Canadian Pacific Steamer Assiniboia passing through the canal at Sault Ste. Marie

Canadian Pacific Bascule Bridge at the Soo

DO YOU KNOW... That the Canadian Pacific operates 30 Ocean Vessels and 80 smaller ships of a total tonnage of 426,451. These vessels, placed end to end would extend for nearly three miles. They can carry in comfort 28,056 persons.

The Toll Gate of the Inland Seas

FROM Canada's earliest days, when the canoe route was the highway to the great West, Sault Ste. Marie has always been a strategic point on the charts of Canadian trade.

The day is not long past when the Soo was proud of the title, "the Suez of the Great Lakes." Now the figure no longer flatters, for the tonnage that passes through the great locks at the Soo is greater than that through Suez Canal.

It is nine times the traffic through Panama Canal! Nor does the Soo take tribute only from traffic by water. It holds a commanding position on the rail lines which tap the fertile northwestern States, and, entering Canada at the Soo, find their shortest haul to eastern markets OVER THE CANADIAN PACIFIC.

The Canadian Pacific Bascule Bridge at this point is remarkable in that it provides a wider single unobstructed channel than any other movable bridge.

Great industries have been built up at the Soo, to give employment to thousands of men—pulp and paper mills of huge capacity, lumber mills, chemical plants and many more.

At Steelton, now a part of Sault Ste. Marie, are gigantic steel works, rail mills, structural steel mills, blast furnaces; for Algoma holds Canada's richest iron deposits.

Reminiscent of olden days, the Soo still profits substantially from the fur trade.
