Fraternal Orders.

Greenwood is honored by being the home of several fraternal orders, who do much for the social and brotherly welfare of their members, and assure a welcome to those of their fellows who sojourn here occasionally from outside points.

A. F. and A. M.

Throughout the civilized world Freemasonry is recognized as the leading fraternal order. It antedates all others, having been first conceived at the time of the building of King Solomon's temple. Some claim an even earlier foundation for this noble brotherhood. It is impossible in a short space to follow the workings of Masonry from its infancy. It is a power for good in every land, and especially in the older countries has founded schools for the sons and daughters of Masons, homes for the widow and orphan, and bound and held together all grades of society in one great brotherhood of charity and brotherly love. Greenwood Lodge, No. 28, A. F. and A. M., was first organized, under a dispensation from the Grand Lodge of British Columbia, in 1898, with Worshipful Brother C. S. Galloway as W. M. In the following year, 1899, a lodge was instituted November 11, by D. D. G. M. Raymer and John D. Clute, Jr., of Rossland, and the following officers appointed: C. Scott Galloway, W. M.; J. C. Haas, secretary; Robert Wood, treasurer. The lodge room was over T. M Gulley's store on Copper street. Later in the history of the order in Greenwood, a stately temple was erected on Government street, and still later the present lodge room in the Wood block on Government street became the meeting place of the brethren. The lodge meets on the first Thursday of every month, and all visiting brethren are most welcome. The following is a list of worshipful masters: C. Scott Galloway, 1898, 1899; A. S. Black, 1900; C. Scott Galloway, 1901; W. G. McMynn, 1902; J. S. Birnie, 1903; F. M. Elkins, 1904; A. M. Whiteside, 1905; E. W. Bishop, 1906; E. G. Warren, 1907; J. W. Grier, 1908; F. W. McLaine, 1909.

I. O. O. F.

Boundary Valley Lodge, No. 38, was instituted at Greenwood on the 11th June, 1897, the charter members being Thos. Hardy, Ralph Smailes, W. J. Harber, T. W. Gulley, J. McNichol and R. W. Jakes. During its existence it has been the means of upholding considerable of the social life among the citizens of Greenwood and district, its present membership being 110, with assets of over $7,000. Its meetings are held every Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock, in the I. O. O. F. hall, and visitors are always heartily welcomed. Its visitors' book show records of visits of members from all parts of the world. During the 85 years the Independent Order of Odd Fellows has been in existence it has grown to be an immense institution. At the present time its invested funds amount to $49,758,985. In the year 1908 it paid out $5,500,825.60 for relief and benefits, and from 1830 to December 31, 1908, it has received in revenue $240,681,192.70, and paid out in relief $125,630,414.78, and had a membership of 1,888,376. The three link man is to be found the world over, and who can doubt the progress of an institution whose motto is Friendship, Love and Truth, and whose laws command its members to bury the dead, relieve the distressed, protect the widow and educate the orphans. All these are a part of Oddfellowship. They have homes scattered all over for aged members, their wives and their children. These are not charity homes, but are supported by all members, and consequently theirs by right of ownership, hence, day by day, and year by year, the work goes on, and who shall say where it will end? It is a power for good and is rightly considered a most worthy order.

K. of P.

The Knights of Pythias is an international order, with the highest ideals of brotherly love and self sacrifice, founded on the beautiful story of the noble man who was willing to lay down his life for a friend. The Greenwood Lodge No. 29, Knights of Pythias, was instituted April 11, 1900, by H. C. Holden, D. D. G. C. The lodge is in a most excellent financial condition and has a membership of 65. Its furnishings and regalia have cost $1,000, and the lodge has $850 in cash. The following is a list of those who have filled the principal chair since its institution in this town: T. T. Abbott, J. H. Macfarlane, D. A. McKenzie, Max Berger, N. L. McLeod, A. D. Hallett, K. C. B. Frith, Chas. Dunne, A. S. Embree, Chas. Pittock, L. Bruce Hodge, Jas. Cameron, A. F. Thomas, Martin Anderson, Frank Steel, A. J. Morrison, Wm. Rowe, J. W. Grier, Wm. J. Thompson, Chas. Birce. The Knights meet on the triangle every Wednesday and will welcome all visiting wearers of the three colors.

SHOW IN TOWN MONDAY NIGHT

Wherever Wilfrid Small, the boy violinist, who is billed to play in Greenwood Auditorium Monday night, under the auspices of Greenwood Fire Department, has appeared, the papers have, one and all, had nothing but nice things to say about him. We so seldom hear any musical artist in Greenwood and this is an opportunity for all to take advantage of. Encourage the boy and get in line. The prices are moderate. Mr. Hook, the pianist, is a brother of H. A. Hook, of the B. C. Copper company staff.

ENGLISH WOMEN BECOMING CRAZY

The latest mad scheme of the crazy English suffragettes is so appallingly criminal, that unless prompt measures to curb their unrulyness are adopted at once, many of them will land in Jail, and the Prime Minister of Great Britain will be caused a great sorrow. Their lunacy is to try to kidnap the Asquith children, to force the passing of the woman's suffrage bill.

WE ARE FRIENDS

At the dinner given to Grand Admiral Von Koestner, Germany's representative at the Hudson Fultou celebration, the evenings exchange of courtesies, compliments and assurances of peace and goodwill was brought to a dramatic climax. Admiral of the fleet, Sir Edward Seymour took occasion to pay some glowing tributes to the German Grand Admiral. "As an Englishman" he said. "I am anxious to see the British navy all that it should be. Der Grosz Admiral is rightly anxious to see the German navy all that it should be. We look admiringly across the North sea at the German sailors, and I think they look over with the same spirit of admiration at us. We are friends."

GALLANT PEARY

A Greenland clergyman named Ludwigs, who is a member of the Cape York mission and is acquainted with Dr. Cook and Commander Peary, has opened a campaign against the later, reiterating some old allegations as to his ill-treatment of the Eskimos. Among other charges he alleges that Commander Peary once deserted a band of women and children on the ice without food because they hindred the rapid advancement of his expedition.

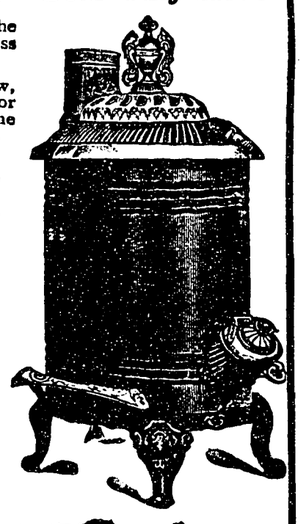
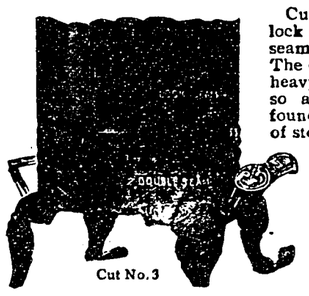
Greatest of All Wood Stoves
That's Cole's Air-Tight—and We Can Prove It—Sold Only Here
The patented construction of Cole's Original Air-Tight Wood Stove makes the use of stove putty or cement unnecessary. It is practically one piece and jointless and is guaranteed to remain air-tight always.
This means perfect control over the fire through the drafts. It means a slow, economical combustion and that the fire holds over night with dry wood chips or cobs. It means that you do not have to get up in the cold to build a new fire in the morning, but simply turn on the draft, put in a little fresh fuel, and the room is heated up in five minutes.
See the patented compound hinge, illustrated by cut No. 2. This is just like the hinge on a pump cylinder valve. It allows the perfectly milled and ground surfaces of the ash door and door frame to touch evenly at all points and makes the ash door water tight. The heat cannot warp the hinge or the ash door and it takes only the natural law of gravitation to keep it closed and air-tight at all times. It also makes the stove perfectly safe from sparks and coals, as it closes automatically.


Cole's Air-Tight
$3 and Up
The patented steel collar connecting the elbow casting to the body of the stove, also shown by cut No. 2, holds the casting firmly and evenly to the body at all points, does away with the use of stove putty and makes an everlasting tight joint. Also note the patented steel collar stamped out from the lining to protect the draft joint. This gives thorough protection to the front of the stove, where imitation stoves first burn out. These are patented features which cannot be used on other stoves.


Cut No. 3
Cut No. 3 shows the water tight lock seam in the body and the double seam at the bottom—both water tight. The cast top is fitted to the body under heavy pressure by our special method so as to make the tightest top joint found on any wood stove, and the use of stove putty unnecessary.
It will pay you to buy the ORIGINAL COLE'S AIR-TIGHT WOOD STOVE for your home. It means COMFORT, CONVENIENCE, CLEANLINESS and a saving of about one-half your usual fuel bill.

TAG DAY

Sacred Heart Hospital

Today is Tag Day. Don't let this opportunity pass by of denying yourself a plug of T. & B, a choice cigar or a wet. Give your quarter cheerfully today for the hospital, and help a good cause. It is not only the local hospital you are helping—it is every hospital, for the spirit shown today in Greenwood will be copied in other places, and your quarter will come back to you in a thousand and one ways.

Then, tonight, there is a free concert for Tag wearers—that itself is worth two bits and more—and you are invited by the pretty girl who sells you your tag. So come along. Ante up!

CONCLUSIONS

It is a grave mistake to jump at conclusions. Things are not what they seem. Often they are not what we would have them seem. Because a man omits to greet us with his usual effusive handshake and we see him pass by without his customary smile and "howdy," it is up to us to conclude that he has worries of his own (may be he is married), and not immediately jump to the conclusion that he's sore at us. Because a lady friend neglects to bow, don't imagine it's intentional—till it happens again—for may be she has forgotten her hat pins and is worrying if it is "on straight." And when a man, who owes us some filthy lucre, doesn't come round, as he said he would, on next pay day, remember that probably he's not a liar or a thief, but maybe he's met someone else who also has a claim, on his way to our office. And when we hear that so and so is so terribly shocking, etc., etc., it maybe the reciter of the sad news has jumped too high to a conclusion, and our friend is, after all, like the devil, not as bad as he's painted.

NEWSPAPER SUPPORT

When we speak of any newspaper as being a Liberal or Conservative organ, it has been popularly supposed that that implies a blind support of the Liberal or Conservative party, in all or any legislation or policy the particular party may adopt. In most cases this supposition is only too correct. The average newspaper, like the average man, has supported its side through thick and thin, often blindly following the lead of other similarly thick and thin supporters, just because it happened to be on that side of politics, and quite outside of the fact that the particular piece of legislation or policy met with its views.

The day is passed for this kind of blind support from any free thinking man or newspaper. Now our days we look into what the party is doing, or is about to do, for us. We vote for a good man, socially as well as politically, often directly against our personal political leanings, for the benefit of the community and for the good of the district in which we live. Thinking men support the man now instead of blindly voting for a party—and to the voters in this Riding, we appeal to do the same. Send a good representative of either party to the Coast rather than favor a poor specimen representative of our own private and personal party leaning.

And a newspaper that has the name of certain party inclination would be unworthy the name of a newspaper if it blindly supported any government in all its work, good or bad, and refused to see that the other side had its good points too. A newspaper that will support the best man of one party, however weak he may be, just because he represents that certain party and does not weigh the men and support the ablest man irrespective of his party is hide bound and tied, and a slave. Every paper should be independent and free to act for the best interests of the district, and not tied to follow any other line of reasoning than that which points to the improvement of conditions in the riding in which it tries to earn a living

The strength of a child.

It is surprising to find how few parents know the great strength giving qualities of good oatmeal. Most of them think of it as a food for the sturdy and brawny man, and overlook its value as a food for children. Every now and then a mother will take to feeding her children on Quaker Oats and will be astonished at their improvement in strength and vigor. Of course, she tells her friends, and they prove it for themselves, but every mother in the country should see that her children are strong and vigorous. Plenty of Quaker Oats, eaten often, will do it.

Put up in two sizes, the regular package and the large family size, which is more convenient for those who do not live in town. The large package contains a piece of handsome china for the table. Making Quaker Oats is a Canadian industry.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

the great knoblike rock. He went to it, picked it up and looked at it closely.

"Jessica!" he whispered. The name clung about him. The very leaves repeated it in music. He had a curious sensation, as if while she spoke that very name had half framed itself in some curtained recess of his thought. He pressed the handkerchief to his face. The faint perfume it exhaled, like the dust of dead roses, gave him a ghostly impression of the familiar.

He struck his forehead sharply with his open hand.

"Fool!" he said, with a bitter laugh. "Fool!"

Chapter 20

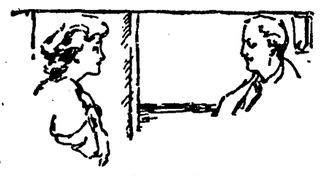
OVER the sanitarium on the ridge sleep had descended. On its broad grounds there was no light of moon or stars, and its chamber windows were dark save where here and there the soft glow of a night lamp sifted through a shutter. The evening had closed gloomily, breeding storm.

Before Jessica extinguished the light she searched in a drawer and found her wedding ring—the one she had worn for less than an hour. When she crept into bed the ring was on her finger. She had fallen asleep with her cheek resting on it.

She awoke with a start, with a vague, inexplicable uneasiness, an instinct that the night had voiced an unusual sound. She sat up in bed, staring into the dark depths of the room. Her instant thought had been of David Stires, but the tiny bell on the wall whose wire led to his bedroom was not vibrating. She listened a moment, but there was only a deep silence. Slipping out of bed, she crossed the room and parted the curtain from before the tall French window. The room was on the ground floor and the window gave directly on the lawn. While she gazed there came a sudden yellow flare of lightning, and far distant mutter of thunder spoke behind the hills.

Still, with the unreasoning uneasiness holding her, she groped to the door, drew the bolt and looked out into the wide, softly carpeted hall, lighted dimly by a lamp set just at the turn of the staircase. All at once a shiver ran through her. There, a dozen steps away, the light full upon him, stood the man who filled her thoughts.

He stood perfectly still, without movement or gesture, gazing at her



He stood perfectly still.

She could see his face distinctly, silhouetted on the pearl gray wall. It wore an expression of strained concern and of deep helplessness. The instant agitation and surprise blotted the puzzle of his presence there. She forgot that it was the dead of night; that she was in her nightgown. It flashed across her mind that some near and desperate trouble had befallen him. All the protective and maternal in her love welled up. She went quickly toward him.

He did not move or stir, and then she realized that, though his eyes seemed to look at her, it was with a passive, tranced fixity. They saw nothing. He was asleep.

She halted, a deep compassion and a painful wonderment holding her, feeling with a thrill the power she possessed over him. Then, like a cold wave, surged over her a numbing sense of his position. How had he entered? Had he broken locks like a burglar? The situation was anomalous. What should she do? Waked abruptly, the result might be disastrous. Discovered, his presence there when all slumbered, suspected as he had been, would be ruinous. She must get him away, out of the house, and quickly.

A breath of cool air swept past her, putting out the lamp—an outer door was open. At the same instant she heard steps beyond the curve of the hall, Dr. Brent's voice peremptory and inquiring. Her nerves chilled. He blocked the sole avenue of retreat. No, there was one other, and only one—a single way to shield him. Quiet and resourceful now, though her cheeks were hot, she took the hand of the unconscious man, drew him silent and unresisting into the friendly shadow of her room, closed the door noiselessly and bolted it.

For a moment she stood motionless, her heart beating violently. Had he been seen? Or had the open door created an alarm? Releasing his hand gently, she found her way softly to a stand, lighted a tiny night taper and threw a shawl about her. A sudden confusion tingled through her veins, a sense of maidenly shame, opposing the sweet reminder of their real relationship—was he not in fact her husband?—that lay ever beneath her thought to justify and explain.

Suddenly, in the tense silence of the room, the mantel clock struck 3 in deep chime, like the vibration of a faroff church bell. The tone was not loud—indeed, the low roll of the thunder had been well nigh as loud—but there was in the intrusive metallic cadence a peculiar suggestion to the dormant mind. It penetrated the crust of sleep. It touched the inner ear of the conscious intelligence. Harry started, a shudder ran through his frame, he swayed dizzily, his hand went to his forehead.

In the instant of shocked awakening Jessica was at his side in an agony of apprehension, her arm thrown about him, her hand pressed across his lips, her lips at his ear in an agonized warning:

"Hush! Do not speak! It is I, Jessica! Make no noise!"

She felt her wrist caught in a grasp that made her wince. His whole body was trembling violently. "Jessica!" he said in a painfully articulated whisper. "You? Where am I?"

"This is my room," she breathed. "You have been walking in your sleep. Make no sound. We shall be heard."

A low exclamation broke from his lips. He looked bewilderedly about him, his eyes returning to her face with a horrified realization. "I—came here—to your room?" The voice was scarcely audible.

"It was I who brought you here. You were in the hall. You would have been found. The house is roused."

He turned abruptly to the door, but she caught his arm. "What are you going to do? You will be seen!"

"So much the better. It will be at my proper measure—as a prowler, a housebreaker, a disturber of honest sleep!"

"No, no!" she protested in a panic. "You shall not. I will not have you taken for what you are not. I know. But they would not know. No one must see you leave this room. Do you not think of me?"

He caught his breath hard. "Think of you!" he repeated huskily. "Is there even an hour when I do not think of you? Is there a day when I would not die to serve you? Yet in my very sleep"—

He paused, gazing at her where she stood in the half light, a misty, uncertain figure. She was curiously happy. The delicious and pangless sense of guilt, however—the guilt of the hidden, not the blameworthy thing—that was tingling through her was for him a shrinking and acute self reproach.

She was silent. "Forgive me," he said, "if you can. I—I can never forgive myself. How can I best go?"

For answer she moved to the window, slender and wraithlike. He followed silently. As she parted the curtain a second of bright lightning revealed the landscape, the dark hedges and clustered trees. It blackened, and she drew him back, with a hushed word, pointing where a lantern was flashing through the shrubbery.

"It is a watchman," she said. "He will be gone presently."

"God help me!" he whispered, the pent passion of his dreams rushing to utterance. "Why did I ever see your face? I was reckless and careless then. I had damned the decent side of me that now is quivering alive. I have tried to blot your face from my memory, but it is useless. I shall always see it."

On the lawn just outside the window low voices were heard through the increasing rain. They passed, and after a moment he softly unlatched the window.

"Goodby," he said.

She stretched out her hand. He touched it, then drew the window wide. As he stepped noiselessly down on to the springy turf the lightning flashed again, a pale green glow that seemed almost before her face. She drew back, and the same instant, through the thunder, the electric bell on the wall rang sharply. She threw on her dressing gown, thrust her feet into slippers and hastened from the room.

The same flash that had startled Jessica lighted brightly the physician and the watchman, who stood at the corner of the building, having finished their tour of inspection. It was the latter who had found the open door and who had aroused the doctor, insisting that he had seen a man in the hall. The other had poohpoohed this, but now by the lightning both saw the figure emerge from the French window and disappear in the darkness.

They ran back, the physician ahead. The window was not locked, and they stepped through it into an empty room.

"To be sure!" said the doctor disgustedly. "He was here all the time, heard us searching the halls and took the first unlocked door he found. Miss Holme, no doubt, is sitting up with Mr. Stires. Not a word of this," he added as they walked along the hall.

He barred the outer door behind the watchman and went on. As he reached David Stires' room the door opened, and Jessica came out. She spoke to him in a low, anxious voice. "I was coming for you," she said. "I am afraid he is not so well. I cannot rouse him. Will you come in and see what you can do?"

The doctor entered, and a glance at his patient alarmed him. Until dawn he sat with Jessica watching. When the early sunlight was flooding the room, however, David Stires opened his eyes and looked upon her quite naturally.

"Where is Harry Sanderson?" he asked. "I thought he was here."

She looked at him with a forced smile. "You have been dreaming," she answered.

"I suppose so," he said, with a sigh, "but it was very real. I thought he came in and spoke your name."

She stroked his hand. "It was fancy, dear."

He lay silent a moment. Then he said, "If it could only have been Harry you married instead of Hugh, for he loved you, Jessica."

She flushed as she said, "Ah, that was fancy too."

It was the first time since the day of her marriage that he had spoken Hugh's name.

Chapter 21

AS Harry made his way down the mountain in the blank and heavy dark, correcting his path by the lightning, he had faced squarely the question that in that dim room had become an imminent demand.

"What if I love her! What right have I to love her, with a wretched name like mine? She has refinement, a measure of wealth no doubt, and I am poor as poverty, dependent on the day's grubbing in the ditch for tomorrow's bacon and flour. Yet that would not stand in the way. I am no venal rogue, angling for the loaves and fishes. Whatever else she cursed me with, nature gave me a brain, and culture and experience have educated it. With hand or brain I can hew my own niche to stand in."

So he had argued, but his argument ended always with the same stern and unanswerable conclusion: "To drag her down in order to lift myself! Because she pities me—pity is akin to love—shall I take advantage of her interest and innocence?"

In the cabin through the long hours till the dawn began to infiltrate the dark hollows of the wood he had lain wide eyed, thinking. When day came he had cooked his breakfast and thereafter sat watching the havoc of the storm through the window. Hours passed thus before the fury of the wind had spent itself. At length he rose, threw open the door and stood looking out upon the wind whipped foliage and the drab desolation of the fog. Then he threw on his mackinaw coat, picked up his gold pan and climbed down the slope. Beneath all other problems must lie the sordid problem of his daily food. He had uncovered a crevice in the bed rock at the end of his trench the day before, and now he scraped a pailful of the soggy gravel it contained and carried it back to the cabin.

With a sigh he took off his damp coat and threw a log on the fire. He abstractedly watched it kindle, then filled and lit his pipe and turned to the book shelf. He ran his hand absently along the row. Where had been that wide, dim expanse of library walls that hovered like a mirage beyond his visual sight? He chose a volume he had been reading and turned the pages.

All at once his hand clinched. He gave a choked cry. He was staring at a canceled bank draft bearing his own name—a draft across whose face was written in the cramped hand resembling the signature a word that seemed etched in livid characters of shame—"Forgery!"

"Pay to Hugh Stires—the sum of $5,000." He read the phrase in a hoarse, husky monotone, every vein beating fiercely, his body hot with the heat of a forge. There it was, a hideous chapter of it, the damnable truth from which he had shrunk!

Did the town know? He snatched at the draft and read the date. More than a year ago, and it had been presented for payment in a distant city, the city near which he had been picked up beside the railroad track. The forged name was the same as his own. Who was David Stires? His father? Had that city been his home once and that infamous act the forerunner of his flight or exile? He looked at the paper again with painful intentness. It was canceled, therefore had been paid without question. Yet the man it had robbed had stamped it with that venomous hallmark. Clearly the law had not stepped in, for here he was at liberty, owning his name. He had been let go, then, disowned, to carry his badge of crime here into the wilderness! And how had he lived since then?

"Forgery!"

He stumbled to a chair and sat down, his frame rigid. He thought of the robbed sluice in the gulch below, of his own unhappy adventure of the night. How could he tell what he had done—what he might do? Minutes went by as he sat motionless, his mind catching strange kaleidoscopic pictures that fled past him into the void. At length he rose and went to the window. Far down the hillside a faint line through the mist spanned the gulch bottom. A groan burst from his lips.

"That is the hydraulic flume," he said aloud. "Gold has been stolen there in the past again and again. Some was stolen two nights ago. How do I know but that I am the thief?" Was that what Prendergast had meant by the "safe way to beat the game?" A shiver ran over him. "How do I know!" he thought. "I can see myself—the evil side of me—when the dark had fallen waking and active. I see myself creeping down there, stealing from shadow to shadow, to scoop the gold from the riffles when the moon is under a cloud. I see men sitting from dark to daylight with loaded rifles across their knees watching. I see a flash of fire. I hear a report. I see myself there by the sluice boxes, dead, shot down in the act of a thief, making good the name men know me by!"

The figure of Jessica came before him, standing in her soft white gown, her hand against her cheek and the jasmine odors about her. The dream

MINES AND MINING

F. A. Ross, late manager of the Nickle Plate mine, has gone to Mexico.

The total output of Ontario mines for the past six months of the year was $10,649,923.

J. Parke Channing is examining the Miami and New Keystone properties at Globe, Ariz.

John Bentley has recorded four claims on a high iron deposit on San Juan Island.

R. R. Hedley, former smelter manager at Nelson, has been visiting the mines at Kamloops, last week.

The Aurora mine, at Movie, has shipped its first car under the new management and more will follow. Two shifts are working.

Work on the Elkhorn mine, which is almost within Greenwood city limits, has been resumed by the Boundary Mining & Exploration Co. Limited.

The Silver mines of Cobalt were discovered by Walter McQuat, as long ago as 1873. The report was pigeon-holed. What a lesson in red tapeism this is.

Summit Camp, the mining centre which is now attracting attention, at the headwaters of the Tulameen river, has ore that assays in the hundreds. The ore from the Celtic Chief is galena carrying values in gold, silver, copper and lead. The first claim was staked in Summit Camp in 1891.

The fourth annual meeting of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting company of Canada, which operates the Snowshoe and other mines at Phoenix was held last Tuesday in Toronto. The company will increase its capitalization from five million to seven million five hundred thousand dollars.

The joint session of the American Institute of Mining Engineers and the Western Branch of the Canadian Mining Institute, held in Spokane on Oct. 6, was a decided success. E. Jacobs read a paper on coal resources and mining in Alberta. Amongst those present were several mining men from the Boundary, Frederic Keffer, H. P. Dickinson, A. B. W. Hodges, and M. D. McIntosh.

Wonderful are the rapid changes the discovery of gold makes in a region, Take Goldfield, Nev., for example. Our recollections of it are of arriving there in a blinding sandstorm with eyes, nose, ears and every stitch of clothing filled with sand. The name Sandstorm seemed appropriately give to one of its now prosperous mines. A few tents, barren and inhospitable looking rocks, sagebrush, unlimited sand and a few prospect holes was what there was a very few years ago of Goldfield. Today it is the seat chosen for the American Mining Congress.

Miners on the upper Kougarok river in the district of that name have uncovered an immensely rich paystreak ten miles long and hundreds of feet wide on the river bed. The exceedingly light rainfall this summer made it possible for the miners to uncover the gold. Heretofore it has been imposible to determine the values. Cautious mining men declare that the new strike is better than the Anvil creek diggings in the early days and that the future holds great promises. In their opinion the district will undoubtly be the richest and bigest producer on all Seward peninsula. One nugget found is worth more than $700. The new discovery has been known only a short time and the news of the rich find is sure to cause a big stampede from Nome to the upper Kougarok.

ELECTION TIME

During an election a man walking along a quiet street was startled to see a house door suddenly opened, and a man fall bumping down to the sidewalk. Picking him up the pedestrian asked what was the matter.

"That's my club in there," said the human projectile. "It's a political club; there are nine Jones men in there and I'm for Smith. They threw me out. But don't worry. I'm going in and clean 'em all out. You stand here and count 'em."

In he went, and, sure enough, in a minute the door burst open, and a figure cleared the steps without touching.

"One!" said the spectator, holding up a finger.

"Hold on!" said the prostrate one; "don't begin to count yet This is only me again!"

A contemporary points out that King Edward is actually a clergyman of the Church of England, that his Majesty is in good standing, being a prebendary of St. David's in Wales, drawing the munificent salary of $5 a year, and may preach one sermon a year in his cathedral. Under the circumstances, surely, the King is to be commended for forbearance. His nephew the Kaiser would never permit such opportunities to pass unimproved. The King has evidently more regard for his parishioners than many licenced preachers of less exalted degree.

Only 10 votes against the Nelson tramway bylaw were cast. There were 259 votes cast for the proposed up to date street railway system, It is a safe bet that 9 out of the 10 were hopeless cripples or deformed and that the remaining one owns a monoplane, which accounts for their having no use for the cars

SCOUTS PATROL SONG

Mr. Rudyard Kipling has written a "patrol song," for the Boy scouts, of which two verses run thus.

Look out for the birds of the air,
Look out for the beast of the field.
They'll tell you how and where
The other side's concealed
When the blackbird bolts from the copse,
And the cattle are staring about,
The wise commander stops
And—all patrols look out!

Lock out when your front is clear,
And you feel you are bound to win,
Look out for your flank and your rear—
For that's where surprises begin.
For the rustle that isn't a rat,
For the splash that isnt a trout,
For the boulder that may be a hat
All patrols look out!

The second national apple show will be held in Spokane the middle of next month. All apple growing districts of the Northwest are making plans to maintain the records established last year, and the competition promises to be keen. The orchards of the Middle West and eastern states are to be more widely represented, according to indications. The new king of fruits will be fittingly honored by the energetic people of the Falls city.

If the average man doesn't get all that's coming to him he is lucky.

According to the government's new contract with the Great Northern Railway, mail is to be whizzed across the continent like chained lightning. The new time from St. Paul to Seattle is 47½ hours, or 15 hours less than the previous best time. This brings the time from coast to coast down to three and a half days. This will be a great benefit to the commercial interests of the Northwest. The new contract is for a period of four years and is worth $2,000,000.

A BOON TO MOTHERS

When children are injured!

Children are always sustaining cuts, bruises, burns etc., and not, infrequently contract ringworm, scalp diseases, and similar skin troubles at school. Mothers will find Zam-Buk without equal for all these accidents and diseases.

Mrs. Thomas Allen, 156, Water Street, St. Mary's (Ont.), says—"My daughter Mildred, 4 years old, was severly burned by falling on a hot flat iron. She was burned on the heel, instep, and on the thigh very badly I at once applied Zam Buk, which eased the pain, and in the course of a few days the wounds were thoroughly healed."

Mrs. George Aldridge, 12, Louise Street, Stratford, says—"While playing barefooted about the yard my son Bertram, 6 years old, stepped on a broken glass bottle, which cut very deeply into his big toe. The cut was so deep that I sent for a doctor and had the foot properly dressed, the doctor leaving a lotion to be applied daily. Under this treatment, however, the wound seemed to get no better, but on the contrary inflammation set in. A kindly neighbour then recommended Zam-Buk. We obtained a supply, and after a few applications the child seemed to rest better, and the pain was very much reduced. In a few days, under the Zam-Buk treatment, the wound assumed a better appearance, and from that time healing was very rapid. Inflammation and soreness were finally completely banished and in ten days from the first application of Zam-Buk, we took the bandages from the foot. I feel sure that but for Zam-Buk the child would have had a very bad time, and might have had to sacrifice the toe."

Not only for cuts, burns, bruises, etc., is Zam-Buk effective, but also for serious skin diseases such as eczema, ringworm, ulcers, etc. It also cures poisoned sores, chronic wounds, bad leg, piles, festering sores, chapped hands, cold sores, frost bite, and all skin injuries and diseases. Druggists and stores everywhere sell at 50c. a box or post free for price from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto; 3 boxes $1.25. You are warned against harmful imitations sometimes represented to be "just as good."
