REVIVAL IN MINING NOW LOOKED FOR

The Sun in a recent editorial draws attention to the progress everywhere apparent in the mining industry, and says;—"Evidences are increasing that that there is to be a renewal of activity in mining in this Province. The partial demoralization of the industry which occurred a decade ago, largely as the result of dishonest promotions and feverish wild-cattings, has been remidied in the older and more settled camps, at least, by steady development and and production during the past few years, and, of late, much prospectsng which fof a time had been almost entirely abandoned has been done in many new fields in the Province.

The absence of railway facilties has done much to retard a number of fields which might be rich producers, such fields, for example, as the Similkameen; and the lack of roads and trails has hampered the exploration of new districts, but, undoubtedly, the spirit of adventure is once more taking hold of adventure is once more taking hold of the public and not only in the older settled camps but in the newer districts we shall speedily see much activity.'

"The Rossland camp and the camps at Grand Forks and Greenwood, as well as some in the Slocan district, are on a better footing now than they have been in the past even. Too much credit cannot be given to the energy displayed by the company at Grand Forks. The work they have done has been a support to the industry throught the Province. and since the company now in control of the great mines at Rossland have taen over those properties there has been a continuous and successful development which was utterly lacking even in the best days of that celebrated camp. The enterprise displayed by the company at Rossland in discovering rich ore and opening up great reserves in the mines has, in fact, given renewed courage to those engaged in the industry all over British Columbia. It has shown the world at large that the old system in which these mines were conducted—a system through which much money was recklessly thrown away—was as unfair to those properties as it was to the people who had been induced to place their money in the hands of the former companies whibh did not know how to mine properly."

"On the Coast, too, we have now quite a number of properties of the greatest promise and some of them giving most satisfactory results. With a revival of the mining spirit, and especially if precautions are taken to prevent dishonest promotion, we may confidently look for an activity in this industry in British Columbia in the next two or three years that will be of the highest advantage to the people and to the Province."

The Annual Meeting of the Creston Liberal Association will be held in Speers Hall, November. 15. Election of officers for the coming year and other matters of importance will be dealt with.

Arrangements are being made to hold a baby show in connection with the Christ Church bazaar on Thursday, Dec, 4th Full particulars will be given in next week's Review.

AGRICULTURAL AID--HIGHWAYS AID

The Family Herald and Weekly Star of October 8th. Speaking on these two big subject editorially, has the following to say which is so concise and comprehensive that we have pleasure in presenting it to our readers:

ARE THE FARMERS AS WIDE AWAKE AS THE MANUFACTURERS?

It will be recalled that the Borden put through a measure last session set aside ten million dollars to be spent during the next ten years "for the purpose of aiding and advancing the farming industry." This was by way of redemption of Mr. Borden's pledge to to the people of Canada, given just before the elections of 1911, that, if he were placed in charge of the Government of the country, he would "provide for the grnting of liberal assistance to the provinces for the purpose of supplementing and extending the work of agriculiural education and for the improvement of agriculture."

His Government did not move in the matter, however. until it had studied the situation and come to a ripe and well-considred conclusion as to the best manner in which this pledge could be redeemed. Ten millions is a lot of money to take from the pockets of the people to spend on anything; and the Government rightfully thought it wise to be very sure they using it to best advantage. So, the year before, Dr. C C. James, an experienced authority on agriculture, was appointed to go over the field, consult the various farming experts in all the provinces with whom he was well acquainted through a lifetime devoted to agricultural matters, and report on the best way of turning this fertilizing stream of dollars on the land of canada.

The decision was to assist agricultural education. The basic idea is that, if the farmers can be helped to get more out of their land by enallieg them to apply the methods of scientific agriculture, they will be given—not a dole or temporary charity—but an instrument which will bring them in a steadily increasing revenue. This will have two incidental effects—Hon. Mr. Burrell thinks—which will be of gteat value to Canada as a nation. First it will tend to turn the tide of migration back to the land and so help cure the cancer of swollen urban populations; and, secondly, it will tend to reduce the cost of living—one of the most pressing problems of the times. In other countries scientific agriculture has enormously increased the output of the fields. Belgium, for example, produces on its farms fifty million dollars more in value than it did twenty-five years ago.

In France, educatisn has augmented the agricultural yield by five hundred millions a year. And so it goes. Brains make the best possible agricultural implement.

This ten millions is to run over ten years; but it is not to be spent at the dead-level rate of a million a year.

Nothing so unintelligent as that is proposed. It will be graduated to the growing needs of the situation and will be divided on fair terms between the provinces. Mr. Burrell, in his speech introducing the measure gave us the following tabular statement of its division and progressive payments:—

P. E. I.	$ 23,520.85	$ 1,306	$ 31,753 73
N. B.	$ 44,509 93	4,902	64,117 87
Alta.	46,094	5,210	66,979.91
B. C.	47,334.76	5,467	69,262.57
Man.	51,780.05	6,346	77,114.09
N. S.	54,388 45	6,858	81,719 21
Sask.	54,296.29	8,859	81,733 32
Que.	159,499.40	9,799[illegible]	271,069.93
Ont.	195,733.32	34,417	333,819.00

This is only one of the measures which the Borden Government proposid for the benefit of the farmers. Another was its famous Highways Bill which was so amended by the Senate that the Government felt unable to go on with it. This Bill intended to put at the disposal of the Provinces a large sum for the improvementt of their public roads. The sums which would have been paid to each Province this year, if the bill had carried, were as follows—

Novia Scotia	$171,447
New Brunswic	$122,544
Prince Edward Island	32,664
Quebec	697,414
Ontario	878,668
Manitoba	158,656
Saskatchewan	171,482
Alberta	130,472
British Columbia	136,675

It will be seen that the provision was to have been very generous But the Senatr blocked the way The Senate, by the way, does not boast a single working farmer among its members; and it never will—so long as the present system of appointment is kept up.

It has in the past been made a shelter for played-out politicians and a point of political vantage for the financial and commercial "kings" of the conntry

The sarmer and the workingman need not apply. Naturally the attitude of such a Chamber is none too friendly to Bills which propose to take money out of the Treasury and spend it on improvements which will chiefly benefit the farmer.

The worth of good roads to the farmers of Canada need not be dwelt upon.

It ss axiomatic. A good road shortens the distanee between the farm and the market--between the farm house and the store. It has precisely the same effect as if the farm had moved nearer to the town. Less time is wasted in covering the distance—the journey looks less formidable—there is less wear and tear on the vehicles and horses. Now, if the average farm were moved nearer to the county town, its value would go up; and this will be precisely the effect of improving the highway communication between the. But this gain in monea value and in ease of life was denied the Canadian farmers in every Province of Canada because the Senate stood in the way.

Naturally if a Government finds that taking an entilligent and practical interest in agriculture—to an extent never approached by any other Government—does not lead to political results, it may infer that the farmers are not affected by policies which make them richer. In this, they will be very different from the manufacturers. The Government has much yet to do for the farmers to be able to claim that their needs have been fully considered, but it is well perhaps not to forget that the partszan Senate has done much to discourage legislrtoon favorable to agriculture.

POLITICAL CORRUPTION ADMITTED IN M'DONALD

Manitoba Free Press, Nov. 10th.

In the M'Donald election case this morning counsel for the defendant, Alex Morrison, by a plea of guilty prevented the production of evidence in support of the petition filed last November against Morrison's return.

That petition charged the party organization supportin3 Morrison with:

Bribery.

Personation.

The illegal jailing of innocent parties

The intimidation of electors by a prostiiution of police powers.

Treating; and the improper and illegal use of liquor

The petition further charged the Manitoba government with being parties to the corruption and intimidation practised in M'Donald.

To forstall the bringing out in court of evidence supporting these charges, Alex. Morrison, through his legal agents admits that there was corruption on a sufficient scale to affect the result of the election.

As Mr. Morrison's majority was 784, his is an admission of widespread corruption in the constituency.

The action of Mr. Morrison is a confession of guilty to the charges set out in the election petition.

TWO MONTHS FOR CATTLE STEALING

Admitting that he took a heifer belonging to Edward Luptun and sold it to the P. Burns butcher store at Creston, but declaring that he did not know that it was not his own, on account of the brand having become overgrown with hair, Goat River David, an Indian, was sentenced to two months in jail by Judge Forin yesterday The Indian asked for a speedy trail and pleaded guilty. He told his story through J. A. Goodman, an educated Indian and son of the tribal chisf who rules over the Indians in Kootenay flats.

There will be Matins and Holy Communion in the church of England at 11 a.m. Sunday. Evensong at Erickson at 3p.m. and Evensong in Creston at 7 p.m, Rev. E. P. Flewelling officiating.

Two more cars of apples shipped Wednseday, this makes a round score of cars from the Creston Valley this season, and of course includes those shipped through Erickson.

We regret to say that our friend A. McL Fletcher has about wound up his official season with us. During the months that have passed he certainly has proven himself an able official as well as a staunch and kind friend to the rancher and grower of our district. Exceedingly courteous at all times and yet firm in the discharge of his duty he won the hearts of all and it is with sincere regret that we bid him good bye for the winter months, we hope and expect he will return to our district again next year.

Chief Constable Black carried on the inspection of the hotels in the district this week, returning to Nelson Thursday.

A large and enthusiastic meeting assembled in the Auditorium Wednesday in answer to the call of the officers of the Fall Fair. The representation of ladies was quite large.

W. V. Jackson occupied the chair and in opening spoke for a few minutes in congratulation and advanced a plea for continued cooperation, for harmony. He said there is not anything that we of this Valley may not do if we but stick together.

Secretary Heath had all the prizes in readiness and the business of their distribution was carried through with the minimum of effort, the audience applauding each recipient as he or she went forward to receive the coveted prize.

The beautiful cup donated by S. A. Speers was won by J. Cook who had the best five boxes of apples in the show and it is safe to say that there was not a prouder of happier couple than Mr. and Mrs. James Cook.

Those who failed to attend will receive their premiums by calling on Secretary Heath.

The question of an Agricultural Association came next. Resolved, that W. V. Jackson continue to occupy the chair and that J. Heath be Secretary.

Secretary read some sections of the Agricultural Association Act. Consideaable discussion followed and although the sentiment of the meeting was in favor of organization, there appeared to be opposition from a certain quarter, although largely on the ground that someone might have to dig up a few cents. The comprehensive nature of the Act seemed to be additional reason for the much-tooted legal authority to stumble.

The meeting appointed the following committee to go thoroughly into the matter and report as soon as possible to a public meeting to be called for that purpose. The committee is as follows: R. M. Reed, Capt. Fitzgerald, W. K. Brown, J. M. Dow, W. V. Jackson, F. Callender, and C. O Rodgers.

DUCK CREEK NEWS

I did not need to make the climaxes of my story. They lay before me.

At 11 o'clock Hunter called up. He said he was going after the affair himself, but that it was hard to stick a dipper into the political puddle without pulling out a lot more than you went after or than it was healthy to get. He wanted to know if I had come across any more K.V's. Whereupon I put away the notes I had made about Della and Mamie Brennan.

CHAPTER III

Ninety-eight Pearls

I went to Bellwood that evening. It was a suburban town a dozen miles from the city. Street cars had so far failed to spoil its tree bordered streets and it was exclusive to the point of stagnation. The Maitland place was at the head of the main street. Miss Letitia, who was seventy, had had sufficient commercial instinct some years before to cut her ancestral acres—their ancestral acres, though Miss Jane hardly counted—into building lots, except perhaps an acre which surrounded the house. Thus the Maitland ladies were reputed to be extremely wealthy. And as they never spent any money, no doubt they were.

I had taken dinner at Bellwood before, and the memory was not hilarious. Miss Letitia was deaf, but chose to ignore the fact. With superb indifference she would break into the conversation with some wholly alien remark that necessitated a reassembling of one's ideas, making the meal a series of mental gymnastics. Miss Jane, through long practice and because she only skimmed the surface of conversation, took her cerebral flights easily, but I am more unwieldly of mind.

Nor was Miss Letitia' dominance wholly conversational. Her sister Jane was her creature, alternately snubbed and fullied. To Miss Letitia, Jane, in spite of her sixty-five years, was still a child, and sometimes a bad one. Miss Leitian ond the resud purgated books to read and forbade her to read divorce court proceedings in the newspapers.

Poor Miss Jane. She met me with a fluttering cordiality in the hall that night, safe in being herself for once, with the knowledge that Miss Letitia always received me from a thronelike horsehair sofa in the back parlor. She wore a nice new lace cap and was twitteringly excited.

Our neice is here she explained as I took off my coat—everything was 'ours' with Jane; mine, with Letitia, and we are having an ice at dinner. Please say that ice are not injurious Mr. Knox. My sister is so opposed to them, and I had to beg for this.

On the contrary, the doctor have ordered ices for my young nephews, I said gravely, and I dote on them myself.

Miss Jane beamed. Indeed, there was something almost unnaturally gay about the little old lady all that evening.

Miss Letita received me as usual, in the back parlor. Miss Fleming was there also, sewing by a window, in her straight white dress, with her hair drawn back and braided around her head she looked even younger than before. There was no time for conversation, Miss Letitia launched at once into the extravagance of both molasses and butter on the colored orphans' bread.

You have had no news at all? Miss Fleming said cautiously, her head bent over her work.

None, I returned under cover of the table linen to which Miss Letitia's mind had veered. I have a good man working on it. As she glanced at me questioningly. It needed a detective, Miss Fleming. With every movement of the girl I could see the gleaming of a diamond on her engagement finger.

If I didn't watch her, Jane would ruin them, said Miss Letitia. She gives them apples when they keep their faces clean, and the bills for soap have gone up double. Soap once a day's enough for a colored child. Do you smell anything burning, Knox?

I sniffed and lied, whereupon Miss Letitia swept her black silk, her colored orphans and her majestic presence out of the room. As the door closed, Miss Fleming put down her sewing.

I do not dare to tell them, Mr. Knox, she said. They are old, and they hate him anyway. I couldn't sleep last night. I have hemmed ten towels for Aunt Letitia today until I am frantic, and all day I have been wondering over something you said yesterday. You said, you remember, that you were not a detective, that some men could take nineteen from thirty-five and leave nothing. What did you mean?

I was speechless for a moment.

The fact is—I—you see, I blundered, it was a—merely a figure of speech a—speech of figures is more accurate. And then dinner was announced.

Miss Letitia presided in garrulous majesty. The two old ladies picked at their food, and Miss Jane had a spot of pink in each withered cheek. Margery Fleming made a brave pretense, but left her plate almost untouched. As for me, I ate a substantial masculine meal and half apologized for my appetite, but Letitia did not hear. She tore the board of managers to shreds with the roast and denounced them with the salad.

Please to eat your dinner, Jane whispered. I made the salad myself. And I know what it takes to keep a big man going. Harry eats more than Letitia and I together. Doesn't he, Margery?

Harry? I asked.

Miss Jane leaned forward to me after looking at her neice.

Harry Wardrop, a cousin's son, and—she patted Margery's hand with its ring—soon to be something closer.

The girl's face colored, but she returned Miss Jane's gentle pressure.

They put up an iron fence, Miss Letitia reverted somberly to her grievance, when a wooden one would have done. It was extravagance, ruinous extravagance.

Harry stays with us when he is in Manchester, Miss Jane went on, nodding brightly across at Letitia, as if she, too, were damning the executive board. Lately he has been almost all the time in Plattsburg. He is secretary to Margery's father. It is a position of considerable responsibility, and we are very proud of him.

I had expected something of the sort, but the remainder of the meal had somehow lost its savor. There was a lull in the conversation while dessert was being brought in. Miss Fleming sat, one hand on the table, staring absently at her engagement ring.

You look like a fool in that cap, Jane, volunteered Letitia, while the plates were being brought in. What's for dessert?

Ice cream, called Miss Jane over the table.

Well, you needn't, snapped Letitia, I can hear you well enough. You told me it was junket.

I said ice cream, and you said it would be all right, poor Jane shrieked. If you drink a cup of hot water after it, it won't hurt you.

Fiddle, Letitia snapped unpleasantly. I am not going to freeze my stomach and then thaw it out like a drain pipe. Tell Hepple to put my ice cream on the stove.

So we waited until Miss Letitia's had been heated and was brought in, sickled over with pale hues, not of thought, but of confectioner's dyes. Miss Letitia ate it resignedly. Like as not I'll break out, I did the last time, she said gloomily. I only hope I don't break out in colors.

The meal was over finally, but if I had hoped for another word alone with Margery Fleming that evening, I was foredoomed to disappointment. Letitia sent the girl, not ungently, to bed and ordered Jane out of the room with a single curt gesture toward the door.

SALT RHEUM CAME OUT ON HANDS

Formed Watery Pimples. Itchy and Had Horrible Burning Sensation. Lost Some of Finger Nails. Could Not Open Hands. Cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

235 N. Lisgar St., Toronto, Ontario.—"For seven years I have been troubled with salt-rheum. It came out on my hands and formed kind of watery pimples all over them which became itchy and it had a horrible burning sensation which caused me a good deal of pain. It came out on my hands in the fall and remained there till after spring. I might mention that I lost some of my finger-nails by the disease. During this length of time I was utterly useless, as I could not open my hands. I tried several other patent measures without a bit of relief. Some of my friends advised me to try Cuticura Remedies so I sent for samples and by using them there was a great improvement. Then I went to the druggist and bought one cake of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment; after using them I am glad to say I am completely cured. I had given up all hope of being cured. I can say to all those who have suffered as I have, not to lose courage but to give Cuticura Remedies a fair trial." (Signed) Miss Lillian Irwin, Oct. 12, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have afforded the most economical treatment for affections of the skin and scalp that torture, itch, burn, scald and scarify. NOT WORTH CLIMBING

But Lady Marjorie Fielding is Proud of B.C. Ascent

Another chapter in the history of Vancouver Island closed recently with the return of the Earl of Denbigh and party from the Ptarmigay mine property on Bear Mountain, near Clayoquot Sound.

Sir James Sievewright, a colleague of Cecil Rhodes in the up building of South Africa, nearly met death by being suspended in mid-air over a precipice of over two hundred feet. Lady Marjorie Fielding, daughter of the Earl, placed a new peak on the map of the island by christening one of the minor peaks of the great interior dome by the name of Marjorie's Lode.

Lady Marjorie enjoys the glory of being the first woman to climb the great interior mountain, and it is not likely that her feat will be duplicated in a hurry, as all of the members of the party declare that, while the view from the top was incomparable, the travail of getting there was of too great effort to pay for it.

Street Car Gallantry

Here's a street car conversation that may or may not have a moral. It at least furnishes food for reflection. A friend of ours overheard it on a Euclid car.

Isn't it awful, said one fair strap hanger, to have to stand up all the way home after shopping till your feet are sore?

Yes, said the other pretty, fair strap hanger. And no chance for a seat.

Well, I don't blame the men sometimes. They say that a woman never says thank you, if they do give up their seats.

I always do. Wouldn't you say thank you if one of these gentlemen should give you his seat?

No; I don't think I would.

Why not?

I wouldn't be able to. I'd faint away.

It was at the dinner table, and the hostess addressed her husband's brother.

Do have another piece of pie, William.

Why, really, I've already had two; but it's so good, I believe I will have another.

Ha, ha! mother's a winner, said little Frank, excitedly. She said she'd bet you'd make a pig of yourself.

SUFFERED 20 YEARS

With Kidney Trouble. Cured by GIN PILLS

Mr. Daniel F. Fraser, of Bridgeville, N.S., says about GIN PILLS. "For twenty years, I have been troubled with Kidney and Bladder Disease, and have been treated by many doctors but found little relief. I had given up all hopes of getting cured when I tried GIN PILLS. Now, I can say with a happy heart, that I am cured after using only four boxes of GIN PILLS."

Dragon Club Leads Simple Life

The Dragon Club in London, with dinner for sixpence, has stirred many inquiries. It was a woman journalist who, at her last sixpence, offered to organize that Chelsea restaurant on cheap line and run it as a club. It was the superfluities that were cut off. The laundry bill—why should not you eat from a bare table that can be easily cleaned? The crockery business was run on careful lines. There is too much crockery for the simple life.

We eat off bare tables, writes the founder of the Dragon Club, and the food is dished in French fireproof bowls with lids to them, serving the double purpose, when necessary, of saucepan and plate. Our spoons are of horn and bone, to save labor in polishing silver, and our mugs are Doulton to save labor, and we wait on ourselves, also to save labor. The meal is substantial, and the hungry person can get it by joining the club and putting up his sixpences for tickets.

Not Very Nourishing

Doctor—For dinner you should take forty minutes.

Timid Patient—Would it be dangerous to add a bit of meat and some vegetables?

Little Bobby was told to sweep the sidewalk, and when he was doing so a friend came along.

Hello, Bobby, said the lady. Is your mother in.

Sure, she's in, answered Bobby. Do you think I'd be sweeping the sidewalk if she wasn't in?

RECEIVED

Old-Time Health, Eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had been sick for 10 years with dyspepsia and a lot of complications," wrote a Western woman.

"An operation was advised, change of climate was suggested, but no one seemed to know just what was the matter. I was in bed three days in the week and got so thin I weighed only 89 lbs. No food seemed to agree with me.

"I told my husband I was going to try some kind of predigested food to see if I could keep from this feeling of continued hunger.

"Grape-Nuts and cream was the food I got and nothing has seemed to satisfy me like it. I never feel hungry, but have a natural appetite. Have had no nervous spells since I began this food, and have taken no medicine.

"I have gained so much strength that I now do all my housework and feel well and strong. My weight has increased 5 lbs. in 2 weeks and I shall always eat Grape-Nuts as it is far pleasanter than taking medicines." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Ancient City Port Unearthed

The most important discovery at Pompeii for centuries is announced. It came through the efforts of Lorenzo Cozza, the sculptor of Rome, who has been carrying on the work begun by his father. He has just unearthed the first remains of the ancient city port situated 1,250 meters from the old city seashore now, and 700 meters from the old city gate. It was known as Porta Marina. The city of Pompeii itself is half a mile further inland than at the time of its destruction, the coast having been advanced.

Mr. Cozza worked on the theory of this displacement of the coast line and for years he has been experimenting on a prolongation of the street leading eastward from Porta Marina. Recently he came upon solid blocks of granite at a depth of 23 feet under successive layers of ashes, lava and sand. Excavations proved that he struck the original quay, whose stones still bear indentations caused by the action of the waves. Much new light will be thrown on the shipping customs of ancient Rome. Further important discoveries are awaited.

5 YEARS' RHEUMATISM REALLY CURED!

Your Case Isn't Likely to be Worse, and Can be Cured Quickly by Nerviline

"After being an enthusiastic user of Nerviline for years, I feel it my duty to tell you personally what your wonderful preparation has done for me.

"I suffered torture from rheumatism and heart trouble, tried scores of so-called remedies, consulted for weeks and months with Toronto's most eminent physicians, but derived only slight benefit.

"A friend insisted on my using Nerviline, and to my surprise a vigorous rubbing of this powerful liniment eased the pains and reduced the stiffness in my joints. I continued to use Nerviline and was permanently cured. I am now perfectly well, and for three years have had no rheumatism at all. I know many families where no other medicine but Nerviline is kept—it is so useful in minor ailments like earache, toothache, neuralgia, coughs, colds, lumbago, and sciatica. I call Nerviline my 'Life Guard,' and urge all to try its merit."

Dec. 17th, 113 Palmerston Avenue, Toronto.

(Signed) FLORA CHAPMAN.

It is almost criminal to keep on suffering when Nerviline can be had in any drug store. 50c. buys a large bottle, 25c. for the trial size. Prepared by The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

The Muzzled Wolves

The wolves were upon us, he related to the girl he was trying to impress. Their howling penetrated to our very marrow. We fled for our lives. But each second we knew that the ravenous pack was gaining on us. Closer and closer—at last they were so close that we could feel their muzzles against our legs so that—

Ah, sighed the lady, greatly relieved. How glad you must have been that they had their muzzles on!

Fair Warning

Thank you for warning me. I must get a filter.

Place of Desolation

The abomination of desolation is this lake, declares a traveler who has visited the island of Trinidad, whence comes most of our asphalt. In spots, a palm killed by the asphalt droops disconsolately. A few tufts of grass have secured a footing in places. But for the rest it is a solid mass of black, dull, evil-smelling pitch, with pools of water here and there in which swim little par-boiled fishes. Against any of the hot spots in the world, bar none, this can be backed.

A wicked looking black snake six feet long glides into the bushes near the margin of the lake. It has been sunning itself on the asphalt. No wonder the serpents are supposed to be creatures of the devil. As for ourself, 15 minutes stay takes away every bit of vitality we can summon. Not enough interest is left in life to inquire what the negroes hewing with mattocks at the asphalt receive in wages. They earn the pay, whatever it is.

There is no mechanical way yet discovered by which the stuff can be dug. Hour after hour these negroes hack the brittle pitch, which flakes away in pieces a foot square. They lift the burden to their heads and dump it into steel buckets, which start their slow way to the ship. The holes fill up in a few days with new pitch.

The lake is 90 to 100 acres in extent now, but it is gradually shrinking with the removal of such large quantities. A good percentage of the asphalt pavement in the world comes from this one lake and its geological compliment in Venezuela.

Salt Cellar Hoodoo

In some parts of the world, particularly in Germany, it is still believed that the upsetting of the salt cellar is the direct act of Satan—the peace disturber. And the habit of trying to avert any catastrophe which may happen by tossing a little of the salt over the shoulder is due to the belief that by so doing one hits the invisible Satan in the eye, which temporarily at least, prevents him doing further mischief.

Sirs,—I came across a bottle of your MINARD'S LINIMENT in the hands of one of the students at the University of Maryland, and he being so kind as to let me use it for a very bad sprain, which I obtained in training for foot races, and to say that it helped me would be putting it very mildly, and I therefore ask if you would let me know of one of your agents that is closest to Baltimore so that I may obtain some of it. Thanking you in advance I remain.

Temperance

Beginning with the first of 1914, Icelanders and tourists alike will have to quench their thirst with other than alcoholic drinks. Under the Anti-Spirit law, consumption of the present stock of liquors in Iceland, which will to a certainty be exhausted by January 1, was permitted.

Since Iceland began to deal with the liquor question in a drastic manner, her trade and industries have tremendously increased. In the past 20 years a great dairying trade has been built up and sheep raising and fishing have grown to enormous proportions.

It Will Cure a Cold.—Colds are commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflammation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflammation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

He was a young man—a candidate for an agricultural constituency—and he was sketching in glowing colors to the audience of rural voters the happy life the laborers would lead under an administratic for the propagation of sweetness and light. We have not yet three acres and a cow, but it will come. Old age pensions are still of the future, but they will come. Similarly every item of his comprehensive programme was indorsed by the same parrot cry. Then he went on to talk of prison reforms. I have not yet personally, he said, been inside a criminal lunatic asylum. Then there was a voice from the back of the hall: But it will come.

Owl Plays Piano

Hearing the notes of his piano struck, first up the keys and then down, Mr. Ernest Lommy, of St. Paul's road, Peterborough, England, peeped through the open door and discovered that the player was his pet owl. The owl would step on a key and then listen as if pleased with the sound. It tried another and another, and seemed highly pleased with the noise it was making.

Smoking Habit Increasing

Between 1903 and 1912 the number of cigarettes consumed yearly has leaped from 3 billion to 12 billion. During the same ten years the increase in the use of little cigars has been from 640 million to a little more than 1 billion a year, or about 65 per cent. Cigars themselves have passed the seven billion mark. But whereas, ten years ago, half as many cigarettes were smoked as cigars, now half as many cigars are smoked as cigarettes.

Sir Sanford A Pathfinder

The London Times continues a series of articles on representative Canadians and devotes a column to Sir Sanford Fleming, whose mind, it says is still vigorous and unclouded.

When he went to Canada at eighteen years of age, he sailed on a sailing ship which took forty days for the voyage. On landing at Quebec he had but two or three pieces of gold. He has since been a counsellor to the country's various governments, a pathfinder for the Government and devoted himself to problems of the Empire, but has seldom been involved in party conflicts. To his mind there is servitude in party allegiance.

Details of the work of settling the Maine boundary dispute were undertaken by him, as also were surveys for the C.P.R. construction in 1880 and 1883.

The writer says that Sir Sanford never evaded the obligations of citizenship and was not content with the perfunctory performance of duty. He is also referred to as having a gracious manner, fine courtesy and adequate dignity.

Benj. Franklin's House May Go

The quaint little house in Craven Street, London, where Benjamin Franklin lived in his more prosperous days, and from which he issued his delightful series of papers called 'Craven Stree. Gazette,' forms part of a block of property which have been purchased for the construction of a large hotel, and unless immediate steps are taken to save it, this historical building will be torn down. An appeal has been made to Americans to save the house and a proposal will be made to the hotel builders to include Franklin's rooms within the new building.

Mrs. Jordan had ideas on the way children should be reared. Her young hopeful, Tommy, caused her a little anxiety in this respect. Now and again, therefore, a serious politeness lecture was administered.

Now, Tommy, dear, she started, supposing you accidentally stepped upon a gentleman's foot, what would you say?

I would say: Beg your pardon.

That's my own little son! smiled the pleased mother. And if the gentleman gave you a penny for your politeness what would you do?

The innocent look passed from Tommy's eyes as he quickly answered:

Why, I would stand on the other foot and say: Beg pardon again, of course!

RUBBING IT IN

German Governor's Method of Handling Refractory Prisoner

Captain Amundsen in a lecture at Madison, Wis., told of the hardships, especially the hardships of hunger, attendant on arctic expeditions.

And it is an unfortunate fact, said the discoverer of the south pole, that hunger is always accompanied by a vivid remembrance of the most delectable food that one has ever eaten. While compelled to live for six months on one month's provision, helped out perhaps by a little salt meat and seal blubber, you are tormented by visions of former banquets Christmas dinners at home, certain favorite dishes. Yes, if you are hungry the thought of fine food is exquisite torture.

And in this connection, the captain continued, I am reminded of a story about the governor of a certain German prison.

One morning this governor said to the chief warder:

I say, Fritz, No. 76 is behaving worse than ever. Put him on bread and water.

But he is already doing two fast days, sir.

Then, ordered the merciless governor, give him a cookbook and see that he reads it.

Attacked by a Cheetah

A Dublin custom house officer named Graves, had an alarming experience recently. He was set upon in Rathmines, one of the suburbs, by the cheetah, an animal of the leopard type found in India and Africa, which had evidently escaped from its captors. He had his dog and a thick stick with him, and he succeeded in killing the animal. It was while walking near Grosvenor square about midnight that the strange-looking animal, somewhat larger than the Irish terrier, suddenly sprang at him out of a hedge near some gardens. With a hoarse bark it gripped his trouser leg near the knee, tearing the cloth. He shook the animal off, and a fierce struggle then took place between it and his dog. Seizing the dog's throat the cheetah dragged him towards the hedge but Graves caught the cheetah a heavy blow behind the ear with his stick, and killed it. The surmise is that the animal was brought from abroad by some resident with the object of making it a pet.

The Terrible Child

Here is one that was told by the public printer at Washington when those around him started to hand in kid stories:

The teacher in a public school was endeavoring to instruct a class of youngsters in natural history. Selecting the cat as the first subject she began to ask questions.

Can any little boy or girl, she queried, tell me what kind of clothes a pussy wears?

There was no response. The youngsters merely glanced at each other and at the floor, whereat the teacher made another attempt.

I am surprised, said she, that no one can tell me what a pussy wears. Does a pussy wear clothes like a human being? Does a pussy wear—

Say, Miss Mary, finally broke in little Jimmy Smith as a pitying expression floated over his features, hain't you never seen cat?

HAD ITCHING PILES FOR 27 YEARS

Often Laid Up for Days at a Time—A Wonderful Tribute to Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Few people were ever more enthusiastic in praising Dr. Chase's Ointment than the writer of this letter. When you read the description of his case you will not wonder why.

Mr. John Johnson, Coleman, Alta., writes: "Three years ago I was cured of blind, itching piles of 27 years' standing by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. I used to think that death would be the only relief I would ever get from the terrible misery of piles. Often I was laid up for three days at a time, and at other times worked when I should have been in bed.

"Dr. Chase's Ointment is worth sixty dollars a box instead of sixty cents. I am a different man since using it. I am farming all the time, and never miss a day. Words fail to express my gratitude for the cure this ointment made for me. I cannot tell half as much about it as it deserves. Anyone doubting this can write direct to me."

Exit the Postage Stamp

Is the postage stamp doomed?

It is if a postal innovation hailing from New Zealand, where it has been tried with great success, is generally adopted by the postal authorities of the world. In the future, instead of buying postage stamps, licking or otherwise moistening the gum on their backs and applying sufficient pressure to cause adherence, all we may need to do will be to put our letters under a machine and turn a crank.

The machine, which in New Zealand is rented from the postal authorities, records the amount stamped, just like a gas meter, and payment is made to a collector, who calls at intervals. It gives impressions of half penny, one, three and six pence and one shilling, and as each impression is made its value is automatically recorded on a set of dials at the top of the machine.

As a precaution against fraud, the machines are turned out from the workshops with only one means of opening them and that it is by patent lock, the key of which is handed to the postal authorities after the machine has been exhaustively tested. There are no screws that will give admission to the interior and therefore the mechanism cannot be tampered with. The greatest safeguard, however, lies in the fact that the labor of committing a fraud would be valueless.

UNEMPLOYED IN CANADA

It is stated that Canadian authorities in London are perturbed over the publication of articles in old country journals telling of a widespread dearth of employment in Canadian cities. One such article quoted from the London Chronicle states that there are now as many as two thousand unemployed in the city of Toronto.

Even should this statement be true, conditions are in no way alarming, and should not bother our London agents

Toronto is a city of nearly half a million people, and is called upon to absorb annually thousands of immigrants in addition to thousands coming from other parts of the Dominion. Under such circumstances it is not surprising that one out of every 250 persons may be seeking employment. With a heavy transient population it is really singular if the number of out-of-works does not exceed the estimates of the Chronicle.

The same facts apply to western Canadian cities, whose growth proportionately is swifter than that of the Queen City Until the immigrants to Canada bring a greater percentage of folks willing to go upon the land and indulge in farming conjestion will continue to grow in the cities and the lists of unemployed will not diminish.—Calgary Herald.

No right thinking Conservative anywhere will uphold the parties who have confessed to the reeking, political mess in the McDonald bye-election, in fact all decent men would like to see the perpetrators properly punished. It is such methods as these that canse the party to be put in the catagory of those whose ideals are wrong and practices shady and many a good Conservative today feels the blush of shame not that he is a member of the party but that such odium should be forced upon those whose aim and study in politics is to play fair and keep everything clean and moral. The methods which were practised in this particular case as outlined in the papers, are of a nature to suggest Siberia, and not our fair Canada, in the twentieth century.

Now if the party in Manitoba want to relieve themselves from the offensive mess they will have to repudiate absolutely, each and everyone connected with the rotten deal, no matter how high up he may be, or never again look the world in the face and call themselves fair. We are glad that as far as we are concerned, we are voicing the sentiments of the party and especially of our respected member when we say that the perpetrators ought to be severely punished irrespective of of who or what they may be, and the higher up the investigation goes the more severe the punishment. We are unjust to ourselves if we admit in the Conservative party what we decry in the Liberal party. Here's for clean politics.

The action of a Nelson judge in sending a cattle stealer to jail for two months, cannot surely appeal to fair-minded people here or anywhere else. The fact that the stealer is an Indian and a man who not only is alleged to have killed his own brother some years ago but who is accused of having stolen from his own people also, surely could not be presented as circumstances extenuating the occasion for the crime and yet that is about all that can be offered.

The little fallacy about the brand is too thin to hold water even in the intelligence of a judge. Any man must know that a man who owns cattle knows his own beasts without having to refer to the brand for verification, and if he did have to so refer then how can the keen eye of an Indian be deceived in the construction of letters inches in length. Another fact that was brought out in Mr. Geo. Johnson's evidence was that the Indians use an ear brand, so what would the Indian learn from the hide brand one way or the other. Again, if the Indian had a large herd it might be possible to mistake a stray beast for one of his, but as this particular Indian only owned a couple of head it is impossible to conceive of the transaction taking place under the guise of a mistake.

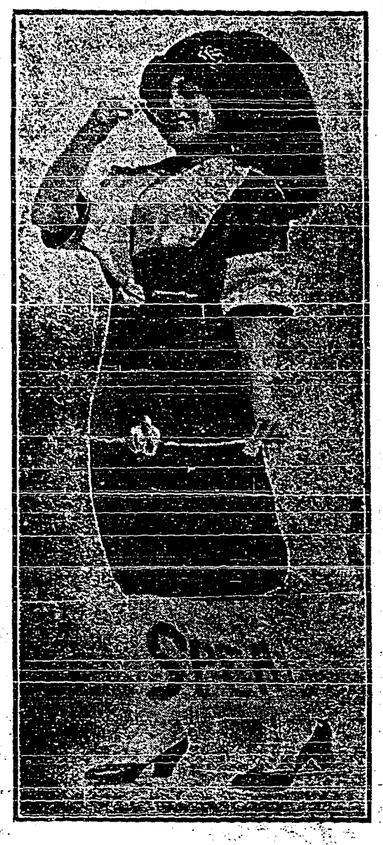
Surely if His Honor Judge Forin would take this view of the matter he could see that his philanthropic sense has been responsible, perhaps, for a judgement which, while it may avert any further difficulty with this particular case, does not look toward the protection of the white man, the man who pays the taxes, the man who is making the country habitable and who at all times is subjected to the petty annoyances and thieveries carried on by this very Indian and his associates. In any case the sentence, by all precedent, is out of proportion to the crime, and Creston Valley stock owners feel less protected than they ever did before.

CONSERVES THE WATER.

The Beaver is the Best Friend the Rancher Has.

Old ranchmen in the Northwest tell how the busy little dam-builder served as a conservationist in the pioneer days of the cattle trail. The beaver was, indeed, so highly esteemed that, it is said, no rancher would have hesitated to give the best steer in his herd to save the life of a single beaver.

Everybody knows that the beavers build dams. These they construct to provide against hunger in the winter when everything green that serves them as food has lost its sap and nutritious qualities. The beaver subsists on the bark of cottonwood and willow and other succulent barks, and to be of service to him as food these barks must be kept fresh and full of life.



ETHEL BARRYMORE
With the Maude Henderson Company
Now playing at Mercantile Hall

The beaver's instinct informs him that this can be done by keeping them submerged in water, and so he dams the shallow currents of streams so that the collected water above the dam will form a deep pool and overflow his store of shrubs and limbs, thus keeping them fresh and "sappy," they being driven into the soft bottom of the pond. The wise little creature is fully aware that he must anchor them there upright and keep them intact until they are needed for use in the colony's commissariat.

This remarkable instinct of the beaver interested the ranchmen, since water is a constant necessity on the cattle trails in the dry climate of the West. In the old days there were more beavers in the Northwest than anywhere else in the country. By building their dams wherever they might be they caused the water supply in that region to be hoarded as it could be in no other way, since in those days storage dams and irrigating operations had not been adopted.

The storing of the water by the beavers just suited the cattlemen, and so, while the other game and fur-bearing animals were being exterminated, the beaver was assured of the friendship and protection of the ranchmen so far as it was in their power to extend. The beavers seemed, indeed, to be aware of this fact, for in the range country they carried on their industrial operations fearlessly in close proximity to human inhabitations. Old ranchmen have watched colonies of beavers by the hour in their work of constructing dams. No person who has not enjoyed this sight can form any conception of the amazing genius for engineering that guides this animal in its toil.

In choosing a place for the building of a dam across a stream beavers first consider the condition of the current. If it is sluggish the dam will be thrown straight across from bank to bank. If the current be rapid the dam is built on a curve. A soft-bottom spot is always chosen. The timbers for the dam are cut by the beavers at some point up the stream, trees of the proper size and slender saplings being felled by them with the facility of an axeman, cut into the desired lengths, and floated down to the site of the dam by the members of the colony set to the accomplishment of that task.

The engineers and constructors take the timbers as they come down and utilize them without a moment's delay. A beaver is not able to stay under water for a period exceeding five minutes, yet an old and experienced dam-builder will seize a piece of timber that has been cut for the purpose, dive to the bottom with it, and by some skilful manipulation unknown to man fix it upright and solid on the muddy bottom in the few minutes he can work beneath the surface.

Ladies Attention!

Nothing Makes a Lady look so dressy As a Tailor-made Suit.

Alex. Smith

Artist in Ladies and Gents Attire
Stanley St. Nelson B. C

It is bad policy to keep cows of any but high quality. The law of selection needs to be kept in force. It costs no more to feed and handle an animal that yields five gallons of milk daily than one producing three gallons. It does not pay to keep cows that produce less than four gallons a day.

Ten or twelve cows are not too many for a farm of forty acres, and they will permit of many other interests that will distribute the labor evenly through the day. Operating in this way on a small farm there ought to be twenty-five hogs, 200 chickens and 100 ducks and geese to market every fall, in addition to 300 to 500 broilers, a considerable number of eggs and a miscellaneous lot of vegetables.

There is work enough for an average family on a very few acres where the intensive principle is followed. We need to diversify in order to distribute the work over a season.

For instance, an acre of strawberries an acre of cucumbers, two acres of potatoes, an acre of onions and ten acres of corn will make a profitable season's work for a family. The total is but fifteen acres, and it will take some hustling to handle these crops. Add ten acres of alfalfa for a dairy, send thirty or forty gallons of milk to market every day and the family will be kept busy from morning till night.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINIG REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-west Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Application for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal subdivisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked out by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands

USE THE AVAILABLE PLANT FOOD.

The fertility of the soil is not like a bank account, which is tangible, in sight, can always be drawn out at one or more times or at the will of the depositor, says the American Cultivator. The soil is an investment with many qualifying conditions—namely, available plant food, physical condition and moisture.

SEE THIS, TRUCK GROWERS!

Here's a Homemade Hand Cultivator That Does Excellent Work.

An excellent hand cultivator for a small truck patch that will do excellent work can be made at very little cost. Get a front wheel from an old ball bearing bicycle. Be sure you get the complete bearings, spindle and nuts. Take off the rubber tire. Get the following pieces of the lightest lumber possible, but be sure the wood is tough and straight grained; elm is good: Two pieces for A, ⅞ by 2 by 26 inches; two pieces for B, ⅞ by 2 by 48 inches; one piece for C, 1¼ by 3 by 22 inches.

Through the front end of the A pieces bore a hole of size to fit on the spindle. Shave the ends thin enough to take a washer inside and outside and leave room for the nuts. Bore a five-sixteenths inch hole two inches from the other end; also have the ends of the B pieces to fit against the outside of the A pieces two inches back of the bearing holes at E. With a little stove bolt fasten them there.

Shape the other ends like plow handles. Seven inches from the lower end of piece C bore a five-sixteenths inch hole and two inches from the top end a seven-eighths inch hole. Bolt the A pieces to C at D with a five-sixteenths inch bolt three and a half inches long. Cut a broom handle to eighteen inches long and slip it to the middle in the hole at top of C and fasten with small nails. Shave the ends to fit three-quarter inch holes. Make the angle of A and C at D about square. Bore three-quarter inch holes through the handle pieces B at the point where the broom handle will fit, drive the ends in and secure with small nails.

Mount the frame on the wheel. Use any small cultivator shoe or shovel. If the handles stand too high cut a little off the lower end of C and set the shoe higher.—Farm and Fireside.

VALUE OF SWEET CLOVER.

Stockmen Awakening to Use of the Formerly Despised Plant.

In Farm and Fireside there appears an article about "Sweet Clover," an extract from which follows:

Since colonial days there has grown along our roadsides a legume classed as weed by farmers, weed commissions and even experiment station officers.

Until late years the only steadfast friend of sweet clover has been the beeman, whose neighbors have in many cases uttered imprecations against him, accusing him of scattering the seed with malicious intent.

This antagonistic attitude is undergoing a change, and the agricultural press now contains many articles by stock growers who are loud in their praises of this "new discovery," which promises to make their poor lands a profitable stock range for horses, cattle and sheep.

Protein is the most expensive constituent of farm feeds. Comparative analyses of sweet clover, alfalfa, red clover, timothy and cowpeas showed that only the alfalfa and cowpeas excelled sweet clover in percentage of protein, the alfalfa by 1 per cent and the cowpeas by 3 per cent. Considered from the standpoint of digestible nutrients, we find the following comparative values for the different feeds:

	Per ton.
Sweet clover hay	$18.41
Alfalfa hay	20.16
Red clover hay	14.12
Timothy hay	9.55
Cowpea hay	19.78
Shelled corn	20.16

Alfalfa Fine For Hogs.

To determine the value of alfalfa forage for hogs with and without grain the Oklahoma experiment station placed pigs averaging about seventy-five pounds each in weight on an alfalfa field in April. At the end of a hundred days the average daily gain was twenty-six one hundredths pound per head when on alfalfa alone; on alfalfa and all the dry corn chop they would eat the gain was 1.28 pounds per head and day; on alfalfa and a half ration of corn chop the gain was seventeenths pound.

Value of the Wheel Hoe.

The wheel hoe, a light cultivator to be operated by man power, is regarded with amusement by many who raise acreage crops. They consider it a nice little plaything for the suburban resident and the boy with a garden. The wheel hoe has, however, undeveloped possibilities as a real farm tool. For instance, if one is kept near the kitchen garden somebody is likely to pick it up almost any night after supper and cultivate a dozen rows of vegetables. If the garden had to wait until a horse could be spared with a regular cultivator it might wait all summer. Truckers use the wheel hoe for intensive crops.—Country Gentleman.

CLUCK AND CROW.

Common road dust with a little powdered sulphur mixed in makes a good dust bath for fowls that are troubled with lice.

If good, clean, sound grain in abundance and variety, with pure water, grit oyster shell and meat in some form, will not produce eggs nothing else will.

Ducks are great feeders, and they are also great growers, so where does the loss come in? A few ducks will help to keep the income up to the required standard.

Every hen house should have two yards. When one is occupied the other should be sown to some forage crop. Swiss chard is best, but rape, turnips and clover are also good.

Fowl fanciers and experts in the bureau of animal industry, Washington, are experimenting with crossbreeding whereby the hen may grow feathers sufficiently variegated to be used in place of bird plumage for millinery.

Little turkeys are the most helpless of all poultry. They require great care during the first ten or fifteen days of their lives. They should not be fed until they are thirty-six hours old and then on well baked corn bread crumbs

Suspicious Character

Look out for the bachelor who doesn't tell you how you ought to train your boy. He probably has some ulterior motive.

A gentleman gave a large dinner party in Dublin once, and invited Mr. O'Connor, one of the wittiest men in the Emerald Isle to amuse and divert his guests. Mr. O'Connor accepted the invitation with pleasure. But from the beginning to the end of the dinner he preserved a solemn and serious face. The host thought this very strange, and just before rising from the table remarked to him jestingly: Why, O'Connor, old fellow, I don't believe the biggest fool in Ireland could make you laugh tonight. Whereupon his guest answered in a solemn tone, speaking his first word that evening: "Try.

Left Behind

The other morning a train ran into a junction rather behind its time, and the passengers who had to change and catch the corresponding train tumbled out of the carriages and made a dash for the opposite side of the platform.

An old gentleman in a second-class carriage, who had ruffled the feelings of his fellow-travellers by insisting on keeping his window shut, jumped up as the train entered the station, pushed by the others, and took his stand at the door so as to be out at the moment the train slackened sufficiently to enable him to alight with safety. He had got three parts across the platform when one of the passengers called out loudly to him:

The old fellow came rushing back in a state of wild anxiety. He was anxious not to leave anything in the one train and he was afraid of losing the other.

What—what is it? he gasped, peering into the carriage.

A very bad impression, said the facetious passenger, with the utmost gravity.

And at that moment both the trains moved off, and the old gentleman was left dancing about on the platform.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

He Knew

Dr. J. M. Buckley, the well known editor and divine, addressing a New York City Sunday school, related an incident that greatly interested the children. He told of meeting a ragged, hungry looking little girl in the street on a winter day, and when he questioned her she recited a pitiful tale of a sick mother and younger brothers and sisters without food. After giving her a silver dollar the good doctor followed at a safe distance to see what she would do with the money.

Now, children, what do you suppose was the first thing she bought with that dollar? said Dr. Buckley. Hands up.

Up went the hands, and one child after another ventured a guess, but none proved correct. Finally a little boy whose upraised hand alone remained was asked for his answer to the question.

A basket, he sing out.

Correct, said the doctor. There's a boy who thinks. Now, son, come up here on the platform and tell us why you think it was a basket.

After considerable coaxing the boy reached the platform, but seemed unwilling to talk. Go on, urged the doctor. I want these boys and girls to learn to think, too.

The boy hesitated, and Dr. Buckley took from his pocket a silver quarter. I'll give you this, he said, if you'll tell us what makes you think the little girl bought a basket first.

Because, stammered the youngster, at last moved by the sight of the money, I was over in Hoboken last Sunday and heard you tell the story there.

Both Ways

A white man during reconstruction times was arraigned before a colored justice of the peace for killing a man and stealing his mule. It was in Arkansas, near the Texas border, and there was some rivalry between the states, but the colored justice tried always to preserve an impartial frame of mind.

We got two kinds ob law in dis yere co't, he said, Texas law and Arkansas law. Which will you hab?

The prisoner thought a minute and then guess I that he would like the Arkansas law.

Den I discharge you fo' stealin' de mule and hang you fo' killin' de man.

Hold on a minute, judge, said the prisoner. Better make that Texas law.

All right. Den I fin' you for killin' de man an' hang you for stealing de mule.

Economy is not going without the thing we need when we have the money to buy it. Economy is not keeping a good thing on the top shelf and using a poor one because it will do. Economy is making the most of what we have, and getting things that will help us to do better as fast as we earn the money to buy them.

Pills That Have Benefited Thousands.—Known far and near as a sure remedy in the treatment of indigestion and all derangements of the stomach, liver and kidneys, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills have brought relief to thousands when other specifics have failed. Innumerable testimonials can be produced to establish the truth of this assertion. Once tried they will be found superior to all other pills in the treatment of the ailments for which they are prescribed.

Books and Bacon

A miner, who was proud of his boy's attainments at school, one evening picked up a home-lesson book and read from it a quotation which ran like this: Some books should be tasted and some swallowed, and some chewed and digested. — Bacon. Turning to his boy, he said.

What's this, sonnie? Thou doesn't eat books at school, does tha? I know you are very clever but you cannot do these nany-goat tricks. I'm sure. I'll warrant that'll be one of those printer's errors, sonnie.

Oh, no, father, said the boy. Metaphorically speaking, we eat books.

Now, you cannot diddle me like that said the father. I didn't go to school very long, but I ken that's one of those printer's errors. Why, sonnie, can thou not see? He's put the word Bacon in the wrong place. It should be Some books should be tasted, some swallowed, and some chewed and digested. —Books.

Savages of London [illegible] at Yale about a politician who, the day before he was to make a certain speech, sent a forty-one page report of it to all the papers. On page 20 appears this paragraph. But the hour grows late, and I must close. (No, no! Go on! Go on!)

How Monarchs Sleep

One might imagine that Shakespeare's words: Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," could be taken literally after noting the manner in which some of our most important sovereigns take their rest.

The Czar of Russia has a small plain bedroom, and reclines upon a bed of soldierly hardness.

Japan's ruler, the Mikado, evidently considers that what sufficies for his subjects is good enough for their Emperor, and sleeps on a rug with bamboo sticks for a pillow.

A camp-bed with the plainest accessories is the Kaiser's choice, and the Sovereigns of Italy and Austria sleep upon small iron beds.

It might be supposed that King George's naval career would have given him a predilection for the hard, plain mattress. But not so, both he and Queen Mary prefer to sleep in such quarters as one usually associates with Royalty. King Alfonso also follows in their wake.

Specimen of Rare Bird

The zoological division of the museum of the geological survey at Ottawa, has recently secured a specimen of an extremely rare bird.

This bird is called Corey's Least Bittern, and according to S. A. Forerer, who is in charge of the division only about 35 specimens have been captured. The one now at the museum was taken near Point Pelee, Essex County, Ontario.

A Fearful Revenge

The butcher was being continually robbed of meat by a large tom cat belonging to a next door neighbor. Finally his temper got the better of him and he poisoned the animal.

Next morning the owner of the cat found it lying stiff and stark before his door. He knew at once who had committed the dark deed, but without a word he took the dead cat indoors.

That night the shop was thronged with sausage buyers. Suddenly when the crowd was thickest, the outraged neighbor elbowed his way through the people and threw upon the chopping block the dead body of the huge black cat.

There you are, sir, he said. That makes thirty-five, I'll bring the fifteen others when you're not so busy

A SAFE TONIC FOR MOTHERS

Who Do Not Recover Their Strength as They Should

Every mother who fails to regain her health and strength after confinement needs a tonic. The years of weakness and suffering which so often follow are unnecessary and easily avoided. The fact that her strength does not return is a certain indication that her blood supply has been overtaxed and is impoverished. This condition is often made worse when the mother takes up her household duties while she is still weak, when a complete breakdown results. The strength a weak mother needs can be quickly found in the tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills increase and enrich the blood supply, and thus bring health and strength to the exhausted system. Mrs. Robt. Little says: "I have nursed for upwards of twenty-five years, and I could relate many cases, relieved and cured, through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In maternity cases which I nurse I always use them and I know of no other medicine that so speedily builds up the mother at this critical time. I have also found them of great value in the case of young girls, and I can add that as for myself they have saved me many a doctor's bill. I feel safe in saying they are the best tonic medicine I know of."

Nursing mothers will find Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will give her just the aid she needs and they will at the same time aid in keeping her child healthy. If you do not find these Pills at your dealer's they will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A BOUQUET OF FLOWERS

It Told a Story Without Words

By EMILY WESTBROOK

Mrs. Van Tromp of New York was a globe trotter. She was a widow with one daughter, Madeline, who was obliged to trot with her mother, but would rather have remained at home, for Miss Madeline was a sensible girl and, although not averse to seeing foreign lands, was not minded to spend her life in circling the world.

In their wanderings the Van Tromps found themselves in Bombay, India, having done that country so far as women tourists could. Mrs. Van Tromp was much impressed with the display of wealth of the rulers and especially the jewels with which they decorated themselves, for ornaments are dear to the feminine heart. It is quite likely that if a rajah, covered from his waist up with gems, had asked for the hand of her daughter she would have given her consent instanter.

But a globe trotter cannot remain in one place or the term would be a misnomer. The Van Tromps left the city of Bombay to sail across the Arabian sea and pass through the Red and Mediterranean seas to London. Such a journey in a single vessel requires a great deal of time, and those cooped up together in her are apt before the end to become pretty well acquainted.

Mrs. Van Tromp was sitting one day on deck in a steamer chair reading an erotic novel when the wind blew her veil off her head and sent it sailing astern. It was picked up by a gentleman with a tawny, drooping mustache, who handed it to her with a profound bow. He was so distinguished looking that instead of giving him the conventional thanks that she would have accorded an ordinary person she bestowed them with her most charming smile. The gentleman assured her that she was welcome and further remarked that since the day was a trifle windy perhaps he had better find a more protected spot for her. She accepted the offer, and the gentleman removed her chair and rugs to the lee side of the wireless telegraph office, where she was more comfortable.

Now, Mrs. Van Tromp was a woman of fifty, while the gentleman could not have been much over thirty. There was therefore no impropriety in her entering into conversation with him about the weather, the ennui occasioned by so long a confinement within such narrow limits, and other small talk incidental to shipboard. The gentleman spoke with an English accent such as Mrs. Van Tromp had heard among certain swell acquaintances she had made in London. While they were chatting Miss Madeline came up breasting the wind and joined her mother.

"My daughter, Mr. ——," said Mrs. Van Tromp by way of introduction, stopping for her new found friend to supply the deficiency of his name.

"Mackridge."

"Mr. Mackridge has been kind enough to keep my veil from going overboard and to move my chair out of the wind."

The gentleman bowed, and Miss Van Tromp inclined her head in recognition. He provided her with a chair that stood near and received an invitation from her mother to occupy one himself in their company.

This was the beginning of one of those tourist acquaintances that, informally made, often ripen into strong friendships. Mr. Mackridge was especially attentive to Mrs. Van Tromp, who was especially gratified at being an object of consideration from one so much younger than herself, and she regarded it a proof that he had been brought up by some aristocratic family who had not broken away from the tradition of respect for age. This view was confirmed by Mr. Mackridge himself, who when accused of it confessed it, stating that he was the next younger brother of the Marquis of Gollingay, one of the oldest families in Ireland. He furthermore let it be known that the marquis was a bachelor and in ill health.

This was quite enough to induce Mrs. Van Tromp to lay plans for a union between Mr. Mackridge and her daughter. The mother cast off her regret that she couldn't marry Madeline to a rajah and became interested in the more practicable scheme of marrying her to a man who was likely to become a marquis. The first time after having received this information that Mr. Mackridge joined her and her daughter on deck she made an excuse to go below in order to leave them together.

Miss Van Tromp had become such a traveler that she was not averse to picking up acquaintances during a voyage, but she seldom became familiar with them. Mr. Mackridge evinced a desire for her companionship, but found as the journey proceeded that he was not permitted to come to terms of intimacy. Mrs. Van Tromp watched his attentions to her daughter and could not understand why Madeline gave no more cordial response.

"My dear," said the politic mother, "if you would be more civil to Mr. Mackridge it might be of great benefit to us. He tells me that his brother has a house in London and is usually there during the season. We may be invited there and meet many persons of rank."

"I thought his brother was a bachelor. Bachelors don't usually entertain."

"Oh, Madeline, you don't grasp things as you should. You will never take the position you should because you have no push. The fact that Mr. Mackridge's brother is a bachelor should lead you all the more to cultivate him."

"I have thought, mother, dear, that you preferred I should cultivate Mr. Mackridge himself."

Mrs. Van Tromp made a grimace, but accorded no reply to such stupidity, for she certainly considered any girl stupid who would encourage a younger brother of a marquis, even though the marquis himself was in bad health.

During the passage of the Red sea Mr. Mackridge continued his attentions, and Mrs. Van Tromp was pleased that Madeline seemed more disposed to accept them. This acceptance could not be construed to mean encouragement, but Mrs. Van Tromp felt more hopeful, and Mr. Mackridge took advantage of it to be more attentive. He gained a point with Mrs. Van Tromp by letting out the fact that he was a captain in a British regiment stationed in India, all the officers of which were noblemen. He had procured a leave of absence to go home, having been informed that his brother, the marquis, was failing rapidly.

After receiving this additional information Mrs. Van Tromp conceived the idea of going ashore in Captain Mackridge's company on the ship's arrival at Gibraltar. He, being a British officer, would doubtless be hand in glove with the officers of the garrison and would be able to secure for the Van Tromps special privileges. She hinted to Mackridge that she would be pleased to have him with her and her daughter when they visited Gibraltar, and he accepted the invitation with alacrity. But when they reached the port the captain was confined to his stateroom with a severe indisposition and was unable to leave the ship.

All went well with the trio who were performing this little comedy during the latter part of the voyage. Just before leaving the steamer Captain Mackridge managed to obtain a large bouquet of flowers. Whether he bought them from a bumboat or they had been cultivated aboard the ship does not matter. The important feature is that he presented them to Miss Van Tromp The gift was made while the mother and daughter, accompanied by the captain, were about to pass down the gangway. The young lady inhaled their perfume and started down for the dock with them in her left hand, carrying a piece of hand baggage in her right. On reaching the dock she suddenly remembered leaving some article in her stateroom.

"Please take these," she said to Mackridge, handing him the hand baggage and her bouquet, "and keep them till I return. I'll be back in a few minutes."

Mackridge took the articles, a certain whiteness appearing about his mouth and an anxiety in his eyes as he did so. Miss Van Tromp ran up the gangway, passing with difficulty those coming down, and disappeared within the ship. A customs inspector, who was watching for smugglers, noticed a gentleman standing with a large bouquet in his hand and pondered. Had a lady been carrying it his attention might not have been attracted. Suspicious as all custom house officials are, he thought it odd that a man should be carrying flowers, and possibly it might be used as a means of concealing dutiable goods.

"I'll look into that, sir, if you please," he said to Mackridge.

The whiteness about the latter's mouth turned to a sickly pallor as the inspector took the bouquet from his hands. Pulling it apart, several articles wrapped in white tissue paper fell on the dock. The inspector picked them up, unwrapped one and a large diamond glistened in the sunlight.

When Madeline Van Tromp rejoined her mother she found her alone.

"Where's Captain Mackridge?" she asked.

"Gone under arrest for smuggling." And she recounted the discovery of the jewels.

"And all he wanted of me," said Madeline, "was to carry the bouquet ashore for him. I suspected something of the kind and turned it back into his hands on purpose."

IN THE WHITE COAT.

Cricket Umpires and Some Curious Decisions They Have Made.

An umpire in a cricket match has not unusually a very exciting time. But there have been occasions when things have happened even to this impassive and phlegmatic individual.

On one occasion an umpire shared the common fate of the stumps, and was bowled clean off his pins by a ball which took him in the small of the back. It was a leg hit of terrific force, and the umpire, seeing it coming, turned round, thinking a smack in the back preferable to one in another place.

But not only did the ball knock the great man down but it rebounded into the wicketkeeper's hand, and when the umpire had regained his breath and legs he promptly gave the offending batsman "Out."

The Land of the Midnight Sun ought to be an ideal venue for cricket matches seeing that the day is twenty-four hours long, and seeing there is no real necessity, except death from over exertion of the fielding side, to draw stumps at all. There is a story told of a match in Lapland which excited the natives so much that they organized a return match to start at one o'clock—the first hour after midnight. The gentleman visitor, who tells the story, officiated as umpire, clad in his nightshirt and standing at his bedroom window!

Probably the most remarkable decision on record was in this wise. The batsman had had a box of matches—evidently not cricket matches—in his pocket and the ball ignited the whole contraption. As the match quickly reached "the quick," the batsman began to tear at his clothes and pads like a maniac. and, of course, got out of his ground.

The ball had gone to short-slip who shied the wicket down and claimed a "run out" before he realized the perilous state of the batsman. However, the umpire, seeing smoke issuing from the batsman's lower extremities luckily put short-slip "wise." "Carn't give 'im howt, sir. The gent's afire!" were his words.

Some young players in one of the parks, being hard-up for an umpire, roped in a spectator who happened to be a Hibernian. In the first over leg-before appeal was made to the Celt. "How's that?" said the bowler. "How's that yersilf," said the umpire. "Just plaze yersilf, me bhoy, how it is; ye know a fine dale moor about it than I do."

Probably the most amazing decision ever given by an umpire, who was really supposed to know something of the game occurred in a village match some time ago. After a single run had been scored by the players, who then made no attempt to run again, the umpire loudly shouted, "Short run!"

The verdict was hailed with a perfect tornado of laughter. But the umpire did not seem to realize that only a second or subsequent run could be short.

In an up-country match in Australia, a ball hit the balls and smashed them, so a piece of wattle, undivided in the middle, was laid across the top of the stumps. With his next ball the bowler sent the middle stump flying and tumbling twenty yards.

But the wattle, reclining peacefully on the leg and off stumps, was undisturbed. The umpire gave the batsman "Not out!"

Thor's Hammer Still Used.

The fishermen of Whitby (Eng.) would never dream of venturing out of port without a little hammer-shaped bone, from the head of a sheep, known as "Thor's hammer," as this little object is a very special charm against drowning. The mole's foot is also a "sure" cure for toothache or cramp—according to locality. Amputated limbs are in some cases preserved so that the cripple may not be deficient in this respect in the next world.

At Scarborough an old peasant has come to be regarded as almost a wizard, for the country folks from round about come to him for relief from rheumatism. His "cure" consists of a copper bangle and ring, and on either end of the bangle two small-bore brass cartridge cases are wedged. These charms are sold to the patient.

In Suffolk a girl always keeps her first tooth; then when she marries and has a child the tooth is suspended about the infant's neck during teething, as it is said to bring instant relief.

These superstitions mostly exist in the counties which are washed by the North Sea. Doubtless they are survivals of the days of the bold Viking marauders.—Ireland's Own.

Smoking In Commons.

Smoking during Parliamentary proceedings is the latest precedent set up in the House of Commons. The other day, in the Scottish Grand Committee, which was considering an important bill, a member was seen lounging at his ease, a pipe between his lips. A colleague drew attention to the "offence" on a point of order; but the chairman, Mr. Arthur Henderson, promptly replied that the objection was not sustained. Thereupon a dozen members or more produced their pipes and lit up. This is the first time smoking has been permitted during Parliamentary proceedings.

Car Ferries on Irish Sea.

Car ferries are familiar modes of freight transportation across water barriers in this country, but have not been much exploited in Europe. The most notable example, perhaps, has been that which connects Germany and Sweden. The latest development of the idea is an important scheme, recently begun, for ferries from Ireland to Scotland and England, one to convey railroad freight cars from Larne, Antrim, to Stranraer; the other, connecting Dublin and Holyhead, Wales. The latter will be about the same distance as the German-Sweden line but will be through rougher waters.

All Got Something

At a novel "pet party" at Marlow prizes were given by vote for the prettiest, ugliest, largest, smallest, fattest, oddest, and most gentle "pet" present.

A FIGHTING RACE.

Why Britain Left the Interior of Somaliland.

Somaliland, the scene of this severe reverse, is an arid waste divided up between Great Britain, Italy, France, and Abyssinia. The present Somali peoples are possessed of no general type and their physical characteristics vary considerably, showing signs of interbreeding with Arabs, Abyssinians and negroes. They are a race of magnificent physique, tall, active, and robust. Negro blood is shown in their frequently black complexions and wooly hair. The Somali are a fighting race. All go armed with spear, shield, and short sword, as well as a gun, when it is obtainable. During the rains incessant intertribal lootings of cattle take place. Among certain tribes those who have killed a man have the right to wear an ostrich feather in their hair. Somaliland was one of the last tracts of Africa to be explored by Europeans. The occupation of Aden by the British in 1809 proved the starting point in the opening up of the country, Aden being the chief port with which the Somali of the opposite coast traded. The British Somaliland Protectorate extends along the Gulf of Aden for about 400 miles, and stretches inland to a breadth varying from 80 to 200 miles. About 50,000 people are settled in the coast towns; the rest are nomads, who are almost constantly giving trouble. The British connection with the Somali coast dates from the early years of the last century, but British authority was not definitely established, and in 1854 Richard Burton's expedition was attacked at Berbera. In 1874 the ambition of Ismail Pasha, Khedive of Egypt, led him to occupy the posts of Tajura, Berbera and Bulhar, as well as Harrar in the hinterland. Ten years later, in consequence of the revolt of the Mahdi in the Egyptian Soudan the Khedivial garrisons were withdrawn. Thereupon, Great Britain, partly to secure the route to the East via the Suez Canal, occupied Zaila, Berbera and Bulhar, officials being sent from Aden to govern the posts. Treaties guaranteeing British protection were concluded with various Somali tribes, and the boundaries of the protectorate were defined by agreements with France, Italy, and Abyssinia. In 1899 Mohammed bin Abdullah, popularly known as the Mad Mullah, first came upon the scene. He had made several pilgrimages to Mecca, where he had attached himself to a sect which enjoined strict observance of the tenets of Islam, and placed an interdict on the use of the leaves of the kat plant, much sought after by the coast Arabs and Somali for their stimulating and intoxicating properties. At first the Mullah's influence was exerted for good, and he kept the tribes over whom he had control at peace. Accredited with the possession of supernatural powers, he gathered around him a strong following. In the next few years Britain suffered several disastrous reverses and during the first months of 1910 the advanced posts were withdrawn and the British administration confined to the coast towns. In support of this decision it was urged that it was no good pursuing people whom it was impossible to catch, that the isolated posts in the interior had not been able to protect the friendly tribes, and that the semi-desert nature of the country did not justify any attempt at economic development. Before the withdrawal arrangements were made for arming and organizing the tribes in the Protectorate in their own defence.

Free Emigration For Widows.

By October twenty widows with one child each are required to sail for New South Wales to take up domestic work, the money for the journey being advanced by a practical Imperialist who desires to remain anonymous.

The step is regarded as an experiment in assisting a new type of emigrant. Applicants for free passages must not be more than thirty-five years of age, must produce their husbands' death certificates, and must, of course, be healthy and of exemplary character.

The result of this offer will be that a brighter future will present itself to many widows who have hitherto struggled against adversity, and it is specially intended to help those who have thereby become brave and more self-reliant. The successful applicants will be required to give a guarantee to take up domestic work, probably in the Bush, where it is easier to find accommodation for a child.

Queen Victoria In Movies.

The life of the late Queen Victoria in moving pictures is now in preparation by one of the leading firms in the cinematograph business. After five months of preliminary work in studying historical authorities, producers are now ready to photograph scenes from the 64 years reign of Queen Victoria at a cost of $25,000.

Three actresses will appear as the Queen at different stages of her life. The incidents depicted will include the first council of her Ministers a few hours after her accession, her coronation, her reception of the explorer, David Livingstone, and the marriage of the Prince of Wales, afterward King Edward VII. Then come pictures representing her audiences with the Duke of Wellington, Lord Melbourne, Gladstone, Disraeli and John Bright. Other scenes show her opening Parliament and quietly driving in the Highlands and elsewhere.

A Tiny Printer.

Believed to be the smallest compositor in the world, Mr. Lewis Spooner is engaged at printing works at Tiptree, Essex, Eng. He is thirty-nine years old, stands three feet nine inches, and weighs 53 pounds. He stands on a stool to reach the typecase.

Paper From Seaweed.

Seaweed paper has been invented by an English chemist. A Liverpool newspaper clipping forwarded by Consul Washington states that it is fireproof, waterproof and odorless, and is expected to "have considerable effect on the present system of wrapping perishable goods for transport."

WHY SCOTSMEN SUCCEED.

England's Inferior Education Is Alleged as a Reason.

Harold Spender, in a recent London News says:

The vivid pen picture of English private schools given to the House of Commons by the Minister of Education have come as a shock. Dotheboy Hall, it seems, still flourishes in our midst, and the work of Dickens requires to be done over again.

Matthew Arnold pointed this out with all his power a generation ago, and the story has been since repeated by many brilliant writers and critics. But the English people are deaf, and in hundreds of cases parents prefer to send their children to these schools even when there are the very best free public schools round the corner. Bad education seems somehow always to consort with "gentility."

But now certain remarkable signs are appearing. The boys from the council schools, profiting by a thorough training at the most impressionable years, are invading our secondary schools and universities, and compelling the middle classes to look the facts in the face. The other day ten council school boys appeared as wranglers at Cambridge. I am informed that in many of the secondary schools of the L.C.C. winners of scholarships often rapidly take the lead of the middle-class children.

At the universities the public schools still keep an iron hand over the sports, but in matters of education they are often beaten by boys from the grammar schools and the council schools. It is clear that a great crisis in education is approaching. The middle-class parent will have to wake up if he and his offspring are to avoid defeat in the struggle. A national comparison reveals the same facts. In secondary education England is far behind both Scotland and Wales. The higher education of Scotland, stimulated by the great boon of the Carnegie Trust, is moving steadily forward both in the schools and in the universities.

The result is seen by the fact that the unhappy English boy, though born of a stock certainly not less gifted, is too often beaten by the Scots boy in the competition for all the higher offices and posts, both of learning and business. The attitude of the middle class in England is, indeed, one that exceeds onder. They pay the education rate, but in nine cases out of ten they refuse to avail themselves of it. They actually pay in order that their children should receive a far worse education than the working classes receive without paying another penny.

Exhausted with the expense of paying for bad schooling they often find themselves, at the critical moment, unable to start their children in life. Thus they lose the one great financial handicap that they have over their working-class competitors. Meanwhile, these parents are too often unnecessarily obsessed with the middle-class habit of sending their children away from home—a habit produced by the lack of good secondary schools evenly distributed throughout the country. By sending their children away they lose control over their lives and they sacrifice all influence over their characters.

And then they are surprised to find that at the age when life is opening to their children they have lost all parental control, and have not even obtained any superior educational value.

Compulsory Massage Licenses.

Steps are to be taken at once by the London County Council to formulate proposals for inclusion in their General Powers Bill next year to license massage establishments and maternity homes. Powers of registration, with the right of inspection, may be included in the bill, which will be designed to stamp out so-called massage, manicure, and electric light treatment houses.

Asked to explain the position, the chairman of the public control committee of the council, said: "There is no doubt that the evil is growing, and the police have no power to enter the houses. It is also almost impossible to obtain warrants for the arrest of those who conduct them, because informants will not come forward.

"We shall submit proposals for inclusion in next year's General Powers Bill. The police are giving us every facility in our inquiries, and I hope we shall obtain power to register such establishments, which will involve the right of inspection by council officers. If they are not satisfied the places will be struck off the register.

"There are many places which conduct a perfectly legitimate business, and these will welcome registration."

Condemned Modern Dances.

Canon Newbolt, preaching in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, recently, strongly condemned the modern dances and those novels of the present day which, in the nauseous unreserve of the society novel, dealt with sex problems.

Such dances and such books, the preacher said, flourished because society persuaded itself that immodesty is artistic, and that anything is permissible which removes monotony. He asked, "Would an indecent dance, suggestive of evil and destructive of modest., disgrace our civilization for a moment if professed Christians were to say, 'I will not allow my daughter to turn into a Salome, even although Herod were to give me half his kingdom?'"

Britain Still Leads.

The number of vessels launched throughout the world during 1913 was 3,630, distributed as follows:—United Kingdom, 1,273; dominions, 208; foreign, 2,049. The Clyde still maintains its place as the leading shipbuilding centre of the world with a record of 389 vessels, a total tonnage of 640,529, and indicated horse-power of 878,326.

The Meanest Will.

Probably the meanest will on record was that of an Englishman who left to his wife the sum of half a cent or one farthing, with the direction that it should be sent to her by post in an unstamped envelope.

HERE AND HEREAFTER

SIR OLIVER LODGE ANNOUNCES CERTAINTY OF IMMORTALITY.

Celebrated British Scientist After Applying the Most Rigid Tests to Spiritistic Phenomena For Many Years Has Arrived at the Conclusion That Their Reality Is Beyond Question.

It will be remembered that W. T. Stead, heroic victim of the Titanic disaster, welcome acquaintance of Kings and Emperors and others in the seats of the mighty, and probably the most noted journalist in the world, was a firm believer in psychic communication with the world of the hereafter. When preparing to face death, he reiterated that belief and spoke of joining his previously deceased son, from whom he had stated, verbally and in carefully prepared printed volumes, he had received numerous messages from the spirit world through the medium of an inhabitant of that region whom he knew as "Julia."

Science has now taken a decided hand in this problem, debated and debateable from the beginning of sentient existence, in a recent statement of the famous Englishman, Sir Oliver Lodge, admittedly the best all-round scientist in the world at the present time. He is president of the British Association, the most authoritative scientific body on earth, and he has announced that in his presidential address on September 10, he will offer complete evidence to show "an ultimate continuity of existence before and after death as essential to science," which, if accepted, will be a distinct alignment of the most advanced scientific thought on the side of immortality. Sir Oliver already has asserted that "the boundary between the two states—the known and the unknown, life and death — is wearing thin in places, and excavators are engaged in boring a tunnel from opposite ends. We are beginning to hear now and then strokes from the pickaxes of our comrades on the other side."

Sir Oliver Lodge has been a close and skeptical student of psychical phenomena for many years, and after long and patient observance of the famous Italian psychic, Eusapia Palladino, was forced to admit that "any person without invincible prejudice, who had the same experiences, would come to the same broad conclusion, namely, that things heretofore held impossible do actually occur. . . The result of my experience is to convince me that certain phenomena considered supernatural do belong to the order of nature."

It is evident that the world is soon to witness the promulgation of another accession to the natural laws which govern its place in the universe, and one likely to arouse spirited religious and scientific discussion.

To Make Coal Mining Safe.

One of the simplest of the many suggested tests for fire-damp in mines is that described by Henry Briggs to the Scottish Society of Arts. It is an attachment that may be applied to any oil or spirit safety lamp, and consists of a loop of copper wire supported on a brass rod passing through the oil vessel. To make a test the loop is moved into the flame. This becomes instantly non-luminous, but if fire-damp is present in the air the gas-cap is clearly seen. The test can be made in a moment at any time, without turning down or putting out the light.

It is claimed that the percentage of fire-damp this method will detect is exceedingly small, and the results of trials on both laboratory and mine go to show that this is one of the most sensitive, accurate, and expeditious means of revealing the presence of inflammable gas in mine or other air. —Bolton Journal.

Lodgers Went by Numbers.

In the course of an inquest at Southwark, Eng., recently the deputy of a common lodging-house in Bermondsey said he provided accommodation for 503 lodgers, most of whom were known by numbers. Many of them had fancy names. A juryman explained that habitues of common lodging-houses could "job along" very well on a few shillings a week. A man could get a mutton chop for 2 1-2d., 2 lbs. of potatoes for 1d., and a pennyworth of potherbs, which would make a fine stew. (Laughter.)

Trying To Dodge a Curse.

In the Bodleian Library at Oxford, says Prof. Thayer, an old manuscript contains this warning: "This book belongs to St. Mary of Roberts Bridge; whosoever shall steal it, or cell it, or in any way alienate it from this house, let him be excommunicated." [illegible] later owner has written: "I, John, Bishop of Exeter, know not where the aforesaid house is, nor did I steal this book, but acquired it in a lawful way."

GREEN TOMATOES SWEET PICKLES

The following receipe togerher with a sample of the finished product was handed to the editor by a subscriber. After sampling the pickles the editor says he can recommend them to the world.

1 pk. medium sized tomatoes, 6 lbs. brown sugar, 1 oz. Cinnamon, 1 oz. of mace. Mix spice and put into bags. 2 oz. whole cloves stuck into tomatoes. Put sugar and spice into vinegar enough to cover and bring to boil, put in tomatoes and cook until a straw will pierce. Take out tomatoes and boil syup until as thick as molasses, then put tomatoes back again and boil a few minutes longer. Put into jars. Will keep indefinitely and can scarcely be distinguished from pears.

Ripe ones put up after the same receipt are delicious.

ANNIVERSARY AND SACRED CONCERT

On sunday and Monday the Methodist church celebrated the seventh anniversary of the organization of the church, with special services and a sacred concert. Rev. W. E. Dunham, of Cranbrook, preached at both services on Sunday. On Monday evening the church was packed and the choir, with the assistance of one or two local singers, rendered a varied program. Mr. Dunham made a shortaddress and the pastor also spoke for a fewminutes. The piano for the occasion was loaned by Rev. F. L. Carpenter.

Ashley Cooper Esq.
Wyndel, B. C.

Dear Mr. Cooper,

I beg to acknowledge recespt of yours of 24th. Ulto. I really thought the Creston Fair first class and never in all my life saw better fruit. I was not the only visitor there who so considered it, either, as Oscar Appleton, who was the judge, told me the same thing You most certainly have Demonstrated that you can grow the fruit there and all that now rmains to guarantee your success is the packing and marketing. Knowing how to do this, is what has made the Yaksma Valley a success to all honest growers, and as you grow BETTER fruit than they do, you there have the ball at your feet; all you have to do is work out your problem yourselves with what aid the Government gives you. With kindest regards.

Yours sincerely,

J. H SCHOFIELD.

MAUDE HENDERSON CO. SCORES BIG HIT

Creston people are being favored with the presence of the Maude Henderson Company, one of those happy combinations of talent that one meets occasionally, and which always makes friends, not only for the company but for all the characters that they represent.

They opened Wednesday and on account of the big public meeting did not meet with a very big house, but the play was a winner and when the curtain went up Thursday evening for the firrst act of Mrs. Jones of Broadway, the house was comfortably filled. The play was a scream throughout and the specialties were exceptionally well presented.

Tonight they play "No Mother to Guide Her," a western play, and Saturday night "The Final Settlement," they ought to have a good house, as it will be some time before Creston will be as well favored again.

Heaters repaired and relined at my shop, $1.00 to $1.50. W. B. EMBREE.
