Kitchener Notes

The White Grouse trail is now completed for 20 miles.

Lots of good sized trout are being caught in the vicinity of Kitchener.

Master Robbie and Miss Creelman, of Vancouver, are visiting their aunt and uncle Mr. and Mrs. Burgess.

Miss Willineria McCaw' of Carleton Place Ontario, is visiting Mrs. G. A. Hunt, and will leave for the coast in a few days.

The Campbell Lumber Company, are expecting to start operations in a few days.

Mr. Colbourn is now taking charge of the Campbell Mill.

Fire Warden Rymell, has just made a trip of inspection, over the white house trail, and reports "all secure."

Mr. Campbell, of the lumber co., paid a business trip to town this week.

Sporting Column

The luck has changed, and it was a well earned victory for the benedicts as the result of the base ball match last Monday evening, the singletons being defeated by a score of 9 to 11.

The game was fast and furious, and towards the close, a good deal of wrangling was indulged in, but the sporting member of the Hamilton Bridge Crew, made a good referee, and proved worthy of his onerous position.

A big crowd, including many ladies, were down at the park, to watch the game.

Geo. Mead went to Cranbrook last Thursday, and if he returns, the match baseball, Married v single, will take place on Monday evening, in which event the Boy Scouts will meet on the Tuesday evening at 7.30 p. m. in the Old Schoolhouse, to make final arrangements for going into camp.

Geo Johnson, manager for P. Burns and Co., spent last week in the Trout Lake district, returning this week end.

J. McKay of the Bank staff has transferred to Cranbrook, and left for R.R. opolis on Sunday.

BEE EXPERT AT WORK

Last week Creston was visited by a most important personage to any fruit growing district in the person of government bee expert Harris of Vernon, B.C., Among other places in this fair valley that he has visited was the home of Mr. T. M. Edmondson. Here he pronounced the gooseberries, currants, and onions better than anything he had seen in the Okanagan district. The tomatoes were quite as good as he had seen anywhere in older fruit districts of the province. Mr. Harris' visit to Creston was for the purpose of looking into the bee industry in this section. While in conversation with Mr. Edmondson he learned that a certain tree stump near the Edmondson home contained a bee hive, a large swarm of bees having located there about three weeks before. So Mr. Harris promised that he would return on the following morning (last Saturday morning) to help Mr. Edmondson to secure the bees.

Accordingly at 6 a.m. the following day Mr. Harris arrived at the Edmondson home thoroughly equipped with various apparatus for handling the bees and both men at once proceeded to the bee tree.

They chopped the tree down and split it in lengths. They found in the tree lengths of comb, and breed, and honey, fully eighteen inches in length. Mr. Harris then took a box and placed it on top of a stump and stood the pieces of tree on an angle towards the box. He then took a small bellows or smoker and gave the bees a thorough smoking when lo and behold the bees all started and walked up the inclined pieces of wood into the box. The bee expert then placed a canvas over the top of the box and carried it to a hive already prepared for them. The way this bee specialist handled the bees in his bare hands was a marvel to Mr. Edmondson Throughout the entire work of capturing the bees, breaking up their old home, and installing them in their new quarters not a single bee showed any disposition to attack either men. And now Mr. Edmondson is the proud owner of a swarm of bees thanks to the unexpected visit of Bee Expert Harris.

SATISFIED CUSTOMERS are the best advertisement. The following letters received recently by the "Review" speak for themselves. The names and amounts are withheld for obvious reasons:

Government Lecturers

On July 7th Creston was visited by two government lecturers and experts, in the persons of Mr. C. C. Thom, Soil expert of the Washington State University, and J. R. Terry, Esq., provincial poultry expert, with headquarters at Victoria, B.C.

These two gentlemen delivered two lectures and gave a series of demonstrations in their respective branches, the lecture on poultry being illustrated with a series of lantern slides which reproduced the various breeds of fowls and their distinctive characteristics.

The following is the report of these lectures and demonstrations as taken verbatim by the paper's reporter, and is reproduced at length for the benefit of our readers.

The Char-Pit System of Land Clearing

Professor C. C. Thom. Gentlemen, it is now time to commence the lectures, but before we proceed in this hall, I wish you all to accompany me outside, where I will give a demonstration of the "cheapest and best method of clearing land of stumps." This method is known as the Char-Pit method. it was invented by Professor Sparks, of the State College of Washington, has been extensively tested in experiment and practical work, and is a proven success, having been adopted throughout Washington in districts very similar to your own.

This method is applicable in all cases of stumps over inches but is not ecoomical to use under that size, and all that is needed is man, shovel, axe and a [illegible] no powder or horses. [illegible] founded on the same pr[illegible] as is used in making [illegible]al, the idea being that if [illegible]ow wood to burn rapidly [illegible]sumes itself, but if the [illegible] checked, it burns slowly but much more thoroughly.

First remove the bark from the stump [illegible] height of about fifteen inches then take any old material, wood, etc., lying around, so long as it is sufficiently dry, and stand it up around the stump to the height of about fifteen inches, reaching about fifteen inches out from the base of the stump and leaning against the stump, forming an archway. Then bank same up with earth, and leave it, watching from time to time that there are no holes as the fire falls in, after lighting the fire. If the wood is piled up against the stump properly, and banked in as instructed you can come back in a weeks time and push the stump over, this method will burn the stump and roots. If the stump is green, make a few notches through the sap wood, so as to enable the heat to get through [illegible]

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOLYROOD PALACE.

Historic Castle Has Been the Scene of Stirring Episodes.

Few regal edifices have undergone more vicissitudes than Holyrood Palace, which is now being subjected to several alterations and improvements to fit it for the occupation of King George and Queen Mary when they stay there in July. It occupies the site of Holyrood Abbey, founded in 1128 by King David I., on the spot where he was supposed to have been saved from an infuriated stag. The legend goes that the King was hunting in the forest of Drumslech, in the immediate vicinity of Edinburgh, and was assailed by an enraged stag, which unhorsed him, and probably would have put a very speedy end to his existence had not this Scottish monarch, like the first Christian Emperor, been favored of the saints.

As a reward for his piety, and in consideration of his great liberality to churchmen, a cross descended from Heaven in the moment of his danger, with which he stoutly attacked the beast. The latter, finding itself overcome, quickly made its way out of the woods, and left the King and the cross masters of the situation. Thus to prove his gratitude to the saints who had interceded in his behalf, he founded the Abbey of Holyrood for the canons-regular of St. Augustine.

The canons were allowed many privileges, and succeeding monarchs added to the gifts of the founder, Holyrood Abbey becoming the most opulent of all religious institutions in Scotland. In due time a royal residence was erected close to it, although it is doubtful how soon it became the permanent home of the Kings of Scotland. Certain it is, however, that James IV. lived there. It was during his residence, on account of Mass having been celebrated in the chapel, that a revolutionary mob broke in and despoiled all the religious ornaments, leaving only the bare walls. The rioters even profaned the vault which had been used as the royal sepulchre, broke open the leaden coffins, and carried away the lids; but as the royal bones were not negotiable articles, the anti-Papists were forced to leave them behind.

But worse misfortunes were still to come, and they came with Queen Mary. Her Majesty's misfortunes commenced at a very early period. The first Sunday after her arrival a mot beset the palace for the purpose of instructing her in the proper way of worshipping God. To such a pitch of enthusiasm had the spirit of these religious instructors risen that it was only with difficulty they were restrained from hanging the priest who at that moment was officiating in the chapel. Mary locked herself in her apartment with her Mass book and her father-confessor, while tumultuous zealots assailed the gates and pronounced themselves certain Her Majesty was making for eternal perdition, and must soon be utterly lost unless she listened to John Knox and abjured beads and images.

Then came the historic night of March 9th, 1566. As Mary and a small party were having supper, Darnley and Ruthven, followed by other conspirators, entered for the purpose of seizing David Rizzio, the accomplished Italian secretary and skilful musician, who had gained the Queen's confidence and roused the jealousy of the Presbyterian lords and ministers of the Kirk. Anticipating their purpose, Rizzio threw himself behind the Queen and clung to her dress; but was stabbed by George Douglas, leaning over Mary's shoulders. During this exciting scene the Queen's husband held her fast in his arms, while another of the conspirators held a pistol at her breast. The room in which the fatal supper-party took place is still in existence.

Queen Mary's Daily Life.

According to a letter published in The Yorkshire Post, and written by a lady holding a high position at court, the Queen at 9.30 a.m., begins the day's work by going through her large correspondence (which she has previously opened) with two secretaries. Then come interviews with the governess, nurse, housekeeper, and the heads of departments in the palace. Then appointments with furniture makers and various trades-people till 1.30. In the afternoon Her Majesty visits an hospital or some charitable institution, or a picture gallery, or visits some other interesting places in or near London, such as the City churches, the halls of the various City companies, etc. After tea the Queen again summons her secretaries for more correspondence, and gives one or two interviews. After dinner she reads till 10.30, and then retires to rest. In the country, expeditions to historical or other interesting places in the neighborhood with some of her children are arranged, or some local charities or institutions are visited.

Dangerous to Use "Esquire."

The recovery of a letter which had been sent to a little town in Germany and never delivered to the person addressed cured the writer of the custom of adding "Esquire" to a name on the superscription of mail matter. The letter in question would probably have been promptly delivered had the address read simply, "Mr. John Brown." But the sender had addressed it, "John Brown, Esquire," and the communication rested comfortably in the "E" compartment of the post restante department, waiting to be called for by "Mr. Esquire." One of the popular guide books warns against the use of "Esq.," saying that it might be mistaken for a name.

FADING AT THIRTY

When Woman Should be in the Prime of Charm and Beauty

At thirty to thirty-five a woman should be in the prime of charm and beauty, and yet many woman begin to fade before then. Wrinkles appear and the complexion grows sallow. Dark rings surround the eyes, and headaches follow, with backaches and low spirits. The cause of this is simply need of blood nourishment. Good, pure blood is the life of a woman's beauty and health. It is good blood that brings the glow of health to the cheek, brightness to the eye, and elasticity to the step, and the general happiness of good health. When woman feels jaded and worn out her blood simply needs attention, and the one unrivalled and sure remedy is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which supply the rich, red blood that repairs the waste, dispels disease and restores the brightness and charm of womanly health.

Mrs. H. G. Hart, Winnipeg, Man., is one of the thousands of sufferers who owes her present health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says: "I had suffered for a long time, not knowing what the trouble was, I had doctored with several doctors, but only seemed to be growing worse. The last doctor I had told me the trouble was anaemia, that my blood was turned to water and that my condition was serious. But his treatment, like the rest, did me no good. I got so bad that if I excited myself, or went up stairs, I was completely out of breath and felt as if I was going to suffocate. My heart would palpitate violently, and at times I would suffer with terrible pains from it. I had a yellow complexion, my lips had lost their color, and I had no appetite and could not eat. I grew so weak I could hardly drag myself along, and my feet seemed to have weights on them. I was so completely run down that I thought I was going into consumption. At this time a friend urged me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After taking a few boxes I found my health improving, and after taking the Pills for a couple of months I was entirely well, and have since enjoyed the best of health, and I feel that I can never say enough in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Had Done His Duty

"I wish some time, Mr. Speeder," said the doctor, "that you would bear our hospital in mind, and if it appeals to you do something for it."

"Great Scott! Squills," retorted Speeder, "why can't you be satisfied? That new chauffeur of mine has contributed at least two patients a day to your old charity. What more do you want?"

They Cleanse While They Cure.—The vegetable compounds of which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are composed, mainly dandelion and mandrake, clear the stomach and intestines of deleterious matter and restore the deranged organs to healthful action. Hence they are the best remedy for indigestion available to-day. A trial of them will establish the truth of this assertion and do more to convince the ailing than anything that can be written of these pills.

FARMER'S WIFE TELLS HER STORY

FOUND A CURE FOR ALL HER ILLS IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

She was tired, worn-out and nervous and suffered from Rheumatism, but two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

Hawthorne, Ont. (Special).—Mrs. T. G. Alexander, wife of a well-known farmer living near here, adds her testimony to that of the thousands who have learned from their own experience that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Kidney Disease.

"I suffered for twelve years," Mrs. Alexander says, "My back ached, my sleep was broken and unrefreshing, I was nervous and tired and I was troubled with heart flutterings. Rheumatism developed and added to my suffering.

"I was in a very run-down, worn-out condition when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, but I am thankful to say they gave me relief almost from the first. Two boxes cured me completely."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. Cured Kidneys mean that all impurities are strained out of the blood. That means pure blood all over the body and the banishment of that tired, heavy feeling and those pains and aches that impure blood brings.

THE TOMATO DOWN TO DATE

WHAT is, beyond question, the most wholesome, popular and altogether most interesting vegetable that comes to the modern table was unknown to our great-grandmothers except as a curiosity.

The early history of the tomato, in the form of an eatable esculent, is wrapped in a thin veil of mystery. We are told by scientific horticulturists that it is a native of tropical South America. Also, that its virtues as a vegetable were known in Europe early in the sixteenth century, and that it worked its way slowly northward to its present estate of universal regard in all lands and among all classes. In the same paragraph we read that it was known to the Italians, who got it from the Moors, proof of its origin being perpetuated by the name "Pomo dei Mori." The Italians had known and used it under that title before the French became acquainted with the fruit dubbed by them "Pomme d'amour." The perversion of the Italian "Pomo dei Mori" by their fanciful neighbors led to the superstition that the "Love Apple" had certain qualities which commended it to romantic youths and the compounders of love charms.

One breath of truth suffices to dispel the illusion. The love apple was in the mouth of the Italian the "Moorish Apple." "Only that and nothing more."

The Spaniards probably carried the seeds into their country from South America. That is, if it were really indigenous to that country. We grow skeptical of historical details where we detect so many palpable errors as confront us in the study of our botanical treatise. The cannibals of Polynesia had a species of our vegetable which was made into a sauce considered as indispensable at their horrid feasts as mint sauce with our roast lamb and cranberry sauce with turkey. Botanists catalog it as "Solanum anthropophagorum" — vulgarly known as "cannibals' tomato."

Continuing our ungracious quest for blunders down the centuries, we happen upon the flat assertion: "It was known only as a curiosity in the United States until about 1830."

Yet in a time-sallowed copy of "The Virginia Housewife," by M. Randolph, published in 1828 (bequeathed to me by my mother) I find recipes for "stewed tomatoes, baked tomatoes," etc., introduced without a word of explanation. The Virginia housemother of that day was evidently on familiar terms with the "curiosity." In "The Old Homestead," Aunt Tilda and her ancient wooer talk of their youth and how nobody thought of eating "love apples" then.

It is a pleasant reflection that our tomato—alias "tomate" in French, Spanish and Portuguese; "tomati" with the Mexicans, who make abundant use of it, and "lycopersicum esculentum" in botanical lingo—has been recognized far and wide as the most valuable of esculents for a much longer period than we generally believe and teach.

It deserves prominence as part of our daily diet. We were told half a century ago that it contained calomel in very minute quantities. The chemist of our century stoutly denies this, and we who do not pin our faith to drugs as health preservers are glad to readjust our ideas on this point. We know that it is slightly laxative and a gentle sweetener of the blood. Almost everybody likes it in one form or another. We yield to the apple the title of "King of Fruits." We may as truly claim for the tomato the rank of "Prince of Household Vegetables."

Still tracing its history down to date, we learn that it was the first vegetable to be canned in these United States. I contribute a wee item of information in that line.

It is now nine years since my attention was directed especially to the adulteration of canned foods by the results of actual analysis of the contents of the glass jars and tin cans sold to and eaten by families in all quarters of the country. I have published the revelations made by chemists with whom I wrought during the investigation. I record with gratification that every specimen of canned tomatoes submitted to chemical test in the course of the work was pronounced free from deleterious preservative agents. Under the beneficent pure food laws enacted since that time, we may partake of fruits and vegetables sealed hermetically, without dread of salicylic acid in moderate doses, and benzoate of soda in larger. Heat, scientifically applied and continued for a given season, is the one and only preserving agency. American housemothers may well chant peans of thankfulness at the deliverance from dangers untold and terrible to health and life, of which the major part of them never heard until science revealed the enormity of the iniquitous manufacture. It is now practicable to feed our growing children and ourselves upon green vegetables and ripe fruits full of sweet succulence all the year round.

Returning to our prince of table vegetables, we note the marvelous improvement in quality and size wrought upon it by intelligent cultivation. We dwell, too, with especial pleasure, upon the fact that, whereas other fruits often lose in flavor as they gain in dimensions, our tomato responds gratefully to superior conditions of culture in increased richness of juicy fleshiness. The smooth crimson specimen, ripe to a turn, that tilts the scale at ten ounces is far more luscious than those sliced for salad by our mid-nineteenth-century cook.

I cannot resist the temptation to commend, at this stage of my story to the progressive housewife, the best way of preparing our perfect representative tomato for the table. It is something akin to desecration to cook it. As I have observed, more than once or twice, the juice of the tomato loses sweetness under heat. I invariably try to restore this, as far as artificial means can accomplish a natural process, by adding a very little sugar. If you would taste the prince in his perfected wholesome palatableness, treat him as I shall now direct.

Tomato Salad With Whipped Cream

With a keen knife, pare large, smooth, ripe tomatoes.

(N. B.—Always remove the skin from tomatoes to be eaten raw, and never by scalding. Take time and pains to pare them delicately as you would a luscious peach. Scalding impairs the flavor. To serve without paring is slovenly and unwholesome. The skin is tough and indigestible.)

Having pared the fruit, cut each in half and lay upon a crisp lettuce leaf. Sprinkle lightly with salt and paprika, and lay upon the top a great spoonful of whipped cream.

Send around heated and buttered crackers and cream cheese with the tomatoes, or thin slices of buttered graham bread.

Unless the tomatoes have been kept in the ice, pare them an hour before serving and set in a chilled place directly upon the ice. The whipped cream should likewise be ice cold.

This is the simplest and most elegant way of serving tomato salad. Select the finest fruits for it.

Tomato and Cucumber Salad

Here is an exception to the rule just laid down for preparing tomatoes for salad by paring them.

"Roll the Slices in Flour"

"Fill the Tomato Shells with Diced Cucumbers."

"Lay on Top a Spoonful of Whipped Cream."

Cut off the tops of fine, ripe, firm tomatoes, and with a small spoon dig out carefully most of the pulp. Set in the ice while you prepare the cucumbers. Do this by peeling and cutting them into dice. As you cut them, drop the dice into ice-cold water. When all are ready, drain off the water to the last drop and mix the bits of cucumber with the tomato pulp. Fill the tomato shells with the mixture, heaping it on the top; set the tomatoes upon crisp lettuce leaves and pour a great spoonful of mayonnaise over each.

As the tomatoes are to serve as cups from which the mixture is eaten, it is necessary to leave the skins. They are not eaten.

Tomato and Corn Salad

Prepare large, firm tomatoes as directed in the preceding recipe. Have at hand enough cold boiled corn to fill the excavated tomatoes. Save the pulp you remove, for cooking. Fill the shells with the corn, which should be previously seasoned with mayonnaise, and set the filled tomatoes on the ice until you are ready to serve them. Lay upon crisp lettuce, or stick small stalks of endive upright in the corn after dipping the endive in mayonnaise.

Tomato Aspic Salad

Soak half a box of gelatine in cold water until soft and clear. Strain the liquor from a quart of canned (or of fresh stewed) tomatoes through doubled cheesecloth into a bowl. Season with a teaspoonful of onion juice, 2 teaspoonfuls of sugar, a saltspoonful each of paprika and salt. Set over the fire and bring to a boil. Cook gently for 20 minutes; add the gelatine; stir until it is dissolved and strain through a flannel jelly bag into a mold wet with cold water, or in small pate pans to be served as individual portions.

Serve as a whole in a glass bowl set about with endive or with the crisp inner leaves of lettuce, and pass mayonnaise with it.

A prettier way is to lay a small mold of the aspic with a crisp lettuce leaf upon a chilled plate, and put a spoonful of mayonnaise or of whipped cream upon the top. Pass one of these to each person.

Tomato and Nut Salad

Pare the tomatoes carefully and extract yet more gingerly three-quarters of the pulp, leaving enough to make the walls of the "cup." Have ready a pint or so of blanched and minced nut meats—almond, pecan or walnut—mixed with mayonnaise or with a good French dressing, and fill the tomato cups with the mixture. Serve upon lettuce or romaine.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

IMPORTANT NOTICE

BECAUSE of the enormous number of letters sent to the Exchange, I must ask contributors to limit their communications to 100 words, except in cases of formulas or recipes which require greater space. I want all my correspondents to have a showing in the Corner, and if my request in this respect is complied with it will be possible to print many more letters.

Attention is called to the fact that Marion Harland cannot receive money for patterns, as she has no connection with any department that sells them.

Disappointed

THE ginger beer recipe you published in reply to my request was not what I wanted. It was ginger ale. If any of the members have the right one, I shall be thankful for it.

I inclose a cake recipe which is very simple. You will be surprised at the result.

Iowa Cake

One and a half cups of granulated sugar; 2 level tablespoonfuls of butter; 2 cups of well-sifted flour; 2 level teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a hot oven.

M. W. (Burlington, Ia.).

I did my best to meet your wishes in the matter of the ginger beer. Somebody else will send in just what you want. Thank you for the cake recipe.

Rouladen

Some weeks ago a correspondent asked for a recipe for rouladen. This is the way I make mine:

Cut pieces the size of your hand from round steak; sprinkle salt and pepper over them; then spread with mustard. Lay a slice of bacon and some chopped onion upon each. Roll up and fasten with toothpicks or tie with thread. Fry brown in bacon fat or in butter. Add water; cover and let them simmer from 2 to 2½ hours. Add as much water as is needed to make gravy and thicken with cornstarch. A little cream or a glass of wine will improve it.

We Germans like to use cream upon meats and wine in soups.

Some time ago I sent you some recipes, but I never saw them in print. I also offered German books; music for beginners in English and in German; a long list of school books; some pieces for woolen quilts, etc.

I still have all these to dispose of; also old linen and muslin.

I am a very busy woman, and yet I often wish I had time to do some etching for your Exchange. It is such a blessing.

Mrs. W. L. (Auburn Park, Ill.).

Your former letter must have miscarried on the way, for it is not in the drawer of "unanswered, keep and use"—from which we draw our best material. Nor have we any record of the contents. We make room cheerfully and gratefully for your liberal offers and hold your address for those who should profit by your goodness.

"Making Soap"

Can you inform me in what book I can find the humorous dialogue entitled "Making Soap"?

Mrs. S. D. S. (Chepachet, R. I.).

We cannot undertake to get poems, recitations and the like through our page. We can and will let you know where the dialogue is to be found when the information is handed in to us.

Danish Recipes

I hope the canny housekeeper, "Jane" (Chicago), will find time to come again soon, bringing her Danish recipes with her. The Danes have a way of cooking common, everyday dishes in such a way that they taste unlike themselves as we know them.

I will set her an example by sending in my recipe for plum pudding, which was given me by a Danish friend.

Plum Pudding

Four large tart apples; 2 scant 8-ounce of zwieback crumbs; 2 tablespoonfuls of sugar; butter the size of an egg.

Mix the sugar with the crumbs and fry them in the butter. Stew the apples in as little water as will keep them from burning. Sweeten and remove from the stove. Add the beaten eggs. Put a layer of the fried crumbs into a buttered pudding mold; then one of apples, continuing in this order until all the ingredients are used, the top layer being of crumbs.

Cover and set away to cool. This will keep good for several days. Turn out and serve with whipped cream.

Thanks for directions for preserving figs. I am still waiting for recipes for guava jelly and preserves.

G. E. M. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

I insert the pudding recipe just as you give it. I had expected to read "bake in a moderate oven." As all the ingredients except the eggs were already cooked before they were put together, perhaps the Danish pudding is all right.

I, too, am hoping for further communications from our well beloved "Jane," of Chicago.

To M. E. G.

An article signed "M. E. G." appeared in the Exchange some time ago, speaking of a cure for rheumatism. Can you give me the prescription in its entirety?

Mrs. C. C. S. (Oskaloosa, Ia.).

Another correspondent writes, and more importunately, to the same effect. I quote in part:

Miss B. writes in good faith for herself and other sufferers from rheumatism, confident that "M. E. G." will not refuse to forward specific directions for treatment praised so highly by herself.

Is it too much to ask that letters be forwarded to "M. E. G.," who may respond without signing a name, should she desire to remain incognito? But will she please let us have the formula?

L. A. B. (St. Paul's Park, Minn.).

When, in response to Miss B.'s first letter containing a request for the address of "M. E. G.," I said that the same was confidential, but that I was asking that "M. E. G." would let us have the formula in full for publication in the Exchange, I acted "in good faith," and in the firm conviction that I was doing the right thing for all concerned. For there lay then upon my desk such a pile of letters beseeching me to put the writers into communication with the owner of the coveted formula that I dared not let her have even the moderate percentage of these which contained stamps for reply. Miss B. sent not one but four stamps. I have begged "M. E. G." to make public what so many need. I now reiterate the petition. Unless she does this I am powerless to satisfy the applicants. Every mail brings entreaties from those whose addresses have gone by mail in response to requests couched in some such terms as this:

"Please! please!! please!!! send my address to nobody else! My stores of articles offered are exhausted, and forty letters still remain unanswered!"

The above is a verbatim extract from the letter of a woman who put a go-cart at our disposal. It is but a sample article.

I am in high hopes that the remedy described by "M. E. G." (Boston, Mass.), will be forthcoming before long. If not, it is not my fault.

No Addresses Given

Do you know where roots of the Luther Burbank crimson winter rhubarb may be bought?

If not, and there is a possibility of inserting this query in the Exchange during the next month, will you kindly publish the information? ROSIE V. G. (Aurora, Ill.).

Business addresses are not printed in the Exchange for obvious reasons. Should the information asked for by an esteemed correspondent be sent in to me it will be forwarded to her by mail.

Too Late

"Clementine" (Louisville, Ky.) will pardon my apparent neglect of her request for hints as to a surprise-dance she wished to give her "very best friend," in April, when I tell her that the letter was received altogether too late for me to have the answer I should have been glad to give published in season to be of any service to her.

I may say the same to a masculine member who wrote of his desire to get a program for an entertainment to be given upon his twentieth wedding-day anniversary. The letter could not possibly be inserted before the important day had passed by a week or two.

In each case my chagrin was sincere. I should have esteemed it a pleasure to take a hand in the festivities.

Wanted—A Floor Polish

A short time ago there was a recipe for floor stain published in the Exchange, the base being permanganate of potash. Could I get it? I was visiting when I saw it, and the people with whom I was staying would not let me cut it out of the paper, as they wanted it themselves. They "would see that it was saved for me." I asked for it last week, but they had "forgotten all about it." Can I hope to have it reprinted?

Mrs. T. S. F. (New Albany, Ind.).

Referred! I am sorry you did not take a copy of it. I do not recollect the formula. It will probably be sent in again.

Home-Cured Ham

I read in the Exchange that "L. L. A." (Pekin, Ill.) would like to get a recipe for sugar-cured hams. I can indorse that which I contribute as good, having used it in my family for years.

Sugar-Cured Ham

One pound of saltpeter, 1 pound of pepper, 3 pound of brown sugar and 10 pounds of salt to 1000 pounds of pork.

Dissolve the saltpeter in a very little hot water; mix all the ingredients thoroughly into a stiff pickle and rub this on and into the meat. Do this with the hand and hard, until the meat is covered and will take in no more. The salt should lie all over the surface.

Insert your finger under the central bone of hams and shoulders, and fill the openings with the mixture.

When the pickle is all in, lay the meat in a cool place for about two weeks, not letting it get down to freezing point, and it will be ready to smoke.

Smoking is a preventive against the inroads of insects, and the meat will be sweet and tender, warranted to keep all summer.

Beef may be put up by the same recipe, but one week in the pickle is long enough for it. L. C. W. (San Jose, Ill.).

Your formula has the prime recommendation of simplicity. I wish you had told us how long the meat should be smoked and how it should be packed to insure preservation during hot weather.

Perhaps you will some day.

Currant Pie

May I read in next Sunday's issue a recipe for making dried currant pie? I should appreciate your compliance with this request, as I should like to make the pie on Monday.

ONE WHO APPRECIATES YOUR RECIPES (Meriden, Conn.).

It was not practicable to print the recipe at the date you name. The letter was forwarded to me from the office several days after the Monday on which you wished to make the pies.

Recalling the pleasant fact that there are many more Mondays and Sundays to come, I give the formula:

Dried Currant Pie

Soak a pound of cleaned currants for two hours in lukewarm water and drain. Add the juice of half a lemon and a cup of white sugar. Leave currants (dripping wet) and the sugar together in a bowl until the sugar is dissolved into syrup. Have pie plates lined with a good crust; fill with the fruit and juice; lay a top crust over all and bake. With a keen knife make incisions in the top crust to let out the steam and prevent the crust from bulging.

"In Time of Peace"

Please tell me if there is a "carbol" or acid, or by whatever name it may be called, that will exterminate bugs.

May it be used upon cots and upholstered furniture in a room where there is an open fireplace, and lighted lamps burn all night? Tell me all about it, please.

I do not know that there is a single "chinch" in my house, but I would be prepared for them.

L. M. S. (South Union, Ky.).

I do not know to what preparation you refer. The best exterminator of which I have any ken is gasoline, and this must not be used where there are artificial lights. A mixture of spirits of turpentine and corrosive sublimate is also potent. You are wise, "in time of peace to prepare for war."

The Review is the acknowledged advertising medium of the Creston valley, circulating in over one thousand homes throughout the Creston district. Our columns are open to correspondents on live questions of local interest. Contributions must be brief, written on one side of the paper only and signed, not necessarily for publication, but as evidence of good faith. We invite support in our endeavours to increase the usefulness of the Review by bringing in your advertisements, subscriptions and news. Complaints from subscribers as to non-receipt of paper will be promptly attended to. Address all communications to the editor

For years Creston has been infested with a gang of petty thieves, who try to disguise the real motive of their robberies by calling them jokes, and terming as 'Mulligans' the secret meetings at which they divide the stolen property. These individuals, are in reality the worst class of sneak thieves, they are too mean to purchase their food like honest men, but prefer rather to slink around their neighbor's chicken house all night, relying upon their supposed position in the community to prevent their real designs being discovered.

One of these miserable, petty pilferers, on Sunday evening last, stole two chickens from Station Agent R. M. Reid, evidently relying on our hard worked station agent, being too anxious for repose on the weekly rest day, to stay awake to protect his property. It may interest this disreputable rascal, to learn that he narrowly escaped being shot, also that his identity is suspected, and that he will be fortunate if he does not find himself behind the bars in Nelson, wearing one of those striped jackets which the Government provides free, to any would be smart Alec who cannot discriminate between other people's property and his own. The cage at Nelson was built expressly for the safe accommodation of, and is filled right along, with larks no worse than these so called Mulliganers, and it would be a boon to every honest citizen, if some of the local specimens of the mulligan fraternity, could be put away to spend a few months in the same jail as the other thieves to whose company they really belong.

The person who steals chickens, and robs the farmer and grower of his produce, is a dirty low down thief, only a shade better than the other mulliganers, who eat the food they had not nerve enough to steal for themselves.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS

The crowded house which greeted the "In Wyoming" Company, on Tuesday evening, was alike a tribute to the good reputation of the Company, and a proof of the effectiveness of the "Review" as an advertising medium.

The play follows along the usual lines of the "Woolly Western" story, which seem to possess a never failing attraction for Canadian Audiences. Judging from the reception given the actors throughout the four acts, the show pleased the large audience, and any specially good hits were at once applauded, the natural acting of the artists who took the parts of Hiram and his wife being especially appreciated

In Wyoming, was one of the best plays ever staged at Creston, and we hope this talented Company will pay us another visit in the near future.

For sale:—Two good horses, eight and nine years old, party going to England. Horses can be seen at the Erickson Hotel.

Mr. C. Blair, of Canyon City, left at the end of last week, on a four months visit to Bonnie Scotland.

Mr. W. D. Smith, son of Mr. Jacob Smith of the City Bakery, arrived in town on Friday last, from Lacombe Alta. He will remain in Creston for a time, and may locate permanently here.

Another big deal was put through last Saturday, when Mr. O. P. Wisler sold 120 acres, one and a half miles from Erickson, to Mr. Charles Richardson of New Westminster.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

At a meeting of the fruit growers Association held last Friday evening, it was decided to notify all local fruit growers, tha orders for apple, pear and plum boxes, must be handed in to the secretary of the Association, not later than Monday July 24th.

Mr. Chas. Richardson, has purchased a seven acre plot of fruit land from Mr. J, Hobden, in addition to the 120 acres the same investor has bought from Mr. O. P. Wisler. Mr Richardson intends to commence active improvements upon the whole of his new property at once, putting the bottom land under hay and vegetables, and the bench land in fruit.

Fred G. Little, District C. P. R. Fire Warden, made a trip to Yahk the fore part of this week. He reports a complete absence of fires along the line.

George Hunt and crew, returned from White Grouse Mountain on Saturday, where they have been completing a good trail from Kitchener.

Frank Johnson, a former resident at Creston, and now of Vaucouver, passed through town last Monday, en route to the terminal city.

Mr. Prescott, Superintendent of motor cars of the S. and I., with his family, passed through town on Wednesday, bound for Nelson. He makes his headquarters in Spokane.

No definite clue has yet been obtained of the thief who, a week ago on Friday night, stole a trunk belonging to Miss Pence of Erickson, from the Erickson Station room, and having carried same across the railway track, broke the lock, and turned the contents completely up side down.

Mr. E. F. Platt, formerly of the Wigwam cafe, is now comfortably installed in his new quarters in the Ed, F Johnson Block, directly opposite the Creston Hotel. The name of the new resturant and Ice Cream Parlour, is the "Hazelwood Cafe," the ad. of which can be found elsewhere in this issue.

Why be troubled with dyspepsia, when you can get whole wheat bread at the City Bakery.

Hyomei
A Breatheable Remedy for Catarrh

The rational way to combat Catarrh is the Hyomei way, viz: by breathing. Scientists for years have been agreed on this point but failed to get an anteseptic strong enough to kill catarrh germs and not destroy the tissues of the membrane at the same time, until the discovery of Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me).

Hyomei is the most powerful, yet healing antiseptic known. Breathe it through the inhaler over the inflamed and germ-ridden membrane four or five times a day, and in a few days the germs will disappear.

A complete Hyomei outfit, including the inhaler costs $1.00 and extra bottles, if afterwards needed, cost but 50 cents. Obtainable from your druggist or postpaid from The R. T. Booth Co, Ltd, Fort Erie, Ont. Hyomei is guaranteed to cure asthma, croup, sore throat, coughs, colds or grip or refund your money back. Sold and guaranteed by he Creston Drug & Book Co.

THE PERFUME OF THE LADY IN BLACK

By GASTON LEROUX,
Author of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room."

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY BRENTANO'S

CHAPTER XIII.

"When My father Wears a Wig it Will Fit."

IT was literally true that he was frightened. And I was more terrified myself than words could express. I had never seen him in such a state of mental inquietude. "I want to ask you, my boy, whether your mother told you the story of the accident with the revolver?"

"No," he answered, "and I asked her nothing."

"And you swore to see nothing and hear nothing without her saying anything to you about the pistol shot and cry?"

The young man now gazed at me intently.

"It was necessary for me to believe. For my part, I respected the secrets of the Lady in Black. I had nothing to ask of her when she said to me, 'We must leave each other now, my child, but nothing can ever separate us again!'"

"Ah, she said that to you?"

"Yes, and there was blood upon her hands."

We looked at each other in silence. I was now at the window and beside the reporter. Suddenly his hand touched mine. Then he pointed to the little taper which was burning at the entrance to the subterranean door which led to Old Bob's study in the tower.

"It is dawn," said Rouletabille, "and Old Bob is still at work. We will go and have a peep at him."

A few moments later we descended into the octagon room of the Tower of Charles the Bold. The lamp was burning on the table, but there was no sign of Old Bob.

He picked up the lamp and examined everything. We came to the little desk table. There we found the skull, and it was true that it had been spattered with the red paint of the wash drawing which Darzac had set to dry upon that part of the desk which faced the window. I went from one window to the other and shook the bars to assure myself that they had not been tampered with.

"What are you about?" asked Rouletabille. "Before thinking about how he could have got out at the windows wouldn't it be better to find out whether he went by the door?"

He set the lamp upon the parapet and looked for traces of footprints. Then Rouletabille said:

"Go and knock at the door of the square tower and ask Bernier whether Old Bob has come in. Ask Mattoni and Pere Jacques. Go—quick!"

Five minutes after I went out I was back with the information. No one had seen Old Bob in any part of the fortress. Rouletabille said:

"He left this lamp burning in order to make people believe that he was at work. There is no sign of a struggle of any sort, and in the sand I find the traces of the footprints of only Rance and Darzac, who came to this room during the storm last night and have brought on their feet a little earth from the Court of the Bold and also of the claylike soil of the outer court. There is no footprint which could be Old Bob's. Old Bob reached here before and perhaps went out while the tempest was raging, but in any case he has not come in since."

Like a flash an idea pierced through my brain. I rushed through the court till I came to the oubliette. I discovered that the iron bars were still fast. If any one had fled by that way or had fallen into the shaft the bars would have been opened. I hurried back.

"Rouletabille! There is no way that Old Bob could have got out except in the sack!"

My friend was not listening, and I was surprised to see him deeply engrossed in a task of which I found it impossible to guess the meaning. He was making drawings with a rule, a square, a measure and a compass, seated in the geologist's easy chair, with Darzac's drawing board before him. He was quietly making a plan.

He had pricked the paper with one of the points of his compass while the other point traced the circle which might represent the Tower of the Bold as we could see it in the design of M. Darzac. Then, dipping his brush into a tiny dish half full of the red paint which M. Darzac had been using, he carefully spread the paint over the entire space occupied by the circle. In doing this he was extremely particular, giving the greatest attention to seeing that the paint was of the same thickness at every point. His face took on a look like that of a maniac. Then he turned toward me so quickly that he upset the great easy chair in which he had been seated.

"Sainclair! Sainclair! Look at the red paint! Look at the red paint!"

I leaned over the drawing, terrified by his savage tone.

"The red paint, the red paint!" he kept groaning, his eyes staring in his head as though he were witnessing some frightful spectacle.

"But what—what is it?" I stammered.

"What is it? My God, man, can't you see? Don't you know that that is blood?"

No, I did not know it—indeed, I was quite sure that it wasn't blood. It was merely red paint. But I took care not to contradict Rouletabille. I feigned to be interested in this idea of blood.

"Whose blood?" I inquired. "Do you think that it can be Larsan's?"

"Oh, oh, oh! Larsan's blood? Who knows anything about Larsan's blood? Who has ever seen the color of it? To see that, it would be necessary to open my own veins, Sainclair. That's the only way. My father would not let his blood be spilled like that."

He was speaking again with that strange, desperate pride of his father.

"When my father wears a wig it will fit. My father would not let his blood be spilled like that."

He spoke again:

"My poor mother did not deserve this. I did not deserve it." A tear ran down his cheek and fell into the little dish of paint.

"Ah!" he cried. "It isn't necessary to fill it any fuller." And he picked up the tiny cup with infinite care and carried it to the cabinet.

"Let us go! Let us go!" he said drearily at last. "The time is come, Sainclair. No matter what happens, we can never turn back now. The Lady in Black must tell us everything—everything about the man who is in that sack."

He knocked at the door of the square tower. I asked him whether he did not wish me to leave him alone with his mother. But, to my great surprise, he begged me not to abandon him "for anything in the world—so that the circle should not be closed." And he added mournfully, "Perhaps it may never be!"

The door of the tower again was opened, and we saw Bernier's face appear.

"What do you want? What are you doing here again?" he demanded. "Speak low. Madame is in Old Bob's sitting room, and the old man has not come in yet."

Rouletabille pushed the door farther open.

We were in the vestibule of the tower.

"What is madame doing in Old Bob's sitting room?" asked the reporter in a low voice.

"She is waiting for Darzac. She dare not re-enter the room until he comes, nor I either."

"Well, go back into your lodge, Bernier."

He opened the door of Old Bob's salon, and we saw the form of the Lady in Black. She never moved at our entrance, but her lips opened, and a voice that I should never have recognized as hers murmured:

"Why are you come? I saw you crossing the court. You have been there all night. You know all. What do you want now?"

She added in deep misery:

"You swore to me that you would seek to know nothing."

Rouletabille took her hand.

"Come, mother, dearest," he said tenderly.

She did not resist in the least. But when he led her to the door of the fatal chamber she recoiled. "Not there!" she moaned.

Rouletabille tried the door. It was locked. He called Bernier, who opened the door and then hurried away.

Once the door was opened we looked into the room. What a spectacle we beheld! The chamber was in the most frightful disorder, and the crimson dawn which entered through the vast embrasures rendered the disorder still more sinister. What an illumination for a chamber of horrors! Blood was upon the walls and upon the floor and upon the furniture—the blood of the rising sun and the blood of him whom Toby had carried off in the sack, no one knew whither, in the potato bag! The tables, the chairs, the sofas, were all overturned. The curtains of the bed to which the man in his death agony had tried desperately to cling were half torn down, and one could distinguish upon one of them the mark of a bloody hand.

Mme. Darzac murmured:

"We are delivered!"

Rouletabille had fallen upon his knees at her side.

Then she told us the story. She looked at the closed door. She looked at the overturned furniture and the blood spattered walls and floor and narrated the details of the frightful scene. She told us that as soon as Darzac had entered his room he had drawn the bolt and had walked to the little table in the center of the room. The apartment was lighted only by a wax candle.

The silence of the room was suddenly broken by a loud crash like that of a piece of furniture. The crash came from the little panel, and then all was silent. Darzac made a movement toward the panel which was situated at the back of the room on the right hand side. He was nailed to the spot where he stood by a second crash louder than the first, and this time it seemed to her that she could see the panel move. But at that very moment the panel swung open before them. A shadowy form issued from the panel. Uttering a cry of rage, Darzac rushed upon the figure.

"And that shadow—that shadow had a face that you could see?" interrupted Rouletabille. "Mamma, why did you not see the face? You have killed the shadow, but now do we know that it was Larsan if you did not see his face? Perhaps you have not even killed Larsan's shadow?"

"Oh, yes," she replied almost listlessly. "He is dead."

Rouletabille took the Lady in Black into his arms, carried her tenderly to her room and said to her: "Mamma, you must leave me now. I have work to do—for you, for Darzac and for myself."

"Don't leave me until Robert comes back!" she cried. Some one knocked at the door of the corridor. Rouletabille asked who was there, and the voice of Darzac answered.

The man who entered looked like a corpse. Never was human face so pallid, so bloodless, so devoid of all semblance of life.

He fell into the chair from which Rouletabille had just raised the Lady in Black. He looked up at her.

"Your wish is realized," he said. "It is where you wished it to be."

"Did you see his face?" questioned Rouletabille excitedly.

"No," answered Darzac wearily. "I have not seen it. Did you think that I was going to open the sack?"

I thought that Rouletabille would have shown discomfiture at this answer; but, on the contrary, he turned to Darzac and said:

"Ah, you did not see his face. That's very good, indeed. The important thing now is that we should close the circle. Wait a moment."

And almost joyously he threw himself down on all fours and crawled around among the furniture and under the bed.

Suddenly he rose to his feet, holding in his hand a revolver which he had found under the panel.

"You have found his revolver!" cried Darzac. "He did not have time to use it."

As he spoke Darzac took from his pocket his own revolver, which had saved his life, and held it out to the young man.

"This is a good weapon," he said.

Rouletabille examined it closely. Then he compared the pistol with that which had fallen from the hand of the assassin. The latter bore the mark of a London gunsmith. It was new, every barrel was filled, and Rouletabille declared that it had never been fired.

"Larsan only avails himself of firearms in the last extremity," said the young man. "He hates noise of any kind. He intended merely to frighten you with it or he would have fired immediately."

And Rouletabille returned M. Darzac's revolver and put Larsan's in his pocket.

Rouletabille made a few steps through the room and said:

"Where is the body?"

Darzac replied:

"Ask my wife. I want to forget all about it. I know nothing more about this horrible thing. No one save Mme. Darzac knows where the body is. She may tell you if she likes."

"I have forgotten, too," said Mathilde. "I was obliged to do so."

"Nevertheless," insisted Rouletabille, shaking his head, "you must tell me. You said that he was in his agony. Are you sure that he is dead now?"

"I am perfectly sure," replied Darzac simply.

"Oh, it is finished! Is it not entirely ended?" pleaded Mathilde. She arose and walked to the window. See, there is the sun! This horrible night is dead—dead forever! Everything is over!"

Where a Man Rises.

When a woman comes into a room in which there are only a few people, say about half a dozen, all the men should rise at once and remain standing until she is seated. In a crowded room, at a tea or party, this, of course, is not necessary.

If a man is already seated at the table he should rise when women come to the table. Men who are very careful of their manners do this even at hotels and restaurants if strangers are put at their table, but it is unusual. Heidelberg students in Europe keep up this courteous practice, and it is said that Harvard students in this country also do so.

If a woman in passing down the aisle of a theater or train pauses to speak to friends any men in the party should rise while she is speaking, and if on a train one of them should offer his seat.

A man should always remain standing until the women at a table are seated, pulling the chair back for the oldest or the one nearest, if there are more men present.

If a man by chance sits next to a woman acquaintance on a car or subway and she leaves the train before he does he should rise and lift his hat when saying goodby.

It is not necessary for a man to rise if a woman goes in and out of a room many times. This would be stretching an act of courtesy to the point of the ridiculous, although there are few excessively polite men who insist on keeping their manners polished to this degree.

A man should never remain seated while he talks to a woman who is standing. This applies to offices as well as drawing rooms. A courteous employer can always get good work from his employees.

Oldest Baptist Minister.

Rev. Evan Edwards, of Torquay, is now, it is stated, the oldest Baptist minister in the world, having been born in the year of Waterloo, and at 96 he is still hale and strong, both physically and mentally.

Until quite recently he often occupied the pudpit, and is rarely absent from morning service at his old church. He began his ministry in 1838 at Beckington, in Somerset, and is, perhaps, the only man living who knew personally the three great evangelists of Wales—Christmas Evans, John Elias, and Williams of Wern. Robert Hall he never met, but John Foster, the essayist, was one of his hearers when, as a young man he preached in Robert Hall's pulpit at Broadmead, Bristol.

LISZT AS AN IDOL

The Great Musician Was Petted by English Royalty.

A SOUVENIR OF THE MASTER.

The Singular Memento That Was Sacredly and Secretly Treasured by a Cold, Rigid and Rather Disagreeable Old Englishwoman.

"When I was a very small boy indeed," writes Ford M. Hueffer in Harper's, "when I wore green velveteen clothes, red stockings and long golden curls, thus displaying to an unsympathetic world the fact of my pre-Raphaelite origin, I was taken one day to a very large hall. In front of us was a wooden platform draped all in red. Upon the platform was a grand piano.

"In front of me the first row of the stalls had been taken away, and in place of them there had been put three gilded armchairs, before which was a table covered with a profusion of flowers that drooped and trailed to the ground. Suddenly there was applause—a considerable amount of applause. A lady and gentleman were coming from under the dark entry that led to the artists' room. They were the Prince and Princess of Wales. There was no doubt about that even for a small boy like myself.

"And then there was more applause. What applause! It volleyed, it rolled round the hall. All were on their feet. People climbed on to their chairs, they waved hands, they waved programs, they waved hats, they shouted, for in the dark entrance there had appeared, white and shining, a head with brown and sphinxlike features and white and long hair and the eternal wonderful smile.

"They advanced, these three, amid those tremendous shouts and enthusiasm—the two royal personages leading the master, one holding each hand. They approached the gilded armchairs immediately in front of me, and the prince and princess indicated to the master that he was to sit between them at the table covered with flowers.

"He made little pantomimes of modesty, he drew his hands through their grasp, he walked quickly away from the armchairs, and because I was just behind them he suddenly removed me from my seat and left me standing under all the eyes, solitary in the aisle of the center of the hall, while he sat down. I do not think I was frightened by the eyes, but I know I was terribly frightened by that great brown, aquiline face, with the piercing glance and the mirthless, distant, inscrutable smile.

"And immediately just beside me there began what appeared to be a gentle and courtly wrestling match. A gentleman of the royal suit approached the master. He refused to move. The prince approached the master. He sat indomitably still. Then the princess came and, taking him by the hand, drew him almost by force out of my stall, for it was my stall, after all.

"And when he was once upon his feet, as if to clinch the matter, she suddenly sat down in it herself, and with a sudden touch of good feeling she took me by the hand—the small solitary boy with the golden curls and the red stockings—and sat me upon her lap. I, alas, have no trace of the date on which I sat in a queen's lap, for it was all so very long ago; the king is dead, the master is long since dead, the hall itself is pulled down and has utterly disappeared.

"I had a distant relative—oddly enough an English one, not a German—who married an official of the court of Weimar and became a lady in waiting on the grand duchess. As far as I know, there was nothing singularly sentimental about this lady. When I knew her she was cold, rigid and rather disagreeable. She had always about her a peculiar and disagreeable odor, and when she died a few years ago it was discovered that she wore round her neck a sachet, and in this sachet was a half smoked cigar.

"This was a relic of Franz Liszt. He had begun to smoke it many years before at a dinner which she had given, and, he having put it down unfinished, she had at once seized upon it and had worn it upon her person ever since. This sounds inexplicable and incredible, but there it is."

Settling a Bill.

When Andrew Jackson lived at Salisbury, N. C., he once attended court at Rockford, then the county seat of Surry, and left without paying his bill, which was duly charged up against him on the hotel register, which seems to have been the hotel ledger at that time, and so stood for many years. When the news of the victory of the 8th of January, 1815, was received in this then remote section the old landlord turned back the leaves of the register, took his pen and wrote under the account against Andrew Jackson, "Settled in full by the battle of New Orleans."

She Meant Well.

The late Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the great apostle of temperance, while on a visit made the acquaintance of a sharp young lady of seven, to whom, on leaving, he said: "Now, my dear, we have been talking some time. I am sure you have no idea who I am."

"Oh, yes, I have," the little missy replied. "You are the celebrated drunkard."—London Graphic.

Not by years, but by disposition, is wisdom acquired.—Plautus.

LIFE'S MISTAKES.

Judge Rentoul Says There Are a Dozen Principal Ones.

The average man of to-day does not, as a rule, like admitting any mistakes he has made, but, judging from an address recently delivered by Judge Rentoul, of the City of London (Eng.) Court, the well-known administrator of the law is quite willing to own up to this. The text of his discourse was "The Twelve Mistakes of Life," and he frankly confessed he had committed the whole of them. This was the list he gave:

To attempt to set up our own standard of right and wrong and expect everybody to conform to it.

To try to measure the enjoyment of others by our own.

To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.

To look for judgment and experience in youth.

To endeavor to mould all dispositions alike.

Not to yield in unimportant trifles.

To look for perfection in our own actions.

To worry ourselves and others about what cannot be remedied.

Not to alleviate, if we can, all that needs alleviation.

Not to make allowances for the weaknesses of others.

To consider anything impossible that we cannot ourselves perform.

To believe only what our finite can grasp.

Judge Rentoul was both a Presbyterian minister and a member of the British Parliament before he took to law as a profession. Not long ago his honor told an amusing story of the first illuminated address he ever received. It was presented to him on his first election to the House of Commons. Scanning it closely, he was rather chagrined to find that following his name the word "barrister-at-law" was inscribed in very large characters, whilst "member of Parliament" was very small. On drawing the attention of the artist to the fact, he got the answer: "Well, sir, it requires a clever man to be a barrister, but any duffer can be a member of Parliament."

Song-Birds for Gourmets.

A recent prosecution in Norfolk, Eng., has thrown some light on the trade in larks for London. A farmer was fined for laying down grain poisoned with strychnine for the purpose of catching larks, which would afterwards appear on the tables of epicures.

This man sent seventy-seven dozen larks to London in three weeks, the price being 1s. 9d. the dozen. It has been said that between January and March 40,000 larks arrive in Leadenhall Market every day!

Those who consider pigeon-pie a delicacy may be interested to learn that the birds are often cruelly treated before they appear in the poulterers' shops. Some 10,000 are annually brought to London from Italy.

They are taken when quite young, and packed in crates containing eighty to a hundred, arriving in Paris two days later. Twelve hours later they continue their journey, and reach London after traveling two days and three nights, a very large number of them dying on the way.

Quails are also packed in crates in the same cruel way, attention having been frequently called to the scandal. Then there is a certain amount of cruelty in catching plovers, and those whose business it is to carry on the trade have been prosecuted more than once, although the number of convictions have been few.

Like Father Like Son.

Another of Mr. Asquith's sons is following in his distinguished father's academic footsteps and having a brilliant university career. This is Mr. Cyril Asquith, who, having, like his father, obtained a scholarship at Balliol in the first place, has now gained a first in "Mods.," upon which distinction he and his father alike will be heartily congratulated. Mr. Cyril Asquith's elder brother, Mr. Raymond Asquith, it will be remembered, had one of the most distinguished University careers of recent times. Mr. Asquith's own achievemnets at Oxford are, of course, now a matter of tradition, though others have been perhaps more outstanding. But there was something about him which seemed to breathe of success, and of an assured future. An astute judge of men, the late Master of Balliol, put it in a sentence: "Yes," he said, "Asquith will get on; he is so direct."

Hope of Romantic Fiction.

It was really as a lecturer that Mr. Maurice Hewlett, whom someone has described as "the darling hope of romantic fiction," first became famous, and many an interesting anecdote he tells of those days. Once, speaking at a small Scottish village, the chairman, having referred to "the mon wha's come here tae broaden oor intellects," remarked that a short prayer would not be out of place. "And, O Lord," the good man went on, "put it intae the heart o' this mon tae speak the truth, the hale truth, and naething but the truth, and gae us grace tae understand him." Then, with a glance at Mr. Hewlett, he added, "I've been a lecturer mesel!"

Blessing the Nets.

The ancient service known as the blessing of the nets, which has been revived in Lowestoft, where it is now held each year prior to the departure of the local fleet for the westward fishing, was held recently in the parish church. Rev. A. D. Carey, the previous rector, now a canon of York, officiated, and blessed the nets by taking them in his hands and invoking success on the fishermen's endeavors, and praying for their preservation from peril.

A Ship Photographed While She Was Sinking.

The illustrations shown above are reproductions of the remarkable photographs taken of the three masted sailing ship Arden Craig as she was foundering off the Scilly Isles, which are situated twenty-five miles southwest of Land's End, the extreme southwesterly point of England, says Popular Mechanics. The first photograph was taken just after the deck became awash, the second as she heeled over for the final plunge and the third a moment or two after she went down. Several hundred people watched the sinking from the shore.

The Particolored Bear.

The particolored bear (Aeluropus melanoleucus) is so rare an animal that it deserves more than passing notice. This particular specimen was acquired by W. N. Fergusson, a missionary in Szethuen, from a Tibetan hunter. Its habitat is the dwarf bamboo and rhododendron forests which clothe the hills at an altitude of from 9,000 to 11,000 feet in this part of China. It is a vegetable feeder. The soles of the feet are hairy, and, though very bearlike in appearance, it has been named the great panda by Sir Ray Lankester, as the structure of the skull and skeleton shows it to be closely related to the Himilayan panda or wah. It has never been obtained by a European sportsman and was originally discovered in 1869 by Pere David in the mountains of east Tibet. The panda, a very handsomely colored little beast, is the only old world representative of the raccoon.

On the Cars.

Here is something that may amuse you some time when you are in the trolley car or elevated train and are beginning to feel tired. Compare the advertisements in the car with the people who are sitting beneath them. The contrast is often very funny. For instance, you may see an elderly gentleman below an advertisement for babies' food, or a baby beneath a shaving soap advertisement, or a very bald person sitting unconsciously beneath a hair tonic sign, or a tramp beneath a soap advertisement. It is fun, too, to read from one advertisement on to the next, as though they belonged together. You may read, for instance, that a certain breakfast food is excellent for the hair or that condensed soup frequently applied will make your garments look like new.

A Queer African Town.

The town of Abu Hamed is located where caravans quit the river Nile and begin their journey across the desert. Merchants leave their merchandise there and load up again with goods that other merchants have left there for them. There is nothing unusual in this, the strange part being that no storehouses or depots are used for the protection of these goods, often of priceless value. The curious story about Abu Hamed is that goods left under the monument dedicated to St. Abu Hamed are safe. Here they remain in the sand beneath the monument for months or years. No one will molest them. They are considered to be under the protection of the saint himself. There has never been known an instance of loss or theft of any goods.

Tree City.

I know a little city on a green and sunny hill,
Where a hundred tiny families have homes
Its byways are uncrowded, its leafy lanes are still,
And there no noisy railroad ever comes.

The homes are nigh and airy. They hang and rock and sway
Whichever way the summer breezes blow.
They have no doors or windows, no roof to blow away,
But leafy awnings shade the panes below.

The fathers and the mothers all earn their daily bread
And bring it to the little ones who cry
They do not ride or motor; they do not walk; instead
They choose the very latest mode—they fly.

The happy little citizens who live so high and free
They sing and sing and sing the whole day long.
For the peaceful, quiet city is a green and lovely tree,
And the dwellers there are birds, whose life is song.

—St. Nicholas.

WESTERN FARMERS PROFITS IN TEN YEARS

He Pays Only $35 per Year in Duties on Implements—What 640 Acres Can Do.

A farmer writing to a Toronto daily paper from Indian Head, Saskatchewan, under the nom de plume, Saskatchewan Farmer, refutes the statement made by many Westerners, that the farmers of the West have been ill-used by the Dominion Government which is identified largely with Eastern interests. This Saskatchewan farmer gives a typical instance of the expenditure and revenue connected with a section of land, 640 acres, from the year 1900 to 1910. He says:

"I will give you an idea of what a section of land, 640 acres, will earn and how it will increase in value in the most favored wheat producing districts of Saskatchewan under normal conditions, from 1900 to 1910, allowing the average price of land to be $10 per acre for that period. In so doing it should be borne in mind that 30 per cent. of the land in this province was Free Grant.

Capital Expenditure

1900.
Land, 640 acres at $10 per acre		$6,400.00
Cultivation, 440 acres at $6 per acre		2,640.00
Dwelling house		2,000.00
Stable for 12 horses, granary and implement shed		3,000.00
1910.
12 horses and harness		3,000.00
Implements.	Duty
3 seed drills	$33.00	330.00
3 plows	30.50	210.00
2 disc harrows	10.00	80.00
2 six-section harrows	6.50	60.00
3 7-ft. binders	53.00	465.00
4 wagons, complete	72.00	360.00
One-sixth interest in thresher	125.00	500.000
Extras, say	20.00	455.00
	$350.00	$18,000.00
Crop for 10 years from 400 acres at 25 bush. to the acre, at 75 cents		$75.000.00
Working expenses for ten years at $5 per acre	$32,000.00
Interest on capital for ten years at 6 per cent.	10.800.00
		42,800.00
Surplus (not taking into account increase in value of land, which may be figured at $18,000)		32,200.00

Duty on Implements

"Now note right here, that all a farmer working a section of land under these conditions would pay in duty on the implements required to earn this large profit, assuming the average life of same to be ten years, comes out at approximately $35 per annum. This is no exaggerated statement of profits and increase in value of land, as thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan can testify, and hundreds who have specially applied themselves and taken advantage of the opportunities at hand, have realized far greater profits than are here shown. How, then, can the farmers of the West claim that they have been ill-used, or not given a fair deal?"

A Book of Interest to Horse Owners

Every horse owner worthy of the name takes a natural and commendable pride in keeping his horse in prime condition. With sensible feeding, proper care and a reasonable amount of work, there is no trouble in doing this. Under such conditions a sound horse looks fine and feels well—is always ready for service and brings the top price when sold.

But accidents will happen, a slight wrench, a sprain, a cut, or some unknown cause may result in lameness. Spavins, ringbones, curbs or splints come sooner or later to every stable. Taken promptly and treated properly none of these troubles are serious. But if neglected or given the wrong treatment, they quickly decrease a horse's ability for work as well as his cash value. It is most important therefore, that every horse owner should have a good knowledge of the horse, his ailments and diseases, and the remedies to be applied. He should know just how to treat all ordinary ailments, and just when it is necessary to call in the greater skill of the veterinary.

One of the quickest and best ways to get posted on this matter is to read the little book, "A Treatise on the Horse and His Diseases," published by the Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vermont. The information which it gives is simple, accurate, and easy to find—a valuable point in a book of reference.

This book can be had free of charge by simply writing the publishers or by asking for it at any drug store where Kendall's Spavin Cure is sold by almost every druggist in the country.

To Get Poisons From the Blood

You Have to Depend on the Filtering Process of the Liver and Kidneys

These Organs Alone Can Purify the Blood, and They Do Their Work Well when Helped by

DR. CHASE'S

KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

No medical treatment can possibly purify the blood except as it sets in healthy working order the kidneys, liver and bowels.

To these organs is assigned the duty of filtering from the blood the poisonous waste matter which is left over when the nutritious elements are extracted from the food you eat. If they are not overcrowded or slow and sluggish in action they keep the blood pure and healthy.

For this reason Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are the most satisfactory treatment you can possibly obtain to purify the blood.

Their efforts are prompt, definite and certain. The liver action is quickened, the kidneys are invigorated, the regular movement of the bowels is assured. It is only a matter of a few hours until you begin to feel the benefits of this great medicine. Further use, as often as is necessary to keep these organs active, will cleanse and purify the blood and enable the digestive system to properly do its work.

Backache, headache, and bodily pains will disappear, and the fatigue which is an accompaniment of poisons in the system will give way to new vigor and energy. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Mrs. Mason's praise is just that of thousands of mothers who consider Baby's Own Tablets the only safe and sure remedy to keep in the house for their little ones. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TRAVELING IN INDIA.

Changes of Temperature Necessitate Wide Range of Clothes.

Everybody when on a journey in India carries his own bedding, and outside the large establishments of the Government officials everywhere it is needed. You are supposed to carry your own bedding with you just as you carry your own tooth-brush. In the trains—and there are very long train journeys, by slow trains, in India—in the guest-houses of the native princes, in camp, of course, always, and in the hotels and inns, your own bedding is a necessity. Indeed, you can scarcely carry too much in India if you wish to be comfortable.

All sorts of clothing, from fur coats to the thinnest of linen, all sorts of hats from a cap to a pith helmet, a spirit lamp, a folding table and chair, a small amount of tinned or bottled food and a supply of mineral water for the train, a large supply of linen and underclothing, for one changes them often, and the laundry work is done by beating on flat stones.

The changes of temperature from noon till midnight are startling. One must give up cold baths and take to tepid or hot water, and be careful, indeed, what, and how much, one eats and drinks. No alcohol before sunset, and very little then, and the plainest and most nourishing food. In this land, as large almost as the whole of Europe, there are only a few large cities, where one can buy any of the luxuries or comforts of life outside the obvious, and what you need you must carry with you. On a large scale you do what the native does, you carry your household gods and goods about with you.

How differently "pick up your bed and walk" sounds in your ears when you see a whole population of hundreds of millions actually carrying their beds with them whenever they move. Why should one take heed as to what one shall eat, or drink, or wear, when a handful of rice, a thimbleful of water, and a loin-cloth surface. The group of servants in front of their master's door at the hotel, or the hundreds of families traveling by train, by bullock-cart, or even on foot, have squeezed and sifted life's necessaries down to the vanishing point.

One of the Tallest Officers.

Lieutenant-General J. M. Grierson has had a long and varied career in the army, and is generally regarded as one of the best of what may be described as our younger generation of soldiers. His abilities were first discovered by Sir Evelyn Wood, whose right hand on Salisbury Plain he was for some years. Since General Grierson is one of the tallest soldiers in the army at the present day, and Sir Evelyn Wood is, to put it mildly, below the middle height, the contrast between the two, when standing side by side, used to be most amusing, and the name of "Dignity and Impudence" was bestowed upon them by some of the younger officers in the command. General Grierson has a very nice wit, and on one occasion, during manoeuvres, a Howitzer was fired before the sponge stick—the rod used for cleaning the weapons out after a shot has been fired—had been removed. The result was that the stick went sailing through the air, to fall to the ground some distance away. "One of the best efforts I ever saw to 'sweep' the enemy in front of you," was General Grierson's smiling remark to the officer in charge of the gun. It is considered probable that he will be given the command in India before the end of the year, and if this is so it will recall one of his aphorisms to the effect that "India is a mighty convenient place to send soldiers whose presence is not desired at home."

Caste Law.

It is difficult for a European to realize the insuperable barriers which separate the castes of India, but the following may be interesting. The Hindus are divided into over three thousand castes, most of them with sub-castes, speak about nineteen developed languages, and over one hundred dialects.

There are two essentials to a true caste: (1) There is no entry, except by birth; (2) marriage outside the caste is absolutely forbidden.

The highest caste is the Brahmans, admittedly and undoubtedly superior to all the rest. After them come those who are acknowledged to be twice born. The less honored follow in a graduated descent until the untouchable and unspeakable are reached at the lowest depth.

If a man is excommunicated by his caste-fellows, nobody in the caste will marry him. He is dead to his family. Nobody will eat or drink with him. If he is married his wife will not touch him or speak to him. The village barber will not shave him, and the washerwoman will not wash his clothes.—Indian Daily News.

Reviving Grist Mills.

English newspapers tell of an organization of 200 farmers of Hawarden to revive the ancient water wheel gristmills in their vicinity and grind there all the wheat reserved for their own use. Numbers of old country mills are elsewhere being put to a similar use. It is declared that the flour thus produced is "nutritious and fragrant beyond any other in the world."

A "Fifteen-Gunner."

The number of guns to be fired in honor of great officials and foreign potentates is carefully calculated, and the honor is jealously prized. King Edward conferred an inestimable boon on the Nawab of Junagarh when he raised his salute from eleven to fifteen guns. But this has caused the dusky prince to be fiercely envied by all the other Indian princes, who are only "eleven-gunners."

Musical Glasses.

Richard Pockrich, an Irishman, was the inventor of musical glasses—ordinary drinking glasses tuned by selection and played by passing wet fingers over the brim. He showed his invention first in Dublin and took it to London about 1750.

A FAIR EXCHANGE

A small woman travelling with her son—a boy very large for his age—handed a Edmonton street car conductor a half fare ticket and a whole-fare one. The conductor scrutinized the boy critically and said:—"But, Madam, I can't pass this boy on a half-fare ticket. He is very large and has on long trousers."

"Very well," replied the woman, "use the whole ticket for him and the half for me."

Bad Fire at Sirdar

Yesterday morning, the home and all furniture and contents, of Peter Lombardo, of Sirdar, were completely consumed by fire. The fire started at 8 o'clock and the home was a heap of ashes in about an hour. Section Foreman Quaife and crew, rendered all possible assistance, and only the use of yard engine and hose by the engineer, saved the town.

It is reported that the fire started in a defective chimney. There was no insurance

Monkeys as Fruit-pickers

WASHINGTON GROWERS TO TEST THE NEW LABOR. SAID USED IN SO. AMERICA WHITE MEN LOOK GOOD TO CRESTON GROWERS.

Some of the Fruit Growers of Washington, are considering the advisability of introducing monkeys as pickers of small fruits.

It is stated that the idea was brought North by an explorer returned from the wilds of Patagonia, where the native fruit growers use trained monkeys as berry pickers. It is claimed that the simians could be bought in the native state for $50, can be trained for another $50, and is then marketable for a $1000. as an expert fruit picker.

In support of the monkey theory, it may be mentioned, that once trained, they are the most economical fruit pickers that exist, they require no wages, are easily fed, and of their own accord, work longer hours than any human being would ever think of doing they are quick to learn, and even the trained monkey will pick up from his master, many details about the work which would be overlooked by many human beings. The growers of Washington are sanguine that before many years, the art of using monkeys as the pickers of small fruit will be an actual fact in the most modern fruit districts, and that nightmare "The labor problem" will be finally banished.

The Editor interviewed a prominent Creston Fruit-grower, as to the possibility of introducing the new labor into this district, who expressed the opinion that the scheme might be alright for the Washington Growers, but that the Berry Men of Creston had a reputation to keep up, and would therefore stay with the old, reliable, clean local labor.

Mrs. J Cherrington and little daughters, who are visiting friends in Montana, will return home when the excessive heat is over in August.

Poultry Raising That Pays It All Back—And More

Many a dollar is invested in poultry raising and never comes back—for the simple reason that the necessary knowledge has not also been invested. The way to get your money back, and a lot more with it, is to know exactly what to do, and how to do it.

You cannot get this practical knowledge from a book. You have to get it from those who have made big money raising poultry through right methods. The help and guidance of such experts are given you in the Poultry Course of the International Correspondence Schools. Every phase of successful poultry raising is covered in a clear, concise, practical way. Here are several of the subjects: How to select most profitable breeds; feeding; marketing eggs and poultry for profit; natural and artificial brooding; natural and artificial incubation; laying hens; combination plant; poultry appliances; enemies of poultry; poultry houses and management; turkeys; water fowls; squabs; etc.

Besides all this, the I. C. S. is associated with the largest poultry farm in the world—the Rancocas Poultry Farm—where experiments of every kind are made for the benefit of those taking this Course.
