"WESTWARD HO!"

Bonnycastle Dale, whose illustrated nature studies in "Westward Ho!" have attracted considerable attention, has in the May issue a timely article on the American Navy, being the result of his recent visit to the Bremerton Navy Yard where he secured several fine pictures of the battleships for the Magazine. In fiction, the contents for the month include, "The Widow of Baalbek," by A. N. St. John Mildmay; "Joe and Aileen," by Arthur Davies; "The Second Claim," by Billee Glynn; "The Tribe of Three," by G. A. Russel; "The Brain-Storm," by L. McLeod Gould; "A Hero of the Plains," by Charles Doran, and the concluding chapters of Clive Phillips Wolley's powerful serial, "Shakmut." The editor this month has taken Winston Churchill for his sketch in his interesting department, "Men I Have Met." Howland Hoadley tells the story of Vancouvers new playground—the North Arm, while Rinaldo M. Hall deals in an interesting manner with Portland's Rose Carnival, both articles being well illustrated. The publishers announce that the June issue will be a "Home-Seeker's Number."

Messrs. Thorpe & Co. have opened up their studio in town for a month, and now ready to do business.

Of course you are coming to see the dramatic performance of "Tom Cobb" on Monday night.

Bruce White and N. F. McNaught visited the Alpha group yesterday. Bruce White has a bond on the property.

McGillivray and Erickson, the Slocan drilling team who so signally defeated all comers at the Fall Fair of 1907, are training for the $300 pot at Kaslo next Monday. In practise yesterday morning before a crowd of Denverites, they drilled in hard granite, 30 inches in ten minutes. The team is going stronger than ever, and if they are beaten, the winners will be going some. As McGillivray remarked: "The team which beats us will earn the money and we shan't begrudge them the victory. But strange as it may appear to you, we have a better opinion of two teams that will meet us at Kaslo next Monday, than any team we met at Spokane."

A. M. Deschamps leaves this week for Swift Current, Sask., where he will put in two or three months on his farm. Mr Deschamps farm is at Feather Lake.

SILVER HUSTLER

To be worked by H. Lowe and Syndicate of Victoria Men.

The recent visit of H. Lowe to Victoria to commune with the directors of the Silver Hustler Mining Company, has been fruitful of good results. Mr. Lowe has secured a lease and bond on the property, and a number of the Company's directors who have faith in the mine are going to take a share with Mr. Lowe in exploiting their holdings. Mr. Lowe was formerly mine manager for this company, and under his direction an ore shoot was located from which many cars of $85 ore was extracted, and it is the intention of the new syndicate to continue a lower level to tap the same vein and do other exploring work.

There is also a considerable amount of low grade ore in the drifts, and lying upon the dumps there is an estimated 1,250 tons of ore which will yield a ton of concentrate for every ten treated at the mill. We understand that the syndicate are treating with the Idaho Mines Ltd. to lease the concentrator and tramway, and that it is probable this will be arranged.

Mr. Lowe will take a crew of men to the property in a few days.

Come with the crowd on Monday.

See the big football match.

Bring your dancing pumps for the hop afterwards.

after a long absence, to visit brother Andy. Martin has been on a trip to the old country.

A subscriber has deposited $100 at the Review office. He has heard that McKenzie and Johnson are likely to defeat McGillivray and Erickson in the drilling contest next Monday, and his money is to cover a similar amount that McKenzie and Johnson's supporters put up.

Says the irreproachable Lowery in the Greenwood Ledge: "Victoria Day will be celebrated in New Denver. The inhabitants are saving up their eggs for a presentation to the Amateur Dramatic Society in the evening."

Ladies! Come and see the fine line of belts and collars I have just received for the 25th. Mrs. Williams.

Dunc. Grant's palace at Silverton, the hotel Windsor, has been renovated in a lavish manner. You can now turn a tap on in the bar, and make your ablutions direct from the pipes.

Tom Saunders leaves for the north again in a few days.

The Newmarket Hotel which has been completely renovated, will be finished before the 25th. This handsome hotel now has an exterior appearance second to none in the country.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Hours had gone by, and the clock hands pointed to twelve, ere Maddy compelled herself to hear the story Guy had come to tell. She had thrust him from her at first, speaking to him of Lucy, his wife, and Guy had answered her back: "I have no wife—I never had one. Lucy is in heaven," and that was all Maddy knew until the great shock had spent itself in tears and sobs, which became almost convulsions as she tried to realize the fact that Lucy Atherstone was dead; that the bridal robe about which she had written, with girlish frankness, proved to be her shroud, and that her head that night was not pillowed on Guy's arm, but was resting under English turf and beneath an English sky. She could listen at last, but her breath came in panting gasps; while Guy told her how, on the very morning of the bridal, Lucy had greeted him with her usual bright smile, appearing and looking better than he had before seen her look since he reached her mother's home; how for an hour they sat together alone in a little room sacred to her, because years before it was there he confessed his love.

Seated on a low ottoman, with her golden head lying on his lap, she had that morning told him, in her artless way, how much she loved him, and how hard it sometimes was to make her love for the creature second to her love for the Creator; told him she was not faultless, and asked that when he found how erring and weak she was, he would bear with her frailties as she would bear with his; talked with him, too, of Maddy Clyde, confessing in a soft, low tone, how once or twice a pang of jealousy had wrung her heart when she read his praises of his pupil. But she had conquered that; she had prayed it all away; and now next to her own sister, she loved Maddy Clyde. Other words, too, were spoken—words of guileless, pure affection, too sacred even for Guy to breathe to Maddy; and then Lucy had left him, her hart-bounding step echoing through the hall and up the winding stairs down which she never came again alive, for when Guy next looked upon her she was lying white as a water lily, her neck and dress and golden hair stained with pale red life current oozing from her livid lips. A blood vessel had been suddenly ruptured, the physician said, and for her, the fair, young bride, there was no hope. They told her she must die, for the mother would have them tell her. Once, for a few moments, there rested on her face a fearfully frightened look, such as a harmless bird might wear when suddenly caught in a snare. But that soon passed away as from beneath the closed eyelids the great tears came gushing, and the stained lips whispered faintly: "God knows best. Poor Guy!—break it gently to

At this point in the story Guy broke down entirely.

"Maddy," he said, "I felt like a heartless wretch—a most consummate hypocrite—as, standing by Lucy's side, I met the fond, pitying glance of her blue eyes, and suffered her poor little hand to part my hair as she tried to comfort even though every word she uttered was shortening her life; tried to comfort me, the wretch who was there so unwillingly, and who at this prospect of release hardly knew at first whether he was more sorry than pleased. You may well start from me in horror, Maddy. I was just the wretch I describe; but I overcame it, Maddy, and Heaven is my witness that no thought of you intruded itself upon me afterward as I stood by my dying Lucy—gentle, patient, loving to the last. I saw how good, how sweet she was, and something of the old love, the boy love, came back to me, as I held her in my arms, where she wished to be. I would have saved her if I could; and when I called her 'my darling Lucy,' they were not idle words. I kissed her many times for myself, and once, Maddy, for you. She told me to. She whispered: 'Kiss me, Guy, for Maddy Clyde. Tell her I'd rather she should take my place than anybody else—rather my Guy should call her wife—for I know she will not be jealous if you sometimes talk of your dead Lucy, and I know she will help lead my boy to that blessed home where sorrow never comes.' That was the last she ever spoke, and when the sun went down death had claimed my bride. She died in my arms, Maddy. I saw her buried from my sight, and then, Maddy, I started home; thoughts of you and thoughts of Lucy blended equally together until Aikenside was reached. I talked with Mrs. Noah; I heard all of you there was to tell, and then I talked with Agnes, who was not greatly surprised, and did not oppose my coming here to-night. I could not remain there, knowing you were alone. In the bridal chamber I found your bouquet, with its 'Welcome to the bride.' Maddy, you must be that bride. Lucy sanctioned it, and the doctor, too, for I told him all. His own wedding, was, of course, deferred, and he did not come home with me, but he said: 'Tell Maddy not to wait. Life is too short to waste any happiness. She has my blessing.' And, Maddy, it must be so. Aikenside needs a mistress; you are all alone. You are mine—mine forever."

The storm had died away, and the moonbeams stealing through the window told that morning was breaking, but neither Guy nor Maddy heeded the lapse of time. Theirs was a sad kind of happiness as they talked together, and could Lucy have listened to them she would have felt satisfied that she was not forgotten. One long, bright curl, cut from her head by his own hand was all there was left of her to Guy, save the hallowed memories of her purity and goodness—memories which would yet mold the proud, impulsive Guy into the earnest, consistent Christian which Lucy in her life had desired that he should be, and which Maddy rejoiced to see him.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The close of a calm September afternoon, and the autumnal sunlight falls softly upon Aikenside, where a gay party is now assembled. For four years Maddy Clyde has been mistress there, and in looking back upon them she wonders how so much happiness as she has known could be experienced in so short a time. Never but once has the slightest ripple of sorrow shadowed her heart, and that was when her noble husband, Guy, said to her, in a voice she knew was earnest and determined, that he could no longer remain deaf to his country's call—that where the battle storm was raging he was needed, and like a second Sardanapalus he must not stay at home. Then for a brief season her bright face was overcast, and her brown eyes dim with weeping. Giving him to the war seemed like giving him up to death. But women can be as true heroes as men. Indeed, it oftentimes costs more courage for a weak, confiding woman to bid her loved ones leave her for the field of carnage than it costs them to face the cannon's mouth. Maddy found it so, but Christian patriotism triumphed over all, and stifling her own grief, she sent him away with smiles and prayers, and cheering words of encouragement, turning herself for consolation to the source from which she never sued for peace in vain. Save that she missed her husband terribly, she was not lonely, for her beautiful dark-eyed boy, whom they called Guy, Jr., kept her busy, while not very many weeks afterward, Guy, Sr., sitting in his tent, read with moistened eyes of a little golden-haired daughter, whom Maddy named Lucy Atherstone, and gazed upon a curl of hair she inclosed to the soldier father, asking if it were not like some other hair now moldering back to dust within an English churchyard. "Maggie" said it was—Aunt Maggie, as Guy, Jr., called the wife of Dr. Holbrook, who had come to Aikenside to stay, while her husband did his duty as surgeon in the army. That little daughter is a year-old baby now, and in her short white dress and coral bracelets she sits neglected on the nursery floor, while mother and Jessie, Maggie and everybody hasten out into the yard to welcome the returning soldier, Major Guy, whose arm is in a sling, and whose face is very pale from the effects of wounds received at Gettysburg, where his daring courage had well-nigh won for Maddy a widow's heritage. For the present the arm is disabled, and so he has been discharged, and comes back to the home where warm words of welcome greet him, from the lowest servant up to his darling wife, who can only look her joy as he folds her in his well arm, and kisses her beautiful face. Only Margaret Holbrook seems a little sad, she had so wanted her husband to come with Guy, but his humanity would not permit him to leave the suffering beings who needed his care.

Jessie, grown to be a most beautiful girl of nearly sixteen, is still a child in actions, and wild with delight at seeing her brother again, throws her arms around his neck, telling, in almost the same breath, how proud she is of him, how much she wished to go to him when she heard he was wounded, how she wished she was a boy, so she could enlist, how nicely, Flora is married and settled down at the cottage in Honedale, and then asks if he knows aught of the rebel colonel to whom just before the war broke out her mother was married, and whose home was in Richmond.

Guy knows nothing of him, except that he is still doing what he deems his duty in fighting for the Confederacy, but from exchanged prisoners, who had come up from Richmond, he knew a world of beautiful things of his wife's mother, who, if rumor said, Northern woman, who visited them in prison, speaking kind words of sympathy, and one binding up a drummer boy's aching head with a handkerchief, which he still retained, and on whose corner could he faintly traced the name of "Agnes Remington:"

Jessie's eyes are full of tears as she says:

"Poor mamma, how glad I am I did not go to Virginia with her. It's months since I heard from her direct. Of course it was she who was so good to the drummer boy. She cannot be much of a rebel," and Jessie glances triumphantly at Mrs. Noah, who, never having quite overcome her dislike of Agnes, had sorely tried Jessie by declaring that her mother "had found her level at last, and was just where she wanted to be."

Good Mrs. Noah, the ancient man whose name she bore would as soon have thought of leaving the Ark as she of turning a traitor to her country, and when she heard of the riotous mob raised against the draft, she talked seriously of going in person to New York "to give 'em a piece of her mind," and for one whole day refused to speak to Flora's husband, because he was a "dum dimocrat," and she presumed was opposed to Lincoln. With the exception of Maddy, no one was more pleased to see Guy than herself. He was her boy, the one she brought up, and with all a mother's fervor she kissed his bronzed cheek, and told him how glad she was to have him back.

With his boy on his sound arm, Guy disengaged himself from the noisy group and went with Maddy to where the little lady, the child he had never seen, was just beginning to show signs of resentment at being left so long alone.

"Lulu, pap's come; this is papa," the boy cried, assuming the honor of the introduction.

Lulu, as they called her, was not afraid of the tall soldier, and stretching out her fat, white hands, went to him readily. Blue-eyed and golden-haired, she bore but little resemblance to either father or mother, but there was a sweet, beautiful face, of which Maddy had often dreamed, but never seen, and whether it were fancy or not, Guy thought it beamed upon him again in the infantile features of his little girl. Parting lovingly her yellow curls and kissing her fair cheek, he said to Maddy, softly, just as he always spoke of that dead one:

THE END.

Ease in the Future.

"I trust you don't always intend to be a porch climber?" said the benevolent old gentleman as he handed over his valuables.

"Oh, no, boss!" laughed the masked man on the shed. "I hope if business improves I will be able to get around in an airship, and then I won't have to do any climbing."—Chicago News.

Mobility.

Mrs. Vick-Senn's eyes flashed.

"Johnny doesn't get that weak chin of his from my side of the house," she exclaimed.

"No, my dear," meekly responded her husband. "Johnny has my chin, but he inherits his mother's tireless capacity for keeping it in motion."—Chicago Tribune.

CROSSING THE BAR.

Dying Words of Some of the World's Famous Men.

Nothnagel, who died alone in his room, noted his own symptoms to the last. A letter to his assistant is said to have ended as follows: "Written late on the evening of July 6 just after experiencing these severe attacks—died of calcification of the arteries." Traube also made observations on himself to the very end. Locock expressed a wish to be present at the postmortem examination on himself, and among Cuvier's last recorded words is a remark, as his fingers twitched involuntarily: "Charles Bell is right: 'Ce sont les nerfs de la volonte qui sont maladifs.'" Dyce Davidson, professor at Aberdeen, died immediately after saying to his class, speaking of the next meeting, which was never to take place, "Four o'clock on Monday, gentlemen; 4 o'clock."

Several doctors have taken their leave with a blessing to those around them. Astley Cooper's last recorded words are, "God bless you, and goodby to you all!" He had previously said to his physicians, Bright and Chambers, "God's will be done; God bless you both!" adding, "You must excuse me, but I shall take no more medicine." Benjamin Brodie was heard to mutter, "After all, God is very good." The saddest of all recorded last words are probably those of Oliver Goldsmith, who, when asked by his physician if his mind was at ease, said, "No, it is not!" On the other hand, William Hunter's mind seems to have been full of bright thoughts at the moment of death, for he said, "If I could hold a pen, what a book I could write!"

Pasteur and Darwin, though not belonging to the medical profession, are venerated by it as teachers. Darwin's last words were, "I am not the least afraid to die." Pasteur was offered a cup of milk and, being unable to swallow it, murmured, "I cannot." He passed away with one hand in his wife's, the other grasping a crucifix. Lastly are mentioned the last words of Mirabeau, which are said to have been addressed to a doctor. He wrote on a slip of paper, which he gave to his physician, the philosopher Cabanis, the single word, "Dormir." Another account, which may be an expanded version of this, is that after begging for an anodyne he said reproachfully to the doctor: "Were you not my physician and my friend? Did you not promise to spare me the suffering of such a death? Must I go away carrying with me the regret of having confided in you?" This is rather a long and rhetorical speech for a dying man.—British Medical Journal.

Japanese New Year Cakes.

An annual event in Japan is the making of the New Year's cake, which every family must have if good luck is to follow it during the ensuing year. This cake is made of a peculiar variety of rice, boiled and pounded in a great wooden mortar until it is of the consistency of dough. Although the pure white dough is often colored yellow or pink, the shape of the cake is always the same—that of the sacred mirror, one of the three sacred emblems of the Shinto faith. A piece of this cake is offered to the Shinto deities because it is of the shape of the sacred mirror which wooed the sun goddess to come out of the cave where she had hidden herself in wrath and thus saved the land from total darkness. Each member of the family takes a hand in the manufacture of the New Year's cake. Even the baby is carried out and his baby hand guided in lifting the heavy wooden mallet for a "good luck" blow. Enough is made to last nearly the whole year through, and it occupies an important place in the daily menu.—Leslie's Weekly.

Queer Fish.

At first thought the electric chair, which sends the criminal to his doom, would seem to be a refinement of invention possible only to man's genius. But the electric eel can benumb a horse so that it will drown before recovering from the shock, and the fiercest fish is rendered helpless by the gentlest touch of this creature. Small wonder these eels flourish in their native waters and seldom fail to find food enough and to spare!

At any rate, the gentleman angler casting his fly upon the ripple is unique. Surely no animal can match the rod and line! Yet there is a fish with a long, slender filament drooping forward from its head, tipped with a fleshy, wormlike appendage. The fish lies quietly on the bottom and awaits a nibble. Soon a minnow makes a dash for the waving luscious morsel. The huge mouth opens, and—the finny angler has dined! A veritable Shylock this, with rod, line and bait of his own flesh and bone!

When the Nose Bleeds.

When the nose is bleeding never hold it over a basin or hold the head down in any way. This only causes further rush of blood to the broken tissues in the nose. The head should be held up and back, the flow being caught in handkerchiefs or cloths. One of the most effective and simple means of checking a nosebleed is to press on the upper lip. Near the undersurface of the lip runs the artery that supplies the interior nasal passages where the ruptures occur. If this is pressed, the flow of blood is mechanically checked, thus allowing the blood around the broken tissues to congeal and seal up the opening. If merely pressing with the finger does not succeed, place a wad of paper under the lip and fold the lip over it, holding it down tight. Again, if this does not succeed and a drug store is near get some adrenalin, saturate a piece of cotton with it and apply to the interior of the nose from where the blood flows.

Appetites of Woodsmen.

Here are some figures from a lumber camp up in Greenwood which give an idea as to the appetites of husky woodsmen. There are thirty-five men in this crew, and the cook reports that he makes each day 300 large biscuits, 150 doughnuts, 36 pies, bakes 6 quarts of dry beans, with potatoes, vegetables, etc., in proportion. A large beef creature is eaten every five days. There is something to be explained in that item of thirty-six pies daily for thirty-five men. Probably the boss gets the extra one.—Kennebec Journal.

Automobile Accidents

Consul Frank W. Mahin writes from Nottingham, England, that the secretary of the Highways Protection league reports that, according to accounts in the press, 932 automobile accidents occurred in Great Britain in 1907, killing 215 persons and injuring 675. For these accidents and other motor car offences 2,270 persons were summoned, of whom 2,046 were convicted. As the number of automobiles in use is estimated at 45,000, it would seem that one in about every twenty-two did something illegal last year. Occasionally the same driver is summoned more than once, but his license is usually revoked if it happens more than twice.—New York Tribune.

Tested by Time.—In his justly celebrated Pills Dr. Parmelee has given to the world one of the most unique medicines offered to the public in late years. Prepared to meet the want for a pill which could be taken without nausea, and that would purge without pain, it has met all requirements in that direction, and it is in general use not only because of these two qualities, but because it is known to possess alterative and curative powers which place it in the front rank of medicines.

Mrs. Bridey—Oh, but I was careful, I picked out a box called "Best Ever." Of course, there couldn't possibly be anything better than that.—Catholic Standard and Times.

WEIGHED FOUR POUNDS WHEN FOUR MONTHS OLD

Most of the sickness that comes to babies and young children is due to the stomach or bowels being out of condition. It is then that they are cross, peevish and upset the whole household. These are troubles that Baby's Own Tablets always cure promptly. Here is proof: Mrs. J. Stewart, Everton, Ont., says: "My little girl thrived so badly that at the the age of four months she weighed four and a half pounds. Her stomach was badly out of order, and although the doctor treated her he did not help her. Then I got Baby's Own Tablets and right from the first they helped her and now she enjoys perfect health." If your little one is ailing try Baby's Own Tablets—always do good; cannot do harm. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE ESKIMO KAYAK.

This Greenland Craft Is a Most Difficult One to Handle.

There is no craft so difficult to handle as the Eskimo kayak. The only boat familiar to us which in any way resembles it is the racing shell, but if a crack oarsman of one of our crack colleges were tied into a kayak and told to shift for himself even in smooth water he would have a hard time of it.

The kayak has been evolved through hundreds of years of necessity. Without it the Greenland Eskimos at least would not be able to provide their daily bread, or, more properly speaking, their daily blubber.

It is singular that all the materials used in the construction of the kayak come from the sea—driftwood for the frame, sealskin for the covering, thongs for the harpoon and dart, ivory and bone for bow, stern and keel and for the various implements. The women prepare the skin covering and stretch it over the frame till it is as tight and firm as the head of a drum. On such occasion there is great excitement in the community. A regular "kayak bee" is held; even refreshments are not lacking, for the owner of the kayak treats to coffee all around when the work is satisfactorily done.

The completed boat is a triumph of ingenuity and skill. It is about eighteen feet long, sharply pointed at each end. Its greatest depth is six inches and its width about eighteen. It is entirely covered save for the little round hole into which the owner slips, pushing his feet underneath the skin deck in front.

This hole is fitted to the person for whom the boat is designed, and his thighs completely fill it up. When he is seated in it and his waterproof jacket is tied securely round the edge he is able to defy the waves which wash over him or the rain which beats upon him. The six thong loops arranged on the deck in front and the three or four behind hold his implements—bird darts, lances, knives and, most important of all, his harpoon. A little stand is arranged directly in front of him, upon which is coiled the harpoon line, and behind him on the kayak is the harpoon bladder, which is attached, inflated ready for use, to the line.

The most expert are apt sometimes to be overturned. It may be by the attack of a walrus or even a seal, by a careless movement or an unexpectedly large wave. If he does not right himself at once, he is inevitably drowned unless a comrade comes to his assistance. The usual method of turning the kayak upright again is by using the paddle as a lever, holding it along the side of the boat, pointing it toward the bow, then sweeping it through the water, but those who are thoroughly proficient are able to do it by means of their throwing stick, their arm or even their hand.

The Earth and the Moon.

As the original earth nebula condensed the lighter materials were distributed quite uniformly over the entire surface, but these are now missing from one hemisphere, the reason seeming to be, as Professor G. H. Darwin demonstrated in 1879, that a portion of the earth's crust has been thrown off by tidal action, forming the moon. The surface density of the present continents is about 2.7, the mean density of the moon appearing to be 3.4, or not far from that of the missing continents to the depth reached. The moon, it is computed, equals a mass having the surface area of the terrestrial oceans and a depth of thirty-six miles, and it is concluded that the crust when thirty-six miles thick must have been torn away over three-fourths of the earth, the remainder breaking apart to form the eastern and western continents, with Australia and other islands. These continental and island fragments floated like great ice floes on liquid materials of a density of 3.7 or more. This great rupture gave the earth's surface its chief irregularities, with a mean difference of three miles between the levels of the continental plateaus and the ocean beds, and as the water condensed in the cooling depressions, with the Pacific where most of the moon had been, the dry land was formed that has made human life possible. We may consider that without this change the earth would be now in the condition of Venus, with water over its whole surface.

The Oldest Forename.

In ancient times people had one name only, as Adam or David, and in order to distinguish persons of the same name it was the custom to affix the description "son of" Isaac or Joseph, as the case might be. Thus we get Solomon ben David among the Hebrews and Evan ap Richard among the Welsh, to quote two examples. Although the argument that those names were not strictly "forenames" is not without weight, yet it is responsible to accept them as such, seeing that the application had to be supplemented by another for the sake of distinction. We are therefore entitled to include them within the scope of the question. Adam and other early Biblical names are regarded as the oldest for obvious reasons; but, excluding these, the choice falls upon Marmaduke, which is the modern rendering of the ancient Chaldean Meridug, also written Maruduk and Merodach, the god who interceded constantly between the angry Ea and the humble Damikna, his father and mother. The Romans used both forenames and family names, and of the former two that date back about 2,500 years are still with us—namely, Marcus and Lucius, represented in modern tongues by Mark and the feminine Lucy. The old form Marcus is still retained in some families.

Effect of the Big Guns.

Considerable damage has been done at Dover, England, by the firing of the heavy guns from the forts which have been erected to protect the national harbor. The town crier was sent around the town to advise the inhabitants to leave their windows open, but upon the firing of the nine inch guns the vibration was so great that in many cases portions of the ceiling fell, many ornaments were knocked down and broken and windows were cracked.

"My husband heard of Peruna and bought five bottles. This treatment virtually cured me and now I recommend Peruna to every one who is suffering. I thank Dr. Hartman for this excellent remedy."

Women are especially liable to colds. These colds occur more frequently during the wet sloppy weather of winter and spring than any other time of the year. Often they are not considered serious and are allowed to run on, or they are treated in such a way as to only palliate the symptoms, while the cold becomes more deep-seated and the patient finally awakens to the fact that she has a well-developed case of catarrh.

WOMEN SHOULD BEWARE OF CATCHING COLD

By reason of their delicate structure, the lungs are frequently the seat of a cold, especially if there is the slightest weakness of these organs. The treatment of catarrh of the lungs is also more difficult and discouraging than catarrh of any other organ of the body.

Peruna has been found the most reliable of all remedies for coughs, colds and catarrh, by reason of the fact that it goes at once to the very seat of the trouble.

It searches out every crevice, every duct of the body. It quickens and equalizes the circulation of the blood, thus relieving the congested mucous membranes. It exercises a healing and soothing effect upon the mucous membranes, no matter whether they are the more exposed membranes of the head and throat, or whether they line the remotest cells of the lungs.

Mrs. Jaschob, 1631 Hicks St., Toledo, Ohio, writes:

A Sharp Retort.

The late Duke of Argyll and Sir William Jenner, physician to the Queen, were both in attendance at Balmoral, and one morning at breakfast the discussion turned to the virtues of porridge. The Duke, who was slight of build and small of stature, overhearing some disparaging remarks on the national dish, said:

"Porridge! Why, excellent stuff. Could not be better. Why, I was brought up on porridge myself."

Jenner, who was a big man, and did not like the Duke, looked sharply across the table and retorted:—

"Yes, and a good specimen of the result I think you think yourself."—London Times.

Old Horseshoes.

Vice Consul Ernest Vollmer reports that one of the constantly growing imports into the Chinese province of Shangtung through the port of Tsingtau is old horseshoes, which leads him to give the following particulars: "One steamer alone in November brought 300 tons of this scrap iron from Hamburg. The market for these wornout shoes seems to be almost without limit. Chinese iron dealers buy the horseshoes and sell them to knife and tool manufacturers all over the province. It is claimed by the Chinese that the temper of this class of iron makes it the best obtainable for knives and cutlery and also good for other tools. The reason ascribed for this is that the constant beating the shoes have received under the feet of horses has given them a peculiar temper absolutely unobtainable in any other way and that tools made from them are superior to all others."

New Breed of Animal

Last year the Texas Chautauqua Association issued a catalogue advertising the different attractions that were to appear on each of its Assemblies, and used as a trade mark a design of a Texas steer. In many towns the people had never heard of a Chautauqua.

One of their assemblies was located at Houston, and on the day the catalogues were distributed about town a man in one of the stores remarked to his acquaintances: "So Houston is to have another stock show! I wonder if 'Chautauqua' is a new breed of animal they want to bring into old Texas!"—The Lyceumite.

BRIGHT EYES, ROSY CHEEKS

In the early days of her womanhood every girl—no matter what her station in life—should be bright, active, cheerful and happy. Her steps should be light, her eye bright and her cheeks rosy with the glow of health. But the reverse is the condition of thousands of young girls throughout Canada. They drag along, always tired, suffer from headaches, breathless and with palpitating heart after slight exercise, so that merely to go upstairs is exhausting. This is the condition doctors call anaemia, which means weak, watery blood. In this condition Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only safe and reliable medicine. These pills actually make the new, rich, red blood which can alone give health and strength, and thus make weak, listless, pale-faced girls bright, active and strong. Miss Albina St. Andre, Joliette, Que., says:—"I am more grateful than I can say for the benefit I have found in the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was weak, run down and very miserable. I suffered from severe pains in my back and chest; had a bad cough; no appetite and would lay awake most of the night, and what sleep I did get did not refresh me. I tried several remedies, but they did not help me, and I, as well as my friends, feared I was going into a decline. At this stage a friend, who came to see me, strongly urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and providentially I acted upon the advice. After using a few boxes my appetite improved and I began to sleep much better at night. This greatly cheered me and I continued taking the pills for some time longer, when the change in my condition was really marvellous. I was feeling as well as I ever had done. I could sleep soundly at night; the pains and cough had disappeared and I felt an altogether different girl. I am so grateful for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me that I cheerfully give you permission to publish this in the hope that it may point the way to health to some other weak and despondent girl."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are good for all diseases due to weak, watery blood. That is why this medicine cures rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, partial paralysis, and the sideaches, backaches and headaches caused by the troubles women alone suffer from. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LONDON WORKHOUSES FULL.

Many Infirm Paupers Boarding at Sanitariums at the Seaside.

Enquiries throughout Great Britain show that lack of employment is responsible for acute distress in many towns, the trades most affected being building, engineering and shipbuilding.

Owing, apparently, to the slackness of trade, the forty workhouses of Greater London are filled to overflowing. The latest returns show that in these workhouses there are 80.183 boarders, and that 45,821 people are receiving outdoor relief. This gives a ratio of 26.5 paupers to the thousand of the population.

It is impossible to grant all the applications for admittance to these institutions, and the authorities, in their efforts to grapple with the situation, have resorted to the novel plan of accepting the help of professional boarding house keepers. The managements of seaside sanitariums have sent circulars to the workhouse authorities which say in effect: "Our staffs are idle; yours are overworked. Cannot we help each other?"

The offers have been accepted in several instances and many infirm paupers have been sent to fashionable resorts to be nursed back to health amid surroundings luxurious beyond their dreams. And, unlikely though it may seem, the workhouse authorities in adopting this solution of the difficulty are actually saving money. It costs 20 shillings a head a week for infirmary inmates in poorhouses, whereas the sanitariums are taking boarders at the reduced terms of 13 shillings a week.

The poverty in the Hackney district of London is such that its workhouse is not only accommodating 200 persons more than it is certified for, but paupers from that district are boarding out in eighty-five different institutions, not including lunatics in asylums. Even the chapel connected with Hackney workhouse is being used as a dormitory for some of life's failures.

Among the 1,601 paupers in this institution there are some who have been inmates for between thirty and forty years. Seven of the inmates say they fought for their country in the Crimea. Several whole families are in the house, and their furniture is stored in the outbuildings until such time as the men can make a fresh start.

Many families are utterly undeserving of admittance to these pauper refuges. It has been shown over and over again that when once a family has been helped by the workhouse authorities it acquires the workhouse habit and again flies to them at the first sign of trouble.

In course of time, the habit becomes a family tradition, an instance of which is provided by Hackney. There died there a few days ago an old woman whose family was represented in the workhouse by four generations. The woman's daughter and her husband, her grandchildren and great-grandchildren were likewise in the workhouse.

West Ham, in the east end of London, has the doubtful honor of owning the largest workhouse in England. It is like a small walled city and contains 2,600 paupers, which is 900 more than it is supposed to be able to accommodate.

Four branch workhouses give shelter to another 900, and fifty women are sleeping in a schoolroom whence teachers and pupils have been evicted. Seven hundred children are being boarded out with foster mothers scattered over the district.

West Ham's difficulties are to a certain extent due to the crowds of able-bodied who have developed the workhouse habit. There are 200 able-bodied women in the prime of life, in the workhouse, and over a hundred able-bodied men between the ages of 16 and 30.

The latter are strong young fellows, most of whom made their acquaintance with the interior of the workhouse in their childhood. By going out in the morning after breakfast and picking up a dinner where they can they are able to escape the labor, such as wood chopping, stone breaking or corn-grinding, which would be their lot if they remained inside all day.

West Ham has the best dietary of any workhouse in the Kingdom. Breakfast consists of four ounces of bread and a pint and a half of porridge. Dinner may be four and a half ounces of meat with twelve ounces of peas pudding or the same amount of meat with two vegetables. For supper, eight ounces of bread and one pint of broth are given out.

Infirm men live better. They have a lunch between breakfast and dinner, consisting of bread and butter and a piece of plum cake. They are allowed tobacco, and in the evening can play draughts, bagatelle or dominoes. No task is set them.

Pigeons Superseded.

The Admiralty have decided to do away with the carrier pigeon service in the royal navy, and all the pigeon-lofts on the home stations are to be abolished. The loft at Malta is to be retained, however, and it has also been decided not to interfere with the volunteer carrier pigeon service. This decision is no doubt due to the wonderful progress which has been made with wireless telegraph. When the noval pigeon service was established wireless telegraphy was unknown, where as now it is generally used for communications over a long distance, and is far more reliable than carriers. All the principal ships of His Majesty's fleet are now equipped, and round the coast are a series of wireless signal stations manned by skilled operators. Signals are continually passing from the shore to men-at-war far away at sea. When the Montagu went ashore another ship steaming off the Lizard was "called up" by the Admiralty and directed to go to her aid, the telegrams are transmitted across the Bay of Biscay to Gibraltar.

That Judicial Decision.

When it was noticed that Oliver Cromwell was to be excluded from the list of characters figuring in the London pageant W. T. Stead entered a protest, vigorously telling the committee that this would boycott "the greatest man in English history." The committee replied it would include Cromwell if Stead would appear in a part. Stead gladly consented, though it involves the sacrifice of an ample beard which has never yet known a razor and was never even trimmed till Stead was past 40, but Stead declares he would shave his head.

4 YEAR OLD BOY COULDN'T STAND!
Limbs Weakened by La Grippe
Made Strong by Zam-Buk.

Mrs. T. Brixton, of 5 Woodworth Ave., St. Thomas, Ont., says: "I had had some experience as to the efficacy of Zam-Buk in healing sores, cuts, etc., and had heard good reports from friends who also tried this balm, so when a year ago my little lad, four years of age, was left weak in the limbs as the result of a severe attack of influenza, I began rubbing in the Zam-Buk. His legs were so weak he would tremble and shake and was unable to stand for any length of time. Frequent applications of this ointment well rubbed in, seemed to strengthen him daily, and in a very short time the shaking and trembling in his limbs had been banished and he soon got strong and able to run about, thanks to Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk is a splendid embrocation for rheumatism, sciatica, etc., and is without equal as a healing balm.

At Monte Carlo

"A lady who was visiting Monte Carlo for the first time desired to try her luck at the tables, and, being undecided as to what number to choose, she asked a friend to settle for her. 'Put it on your own age,' was the reply. So accordingly the louis was placed on Number 25. When the croupier announced 'quarante!' that poor lady's discomfiture told its own tale."

With great deference to the authoress who contributed this story to The Daily Mail, we do not believe it. And we are surprised that she should imperil her immortal soul for the sake of four paltry pips, when "trente-six" would have done almost as well as "quarante," and at the same time would have had the crowning merit of being one of the actual numbers employed in roulette.—Punch.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu is generally credited with having introduced inoculation into England from Turkey. In 1718 she had her son inoculated at Adrianople with success. She was allowed to have it tried in England on seven condemned criminals in 1721, and in 1722 twe members of the royal family were inoculated. The practice was bitterly opposed by the clergy until 1760. A Dr. Mead practiced inoculation with success up to 1754, and Dr. Dunsdale of London inoculated Catherine II. of Russia in 1768. Vaccine inoculation was introduced by Dr. Jenner in 1799.

Expert Hoop Rolling.

In this complex civilization of ours there are many highly specialized and novel means of obtaining a livelihood, and we can well imagine the astonishment of our ancestors if they had been told that in the twentieth century a man would be earning from four to five pounds a night by rolling hoops! There are of course different ways of doing this, and Everhart has invented many ingenious combinations and tricks, so that the hoops in his hands seem like living creatures. One of his tricks consists in making the hoops describe perfect circles, coming back exactly to his hand. He can keep as many hoops in motion as the size of the circle will allow. Standing between two screens, he can keep his hoops going in two circles, one with the right hand and the other with the left. His sense of touch is so strongly developed that he can impart almost any motion to a hoop, as a billiard player does to a ball by putting on side.—London Answers.

THE NATURE MAN.

A Faddist Who Is Bothering the Military Officials of Hanover.

A "nature man," as he calls himself has given the Hanoverian military authorities a good deal of trouble. He was conscripted in the usual way and arrived in the barracks yard with his hair flowing over his shoulders and dressed in a long robe, some light underclothing and sandals.

He was a good natured soul, and the regiment, officers and men, had a good deal of harmless fun with him. When they got him into uniform, he would keep the buttons open, and as his principles did not allow him to wear anything about his neck he appeared on parade without his stock and with the collar of his jacket open. He also slit up his boots to make them more bearable, and when the corporal thundered at him that he was an ass he mildly offered to pay for the boots, although in his opinion he had made them much more valuable as footwear.

In the matter of diet the "nature man" was also a source of wonder. He was a vegetarian, he said, and went to the stiff and starched colonel to know if he had any nuts or beans about, as he would greatly prefer this diet to animal food. The colonel was not quite sure whether to laugh or curse, so he did both. For a week the soldier lived on a box of figs and for a fortnight on apples. Now he is ill in the hospital because his vegetables were exhausted and he had to eat a pork sausage. But he is the pet of the regiment, all the same, for he has invincibly good humor.

Among the members of the regiment he has a number of sympathizers whom the "nature man" has converted to his ideas of living. In fact, the predictions are that if the number of his followers increase as fast in the future as they have in the past the "nature man" may not have long to wait before he will be able to start a regiment composed of disciples of his ideas.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Cost of Grand Opera.

Last season (1906-07) $1,005,770.20 was taken in at the box office of the Metropolitan and $750,000 at the Manhattan.

This season's subscriptions at the Metropolitan aggregate $625,000. This is the largest sum ever subscribed in the history of the world to foster opera.

Chorus singers average from $25 to $30 a week. Some who have fine voices and a good repertory are paid even higher.

The Metropolitan has eight musical directors and the Manhattan three.

Metropolitan—Caruso, $5,000; Fremstad, $1,800; Sembrich, $1,500; Eames, $1,500; Farrar, $1,200; Cavalieri, $1,200; Gadski, $1,200; Bonci, $1,200; Campanari, $1,200; Scotti, $1,000; Chaliapine, $800.

A Hard Blow to Greek.

It is several years now since the word went forth among the makers of schoolbooks that "the bottom has dropped out of Greek." But it is a long time since the study of that tongue has received such a blow as that dealt by Harrow. Dr. Joseph Wood, head master of the famous school which for two centuries and a half has been a stronghold of the classics, has announced that it is time for Greek to go. Its place is to be taken by practical sciences, modern languages, art, music and a classical dictionary. But all this fails to answer the query as to how in a generation or two we shall understand our elder poets. Dryden and Ben Jonson are already drawing away from us. Milton will be a strange tongue. The classical dictionary is useful in settling the fine distinctions which lurk in the lyra and tibia, but it hardly does justice to the charms of Helen or the valor of Hector.—Boston Transcript.

FLAX IN ROTATION.

Prof. Thos. Shaw Explains How Flax May Be Grown Without Injury to the Soil.

Prof. Thomas Shaw of the University of Minnesota, who was formerly a professor in the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, is of the opinion that there is no more profitable crop for the farmers of the Northwest than flax-seed. He says:

"The idea prevails that flax is hard on land, viewed from the standpoint of the removal of plant food from the soil. Essentially it is not more so than wheat. That wheat among cereals is relatively hard on land furnishes no reason why it should not be grown where the conditions are favorable, but it does furnish a reason why it should be grown in such a way that the fertility of the land may still be maintained, and the same line of reasoning will apply to flax. When flax is grown in a judicious rotation, it fits as naturally into the same as any other crop.

The Proper Rotation

"The question now arises, what is the rotation in which flax should be grown? A little reflection will answer this question. When land is first broken, and when at the same time a proper seed bed is prepared, it furnishes the best crops. Why? For three reasons. First, it is well supplied with the elements of plant growth; second, it is well stocked with humus, that is, vegetable matter in a state of decay; and third, it is relatively clean. The decaying vegetable matter in the soil adds to the available fertility from other sources, and it also furnishes moisture to the plants. The relatively clean condition of the soil is very favorable to the growth of the flax crop, as it is not well fitted to cope with a vigorous growth of noxious weeds. The influence of the flax crop is also helpful to the quick reduction of the prairie sod, owing to the peculiar nature of the fibrous growth of the roots. These, penetrating every part, reduce the soil to a disintegrated pulverulent mass, which is greatly favorable to the growth of the succeeding grain crop other than flax.

Sod Land for Flax

"It has also been noticed that good crops of flax follow the breaking up of a sod field. Why? For the same reasons that good crops of flax are grown on new breaking. The yields from crops grown on common sod land broken up are usually not quite so good as on new breaking, because the elements of fertility are not usually present to the same extent. But, should farmyard manure be spread on the sod land the previous year, the leachings from the same would so stimulate the growth of grass roots that these in decay would produce the best crops of flax that it would be possible to grow. It may happen sometimes, however, that in certain other seasons the best crops may not come from sod land. However, the more sod land which the Northwest can furnish, the more will be the area of highest adaptation for growing the crop. The more grass to furnish pasture, the greater the number of the live stock kept, and the greater the number of these the greater will be the supplies of manure to spread on the sod land on which flax is to be grown. The close interdependence between much live stock and much flax in the future is thus apparent.

A Good Crop to Follow Wheat

"No crop north of the corn belt proper can follow wheat so well as flax. But it has been noticed that when flax is grown on old and worn land the yields are low. The crop is also much injured by noxious weeds. Moreover, it has also been noticed that usually it is not wise to grow two crops of flax in succession or even without an interval of a few years between the crops. This is owing to some substances left in the ground by the flax roots detrimental to the growth of flax that follows on the same land. How many years should elapse between the crops will depend on such conditions as the newness and strength of the land. Usually, however, a wise rotation would call for an interval of four or five years between the crops. This does not mean, however, that in some instances good crops of flax cannot be grown in close succession. The increasing prevalence of flax will also accentuate the wisdom of growing flax crops in a judicious rotation. It is thus apparent that the aim should be to grow flax not more frequently than four to five or even more than five years on the same land, and to grow it as far as possible, first on new breaking, second on overturned sod, and third on overturned sod previously manured."

BEAUTY FOODS.

If You Would Become Fair, Eat Simple, Dainty Diet.

"Forget that stupid old maxim, 'Beauty is but skin deep,' and determine to annex all the prettiness possible by eating and drinking what is good for you. It isn't true that beauty is only skin deep. On the contrary, it is the health—that is, the beauty of the body beneath the skin—that makes a girl's appearance attractive."

Thus spoke a beauty doctor.

"I treat my patients as much by influencing them to eat and drink sensibly as by selling them unguents and cosmetics, though they have their uses," continued this authority. "And one of the first points upon which I insist is that they do not eat to satiety.

"Should there be a sensation of oppression and languor—as there will be after a heavy meal—it is an excellent plan to 'skip' the next altogether. And to avoid such feelings I advise my clients to eat no bread, except a very little crisply toasted, with a meat meal of any kind, and to drink no fluid. The best time to drink is an hour before a meal or three hours after one, and then pure water is par excellence the elixir among all beverages to take.

"Few women grasp the fact that pure water imbibed at the proper time is an investment in beauty that will pay her interest at the rate of cent per cent. A tumblerful taken the last thing before going to bed is excellent for the complexion, because it keeps the system in good order. It should, furthermore, be recollected that beer, tea and coffee all affect the heart that is not strong, and that as a stimulant when tired and overwrought there is nothing better than a cup of hot milk, sipped, not swallowed down quickly, or if that be distasteful one of hot water or thin cocoa, taken hot.

"Hot milk will bring back the brightness to lackluster eyes and the bloom to pallid cheeks, not for a few minutes and with the meretricious gayety bestowed by alcohol, which is ruinous to beauty in the long run, but permanently and with a bestowal of girlish loveliness that is infinitely bewitching. Tea should always be drunk freshly made and quite weak; coffee very hot in small quantities and black—that is, without milk, and for the stout without sugar. Buttermilk and barley water are two exceedingly healthy drinks, and so is lemon squeezed in water sweetened by honey.

"A largely fruitarian diet is of the greatest benefit to girls of a sallow complexion, prone to dismal forebodings and to attacks of liver disorder. The fruit may be eaten raw or stewed, according to preference."

A BORN TRADER.

He Was a Bit Unlucky, but Then He Had No Dull Times.

"One hundred dollars seems an awful high price to pay for a typewriting machine," said Mr. Jenkinson, who had just bought one. "It may seem so to you," answered his friend, Mr. Hankinson, "but I have one at my house that cost me $750, and I don't suppose it's half as good as yours."

"You needn't tell me such a"—

"It's a fact," broke in the other.

"Why, how in the world"—

"Well, I'll tell you. A year and a half ago I bought an automobile for $600. After I had paid $150 for repairs, storage, fines and other expenses connected with it I traded it for a suburban lot.

"The lot proved to be in the middle of a swamp, and when a real estate man offered me a horse and buggy for it I took him up.

"The horse ran away one day and smashed the buggy into kindling wood. I traded the horse for a gold watch.

"The watch wouldn't keep good time, and I swapped it for a bicycle. One day I fell from the bicycle and put a finger out of joint. Then I exchanged the machine for a secondhand typewriter."

"I see."

"And I've no use for the typewriter. Do you know of anybody that would give me a good dog for it?"

Nelson, B.C.,
May 18th, 1908.

To the Editor, Slocan Mining Review.

Sir,

I am visiting friends here, who were staying last summer at New Denver and who strongly advised me to see the place before returning to the Old Country. So by their persuasion, and the perusal of a charming book of views, entitled "Silvery Slocan," I journeyed there last week, and must admit I was much smitten with the town and its surroundings.

After perambulating the district for a day, I returned to my hotel completely "fagged out," and naturally hoped for a night's repose, but alas! I had a sleepless and vexatiously disturbed night. No sooner was the electric light extinguished and I laid me down to rest, an outcast dog commenced barking, which was continued throughout the night. Then started a straying cow (or bull) brawling continuously, and then followed a lively though disturbing and unintelligible conversation between two neighbourly cats, who eventually indulged in a discordant duet, and evidently parted dissatisfied with their vocal abilities, and so was I too.

I understand you have a Town Improvement Society, and I would respectfully suggest to that body of gentlemen the desirability of engaging a night watchman to ensure the quietude in the sombre hours of the night, otherwise my experience will prove a detrimental advertisement for your promising place of resort.

I enclose my card and will thank you to send a copy of your next issue.

Yours cordially,
AN ENGLISH TOURIST.

P.S.—Let me add, your town is well provided with good hotel accommodation, where I met a most genial and superior class of men, deeply interested in New Denver and its future prosperity.

"Thirty years a newspaper man, and not an enemy in the world, that is the record," says Collier's Weekly, "of William MacKenzie, dean of the press gallery at Ottawa." A remarkable man, surely; what a snap he had! No drafts, no delinquent subscribers, no roasts, no worries; but there, he didn't live in New Denver.

There was something tantamount to a miniature panic in town yesterday. At noon the central telephone office was apprised of an accident at one of the saw mills on the lake near town, and in a few minutes the "Leader" and "Lucerne" were tearing through the water, one to Hunter's mill, and the other to Scaia's. It is the custom when anything serious happens to beat a tatoo upon a big saw, and the noise thus occasioned was heard by the Rosebery operator, and he sent the warning to New Denver. Crowds lined the lake front until the boats returned, and when they did, a feeling of satisfaction was evident, although at the same time chagrin was rampant. It appears that a man named Deschamps went across to Scaia's mill in the morning on business, and finding no one there, he started to beat the big saw with a hammer, so that any one in the vicinity might know he was on the earth. The rest is self explanatory, and the morbid souls who lined the shores of the lake seeking excitement, dispersed feeling as if they had been "wildcatted."

G. O. Buchanan, lead bounty inspector, was in town on business yesterday.
