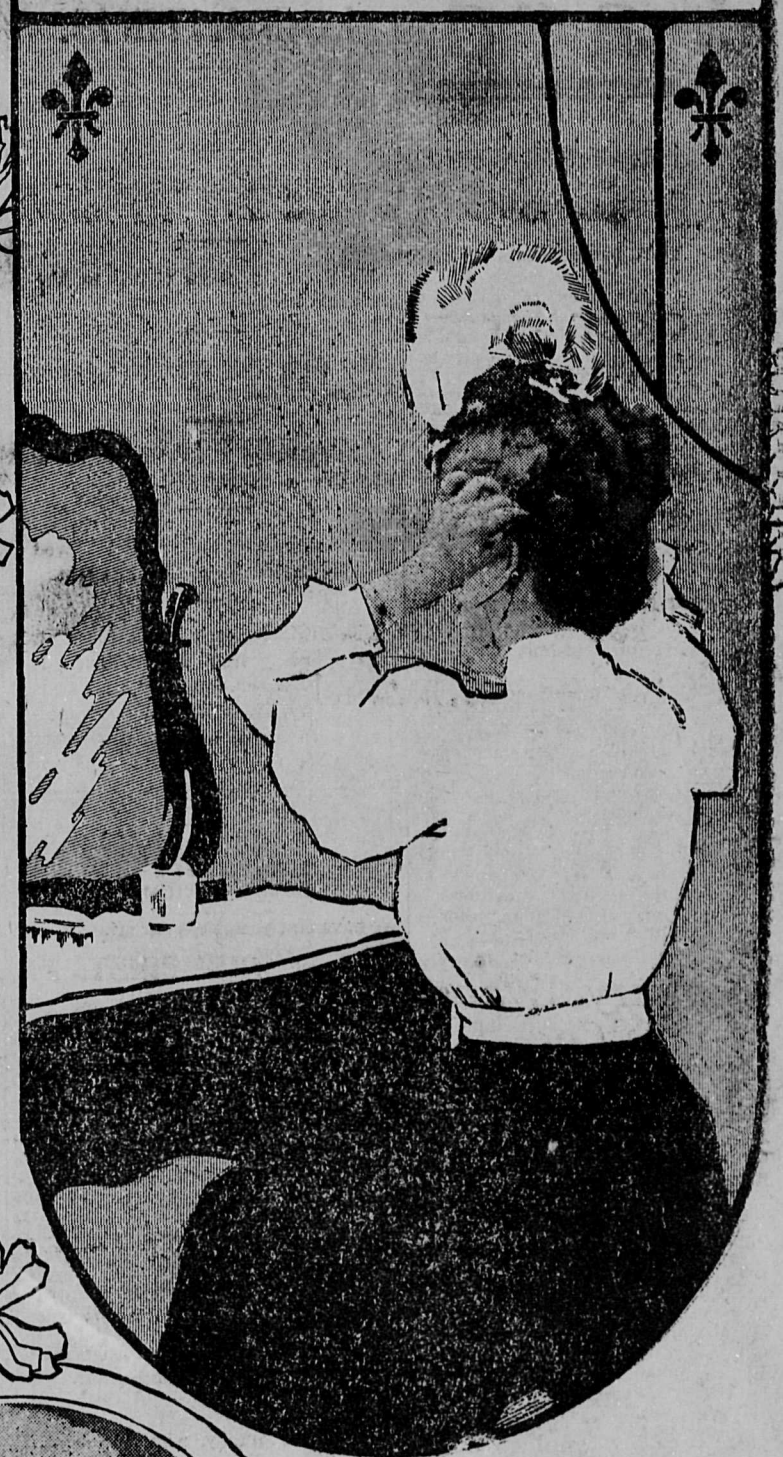
FINGER PUFFS AND THEIR ARRANGEMENT

Rolling the Puffs



Pinning the Puffs in Place

Finger Puffs Fill the Gap

Narrow Hats Bring Out Ugly Lines

WHEN Marie Antoinette became Queen of France, so runs the story, she shocked her courtiers and ignored tradition by calling in a man to dress her hair and invent the coiffure a la Marie Antoinette.

Leonard, the hairdresser, was an artist in his line, and he took the fair tresses of the lovely Austrian, drew them over a trellis of fine wire, introduced a cushion or two, and finally built a tower almost a foot high, which he topped with a nodding ostrich plume.

Now, if we are to believe the prophecies of the fashionable hairdressers of today, the American woman of 1907 bids fair to follow in the footsteps of the fair but unfortunate French Queen.

Coiffures are becoming more and more elaborate. What our French brethren call "postiches" (which, as near as we can come to it, means something false or superadded) are being used in their construction, and if this state of affairs continues, we will be constrained to follow the example of the Japanese lady who indulges in a fresh coiffure once a month and sleeps on a block to prevent the disarrangement of her hirsute edifice.

Little hats are at the root of the matter. A small hat shows all the ugly lines of the head, and there are few women with hair enough (even if it could possibly be twisted into the desired shapes) to fill out all the places that need filling, and so we must needs buy finger puffs.

Must Match Your Hair Exactly

Of course, the finger puffs can be made from combings of your own hair if the combings are in good shape and if you have a skilful manufacturer of hair goods in your own neighborhood. Otherwise it is well to buy your puffs ready made.

Go to a reliable hair dealer and see to it that the puff matches your hair exactly. Single puffs are convenient, as they can be adjusted to suit the individual taste, but one of the best coiffeurs in the country recommends the chignon puff as being the most satisfactory all around. This is made on a little wire frame with four or five puffs, which can be dressed daily.

Women who are blessed with curly hair by nature should never cease to give thanks for it, and since curls are desirable, whether natural or artificial, buy your finger puffs of curly hair.

If your pompadour is prone to fall flat or droop into ugly lines, the finger puffs (more especially the ones made from curly hair) can be ruffled up and pinned under the hair as pompadour plumpers. They are lighter, more comfortable and give a far prettier and more graceful effect than any of the numerous "rats" of wire or hair that have been used for the purpose.

For an indoor coiffure the finger puffs may be pinned almost anywhere that suits the fancy of the wearer. They must be pinned securely, of course, and now there are shown tiny bunches of curls—five or less in a bunch—which are pinned on top of the head to give a finishing touch to an elaborate arrangement.

When the finger puffs are to be used for their primary purpose—the filling out of ugly gaps that are revealed by a narrow hat—pin your hat on first, then take a hand-mirror and study your deficiencies carefully. When you have reached a decision, pin the puffs in place.

Use long wire hairpins, and fasten the puff securely at each side. Also pin your hatpins through the puffs to the hat, for far better to have had no finger puffs at all than to be suddenly bereft of them in the street.

When the last puff is in place, study the effect again by the aid of your mirrors, and if all is satisfactory, adjust your veil, and go forth rejoicing in an up-to-date and becoming coiffure.

A careful woman will take good care of her finger puffs. She will roll them over her fingers, of course, to keep them in shape, and she will brush them to keep them smooth. When her finger puffs are not in use she will not toss them pell-mell into her top drawer to await the next wearing. Instead, she will have a special place to keep them, so that there will be no danger of tumbling or breaking the hair. She may even have a sachet for them, in which they can be wrapped and given just a suggestion of her favorite perfume.

POLLY AT THE PHONE

MARJORY was alone, except for her dollies and playthings. Cook was home, but then the kitchen was so far away from the nursery that she wasn't any company at all.

She heard Polly in the sitting room, squawking to herself: "Polly wants a cracker! Polly wants a cracker!"

"I declare, if I haven't forgotten Polly altogether!" So away Marjory tripped to chat with Polly. The parrot was in a good humor, and soon Marjory had lost that feeling of loneliness and was laughing merrily.

The bell of the telephone rang. Marjory, perching Polly on her shoulder, ran to the phone and took down the receiver. Then a most mischievous idea entered her head. Why not let Polly answer the phone!

"Hello!" said the voice.

Marjory whispered "Hello" to Polly; Polly squawked, "Hello! hello! hello!"

"Who's there?" was the next question.

Marjory murmured low, and the Polly shrieked, "Polly Brown! Polly Brown! Polly Brown!"

"Ah, Mr. Brown's daughter, I presume," answered the voice. "Will you kindly give him a message for me? This is Mr. Green."

Just then Polly caught sight of Fido, who always teased her. "Go 'way, dog! Go 'way, you mean dog!" she screamed.

POLLY MAKING MISCHIEF.

Before Marjory could explain to Mr. Green, that gentleman had angrily hung up his receiver.

Of course, Marjory had to tell father all about it when he came home. He forgave her when he saw how sorry she felt, although he said he feared he had lost his best customer.

SAVING HINTS

As to Sleeves

ARE your sleeves bothering you because they look out of date? If so, just note some of the fashion plates and see what you can do with a little ingenuity. First, if they are of that variety worn comparatively recently, "baggy" at the hand and small at the top, turn them upside down and add a modern cuff or band. They may need a little piecing right at the seams, top and bottom, but, well done, this need never show. If they are merely tight, insertion or vertical bands will remedy the evil. Or, possibly, they may be tucked or gathered in somewhere. If so, let all this out and press well so that the old stitchings will not show, and try cutting a new sleeve. Don't feel distressed if the under side is not quite so straight with the goods as you would like to have it, if it comes out better that way. Make the rest of your sleeve carefully and give it a good touch. No one will notice the under side, and the sooner you yourself forget it the better off you will be.

When Catches Come Out

WHEN catches come out of gloves, it is not necessary to discard the gloves, by any means, for they can be put back again unless they have torn the place from which they have come. Do not be discouraged if, on examining the hole left by the departed catch, it seems twice as large as the catch itself. This is probably merely because it is stretched and will not make any difference in the replacing. With a fine needle and cotton, not silk, overcast the hole in small stitches, not going very deep into the glove. A very shallow overcasting will hold without pulling out.

Draw the hole up slowly and carefully around the button in the groove meant for it. If the work is done otherwise than slowly and carefully, the thread may break or the material may pucker. But if done as prescribed, even a large hole will gradually fill in and fall into place. After the thread has been drawn up in this way, it should be wrapped around the clasp two or three times to make all secure and the thread finished off on the wrong side. If these directions be exactly followed, no sign will be left that the catch has ever parted company with the glove.

A Troublesome Sum

"Arithmetic," the Sum remarked,
"Is not in Willie's way;
If 5 a chance, most terribly
I'll puzzle him 2-day.

"As he declares that figures are
A nuisance and a bore,
I'll try his 10-der brain, as it
Has ne'er been tried be-4.

"He says he '8's the rule of 3,'
And so it's my design,
To show his teacher that he is
A youngster asi-9."

To do that sum when it was set
Cost Willie toil immense;
He said he'd known no harder 1
In his 6-perience!

Do You Know This Catch?

Tell your friend you can make him say, "No, I haven't!" Then ask him this question:

"I was traveling in Africa one very hot day and came to a shop where they sold refreshments. I called for the most cooling drink they had, and a waiter brought me three glasses, containing sherbet, lime-juice and water, as well as a cup of hot coffee. Now, which of the four do you think I chose?"

Whatever the answer is, you should exclaim quickly, "Oh, you've heard it before," and in almost every case your friend will reply, reassuringly, "No, I haven't!"

A Remedy for Onion Odors

I notice in "Our Corner" frequent allusions to the offensive odor of onions upon hands and articles used in preparing this vegetable. If you will wash your hands in cold water, without soaps, also letting the water run into dishes, etc., used for holding and cutting the onions, the odor will be dissipated.

Even a kettle in which onions have been cooked will not retain the smell after a cold water bath—without soap. There is no necessity for the hands to hold the odor longer than the time required for turning on the cold water faucet.

F. H. W. (Marinette, Wis.).

A useful and a timely hint. Onions are palatable and nutritious when properly cooked (always in two waters). The pervasive and obstinate odor left in the house and upon hands and breath banishes them from many households.

A Word of Praise

I wish to tell the members around the "Council Table" that it would be worth while to try the recipe for canning beans given last year by "G. M. P.," Salem, N. J. I mean string beans. I tried a few cans with perfect success, and I shall try many more this year. They were delicious.

Will some one give me a recipe for a cream dressing without eggs and without cooking? I want it for cabbage salad.

B. B. W. (Wisconsin).

Two recipes for cream dressing without eggs are given in another column.

In the same column appear the directions for packing down eggs for winter use, sent by you in response to the request of "A. S. H.," Middletown, Pa.
