THE BUSINESS MAN AND HIS STATIONERY

"Is The Cobbler's Son Well-shod?"

The merchants encourages us always to buy a good article in preference to that which may be cheapest-he is right, without doubt, but how often he fails to learn this lesson himself—especially is this noticeable in stationery—some envelopes which reach us through the mail are a disgrace to the sender.

We wonder if the merchant always understands that his business is measured oftentimes by the class of stationery he sends out—yes, even the quality of paper in the bills he renders-we venture to say that there is nothing which points out a business man's carefulness and general make up more plainly than the quuality and style of the stationery he uses. It advertises his standard—it announces clearly to the public what class of goods they may expect at his store.

If the merchant sends out a wishy-washy rag of a letterhead, envelope invoice or statement, the public may reasonably expect the same quality and cheapness in the merchant's stock of goods.

Just think over the business firms you are acquainted with and notice the quality of their stationery.

And Mr. Businessman, think this over too and see that you do not suffer for proper attention to this sometimes neglected but very necessary detail.

Many Trees Being Planted in District

Fruit trees are arriving here every day, and before the season is over several thousand will have been planted. Ranchers throughout the district around Creston, Erickson and Canyon City are all busy. Mixed farming is also bein indulged in. People planting crops among the trees are sure of returns from their land while they are waiting for the trees to come in bearing. Small fruits do very well and many more acres are being planted into small fruits this year than in previous years. In spite of the slightly backward spring which has prevailed throughout the Province the orchards around this district are all doing very well and there is every prospect of a good crop, The gardens are all green and signs of prosperity prevale.

Injustice

Francks did not realise that he stood on the brink of a precipice, but he knew that he was in danger of losing self-control. Events were happening too quickly for him, his brain was in a whirl. Now for the first time he realised that danger threatened him, and danger threatened, too, the woman he loved. For himself he did not care. He had been robbed of freedom, and a few hours ago he would have willingly given up his life.

Now—he dared not think where he stood now. The tragedy which had just occurred altered everything. Yet it might mean the opening of an old wound, the unravelling of a secret. It might bring fresh shame and misery on Iris. He tried to think quickly, to reason clearly. These three men, calm sober men of the world, suspected him. They scarcely hinted at it, they veiled their suspicions, yet it was plain enough that they suspected him, James Francks, of murder.

He stared at them aghast, looked in turn at each set, stern face. Unconsciously, his hand hovered over the medicine case, touching the little row of bottles.

Sowers made a warning gesture. Please don't touch anything, Mr. Francks. Inspector Heriot will want to make an examination of the room, and hear what you've got to say. That will be all. Then we can leave you in peace.

You think I've poisoned my wife, Francks thundered again.

He received no answer. He reeled across the room, then stood with his back to the fireplace supporting himself against the mantelshelf. The little blue pieces of the broken bottle glittered at his feet. He too, saw the red warning—Poison. Of course, it seemed impossible that any man in broad daylight should make such a mistake.

Had he made a mistake? he asked himself the question sharply with a start of fear. Was he trying to deceive himself as these men thought he was trying to deceive them?

Before he could find an answer to the self-asked question, the door opened and Inspector Heriot stepped noiselessly into the room. Closing the door behind him he stood just inside the threshold, and Francks saw his pale blue eyes looking enquiringly straight into his face.

No one spoke. And still from the restaurant below came the gay, mad music, and rising above it ever and again the laughter of men and women and the clatter of glasses.

I think we had better shut the window.

It was the detective who spoke, and before anyone could move, he stepped across the room, and was leaning looking out—looking down on the Embankment, where the human flotsam and jetsam of London moved restlessly to and fro.

Standing with her back to the Embankment, he noticed a woman, one of that army, though still young and decently dressed, staring up at the window. He looked at her steadily for a handful of seconds, then closed the window and drew the blind.

Taking a notebook from his pocket he faced the four men.

CHAPTER XVI

Fear was with James Francks, though it was not fear for himself. It seemed to partake of a general sense of horror. He saw Inspector Heriot's pale, blue eyes fixed on his own as if they would read his secret thoughts. And inwardly he laughed, for he knew it was impossible. His reason was unbalanced, and his thoughts chaotic, hovering between the past and the future, carrying him first to one scene then to another.

And ever and again he heard the doctor's voice ringing in his ears like the notes of a funeral bell. She is dead.

Ella, his wife, was dead!

The daughter of the man who had bought him for a son-in-law — the lonely, friendless little girl who had loved him with all her heart, but who had loved her honor and respect more, and when she discovered his secret, refused to take him to her heart. Proudly and coldly standing aloof, wife in name only.

Then his thoughts flew to Iris, reminding him that now she was free. He realised how horrible it was while still in the presence of the dead woman who had loved him, to think of the living woman whom he loved.

And then once again the self-asked question was repeated. Had he in a moment of mental oblivion, of temporary insanity, poisoned his wife?

The idea was so absurd that once again he almost laughed aloud. Yet it refused to go away and became fixed in his mind. He remembered strange and gruesome stories of men acting under influences quite foreign to their nature, men self-hypnotised, who had committed terrible crimes then forgotten them. He recalled a case that had happened not long ago, of an epileptic who had murdered his best friend in a quiet street and returned home unconscious of the deed, and next day when the murder was discovered, spent all his time and money in trying to discover the assassin.

How long have the lights been burning in the room, Mr. Francks?

Francks put his hands before his face for a few seconds. His thoughts were indeed getting beyond control. But when he looked at the detective again it was with some degree of confidence.

I switched them on soon after we arrived, directly I commenced to unpack my suit case.

The question seemed rather a strange one, and even the manager of the hotel looked surprised. He wished Scotland Yard had sent an older and more experienced man. Heriot looked very young, and his appearance was hardly that of the conventional official.

Heriot made an entry in his notebook, then after a short explanation from Veinhardt, he turned to Francks again.

I'd like to put a few questions to you, sir. You are not obliged to answer them against your will. He gave the usual warning.

Francks began to feel nervously irritated. He glanced along the corridor towards the locked door behind which his dead wife lay. There was something indecent in the fact that these four men should be calmly discussing the manner of her death.

Really these proceedings are unwarrantable, he said to Veinhardt. I must protest.

The detective gave the manager a warning glance. I realise how very painful it must be to you, Mr. Francks, he said in his calm, soft voice, but if, while the events of the last hour or two are vividly impressed upon your mind you will explain exactly what happened and what you did, it may save you a lot of unhappiness and unpleasantness in the future. I am sure you must be as anxious as any of us to clear up the mystery of your wife's sudden death.

Francks shrugged his shoulders; the irritation was increasing. He did not realise the seriousness of his position yet; only the horror of what had so suddenly occurred was growing gradually stronger and stronger.

At present only the four men facing him and perhaps a couple of hotel servants knew what had happened. But soon the news of the tragedy would leak out, the newspapers would be full of it, it would be the gossip of the clubs, the theatres, and the streets.

And Iris would know. The news would reach her through the shrieking columns of the morning newspapers a garbled account written to whet the jaded appetite of the morbid public.

We're waiting, Mr. Francks; have you anything to say?

Francks fumbled in the pocket of his coat, and taking out a cigarette, lit it. His fingers trembled unintendily; his hands and his face were cold, but tiny beads of perspiration were breaking out on his forehead.

The manager has told you that both doctors here agree that my wife was poisoned. They seem to have come to the only conclusion possible, that I administered the poison! That's all.

His voice sounded harsh and unnatural in his own ears; he spoke with studied indifference and frank contempt. These men, strangers to him, should not guess the emotions that swept his brain.

Heriot turned to Dr. Sowers, the latter gave a brief account of what had happened after he was called into the room. Dr. Maitland followed, corroborating Sowers. Once again the detective turned to Francks.

Do you remember pouring out a dose of salvolatile for your wife; did you measure it?

No; I can guess at a teaspoonful, Francks replied. I then put a little water into the tumbler intending to take it into her room and give it to her.

A Smart Salesman

Let me see some of your black kid gloves, said a lady to a shop assistant.

These are not the latest style, are they? she asked, when the gloves were produced.

Yes, madam, replied the shopman, we have had them in stock only two days.

I didn't think they were, because the fashion paper says black kids have tan stitches and vice versa. I see the tan stitches but not the vice versa.

The shopman explained that vice versa was French for seven buttons, so she bought three pairs.

A clerical-looking gentleman, in the hope of obtaining a contribution, entered the office of a newspaper, and, finding the editor in, began:

I am soliciting aid for a gentleman of refinement and intelligence who is in need of a little ready money but is too proud to make known his sufferings.

Why, exclaimed the editor, I'm the only man in town answering that description. What's the gentleman's name?

I'm sorry to say I am not at liberty to disclose it.

It must be me, parson. Heaven prosper you in your good work, said the editor, wiping away a tear.

NEW PISTOLS FOR PARIS POLICE

New Weapon to Deal With Desperate Criminals Is Successfully Used

Paris, France.—The suffocating revolver was used by the Paris police recently for the first time, and its effectiveness was amply demonstrated. The weapon was invented as a sequel to the motor bandit sieges, when it was realized that there was need for some method of overcoming the resistance of dangerous criminals, without so much risk to the police.

The weapon was used in the Passy quarter, where a young creole named Vitale Pothin, belonging to a wealthy family, had suddenly become mad.

Armed with a revolver and several boxes of cartridges he had barricaded himself in his room at a flat, and for several hours had fired at any one who had ventured to approach. A policeman had a narrow escape of being shot.

Steel bucklers were then fitted to a couple of detectives, who crept up to a small window and fired the contents of their suffocating revolvers. The room was filled with acrid smoke, and Pothin, half suffocated, made a dash to the window, where he was captured by the detectives.

THRONE FOR WILLIAM

Second Son of King Gustava Selected for Albania

Vienna.—Prince William of Sweden, second son of King Gustava, will be the first occupant of the throne of Albania if the wishes of the triple alliance—Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy are carried out. Rome.—The Cacciatore Italiano states that a party of hunters have captured two royal eagles, with their young, on the Alps near the Ledro valley. In the eagles' nest were found the bones of a child, as well as the remains of 200 ducks, forty hares, a chamois, a fox and innumerable birds.

DR. TALKS ON FOOD

Pres. of Board of Health.

"What shall I eat?" is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully-cooked food known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits.

"From overwork, I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart, and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use, the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational, scientific system of feeding. Anyone who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

ROYAL DOCUMENTS IN BOTTLE

List of Valuable Jewels Once Owned by the French Empress Eugenie

Paris, France.—An inventory of jewels that belonged to the Empress Eugenie was discovered recently at Montlouis, in the Pyrenees-Oriental department, by a young soldier who was taking a stroll near the fortifications. He noticed the neck of a bottle sticking out of the ground, and unearthed it. In it was a document bearing the seals of the Second Empire, dated September 4, 1870, and having the inscription: Inventory of jewels and bank notes entrusted today to M. Manuel Perez to be taken to Madrid and handed over to the Comtesse de Montijo—probably a relation of the Empress. Several items followed:

A pearl necklace presented by the Emperor of Russia value at $160,000.

Two pearl bracelets from the Queen of England, valued at $125,000.

A ruby and diamond parure, from the Shah of Persia, valued at $160,000.

A pearl and diamond necklace from the Grand Duc Constantine, of Russia, valued at $165,000.

Four parures six bracelets and three necklaces, valued at $320,000.

The document was headed Paris, Palace of the Tuileries, and signed by the Grand Chamberlain of the Palace.

When the authorities visited the spot where the inventory was discovered, they found part of a human skeleton, which had apparently been there for more than forty years.

Economy

It seems strange to me that you should book your passage to Europe on such a slow steamer, remarked Giver to his friend Grinder, a lower fare certainly would be no inducement to a man of your means.

My boy, replied Grinder, I have made my millions by always seeing that I got the full worth of my money and if I can get ten days' board on the ocean for less money than five would cost, why shouldn't I take it.

A Sure Corrective of Flatulency.—When the undigested food lies in the stomach it throws off gases causing pains and oppression in the stomachic region. The belching or eructation of these gases is offensive and the only way to prevent them is to restore the stomach to proper action. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will do this. Simple directions go with each packet and a course of them taken systematically is certain to effect a cure.

PIMPLES ITCHED AND BURNED

On Arms and Legs. Caused Running Sores. Would Tear Himself Till They Bled. Like Open Wounds. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

53 Stewart St., Toronto, Ontario.—"When my baby was nine months old he had a lot of pimples come on his arms and legs which used to come to a head, then break and cause running sores. They were bright red spots, which itched and burned so badly that he would tear himself till he made them bleed and they were all like open wounds. They were on his face and arms so bad that I did not like to take him out. He could not sleep or rest anywhere. I tried several things at home and lots of different things people used to advise me, but he did not get a bit better.

"I bathed each place in warm water and Cuticura Soap and then I put some of the Cuticura Ointment on and bound them up in soft rags and he slept better that night than he had for three weeks, and he did not scratch himself once that night. I did that for three days, night and morning, when we noticed the sores were getting drier and healing, so I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment, and after a week and a few days there was not a blemish on him." (Signed) Mrs. F. West, Feb. 29, 1912.

No man is Stronger Than his Stomach

The Medical Adviser by R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y. answers hosts of delicate questions about which every man or woman, single or married ought to know. Sent free on receipt of 50 one-cent stamps to pay for wrapping and mailing.

LET the greatest athlete have dyspepsia and his strength will soon fail. One's stamina—forcefulness and strength of mind or muscle depend upon the blood, and the blood in turn, requires a healthy stomach, for the stomach is the laboratory where the food is digested and such elements are taken up—or assimilated—which make blood. In consequence all the organs of the body, such as heart, lungs, liver and kidneys, as well as the nervous system, feel the bad effect if the stomach is deranged.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

helps the stomach to digest food properly, starts the liver into new activity, removing the poisons from the blood, and the various organs get rich, red blood, instead of being illy nourished. The refreshing influence of this extract of native medicinal plants has been favorably known for over 40 years. Everywhere some neighbor can tell you of the good it has done.

[illegible] in liquid or tablet form or send 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, and a trial box will be mailed you.

She Didn't Intend to

A middle-aged couple, made suddenly rich through an unexpected turn of fortune's wheel, were visiting the M. P. from their district at his Ottawa residence.

At breakfast the first morning after their arrival, the woman, nervously trying to chip off the top of her egg with her knife, attacked the problem with so much zeal that the egg was knocked out of the cup and rolled under the table. Not knowing just what was the proper thing to do under the circumstances she nudged her husband.

Hank! Hank! she whispered, I have dropped an egg. What shall I do?

Don't cackle, came the matter-of-fact reply.

Miller's Worm Powders not only make the infantile system untenable for worms, but by their action on the stomach, liver and bowels they correct such troubles as lack of appetite, biliousness and other internal disorders that the worms create. Children thrive upon them and no matter what condition their worm-infested stomachs may be in, they will show improvement as soon as the treatment begins.

Lost and Found

A Scottish tourist walking the streets of Paris, some distance from his hotel, found he had taken a wrong turning, and to make things worse, he could not, through ignorance of the language ask the way. Then a happy thought struck him. By dint of signs he concluded a bargain with a fruit hawker for a basketful of gooseberries and then, to the amazement of everybody, went about shouting: Fine Scotch grossets! A penny a pun!

This went on for a while, till a fellow-countryman rushed forward and asked: Mon, d'ye think ye're in the streets of Glesca, that ye gang about like a madman crying grossets?

Ech! replied the hawker, with a sense of relief, ye're just the man I was looking for. D'ye ken the way to the — Hotel?

Expensive Encores

A good story is being told about a fashionable New York woman who recently engaged Mme. S—, of the Metropolitan Opera to sing at one of her receptions. It was arranged that two songs should be furnished, at $100 per song. Mme. S— sang so well that the delighted guests demanded more, and were referred by the songstress to their hostess.

The latter looked rather unhappy, but having no choice in the matter, was compelled to give orders for another song—and yet another, and another, until Mme. S— had scored eight in all—which at $100 each, was not a bad night's work.

Dad—Just think of it. It would take twelve million years to pump the oceans dry at the rate of one thousand gallons a second.

CUT OFF GIRL'S HAIR

Man Then Sells the Lock for Price of a Dinner

Paris.—A man named Chaignon was sentenced to thirteen months' imprisonment for a curious offense recently. He went to a house in the Rue Roy some weeks ago, and waking one of the servants, showed her a pair of scissors, and gave her the choice of the loss of her head or her hair.

I would rather lose my hair, said the girl.

Taking off a handkerchief in which her head was wrapped, she showed the court that the man had cut her hair so closely that he wounded her in several places. He sold it afterwards for the price of a dinner.

You will go to prison for thirteen months, said the judge. Your name ought to be Chignon, not Chaignon.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS MAKING A REPUTATION IN THE WEST

Saskatchewan Man Tells How They Cured Him, After Four Months' Suffering from Backache and Other Forms of Kidney Disease

St. Phillips, Sask. (Special).—In a new country where changes of climate and impure water are among the difficulties to be surmounted, kidney trouble is prevalent. It is the kidneys, the organs that strain the impurities out of the blood, that first feel any undue strain on the body. Consequently Dodd's Kidney Pills have been well tried and tested in this neighborhood.

They have stood the test. Many settlers tell of backache, rheumatism and urinary troubles cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Otto Olshewski is one of these. In speaking of his cure he says:

"I suffered from kidney disease for four months. My back ached, I had heart flutterings, and was always tired and nervous. My skin had a harsh, dry feeling; my limbs were heavy; and I had a dragging sensation across the loins.

"I consulted a doctor, but, as I did not appear to improve, I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I used six boxes, and now I am all right."

Dodd's Kidney Pills always stand the test. Ask your neighbors.

Not Tending to Business

A country doctor was recently called upon to visit a patient who resided at a distance. Arriving at his destination he tied his horse to a tree near by, and walked towards the house.

It happened that work was in progress on a new well, of which the doctor knew nothing until he found himself sinking into the earth. He fell just far enough to be unable to get out of the hole unassisted, and yelled lustily for help.

When he was finally pulled up his rescuer remarked: I say, doctor, you had no business down there.

No, I hadn't, replied the doctor.

Don't you know, continued his rescuer, you ought to leave the well alone and look after the sick.

The Ways of Women

Don't you think that women are as capable of making laws as men?

More so. Give a woman a motor-car and she'll make up her own traffic regulations as she goes along.

His Request

So you have determined to sue me for breach of promise?

Yes.

With damages.

Of course.

Well, say. I've got just one favor to ask of you. Don't sue me for less than $100,000. I haven't got a dollar in the world that I can call my own, and it might help my credit.

ACTRESS ON TRIAL FOR MURDER

Strange Drama of Misplaced Affection Now Before Tribunal in Naples

Naples, Italy.—Yvonne de Villespreux, a fascinating actress, who formerly belonged to a dramatic company run by Dina Galli, herself a most brilliant light comedy artist, is now standing her trial here for killing her lover, Dr. Ettore Turdo.

The case is replete with psychological interest. One evening in November, 1909, when the Galli company was performing at the Quirnal Theatre, Rome, Turdo, who had just won high university honors in medicine, was introduced to Villespreux by Signorina Esterina a young actress friend of hers in the same company. All supped together, with a party of youths of the smart set in the capital.

Villespreux was so impressed by the assiduous court paid her by Doctor Turdo that next day she accepted his invitation to live with him, and bargained with Esterina to yield her claim for a consideration of 300 francs. About Christmas time Turdo parted from his lover, as an order had come from Naples to attend his brother Luigi, a barrister, and a violent morphiamaniac.

Hither, in the beginning of March, 1910, came also the Dina Galli company. Turdo meanwhile had taken a fresh lover, but after persistent entreaties of Villespreux consented to again live with her, although Turdo had never contributed a penny towards her maintenance and her pay was only $1 a day.

Thenceforth she performed the most menial offices for the morphiamaniac brother, and with the consent of the medical attendants, arranged for a continuous stream of pretty artist visitors to distract his mind. Suddenly the maniac conceived a strong dislike for her, and during one of his drug fits accused her of aspiring to marry into their noble family. A violent struggle ensued, in which she attacked him vigorously, and was herself severely cut on the hand by broken glass.

Next evening, March 9, the other residents in the boarding house where the couple were staying were startled by the noise of revolver shots, and rushing in, they found Turdo bleeding to death. The actress was seated on the bed with a Browning, which they wrested from her. The only spectator of the tragedy was a little girl, the daughter of another theatrical artist, who had entrusted the child to Villespreux's keeping while she attended a rehearsal.

Villespreux first maintained that the weapon came into her possession several days earlier, Turdo having seized it from his maniac brother's grasp, and asked her to hide it. Then on the fatal night when he announced to her his intention of quitting her, she was about to restore the weapon to him as it was the only object she had that belonged to him.

Turdo, however, approaching her behind unawares, touched her arms, and the weapon went off accidentally. She explained the position of the wounds, stating that she was left-handed, but Turd before expiring in hospital, made no secret of the fact that there had been a painful scene due to jealousy, which she cut short by firing directly at him. Otherwise he spoke kindly of her, begging that she should not be prosecuted.

Villespreux's latest version is that she contemplated committing suicide in despair at the parting, because only a week previously she had broken off a theatrical touring contract at Turdo's appeal, while a wealthy Perugian magnate, who for years past had been in the habit of giving her a handsome monthly allowance, had just stopped it entirely on learning of her double dealing.

The accused woman is now 29, and is being defended by two of the smartest lawyers in Italy.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS.

Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine a mother can give her little one. They act as a gentle laxative, sweeten the stomach, break up colds and make teething easy. Concerning them Mrs. Alphonse Landry, Upper Caraquet, N.B., says: "Baby's Own Tablets were of great benefit to my little boy and I would advise all mothers with sickly children to give them a trial." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Valuable Antique

An old lady was searching in the dim bric-a-brac shop for something odd to take home with her. Finally she noticed a quaint figure, the head and shoulders of which appeared above the counter at the farthest end of the room. She turned to the clerk and said: What's that queer old Japanese idol over there worth?

The clerk answered in a subdued tone: About $250,000, ma'am. That's the proprietor.

An Irishman who was too old for active work was offered the position of crossing tender at a small railroad station. He looked dubious as the duties of the office were explained to him and the meaning of the various flags was clearly stated.

In case of danger with a train coming, of course you wave the red flag, said his friend, proceeding with his explanation.

A hard old hand gripped his arm. Man, dear, it'll never do, said Patrick, shaking his head solemnly. I could never trust myself to remember to wave a red flag whin there was a green wan handy.

Anaemic Condition or Bloodlessness

A peculiar pallor or even ghastliness of the skin is the marked symptom of anaemia. The eyelids, gums and lips appear to be almost bloodless. The cause of this condition is the absence of red corpuscles from the blood.

The anaemic patient is usually thin and weak, but may be fleshy and inclined to dropsy. Stomach troubles and weakness of the bodily organs are accompaniments

Red corpuscles must be added to the blood, and this can best be accomplished by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It is readily assimilated, enters the blood streams and carries health and strength to every organ of the body.

Mrs. B. Lamberton - - - - Editor and Managers

A measure of woman suffrage which would have enfranchished 6,000,000 womanvoters, was defeated in the British House of Commons recently by a vote of 266 tr 219. The increase in the adverse vote since the last division is attributed to the work of militants.

The greatest interes is being taken by paper manufacturers throughout the province of Quebec in the experiments which have been conducted by the United States Forest Products Laboratory in Wisconsin in the production of paper from jackpine. There are huge acres of jackpine throughout Eastern Canada, and now that spruce is increasing rapidly in value, it would add immensely to the present resources to be able to utilize jackpine. In many regions, while the spruce has all been cut, the jackpine has been left standing, so that there is a big supply available even in the older distri t.

Recent experiments demonstrated the complete practicability of utilizing wood waste from lumbering and saw-mill or other wood-working industries in the manufacture of paper pulp. Where the wood is resinous in character, it has been demonstrated that, in the case of certain pines and firs, by-products of great value may, in addition to paper pulp, be secured from this source, in the form of turpentine, rosin oils, pine oils, creosote, charcoal, wood alcohol, etc.

A cord of waste wood costing from 2.00 to 4.00 delivered at the works, may yield products worth nearly fifty dollars. The waste material so utilized comes from the wood left in the forest from lumbering, dead and fallen timber, stumps of cut-over lands, and slabs and edgings from the mills. Pine and fir stumps have been profitably utilized in this connection, especially where the removal of stumps is desirable in order that the land may be devoted to farming purposes.

Under the usual methods of utilization, not less than 60 per cent of the volume of the tree as it stands in the woods is wasted in converting it into lumber. This waste material is now becoming recognized as a potential source of great revenue, through the establishment of properly located plants for the manufacture of some or all of the above by-products. This tendency will become increasingly strong with the inevitable decrease in the extent of virgin forests.

Our town has long enjoyed the distinction of being one of the best market towns of its size in the state. You always get the top price for your produce from our enterprising business men.

Don't be a knocker. Hide your little hammer. What is to hinder you from speaking well of your own town on all occasions? It is just as easy to tell your visitors that our town is composed of as good people as inhabit the earth. You will break none of the ten commandments in saying this.

Other towns may be jealous of our little city and its trade, but there is no jealousy on the part of our people. Our merchants and our business men are liberal in their dealings and hold out inducements in both quality and price to draw trade. They advertise this fact, and when people come they find things as advertised, and this, with the disposition to please are sure trade winners. This is why people are coming from other towns to trade. You can't keep them away.

Says the Montreal Herald: "Dirty lanes, uncleaned yards, exposed heaps of refuse, piles of mud warmed by the strengthening heat of the sun—all these are ideal places in which the fly can start the season, as she has been accustomed to do. The swats of the swatters will fall with more effect on a fly which has been weakend by preliminary starving. Flies are not good as hunger strikers. Swatting is good, but starving is better".

A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST

By

GENE STRATTON-PORTER

Copyright, 1909, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS

Although a good scholar, Elnora Comstock, entering high school, is abashed by her country dress. She needs $20 for books and tuition fees. Her mother is unsympathetic, and Elnora tells her troubles to Wesley Sinton, an old neighbor.

When Elnora was born her father was drowned in a swamp, embittering her mother's life. Elnora determines to raise money by gathering forest specimens. The Sintons buy clothes for her.

Elnora, getting her books cheaply, finds a market with the Bird Woman for butterflies, Indian relics, etc.

Mrs. Comstock's devotion to her husband's memory will not permit her to sell trees or have oil wells dug on her land. The Sintons bring Elnora new clothing.

Elnora is delighted with her outfit. Her mother says she must pay for it. Wesley and Margaret Sinton discuss the girl's affairs.

Pete Corson, a Limberlost frequenter, warns Elnora not to visit the Limberlost at night or go far into the swamp at any time.

Billy, a bright but untrained little chap, with a shiftless father and hungry brother and sister, gets Elnora's luncheon. Wesley, troubled by Corson's warning, investigates.

"You think that now, but in a few days you will find that you feel very differently. Living a life of heartache is no joke and no job for a woman. Put on your ring and send me to tell him to come. I know Phil, and I know you went too far. Put on that ring and send him word you are sorry before it is too late."

"I will not! He shall come to me."

"Then God help you!" said Henderson, "for you are plunging into misery whose depth you do not dream."

She swayed where she stood. Her maid opened the door and caught her. Henderson went down the hall and out to his car.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Wherein Edith Carr Experiences Regrets and Philip Returns to the Limberlost.

PHILIP AMMON walked from among his friends a humiliated and a wounded man. Dawn was near when he reached home, but the first floor was lighted. He staggered up the steps and was instantly admitted. The library door stood open, while his father sat with a book pretending to read. At Philip's entrance the father scarcely glanced up.

"Come on!" he called. "I have just told Banks to bring me a cup of coffee before I turn in. Have one with me?"

"Father," said Philip, "may I talk with you a little while?"

"Of course," answered Mr. Ammon. "I am not at all tired. I think I must have been waiting in the hope that you would come. I want no one's version of this but yours. Tell me the straight of the thing, Phil."

Philip told all he knew, while his father sat in deep thought. "The friend for whom you wanted the moth is a girl?" he asked.

"The girl of whom I wrote you last summer and told you about in the fall. I helped her all the time I was away."

"Did Edith know of her?"

"I tried many times to tell her, to interest her, but she was so indifferent that it was insulting. She would not hear me."

"Who is this girl, just what is she doing and what is she like?"

Philip gave a man's version of the previous summer.

"You are very sure as to her refinement and education?" he asked.

"In almost two months' daily association could a man be mistaken? She can far and away beat Polly, Edith or any girl of our set on any common, high school or supplementary branch. She has the biggest, tenderest, most human heart I ever knew in a girl."

The book leaves slid rapidly through his fingers as the father drawled, "What sort of looking girl is she?"

"Tall as Edith, a little heavier, pink, even complexion, wide open blue gray eyes with heavy black brows and lashes so long they touch her cheeks. She has a rope of waving, shining hair that makes a real crown on her head, and it appears almost red in the light. She is as handsome as any fair woman I ever saw, but she doesn't know it."

"And you were in daily association two months with a girl like that! How about it, Phil?"

"If you mean did I trifle with her, no!" cried Philip hotly. "I told her the second time I met her all about Edith. I never met any girl so downright noble in bearing and actions. I never hated anything as I hated leaving her, for we were dear friends, like two wholly congenial men."

"Yet you left such a girl and came back whole hearted to Edith Carr!"

"Surely! You know how it has been with me about Edith all my life."

"Yet the girl you picture is far her superior to an unprejudiced person, when thinking what a man would require in a wife to be happy."

"I never have thought what I would 'require' to be happy. I only thought whether I could make Edith happy. I have been an idiot. What I've borne you'll never know. Tonight is only one of many outbursts like that, in varying and lesser degrees."

"Phil, I love you, when you say you have thought only of Edith. I happen to know that it is true. In some ways tonight would be a blessed release if you could take it; but you cannot. Go to bed now and get some rest. Tomorrow go back to her and fix it up."

"You heard what I said when I left her. I said it because something in my heart died a minute before that, and I realized that it was my love for Edith Carr. Sir, it is truth that I have thought only of her up to the present. Now I will admit I am thinking about myself. Father, did you see her? Life is too short, and it can be too sweet to throw away in a battle with an unrestrained woman. I am no fighter—where a girl is concerned, anyway. Could you spare me a few days? I wonder if I could not hide at Uncle Ed's in Wisconsin for awhile!"

"Phil, are you sure of what you just have said?"

"Death cannot return to life, father. My love for Edith Carr is dead. I hope never to see her again. Let us not speak of it further."

"Then, Phil," the father leaned closer and looked at the son tenderly, "Phil, why don't you go to the Limberlost?"

"Father!"

"Why not? No one can comfort a hurt heart like a tender woman; and, Phil, have you ever stopped to think that you may have a duty in the Limberlost if you are free? She might care to see you. You can soon tell."

A long time Philip Ammon sat in deep thought. At last he raised his head.

"Well, why not?" he said. "Years could make me no surer than I am now, and life is short. Please ask Banks to get me some coffee and toast, and I will bathe and dress so I can take the early train."

"Go to your bath. I will attend to your packing and everything." And Phil, if I were you I would leave no addresses."

"Not an address!" said Ammon "Not even for Polly."

When the train pulled out the elder Ammon went home to find Hart Henderson waiting.

"Where is Phil?" he demanded.

"He did not feel like facing his friends at present, and I am just back from driving him to the station. He said he might go to Siam or Patagonia He would leave no address."

Henderson almost staggered. "He's not gone—and left no address? You don't mean it! He'll never forgive her!"

"Never is a long time, Hart," said Mr. Ammon. "And it seems even longer to those of us who are well acquainted with Phil. Last night was not the last straw. It was the whole straw stack. It crushed Phil so far as she is concerned."

Twice Henderon opened his lips to speak of Edith Carr's despair. Twice he looked into the stern, inflexible face of Mr. Ammon and could not betray her. He held out the ring.

"I have no instructions as to that," said the elder Ammon, drawing back. "Possibly Miss Carr would have it as a keepsake."

"I am sure not," said Henderson curtly.

"Then suppose you return it to Pea-ever since I wore short skirts. All our lives we have expected to marry. An agreement of years cannot be broken in one insane moment. Always he has loved me devotedly. Give me ten minutes with him and he will be mine for all time."

"I seriously doubt that," said Elnora. "But I am perfectly willing that you should make the test. I will call him."

"Stop!" commanded Edith Carr. "I told you that it was you I came to see."

"I remember," said Elnora.

"Mr. Ammon is my betrothed," continued Edith Carr. "I expect to take him back to Chicago with me."

"Then it is untrue that you twice rejected his ring, repeatedly insulted him and publicly renounced him?"

"That was through you!" cried Edith Carr. "I realize the spell of this place for a summer season. I can see just how you have worked to ensnare him!"

"Men would call that lying," said Elnora calmly. "The second time I met Philip Ammon he told me of his engagement to you, and I respected it. When he left me I did not hope or expect to see him again." Elnora's voice fell soft and low. "And, behold, you sent him—and free!"

"You exult in that!" cried Edith Carr. "Let me tell you he is not free! If he married you before a month you would read heart hunger for me in his eyes. He could not love me as he has done and give me up for a little scene like that!"

"You killed his love everlastingly when you disgraced him in public," said Elnora. "Killed it so completely he does not even feel resentment toward you."

Edith Carr stood truly regal and filled with scorn. "You are mistaken! Nothing on earth could kill that!" she cried, and Elnora saw that the girl really believed what she said.

"I want a minute with you," said Miss Carr.

"You are very sure of yourself!" said Elnora.

"I have reason to be sure," answered Edith Carr. "We have lived and loved too long. I have had years with him to match against your days. He is mine! His work, his ambitions, his friends, his place in society are with me. You may have a summer charm for a sick man in the country. If he tried placing you in society you would put him to shame in a week."

"I hardly think I should follow your example so far," said Elnora dryly. "I have a feeling for Philip that would prevent my hurting him purposely either in public or private. As for managing a social career for him he never mentioned that he desired such a thing. What he asked of me was that I should be his wife. I understood that to mean that he desired me to keep him a clean house, serve him digestible food, mother his children and give him loving sympathy and tenderness."

"Such nonsense!" panted Edith Carr. "How can a man like Ammon endure it? You know perfectly that if your [illegible] were broken. If he [illegible] in his home among his books and where he was meeting me, he would see how would be mine [illegible] as it always has been."

"That will do!" said Elnora. "I shall not argue with a lunatic. I have decided on my course. You may return to your friends."

"What do you mean?" demanded Edith Carr.

"That is my affair," replied Elnora. "Only this: When your opportunity comes, seize it! Any time you are in Philip Ammon's presence, exert the charms of which you boast and take him. Take him to Onabasha and to Chicago with you. Use every art you possess. If the old charm can be revived I will be the first to wish both of you well. Now, I must return to my guests. Kindly excuse me."

Elnora turned and went back to the arbor. Edith Carr followed the fence and passed through the gate into the west woods where she asked Henderson if the car was ready. As she stood near him she whispered, "Take Phil back to Onabasha with us."

"I say, Ammon, can't you go to the city with us and help me find a shop where I can get this pinion fixed?" asked Henderson. "We want to lunch and start back by 5. That will get us home by midnight."

Philip went into the arbor.

"Elnora," he said, "Henderson is in trouble with his automobile. He wants me to go to Onabasha with him to show him where the doctor lives and help him get fixed so he can start back this evening. It will take about two hours. May I go?"

"Of course you must go," she said, laughing lightly. "You can't leave your sister. Why don't you go back to Chicago with them? There is plenty of room, and you could have a fine visit."

"I'll be back in just two hours," said Ammon. "While I am gone you be thinking over what we were talking of when the folks came."

Elnora offered her hand to all of them, and when she came to Ammon she gave him one long steady look in the eyes, then shook hands with him also.

When Philip returned to the Limberlost Elnora was gone. There was a note for him, saying that even her mother did not know where she had sought refuge. On or before the 1st of September, she wrote, she would let him know where she was and her decision. Philip, deeply disappointed, returned to Chicago. There Edith Carr, in a meeting at which Philip's father was present, begged his forgiveness, told him she had always loved him and asked for his love again. But he told her any love he had ever had for her was dead. He was going back to the Limberlost, he said.

Elnora, feeling the need of rest, went to the summer home of the Angel and Freckles, on Mackinac Island, and received a warm welcome from Mr. and Mrs. O'More and their four young children.

CHAPTER XXV.

Wherein Edith Carr Wages a Battle and Hart Henderson Stands Guard.

MANY people looked, a few followed, as Edith Carr slowly came down the main street of Mackinac, pausing here and there to note the glow of color in one small booth after another, overflowing with curios. Despite the effort she made to move lightly she was very tired and dragged her heavy feet with an effort.

She turned at the little street leading down to the dock and went out to meet the big lake steamer ploughing up the straits from Chicago. Past the landing place, on to the very end of the pier she went, then sat down, leaned against a dock support and closed her tired eyes. When the steamer came very near she languidly watched the people lining the railing. Instantly she marked one lean, anxious face turned toward hers and with a throb of pity she lifted a hand and waved to Hart Henderson. He was the first man off the boat.

"Did you have a successful trip?" she asked.

"I accomplished my purpose. Edith, I saw some one today in the Lake Shore private hospital."

"An accident?"

"No. Nervous and physical breakdown."

"Phil said he was going back to the Limberlost."

"He went. He was there three weeks, but the strain broke him. He has an old letter in his hands that he has handled until it is ragged. He held it up to me and said, 'You can see for yourself that she says she will be well and happy, but we can't know until we see her again, and that may never be. She may have gone too near that place her father went down, some of that Limberlost gang may have found her in the forest. She may lie dead in some city morgue this instant waiting for me to find her body.'"

"Hart, for pity's sake stop!"

"I can't," cried Henderson desperately. "I am forced to tell you. They are fighting brain fever. He did go back to the swamp and he prowled it night and day. The days down there are hot now, and the nights wet with dew and cold. He paid no attention and forgot his food. A fever started, and his uncle brought him home. They've never had a word from her or found a trace of her. Mrs. Comstock thought she had gone to O'More's at Grand Rapids, so when Phil got sick she telegraphed there. They had been gone all summer, so her mother is as anxious as Phil."

"The O'Mores are here," said Edith. "I haven't seen any of them, because I haven't gone out much in the few days since we came, but this is their summer home."

"Edith, they say at the hospital that it will take careful nursing to save Phil. He says he will stay there just two days longer. The doctors say he will kill himself when he goes. He is a sick man, Edith. His hands are burning and shaky and his breath was hot against my face."

"Why are you telling me?" It was a cry of acute anguish.

"He thinks you know where she is."

"I do not; I haven't an idea!"

"He said it was something you said to her that made her go."

"That may be, but it doesn't prove that I know where she went."

Henderson looked across the water and suffered keenly. At last he turned to Edith and laid a firm, strong hand over hers.

"Edith," he said, "do you realize how serious this is?"

"I suppose I do."

"Do you want as fine a fellow as Phil driven any further? If he leaves that hospital now and goes out to the exposure and anxiety of a search for her there will be a tragedy that no after regrets can avert. Edith, what did you say to Miss Comstock that made her run away from Phil?"

"I told her Phil was mine! That if he were away from her an hour and back in my presence he would be to me as he always had been."

"Edith, do you believe that now?"

The beautiful head barely moved in negation. Henderson gathered both her hands in one of his and stretched an arm across her shoulders to the post to support her. She dragged her hands from him and twisted them together.

"No! I do not believe it now! I know it is not true! I killed his love for me. It is dead and gone forever. Nothing will revive it—nothing in all this world!"

She dropped back against his arm exhausted. Henderson held her and learned what suffering truly means. He fanned her with his hat, rubbed her cold hands and murmured broken, incoherent things. By and by great slow tears slipped from under her closed lids, but when she opened them her eyes were dull and hard.

Quaint Oaths.

In Assam the oath is taken by standing within a rope circle, to imply a wish to rot as the rope does if the swearer does not tell the truth.

In lawsuits between Russians and the Ostiaks of Siberia a bear's head is brought into court, and the Ostiak, making the gesture of eating, calls on the bear to devour him if he lies.

There are tribes of India that swear by the head of a tiger, while others chop a dog in two as emblematic of the fate of the perjurer.

RODS FIND CAVES UNDER EARTH

Remarkable Result of Rigid Test of Many Diviners' Skill

Paris, France.—A number of celebrated scientists recently tested the powers of four wielders of the divining rod in the Bois de Vincennes.

A large deserted quarry undermined a portion of the wood, and the diviners were asked to point out the underground galleries and shafts. At the end of the experiment their statements were to be compared by M. Armand Vire, the city surveyor, with a specially constructed chart. The organizers stated that it was impossible for any of the competitors to have had any previous knowledge of the subterranean passages, M. Vire being the only person aware of the exact positions.

The first man with the divining rod was M. Pelapret, a sturdy peasant, who carried a supple forked wand of hazel. For some time he walked steadily forward, the hazel wand trembling slightly. Suddenly the wand twitched and M. Pelapret, stopping, said: A cavity begins here.

After walking round on the grassy slope to measure the extent of the cavity, he gave the result of his observations to M. Vire, saying that the cavern was over seventeen yards deep and that it was quite dry.

The other competitors stepped forward in turn. They used wands of whalebone, bamboo and copper. Three other underground pits were, like the first, marked out by them with bits of paper, with the approximate depth. M. Probst, the last to use the trembling rod, went so far as to indicate somewhat vaguely it is true, four galleries which branched off from the main shaft, the site of which he had marked out on the turf.

M. Vire, the surveyor, then unrolled the official map and there was a moment's breathless silence. Every one of the competitors had succeeded with more or less accuracy in marking out caverns or pits which actually existed, and the four galleries spoken of by the last competitor were also traced on the map. The depth given was correct.

As a final proof of the virtues of the magic rod, M. Probst consented to be led blindfolded over the area, and the result he obtained corresponded almost exactly with the first indications he had given.

EVERY WOMAN IS A NURSE

Spread of Patriotic Fervor in Republic Has Caught the Gentler Sex

Paris, France.—The sacrifice demanded of the male population of France by the return to the law of three years' military service has evoked the keenest attention among the women of the country to do something in their turn.

The Society of the Women of France, a Red Cross institution which numbers 150,000 members, publishes an appeal that a number of posts in the auxiliary services of the army should be given to women.

The Secretary of the society points out that in time of war 40,000 men would be required for military field hospitals, and that they could be set free for service in the fighting lines if sufficient women could be found to take their place.

M. M. de Waleffe, the well-known writer, makes the following original proposals for compulsory hospital training for all women:

After the passage of the three years' bill into law we should ask the minister of war to consider the question of women's service. I can well imagine a law, the three principal features of which would be:

Every woman of 20 years of age, married or unmarried, to perform at once six months' service in the hospitals, and every subsequent year to serve for three weeks until the age of 45.

Women with children under 7 years of age need not perform such service.

Women with more than three children are exempt from further service.

REAL DUEL ON STAGE

He and the Barytone Horrify Audience by Fierce and Unexpected Conflict

Paris, France.—The Journal publishes a Madrid telegram reporting an extraordinary and tragic affair which, it is said, occurred recently at the theatre at Argamasilla de Alba, in the province of Ciudad Real.

It appears that the leading baritone Senor Pardo, and the chief tenor, Senor Martinez, attached to the operatic company at present performing in the town, were deadly enemies as a consequence of rivalry in a love affair, and they had agreed to fight a duel to death.

They had, however, decided to await the termination of the operatic season in the little town in order that their rivalry might not interrupt the performance.

The season terminated with a performance of 'Carmen,' and at the close of the third act the spectators were horrified to find themselves the witnesses of a fierce duel between the two singers.

The fight did not last long, the tenor, Martinez, falling dead at the feet of his rival.

There is one thing that may be said to the credit of a small boy; he never pretends to like anyone he doesn't like.

That's strange. I was positive someone was under my bed, commented the learned man.

JEALOUSY LEADS TO ARREST

Thinking Booty Would be Given Her Rival, Woman Betrays Accomplices

Berlin. — Three thieves who stole a Russian countess's jewelry valued at over $30,000 have been caught —Frau Pfefer (Baby) in Berlin, and her two accomplices, Kolberg and Krause, the monocled lieutenant in Munich. Baby, when arrested, made a clean breast of the entire transaction, and, accompanied by a detective, traveled to Munich, where she arranged a meeting with the two men with the knowledge of the detective. All three are now in prison, an the Russian woman is again in possession of her trinkets. In addition, a jeweler with whom they had made arrangements for the disposal of their booty, has been arrested. He had already unfastened the stones and melted down the settings.

It seems that Baby was moved to her treachery by jealousy of another woman friend of Kolberg, a dancer. She feared that Kolberg might be inclined to bestow some of the stolen property on this rival. When Frau Pfeffer's husband heard of his wife's criminal dealings, he committed suicide in Berlin.

Merely Wanted to Know

The daughter of the house had just returned from a visit with her Western cousins, during which she was extolling the virtues of her intended.

Oh, mother, she exclaimed. He's just grand. So square, so upright! So highly polished! Why even in his notes there is such a sympathetic tone that sometimes I wonder if I am not reading the music of the gods!

Mercy's sake, child! interrupted mother, are you talking about a young man or a piano.

Warts are unsightly blemishes, and corns are painful growths. Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them.

There! said the young wife proudly, as she deposited the hot plate carefully on the table. That's the first pie that I ever made without any help; all alone myself.

So it is! exclaimed her husband enthusiastically, looking it over critically meanwhile. And as long as it is the very first, my dear, don't you think that, instead of cutting it, it would be nice to keep it for a souvenir? How would it do to have it framed?

DEATH ENDS INSULT

Girl Takes Poison While Priest Prays Over Father's Grave

St. Petersburg.—With the advent of spring the number of suicides or attempted suicides in St. Petersburg has reached a daily average of about ten. Most are due to abject poverty.

Recently a young girl asked the attendant priest at the Volkovo Cemetery to recite a memorial service over the grave of her father. She sobbed bitterly, and when the priest and sacristan began to sing the beautiful 'Eternal Memory,' took a small bottle out of her pocket and hastily swallowed the contents. She was taken to a hospital in a dying condition. In a letter she said, quoting the title of Dostoieffsky's novel, that since the death of her father she had been so humiliated and insulted that life had become unbearable.

Concrete is the cheapest building material

WHETHER for a silo, a milk-house, or a million bushel grain elevator, concrete is the most economical building material in use today.

Concrete never requires repairs, and the saving in repair-expense alone makes the greater economy of using concrete more apparent every day.

The cost of other building materials is constantly increasing.

The cost of concrete is being reduced.

Canada Cement

which Canadian farmers use, with their own sand, stone and gravel to make concrete, is the only ingredient you have to buy.

We have, by reason of our large output and scientific methods, been able to bring the price of "Canada" Cement so low that it is within the reach of everyone.

An increase in demand results in a greater economy of production, and when conditions have warranted it, we have, from time to time, shared this saving with the consumer by reducing the price of Canada Cement. This demand will continue to increase—as fast as farmers learn of concrete's superiority over other materials.

When you buy cement, see that you get "Canada" Cement; by so doing you will assure the complete success of all your concrete work.

CARE OF THE EWES AT LAMBING TIME

The busiest time in the whole year for the sheep raiser is when the lambs are being dropped, along in the latter part of the winter. The actual profits of the whole year's sheep raising are really being made at this time, and the shepherd is forced to work about twenty-four hours out of every twenty-four for a week or two.

During February and March, and sometimes during the last days of January, the good shepherd finds that practically every hour of his time is being taken up by the lambing ewes. Lantern in hand, he must visit the sheep once or twice during the night. When they are being allowed to run in the open his task is two and three times as difficult as when the sheep are being corraled in sheds and pens every night.

A Minnesota correspondent of American Agriculturist says he finds Shropshires good, hardy sheep, easily wintered. Storms and cold do not effect them as much as some breeds. They also make very good mothers. Last spring he raised 135 lambs from eighty-five ewes. The best time for lambs to come on the average farm is the 1st of May, as the ewes are usually on grass and have lots of milk at that time. The Shropshire wether shown was grand champion at the Chicago International Live Stock exposition of 1912. He was bred by J. and D. J. Campbell, Woodville, Ont.

In order that help and care may be given every ewe and lamb that may need it, try to visit every sheep in the flock about three or four times daily. During the day, if she sheep happen to be on pasture, constant watching is necessary, as the ewes are likely to drop their lambs in some remote part of the pasture.

Early in the winter months in which the lambs are to be expected it is wise to set apart as much of the sheep sheds and shelters as can possibly be spared and divide them off into temporary pens. These should be used for the ewes immediately after they have dropped their lambs. Last year I took a space four feet wide along the east wall of a long sheep shed and fenced it off from the rest of the interior, says a Kentucky shepherd in Farm Progress. By dividing this long space into little pens five feet long I made room for a dozen ewes and their lambs.

A space 4 by 5 is plenty big enough to hold a mother and her lamb comfortably for a night and a day. When a ewe and lamb are brought in I put them in these pens for the night. A little feed for the mother and a bucket of water to help allay her feverish thirst are all the attention she will need for the next twenty-four hours.

When the weather is raw and bad leave them in the pens longer than when the ground is firm and the sun is out. A cold rain on the tender skin of a young lamb is about the worst thing that can happen to him.

The Care of a Churn.

There is a great difference in the appearance of churns after they have been used a while. Some get dark colored and lose their fresh, clean look. Moreover, there is often more or less of a mildewed appearance, owing, it is supposed, to the fact that a much used churn never has a chance to become thoroughly dried out. Neglect to keep it scrupulously clean is fatal to any wooden utensil, since it will quickly absorb odors, and once permeated it is next to impossible to overcome the condition entirely. All the inside of a churn should be regularly treated to a good scalding with boiling water. There is no necessity of so treating the varnished outer surface, which if wiped off with a cloth wrung out of cold water will preserve its pristine freshness indefinitely. A stiff brush is better than a cloth to use in cleansing dairy utensils.

Care of Dairy Utensils.

Flush the separator with plenty of good cold water immediately after use. Take the bowl apart and wash with warm water and washing powder until all parts are cleaned. Then rinse thoroughly with scalding hot water and place them in the clean milk supply tank to drain. Rinse all the dippers, cans, strainers and pails with cold water, then wash them thoroughly with hot water, washing powder and a brush until all traces of milk are removed. Rinse with thoroughly hot water. Never wipe them off with a cloth, as they do not need it, but incline on a clean shelf or over a trough so that the water can drain off readily.

Shoes For Flat Feet.

Flat feet in horses are often caused by allowing the shoes to remain on too long. A shoe for a flat footed horse should be wide in the web and concaved well so as not to touch the sole of the foot. Put a good piece of sole leather beneath the shoe and apply some good horse ointment

FABULOUS TABLE ANIMALS.

Such as Welsh Rabbit, Scotch Woodcock and Mock Crab.

When one comes to think of it, it is surprising how many fabulous animals come regularly to the dinner table or supper table.

Among them, of course, the most familiar is the Welsh rabbit, which in its original form was merely toasted cheese. Some folks declare that the name is a corruption of "rarebit," but this has never been proved.

Then there is the golden buck, which is a Welsh rabbit with a poached egg on top. Chinese rabbit is a Welsh rabbit with rice in it, and a Mexican rabbit (otherwise known as a Spanish rabbit) contains tomatoes and onions.

So much for rabbits. But how many people are familiar with the Cape Cod turkey? Plenty in New England, where codfish goes under that name.

Scotch woodcock is two slices of hot buttered toast, with an anchovy on each slice and a sauce made of half a pint of milk and the yolks of three eggs poured over them.

Less familiar perhaps is English monkey, which is made by soaking a cupful of breadcrumbs in a cupful of milk and adding a tablespoonful of melted butter, a beaten egg and half a cupful of grated cheese, the whole, with salt and pepper added, being poured over toasted crackers.

The mock turtle is one of the most familiar of fabulous table animals, being served in the form of soup. In "Alice's Adventures In Wonderland" will be found a striking picture of this remarkable reptile, represented with the body of a turtle and the head of a calf.

Mock duck is a roll of chopped meat and breadcrumbs baked. Mock crab is made by mixing equal parts of grated cheese and butter, seasoning with salt, pepper and vinegar and adding a few drops of anchovy sauce. The paste thus prepared is spread on slices of dry toast or sometimes served in crab shells.

Last, but not least remarkable, of these mythological animals, known only to the kitchen naturalist, is the corn oyster, which is a small fritter of green corn fried like a real oyster.—New York American.

GOLD NUGGETS.

There Is a Curious Resemblance Between Them and Meteorites.

How do nuggets of gold originate? Sometimes a mass of the precious metal worth a thousand dollars or more is found. By what process was so much gold compacted into a lump?

An attempt was made not long ago to answer this question. An investigator in Australia cut and sliced and polished gold nuggets with the sole purpose of finding out just what is their structure. The first thing he discovered was that there is one curious point of resemblance between gold nuggets and meteorites. Both, when polished and etched with chlorine water, exhibit a crystalline structure. In the case of meteorites the lines thus exhibited on the etched surface are called Widmannstattian figures, and their presence is said to be one of the most invariable characteristics of those metallic bodies that fall from the sky to the earth.

But it is not meant to be implied that gold nuggets have fallen from the sky because they exhibit a crystalline structure recalling that of meteorites. The resemblance is apparently only superficial, and the crystals of the nuggets differ in form from those of the meteorites.

Another curious fact is that when a nugget is heated in a Bunsen flame explosions take place on its surface. Blisters are formed which continue to swell until they burst with a sharp report and bits of gold are violently scattered about. It is evident that the nuggets contain either gases or some liquids or solids which are easily converted into the gaseous form, the expansion of which produces the explosions.—Harper's Weekly.

Fake Curios.

Dr. Wakeling, the Egyptologist, tells us that it is useless to warn the tourist against the fake curio. He buys and is sold with an unfailing regularity, and hardly any imitation is too gross to deceive him. Dr. Wakeling tells us of a lady who bought a scarab from a boy who assured her that he had himself stolen it from the excavations in the temple of Aknaton. And she displayed her treasure triumphantly and always with the words, "And I am sure it must be true, for he had such an honest little face."—Argonaut.

Pessimistic Thought.

Every rose has its thorn. And the mean part of it is that the thorn stays on the job when the rose has withered.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Polly often goes beyond her bounds but impudence knows none.—Ben Jonson.

HORSE WISDOM.

Weeks before field work is possible every young horse intended for service next spring should be broken to a dependable quantity.

Except in unusual cases of rush work the teams should cease work in time to cool off before the dampness and falling temperature of evening.

The buyers demand style in drafters as well as weight.

Farm horses that are not to be used through the winter should have a roomy paddock in which to exercise every fair day.

One of the most important things is to teach the colt to walk fast from the very start. Never hitch him up with a slow, unresponsive horse.

When you begin to handle the colts keep it up every day.

BROOD MARE TREATMENT.

Precautions to Observe to Prevent Loss of Foal by Abortion.

More consideration than is the general rule should be given to the treatment of brood mares, writes J. A. Macdonald in Rural New Yorker. As soon as it is known that a mare is safely in foal care should be exercised that she receives no treatment or annoyance that would endanger the loss of the foal through abortion. Sometimes the teasing or annoyance by a stallion or a gelding will cause such trouble. While with foal foods that are of a laxative and distinctly nutritive character should be used. Besides, something more than the ordinary amount of grain should be given, so that the mare's strength is not reduced while supporting the unborn foal. Oats should be the chief and staple article used for grain food, and the mare should have a fair allowance at least twice a day during the winter months.

Along with oats, bran should be freely and regularly used by every farmer who raises horses. Clover hay is preferable to timothy if free from dust. In addition to these, a few roots should be fed daily or every second day at least. If, however, wheat bran is fed liberally roots are not so necessary, because bran is laxative and cooling to the blood, which is the very effect of roots. Raw potatoes are good and very cooling. Not many should be fed in the raw state. I know one man who kept two horses. One was a pretty big horse and the other was a small horse. Raw potatoes were fed every night to these horses, to the big horse sixteen and to the small one twelve. This was a fair proportion.

Brood mares should be kept sharply shod in winter, as a struggle to keep their feet on ice or slippery roads may cause abortion. Cold, icy water is dangerous, as it may cause colic and eventually abortion. Mares in foal, while better for being worked moderately, should be kept out of deep snow. Plunging and struggling in deep snow are very dangerous.

When there is imminent danger of the mare aborting through slipping on ice, plunging in deep snow, hard driving or otherwise, soft feed should be withheld and the mare given kiln dried grain. Whole wheat dried in the oven of the kitchen stove is an old established preventive feed. It has long been a practice with us to feed this dried wheat to the mare after a hard drive or at any time that abortion is apprehended. While I have known our mares to abort several times, I never knew any of them to abort after getting preventive feeds of dried wheat. If wheat is not at hand, dried barley is good, or even dried oats.

With care and the exercise of common sense there should be little danger of a mare with foal doing all kinds of work and even driving if she is a general purpose mare.

Tankage For Hogs.

I have fed tankage to hogs of all ages for the last thirteen years with the best results in every case, says John H. Dunlap in Country Gentleman.

It is an ideal feed to use with corn and is highly palatable. It need not be fed in large quantities, one part of tankage to ten parts of corn being a very satisfactory ration. Nothing is better than a warm slop for hogs of all ages during the winter months. It is hard to get them to drink all the water that their systems require during the winter, and if they are given all the warm slop they will drink they will do much better than without it. Though personally I like to feed tankage in slop better than to feed it dry, it may be fed on the ground during the summer months in small quantities, with salt and any other condiments, with good results.

The Profitable Cow.

The cow giving the most butter fat leaves the owner with the most net cash profit without regard to cost of keeping when compared with low producing cows on small keeping cost. This phase of dairy economics is difficult to comprehend by many cow owners. Experiment time and again, however, has proved the assertion. The large producing cow does not consume feed as compared with the small producing cow in the same proportion that the small producing cow does.—Kansas Farmer.

At Farrowing Time.

Cut out the corn at farrowing time and feed alfalfa or some other nitrogenous feed. For a few weeks before and after farrowing the sow would be better off without corn. She needs more nitrogenous feeds until the pigs are weaned.

COMBINED TEXTURES.

This Mode Offers Unlimited Opportunities For Remodeling Gowns.

There is one feature of summer frocks that one can depend upon to materialize—that of the use of combination of two or more fabrics of contrasting texture and color for a suit or dress. It is not a new idea, for last spring the foreign designers attempted to introduce it, but somehow it did not catch on at that time.

There are three really new ideas which have been exploited this season in this scheme of combining fabrics.

ONE OF THE ECCENTRIC DRAPINGS OF PARIS.

One calls for a combination of two materials, a plain and a figured, both in the same color; another for the combination of different materials in contrasting colors. Such a laxity in modes offers the woman with a limited income, who is depending upon the skill of her needlewoman, many opportunities for remodeling old costumes.

The dress pictured will give a hint in this direction to the clever seamstress. It is made of white cotton crape and pale yellow zigzag cloth. The drapery, lifted at the back, is extremely Parisian.

CARE AND USE OF SOAP.

Buy In Large Quantities, as This Commodity Improves With Age.

As water alone cannot render grease soluble, it is impossible to cleanse most clothes without the aid of an agent which is capable of so doing.

The cleaning and solving properties of soap are entirely due to the alkaline constituents, the fatty acids being employed only to modify the injurious property of alkali.

When buying soap it is desirable to procure that made by a well known, reliable manufacturer, as one is less likely to get an inferior article. It is also better to buy it in large quantities, as large quantities are usually sold at a considerable reduction in price, and soap improves in quality and durability by keeping.

Soap may be used as a solid, or it may be dissolved and used as a liquid. In whatever form its action is that of a grease solvent and purifying agent. It is used in the solid or hard state for strong material without color, when its strength may be concentrated by rubbing it on the particularly dirty parts, so that they may be more easily and thoroughly cleansed.

Soap powder is principally composed of soda and water, and as washing soda does not cost more than one-fifth the price of soap powder, it would be more economical for the housekeeper to use that substance with the addition of a little soap solution to the water, which would form a lather equally as well, and the work of cleansing would be as effectual as when soap powder is used.

Magic Cleaning Fluid.

For cleaning delicate fabrics this method is said not to fade or injure the finest color: Grate raw potatoes to a pulp, add one pint of water to one pound of the potato pulp, stir and wash between the hands, then drain the water from the pulp through a fine sieve or cloth. Let it stand in the vessel until the fine white starch settles to the bottom, then pour off the clear water, which is what you use for cleaning. The settlings are used for potato starch for stiffening fine materials. For cleaning, sponge with the liquid, applying until all soil is removed, rinse in clear water and iron on the wrong side. For white silk, which may be passed through the water as through suds, add a very little borax to the water. Party dresses and white cashmeres clean beautifully by this method.

Odorless Lard.

To take away the odor of pork from lard buy leaf lard and while melting put several apples with the skins on, well washed and dried, into the melting pot. It gives the lard a fine flavor, and it can be used instead of butter in almost any pastry.

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Olive and Elaine Dickens, granddaughters of the novelist, have recently had a play produced in London. "Beauty and the Beast" is its title.

Miss Dora Keen of Philadelphia, the mountain climber, is a slight little woman of much personal charm, about the last one would pick in a crowd as the conqueror of Mount Blackburn, one of the highest peaks in Alaska.

Miss Josephine Freund, agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad company at Dilley, Ore., has for the third time in six years received the medal for perfect work. In 1907 she received the gold medal for the Oregon lines.

Miss Inez Milholland of New York is one of the best looking suffragists in the entire army under the yellow flag of votes for women. She brings to the cause a diploma from Vassar college and a license to practice law ad libitum in the state of New York.

Miss Katherine I. Harrison, whom the Pujo committee was anxious to summon recently in the hope that she might reveal some of her vast knowledge of Standard Oil secrets, was for twenty-five years private secretary to the late H. H. Rogers and is said to have accumulated more than a million dollars as a result of her rare business ability, coupled with her knowledge of inside affairs.

Sporting Notes.

John J. McGraw has signed a new contract for five years with the New York National league club. The terms are said to be $20,000 a year.

Negotiations are pending for an international contest of 1,500 points at 18.2 balk line billiards between William F. Hoppe, the champion, and Firmin Cassignol, conceded to be the best billiardist of the present day in France.

Howard Jones, Yale 1908, Sheffield, has been appointed head coach of the Yale football team for the year 1913. His appointment marks an important epoch in the Blues' football history. He will be the first salaried football coach for Yale. For years Yale has adhered to the graduate coaching system, with Walter Camp as chief adviser.

CHOICE BUTTER MADE ON THE FARM

E. E. Rockwood in Hoard's Dairyman says of farm buttermaking: I was talking recently with a farmer's wife who makes butter for a private line of customers, delivering it every two weeks.

The process of making choice butter is thoroughly understood by this woman. The quality is ever the same. The color never varies, nor does the salting. Everything about it from start to finish is done by rule. She has a separator run by a gasoline engine. The men separate the milk as they bring it from the barn. The cream is cooled at once and not mixed with that previously separated while it is warm. Churning is done every other day, or three times each week. A barrel churn, with no inside paddles whatever, is used. The cream is ripened by setting it in a warm place, adding a little buttermilk left from the last churning and stirring well. It is considered sufficiently ripened when it "pits" or when a spoon dipped into it is well coated on removal. Such cream pours out like thick molasses. It is strained through a sieve into the churn.

The amount of butter color is gauged according to the amount of cream. A rich tint is secured to the finished product, yet not so high a color as to offend the eye. Salt is sifted and used at the rate of an ounce and a half to the pound. The tastes of the consumers seem to agree on this amount, which is not too much after the butter is worked.

The remarkable vitality and milk producing qualities of the Brown Swiss breed of dairy cattle are indicated by the performance of Ola B., a two-year-old heifer. Handicapped with a broken shoulder, she made an official record with her first calf of 9,009.7 pounds of milk containing 321.55 pounds of butter fat in ten months. Ola B., which is shown with calf, is owned by the Walhalla farms, Middleburg, N. Y.

The winter churning temperature is right around 62 degrees. The cows are Jersey grades and produce a heat resisting quality of fat. Sometimes 64 degrees brings the butter of equally firm texture. When the globules reach the size of kernels of wheat a part of the buttermilk is drawn away and as much water of the same temperature is put into the churn. This is given a few turns and the cork again removed. This time the butter is drained pretty well and then washed with a pail of water at 62 degrees. I should have said that a handful of salt is added to the first water. This assists in separating the globules from the milk and floats them freely on the top. A hair sieve over a pail catches whatever particles run through. Sometimes another pail of water is needed to sufficiently wash out the milk, but all water used is in cold weather tempered to 62 or 64 degrees so as to leave the butter just right to work. Salt is sifted over the granules in the churn and the whole partly worked by revolving the churn. It is finished with a bowl and ladle, all this work being completed and the butter packed in small earthen crocks before it hardens. In summer it is usually set away for several hours after the first working and then reworked to finish the job. This is done because of different temperature conditions existing between the two seasons.

Fattening Sheep With Silage.

Accurate data regarding the value of silage in a ration for fattening sheep and lambs is scarce, but what there is indicates that it is useful. As far back as the early nineties the Michigan experiment station fed some lambs on silage and other foodstuffs. The gist of their findings is to the effect that a mixture of fodders composed largely of a good quality of silage proved a cheap and successful ration for fattening lambs. The Iowa station at Ames made some comparative tests of dry hay roots and silage as roughage for two years. The average of the two years was favorable to the use of silage as a means of cheapening the ration. The lambs from all lots finished into market toppers, but the dressed carcasses showed the silage lambs a little superior on the hook.

Care Makes the Cow.

Breeding in the dairy animal amounts to little or nothing unless the animal is so fed as to develop the cow and so obtain the results of her superior breeding. On the other hand, many calves of scrub breeding, properly reared and fed, will develop into profitable milk producers. The chances, of course, are always in favor of the heifer calf of good dairy breeding being a good milker.

Live Stock on the Farm.

Animal husbandry means more meat for the farmer's table, a cheap and desirable method of marketing farm products and more manure for the soil. Get animals and raise plenty of grain, hay and grazing for them.
