THE CRESTON REVIEW

Vol. XIII. CRESTON, B.C., FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1921 No. 4

Canyon City

The United Farmers' committee handling the soldiers' memorial has decided to plant two Empire birch trees to replace the two red oaks which were set out a year ago, but which failed to grow. Brass tablets about 10 x 12 inches will be hung, one on each tree, showing the names of Canyon's two heroes of the great war.

T. Hickey, who has finished his logging contract, has moved his family into the A. Spencer residence, and he has left on a fur buying trip for the Calgary firm he has been with the past two seasons.

John Wood got away on Friday for Vancouver, where he is attending the annual convention of the United Farmers of B.C.

W. Carver, a former resident of Canyon, who left here last July on a hunt for a new location, has pulled up at Armstrong whete, we hear, he has purchased a ranch property.

A. Hale left a few days ago for Kitchener, where he will finish out the season at lumbering operations.

Log hauling operations are still on in full force, the company having added two more trucks, which they secured from the Adolf Lumber Co. at Baynes.

The United Farmers had a big turnout at the Friday night meeting, the feature of which was a hat debate in which some twenty of the members displayed their oratorical ability on the same number of subjects. The lady members served an appetizing lunch at the close.

A feature of the Methodist Church service on Sunday afternoon was the vocal musical numbers by Mrs. John Johnston, Lister's well-known contralto, who created such a favorable impression at the Burns night concert last month.

Felix O'Day

On the night of his father's death, faced with the bitter realization that his most trusted friend has not only embezzled the family fortune, but has succeeded in stealing the affections of his wife, the scion of a noble family enacts a powerfully dramatic part vividly portrayed by H. B. Warner in "Felix O'Day" his latest Jesse D. Hampton-Pathe production, which comes to the Grand Theatre, Wednesday, March 2nd.

"Felix O'Day" is an adaption of the novel of the same name by F. Hopkinson Smith, and its appearance at the Grand Theatre will be looked forward to in anticipation by the photoplay fans of this city, not only because it brings H. B. Warner to the screen in a forceful dynamic drama, but it also visualizes a book that has become dear to the hearts of its many readers.

It is a virile story of hate and love, joy and sorrow, friends and enemies, and it is considered to be one of the best screen dramas seen in this city for some time.

Musical Service

A record congregation was in attendance at the Methodist Church on Sunday evening. One hundred and twenty people were present and, in addition to the regular service, listened to several interesting musical numbers given by members from the outside appointments, Miss Marguerite Clark and Miss Neola Clark from Ericson, Miss Knott from Canyon, and Mrs. Johnston from Lister were the ones taking part and are to be congratulated upon their choice of selections and the very pleasing manner in which they were sung. Every member of the congregation is saying a good word for the singers, and also for Rev. G. Knox who undoubtedly is deserving of praise for the whole-hearted effort he is putting into the work of the Methodist Church. It is interesting to know that the work is being appreciated; an appreciation which is being shown by the remarkable attendance at both Sunday and mid-week services.

F.G.U. Annual

The annual meeting of Creston Fruit Growers' Union, on February 14th, attracted quite a large turnout of the ranchers, with President Compton occupying the chair. The financial statement was presented by A. Spencer, the Union's accountant, having been audited by J. W. Hamilton, while Manager Loveday went very thoroughly into the various operations of the Union during 1920, emphasizing the necessity of central pack for all commodities shipped, with the exception of berries. The election of officers resulted in the choice of the following:

President—W. V. Jackson.
Vice-President—Jas. Adlard.
Secretary—Guy Constable.
Directors—A. D. Pochin, W. Mathther, T. E. Goodwin, W. Truscott and Guy Constable.

Before adjournment a vote of thanks was tendered retiring president Compton, who has been at the head of the Union for the past three years.

The Girl in No. 29

Frank Mayo, the star of "Lasca," "The Brute Breaker," and other Universal productions appears at the Grand Theatre in "The Girl in Number 29," the Universal screen adaption of Elizbeth Jordan's popular novel "The Girl in the Mirror," which will be shown here Saturday night.

The well known film favorite plays the part of Laurie Devon, a rich young man who has helped write one successful play and refuses to work any more. His chum, Rodney Bangs, the "plugger" for the pair, conspires with Laurie's sister to wake up the young genius and give him a new interest in life.

Laurie soon finds himself in the centre of a mysterious series of events in which he meets a beautiful girl apparently hounded by a gang of unscrupulous criminals. He tries to help her and meets with more thrilling adventures than he had ever imagined could come to a man. The plot takes on a tragic note when Laurie, in saving the girl from a band of thugs, apparently kills a man. The screen drama is saved from being a tragedy by explanations which turn it into a comedy.

Surprise Party

A host that accounted for seven tables of card players as well as some others furnished Mr. and Mrs. T. Goodwin with a large sized surprise party on Friday night last, the feature of whose stay was a session at whist at which the prize-winners were Mrs. Goodwin and Mr. Willson, with the low scores being made by Miss Kate Boffey and Geo. Hobden. The invaders came well supplied with lunch, and after this feature came a couple of hours dancing, a pleasing feature of which was the execution of a couple of Scotch dances by Mr. and Mrs. McAlpine, to music furnished by Piper Ross. Mrs. McAlpine also contributed a couple of vocal solos which gave a very pleasing variety to what was voted the best evening the surprise party squad has had this season.

Now that Phoenix has been abandoned Greenwood is again infested with bob-tailed cats. These animals were formerly numerous in the hills about Phoenix, but have transferred operations to Greenwood.

Lister

Within the past ten days a couple of rather serious accidents have been unwelcome features of the camp life. While at work in the bush W. McLeod had the bad luck to have a log roll over his left foot, badly crushing that member, though fortunately no bones were broken, and under Dr. Henderson's care he is recovering nicely.

A couple of days later while at work with the powder gang blasting out the side of a hill in order to provide material to strengthen the earth work at the dam at the mill, Sam Lazachuk received a blast of the explosives in the face, rather badly mutilating his nose but, fortunately, not injuring his sight. He was removed to the hospital at Cranbrook, and at last reports was doing well.

The G.W.V.A. meeting on Saturday night was well attended, and the outstanding feature was a report from President Bell on the meeting of the provincial executive at Vancouver, which he attended early in the month, as well as a report on the doings at the zone convention at Cranbrook the week previous. Arrangements were also completed for the annual meeting next month.

The social feature of this week will be the United Farmers' whist and dance at the schoolhouse on Saturday night, Feb. 26th. Cards will be the order of the evening from 7.30 to 9.30, followed by supper, and dancing will commence at 10 prompt. The music will be by a three-piece orchestra, and there will be special prizes in connection with the dancing. Gents 50c., ladies 25c.

It is definitely announced that the Lister store will be offered for sale by tender sometime in March, and the purchaser of the stock will be given first chance at leasing the new building which the Land Settlement Board intends erecting on the townsite near the school, on a lot at the four cross roads through the area.

The Musical, Literary and Dramatic Society had a successful St. Valentine party on the evening of Feb. 14th at the schoolhouse, when the lady members were at home at cards, followed by lunch, and then a couple of hours dancing, with John Bird and H. Christensen in charge of the floor. Everybody had a real fine time, and after meeting all expenses the society will be about $15 to the good.

The donkey engine is now permanently located at the mill. It is equipped with an endless chain which will permit it to successfully handle piles of logs as far as a mile away from the mill, and at its present location will easily transport a million feet without being shifted. R. Milner is foreman in charge, with W. Edwards running the engine, and J. Paul fireman.

Col. Latta of the Land Settlement Board was here on an important business visit last week, and along with Supt. Rowbury addressed a well-attended meeting of the settlers on Friday night, at which gathering R. Milner presided. Col. Latta in his remarks outlined the plan of operations for the settlement for the future, the initial feature of which was instructions for each farmer individually to make applicarion to the board for a general purpose work horse and one or two cows, arrangements having been completed to supply these on a four-year loan basis, with one-fifth of the cost cash down, and an interest charge of 7 per cent. Col. Latta also stated each man should apply for a $25 loan with which to buy clover seed for immediate planting as a fertilizer, and which amount will be added to the selling price of each farm. Still another advance of $100 will be made to help finance the purchase of implements, the settler having the choice of a spring tooth or drag harrow, walking plow, one-horse cultivator, and a Planet Jr., hand seeder cultivator. Any implement expense in excess of $100 the settler will have to finance himself. The move to supply each man with a horse was imperative as there is practically no horse power available locally, while it is anticipated that the buying of cattle, horses and implements in quantities will effect a considerable saving to the buyers. Col. Latta left for home on Tuesday, and assured that prompt attention would be given to the shipping in of both the livestock and farm machinery.

Sirdar

Too late for last week.

J. D. Moore, road superintendent, who was here last week, reports the Boulder Creek bridge complete, and work is now well under way on the bridge over Reta Creek.

Mrs. Ike Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Cameron and Hans Hage all favored Creston with calls last week.

From Kuskanook comes word that Mrs. Jones' flock of hens is producing eggs at the rate of about seven dozen a week. This is taken as an unfailing sign that an early spring is at hand.

Rev. J. S. Mahood was here for Sunday evening service, but due to very inclement weather the turnout was smaller than usual.

The middle of February saw ling fishing at its best, and some not too bad catches are reported.

Mrs. Loasby, who has been a hospital patient at Cranbrook since the end of December, was sufficiently recovered as to leave for Creston on the 14th, where she is staying with Mrs. Cook. Mr. Loasby is still under treatment at Cranbrook, and is not expected back for at least another two weeks.

The hardy annual yarn about the C.P.R. making the big fill at the Landing is again afloat, but no definite confirmation of the project can be had here.

The Social Club dance at the schoolhouse on Saturday night was fairly well attended from here, and had the usual quota of out-of-town guests known of the excellent music Messrs. Price and Hendrie were capable of producing the crowd would have been considerably bigger.

It cost $8 per day to maintain patients in Kaslo hospital in 1920. The year before the expense was $2.06.

TENDERS TO LEASE FARM

Wanted, offers for lease of the land and buildings known as the Kootenay Reclamation Farm lands, for one year from August 1, 1921. Offers to be sent to Alberta & British Columbia Exploration Co., Ltd., Box 122, Kaslo, B.C. not later than March 1st.

Alice Siding

Guy Constable has men at work at tearing down the concentrator building at the old Alice mine.

John Miller was a visitor at Nelson in the middle of the week, attending a meeting of the Kootenay presbytery

Well digging operations are under way on both the Stewart and Simister ranches this week.

T. Winch and family, who have been occupying the house on the Pease ranch, will be moving to Creston in a few days, their new residence in town being almost completed now.

The heavy rain which also melted the quite heavy snowfall of last week, has filled the creeks and wells to maximum capacity, and some of the overflow has been safely harvested in more than one cellar.

Ben Norris, of the ranching firm of Norris & Wood, has given up horticultural work, and is now located in Creston, where he has opened a bakery and confectionery store in the postoffice block.

West & Payne, who purchased the Rose & Watcher ranch about a year ago, have dissolved partnership. The Paynes are moving onto the Midford ranch, we hear, while the Wests will remain on the Rose property.

Miss Alice Carr was a week-end visitor with friends at Yahk, and while there was a guest of Mrs. H. White, a former Valley citizen.

Erickson

The Henry Hamilton ranch, formerly the Dewar place, is reported sold to Young & Clements, two Calgary, Alta., men, who will get possession shortly. The latter is an experienced gardener, and will crop all the available area to vegetables.

Earl Birney, who has been with the Bank of Commerce at Creston for the past three months, left last week for Vernon, to which branch of the bank he has been transferred.

G. A. Hunt, who has disposed of his store business at Kitchener, is likely to become a permanent resident here, his intention being to erect a residence on his ranch here, and go in for fruit growing.

A quiet wedding was consummated at the Methodist parsonage, Creston, on February 11th, when Will Hall was united in marriage with Mary, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bell of Creston. The bride was attired in a travelling suit of grey, and the nuptial knot was tied by Rev. G. Knox. The bridal trip was to Nelson, after which they returned and are now comfortable settled on the groom's ranch here. A large and enthusiastic charivari party serenaded them the night of their arrival home. Bill is one of Erickson's best known young men, and heartiest congratulations are extended he and Mrs. Hall.

The United Farmers' at home at the Craigie packing shed on Friday night last was fairly well attended, and the usual good time is reported by all the guests. There were fifteen tables of card players and the prize scores were made by Mrs. Palfreyman and Dolf Weir. Supper followed cards and then came a short dance with music furnished by Messrs. Goodwin and Cuming as well as a few bagpipe numbers by Piper Ross to which those familiar with Scotch dancing displayed their ability to do reels and some other figures.

The home of Mrs. Geo. Hobden was thronged with guests on Tuesday afternoon, the occasion bring a miscellaneous shower for Miss Hazel Andrew whose marriage to Percy Boffey is announced for next month. The affair was in charge of Mrs Stocks, who was assisted by Mesdames Goodwin and Cotterill. The bride to be was the recipient of an endless collection of household articles, the number remembering her with china being particularly large. That the bride elect is popular with a wide circle of friends was amply evidenced in the many useful and handsome bridal remembrances showered on this occasion.

There was grave danger of the Preserve becoming overcrowded. After all, one thousand acres was not such an ample field for his wild friends, when measured against the millions of forest land which surrounded it. Every spring found numbers of young wild things which too must have their running and feeding scope, and the caring for so many, within a limited area, at last became a problem which had to be worked out. And this is one reason why numbers of his wild kindred were sent to new homes each autumn.

The other reason why Dorkin deemed it advisable to dispose of his animals was that the specimens brought splendid prices. Not that the money so acquired appealed to him selfishly; in fact, he never thought of money thus secured as a personal gain, and he would have scorned using it to further his personal interests. But his love of the wild things, whom he had so well learned to understand, and over whom he possessed such marvellous power, his sympathies for them were so deeprooted that he had gradually become possessed of a great and wonderful ambition. Some day, if things went well, he intended to extend his circle of protection, and form a vast Preserve, sufficiently large to allow all his wild friends to come into it, and live their lives, unmolested by him or any other man. He had already learned how such a tract of wild land was to be obtained from the Government, and he was laying by every dollar, earned by his labor of love, to this end.

The trappers, he knew, particularly the more lawless of them—Abe Dalton and those of the lower swales, for instance—would resent having a Preserve of such magnitude stretching through the trapping-land in which they operated. It might even be necessary to acquire certain of their fields, government land all, and held by them now simply through squatters' rights. This gave Dorkin some feelings of uneasiness. He was nothing, if not square. He wished to deprive no man of what was justly or even unjustly his. But to the big Solitude, with her unfathomable mysteries, he owed his rebulding. He would pay that debt—in part at least—by protecting her children, the wild things he loved.

But there had crept into the harmony of his world a strange disturbing note. Dorkin first felt its jar on that morning when he faced Timberley on the sunny sward of the upland. The petty persecutions of the lawless trappers, who questioned his right to steal the finest specimens of furred creatures from their wiles, had been nothing. They were impediments which he had to meet as best he could.

But with the coming of Timberley came also something to cause the man who had fought back a great unrest. The memory of those dead, fruitless days had been brought back to him. And with the harmony of his world ajar, had been borne home to him the realization that the great Mother, who had nursed him back to strength and poise of mind, had also fostered in him the primitive instinct to destroy, blindly, that which menaced him and his.

He knew he would assuredly have killed that self-confessed despoiler of his early hopes and dreams, on that golden summer morning, had it not been for the restoration of his shattered harmony through the wailing note of Willow Farney's violin. Perhaps, then, he really now belonged to the primitive. If he enjoyed the bounty of his Wild, had he then any right to violate her laws? And her great law was "Protect thyself." Timberley threatened his wondrous world; he had sensed, in the city man's coming, disaster to him and his. Yet he had spared him; more, he had saved him from the claws and fangs of Lulu, the lynx. Twice, perhaps, had he then interfered with the laws of his solitude. But he was glad he had stayed his destroying hand, even although a disturbing note had been left to spoil the harmony of the great song.

Dorkin was thinking it all over now, as he sat beside the sick fox, Spray-Coat. That the attempted destruction of this, the most valuable animal of his Preserve, was a premeditated act by his enemies, he did not for a moment doubt. How far they were inclined to carry their lawlessness, he could not guess. Of one thing he was more than ever certain, however, The band of disturbers had a new leader. Previously, the annoyance had been trivial enough, such as the tearing down of his "No Trespassing" notices, or the cutting of his enclosure fence. But now, they were trying to strike the very heart of his project. It looked as though they were bent on the destruction of him and his.

He knew he had little cause to fear their attempting to destroy other of his animals, because it was from those animals they hoped ultimately to derive gain. Doubtless the poisoning of Spray-Coat had been deliberately planned to intimidate him, and convince him of the intentions of his enemies to carry out their threat of the demolishment of his Preserve.

Dorkin, stroking the long, grey mane of the old fox, now sufficiently recovered to lick his hand, felt more of pity than anger towards these men who wished him harm. They were, he reasoned, but the thoughtless tools of a crafty master mind. That mind, he felt sure, was Abe Dalton's. But beyond Dayton was another—and Dorkin was as sure he knew him.

Slowly he rose and looked about him. Into his strong face had crept the gravity of a set purpose. The eyes sweeping the woodland, taking on its cloak of early twilight, held a light hard as blue flint, and the muscles of his massive arms trembled like destroying agents held in leash.

Up from the eastward a black cloud was rolling. The trees, standing whisperless and dead, stirred to sigh of warning. Dorkin watched the onrushing storm-clouds for an instant, then, producing a whistle from his pocket, sent a shrill blast out on the stillness.

Almost immediately it was answered from different parts of the forest, and very soon LaPeer and Danny stood beside him. Dorkin looked from one to the other of his helpers, searchingly. He was considering whether it was best to tell them what he had learned that afternoon.

"Danny," he asked, "has Willow returned with Spray-Coat's puppies?"

"Yes, Dorkin," the Boy answered, "I was helpin' her put 'em away for the night."

"Well, you'd better go and bring her into the house, laddy. The storm will be on us in another half-hour."

Obediently, the boy turned away. Dorkin waited until the trees hid him from sight; then he turned to LaPeer. "I was afraid to tell him what I'm going to tell you, Pete," he said. "There's no saying into what trouble his hot heart might lead him—and us. Look!"

From an inner pocket Dorkin produced a small leather card-case and laid it in the Frenchman's hand. "Open it, Pete."

LaPeer wonderingly obeyed. "Sacre!" he exclaimed. "Dere ees name in here—and it hee's name, Timberley. Ze skunk!"

His hand shook, as he handed back the case. "You foun' dat? You pick it up, maybee—?"

"Yes, back where we found old Spray-Coat, Pete."

The Frenchman stood silent, his head bent in thought.

Dorkin reached forward and put a hand on his shoulder. "Pete," he said quietly, "I know I can count on you. You have learned to look upon these wild things we are protecting as more than mere wild things. You don't intend to let them fall into the hands of those vandals, do you?"

LaPeer jerked his slender form erect and threw out his arms. "By de cross of Christ, no!" he cried. "I fight all de tam fer dem t'ing I love. Let dem feller come, an' I keel dem queek as I keel skulking weasel! Don't I know, me? Don't I fin 'out all 'bout what de law allow us to do, to protect our own?"

"Sure t'ing," nodded LaPeer. "Already, I tak it on maself to fin' out if dey will come, Dorkin. To-night, now, will I go down dere and speak de word to dem men."

Dorkin pondered, his eyes on the darkening skies above the clearing. "After the storm has passed, if you like, Pete," he said.

He held out his hand, and with that spirit of kindredship, closer than brotherhood, the Frenchman gripped it. Something warm splashed down on Dorkin's wrist, and as he turned towards his cabin, there was that in his heart which drowned the bitter anger which had scorched it.

CHAPTER XIX.

The night was late. Outside, the summer world of Shagland, drenched and refreshed by the downpour of rain, slept peacefully beneath the low-hanging stars. In his cabin, beside the heavy oaken table, Dorkin sat alone, his arms folded, his chin sunk on his breast. At his feet slept Larry, the setter, heavy muzzle between his paws, dreaming fitfully and waking suddenly at intervals to cast a questioning look at his master.

On a bearskin, in the corner of the room, lay the sick fox, curled up in a ball and close beside her, in a wicker crate, five other small balls, which were her sleeping puppies.

The Young Mother

Youth, with its vitality, makes for the young mother's health and happiness. But later, maternal experiences bring a different result. The care of a family, multiplied household duties, and very often the weakness caused by womanly disease, tend to prolong the suffering and to make convalescence a slow and weary process. Many women—perhaps your own neighbors—have had beneficial experience with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which prepares the prospective mother. Send 10 cents to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y., for a trial package of tablets.

HAMILTON, ONT.—"I was advised by a practical nurse to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a tonic during expectancy, and I have had every reason to be grateful for her advice, because it kept me in perfect health and I had practically no suffering. The 'Prescription' not only benefits the mother, but I am positive the child is benefited, too. I would not hesitate to recommend this 'Prescription' to every expectant mother."—MRS. C. Heart Weak, Nerves Shattered After the "Flu."

In a large majority of cases those who survived the last epidemic of Spanish influenza were left with weak hearts, shattered nerves, impoverished blood, and the whole system has been left in such a general weakened and exhausted condition that it has been impossible to get back your old health and strength.

Happy the man, in these days of shortage, who owns a house that is neighter ugly nor uncomfortable! And happier still is the prospective builder who will conform honestly to good standards for the new structure! We may sigh for the good old days of cheap materials and abundant labor, but the responsibility for a pleasant new house is no less personal now than formerly. CRESTON, B.C., FRIDAY, FEB. 25

Wynndel

H. F. Packman left on Friday for Vancouver, being one of the delegates from the Valley to the annual convention of the United Farmers of B.C.

T e social evening and dance by the United Farmers on Saturday evening in the Clubhouse was quite a successfull affair, and attracted quite a large crowd. The high scorers at cards were Mrs. C. Ogilvie and H. Rosindale, while the consolation prize had to be divided between Miss K. Rosindale and R. Foxall. The after-dance was thoroughly enjoyed.

Wynndel will send along a trio of boxers to the tournament at Creston on Thursday night. Ken. Dewar and H. A. Bathie, jr., have a bout, while Donald Dewar will box three rounds with Granby of Creston. A bunch of fans from the local athletic club were on hand to back up the trio.

The United Farmers' fortnightly meeting on Wednesday night wos well attended, and business of importance was disposed of. Wynndel suggests that other locals that have trouble in getting a turnout that they try the coffee-pot-on-the-stove feature It works wonders.

The stork paid Wynndel another visit on Saturday night, leaving a fine young daughter at the nonie of Mr. and Mrs. R. Uri.

The new residence for the school teacher on the school grounds is nearing completion, and certainly adds to the appearance of the property. In addition to the house the trustees have had a large cloak room built on the end of the school.

H. A. Bathie, jr., returned from Lister on Thursday last, where he had been doing some work on the boiler and engine at the sawmill.

Carl Wigen got back on Saturday from Sirdar, where he has been with the government bridge building crew for some time.

W. H. Botts returned to his ranch on Saturday, after about a month's absence at Creston, logging with Vic. Johnson.

Dave Dow of Creston was a Saturday visitor here, taking in the dance in the evening.

A special meeting of the Co-Operative Fruit Growers Association was held on Friday last at the schoolhouse to discuss the proposed plan of a district co-operative fruit distribution project. The matter was gone into in many of its details and it was decided to investigate the merits of the scheme most thoroughly. Other matters in connection with the association were disposed of.

Too late for last week.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Andestad wish to thank all their friends for the very generous kitchen shower held at their home on February 8th, in honor of their daughter and son-in-law, Mrs: and Mr. Chas. Hindley.

Mrs. Sadler returned from a business trip to Nelson on Thursday.

The Athletic Club concert on Friday, Feb. 11th, was a huge success. The programme was well arranged to amuse and interest all from the children up. The hall was well filled in spite of none too favorable weather and the audience showed its appreciation in a very hearty manner, more than half the numbers on the programme being encored. The dance was well attended and the floor was kept full until 3 a. m. A very dainty supper was served about midnigho. The nett proceeds to the Athletic club are $38.24.

C. Maxwell of Creston arrived on Friday afternoon's train to take in the concert and dance, returning on Saturday.

Wynndel Athletic Club resumed its weekly meetings on Monday, and will meet regularly in future on Monday and Wedneeday nights at 8 o'clock. Everybody in the place is asked to come into the club and have a good time twice a week—and many odd times as well.

Miss Marie Hagen returned from Cranbrook on Friday, and does not think highly enough of that town to want to go back there again.

A general meeting of the United Farmers was held at the schoolhouse on Feb. 9th, with a good turnout of members. The consolidated school question was discussed at length, and it was finally decided to secure, if possible, someone conversant with the subject to deliver an address on the consolidated school question. C. B. Twigg, district horticuturist, gave an interestigg talk on fruit trees and how to prune them and look after them generally, dealing with them from the time they are planted until they come into full bearing—using the blackboard to good advantage to illustrate several features of his talk. The meeting accorded Mr. Twigg a hearty vote of thanks for his address. During the evening Mr. Mason entertained the gathering with a recitation on growing fruit and waiting for the trees to bear. At the close the ladies served coffee and cake.

For refusing to make any return as to his income a Revelstoke citizen was last week fined $100 and costs.

The Farmers' Conventions

With the holding of the annual convention of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers 'Association at Moose Jaw during the first week of February, this year's great gatherings of the organized farmers of the three Prairie Provinces were concluded. These annual meetings, attended by thousands of representative farmers from every nook and corner of the three Provinces, not only command the interest of every man and woman engaged in agriculture, but their deliberations are followed with the closest attention by Governments, financiers, transportation interests, manufacturers, and business men generally, as well as by all organizations interested in social and moral reforms.

To the casual onlooker at one of these big gatherings—so big that it is next to impossible to secure auditoriums large enough to accommodate the delegates, not to mention visitors—they are too big to permit of that careful consideration and intelligent grasp of the important questions which come up for decision and action. At times the conventions appear to become unwieldy, almost unmanageable, and somewhat confused as to the issue before them because of a multiplicity of motions, amendments and amendments to the amendment. No doubt a delegated convention restricted to two or three hundred men and women, selected from districts, could transact business more expeditiously.

But smaller conventions would result in loss of some of the most apparent and undoubted advantages of these big gatherings. The big convention is a veritable dynamo for the development of enthusiasm in behalf of those particular reforms to the accomplishment of which the organized farmers have set their hands. These large gatherings provide ample opportunity for hundreds of men and women to attend who otherwise would never receive the inspiration inseparable from such a gathering together of people engaged in a common task and confronted with common problems. As a result, each succeeding convention sees many new faces in the audience, and the influence of the farmers' movement is thus more widely spread over this agricultural land.

It might be feared that such manifestations of abounding enthusiasm would lead to ill-advised, hasty action. The opposite appears to be true in most instances. Year after year resolutions from individual locals calling for radical and even drastic action are considered by the conventions, but when facts are given and new light thrown on the subject of which the Local was not aware, the big convention invariably rejects the resolution, fully or adopts it in a very much modified form. The ultra-radicals are respectfully listened to, their point of view considered, and then the good judgment and sane common sense of the vast majority render a decision. These annual conventions, therefore, have a steadying influence. They clear the atmosphere of much fog which gathers in local spots throughout the year. This, indeed, is one of the most valuable features of these big annual get-together meetings.

And the big conventions are fair and open-minded. "Equity" is the motto of the organized farmers of the West. Emphasis is laid upon it at every convention. And the delegates strive earnestly to live up to it. Anything unfair or underhand is immediately scorned by these big gatherings. Personalities are strictly out of order. The organized farmers are demanding justice for themselves in the carrying on of the primary and basic industry of the Dominion, they recognize the right of everybody else to just treatment, too. They are not asking for special privileges for themselves, and feel there is no injustice in fighting against the continuance of such privileges now enjoyed by others. Complete equity all round is their motto and also their fighting ground.

The conventions in all three Provinces this year had two outstanding questions before them—the much talked of "wheat pool" and the proposal that the farmers' organizations as such should enter the Provincial political arena in their several Provinces. The idea of a "wheat pool" was enthusiastically endorsed, because the wheat growers have become firmly convinced that the methods which have so long prevailed under which their chief product becomes the plaything of market speculators must cease. They have too much at stake to allow such methods to continue indefinitely. Two avenues of reform seem to present themselves—one, action by the Federal Government; two, co-operative action by the farmers themselves. Failing the first, the farmers are determined to evolve some plan whereby the second may be brought into practical operation. But no hasty, ill-advised steps were taken. There was general appreciation of the magnitude of the task before them—the biggest ever attempted by organized farmers. The huge financial and transportation problems involved were fully and frankly recognized, but there was a grim determination in evidence to find a solution to these, and the Executives were authorized to proceed diligently with the work of finding the solution. It was also made clear that in this task the farmers would have the active sympathy and support of the Western Provincial Governments.

As to the advisability of entering Provincial politics, opinions differed. In some Provinces the majority view favored such action; in others the majority opinion was that such action was not necessary, that the time was not ripe for it, and that to force it would be ill-advised and a mistake. But so far as Federal politics are concerned, there was absolutely unanimity—the farmers are going to fight as a body in the next Dominion election.

Rebellion Days, 1884-85

By O-GE-MAS-ES (Little Clerk).

(Copyrighted)

On reaching home I found the Indian had behaved well, so I had a heart to heart talk with him and advised him strongly to go back to Nut Lake or Touchwood Hills where he came from. I told him that if he went on, his life was not worth a rush (for in the excited state of the settlers they would shoot at anything in the shape of an Indian); if he decided to return I could not give him any ammunition, but I would spare a few rations of flour, tea, sugar and tobacco, also some snaring twine which would see him safely home. His wife joined with me in coaxing him and finally he promised to start back next morning, which he did—so exit Nut Laker. A short digression may be pardoned here to show (that contrary to Yankee opinion) even Indians will show gratitude; in fact I have known many instances of them doing so, and this is one of them. In March, 1886, nearly all the settlers throughout Northern Saskatchewan went down to Qu'Appelle station for seed grain and grub, there being a dearth of both in the country. This was supplied by the government and I was one of the crowd. On our homeward journey we passed through the Touchwood Hills, our ponies were heavily loaded and frequent spells at the steep hills were in order. At one of these we pulled up quite close to some Indian tepees. I noted an Indian scanning both me and my team very closely, shading his eyes with his hands, and jumping up on a waggon box he took one more look, then diving into his tepee, he came running out with a new rabbit skin robe which he threw on my sleigh. Standing up on the box he called out in a loud voice, "Look at this man; he saved my life. Now my new robe will keep him warm in the snow" (and it did). Sure enough, it was our Nut Lake friend, Sos-coo-pi-toon, I think they called him. A great shake hands all round followed, and I had to tell my companions the story that night. All our camps were made in the snow, 32 days for me, the round trip being five hundred miles.

To revert to my diary. On proposing to my wife that I could take her and the children to Prince Albert, also our furs and that I would go either scouting or on the transport, she absolutely refused to consider any separation, and said we must all stay together no matter what happened. On scouting round the place a day or two later I found a body of some forty Indians, evidently from Nut Lake, had camped for a night a mile or so south of my house, and then struck southwest in the direction of Batoche. No doubt they were rebels, or going to join the rebel forces. This decided me that it was no longer safe for an isolated settler to stay on his farm, and I told my family as soon as we could pack up we would trek for Ft. La Corne. (A year or so after the rebellion an Indian told me that a council had taken place with this war party as to whether they would raid my place or not, and it was only decided by a narrow majority that I should be left alone.)

Some six miles south of old Ft. La Corne was a retired H. B. C. clerk named Geo. Goodfellow, an old-timer and absolutely fearless where Indians were concerned, and I felt convinced he would still be on his ranch and there we would head for. Between us both we could probably arrange a safe way out of the country if there was a general Indian uprising as reported.

While we were preparing for a start, Zavier Batoche called about noon as he was riding past, and we were very glad to see him as he had remained steadily loyal in spite of much pressure being brought on him by Riel and his compatriots. He would not, he said, fight against his misguided countrymen, so had a hiding place in the Pasquia Hills with some friendly Indians. He stayed to dinner and the fare was poor enough, simply bannock, potatoes and black tea, no meat or butter. With his natural French politeness he made things very pleasant and was very much taken with my three fair haired little girls.

He thought my move was a wise one, and though his large assortment of furs were safely cached at present, he might eventually send them down the Saskatchewan River. I went out with him as he saddled up and after thanking me for my hospitality, handed me what he called a trifle for Madame in a cotton sack, which proved to be some ten pounds of very choice bacon, which was a noble gift considering conditions. Poor Batoche, or Ka-Kak, so styled by the Indians (meaning raven, as he had very black hair) made a good deal of money fur trading, but took to drinking heavily, which no doubt shortened his days.

Leaving our pictures hanging on the walls and quite a number of other household goods, including seed potatoes, off we started. The order of travel was myself on horseback well armed with a fourteen shot Winchester and a heavy six shooter, my wife driving a team of ponies in a buckboard with two kiddies, and our girl with the oxen and waggon and two older children, behind which came three head of stock (all we owned at that time). I would ride ahead for a mile or two and then circle the party We had the usual trouble in crossing some five creeks, which delayed us so that it was well on in the evening when we made Carrot River. And here an old settler, Mr. Chas. Robertson, very kindly took us all in for the night.

After an early start next morning, and when we were about halfway to La Corne, in one of my rides ahead I caught sight of three mounted men riding in a southwesterly direction, and after studying them through my field glasses I came to the conclusion they were Riel's men, as I could detect the fine cloth capots with gilt buttons, also gilt crosses sown on their breasts. Their arms were evidently single barrel muzzle loaders, and after a moment's thought I rode to intercept them. On meeting them I gave the usual Cree salutation, "Wa-chea, Wa-chea," to which they cheerfully replied (the mother tongue of nearly all the French Metis was Cree). We all got off our horses, took our fire bags and settled down for a smoke and a talk. As I had thought, Riel had sent them down, their errand being to corral all the government cattle, but in this they had failed as the Indians very wisely hid them, so they were returning empty handed. I asked whether they were bothering settlers. "No," was the reply, "we passed close to Nees-wa-pi-tis (Goodfellow) house and saw the children playing at the door." They were evidently not at all enthusiastic over the prospect of war. All they wanted was their rights from the government, and they had no quarrel with the new settlers. After a few more remarks we parted and I returned to our teams, finding one of the oxen quietly lying down in a slough, and the women very angry at my long absence. A prod or two, some strong and vigorous language, and behold Mr. Ox climbed out of the mire like a cat, rather to the disgust of the ladies.

Threatened With Extinction

Death Rate in Russia Under Soviet Rule Is On Increase.

Washington.—The population of Petrograd and Moscow in Soviet Russia has greatly decreased, according to Russian dispatches.

The population of Petrograd is 706,000, 71 per cent. less than in 1917, and in Moscow, the population has dropped to 1,015,000, about 50 per cent. less. The death rate in Moscow has increased from 8 per thousand in 1918 to 22 per thousand last year, while in Petrograd the death rate was 2½ times as great as in Moscow. The birth rate has fallen, despite increased marriages. About three-fourths of the workers in Russia now are women, aged men and children.

Government Roads Are Effecting Freight Economies

Diversions Planned In West For Decreasing Amount Of Hauling Distance.

Edmonton.—In the co-ordination of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian National Railway in Alberta several important diversions are planned in the western division of the system for the purpose of decreasing the amount of hauling distance, particularly as applied to coal and other commodities. It is announced by officials here that diversions already proposed will eliminate several bridges, particularly the long trestle bridge, one of the longest on the system, over the Battle River, near Norway, south of Camrose. This renders necessary the construction of several miles of new track. They will also eliminate the Grand Trunk Depot at Camrose, at which point the Canadian National terminal will serve all purposes of the Canadian National system.

The new line from New Norway to Battle, on the Battle River subdivision south of Camrose, is contemplated in order to shorten the mileage between Brazeau, the coal centre west of Red Deer, and Wainwright, on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, 127 miles east of Edmonton.

The new changes are expected to save about 36 miles in the hauling of coal from the Brazeau fields.

Instead of transporting coal from these centres via Warduf, which was the condition in the past, consignments will be brought via Mirror along the new line, thus eliminating the Battle River bridge.

Death of Western Editor

M. R. Jennings, of Edmonton Journal, Succumbs to Heart Disease.

Victoria, B.C.—Milton Robbins Jennings, aged 47, managing director and editor of the Edmonton Journal, died here from an acute attack of heart disease. Mr. Jennings came to Victoria several weeks ago in an effort to regain his health. He was a native of Warsaw, New York.

Mr. Jennings was taken ill in the late autumn and went for treatment to Portland, where his wife was awaiting him. About a month ago he was well on the way to recovery and came to Victoria where he and Mrs. Jennings had planned to stay until he had regained sufficient strength to return to his active duties.

Vancouver.—Extensive damage to timber limits on the British Columbia coast, was caused by the windstorms at the end of last month according to reports of timber cruisers to Vancouver logging firms. It is estimated that 30,000,000 feet of timber is down on the limits of Brooks, Scanlon and O'Brien, near Powell River.

Fruit Growers May Balk

Move to Have United Farmers of B.C. Join With Prairie Organization.

Vancouver. — Norman Lambert, secretary of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, Winnipeg; C. Rice-Jones, general manager of the United Grain Growers, Winnipeg; and J. B. Musselman, secretary, Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association, Regina, will address the annual convention of the United Farmers of British Columbia here this week.

It is understood that one of the important matters to come before the convention will be the position to be taken by the association as regards politics. During the past year all locals have been asked their opinion as to whether the United Farmers should join the Canadian Council of Agriculture. If the association falls in line with the prairie organization, it will mean that British Columbia farmers will be adopting a free trade platform and this will not by any means be satisfactory to the fruit growers of this province, who are strong protectionists. It is believed that the mission of Messrs. Lambert and Musselman is to persuade British Columbia farmers to join the council
