MURDER OF MISSIONARIES BY CHINESE CONFIRMED

CHINESE MISSIONARIES ARE FOULLY MURDERED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Pekin, Nov. 22—The killing of foreigners at Sian Fu has been further confirmed by Chinese students arriving from there. They say that during the fighting a city mob attacked the China Inland Mission outside the city and murdered Mrs. Breckman, an American missionary and five of the Mission children. Mr. Breckman escaped with wounds. The surviving foreigners are being sheltered by the Chinese Christians.

NEW STEAMER "PRINCESS SOPHIA" WILL BE PUT ON THE ISLAND RUN

The new steamer 'Princess Sophia', which the C. P. R. is having built at Bow McLachlan's yards at Paisley, Scotland, for the Queen Charlotte, run was launched last week. She is expected to make her maiden trip in the first week of April. In appearance she much resembles the Princess May. Her length is 245 feet., 44 foot beam, and 1,200 tonnage. She will have oil burners and make 14 knots an hour.

As a passenger vessel the Princess Sophia will be one of the best in the northern trade. She will have 80 staterooms opening on deck and seating arrangements for 108 passengers. There will be accommodation for 150 second class passengers aft on the main deck and special apartments on the orlop deck forward for Orientals.

CAPT. DAN LINDEBURG IS ONE OF THE BEST SEAMEN ON THE COAST

The stranding of the launch Independence at Halibut Bay the other day is an example of the trying conditions under which seafaring work is done on the coast here during the winter.

Dan Lindeberg, the owner of the launch, was one of the very best seamen on the coast. He has been in these parts for fully five years or more. He built the launch at Port Simpson in 1907, and has sailed her a great deal. The boat is 30 feet long and built to sail as well as her gasoline auxiliary drives her.

Before regular steamers were running up to Stewart and Port Simpson Mr. Lindberg did a good deal of work ferrying passengers in his boat. This is the first time he has had a mishap, and the reason for the trouble in this case is said to be the excep- severity of the squall which caught the boat. Navigation of the waters around Prince Rupert is no child's play as launch owners here know.

V.C. HERO HELD AS A SUSPECT

(Special to Daily News.)

San Francisco, Nov. 22—John R. Swan, who won the Victoria Cross in the South African war, and who has received presentations here for life saving, is under arrest. He is thought to be wanted for murder in Bloemfontain. A charge of cruelty in connection with his children led to his arrest, and a search through his papers led to his connection with the fugitive from Bloemfontain.

MAY NOT PRESS CHARGE

Friends of George Alexander's Are Anxious to Give the Young Man a Chance and Are Recovering the Diamond Ring.

George Alexander, the young man who got into trouble yesterday over his handling of a diamond ring valued at some $175 and the property of J. S. Gray, Jeweller, Sixth street, is likely to be released from his position under arrest. A few good friends of his have got together and planned that by the recovery of the missing ring, which can be located easily enough. By its return to Mr. Gray, the trouble for George can be got over. Mr. Gray was not desirous of pressing the charge against the young man.

Victoria, Nov. 22—At the annual banquet of the British Campaigners Association here strong pleas were made to prepare for the defence of British Columbia.

IMMIGRANTS ARE COMING IN FAST

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, Nov. 22—During seven months of 1911 a total of 265,833 immigrants arrived in Canada. 172,260 were from Europe, and 93,973 from the States. In the period of 1910 the total was 227.-805, being 142,529 from Europe and 85,276 from the States.

MORE MINERS FROM GOOSE BAY

Inclement weather and snowfall are retarding development work at Goose Bay mines. The G.T.P. s.s, Prince Albert brought seventy-seven men from there last night. The men complain that they were laid off eleven days ago, but could not get transportation and had to board themselves. This is the main grievance at Goose Bay.

GOVERNMENT WILL NOT GO ON WITH THE NAVY

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, Nov. 22—Following Premier Borden's intimation yesterday that the people of Canada will have the naval question submitted to them, Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine stated in the House today that the tenders offered the late Government to spend over eleven million dollars in six years to construct four cruisers and six destroyers would not be accepted. He said the whole question from first to last will be taken up with the British Admiralty and a plan announced later that will appeal to the interests of Canada and the Empire as well.

CAPT. WALBURN IS AN AUTHORITY ON THE BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST

Captain Walburn who has taken charge of the Dominion Govt. S.S. Quadra, lighthouse and buoy tender for this coast, had command of the Quadra previous to 1902 when he was transferred to the Marine and Fisheries Department. He knows this coast better than most men navigating it, and was the author of the official work published giving the names and origins of the names of every island and point on the coast. This work took some eighteen months or two years to prepare, the Captain being continuously engaged on it at Victoria. It is interesting to note that three of the islands opposite Rivers Inlet are named after members of Captain Walburn's family.

ARE TRYING HARD TO GET WORK STARTED ON WOODWORTH SCHEME

The City Council is working overtime these days trying to get some work started on the Woodworth Lake scheme. Excavations for the pipe line within the city limits are necessary. In a few days Col. Davis expects to be ready to call for tenders on this work. The Acropolis Hill reservoir, which but for absurd interference would have been completed years ago, can be recommenced shortly, and there is the blasting out of the Shawatlans Lake natural rock shelf at its outflow to the passage. This latter work also requires Government sanction, which it is hoped may be obtained swiftly and without hitch. A meeting of the council is called for Thursday.

NO DAMAGE WAS DONE LAST NIGHT

From an early hour yesterday evening the wind and rainstorm increased in violence until exposed residences trembled in the gale. This morning a heavy sea was running on the opposite side of the harbor, but the hills behind the townsite have so effectually sheltered the waterfront that no damage has been done there, though news of wrecks was quite expected.

LONDON SUFFRAGETTES WAGE BATTLE AGAINST 1800 POLICE

They Stoned the Windows of the Liberal Club, the Public Offices, the Post Office and the Bank of England—Worst Riot of Recent Years—223 Arrests Made

(Special to Daily News.)

London, Nov. 22. — The worst riot that London has known for some years took place last night. It was promoted by the suffragettes. It took 1800 policemen to quell the disorder. In consequence, 320 female and 3 male suffragists are now in custody.

The riot started when the demonstrators tried to storm the House of Commons which was in session. Having failed to gain an entrance to the House they turned their attention to smashing the windows of the public offices, the Liberal headquarters, the National Liberal Club, the post office an dthe Bank of England. They were accompanied by a gang of male rowdies, armed as well as the women with large stones. Several of the women were injured. The battle was fierce but short.

THE TRUNK SEWER BY-LAW

In their forthcoming public statement about the trunk sewer scheme the Board of Public Works should make it clear that the resolution moved on Monday night is not binding on any future council. All that is binding is contained in the by-law, which makes the sewer terminate at manhole 28, some 600 feet above the Hay's Creek bridge.

The extension sewer mentioned in the resolution will have to be made the object of special expenditure by a future council.

To make the extension sewer part of the scheme, would mean a new by-law and two or three week's delay, and would take the letting of the contracts for the trunk sewer out of the present council's hands, and place it in the hands of the council who will have the carrying out of the scheme.

THE Pillar of Light

By Louis Tracy

A waiter interrupted their joyous chatter at its highest. He bent over Mr. Traill and discreetly conveyed some communication.

"I am delighted," cried the millionaire heartily. "Show him in at once."

He rose from his chair to do honor to an unexpected guest.

"You will all be pleased to hear," he explained, "that Mr. Brand is ashore, and has come to see us."

Mrs. Vansittart stifled the cry on her lips. The slight color which had crept into her pale cheeks yielded to the deathly hue. It chanced that the others were looking expectantly towards the door and did not notice her.

Brand entered. In acknowledging Mr. Traill's cordial welcome he smilingly explained his presence.

"My superiors sent me emphatic orders to clear out," he said, "so I had no option but to obey. I conveyed Mr. Emmett to suitable quarters and hastened home, but found that the girls were playing truant. My housekeeper insisted that I should eat, else she would not be satisfied that I still lived, but I came here as quickly as possible."

At that instant his glance, traveling from one to another of those present, fell on Mrs. Vansittart.

He stood as one petrified. The kindly words of his host, the outspoken glee of the girls at his appearance, died away in his ears in hollow echoes. His eyes, frowning beneath wrinkled brows, seem to ask if he were not the victim of some unnerving hallucination. They were fixed on Mrs. Vansittart's face with an all-absorbing intensity, and his set lips and clenched hands showed how utterly irresistible was the knowledge that, indeed, he was not deceived—that he was gazing at a living, breathing personality, and not at some phantom product of a surcharged brain.

She, too, yielding before the suddenness of an ordeal she had striven to avoid, betrayed by her laboring bosom that she was under the spell of some excitement of overwhelming power.

She managed to gain her feet. The consciousness that Constance, Enid, Lady Margaret even, were looking at her and at Brand with amazed anxiety, served to strengthen her for a supreme effort.

"Mr. Stephen Brand—and I—are old acquaintances," she gasped. "He may misunderstand — my presence here—to-night. Indeed—in this instance—I am not to blame. I could not—help myself. I am always—trying to explain—but somehow—I never succeed. Oh"

With an agonized sigh she swayed listlessly and would have falen had not Pyne caught her.

But she was desperately determined not to faint—there. This was her world, the world of society. She would not yield in its presence.

Her eyes wandered vaguely, helplessly, from the face of the man towards the others. Constance had hastened to her assistance, and the knewledge that this was so seemed to stimulate her to a higher degree. With fine courage she grasped the back of a chair and summoned a wan smile to her aid.

"You will forgive me—if I leave you," she murmured. "I am so tired—so very tired."

She walked resolutely towards the door. Brand drew aside that she might pass. He looked at her no more. His wondering daughter saw that big drops of perspiration stood on his forehead.

Mr. Traill, no less astonished than the rest offered to conduct Mrs. Vansittart to her room.

"No," she said, "I will go alone. I am used to it now, after so many years."

There was a ring of heartfelt bitterness in her voice which appealed to more than one of the silent listeners.

As the door closed behind her, Brand seemed to recover his senses.

"I must ask your pardon, Mr. Traill," he said, quietly. "I assume that the lady who has just left us did not expect to see me here to-night. It would be idle to deny that the meeting was a shock to both of us. It revived painful memories."

Mr. Traill, scarce knowing what he said, so taken aback was he, exclaimed hastily:

"Mrs. Vansittart claimed you as an old acquaintance. The odd thing is that you, at any rate, did not discover that fact earlier."

The lighthouse-keeper looked round the table. He saw pain in many eyes, but in Pyne's steady gaze there was encouragement.

"Mrs. Vansittart!" he said slowly. "Is that her name? I did not know. How should I, the recluse, hear of her? And in your first message to the rock you called her Etta. When I knew her her name was Nanette, for the lady who calls herself Mrs. Vansittart was my wife, is yet for aught I know to the contrary."

"Father!" Constance clung to him in utmost agitation. "Do you mean that she is my mother?"

"Yes, dear one, she is. But let us go now. I fear my home-coming has brought misery in its train. I am sorry indeed. It was wholly unexpected. Poor Nanette! She ever deceived herself. I suppose she hoped to avoid me, as if fate forgot the tears in the comedy of life."

"Can I not go to her?" asked Constance white-faced and trembling.

"No, my child, you cannot. Has she claimed you? She cast you off once. I might have forgiven her many things—never that. Come, Enid! What need for your tears? We faced worse troubles together three days ago, and you, at any rate, can look forward to happiness. Good-by, Lady Margaret, and you, too, Mr. Traill. I will see you to-morrow, I hope. Forgive me for my unconscious share in this night's suffering."

CHAPTER XVII.

MRS. VANSITTART GOES HOME

Stephen Brand and the two girls passed silently down the broad stairs of the hotel unaccompanied by any of the others. There was nothing incomprehensible in this, nor any savor of discourtesy.

In the first place, Mr. Traill was so profoundly shocked by the lighthouse-keeper's revelation that he collapsed into a chair and remained there, bowed and wordless, for many minutes. Both Pyne and Stanhope did move towards the door, but Enid, watchful, self-sacrificing, eager to save those she loved from further pain, telegraphed an emphatic order to Stanhope to remain where he was, and Pyne murmured to him:

"Guess she's right, anyhow. We'll all feel a heap better in the morning."

The person who exhibited the clearest signs of distress was Lady Margaret. Her position was one of extraordinary difficulty. Three of the actors in the breathless scene which had been sprung on her with the suddenness of an explosion were absolute strangers in her life before that evening.

Brand she knew, indeed, but only by sight. She had met Constance and Enid occasionally, at arm's length, so to speak, regarding them truly as dangerous young persons where marriageable sons were concerned. Enid had justified her suspicions, and her ladyship had yielded so far as to give her approval to an engagement she could not prevent.

Circumstances had conspired to force her hand. Stanhope, being an outspoken young man, had made no secret of his desperate resolve to rescue Enid, so the newspapers supplied the remainder of the romance, and even Lady Margaret herself had contributed to it under the magnetic influence of the hour.

It was one thing, however, to be thrilled with the adventures of the rock-bound people, but quite another to figure prominently in connection with a social scandal of the first magnitude. She knew Penzance too well to hope that the incident would sink into oblivion. Obviously, the matter could not rest in its present stage. She must expect disagreeable disclosures, significant head-shakings of those who knew little and wanted to know more. All the tea-table artillery of a small town would be focused on her defensive position were she loyal to the girl whom her son had chosen as his helpmate.

This same son, too, after he had recovered from the amazement of Mrs. Vansittart's dramatic departure and Brand's admission, betrayed a composure that was distinctly irritating.

"You won't mind if we smoke, mother," he said, "The situation requires tobacco. Don't you feel like that, Pyne?"

"If Lady Margaret doesn't object, I admit that different sorts of poison might act as tonics," answered Pyne. "Here, uncle, try a brandy and soda. Lady Margaret, a glass of champagne. I've been expecting a disturbance, but didn't look for it to-night."

"Why do you say that, Charlie?" asked Mr. Traill, rising and stretching his limbs as a man who tests his bones after a heavy fall.

"It was hanging around, just as one prophesies a storm after an electrical feeling in the air. Mrs. Vansittart recognized Brand, and made her calculations accordingly. Let us give her the credit due to her. As soon as she discovered him, the marriage project was off."

"I had that kind of impression myself. Glad I mentioned it to you, now."

"Of course you are. I'll bet any reasonable sum that Mrs. Vansittart intended to leave Penzance to-morrow as soon as she had made you understand that she could not, under any circumstances, become my aunt."

A ghost of a smile flitted across Mr. Traill's face. His nephew's way of putting things was delightfully unequivocal.

"What we are apt to lose sight of," continued Pyne, "is the manner in which Brand received what must have been a staggering blow. He met his wife to-night after a separation of more than twenty years. And how he took it! When he spoke, it was really in her behalf. The thing is too amazing. Of course, now that the thunder and lightning have started, the sky will clear all the sooner."

"Unhappily, such affairs do not arrange themselves so readily," snapped Lady Margaret. She was becoming more angry with each wave of reflection. "Young men like you do not realize the effect of such—such unpleasant exposures on family life. How will the early history of her parents affect the future of Constance Brand? As for the other girl—"

Her ladyship threw up her hands in helpless abandonment. To her mind, the adoption of poor Enid, the seawaif, assumed a darker appearance now that Brand's matrimonial adventures revealed sinister features.

Jack Stanhope caught her by the shoulder.

"Mother," he cried, "before you say another word let me tell you something you ought to know. Enid is Mr. Traill's daughter!"

Now this good woman loved her son dearly. All her thoughts were of him and for him. Her look of blank incredulity yielded to the confirmation she saw writ on all three faces.

She burst into tears.

"Apparently I am the last person to be taken into anybody's confidence,' she sobbed.

"Madam," said Mr. Traill, bending over her, "in this instance, at least, you have no cause to feel aggrieved. Neither the girl herself, nor her sister by adoption, nor Mrs. Vansittart, to whom, until the past half-hour, I considered myself to be engaged, is aware of the undoubted fact which your son has just told you. Let me say that I, as her father, am proud to think she has won the affections of such a man as Stanhope. There is no reason why you, his mother, should not be equally satisfied with the pedigree and prospects of my daughter."

His calm assumption of a rank equal if not superior to her own was convincing to a woman of her temperament. Assuredly that evening was a memorable one to her ladyship. The repose of Vere de Vere was rudely shocked for once. Nevertheless, the knowledge that her lifelong ambition had been realized in a way little dreamed of by any of those most concerned was in itself consoling. Mr. Traill, quite unconsciously, loomed large in the social eye of Penzance, and the widowed lady had not been so long withdrawn from the wealth-worshiping world of London as to be wholly unleavened with the worship of the golden calf.

So it was with quickened interest that she set herself to listen to the story of Enid's parentage, and, if her fear of local gossip-mongers shrank as her perception of Enid's real social position increased, much may be forgiven to the motherly sentiment that no wife can be too good for an excellent son.

Meanwhile Brand and the sorrow-laden girls, ushered by obsequious servants to the entrance-hall, were constrained to comfort themselves with true British phlegm in view of the interest caused by their appearance.

The hour was not late, about half-past nine. Even whilst the hall porter was summoning a cab the news spread, within and without that the lighthouse-keeper and his daughters, whose exploits filled the minds of all men, were standing near the door.

Several people, complete strangers, came to them and offered warm congratulations. A smart journalist pressed forward and wove his own complimentary utterances into an interview. A crowd gathered quickly on the pavement. Policemen, those marshalls of every English demonstration, cleared a path for them through the throng. So, with smiling words on their lips and anguish in their hearts, they made a triumphal exit. How little could the friendly enthusiasts who cheered them realize that these three had been atrophied by the deadly malevolence of fate in the very hour when a great achievement had ended happily.

Enid suffered almost as keenly as Brand and his daughter. Their joys and sorrows were hers. The startling nature of Brand's avowal rendered it difficult for either Enid or Constance to piece together certain fragmentary memories of Mrs. Vansittart's odd behavior during her enforced sojourn on the rock. So thoroughly had she shattered those dimly outlined impressions by the quietly vivacious charm of her manner at dinner that they both experienced a jumble of sensations. A terrified woman, in wet and torn clothing, cowering in the gaunt interior of a storm-girt lighthouse, is a very different being when attired in expensive garments and surrounded by the luxuries of a first-class hotel.

It was a relief to drive to their cottage in silence, yet, so easily moulded is our human clay, it was a greater relief when the tension of the noisy rattle of the cab was relaxed. It cost some effort to assure Mrs. Sheppard, a buxom, motherly soul of sixty or thereabouts, that they could not possibly eat any supper. The effort was forthcoming. They pleaded weariness, and at last they were alone.

Constance knelt by her father's side when he dropped listlessly into the armchair placed in his accustomed corner.

"Now, dad," she said, bravely unemotional, "there will be no more tears. Tell me all that I ought to know."

Enid drew a hassock to his feet and seated herself there, clasping her hands about her knees.

"Whatever she did I am sorry for her," said the girl decisively. "And she cannot have been a really bad woman, dad, or you would not have loved her once."

Brand sighed deeply. His strong will had deserted him for a little while. He shrank from the ordeal before him. Why should he be called on to sully the mirror of his daughter's innocence by revealing to her the disgrace of her mother?

Constance caught something of the dread in his soul.

"Don't tell me if it hurts you, dad. I am content to bear more than I have borne to-night if it lessens your sufferings," she whispered.

He placed an arm around each of them.

"It is God's will," he said, "that I should have to face many trials at a period when I expected nothing but some few years of quiet happiness."

"Nothing in this world can part us from you," said Constance.

"Oh, nothing," agreed Enid solemnly nestling closer. Her earnestness was helpful. He smiled wistfully.

"You forget, Enid, that there is a grave chance of you, at any rate, leaving me for another," he said.

She blushed.

"That is the worst of girls getting married," she protested. "They are supposed to be delighted because they are going to live with strange people. Girls who are of that mind cannot be happy at home. If I thought that being married to Jack implied separation from you and Constance—"

"You would give him up and weep your eyes out." He pressed her pouting lips together as he went on: "Now, my dear ones, I wish both of you to be prepared for very unexpected changes. Two most important events in your lives have taken place within a few hours. Constance, if you saw your mother to-night, Enid also saw her father. I have known for two days that Enid's father is Mr. Traill."

For an instant, it must be confessed, Constance and Enid alike feared that the mental and physical strain he had undergone had temporarily deranged him. It was not sheer incredulity but real terror he saw in their eyes. Somehow, their self-effacement in his behalf touched him more keenly than anything else had done during this troubled period.

He bowed his head. A strong man in agony cannot endure the scrutiny of loving eyes.

"Enid," he said brokenly, "my words to you must be few. Good fortune needs but slight explanation. The proofs of my statement I do not possess, but Mr. Traill's letter to me could not have been written by such a man if he were not sure of his facts. Here it is. Read it aloud."

He handed her her father's plain-spoken communication. Constance, incapable of deeper depths of amazement than those now probed, looked over her sister's shoulder. Together they deciphered the somewhat difficult handwriting of a man whose chief task for years had been to sign his name.

This drawback was good in its result. They persevered steadily to the end. Then Enid, the comforter, broke down herself.

"It cannot be true, dad," she cried. "I have been one of your daughters all my life. Why should I be taken from you now?"

"I believe it is quite true," said Brand quietly and the need there was to console her was beneficial to himself. "Mr. Traill speaks of proofs. You have met him. I exchanged barely a word, a glance, with him, but it is not believable that he would make these solemn statements without the most undeniable testimony."

"Indeed, Enid," murmured Constance, "it sounds like the truth, else he would never have spoken so definitely of my father's claim on your affections."

FIRST: "CATCH YOUR PRINTER"

DIRECTIONS FOR COOKING A HARE: FIRST:—"CATCH YOUR HARE"

To produce good printing you must "first catch your good printer. . . You can't get good printing from a poor printer, even if he work with never so good an equipment. If he lacks the "knack," the trained taste, the single-minded fondness for his work which real printers have, he will do poor printing for you. If he has all of these, and in addition to them adequate modern equipment, your printing will have distinction, salesmanship, the lure of type-beauty.

As this office produces good printing you may infer the presence of a good printer—who is "catchable."

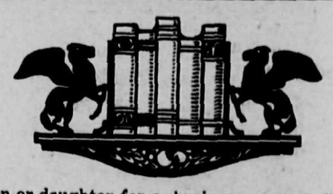
It Is The Trained Man or Woman Who Rises to the Top of the Ladder!



To fit your son or daughter for a business career you must give them a business training. The best place to send them to is the:

Nanaimo Business College

It is the nearest business college to Prince Rupert. It's fees are within reach of everyone. Its tuition is personal, and develops the individuality of the pupil. Room and board is cheap in Nanaimo. The pupils are away from the distractions of the larger cities :

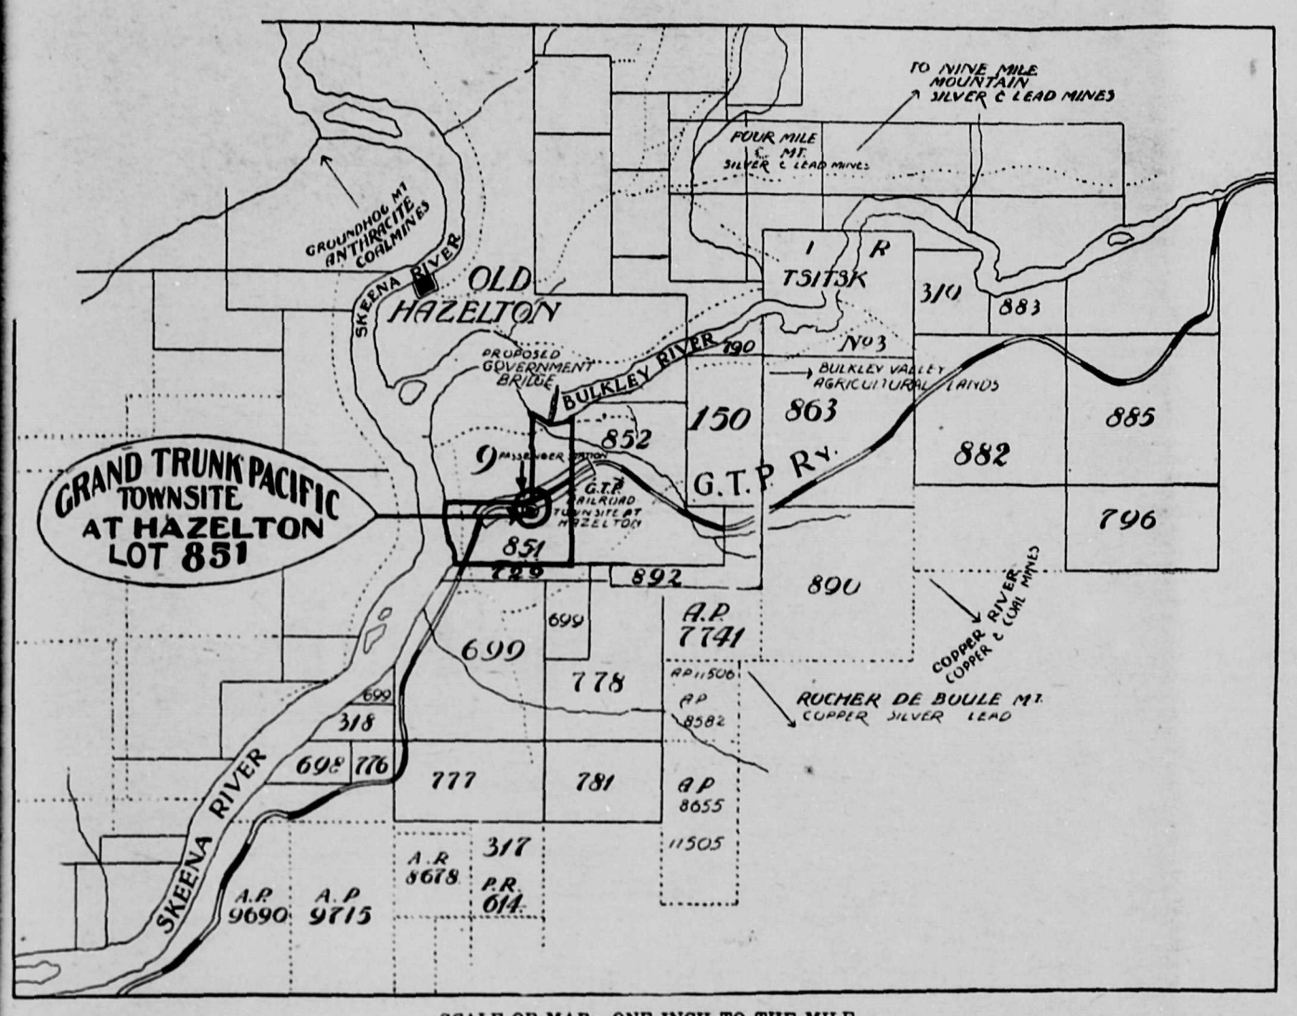
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway

Townsite at Hazelton



SCALE OF MAP:—ONE INCH TO THE MILE

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Townsite at Hazelton is situated on Lot 851, as per above plan. It will be registered as SOUTH HAZELTON and it is the intention of the company to build a station on this townsite in the spring of 1912.

There will be no station at Ellison,---one mile west.

Purchasers of lots at Ellison will be fully protected.

Surveys are completed and plans will be published just as soon as the government makes selections of lots.

The Land Commissioner of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will issue all agreements and deeds.

Notice to the Public.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite of South Hazelton is situated on Lot 851, and it is the intention of the Company to build a station on this Townsite in the Spring of 1912.

THE BIG FIGHT

From many angles the biggest fight that has taken place in England in years will be that between Jem Driscoll, English featherweight champion, and Owen Moran. It is to be held December 2 at Birmingham, Moran's native city, and preparations are being made for the battle upon much the same scale as for a world's championship affair in the States. And in one respect at least the two will be very much alike. Exchanges say the men in charge of the Driscoll-Moran affair are having tickets printed that are the exact replica of those for the Johnson-Jeffries mill. Nothing of that sort has ever been seen in England. There will be accommodation for something over 17,000, and the price sale of seats will run all the way from five shillings to five guineas, the latter being, of course, the price for the choicest box and ringside seats. The building itself will be 260 feet long by just about one-half that width. Although the boxers are to make weight the affair is not for any time. Driscoll has already gone into active training. The featherweight champion is, as usual, at Cardiff, while Owen Moran is quartered at Malvern.

The bout is to be refereed by Eugene Corri, and Corri's very presence in the ring will give it any tone it might otherwise lack through being staged outside of London and the National Sporting Club.

LORD DERBY AS WINNER

English sporting papers to hand by yesterday's mail contain a staistical table of the winning breeders, owners, trainers and jockeys on the turf, compiled from March 20 to November 3, inclusive. Lord Derby heads the list of winning owners (his total winnings amounting to £41,460. During the season his nine horses won twenty-eight big events. J. B. Joel, owner of the Derby winner this year, is second with winnings aggregating £34,629. Mr. Joel entered seventeen horses during the season and won thirty-five races. Lord Derby and Mr. Joel are the only owners who won above £10,000 during the season. Mr. Joel leads among winning breeders, while the leading trainer was Hon. G. Lambton. F. Wooten was the leading jockey, with a percentage of 25.29. He had 680 mounts during the season. His record shows 172 firsts, 136 seconds, 112 thirds and 260 unplaced. Mr. Fairie, who led the list of winning owners last year, is fourth on the list this year, his winnings during the season aggregating £9,607. Third place on the list is occupied by C. E. Howard, who won £10.014.

FREE TRIP ROUND THE WORLD

We have just arranged with one of our clients to place forty-two lots on the market under exceptional advantages to the purchasers. The lots are some of the best in Sections 7 and 8. The prices are as low as any on the market, and the terms so easy—monthly—that anyone can buy. Along with this exceptional offer, each lot admits the purchaser to a drawing for a FREE TRIP ROUND THE WORLD. If you hold the lucky ticket the trip is yours; or you can surrender it for a cash consideration. The chances are good—one in forty-two. Come in and investigate.

AND COMPANY

A Good Booster

J. H. Kugler, "Uncle Jerry" was on board the Prince Rupert this morning. Mrs. Kugler accompanied him. Mr. Kugler comes to attend the sale of section iwo.

Mr. Pattullo to Preside

It is expected that Mr. T. D. Pattullo will preside at the debate on commission goyernment in the Presbyterian church to-night.

SALE OF WORK WAS A SUCCESS

The Presbyterian Church Ladies Aid sale of work was held last night in the church hall. Sweetmeats, cakes, dainty fancy work, etc., formed the bulk of the wares exposed. Both branches of the Ladies Aid united to carry out the sale. Rev. F. W. Kerr with effective persuasiveness helped along the sale. Very pretty was the Bethany Girls' stall, decorated in white and gold, and the musical programme with song, recitation, and instrumental music was delightful. In spite of inclement weather a large number attended and enjoyed the sale.

Gift Goods

The genuineness of values in gold jewelry, cut glass, sterling silver and dozens of kindred lines all in direct keeping with the Christmas spirit, are being displayed at Wark's Jewelry store on Third Ave.

Those who are buying early to send to friends in Eastern Canada or to the old land are delighted with the assortment and values which are so extremely reasonable. They possess a distinctiveness not found elsewhere at popular prices.

This firm are also selling cut flowers. These are obtained from the largest grower on the coast. Deliveries on Wednesdays.

New School Magazine

The children in the higher classes have received copies of the new school magazine, which will be published monthly by the B. C. department of education. Capt. Clive Phillips-Wooley who wrote "A Tenderfoot's Wooing" which appeared recently in the Daily News, is the editor.

NEW HOUSE BLOWN DOWN

In the height of the gale last night, a new house being built for Messrs. Blyth Brothers was thrown down by the force of the wind. the framing being laid flat. No one was anywhere near at the time to run any risk of injury, and the structure can be speedily re-erected. Had construction been a little further advanced the building would have stood alright.

Applications will be received up to November 25th, 1911, by the Board of Directors of the Prince Rupert General Hospital Association from women wishing to take a full course of training in nursing. 12t
