One Year of Hog Raising In Alberta

(By N. K. SORENSON, Markerville, Alta.)

As many of the local fruit growers are raising hogs and more are contemplating doing so, we publish the following article, which deals with hog raising:

I use in my hog business eight acres of land bordering upon the Medicine river. The slope towards the river is covered with brush, and the rest of the land is partly in native grass and partly seeded down with mixed grain for pasturage, which is a great help to keep pigs in good growing condition.

The principal building provides pens for some 50 hogs, and in one end of it I have a feed room with tanks for storing water and buttermilk. The feed room is surrounded on three sides by feeding yards fenced in and they are arranged so that hogs of nearly the same size are fed together. Outside of the regular feed yards I have other buildings used principally for brood sows whenever I find it advisable to separate them from the rest; while these as well as straw stacks are available for farrowing quarters, the sows seem to prefer farrowing in the bushes in summer.

My bunch of hogs is of the Yorkshire breed, bred from registered stock and consisted in February, 1909, of 1 boar, 13 sows and 27 young hogs for fattening. During the year the brood sows had 17 litters, totalling 138 pigs of splendid vitality, farrowed as follows: 8 litters in March, 5 in May and 4 in August. I bought 65 half-grown hogs for fattening between September 11th and November 15th, 1909. In February last I had 35 pregnant sows and 2 boars, having sold altogether 207 head during the year. During pregnancy the sows are fed on oats; otherwise barley is the staple grain ration. In my experience the young pigs show less vitality when their dams have been fed largely on barley.

Separate feeding yards are provided for the small pigs where they can always find barley, whole or ground, and fresh buttermilk. It is very important to have the small pigs feeding well when they are weaned, and they should be fed liberally so as to keep a clean skin and a good appearance, without being fat.

Annual School Meeting

The annual school meeting will be held in the new schoolhouse at 10 a.m. on Saturday, July 16th. Business: "The matter of having teachers' salaries increased, also the question of clearing and improving the school yard." All ratepayers are requested to attend this meeting.

The Men are Ready

The sporting match advertised between Messrs. J. W. Williams and J. J. Atherton will begin tomorrow, Saturday. At 10k. the contestants will play a game of billiards, 250 up, at Sam Hatfield's billiard saloon; at 11k. they will contest a mile walking match, starting from the post office and going a half-mile as far as Crawford's corner and return; at 11.45 they will run a hundred yards level race on the Erickson road; at 5 p.m. they will play a game of tennis, 3 sets; at 6 p.m. they will play two innings at single-wicket cricket; at 10 p.m. they will meet at the Opera House in a four-round sparring match for points. This event will be sandwiched in between the advertised sparring matches, Coserta v. Beam and Smith v. Dunnett.

THREE YEARS IN PENITENTIARY

FOR STABBING YOUNG WOMAN FRIEND AT PRINCE RUPERT

CRIME COMMITTED WHILST UNDER INFLUENNCE OF VILE LIQUOR OBTAINED AT "BLIND PIG"

VICTORIA, B. C., July 12—Edward Leighton, a youth of eighteen, who, made mad for the nonce by indulgence in potations of fiery wood alcohol and tobacco juice in one of the many "blind pigs" that have proven the curse of Prince Rupert in its no-license days, stabbed Lillian Calvert, a young woman friend, has reached the penitentiary at New Westminster, to which he has been sentenced for three years by His Honor Judge Young. The prisoner made a full and piteous confession, ascribing his action wholly to the influence of the vile stuff, designated as whisky, which was sold to him by one "Teddy" Kruzner, proprietor of a soft drinks shop, who, like many others, has been taking advantage of human nature and the absence of licensed and regulated hotels in the G. T. P. city, to carry on a secret and illicit traffic, incomparably more harmful to the community and more difficult to control in its relation to the breeding of crime in secret. This phase of the liquor traffic problem was very energetically and pertinently commented upon by Judge Young in passing sentence.

"I only regret," said His Honor, "that there is not sufficient evidence now before me to convict this man Kruzner, for, in my opinion, a severe sentence ought to be imposed upon him. I realize it is exceedingly difficult under prevailing conditions for the officers of the law to keep a strict watch upon these stealthy drinking places, and I hope they will be even more active in doing so in the future. As for Kruzner, if he has any conscience at all, it should be a punishment for him to reflect upon all the misery and suffering that his dealings have brought about."

The experience of the police at Prince Rupert during the no-license period preceding its incorporation as a city with self-governing powers, and its adoption of the license principle as generally prevailing in this province, is not one that is likely to be cited by advocates of change in British Columbia's system of dealing with the liquor traffic. Despite the utmost activity of the police "blind pigs" and "holes-in-the-wall" have sprung up and flourished until ferreted out by the law. These vile resorts—hidden away from the public view, dealing in alcoholic drugs and poisons of the vilest description, and subject to none of the official supervision and surveillance inevitable under the licensed system—have proven fruitful breeding places of disorder. According to Superintendent Hussey, the "blind pig" offers opportunities in crime and difficulties for the police which are, happily, uncommon in the extreme in British Columbia. In Prince Rupert alone no less a sum than $5,100 was recently collected in fines as the result of a special campaign against these underground boozing dens, to deal with which a special force of outside detectives had to be employed. At least three crimes of serious character are directly traceable, and these it is said, would in all probability have been impossible under ordinary circumstances had the common license and regulation system of the province prevailed.

The Ducrest Stump Puller

Realizing that the clearing of land at Creston is a burning question with local fruit growers, the Creston Publishing Company has accepted the agency for the famous Ducrest stump puller for the Creston district. Read the following descriptions of the stump puller and the signed testimonials of well-known ranchers at the coast, and then if you have any land to clear, call at the REVIEW office and give us your order for a stump puller that is guaranteed to pull stumps.

All our Ducrest stump pullers are delivered to the station or wharf free of charge, but the purchaser of each machine has to pay the freight from Seattle to his nearest station, or from Victoria to his nearest station.

The Ducrest stump puller No. 2 outfit is the one all the contractors are using with great success. This machine is a great money maker for any one wanting to go into the business of contracting.

The No. 1 Ducrest stump puller outfit is lighter, less room in the drum and less wire rope than No. 2 outfit, but No. 1 will pull out just as large stumps with one horse as the No. 2 outfit. Of course a person with the No. 2 outfit will do a little more work every day than with No. 1, because he has more room in the drum and more cable, which renders more advantage.

A Ducrest stump puller does not wear out by pulling 50 to 100 acres of green stumps or trees. Our Ducrest stump puller does not show any wearing at all by pulling 200 acres of green stumps or trees.

Upon request we will mail you the name and address of a few persons, who, after using their Ducrest stump puller in over 100 acres of green standing trees pulled with the same machine, being sold to a neighbor after all that work had been done, for the same amount of money that the first purchaser paid for it when it was purchased, new. We can name many persons, who, after finishing clearing stumps in their farms, have sold their machine for nearly what they paid for it when the machine was purchased, new.

A person who has cleared over 100 acres of stumps and trees with a machine in one lap, must have some experience, especially if he had never hurt man or horse, and you can take his advice about land clearing. But take notice, Mr. Ducrest, the patentee of the Ducrest

OPENING FOR A BOX FACTORY AT CRESTON

AN ATTRACTIVE INDUSTRY IS OPEN FOR INSTALLATION—FACTS AND FIGURES OF THE BUSINESS

There is a good opening at Creston for a box factory. At present all the fruit growers in this district as well as those residing along the Kootenay lake are at present compelled to send to the coast for their fruit boxes. Some rather interesting figures have been obtained in connection with this matter.

In the first place there is no box factory between the coast and Calgary, and practically all the fruit boxes used in this district come from New Westminster, B. C. These strawberry and raspberry crates cost, laid down in Creston, approximately 47c. each, whereas if a local box factory were doing business here these boxes could be turned out at 30 cents each and then the box factory would make a good profit. If a box factory were installed at Creston, apple boxes could be turned out at 14 cents each, while tomato, cucumber and plum boxes could be made for 8 or 9 cents each, and rhubarb and vegetable boxes at 14 cents each. Five thousand dollars would be ample cash required to instal a box factory. In addition to the manufactury of the various kinds of fruit boxes at this factory the mill man could, as a side issue, make window and door frames, also ornamental and bracket work for the outside of dwellings. He could also carry doors and windows in stock. Here is a grand opening and Creston is just ripe to receive this box factory industry. In the Creston and Kootenay lake districts alone this season over 50,000 fruit boxes were required and this handsome number will increase greatly each year.

It is strongly recommended that a medium sized box factory be installed; one to make three to five hundred boxes daily. A factory of this kind would employ three men and two boys. It must be remembered that in making these boxes various kinds of wood are needed; for instance, strawberry and raspberry crates want to be made out of spruce or cottonwood, while the apple boxes need spruce and pine. The tomato, cucumber and plum boxes can be made out of any kind of cheap lumber. All of the above kinds of timber abounds around Creston. However, in the making of these boxes, the lumber used is a secondary consideration, as the main cost is in the labor.

A box factory established at Creston can make money from its installation, and if it is started by an experienced man, a very large and lucrative industry will follow. Situated as Creston is with such very excellent transportation facilites, and being the hub of such a great fruit district and being immediately tributary to the numerous fruit ranches along Kootenay lake and also around Nelson, a box factory established here would be highly favored in the important matter of shipping the boxes, as two railways and the steamboat lake service can be used in distributing the boxes to the various fruit ranches.

This matter has been carefully investigated and to a man of enterprise and experience a golden opportunity for a box factory at Creston awaits him.

Parties interested in this industry who want further particulars can communicate with Mr. P. B. Fowler, hon. secretary of the Creston Board of Trade, or with the Secretary of the Fruit Growers' Association, Mr. W. S. Watson.

This Week's Social Events

An enjoyable time was spent last Thursday evening at the progressive whist party given by the Misses Johnson for their sister, Margaret, who recently arrived home to spend her summer vacation. On this occasion five tables of progressive whist players played according to Hoyle till the end of the tournament, when the first lady's prize was awarded to Miss Howarth, while A. S. FitzGerald won the first gentleman's prize. The lady's booby prize was won by Mrs. Spiker, while Percy Watson was presented with the gentleman's booby prize. After the whist tournament refreshments were served, vocal and instrumental music being interspersed during the evening by Mrs. Rose, Messrs. Graham, Gibbs and others, while Mrs. Darbyshire gave an amusing recitation in fine style. During the evening dancing was indulged in. The invited guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Rose, Mr. and Mrs. C. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Hayman, Mr. and Mrs. Darbyshire, Mr. and Mrs. Mallandaine, Mr. and Mrs. Heath, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Hobden, Mr. and Mrs. Bevan, Mrs. Spiker, Miss Opie, Miss Wilkes, Miss Moore, Miss Howarth, Messrs. A. S. FitzGerald, McBean, Keath, Gibbs, Callander, R. S. Gibbs, McLeod, Freeze, Greenlee, Percy and Reggie Watson, Broderick, Graham, and Taylor.

The girls' party given by Mrs. Mallendaine on Thursday afternoon, owing to the excessive heat, was not quite as well attended as it might have been; but those who did attend spent a portion of the afternoon in an enjoyable manner.

Last Tuesday evening a most enjoyable little party was given by Miss M. Moore at the residence of Mr. C. Moore, in honor of Miss Margaret Johnson. On this occasion the program of the evening's amusements consisted of whist, music and dancing. Miss Margaret Moore, who acted as hostess, proved herself an admirable entertainer, and all who were fortunate enough to be present spent an enjoyable evening.

FOR WOMEN.

Parasol Displays from Paris.

Parasol makers have evidently considered that it was their turn to produce something weird and queer, and admirably have they succeeded in their ambition.

The materials employed are wonderfully pretty. It is the new shapes that are so awe-inspiring. Take, for instance, the square parasol that has only four ribs and is edged with a fringe. Then there is the oblong parasol ,the fourteen rib parasol with big ball tips matching in color the silk covering, the aeroplane, the pagoda, the canopy top, also parasols having a five inch perpendicular edge which are called lampshade parasols. All these forms are radically new and in the most expensive lines are heavily decorated with embroidery.

Always when buying a parasol consider the lights it gives. A green or blue parasol may be good for the eyes, but either shade has a most disastrous effect on the complexion. The rose parasol, unless softened with a sheer white lining, makes the face look scarlet and brings out strongly the dark circles and lines about the eyes. Rose is exceedingly trying to the complexion unless you are young or the skin unusually clear. No woman should put rose to her face unless she is sure—more than sure—that her skin is the proper pink and clear white which it demands if one would wear it successfully. Another parasol point is to carry the chin up. The average woman with a parasol over her head and her chin held low will have an aged look that would surprise one who does not know this little trick of prettiness.

Another trick is to repeat the color of the eyes in the handle of the parasol. The handles usually come near the chin and so near the face that it becomes a part of the color scheme of the complexion. So to make it accord and harmonize it is helpful, indeed, to repeat the color of the eyes somewhere in the handle. This may be done boldly by a bow of chiffon. It is more subtle, however, to suggest blue, or brown, or gray, whatever may be the color of the eyes, by matching the wood to them.

Another important point is to have the parasol large enough. A tiny little sunshade will do for driving and it may answer the purpose when the idea is to merely shade the eyes, but for the promenade, and especially with the large hats that are worn this season, the big parasol is the only on that will do.

Be careful not to carry the same parasol continually. If your gowns are few you can make them look more numerous by the simple trick of changing the parasol. It will give the effect of having changed the color scheme of the entire gown.

Carry your parasol back of your head rather than above it. A parasol held directly over the top of the head gives the face queer shadows. Be careful and do not have the handle too long. The extremely long handles are more for walking than for carrying. Get a parasol with a blowy look. If there are ruffles so much the better. Keep within the fashion, of course, but be sure that there is something that blows softly around the face, for the face needs something softening, no matter how pretty it may be.

Don't carry a dark parasol. The lighter the shade the better. Nobody ever saw a black sunshade that was actually becoming to the face. Nobody ever saw a woman look pretty under a black silk umbrella outside the pages of a popular seller.

Another thing; a parasol has a tendency to make a person look a trifle taller. The short woman can carry one of moderate size and look taller in stature, but the extremely tall woman must approach the subject with caution.

There is an immense variety and some extreme novelties shown in the handles. Most prominent among them is the chantecler idea. Not only are the roosters numbered among the chantecler ideas, but almost every known variety of beast and bird. Then there are handles quaint indeed, having the head of a woman peering forth from beneath a poke bonnet. These as well as the birds and beasts are beautifully colored.

As a rule, however, the handles are covered to match the silk covering or to harmonize with them. They are not, however, the long, shining sticks of last year, but, while equal or longer than last year, have a dull finish and are often cut with six or eight sides. Some attractive handles are in cream colored wood and are more or less carved throughout their entire length and show a slightly deeper tone in the depths. They greatly resemble the carved ivory handles which are so expensive as to make them prohibitive to the average purse.

HERE'S THE TAM O'SHANTER TURBAN.

The turban is and has been so popular that it is almost impossible for the milliner to evolve something new in that line. Here's one, the latest—the Tam O'Shanter.

Coats are buttoned with the side-front effect, which is one of the newest fads.

And seldom do we see the neck-ruining high collar, even on chilly days. In a few months the brown, streaked and withered necks these collars now reveal, will be smooth and clear.

That's what the latest style in collars will do for us!

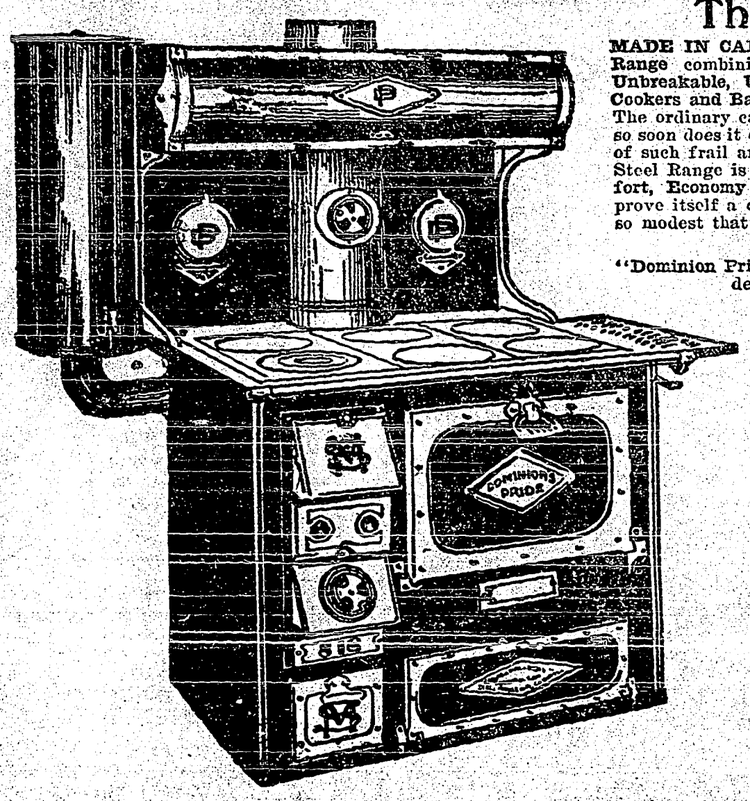
SAVES all MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS



The "Dominion Pride" Range

MADE IN CANADA and is placed on the market in response to a demand for a Range combining the sterling qualities of Malleable Iron and Polished Steel, Unbreakable, Unwarpable, Indestructable, Economical, Design Attractive, Perfect Cookers and Bakers, will Last a Lifetime with Proper Care.
The ordinary cast iron range is at best a disappointing investment to the purchaser, so soon does it exhibit the effects of wear and tear, unavoidable in a range constructed of such frail and brittle material. The Combined Malleable Iron and Blue Polished Steel Range is the nearest approach to Absolute Perfection ever designed for Comfort, Economy and Satisfactory Domestic Service and wherever installed it will prove itself a continual object of Satisfaction. The price at which it is supplied is so modest that it is brought easily within the reach of every prudent family.

GUARANTEE

"Dominion Pride" Ranges are sold on the following Guarantee: If any casting proves defective in twelve months from date of purchase, we will furnish same free of charge. The above Guarantee is very broad, no if's or and's, and any casting that would have a flaw in it that we failed to see in the course of construction, such flaw would show long before the twelve months have transpired when fire is put in range.

INCOMPARABLE OFFER

Our placing direct to the consumer our High Grade "Dominion Pride" Malleable and Polished Steel Range, as fully described in our descriptive circular and guaranteed, for less than you can buy a cast iron range. We are enabled to make this extraordinary offer by our Direct from Factory to Kitchen Plan, which saves the jobbers, retailers, traveling salesmen and their expenses, giving the consumer the benefit of these savings, which in reality enables the consumer to buy as cheap as the wholesale jobber.

PRICE

Why not buy direct from the Manufacturer and save the middlemen's and retailers' profits? "Dominion Pride" Range if sold through the retailer or traveling salesman would have to be sold for $69.00 to $78.00, according to the territory sold in. Our price, direct to the consumer, is as follows: "Dominion Pride" Range, 8-18 or 9-18 top, with high closet shelf and elevated tank or flush reservoir, with piece of zinc to go underneath range, 8 joints of blue polished steel pipe and 2 elbows, delivered to any railway express station in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island for $41.00 (We Pay the Freight), and delivered to any railway express station in Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia for $49.00 (We Pay the Freight), $5.00 to accompany order, the balance to be paid when range is delivered to you. Parrot designs are frequently shown in this season's models, as are also flower designs, the daisy design being the one that is in greatest favor. Crook handles are also being shown more and more. A lovely corn colored parasol has a light wood handle tipped with an ivory crook, and with rather large ivory tips as to the ribs. A silver gray one has a good handle in the same tone also fashioned in the crook end. This vogue of the crook end will no doubt bring into vogue the adoption of the Parisian method of carrying a parasol when not in use. This is to fasten the crook over the left arm, so that the hands are practically free.

Large carved roses are in evidence on mountings stained to match the cover. The Egyptian beetle or scarab is also used.

Several high style novelties are shown in the eight ribbed parasol. The widths of one are deeply curved at the bottom and at the four alternate points triangular points of lace are inserted that appear to project from under the square silk cover of exquisite Dresden design. The handle of this style is a long crook, which can be removed or adjusted on the ferrule end if desired.

Another handsome model was of light green, moderately priced coaching of Japanese design, with broad flap tips of bone to simulate old ivory, and a mount of strong, highly polished bamboo, which also resembled ivory. The handle, of mushroom shape, was of bone, tinted in beautiful opalescent light green. There was absolutely nothing extreme about this model, though particularly smart and attractive. A number of parasols are shown this season fashioned from handkerchiefs, both in silk and cotton.

MILLINERY MEMS.

Wooden Beads, Canvas, Rush and Other Novel Items.

Dead white rush hats are a novelty, simply draped with a printed shantung scarf held in position by a wooden-head ornament; the exquisite shades of the latter must be seen to be appreciated.

Frequently the crowns of these hats are of lace relieved with a pergola of roses, the stems of the flowers forming the trellisework in a very fascinating manner.

Large canvas hats are coming into favor, which look so smart in alliance with simple muslin frocks.

Charlotte Corday hats are now built of net and lace, the brims bordered with black; a rustic wreath encircles the crowns, and a delightful cachet is imparted to the ensemble by black ribbon streamers.

COLOR SCHEME BEAUTY.

Fascinating Effects Noted in the Best of Women's Wear.

Loveliness in color schemes marks the best of the new fashions. Perfect poems are worked out in the fashionable hues. Violet hues serve for one lovely creation, the iris having been the inspiration.

The fuchsia, with its daring blend of crimson and purple, has also been rifled for color schemes, gauzes over gauzes bringing out the tones wanted.

Shot chiffons help out color schemes. A royal blue chiffon powdered with gold dots and made over a royal blue foulard spattered with darker blue spots is artistic in effect. A knot of apple-green ribbon on the bodice gives chic to the gown.

Custom Prescribes Good Form.

(By Elizabeth Van Rensselaer.)

To be an agreeable guest for the brief hour or so of a formal entertainment is not a difficult achievement, but to prove oneself a pleasant and accommodating visitor for the space of a week or a fortnight is the best test of good breeding.

The ideal visitor falls in with the customs of the household as nearly as possible and to find pleasure and occupation in the diversions provided by the host and hostess. The good visitor is not one who, when two courses of action or means of diversion are proposed, answers in a careless manner, "Why, I really don't mind which we do. Whatever you think best, Mrs. Smith, will suit me." A choice having been politely requested, there should be a prompt decision.

Even the dullest little tea party or the most unsuccessful dance should be entered with zest, for though a mental note may be made never to become a guest in this particular household again, it is most unkind and ill bred to let a hint of such a conclusion appear in one's conduct or speech during the visit.

Suppose some pleasure has been planned and for some reason had to be given up. It is the duty of a guest to accept the situation without showing any great disappointment, as well as to make light of any small disagreements that might occur. A hostess is usually mortified over these things; a guest should try to relieve this feeling as far as possible.

It is the guest's duty to be courteous to other visitors under the same roof, to avoid arguments, and to refrain from liberties of any sort. It is a liberty to give the servants any command, to leave books from the host's library with backs stretched and leaves turned down, scattered here and there over the house; to drag drawing room chairs out into the veranda, and to ask for special dishes at meals. It is a liberty to remain at home when the hostess and her family and other guests attend church—unless there is a wide difference of religious belief—and no less is it inconsiderate to insist on attending church when the church is at a great distance and means of conveyance is not easily provided.

A truly considerate guest, whether man or woman, is careful before leaving his or her room in the morning, to hang up or fold away all garments. A woman visitor may well regard it as one of her daily duties to straighten all the articles upon her dressing table when her morning toilet is completed, put soiled clothes in their proper bag or basket, and give her chamber an air of the most exquisite tidiness before leaving her room.

"At what time do you breakfast?" is a question for a guest to ask when bidding the hostess good night after the first day of the visit has expired. Then it is that an explanation is forthcoming as to the domestic habits of the household, and to these habits a good guest will conform willingly. If it is the practice of the family to gather about a breakfast table promptly every morning, then it is bad form for the visitor to disturb her entertainers by forcing them to wait until a slow toilet is completed. Many hostesses in country houses send to the bedroom a tray with a light breakfast in the morning, and the family breakfast table no longer exists. This is considered easier for the household and more comfortable for the guests, who are able to read their mail and attend to correspondence before leaving their rooms.

A host and hostess do not defray any expenses incurred outside of their direct liability as entertainers. If by illness or accident a bill is contracted with the laundress, the doctor or workman or tradesman in the near-by village the guest should previous to departure, see to paying it, or else request her hostess to forward the account as soon as presented.

Colored Embroidery on Blouses.

The new blouse that has a touch of colored embroidery about it is sure to be in favor. One that is stylish either for a plain colored linen or pongee frock, or for a soft, dark silk shirt waist suit is developed with a narrow "walls of Troy" effect that more nearly resembles square tabs.

The blouse is made with eighth of inch tucks set in groups of three, and opens at one side over a knife plaiting of the material, or of a different color. The edge of the opening is cut in the square tabs, embroidered all around to the depth of a quarter of an inch in colored embroidery silk or mercerized cotton.

The frill is of chiffon or soft silk in same color as the band work, or, if the material is used, the edge is scalloped to match the embroidered blocks. In each of the blocks is a small satin stitch dot, while back of the cut-in line is a row of colored buttons.

The sleeve is trimmed with same effect, with embroidered tabs, dots and buttons running from shoulder to wrist, and a narrower frill to match that on waist.

Motor Coats.

The heavier forms of tussore and Shan-tung are, of course, in requisition for motor coats, and in passing one may note how cleverly the dyers have taken the uninteresting tones of dust and, by a tiny tinge of cream or pink or yellow turned them out in attractive shades for the motorist.

Little Helps.

From a discarded hat I took the wire crown, covered it with brown silk, and net over this, to match my hair, leaving a round hole in the lower part to bring the hair through. I fasten it on with wire hairpins, and it works like a charm, without the outlay of one penny for materials. B. F.

We frequently live to be thankful for some of the failures of our youth.

Saved From the Sea

They had paused in the bow-window.

"There is something behind that, fair Helen; there is some hideous conspiracy against my freedom, and you are banding against me—you too, 'mine own familiar friend.'"

"What melting reproach! I was loyal to friendship—only Mrs. Darnley told me in confidence," laughed Helen.

"Which was, of course, meant for telling it in Gath, as you intend doing, only, woman-like, you love to be coaxed and pressed. Tell me quickly, dearest Mrs. Addison—Helen—tell me, an thou carest for me!"

He bent down, melodious voice and velvet eyes so all-persuasive that few women could have resisted even had they wished.

"You are a bold scamp," said she. "Care for you, indeed? I don't, not one bit, so don't be vain enough to imagine such a thing."

"I don't imagine—I know it!" returned the delinquent, with unmoved audacity. "I am waiting for your 'confidence trick,' sweetest Mrs. Helen."

"How abominably spoiled you are!"

"By you among others, then."

Helen laughed out.

"I tell you what, we are both flirting abominably. I don't know what Frank would say to us."

"We're not afraid of Frank!" said Falconer, laughing too, "nor he of our flirting; besides, I'll warrant he is quite taking out his revenge with that handsome Mrs. Errington. Now tell me the 'confidence,' please, or you will lose this dance."

So at last she told him what his uncle had said to Mrs. Darnley.

"H'm!" said St. Maur, as a comment. "I knew he wanted that. Marry and settle down, indeed—not if I know it, my fair friend; so mind you keep my side of the fence, and stand by me if Uncle Will says anything to you."

"Oh! I'll be true to your colors if you wish it, but—"

"Well?"

"Blanche is pretty, charming, rich."

"None of which I want," said St. Maur, coolly. "When is your next card-party?"

"Next Wednesday. You'll come?"

"Certainly. Meanwhile, we'll join in the

"'Rush of the tripping feet.'"

He whirled her away as he spoke.

After this, his darling—at last, at last!

CHAPTER XII.

"My waltz now, Mrs. Errington."

That was for the public about them; but for all each had said, what a rapturous happiness it was to be together again—close, though only in the mazes of a dance, and amid a throng of dancers, not one of whom, in the wildest dream, could possibly suspect what lay beneath the surface.

Only she felt the closeness of the clasp around the slender, yielding form, and the hand that held hers—only she heard the deep, passionate murmur in her ear, and felt the warm breath on her cheek.

"My darling—my darling, at last! Is not this a taste of happiness?"

"Heaven knows—yes!"

"And you have kept me another one, at least?"

"Ah, yes, one!"

But before the waltz was over, St. Maur drew his wife out of the "madding crowd," paused by the open window, near which she had sat and left her wrap—a rich Indian scarf-shawl.

"Come into the garden," he said, putting it about her. "I must speak to you; there will be other couples out soon. Come; it is quite en regle to stroll out and flirt with the most beautiful woman in the rooms."

"Especially," said Christine, with a half smile, as they passed out, "for wicked Falc St. Maur."

"Faith, if I did not in this case, dearest, I should certainly be asked by Helen Addison if I had gone quite blind or was afraid of you."

"But remember, Falconer, that in my position I can not have it said that I flirt."

He bit his lip, then laughed, still moving on toward the thick shrubbery at the end of the gardens.

"I'll remember, sweetheart. See, here is a rustic bench, embowered from sight of all intruders," placing her on it and himself at her side. "No, no; there's no one to see a kiss. Don't start from me so!"

His strong arm was around her, straining her to his breast, his lips on hers once again—so sweet the stolen, silent kiss, that it clung unresisted—taken and given back—till at last he released her.

"Just a brief snatch of happiness," he said, with a sigh. "But I must claim your promise to meet me, Christine."

"I don't see how it is to be done in town," she said, hurriedly. "I am so tied, and we might be seen and recognized anywhere. One never knows who is about. It would not, of course, hurt you, but it would be death to me."

"Yes," he said, slowly. "Nor would I care to be so recognized. Could you not, under guise of cloak and crape veil, come one evening to me in South Audley street?"

"Falconer!"

"Yes, I know how much I am asking," he said, quickly, his bronzed cheek flushing a little. "But you shall not be compromised or endangered. No one shall know of it but myself and my Rahmnee—the Indian who, I told you, tracked you for me. He shall wait for you near, and bring you in with his latch key, and safe to me. Listen, still. I am the only tenant in the house. I have the drawing rooms and floor above; the landlady and her husband keep the rest of the house; the servants are below; and I will answer for your immunity from being even seen, much less recognized, cloaked and veiled. At the worst, it is only my morals that would suffer," added St. Maur, with an odd bitter little laugh; "and I don't think my good folks think me a saint exactly as it is."

"Do you think I care for even your Hindoo to think I am"—she stopped—"not your wife?"

"No, no, my darling. He shall think nothing of you that is wrong. What I tell Rahmnee he will believe," said Falconer, eagerly.

"Who is Rahmnee—or, rather, why do you trust him so much?" she added, with an instant flash of thought how her husband might construe the first words.

For answer he told her exactly the story he had related to the money-lender. His eyes glowed, filled with tears, for she read all he left untold in the tale.

"It was like my own Falconer," she said. "But, oh, if the horrible beast had killed you!"

She shuddered from head to foot.

"Why, dearest," St. Maur whispered, tenderly, "it was nothing. Don't you think about it any more, than save that it was worth the risk that won such strong and faithful affection from even a poor little Hindoo lad, and—these diamond drops." He stooped to softly kiss away the glittering tears from her eyes as he spoke. "I verily believe that my Snowball's Christian theology runs: There is one God, and the sahib is his prophet; and you, because he knows I love you, are as the sun in the heavens, second only to his master."

"He does not know, then, that?" Christine began.

"That the 'Mrs. Errington' I sent him to find out was one I had loved years ago—one who belonged to me, and was as good and beautiful as beloved. That is what he knows and believes."

What a sunshine smile gleamed over the exquisite face he gazed on!

Despite all the grievous wrongs of the past, all the cruel wrong he was doing her still, it was so immeasurably sweet to the woman's sore heart to listen to such language from the man she loved! It showed her, too, the absolute hold she had on his heart, on his nobler, better nature, and gave her stronger hope of winning him from the grip of the master passion that had been his bane.

"For this once, then," she said, after a long pause, "I will come to your chambers to-morrow evening, if possible; but I must write you of that. It depends on whether I am wanted at home or not. I will let you know by 2 o'clock."

Did she know how she was heaping coals of fire on his head? For he suddenly bowed it in silence, laying his dark cheek against hers, and his hand, that had held hers lightly, closed on it with convulsive force—clinging as one drifting out to sea might cling to the saving rope thrown from the shore.

Yes, she knew it by that tightened clasp. She felt the quiver of the man's strong frame, and the burning shame that for a moment made his cheek hot against her own, and knew that that very shame told of the struggle the better nature was making against the evil.

There was no sound save the distant music and "eh-sh!" of the breeze among the trees and high bushes around; no step or voices near.

Christine turned her face slightly and kissed her husband's lips.

"Wife—wife, that kiss will never leave me!" he whispered, when he could trust himself even to say that.

And it never did. They stood up. The band had ceased; distant laughter and voices came jarringly to them. Others were in the gardens, perhaps.

"Must we go?", the man said, still holding those dear hands, still gazing down into the dear eyes, out of which surely looked his guardian angel. "Must we go back to the throng, then—to part?"

"Yes. I hear Helen Addison's voice from the lawn. We must go back."

"Give me a moss rosebud from your bosom," he said, suddenly.

But he took it himself from its nestling-place, and laid it tenderly between the leaves of a small pocket-book he drew from his breast-pocket.

"Rest there, thou rose of silent love!" he said, softly—"a talisman that shall never die for me, though thy petals may wither!"

He drew his wife's hand on to his arm, and turned back toward the lawn; but as they came round the turn of a walk, there before them were Helen and Mr. Orde.

"Well, well!" she cried, merrily. "I saw you leave the ball-room, and hope you have enjoyed your stroll as much as I have."

"I can answer for myself," answered St. Maur, gallantly; "for Mrs. Errington's enjoyment I dare not speak. She has generously endured me, at any rate."

"Falc, Falc," laughed his uncle, "don't you pretend to the role of modesty. Trust him not, my dear Mrs. Errginton! He doesn't know how to even spell the word, I believe."

"I quite agree with your, Mr. Orde. I must teach you, I think, Mr. St. Maur."

"Ah, et tu Brute!" said he, reproachfully.

Christine laughed.

"Why not? But take me in now, please, for I must look after my girls; you know. I dare say Doctor Clifford is absorbed in whist."

"I must show you the shrubbery, Mr. Orde," said Helen, as the other two bowed and passed on. "I am proud of it. Frank—my husband—had it laid out to please me."

"Quite right of him," said the old gentleman, gallantly. "A pretty garden and a pretty woman are well matched."

A speech his nephew might have made.

HAVE YOU BEEN STUNG?

Some people have recently been badly "stung" by getting substitutes for Zam-Buk. When they have asked for a box of Zam-Buk, the dealer has produced some line on which he makes more profit, and talked about "Just as good and cheaper," or "One of my own, and I know what's in it," or "Really, the same thing at half the price," etc., etc. When tested, this cheap substitute has, of course, failed to do anything like what Zam-Buk does, but the buyer has, nevertheless, parted with his money! You will have to get Zam-Buk eventually! Don't waste money on useless substitutes. The name "Zam-Buk" is protected by law. See it on every packet before paying. If your local dealer should be out of stock, write "Zam-Buk, Toronto." We will mail it by return.

PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR

CHAPTER XIII.

"Very nice people, those Cliffords," said Mr. Orde, as he and his nephew drove back to town. "I hope you mean to cultivate their acquaintance, Falc."

"Oh, certainly! If the doctor will cultivate such a Bohemian as myself," answered Falc, carelessly, keenly suspicious at once, for he had noticed Miss Leroy making herself very agreeable to, and, doubtless, flattering his uncle; and elderly men are readily flattered by the attentions of a young and pretty girl. "But I think you have quite cut me out in that quarter, Uncle Will. You were positively flirting disgracefully with Miss Leroy — sober, elderly gentleman like you! I was shocked."

"Ha! ha! you wicked boy, to chaff your old uncle! I wanted to see what sort of a girl she was really, for I rather took a fancy to her when she was dancing with you the first time.'

"Did you? And the result then, of your trotting her out is, I hope, satisfactory?"

"Quite so. She is a charming, innocent, ingenuous girl."

"Is she, indeed?" thought St. Maur. "She may deceive you, but she can't fog me; but I'll take advantage of the wind, if that's the way it's setting."

Aloud he said:

"Ah, yes! She is very pretty, and a jolly little thing to flirt with. Ingenuous, innocent-hearted girls always are quite delicious. They never know what anything means. I declare, I don't believe she'd have been angry if I had kissed her—among the flowers in the conservatory, of course!"

"For shame, Falc!" said Mr. Orde, puzzled whether St. Maur's sarcastic speech was earnest or rather unseemly jest. "How you racket on!"

"Oh, I didn't do it, of course—never dreamed of it!" laughed Falc, truly enough; "too utterly ungentlemanly—bad form."

"She would never have spoken to you again, sir."

"Wouldn't she, by Jove!" muttered Falc, under his mustache. "I know better, you dear old greenhorn!" Aloud: "How do you like the other two ladies—Miss Clifford and her friend, Mrs. Errington?"

"I did not speak to them much, but certainly Miss Clifford is lovely, as I fancy that young Northcote thinks," chuckled Mr. Orde, en passant; "and the young widow lady, the chaperon, is eminently beautiful; but I shouldn't like to marry a widow myself if I were a young fellow."

"No," said Christine's husband, pulling his mustache to hide a smile; "and besides, one doesn't always know exactly who people are. Looks, too, as if she had got a will of her own—that handsome lady. Uncle Will, I think I'll follow your example still, and keep clear of matrimonial shoals."

"My boy, I hope to Heaven you will never keep clear of them for the same bitter reason I have—a woman's cruel deception—ay, unpardonable treason!"

"Uncle Will!"

"What else, then, do you call it, Falconer, when a woman engages herself to a man, lets him think his love is returned, fixes the marriage, and a fortnight before elopes with another lover, Captain Berenger? That is what Leonora Stanhope did."

"Uncle Will, you never before told me it was so bad as that," said the younger man, deeply touched and pained; "at least, not in detail."

"I only told you that she had cruelly jilted me, and broken her engagement; but these facts are the plain, simple truth. You can, therefore, hardly hold me very hard and unforgiving, if the only woman in the world I absolutely ban to you is her child."

"Did she leave one?" said Falconer, evading any assent or dissent.

"I believe she did—a daughter, who would too surely inherit her mother's perfidy of soul."

"No, no," thought Christine's husband; "my darling—no, no, not thou, thank Heaven!"

"Did Captain Berenger know of it?" he said, after a pause.

"No. Let me do an honorable man justice. She wrote to your dear mother once after her marriage, to take the blame, and exonerate Berenger. He had been her lover; there was some pique— her fault, she said—a quarrel, and a separation. Then I came, and you know that part. She had met Berenger again three weeks or so before our wedding-day. She never told him of her engagement when he renewed his own suit—only said that her elder sister (her only relative) would not consent, and they must marry at once."

"A cruel, sorrowful story. Uncle Will," said Falconer, clasping the old man's hand, "but still the poor daughter may have her noble father's nature, not her mother's. You never saw Captain Berenger?"

"No, never."

St. Maur drew a breath of relief; his darling had her father's face, he knew, and with it his noble nature and faith—not the mother's shameless perfidy.

'If she had but come to me frankly!" added the old man, tremulously. "Heaven knows I loved her well enough to have released her at once."

"I know you would, dear Uncle Will—I know I would," said Falconer, huskily; but his heart sunk. What chance was there of his wife's ever being accepted by William Orde, save by a miracle?

But the carriage stopped at Brown's Hotel, and the two parted. St. Maur walked round to his own chambers. How he envied the peaceful sleep of Rahmnee, who lay at rest on his mattress at the foot of his master's bed!

Meanwhile, on the drive home, Blanche, tired though she was, chattered about the glories of the ball and her partners.

"I do hope," she said, "that we shall meet that Mr. St. Maur again! Isn't he a fascinating man, and so handsome; don't you think so, Mrs. Errington? and waltzes like an angel!"

"I didn't know angels waltzed," said Falconer's wife, dryly.

"Not much of an angel about the said handsome gentleman, either," added the doctor, shrewdly. "A very great charm about this man, with a smile and a bold, fearless dark eye that I like; but angels and saints are not found among fallen human beings, my love. Are they, Mrs. Errington?"

So quietly said. How the wife's heart ached! how she dreaded that the next remark would be: "I heard some one say that he is such a gambler," but it was not; it was:

"But I like him. A cultivated, traveled gentleman is delightful; and his uncle is a fine old fellow; asked me to dine with him and his nephew at Brown's the day after to-morrow, and I accepted. Now, girls, a quiet home-evening this next, mind, to get back the roses," added Doctor Clifford, "not that you ever have any to lose, though, Mrs. Errington."

She smiled a little sadly, but instantly seized her opportunity.

"Then, if you and the girls can spare me for a couple of hours, doctor," she said, "I should like to take that opportunity of seeing an old Indian acquaintance who wrote yesterday to ask me to drop in about nine some evening—the only time she is in during her short stay in London."

"My dear girl, certainly go," said Clifford. "Order the carriage when you please."

"Oh, no; thanks. I shall only take a hansom," answered Mrs. Errington. "It wouldn't be worth while having the carriage ordered out just to go down to Piccadilly; it's near there my friend lodges."

"As you please, my dear—as you please. I dare not offer to escort you, you are so independent."

She laughed.

"Yes; always was so as a girl. I suppose that is why I took to taking care of other people for a calling. I've never been used to be taken care of, except"—her lips quivered for a second—"for two years. Ah! here we are at home."

* * * *

The twelve o'clock post next day—or, rather, the same day—brought Falconer St. Maur a letter.

"Ah! from her! Wait, Rahmnee," he said, quickly. "It is from madame; you know what I told you this morning?"

"Yes, sahib."

The few lines ran thus:

"Let Rahmnee wait for me this morning at nine at the corner of —— street, the end nearest your place. I shall come in a hansom, and shall wear a black cloak and thick black veil."

St. Maur read it aloud in an undertone, and then burned it in a taper, tossing the blackened ashes into the waste-basket.

"Those tell not tales, Rahmnee," he said; "nor these, I know;" and he touched the Indian's lips.

Going Up.

Justice has a streak of yellow, for she grips the little fellow; but her temper seems to mellow toward the man who's higher up.

Though she runs to fix her clutches on the one who steals as much as 50 cents, she limps on crutches toward the man who's higher up.

If the duties are evaded quick is righteous wrath paraded, for the few are simply aided—not the man who's higher up.

'Tis a most obnoxious feature; justice surely needs a teacher; worst of sinners not the creature, but the man who's higher up.

Little chaps must go to prison for a crime not really his'n, while champagne is ever fizzin' for the man who's higher up.

When a trust is caught at scheming justice takes its menials, seeming not to e'en be faintly dreaming of the man who's higher up.

Ever calm her way pursuing, justice notes what some are doing, but this duty is eschewing when the man is higher up.

Justice should take off her blinder, to the smaller fry be kinder, and, before her or behind her, grab the man who's higher up!—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A ROYAL WIDOW'S MOURNING.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA AND HER GRANDSON, PRINCE OLAF OF NORWAY.

No one will more strictly observe the official twelvemonth of mourning for King Edward than his widow, Alexandra. It is likely that she will remain in the severest seclusion not only for the whole period, but long afterward, and perhaps never again figure in brilliant social affairs. She is, in fact, relieved of almost all social duties through the accession of her daughter-in-law, Mary, to the queenship. Alexandra, although still a queen, is referred to now properly as the Queen Mother, her son being King.

COMPELLED TO ABANDON WORK

A Very Severe Case of St. Vitus Dance Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

St. Vitus dance is a common disease in children and is also found in highly strung men and women. The only cure lies in plenty of pure blood, because pure blood is the life food of the nerves. And Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine to make new, rich, red blood. This statement has been proven over and over again and now from Port Maitland, N.S., comes another remarkable piece of evidence of the power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills over disease. Mr. Lyndon E. Porter is one of the best known residents of that town. He suffered from a severe attack of St. Vitus dance, and got no help from medicine until he began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He says: "My case was unusually bad. I was compelled to abandon work. I found it impossible to sleep, and night after night would toss about in bed. I was receiving medical attention, but in spite of the careful treatment I gradually grew worse. My limbs jerked and twitched to such an extent that I could not cross the floor without falling or coming in contact with some piece of furniture. I could not raise a glass of water to my lips so badly did my arms and hands tremble and shake. I cannot imagine more severe suffering and inconvenience than one endures with St. Vitus dance. My father being a druggist knew of the many cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and advised me to try them. I did so, with the most happy results. In less than two months from the time I began the use of the pills I was a well man, and I have not since had the slightest symptom of the trouble."

All over the world Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are making just such cures as Mr. Porter's. They go right down to the cause of the disease in the blood. In this way they have proved in thousands of cases to cure anaemia, headache and backaches, rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, nervousness, indigestion, decline and the special ailments of growing girls and women. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HE CARRIES A "CAN" ON HIS EAR.

This Uganda boy lives in the district through which the Roosevelt party hunted. When he was a mere baby his parents bored a hole in the lobe of his ear and placed a piece of wood in it, replacing the stick by a larger one as he grew older, until at last the lobe of his ear has been stretched enough to hold a bucket two or three inches wide. He is much admired by the native women.

Some fellows are actually too lazy to brag about how they used to work.

Rheumatic Families

Inherit a Tendency to Disease.

Medical opinion confirms the view that rheumatism and gout are transmitted from one generation to another.

Only by combating nerve and blood weaknesses can these be prevented. If they exist in the family, they develop quickly when the blood becomes impure or the nerves weak.

Mr. E. E. Hollister, St. John's, says: "Early in life I was occasionally troubled with aching pains in the back. Later my joints became stiff in bad weather, and lately gouty conditions developed.

"These troubles I knew were very common in my family. I can recall how stiffened up my grandfather was from enlargement of the joints.

"A specialist in New York told me that only by maintenance of the most vigorous conditions could these family predispositions be prevented. Because of his advice five years ago, when Ferrozone was first introduced into this colony, I began a systematic building up of my system. The New York specialist's opinion was justified in my case, and I presume it is generally true.

"Before six months had passed I had gotten rid of every vestige of rheumatism and my health too was visibly improved."

For rheumatism, gout and general bodily weakness there is no remedy like Ferrozone; try it, 50c a box, six boxes for $2.50, all dealers or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

NAVY AIRSHIP

Prominent Features of Great Britain's New Vessel.

Ship Will be Ready to Fly in August or September.

Although Lieutenat N. F. Usborne, R. N., is still in France attending the trials of the new Clement-Bayard airship (which is to fly from the other side of the Channel to the Daily Mail garage on Wormwood Scrubbs), the training of the crew which will man the British navy airship when she is ready is being pushed energetically forward at Barrow, Lancashire.

The vessel is likely to be ready to fly some time in August or September. Work is well advanced on the nine sections into which the framework is divided. These are made not of aluminium, as has been stated, but of a metal which is both lighter and stronger. In view of the size of the balloon, which will measure more than 500 feet (60 feet longer that is to say, than the largest Zeppelin yet built, it was important to use as light a material as possible. So far the metal employed has given satisfactory results.

The gas compartments, nine of them, will not be all made of the same material. Several stuffs will be tried in order to see which is the most serviceable. One of these is entirely new, a kind of waterproof cloth, very thin yet durable. —If it comes up to expectations, it will no doubt be used for all airships. It is the discovery of a British inventor.

The propellers have not yet been chosen. Experiments are being made with one of four blades 10 feet in diameter. If these are successful, there will be every reason to hope that the estimated speed of forty-five miles an hour may be attained. The two 200-h.-p. Wolseley motors of eight cylinders each will be quite capable of producing that speed if other conditions are favorable.

It has been found quite practicable to fit the airship with wireless telegraphy. This will greatly increase its value for scouting purposes. The headquarters of the vessel will be on the North Sea. As she must be prepared to stay out for days at a time, she has been constructed to take a very heavy load. Her crew will probably consist of twenty men, and they will be able to take with them a large quantity of stores, with, if necessary, explosives in addition.

NEWFOUNDLAND PAYS TRIBUTE

To the Grand Work Dodd's Kidney Pills are Doing.

Fishermen Regard Them as a Boon to Mankind—Mr. Frank Banfield Tells How They Cured His Backache.

Garnish, Fortune Bay, Nfld., May 28. —(Special).—Among the fishermen here, who through exposure to wet and cold are subject to those pains and aches which come from diseased Kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills are looked upon as a positive boon to mankind. They are never tired of telling how their Backaches and their Rheumatism vanish before the great Kidney remedy.

Among many others Mr. Frank Banfield, after years of suffering, has found relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills, and here is what he is telling his friends:

"I find Dodd's Kidney Pills the best medicine for Backache I have ever used. I only used two boxes and they cured me of Backache I had had for five years. It started through a strain. My father's back also bothered him, and he got some relief from one pill I gave him. They were too precious to give him more. All persons suffering from Backache should use Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Why do Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Backache? Simply because Backache is Kidney ache, and Dodd's Kidney Pills positively cure all Kidney aches and ills. This has been proved in thousands of cases in Canada. If you haven't used them yourself ask your neighbors.

The Review is the acknowledged advertising medium of the Creston valley, circulating in over one thousand homes throughout the Creston district. Our columns are open to correspondents on live questions of local interest. Contributions must be brief, written on one side of the paper only and signed; not necessarily for publication, but as evidence of good faith. We invite support in our endeavours to increase the usefulness of the Review by bringing in your advertisements, subscriptions and news. Complaints from subscribers as to non-receipt of paper will be promptly attended to. Address all communications to the editor.

As will be seen on the front page of this paper, the annual school meeting has been called for tomorrow, Saturday, the 16th inst., in the new schoolhouse at 10 a.m. At this meeting some important business will be transacted; there is the question of clearing and improving the school yard. This is indeed a matter that should receive immediate attention. In any city or town in any country the people, no matter how crude they may be, always take pride in their schools and school playgrounds. Surely Creston will not lag behind in this important subject. Again, at this annual school meeting the matter of raising the teachers' salaries will be considered; this also is a matter that should be carefully gone into. If the teachers at Creston are working for too small salaries, this matter should be righted at once, for surely the instructors of the rising generation are worthy of being treated fairly in the matter of salaries. Let it not be said of Creston that its teachers are underpaid. Again, an important matter regarding school officers is that in small towns like Creston too much of this school work is left entirely to a few individuals, while the great majority of the ratepayers sit by with folded hands and talk energetically on general school matters, but conspicuously absent themselves from just such meetings as this one called for tomorrow morning.

It is understood that Trustee F. J. Rose, whose term of office expires now, will retire from this school office, and that a new trustee will be elected at this meeting.

Surely, with all these important matters to be brought before this meeting, the ratepayers will recognize the necessity of their rousing themselves from their protracted lethargy in school matters and all turn out en masse at the meeting in the new schoolhouse tomorrow morning.

COMMUNICATIONS.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions of his correspondents, nor does he always agree with them.]

Camp 12, July, 1910

Editor, Creston Review.

Dear Sir,—Enclosed please find a communication for publication in your coming Friday's issue. I feel that the high standard and tone of your much valued paper will admit it in the public interest and fair play. Thanking you in anticipation,

Yours truly,
CHAS. MOORE

COMMUNICATION

In your issue of last January 6th, under the title "Storm in a Teacup" or, in cynical transposition, "Much to do about Nothing."

With your kind permission for press space in your valued paper and in the public interest, and lastly, the least of all, a just vindication of the writer himself.

The object of that informal meeting convened by the writer on that date to meet the school trustees to discuss a vital subject, is too well known locally to require much recapitulation, feeling certain that it is as fresh today in the minds of the ratepayers as on the evening it took place.

It apparently resulted much to the satisfaction of the trustees—Rose, Dow and Compton. But, as time elapsed, the inevitable truths became manifest, which painfully forced the drastic action of the trustees in the resignation of the late principal.

The concocted "resolution of censure" denouncing my actions in upholding a worthy cause in the interest of some 80 children, is worthy of note, and following this blind vote of censure was the vote of "confidence" in the late school principal, with what object, needless to say, is easily seen by the most casual observer. These resolutions were carried, but not by the bona-fide ratepayers and parents, but by half a dozen so-called "friends" (trustees included).

Then followed the fiery and flowery speech by F. Rose, ably assisted by Secretary Compton and Trustee Dow, in merciless and humiliating condemnation of the writer.

Mr. Editor, ladies and gentleman and fellow ratepayers, the writer does not propose to deal at great length with what was said by these three trustees at that meeting, but since that date the majority of the parents and ratepayers have been fully satisfied by their efforts and careful investigation, as to its truthfulness.*

In conclusion; it is the duty of every loving parent and ratepayer of the Creston district who takes an interest in our rising generation, their education and environments, to assert their rights in all matters that pertain to their interest and to guard and guide them and befitting them in their youth with a foundation which shall be and will be, in their matured years of manhood and womanhood, a credit to our town of Creston.

In the deplorable incident the trustees cannot face the electors and conscientiously say they have done their duty; but circumstances ruled the day.

Ask yourself a simple question. Could I stand in consciousness and see my little children put in the wagon, traveling the rocky and winding road of life, under the guidance of an impossible driver? This is left for to answer and further, would you, as a loving parent, tolerate their inhuman advices, detrimental to the proper guidance of your loved ones? Let it be remembered ladies and gentlemen, my fellow ratepayers, that at the coming election of school trustees, assert your rights and censure the ill-doers to yours and our little innocent children.

Respectfully,
CHAS. MOORE

stump puller, has pulled over 1000 acres of all kinds of stumps, trees and willows. Mr. Ducrest has more knowledge in land clearing than any man in the world, and all what he has learned in the space of those years he's put it in developing and improving the Ducrest stump puller, which is the quickest, the strongest, the cheapest, the lightest and the most up-to-date stump puller, at the reach of every person who has land to clear.

Nothing like long practical and self experience for developing any classes of machinery. After some thousand trials in different fields of stumps and uprooted many good-sized forests; never used any powder at all and no cutting or digging roots to help the Ducrest stump puller, except when we were tacking some of those giant shortly cut stumps in which we have to put our pulling cable too close to the ground.

All that I have learned and experienced in my steady practical work is in our Ducrest stump puller, and every purchaser of the Ducrest stump puller will be given complete instructions showing all the learned various ways of pulling from the largest stumps and trees to the smallest one growing in any class of soil. We have also many various ways showing how to pull and free your cable from bunch willows and all kinds of similar second growth. Any person can operate a stump puller and pull stumps, no matter how young he may be, especially a Ducrest stump puller, because it is the simplest machine on earth. The instructions that we give with our Ducrest stump pullers will render the work an easy one for the operator, and saves time and money. For instance, we believe there are very few persons who know how to pull a large or small stump when near your machine, on which your pulling cable is too long. Let us show you that and many others too, but only to the purchaser of the Ducrest stump puller.

The Ducrest stump puller is the only complete outfit that with one horse develops 240 tons pressure, or more, so by all means purchase a stump puller that you can depend on, and develop enough power so that you will not be compelled to dig, cut and blast the stumps you pull, to help an expansive and weak machine in which you are wasting half your time and money.

When using a Ducrest stump puller we feel so interested in uprooting stumps and trees, that often we forget the time and always feel to pull another stump.

That is what many operators often say, and truly nothing is more interesting than to see a large stump raising from the ground, roots and all without any extra effort or labor than the Ducrest stump puller.

Remember that you can depend on a Ducrest stump puller for improving your farm. With a Ducrest stump puller a job of fifty acres of green standing trees or stumps means the work of two men for a couple of months.

No man in this world can perfect any class of machinery without long experience with it, not seeing the machine working, but work the machine. Here is why the Ducrest stump puller is in every way perfect, and a powerful machine, because Mr. Ducrest is a stump puller manufacturer who has more knowledge in land clearing than any man in the world, and if you want to know something about land clearing, he will be pleased to give you his advise.

If you need the best stump puller outfit, buy a Ducrest stump puller. You can get it straight from the factory. For prices and terms of these machines apply at the REVIEW office.

Here are a few testimonial letters. Please write to these people and ask their opinion of the Ducrest stump puller. We would advise you to send a two-cent stamp to receive your answer. We are not forging any testimonial letters like many:

Dear Sir,—Having had your stump puller No. 2 hired for three weeks and handled by F. Lawrence, we find that it has done very good work, being able to pull and stump the fifteen acres in the three weeks.

Dear Sir,—I have cleared 15 acres of land with your No. 3 stump puller and am well pleased with it. I have pulled 15 medium sized green stumps in ten minutes with one helper. I recommend it for pulling and piling large or small stumps.

I used only one horse on the machine, and for stumps your machine cannot be beat. The machine can be set ready for work in 30 minutes. I would recommend the Ducrest stump puller to any one having stumps to clear away on your land.

Yours truly,
G. W. CRUSE

Mr. J. Ducrest,
Victoria, B. C.

Dear Sir,—After using your stumping machine No. 2 for three months, during which time we cleared 100 acres of land on the North Thompson river, I can recommend it highly to any one for either pulling stumps or standing timber. During the 83 days work we did not have a breakdown, and the pine timber up there is, I think, harder to pull than the fir.

Yours truly,
GEO. A. BORTHWICK

Dear Sir,—I am pleased to recommend your No. 2 Ducrest stump puller after a severe trial pulling out green oak stumps cut close to the ground, and I am pleased to recommend it to any one who has land to clear, and light or heavy stumps to remove.

Yours faithfully,

Recipes

MEXICAN SCRAMBLED EGGS.

When you are tired of plain scrambled eggs try them as they are cooked in Mexico. Roast a dozen fresh green peppers a few minutes, peel, remove the seeds and chop, when they should be boiled in a very little water until tender, and season well with butter. Beat six or eight eggs, add with salt to the peppers and fry all for a moment in hot butter.

RHUBARB GINGER.

Wash but do not peel the rhubarb. The pink skin gives it a pretty color. Measure the rhubarb and allow as much sugar as you have fruit. To four pounds each sugar and rhubarb allow the juice of two lemons and the yellow rinds, cut thin, with an eighth of a pound of green ginger root cut in thin slices. Cook until thick as marmalade.

QUICK BROWN BREAD.

Two cups graham flour, one cup sour milk, one-half cup molasses, two tablespoonfuls sugar, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful soda in two tablespoonfuls warm water, three-fourths cup raisins chopped and floured. Bake 40 minutes in a moderate oven. Excellent.

BISQUE MERINGUES.

Beat the whites of two eggs dry; gradually beat in half a cup of sugar and one-fourth a cup of almonds chopped in ovals the size of a tablespoon on inch boards covered with paper. Let cook three-fourths of an hour in a very moderate oven. Increase the heat near the end of the cooking. Remove from the papers and invert, then return to the oven to dry off the under side. Put two ovals together with fruit jelly or with whipped cream between.

COTTAGE CHEESE FROM SWEET MILK.

For each quart of milk take one junket tablet. Crush and dissolve the tablets in a few tablespoonfuls of cold water. Let the milk be of a temperature between 85 degrees and 100 degrees Fahrenheit. Stir in the tablets and let the mixture remain in a warm place until firmly thickened. Turn into a cheesecloth bag and hang up to drain. When the whey is largely drained off, put the bag of curd under pressure to remain several hours or overnight. Add about a teaspoonful of salt to a pint of curd, less rather than more, also thick, heavy cream as is convenient to make of a good consistency. Shape into balls or mold in empty baking powder boxes or a brick ice cream mold.

FRIED PEPPERS WITH CHEESE.

The Mexicans serve their cheese in combination with peppers. For this the fresh green chillies are preferred. Choose fine large ones, blister in a very hot oven and peel off the outer skin. Cut each one down one side so that it may be spread out flat, and wrap it around a slice of strong cheese. Fry in good sweet lard. Prepare a sauce as for Spanish omelet, but with the addition of some flour and water to thicken and a clove of garlic if liked. Pour the sauce over the fried peppers and cheese, and the dish is ready for the table.

BETTER THAN SPANKING.

Spanking does not cure children of bed-wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box W. 8, Windsor, Ont., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instrutions. Send no money, but write her to-day if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

ENGLISH WOMEN'S FEET.

Their Increase in Size Revealed by the Modish Short Skirts.

London—The short skirts now in vogue in London are making one fact quite evident: that Englishwomen's feet are larger than they were the last time short skirts were in fashion.

A reporter watched a number of his countrywomen at smart tea shops and in fashionable thoroughfares and was convinced that this was the case, so he went to various shoe stores for confirmation, and there he learned the truth, that the Englishwomen is taking far larger sizes in shoes than in former days.

Substantial fives and sixes are required in place of the twos and threes which used to be worn. Indeed one shoe dealer informed the reporter that in the last ten years the lowest size in women's shoes had risen from a two and a half to a five ,that is from a 9½ inch shoe to a 10 inch shoe.

In proportion as sizes have increased heels have grown higher, till now it is not an uncommon sight to see a tall Englishwoman adding to her stature by 3 1-2 inch heels, on which she totters along.

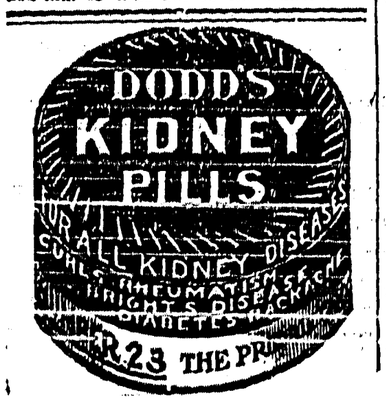
The feet of American women are not getting larger, say English shoe dealers. In fact it is for American sales that the small sizes are kept at some of the larger shops.

HAPPILY MARRIED.

(Exchange.)

"Ahe they happily married?"

"Yes, indeed. They've been married four years now, and she never has to ask him to take her to the theatre."



CURED HER KIDNEYS

Mrs. John Pettigrew, of Central Economy N.S., was practically helpless from rheumatism.

She could not stoop, and her limbs ached so that it was torture for her to be up and around the house.

As Mrs. Pettigrew put it, "I was all crippled up. I saw Gin Pills advertised and sent for some, and after taking only two boxes, am a different woman. Gin Pills are the only thing that helped me, and I cannot say too much for them."

If you have that dreadful pain in the back— if you are tortured with rheumatism—get Gin Pills at once.

A Legend of February.

Here is the pretty legend which tells why February has only twenty-eight or twenty-nine days. Long ago, they say, February was a gambler, and he was so unlucky that he soon lost all his money. Like other gamblers, he tried to recover it, and he said to his companions that if they would lend him some money he would give them as security one of his days. January and March, who were naturally associated with him more often than any of the other months, accepted his offer, and as poor February soon lost the money which he had borrowed each of them acquired one of his days. That is why January and March have each thirty-one days and February has only twenty-eight in ordinary and twenty-nine in leap years.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills

owe their singular effectiveness in curing Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica to their power of stimulating and strengthening the kidneys. They enable these organs to thoroughly filter from the blood the uric acid (the product of waste matter) which gets into the joints and muscles and causes these painful diseases. Over half a century of constant use has proved conclusively that Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills strengthen weak kidneys and Toy Spaniel an Old Breed.

The English toy spaniel is undoubtedly one of the oldest and most popular breeds of pet dogs known. As far back as the days of Charles the Martyr this breed was much prized by the ladies of the court. In the narrative of the execution of Mary, Queen of Scots, indorsed in Lord Burghley's hand and forwarded to the court, it was recorded that one of the executioners found her little pet (a spaniel of practically the same type as those afterward known in the reign of Charle II.), which had crept under the folds of her garments to be near her, and which would not be [illegible] away.—From Bit and Spur.

Maidens Sold by Auction.

A singular custom obtains to this day in some of the towns on the lower Rhine—namely, that of "selling" maidens at public auction. For nearly four centuries on Easter Monday—auction day—the town crier or clerk of St. Goar has called all the young people together and to the highest bidder sold the privilege of dancing with the chosen girl and her only during the entire year. The fees are put into the public poor box.

Wellington's Coolness.

The Duke of Wellington was one day sitting at his library table when the door opened and without any announcement in stalked a figure of singularly ill omen.

"Who are you?" asked the duke in his short and dry manner, looking up without the slightest change of countenance upon the intruder.

"I am Apollyon. I am sent here to kill you."

"Kill me? Very odd."

"I am Apollyon and must put you to death."

"I am not told the day or the hour, but I must do my mission."

"Very inconvenient; very busy; great many letters to write. Call again or write me word. I'll be ready for you."

The duke then went on with his correspondence. The maniac, appalled probably by the stern, immovable old gentleman, backed out of the room and in half an hour was in an asylum.

FRIEND OF KINGS.

Sir Ernest Cassel, Once a Poor Boy Now Entertains Royalty.

Sir Ernest Cassel, one of the late King Edward's hosts at Biarritz, has had a career full of romance, the romance full of the self-made man. It seems like a fairy tale that the unknown lad of the '70s should have been the friend and counsellor of the King of England and the German Emperor.

It is rumored that he is one of the six men who move in the mysterious background of the Government of England, says the Gentlewoman. He has been the builder of his own fortune. Money has grown under his hands, and banks and railways have made his vast riches.

One of the most dramatic moments in his career was a Boer war incident. The British Government stood in need of a big sum at short notice. It was obtained by Sir Ernest in three hours. Luck seems not to attend him on the turf, although he once won the Two Thousand.

Much has been written on Brook House, his Park Lane residence, but there has been scant mention of the Turkish baths which occupy part of the ground floor, nor of the marvellous range of kitchens. There are six of these, with marble floors and walls, and they include pastry kitchens, grilling, roasting and boiling kitchens, a vegetable kitchen and a room for fruit and flowers.

HELPLESS LITTLE BABIES.

Ask any mother who has used Fairy's Own Tablets and she will tell you they are the best thing in the world for curing stomach and bowel troubles and making teething easy. This is the highest praise a medicine can get. And we give you the guarantee of a Government analyst that this medicine is absolutely safe. No other medicine intended for young children give mothers such a guarantee. Mrs. Robt. Mieth, Hotham, Ont., says: "I cannot tell you how much good Baby's Own Tablets have done my baby. I am sorry I did not know of them earlier." Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Spring Parable.

The wind is blowing,
The sower is sowing,
The seed is flowing;
The sun is shining;
The clouds inclining
Their silver lining.

This is the seed-time,
The hope-time, the heed time;
Soon comes the need-time.

Laughing or weeping,
Waking or sleeping,
'Tis worth the knowing
That God is keeping
For future reaping
The sower's sowing.

—Ida W. Benham, in Farm Journal.

The Deacon's Philosophy.

I remember when a boy
How I used to just enjoy
Riding with old Deacon Hill
When he used to drive to the mill.
Skittish nag the deacon druv,
For he had a kind of love
For a good, free-actin' colt;
And he'd keep an easy holt
On the reins and when she'd shy
He'd just drawl, so kind of dry,
"There, there, colt! Now, now, no tearin'!
No use cuttin' up and rarin',
Just keep right down in the road.
No use fretting at the load,
Steady pull's not half so wearin'.
There, there, colt! Now, now, no tearin'!"

Years ago that boyhood day;
Colt and deacon's passed away.
I ain't young's I used to be,
By a good deal, no siree!
Coltish then, I must allow,
Well broke into harness now,
'Cept when things go wrong, then I
Want to rip and tear and shy.
Then inside me kind of still,
Seem to hear old Deacon Hill:
"There, there, boy! Now, now, no tearin'!
No use cuttin' up and rarin',
Just keep cool and peg away
Do the best you can each day;
Just keep patient and forbearin',
There, there, boy! Now, now, no tearin'!"

New Field for American Engineers.

Russia is becoming interested in hydro-electric power plants, and is examining into the matter of electrifying suburban divisions of its State railroads. An investigation is being made of our high-tension transmission systems, and, says the Scientific American, it is probable that a new field will be opened for American engineers.

An Elevated for Tokyo.

A scheme for the construction of an elevated electric railway at Tokio is at present under consideration. It is proposed that there shall be two lines, one running from the east to the west of the city, and the other from the north to the south. The cost of construction of the projected lines is estimated at $12,000,000.

LEARN TO SWIM.

(Toronto News.)

Summer is marred by the number of drowning accidents which occur. Year after year young men and women, bright and full of promise, are swept into an eddy or upset from a canoe. Many of these accidents might be prevented if swimming was an art more generally acquired.

BACK-WEARY MEN

The Helping Hand of Dr. Hamilton's Pills Will Cure in a Few Weeks.

"Foundry work compels men to work in the winter in very cold shops," writes Tunis T. Bolter, a well known mechanic in Hamilton. "I contracted a very severe cold a few months ago which settled in my back and kidneys. I suffered constant pain, and in bending over my work and in heavy lifting, the pain at times was excruciating. My digestion got all out of order, doubtless because the kidneys didn't work right. My wife had used Dr. Hamilton's Pills as a family medicine and I took her advice and started them also. To my great delight a few doses helped me so much it was proof I was using a true remedy. Natural action of the kidneys was brought about, burning and aching ceased, and the back-lameness gradually disappeared. I no longer fear my work. I feel strong and robust, and with such a remedy as Dr. Hamilton's Pills at hand I will probably never again be sick. I advise every working man to use Dr. Hamilton's Pills."

No other medicine will regulate the system and maintain health like Dr. Hamilton's Pills—beware of the dealer who tries to induce you to take something else on which he makes more profit. Sold in yellow boxes 25c. Prepared by the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ontario.

Travelled as Merchandise.

A novel charge of fraud has been before the Italian courts recently. A dealer had four cases of liqueur which he was sending, or rather taking, from Naples to Milan. To save part of his railway fare he stowed himself in another packing case, which was carried as merchandise.

At an intermediate station the man desired some fresh air and took a stroll on the platform. Then he was discovered and prosecuted. In default of a fine a term of imprisonment was passed. The enterprising dealer, it may be assumed, had a fight over the decision, and it has been reversed on appeal.—From the London Globe.

A PIANO FOR 50 CENTS A WEEK

This is a golden opportunity for anyone to own an instrument. We have a large stock of used pianos, taken in exchange on Heintzman & Co. pianos. Each one guaranteed for five years, and will be taken back in exchange with full amount allowed any time in three years. Do not let this chance slip by you. A post card will bring full particulars.—Heintzman & Co., 71 King street east, Hamilton, Ont.

"CHRIST CRUCIFIED."

Now ere I slept, my prayer had been that
I might see my way
To do the will of Christ, our Lord and Master, day by day;
And with this prayer upon my lips, I knew not that I dreamed,
But suddenly the world of night a pandemonium seemed.
From forest, and from slaughter house, from bull ring, and from stall,
There rose an anguished cry of pain, a loud,
appealing call;
As man—the dumb beasts next of kin—with gun, and whip, and knife,
Went pleasure-seeking through the earth,
blood-bent on taking life.
From trap, and cage, and house, and zoo,
and street, that awful strain
Of tortured creatures rose and swelled the orchestra of pain.
And then methought the gentle Christ appeared to me and spoke:
"I called you, but ye answered not"—and in my fear I woke.

Again I slept. I seemed to climb a hard,
ascending track;
And just behind me labored one whose patient face was black.
I pitied him; but hour by hour he gained upon the path;
He stood beside me, stood upright—and then
I turned in wrath.
"Go back!" I cried. "What right have you to walk beside me here?
For you are black, and I am white."
I paused, struck dumb with fear.
For lo! the black men was not there, but Christ stood in his place;
And oh! the pain, the pain, the pain, that looked from that dear face.

Then next I heard the roar of mills; and moving through the noise,
Like phantoms in an underworld, were little girls and boys.
Their backs were bent, their brows were pale,
their eyes were sad and old;
But by the labor of their hands greed added added gold to gold.
Again the Presence and the Voice:
Behold, the crimes I see,
As ye have done it unto these, so have ye done to me."

Now when I woke, the air was rife with that sweet, rhythmic din,
Which tells the world that Christ has come to save mankind from sin.
And through the open door of church and temple passed a throng,
To worship Him with bended knee, with sermon, and with song.
But over all I heard the cry of hunted,
mangled things;
Those creatures which are part of God, though they have hoofs and wings,

I saw in mill, and mine, and shop, the little slaves of greed;
I heard the strife of race with race, all sprung from one God-seed.
And then I bowed by head in shame, and in contrition cried—
"Lo, after nineteen hundred years, Christ is Crucified."

HOUSES IN A CIRCLE.

A Buenos Ayres Architect's New Idea in Building.

Buenos Ayres has an architect in Prof. Pierre Roveda who has devised a special plan for building whole districts of houses for the workingman. Instead of erecting the houses on the ordinary square block Prof. Roveda has used a circle, which has a diameter of from 100 to 130 yards.

This circle of ground is divided into ninety-nine radial lots converging to a centre. The circle is concentrically divided to form an interior avenue—four yards broad—to allow communication with the centre of the circle. Each avenue leads to external sidewalks and to longitudinal and transverse streets.

In the centre of the circle is a plot of forty yards in diameter where children may be left to themselves without their parents' care, in charge of a specially designated person. In this garden a playroom, a school, a hospital, a fire station and an administration room are to be found.

Naturally this circular plot of ground leaves four corners. In each of these four corners the professor proposes to build four chalets, such as grocery shops, dairies, haberdasheries and the like, which are intended to be carried on in a co-operative way. In each of the ninety-nine radial plots a workingman's house is to be erected on the English plan. Prof. Roveda arguer for his circular arrangement that it will give continuous sunshine at all hours of the day and plenty of light and air.—From the Chicago Tribune.

Who Shall Do the Proposing?

(Chicago Sunday Tribune).

There has been much discussion of late over the comparative value of the old method of the man as the wooer and the newer one of woman as pursuer in affairs of the heart. And after the cloud of talk has blown over its silver lining apparently bears on its shiny surface the conclusion, "it all depends." This is a serious question and one worthy of settlement now and for all time. The average woman has about as little use for a timid man as the average man has for a forward woman, but one of the standing family jokes to be perpetrated at regular intervals by all husbands until the end of time is "when my wife proposed to me, etc., etc." So, perhaps he might enjoy the real sensation. Or perhaps he might not consider an appeal, "please be mine," from bewitching femininity in the light of forwardness.

But all feminines are not bewitching, and more's the pity, only the other class need pursue. It were better for man to cling to the past, or he may find a peck of trouble a mere trifle. And what if two timid ones chanced to get together? Horrors, what a tragedy! Of course, the phonograph ever may be relied upon as an emergency friend. A curtained corner, behind which rests the hidden voice. Suddenly there falls upon the parlor air in dulcet (or bass, as preferred) tones "Do you love me?" Both answer in unison, if desire, thereby eliminating any embarrassment to be felt in being the first to speak. Or mayhap this ancient fable may be of assistance:

Mary and John had been sweethearts for many years. Mary had waited long for John to set his sighs to words, but persistently John's vocal cords refused to work. John came to call one evening and wrote upon the stone mantelpiece:

"If it wasn't for hope a heart would break."

When Mary entered and read she spunked up.

"It it wasn't for bashfulness a fool would speak," she wrote beneath.

She emulated John's grammar and she broke the meter, but John spoke.

And always there's the model of Priscilla and the other John.

SPRING CROP REPORT

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued the following statement regarding agricultural conditions existing at the beginning of May:

Vegetation—The warm weather of March started vegetation unusually soon—from three to four weeks earlier than usual. The latter half of April, however, was very wet and cold, and further advance was much retarded, the result being that May opened with growth a week or two ahead of the average, and three weeks or a month in advance of last year. Forests were in early leaf, and many orchards were in blossom, pastures were green and were furnishing a good bite for the many sheep and young cattle that had been turned out to feed.

Spring Sowing—Field operations have been the earliest for many years. Most of the plowing had been done in the fall, and owing to the mild weather but little frost remained in the ground after the snow went away early in March. Spring sowing is about a month earlier than last season, and a week or two ahead of the average year.

Fall Wheat—This crop entered into May well forward and presenting a good appearance on the whole, more especially where it had been got in early. Some late sewn fields looked rather thin, owing to the dry fall, and on low-lying places there were bare spots caused by ice forming during the winter. The injury from insect pests is less than usual, there being but scattering mention of Hessian fly, wire-worm, and white grub.

Winter Rye—The acreage of this crop is small, but where grown it is reported to be in good condition generally.

Clover—Like fall wheat, clover wintered well, and the spring was also favorable, there being practically no heaving from frost.

Fodder Supplies—A correspondent, describing the fodder situation, says: "The short and mild winter worked wonders," and others write to the same effect. The good corn crop of last year also helped farmers to save on hay and grain in feeding live stock. Straw has been scarce and dear.

Live Stock—All classes of live stock are at a premium. Prices for horses are high and firm, attributed by some to the great demand from our western Provinces. Their general health has been good, except for a form of strangles. Cattle have been remarkably free from disease, but are rather thin in flesh owing to somewhat close feeding. Milk cows are fewer in number than usual, but in both dairy and beef-raising sections more calves are being kept. Fat cattle are very scarce, and stockers are harder to procure than in former years, while local butchers find it difficult to procure suitable animals. As a consequence a good deal of inferior beef has been disposed of at good prices. Sheep are doing well, lambs coming strong and plentiful in proportion to the number of dams. High prices for these also prevail. A correspondent very suggestively remarks that the rabies among dogs has been a boon to sheep. Swine are not so plentiful as in former years, as they have been rushed to market at prices characterized by one correspondent as "sky high." In fact, there are complaints of too hasty marketing.

Fruit Trees—With the exception of a severe ice or sleet storm in the latter part of November that broke off many branches, fruit trees have come through the winter in normal condition. The damage done was confined to a few sections in western Ontario.

Use of Magnets in Flour Mills.

Explosions are often caused in flour mills and breweries by nails or other iron particles that find their way in the grain and which when they strike the steel rolls of the mills produce sparks and ignite the finely pulverized material about them.

Recently a large malting concern that had been troubled by many such explosions installed a set of electro-magnets over which the grain is passed before being prepared for shipment to the breweries. All iron particles in the grain are picked up by the magnets and 800 to 1,000 bushels of grain are cleaned an hour. When the magnets have collected a large amount of metal they are swung to one side, de-energized and swept clean of any particles adhering to them by residual magnetism. Since the installation of these magnets there have been no explosions in the mills.—From the Scientific American.

THE COST OF AIR TRAVEL.

Estimate of $120 Fare to Europe on a First-Class Aid Liner.

The expense of air-shipping steadily decreases with experience. In operating a trans-oceanic service, one week would undoubtedly be allotted to each of forty-eight annual voyages. The crossing would take two or three days. Engines and ships would be overhauled after each trip.

Air ships of 20,000 cubic meters displacement would need to be refilled twice a month. A new process for producing hydrogen makes the inflating of ships the size of the Zeppelin IV. cost $526, as compared with $2,031 a year ago. Gas drawn from the chambers and burned in the motors, to compensate for weight lost by the consumption of gasolene, would cost, $155, leaving $198 for the gasoline consumed. Docking, overhauling and repairing between trips would not exceed $250. An air ship costs $144,600; it will last four years if regularly overhauled; a credit of $300 for each trip would represent material that could be taken from an obsolete ship to refurnish a new one.

A captain now receives $3,856 a year; two helmsmen, each $2,410, and three engineers, each $1,446. This personnel would need to earn $301 each trip, but by transferring the crew from incoming to outgoing ships, $200 would be a conservative estimate for wages. Roughly the expense of each trip would be about $1,203.

If twenty passengers were carried at $120 each, the fare on a first-class steamship, the returns would enable the air liner to pay a handsome dividend and lay aside a fund for better wages to more expert officers. The captain must be assisted by a navigating officer, both drawing $8,000 to $10,000 a year, according to the training and service demanded of them, which includes expert skill in astronomical and meteorological calculations and wireless telegraphy.—From "Over Sea by Airship," in the May Century.

JAS. G. BENNETT.

James Gordon Bennett lives in Paris, but he is actively in charge of the New York Herald, one of the great newspapers of the world, and the Telegram, the evening edition of the Herald. In the Herald building, on Herald Square, New York city, Bennett's office is kept ready for him. At night a light burns in the office and the place is cleaned and dusted regularly, for no one knows when the owner may walk in. From Paris Bennett daily cables instructions to his editors in New York city. He sent Stanley into Africa to find Dr. Livingstone, sent an expedition in search of the north pole, and saved Ireland from a famine.

Achievement.

The man who is satisfied with things as they are never makes them better.

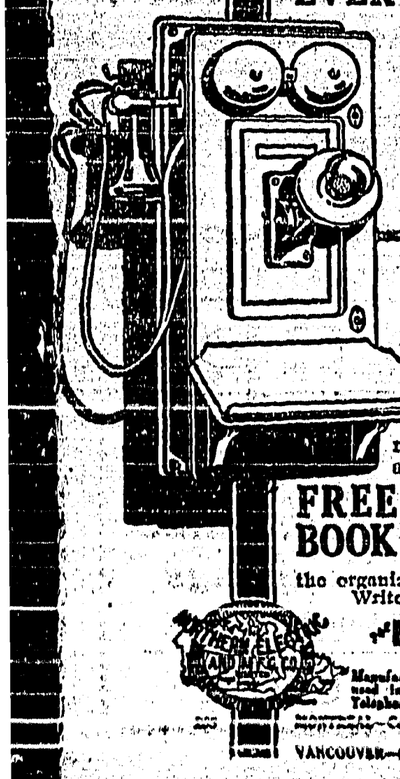
Doing to-day just what he did yesterday, and this year just what he did last, dead to the opportunities around him, he rests and rusts—the self-satisfied worker.

Discontent is the generator of action. It conceives and fosters all incentive; it prods the laggard; spurs the incompetent; stimulates the small to be great and the great to be greater.

Because Stephenson was uncontent with the power of man, he discovered the power of steam. John Wanamaker, dissatisfied with the possibilities of a one-line store, introduced the department store. And every comfort or convenience you and I enjoy to-day was inspired and created by the stimulus of discontent.

Keep going—keep going—keep going. That is the voice of conscience of the souls of the truly great.—System.

EVERY PART PERFECT



THE secret of the perfection of our newly designed No. 1317 Type Telephone Set lies in the fact that every part of it—every individual piece—is itself absolutely perfect. The perfection of the whole is attained through perfection in the parts.

Examine the transmitter, for example—standard long-distance type you will find it,—or the receiver, with its construction that bars out all local noises to spoil transmission. Or look into the generator—the ringers and gongs,—the switch hook—or any part you like.

You won't find a better rural telephone than this made anywhere.

A HORSELESS FUNERAL.

Big Automobile That Serves as Hearse and Coach for Mourners.

(New York Sun.)

There was a horseless funeral at the Grand Central Station the other day. So unusual was the scene that almost everybody seemed to give it some attention, and even the horses sniffed at the strange looking vehicle, perhaps with feelings of jealousy at this latest evidence of the passing of their usefulness.

The centre of interest was the funeral car, a big black automobile built somewhat on the lines of a Fifth avenue motor 'bus. It was an immense machine, and as it drew up silently at a side entrance other traffic had to halt. The solemn black of its big limousine body proclaimed its purpose in a way, but except for the fact that the driver's seat was unusually high it might have passed for an extraordinarily large limousine car.

As soon as the car had reached the curb the driver alighted and stood deferentially at the front end of the machine. A moment later there appeared the funeral party, led by the undertaker and his men bearing the coffin.

The mourners, a party of ten, took their seats in the car, these seats being individual chairs of black leather. Then the front of the machine underneath the driver's seat was opened, the coffin was lifted up and slid in. Next some flowers were put in the hearse part of the car and the front doors closed.

Then the driver and the undertaker mounted the front seat, there was the sharp ring of a warning bell, and as traffic halted again the big funeral car quietly swung around and into Forty-second street.

This funeral car had seats for twelve mourners in its limousine part and could carry three on the driver's seat. Hence it takes the place of a hearse and three carriages.

"We haven't had this very long," said the driver just before the funeral party appeared, "but we're already kept busy with it about all the time. Only this morning, for example, we took a funeral to Elizabeth, and now this afternoon we are bound for Greenwood.

"You see it fits in pretty nicely in the case of long distance funerals. Take the case of a funeral at Kensico, up in Westchester, or even Woodlawn. Before it used to be necessary to take a train, which meant a hearse and carriages at both ends, to say nothing of the publicity of riding in a railroad car, that is, unless the party was large enough and could afford the special funeral car the railroad operates. Now we take the entire funeral, casket and all, from the house or church to Kensico in less than three hours.

"Take the case of a person dying in some other city and being buried here. Only the family come with the body and they want to be taken quickly and quietly to the cemetery. We can make Greenwood in less than an hour. In two hours they can be on the train going home again.

"Of course there are still some persons who find it hard to accept it in place of the old way they have known so long. One man recently complained that it didn't seem solemn enough and seemed like taking liberties with the dead; but to one such complaint we've had any number of congratulations on the new method from people who have said that it has done away with the most trying features of what has always been such an ordeal, namely, an out of town funeral.

"Before long the hearses will begin to go just like the hansom cabs, though for big local funerals I suppose hearses will be used for a long time yet."

To Grow Hair on a Bald Head.

Thousands of people suffer from baldness and falling hair who, having tried nearly every advertised hair tonic and hair grower without results have resigned themselves to baldness and its attendant discomforts. Yet their case is not hopeless; the following simple home prescription has made hair grow after years of baldness, and is also unequalled for restoring grey hair to its original color, stopping hair from falling out, and for destroying the dandruff germ. It will not make the hair greasy, and can be put up by any chemist: Bay rum 3 oz., Lavona de Compesce 1 oz., Menthol Crystal 1-4 dram. If you wish it perfumed add half to one teaspoonful of French Fleur perfume, which unites perfectly with the other ingredients. This preparation is highly recommended by physicians and specialists, and is absolutely harmless, as it contains none of the poisonous wood alcohol so frequently found in hair tonics. Do not apply to face or where hair is not desired.

Siberian winters resemble those of northern Canada. The soil much resembles that of Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska, though better watered.

Among the Jews

The situation in Kieff has alarmed even the authorities of that city. A band of robbers have utilized the situation created by the searches for Jews for their own purposes. Dressed as police officials, they spread over the town and begin to search for Jews, and arrest those who have no right to live there. In each case, they allowed their victims to escape on payment of large sums of money.

The Roumanian Government has just laid before the Senate the notorious bill for the encouragement of national industry. This bill, if it is passed, will seriously prejudice the Jewish population, as it will exclude nearly the whole of it from employment as workmen, engineers, etc., in factories.

A young Jew of eighteen, who is thoroughly acquainted with the Turkish language, applied for admission to the school for non-commissioned officers at Salonica. His application has been complied with. Before admission, he will serve as a volunteer in the Turkish Army. He is the first Jew who has received direct the rank of non-commissioned officer.

In connection with the French general elections which were held last week a large number of Jews ran for the Chambers. It is a noteworthy fact that there has been no re-currence of the unpleasantness connected with the Dreyfus affair.

The Black Hundreds, otherwise known as the Real Russians, have recently renewed their anti-Jewish agitation in the capital and in the Provinces. Their organs are spreading news of increased Jewish activity to the detriment of Russia.

Two Jewish youths have succeeded in carrying off the chief prizes for New South Wales, Australia, in an open competition which entitles them to try further for a Commonwealth championship. With a view to encouraging thought among the younger citizens on the problems of national defence, the Federal Government recently offered in each state three prizes for senior cadets and three for junior cadets for an essay on the possibilities of the Australian system of universal juvenile military training.

The Italian Government has given further evidence of its liberality in sending Signor Barzilai, a distinguished Jewish man of affairs, as Minister of China. If this sort of thing keeps up a large proportion of the Jews of Italy will be holding important government offices.

Mr. Otto H. Kahn, of New York, who recently purchased a painting of Franz Hals for five hundred thousand dollars, has since then bought Rembrandt's "Jewish Student," for a hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Two houses, each accommodating six families, have been built for the Jews from Yemen, who have taken up their abode in the Rishon-le-Zion Colony. The cost has been defrayed exclusively by the colonists.

Mr. Benj. Kowalski has been elected Mayor of Brownsville (Texas), on a Progressive platform, by a majority of 159 out of about fourteen hundred votes cast. The victory is the more notable as Brownsville is a Catholic town, with only a handful of Jewish citizens.

The annual statistics of Alsace-Lorraine show that at the last census the Jewish population numbered 31,708, against 40,938 in 1871. In 1909 there were thirty-three rabbis and ninty-five synagogues in Lower Alsace, forty-seven in Upper Alsace, and fifty in Lorraine.

The labors of the delegates to the Russian Rabbinical Conference are nearing an end. Since M. Stolypin's threat to disperse the assembly, if they ventured to protest officially against M. Markoff's allegations, the feeling of the members has been one of depression. The scheme for the organization of the community was approved by the conference. It was also decided that the meat tax should be retained, but that the Jewish doctors and chemists should no longer be exempt from it.

FAMOUS SAYINGS.

"And Thou, Brutus!" (Et Tu, Brute.) —Julius Caesar.

Casca first, and then the other conspirators, plunged their murderous blades into the body of Julius Caesar, but when Brutus stabbed: "This was the most unkindest cut of all," says Marc Antony when he upbraids the conspirators to the Roman populace over the body of Caesar. Shakespeare further places in the mouth of Antony the following words of the deplorable treachery of Brutus:

"For when the noble Caesar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
Quite vanquished him: then burst his mighty heart;
And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
Which all the while ran blood, great Caesar fell."

"Et tu, Brute!" were the last words of Caesar. The deed was committed in the Roman senate house, in the Ides of March, 44 B. C. Dante, the divine poet, sums up this historic crime with an appalling realism when he says that "in the centre of the earth, in the bottom of the pit of hell, Lucifer holds in his three mouths the three greatest malefactors the world has ever seen—Brutus and Cassius, who betrayed their sovereign and their country, and Judas Iscariot, who betrayed his Master with a kiss."

Shakespeare, it is evident, depended for the material he utilized in his noble tragedy of "Julius Caesar" upon Plutarch's lives of Caesar, Brutus and Antony. A play of the same title was known as early as 1589, and was acted in 1594 by Shakespeare's company. Shakespeare's play is a penetrating study of political life, and, although the murder and funeral of Caesar form the central episode and not the climax, the tragedy is thoroughly well planned and balanced.

FAMOUS DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION.

SNOWSHEDS OF CONCRETE.

Protection Against Avalanches on Mountain Railways.

"Railways in the west are preparing to build immense snow sheds of concrete this summer wherever there is any possibility of a repeition of the recent disastrous snowslides on lines in the west, when trains were swept from their tracks, killing scores of passengers," said Henry Gruber, an engineer of the Northern Pacific Railway.

"The Northern Pacific has many dangerous passes in the Cascade and Rocky mountains, where snowslides are a constant menace in winter to the passenger traffic. There are many similar danger spots along the line of the Canadian Pacific. At most of these places the railways have long wooden snowsheds, but these have not proved effective in preventing accidents. In many cases avalanches and immense snowslides have swept these structures completely away, though they were build of the most massive timbers that could be obtained.

"The roads have learned that wooden structures won't do, so this summer all these snowsheds are to be replaced with great concrete structures which will be built so strong and enduring that even a cyclone would not be able to budge them. People in the East who have never seen one the the snowstorms of the Rocky Mountains have no idea of the immense mass of snow that covers everything, and they cannot conceive the violence of an avalanche." — Washington Post.

HIGH PRICES FOR HORSES.

From Shetlands to Percherons, None Cheap.

"Horses in the west continue to command high prices. There was a speed sale held at Chicago recently at which 471 horses were sold, and the prices that were paid seemed to the old time horsemen something outrageous, but they all went like hot cakes," says Bit and Spur. "Horses from Kentucky with a bit of saddle breeding in them that were anything but good looking brought $300 and $400 apiece. The 471 horses sold realized almost $140,000.

"An auction sale of Shetland ponies was held under the auspices of the Shetland Pony Association, about a dozen members contributing 100 ponies. These men did not put the pick of their farms in the sale, but notwithstanding this the average price was over $100.

"Draught horses are selling still higher, a pair of gray grade Percherons realizing $1,000 a short time ago. These prices hold good all over the country and are not confined to any particular breed of horses. Any useful kind of animal brings much more money than he would have brought years ago, and you cannot look at any of the better individuals of the fashionable breeds without being staggered at the prices asked. A number of polo ponies were sold in New York the other day in the rough and realized exceptionally good prices, and so it is all down the line.

"Of course the automobile is usurping a great deal of the work that is done in the large cities and has also done away with a tremendous lot of horses for fashionable driving purposes, but this, except in the case of the non-horsy people and for those whose business requires rapid conveyance from place to place, will right itself as time goes on.

"In England, although the trade in automobiles is booming, a great many ladies are returning to the carriage for afternoon calls and driving in the parks. There has not yet been a marked increase in the purchase of carriages, but this is largely due to the fact that fashionable people have still a variety of conveyances which they have not sold and which they are now beginning to use again."

A.—(1) Peroxide of hydrogen or weak alum water mouth washes. (2) Clear boiling water. (3) It can be bought at any drug store.

Dear Miss Grey,—What would be nice to serve for refreshments Sunday evening to a crowd? L. B.

A.—Cocoa or tea, olives or pickles, sandwiches and a dainty salad. If you wish to serve another course add a sherbet or fruit and cake.

Dear Miss Grey,—(1) Please tell me how to obtain employment at a summer hotel. (2) A young man from out of town is coming to visit me. Is it necessary that I ask him to stay at my home? MARY B.

A.—(1) Apply by letter to the manager of the hotel in which you wish to work.

(2) No, but it would be a nice little attention on your part to invite him to dinner or luncheon during his stay.

Dear Miss Grey,—I followed closely your directions for making cucumber cream, but it is a failure. The suet and oil have formed in a cake on top. Is there any remedy? A SUBSCRIBER.

A.—You surely did not stir the cream until it was cool. Heat it over and stir until mixed, then remove from fire and stir constantly until it is cool. It will be all right, for this recipe is infallible.

Dear Miss Grey,—Can third cousins be married in the Catholic Church? If not, what degree of relationship is permissible? J. L.

A.—(1) No. (2) Fourth cousins.

Dear Miss Grey,—What is the proper way to congratulate a bride and groom? MARIAN.

A.—Congratulate the bridegroom, and tell the bride you wish her happiness in her wedded life.

Dear Miss Grey,—What is Jerome K. Jerome's latest play? ANXIOUS.

A.—"The Passing of the Third Floor Back."

Dear Miss Grey,—On what date was Thanksgiving in 1902? A SUBSCRIBER.

A.—November 27.

Dear Miss Grey,—I have a large face, and a nice quantity of hair. How can I arrange my hair without a rat? The ends of my hair are split. What can I do for it? S. A. R.

A.—(1) Part it and roll it at the sides, and either do it up in a low coil at the nape of the neck or braid it in two braids and bring it around the head. (2) Clip the ends of the hair where split.

AN ORGAN FOR 25 CENTS A WEEK

We have on hand thirty-five organs, taken in exchange on Heintzman & Co. pianos, which we must sell regardless of loss, to make room in our store. Every instrument has been thoroughly overhauled, and is guaranteed for five years, and full amount will be allowed on exchange. The prices run from $10 to $35, for such well-known makes as Thomas, Dominion, Karn, Uxbridge, Goderich and Bell. This is your chance to save money. A post card will bring full particulars.—Heintzman & Co., 71 King street, east, Hamilton.

Rise of Lady Tree.

(From the Lady's Pictorial.)

Lady Tree, upon whom congratulations are being showered no less heavily than upon her husband, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, has in her time played many parts and is even more versatile than the new theatrical knight himself. For, having had a brilliant career at Queen's College, she began life as a classical tutor there; then she made a reputation for herself as Miss Helen Maude, an amateur actress. Finally she achieved brilliant success as a Shakespearian actress, as a comedienne and as the female villain in melodrama. Lady Tree is a brilliant Greek scholar, one of the wittiest women speakers in England, a good musician and a skilful needlewoman, while she wields with no small skill the pencil and the brush.

The Vicious Circle.

When Donald came in from school his face showed unmistakable signs of tears, and at the first symptoms of maternal affection they started to flow again.

"Now, Donald, boy, tell mother all about it. What's the matter?"

"Ze teacher she scolded me."

"Well, we'll try and forget that, won't we? Never mind."

"But, mummy, that's just what the teacher told me 'bout. She said I never did mindy."—Youth's Companion.
