As the Institute is this year responsible for the exhibits in cooking, canned goods needlework and some other classes at the exhibition, committees were named to take charge of each section It was decided to make an Institute entry in the cooking section calling for twelve a.ticles of bakery, and the quilt the members had made from wool donated by an eastern firm was on display and will be shown at the fair.

Special Attractions Better than Former Years—Baseball and Basketball are Featured Along Championship School Sports.

The Valley's old reliable holiday attraction comes next week, with Wednesday, September 24th, the big day of the annual fall fair, which opens on Tuesday for the taking in of exhibits and the judging, with the main building doors to swing open at noon, Wednesday for the seeing of the exhibits.

Entries closed on Monday and there is promise of a better showing than a year ago. This is particularly true in the livestock classes, a new feature to which is the boys' and girls' calf club, which has been worked up by vice-president C. Sutcliffe, and which has a total of ten entries.

The Women's Institute, which has sponsored the needlework, cooking, canned goods, etc., will have a fine exhibit in these classes. and the showing of flowers will also be a good one.

Routine Business Council Meeting

Fire Brigade Matters to the Fore—Sidewalk and Street Improvments at North End—Make Third Payment on Park.

The September session of the village council was uneventful. Even the grist of correspondence was much below the average, the only letter of importance being from the newly-incorporated village of Silverton, asking for the loan of copies of Creston traffic bylaw.

In connection with traffic, however, it was decided to erect stop signs on both Barton and Victoria Avenue at the intersection of Main street. After some discussion it was decided to slash and open up Murdock Street, one time known as Birch Street, at the newly developed residential section at the north end. The reeve was named a committee of one to handle some matters in connection with the fire brigade, notably the securing of a brigade chief.

The council decided to grant the request of residents at the north end whose residences face Canyon street for a new sidewalk, but befor beginning construction R. Sinclair Smith will be asked to submit survey plans to get the ideal location for the walk, due to the presence of some shade trees in that locality planted out by Mr. Smith some years ago.

In order to supplement their power Creston Power & Light Company were given permission to operate a Ford tractor in the lane in the vicinity of the power house. Goat Mountain Waterworks Company will be written to outlining requests that have reached the council in the way of a wanted assurance that the water pipes on Barton Avenue will be placed at a depth where winter freezing will be impossible.

Accounts ordered paid totalled $842, and of this amount $584 was the third annual payment of principal and interest on the fall fair grounds. The bill for street lighing runs to just over $60 a month.

Economic Unity Of The Empire

Within a few days the Imperial Economic Conference will be convened in London, England, and representatives of the British Government will sit down at the conference table with representatives of the self-governing Dominions and discuss matters of mutual concern to all members of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

It will be a momentous, an epoch-marking event in the history of the Empire. There have been Imperial Conferences in the past, but they have had to do with constitutional and political aspects of our Empire relationships. For the first time serious consideration is to be given to the economics, the trade and commerce of the Empire as a unit, and to the future lines of policy to be followed by each British nation in its trade relations with the Motherland and the other Dominions on the one hand, and with the rest of the world on the other hand.

The Conference, therefore, will make history, and exert a profound influence on the future of each of the self-governing Dominions, the British Isles, the widely-scattered British colonies, in a word, the whole Empire, while at the same time its decisions will inevitably create a reaction in, and affect the policies of all other nations. A nation can no longer live unto itself alone. The adoption of any given policy by one of the major nations of the world in the present advanced state of our world civilization affects all other nations. They must take cognizance of it and govern themselves accordingly. And if this is true of the action of any one nation, it is immeasurably more true of a great union of nations comprising one-quarter of the earth's surface and more than one-quarter of the world's population.

The forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference is fraught, therefore, with great good or ill for the Empire. Today while politically and sentimentally one, it is divided economically, each individual self-governing unit treating each other in matters of trade much the same as they do foreign countries, and each coping singly with great economic problems which through joint action they might be able to solve.

The first question for the approaching Conference to consider and decide is: Shall this condition continue? Can it continue with safety to the future of the Empire? The Empire was created by conquest and built up by trade. The day has passed when Great Britain can dominate the trade of the world. Entirely new world conditions have developed, particularly during and since the Great War. As a result Britain has lost much of her world trade and economic and financial predominance. The whole world has become industrialized. Single handed Britain cannot hope to regain her lost leadership in trade and commerce, but cannot she do so in co-operation with the Dominions? Will political and sentimental ties hold the Empire together if its component parts are bitter rivals in trade, giving advantages to foreign countries, regardless of the welfare of sister British nations, solely because it seems beneficial to the individual units to so act?

These are matters for the consideration not only of Britain but for all of the Dominions as well. They transcend party politics everywhere. It is the future of the Empire that is at stake.

Assuming the decision of the Imperial Economic Conference to be that such a condition cannot continue; that they must unite upon economic lines as well as upon political lines; the next step is to find common ground of action. Admittedly it is in connection with the working out of details of policy that definite, concrete problems of opposing and conflicting interests will arise. They cannot all be solved at once, but a very real start can be made along lines of least resistance, leaving the future, in the light of actual experience, to further extend and develop the agreed upon policy as circumstances may dictate to be of mutual advantage.

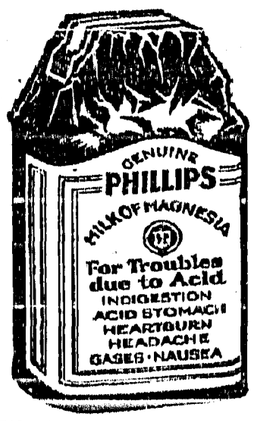
A recent newspaper despatch from Ottawa intimated that the West was not greatly interested in the outcome of the Imperial Economic Conference. No greater misconception could possibly exist. The West is vitally interested. To a greater extent, perhaps, than any other part of Canada, its future is wrapped up in a successful outcome to the approaching deliberations in London. In no part of the Empire will the people evince a greater interest, possibly even anxiety, than on the prairies of this Dominion.

Making Sure Of Good Seed

The Ontaria Department of Agriculture is taking time by the forelock in so far as making preparation for the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference, at Regina, in 1932, is concerned. Farmers are being urged by the department to keep this year's seed in the event of the crop of next year not being up to the high standard of former years.

What's In a Name

Winnie Chicken and Bert Bird, of London, England, have announced their engagement, which brings back memories of another London affair, a little while ago when Archie Rook was married to Carrie Swan, with Rev. James Crowe officiating as clergyman. The couple were driven to their home, which they called "The Nest," by Robert Starling.



Indigestion

What most people call indigestion is usually excess acid in the stomach. The food has soured. The instant remedy is an alkali which neutralizes acids. But don't use crude helps. Use what your doctor would advise.

The best help is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. For the 50 years since its invention it has remained standard with physicians. You will find nothing else so quick in its effect, so harmless, so efficient.

One tasteless spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in acid. The results are immediate, with no bad after-effects. Once you learn this fact, you will never deal with excess acid in the crude ways. Go learn—now—why this method is supreme.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions any drugstore.

Honeymooners Take To Air

Journey By Train Or Ship Is Considered Old-Fashioned

Honeymoons by anything so common-place as a train or ship are now "frightfully old-fashioned" says the London Daily Mail. A journey to Paris by air is the only fitting beginning of a modern wedding tour. A Croydon official says that honeymoon couples are departing and arriving almost daily. Brides are arriving from church still in their wedding gowns and veils, blushing as they are pelted with confetti while boarding a 'plane, which is usually decorated with flowers, but nobody has yet attempted to tie a lucky shoe to the tailskid.

Do You Value Your Health?

If your health is poor; if you are pale, nervous and easily tired; if you suffer from headaches and backaches; if your digestion is bad you may depend upon it that these symptoms come from an impoverished state of the blood. That unless this condition is remedied a complete breakdown may follow. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a perfect medicine for any one in this condition. They enrich and purify the blood and thus promote health and strength.

Mrs. G. M. Andrews, Halifax, N.S., writes: — "I always keep Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the house. When I was a young, anaemic girl they completely restored my health. After marriage my health broke down and once more these pills brought me back to health. My friends all tell me how well I look and for this Dr. Williams' Pink Pills deserve all credit."

You can get these pills at all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Useful To Motorist

Recent Invention Shows Driver When Headlight Not Burning

It is often difficult and sometimes impossible to tell from the driver's seat whether both headlamps are lighted. Dr. W. Kennedy Fenton, Toronto, has invented a simple, yet effective and attractive little gadget that is readily attachable to headlights and constantly reveals to the driver whether the lamps are lit or not. They are small reflectors in various designs which fasten to the headlight rims, they are luminous at night and visible from the driver's seat.

Asthma Is Torture. No one who hasn't gasped for breath in the power of asthma knows what such suffering is. For years it has been relieving the most severe cases. If you are a sufferer do not delay a day in securing this remedy from your druggist.

Predicts Speedy "Flying Subs"

Will Cruise Eight Miles Above Earth Says Edward Warner

"Flying submarines," to cruise at 250 miles an hour eight miles above the earth, were predicted by Edward B. Warner, president of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Cruising speeds of 100 to 250 miles an hour were sufficient for present needs, he declared, except in certain parts of the west and north, where travellers wish to fly 1,500 miles between dawn and suset. When more speed is demanded the "submarine" and the "rocket 'plane," long a dream of Glen Curtiss, would be developed, Warner said.

Africa Interested In Grain Show

Evidence that competitive exhibits from far off Transvaal, South Africa, will be received for entry in the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference at Regina, 1932, is found in a request to the office of the exhibition for a number of tags for attaching to exhibits. The Hartebeestpoort Experiment Station at Brits, Transvaal, is also anxious to receive special information regarding the exhibition of corn.

The greatest mistake we can make in life, is continually to be fearing that we shall make one. Never explain. Your friends do not need it, and your enemies will not believe you.

Rural School Supervision

New Plan Of Rural School Improvement Inaugrated In Saskatchewan

Announcement was made recently by Premier J. T. M. Anderson, Minister of Education, of the appointment of the first rural school supervisor for Saskatchewan, under the new plan of rural school improvement being put into effect by the Department of Education.

Miss Mary Isabella Grant, of Cabri, Sask., is the first supervisor to be appointed by the Public Service Commission and will assume her duties immediately in the new experimental supervisory school area in the neighborhood of Kindersley and Glidden, Sask.

The apointment of rural sueprvisors, according to the premier, is being made in accordance with numerous requests from school trustees and ratepayers throughout the province who wish to co-operate with the Department of Education in a plan to provide closer supervision of rural school education.

The Minister of Education believes that the experiment will do much towards solving the many problems of Saskatchewan's rural school education.

Is is usually safe to say that when a child is pale, sickly, peevish and restless, the cause is worms. These parasites range the stomach and intestines, causing serious disorders of the digestion and preventing the infant from deriving sustenance from food. Miller's Worm Powders, by destroying the worms, correct these faults of the digestion and serve to restore the organs to healthy action.

Despite the cold and long sunless periods in the Arctic Zone, about 2,000 specimens of plant life have been discovered there, among them willows, junipers, ferns, mosses and numerous flowering plants.

Detect Sounds In Water

Ultra-Sonic Beams Permit Secret Communication Between Ships

Secret communication between ships by means of ultra-sonic beams projected through water was suggested as a future development of radiation by Dr. R. W. Boyle, of the national research laboratory at Ottawa, who addressed the fifth annual convention of the Institute of Radio Engineers in the physics building of the University of Toronto.

Ultra-sonics, or sounds that have too short a wave-length to reach the human ear, have been used with success in the detection of submerged objects, Dr. Boyle explained, and he believed that future development of their use would open up a new means of communication.

Showing sketches of ships provided with projectors of these beams, fixed to their hulls below the water line, he suggested that beams might be interchanged between ships and their radiations utilized by means of code to send and receive messages.

Icebergs may be detected in deep water more successfully by these beams than is usually recognized, he said.

Steel hulls, or submarines could be detected with accuracy when at a distance of four miles, he said, and land could be detected when six miles away.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Charmian awoke next morning with that strange sensation of something gone wrong that comes after a bereavement, the pain of which has been lost for a while in the blessed oblivion that descends on us with sleep. It was a moment before she understood its meaning, and as the truth dawned on her there came with it the thought that Jim was home again, and her heart lightened. His presence would make things easier—divert her grandmother from too-sad thoughts. Lying there in the room—in the very four-posted bed, indeed, where she was born, Charmian thought gratefully that Jim Bennett was a lighthouse, making the dark waters through which most of us must fight our way, at times, safer and brighter for those whose lives touched his.

She closed her eyes a moment, then as a sunbeam struck across her face, tossed back the covers and going to a window looked down on sleepy Wickfield. Main Street had not quite wakened, and only the Merrys' Gypsy was abroad, going about his business soberly with but a glance for Miss Lizzie's Persian pussy that adorned a fence post, "his mind on higher things," smiled Charmian.

Somewhere farther down the street a door slammed, and a boy whistled. A new day had begun.

"And after all," mused Charmian as she turned away, "what difference will it make a hundred years from now? The world will go right on without the Davises. Grandma and I and all our troubles will be forgotten. Cheer up!"

This she endeavored to do as she mixed Grandma's favorite muffins, made individual omelets, and ran into the garden for some late blossoms to adorn the breakfast table. She put the coffee in the Davis coffee pot though it was too big for two; and Grandma said as she took her place at the table: "Are you expecting company?"

"I merely had a sudden desire for style," answered the girl. "Besides, I was up early and had time to do things properly. That's a good omelet, Grandma, and I'll feel hurt if you don't eat every scrap. It's a gorgeous morning, isn't it? I'm going to run down street and see Miss Garfield about my duties at the library."

This was a good excuse for going out in the forenoon, something she seldom did; and Grandma said: "I shouldn't wonder if Jim dropped in this morning. Did he say when he was going back to California?"

Charmian glanced up, while for some unaccountable reason her heart pounded.

"Why—is he going back? I took it for granted that he was home to stay."

"You said once that if Jim left his mother out in California you'd look for the end of the world," retorted the old lady. "Maybe he is going to stay; but I sort of surmised he was here on a visit. If Lizzie Baker's right and he's got a girl, perhaps he's come back to see about fixing up the house, getting it ready for her, you know. But there, he didn't say a word about it. We were too busy talking of other things."

Charmian didn't suspect that as her grandmother looked down demurely and helped herself to a bit of omelet, she was thinking: "I ought to be ashamed getting her all stirred up this way. Didn't I see his face when John Carter kissed her? But it won't hurt her to be on tenterhooks for a while, and maybe it'll help Jim. Father used to say I was a good matchmaker. . . . ."

"You can find out easily by asking him," broke in Charmian. "Do you mind if I start the dishes, Grandma? I haven't much appetite this morning, and there's a lot to do before I go down town."

"You haven't eaten enough for a sparrow," complained the old lady with a glance at Charmian's plate. "What's the matter with you, childy? Did Jimmy's coming back take away your appetite? Breakfast is usually your best meal."

Charmian laughed and arose, having a feeling that she wanted to remove herself from the line of her grandmother's discerning eyes. Grandma mustn't guess what her morning errand really was, nor how her innocent remark on the possible reason for Jim's visit had stirred her heart. As she filled the dish pan with scalding water she thought bitterly: "Perhaps she's right. . . . . There may be a girl out there . . . . . his mother said so. . . . . And if he wanted to—to say anything special to me, he had chances enough last evening and didn't take 'em . . . . I guess it would serve me right for not appreciating him when—when . . ."

Charmian caught her breath. Two tears splashed into the dish water, and she winked furiously as Grandma called: "You come help me into the shop, dearie, and if Jimmy comes I'll send him out to wipe your dishes."

"Most likely he's helping Aunt Salina to wipe hers," responded Charmian. "Her Mandy has gone home to help usher another grandchild into the world. I'm going to open a window, Grandma, and let in some of this lovely air. It doesn't feel like the first of September, does it? There goes Gam Garfield reading the paper as usual. Some day he'll run into a lamp post and bump his head. Now I must skip or my dish water'll be ice cold."

It was at half-past nine, and Charmian was about to change her gown for the momentous trip to the Wickfield National, when she heard Jim's voice in the hall below. He whistled, and she came to the stairs, leaning over the banister to smile a greeting.

"Hello, Juliet! Anything I can do to help?"

"You may entertain Grandma till I come down. I'll be there in a jiffy—soon as I change my dress."

"Why waste time changing? You look all right to me."

"I'll look better in ten minutes," she promised, laughing; and replying that such a thing couldn't be possible, the young man went back to the front room.

"I've been opening the windows in my ancestral mansion," he began. "Believe me, Grandma Davis, my mother would take the first train East if she could see the dust. The lawn looks like a hay field; and Towser and Mouser almost wagged their tails off when I approached. Charmian promised to look after 'em, but I don't believe she's done her duty. They acted lonely. I'll have to speak to her about it. Say! George K. tells me that the deacon and Luella have struck a squall. What's up?"

She went on to explain about the "trial marriage," at which Jim exploded. He didn't even hear Charmian's step until she said: "I'm going to steal Jim for a while, Grandma. You've seen more of him than I have, and there are a dozen things I want to talk about. We'll be back in an hour, and perhaps you can persuade him to stay to dinner. Ready, Jim? It's almost ten o'clock."

"Now don't hurry back on my account," said Grandma, as the girl kissed her. "Seems to me you look kind of pale this morning. You'd better lallygag around and have a real good time while you're about it."

"She can't help having a good time if she lallygags with me," Jim boasted, grinning; but his face grew serious as they reached the sidewalk, and he said: "Buck up, Charmian. You look like a ghost. I don't believe you ate your breakfast. I had a bit of trouble getting mine down, too—kept wondering how you were feeling. Don't cry, please, whatever else you do, or I'll be likely to blubber in sympathy and my reputation as a hard-boiled collector of interest will be in ruins."

"I shan't cry," she promised; and then, after a silence, "It's a big comfort having you along, Jim. I wonder if you know—"

"Know what?" he urged after another pause.

She looked up, her eyes meeting his in a glance that caused his heart to thump so loud that he wondered if she could hear it; but all she said was: "Here we are at the bank, I wonder if my purchaser has arrived.

It took five minutes to get through the greetings of Jim's one-time fellow workers; but when at last they entered George K.'s sanctum, he was alone.

"On time," he said approvingly, with a glance at the clock, "and the deed ready for your signature. No need to delay because your man is—er—unavoidably detained. I heard from him this morning. He sent a check, and said he'd call on you when he got here, tomorrow probably. Charmian, my dear, it breaks my heart to see you look so utterly done up. It's a blow, I know; but after all, it's the sensi—"

"Hush up!" Jim interrupted, much to the surprise of the kindly banker. "I beg pardon, Uncle George," he added quickly, "but this poor kid is sick of being told that she's doing the right thing. She knows it's the right thing, but that doesn't make it easier. Is that the deed?" He lifted it from the desk, read for some moments, and then said: "By all the rules of good business, Charmian, you ought to peruse this screed before you sign it; but the way you're feeling now I doubt if you'd understand a word, so I've done it for you. It seems to be perfectly o.k., as of course it would be if Uncle George had anything to do with it. Sign here, please."

He was pointing to a dotted line, while the banker watched him from under lids that appeared to be half closed. Charmian drew nearer, grasped the unfamiliar pen, signed her name hurriedly, and then looked up with such a brave attempt to smile that George K. was obliged to clear his throat.

"It doesn't look much like my writing," she commented, glancing down at the unsteady signature. "My fingers seem to be all thumbs this morning. I—I—" Then a bit of her self-control gave way and she added desperately: "Oh, why didn't that man come? I wanted to meet him and get it over with, and—and go home. Why couldn't he have come?"

Despite his weight George K. arose with surprising swiftness. He put a comforting arm across her shoulders and said huskily: "Charmian, dear child, we didn't mean to torture you like this. You see—"

Minard's Liniment is a household friend.

Usually Worthless

Henry Ford is quoted as saying that experience is the only thing we can take away with us when we die. It is a curious notion, especially in view of the fact that it is about the most useless thing we could take. However, it seems equally worthless to others, most people being influenced by no experience but their own, and not always by that.

YOUNG WIFE STRENGTHENED

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Bancroft, Ontario—"When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I had been married about a year and my strength was leaving me on account of my condition. I was only 19 and it was my first child. My mother told me I needed something to steady my nerves and a girl chum told me to take the Vegetable Compound. I am so thankful I did because it strengthened my whole system and now I feel perfectly well and have a sweet little baby boy."—Mrs. J. B. Stalker, Bancroft, Ontario.

But remember, only ENO can give ENO results. 8

A Peaceful Army Of Invasion

German Tourists Are Now Flocking To French Capital

No sooner had the French evacuated the Rhine land than an army of Germans invaded Paris, with this decided difference—the French were soldiers; the Germans were tourists. Germans were excluded from Paris, first by the war, then by the enmity between the two nations which continued after the war. Withdrawal of the French from the Rhine removed the last trace of war, and a host of Germans went on a peaceful mission to the French capital. They are made welcome and the French government has offices in Berlin and other cities where all needed information is given. Germans travel through France in a very different spirit from those who began the journey 16 years ago and whose war lord made an appointment to eat dinner in Paris on a certain day—an appointment which he did not keep. They come as friends and are received as friends. France is exploiting her reputation as the show country of Europe, and is as ready to show it to Germans who come unarmed as to other people. But what commentary on human folly is the fact that 16 years have been needed to overcome the estrangement of two neighboring nations.—Portland Oregonian.

Worms in children work havoc. These pests attack the tender lining of the intestines and, if left to pursue their ravages undisturbed, will ultimately perforate the wall, because these worms are of the hook variety that cling to and feed upon the interior surfaces. Miller's Worm Powders will not only exterminate these worms, of whatever variety, but will serve to repair the injury they have done.

Chinese Asking For Entry Of Families

Residents Of Canada Will Ask Premier To Grant Request

In an effort to secure modification of Dominion immigration regulations to permit entry of Chinese women and children into this country, 30,000 Chinese residents of Canada will shortly petition Premier R. B. Bennett to consider this request.

Dr. Tehyi Hsieh, managing director of the Chinese Trade Bureau, of Canada and United States, will voice the request, it was learned. He arrived in Ottawa after conferring at Toronto with members of the National League and other Chinese bodies.

Externally or Internally, It Is Good.—When applied externally by brisk rubbing, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil opens the pores and penetrates the tissue, touching the seat of the trouble and immediately affording relief. Administered internally, it will still the irritation in the throat which induces coughing and will relieve affections of the bronchial tubes and respiratory organs. Try it and be convinced.

Improvements and extensions to the plant amounting to $440,000 will begin in the near future, according to the local manager.

Inhale Minard's Liniment For Asthma.

Little Helps For This Week

"For we walk by faith, not by sight."—2 Corinthians v. 7.

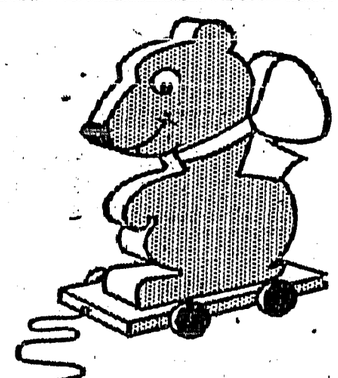
Thy God hath said 'tis good for thee
To walk by faith, and not by sight;
Take it on trust a little while;
Soon shalt thou read the mystery right
In the full sunshine of His smile.
—John Keble.

As the arm grows strong only by work, as the memory increases only when made to carry weights, as the eye can see only in light, so faith has a chance to develop only in darkness and trial. There is no room for faith in the daylight; anybody can trust then. Do not even the theists so? But he who on the darkness of the tempest-tossed waters can trust Him who stilleth the storm,—he, and he only, can claim to walk by faith.
—M. J. Savage.

Like a Grip At the Throat. For a disease that is not classed as fatal there is probably none which causes more terrible suffering than asthma. Sleep is impossible, the sufferer becomes exhausted and finally, though the attack passes, is left in unceasing dread of its return. Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy is a wonderful remedial agent. It immediately relieves the restricted air passages as thousands can testify. It is sold by dealers everywhere.

Billions In Forests

In the latest official estimate of Canada's national wealth a value of over $1,866,000,000 is placed upon the forests of the Dominion, including the accessible raw materials, pulpwood and capital invested in woods' operations. Large as the sum is, it covers only a part—possibly not more than half—of the total economic stake which the Canadian people have tied up in one way or another in forest resources, industry and trade.



CHILDREN CRY FOR IT—

CHILDREN hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and just as harmless as the recipe reads.

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, you should use it to keep the system from clogging.

Castoria is sold in every drugstore; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

The telephone would have saved her the trip

"Goodness me!" said Mrs. Brown. "I've just been to town to get my table provisions, and I've forgotten the meat for dinner. I wish I'd taken the Smiths' advice and had a telephone installed; I could just call up and have the meat sent. But I didn't—so I guess there's nothing for it but to make the trip over again."

You may be sure Mrs. Brown hasn't experienced that trouble since. She immediately had a telephone installed, and now does practically all of her shopping by telephoue.

CRESTON, B.C., FRIDAY, SEPT. 19

Here's a Good Idea

With the season for church teas, diuners, whists, dances, etc., again at hand, a very bright idea has been passed along to the Review. Our correspondent's idea is that due the outstanding success scored by the dramatic talent of Trinity United Church a few weeks ago in the presentation of "Nothing But the Truth," to say nothing of the pleasure given the large audience, and the profit to the church management, the three older Protestant denominations have now a splendid opportunity to co-operate, with equal financial benefit to the community at large as well as the churches interested.

Our correspondent believes a conference should be called of the heads of the aids, the guilds and the auxiliaries, at which not only the likely dates throughout the year might be allocated, but agreement entered into for some sort of exclusive rights in the matter of money raising ventures.

For instance, with their reputation now established the United Church might specialize in dramatic entertainments—say, in November and February or March. With the Parish Hall at their disposal the Church of England might have the right of way with card parties and dances, leaving the teas, the porch parties and pantry sales to the Presbyterians.

By eliminating the competition among the churches in the matter of teas and home cookery merchandising, particularly, other organizations that require public support would fare better, the public at large the better pleased, and the year's cash intake not one cent less than under the present uncontrolled and highly competitive system.

The year-end dinners and bazaars, of course, must not be interfered with. All the organizations should retain these time-honored affairs to, by comparison, demonstrate their ability as sales ladies; "lest the aids be put to shame," as the ancient charge has it.

Visit the Main Building

The two most important things to assure the success of a fall fair are exhibits and paid admissions. With entries closed at the first of the week little emphasis can be laid on that particular feature, except to exhort all who have turned in entry forms to see to it that everything entered is placed on exhibition next Tuesday. See to it that nothing prevents you bringing in every article you have assured you will display.

Due the unusual situation that obtains at the local grounds, which is minus the customary high board fence, the annexing of the usual half-dollar admirsion is pretty much a matter of conscience with the adult exhibition visitor. If one remains away fro the main building he or she can have all the other fun of the fair without any admission expenditure.

This year the directors have done their best to provide an all-round exhibition that should prove more attractive than those of the past few years, and in this good work they have the full support of the Women's Institute, which should make the indoor display well worth seeing. To help amuse the crowd outdoor attractions that have been missing the past few years, are again provided.

To pay for these attractions, running expenses and prize money considerable revenue is required, and the one likely place to secure these needed fuhds is the paid admissions, and both on the score of seeing the Valley's show window display in fruit, flowers, needlework, cooking, dairy products, jams, jellies and preserves, as well as doing your bit toward financing the fair, a special request is made of all to visit the main building this year.

Unemployment Relief Funds

In connection with the vote of $20,000,000 that Ottawa is making to help relieve unemployment, the federal Liberal opposition deserves the commendation of many of the people of British Columbia for the fight it made to have some safeguards placed upon the funds that are handed out to the various province tc be spent on public works, more especially highway betterments.

That British Columbia is suspicious that such funds will not be impartially distributed among the jobless is indicated in a resolution fathered by A. W. Neill, independent member for Comox-Alberni, who asked that where money was provided the province should be made give a guarantee to use the funds for the relief of all in need, regardless of what their political faith might be.

And the Review has no hesitation in telling W. K. Esling, M.P., that in this part of West Kootenay the fears expressed by Mr. Neill are shared by all who have had even half an eye open to note how the jobs on the roads have have been distributed the past two years.

Just how serious unemployment will be in the district the next few months cannot as yet be predicted, but it is morally certain some part of tae twenty millions will be required, and if all who will be needing help are to get a square deal Mr. Esling had better be busying himself devising a different plan than the one now existing for the allocating of needed employment.

Under ordinary conditions people more or less complacently tolerate the "machine" (but by no means labor-saving) methods in highway matters, but conditions this winter are going to be anything but ordinary, and right now is the time to be laying plans to prevent a discrimination that is all too obvious.

Damaging Telephone Lines

Disruption of telephone service through the breaking of insulators of telephone poles may mean more than an inconvenience to the telephone public or the telephone company. It may also result in the loss of life; property or vast sums of money.

With this in mind the Kootenay Telephone Company, Limited, is asking the co-operation of the public generally in preventing acts of disruption, which, although done in the name of fun, have such serious consequences involved.

A person may wish to make an emergency telephone call to summon a doctor or give an alarm of fire, or an important business transaction may depend on the putting through of a call; but because someone, without realizing the seriousness of the act, has broken insulators on telephone poles, the circuits are out of service and the calls cannot go through.

Boys, throwing stones or shooting sling-shots are the principal offenders, but the guns of hunters are also said to do considerable damage. Recent reports of telephone men show that within a section of 10 miles, 125 insulators were broken in two months, telephone service being repaired at various times as a result. The breaking of insulators on one telephone pole could put as many as 15 long distance circuits out of order.

Insulators, in this connection, are the glass cap, on telephone poles to which the wires are connected instead of being fastened direct to the wood. Deliberate breaking of insulators is a criminal offence and prosecution will follow detection.

Routine Business Features Session

September Meeting of Board of Trade is Uneventful—Road Matters Prominent—Delegation to Interview Premier.

Routine business featured the September session of Creston Board of Trade on Tuesday night last, which attracted an average attendance, and was in charge of President Mallandaine.

C. O. Rodgers, chairman of the transportation committee, had a varied report. In connection with last month's conference between the Idaho and British Columbia authorities as to the location of the B.C. link of the North and South highway, the minister of public works notified that the situation is having special consideration and a definite announcement may be looked for any day now.

Mr. Rodgers also pressed upon the board the desirability of having work done on roads in the West Creston area, and the need of something bigger and speedier in a ferry at the Reclamation farm. He reported the twin bridges on the flats in very poor shape, The minister of public works will be written to in this connection.

On information from Nelson Board of Trade that Premier Tolemie is due in that city towards the end of the month to attend a complimentary banquet, Creston board named President Mallandaine, S. A. Speers, C. O. Rodgers, C. F. Hayes and Geo. Johnson a committee to attend the banquet, and incidentally to interview the premier on the needs of the district in the way of improvements of various kinds.

President Mallandaine, who is at the head of the board's hospital committee, reported progress. The department at Victoria has given the hospital, which will be known as Creston Valley Hospital, full registration, and the hospital inspector will be here very shortly for the usual inspection and report Assurances have been received that the customary government grant will be forthcoming, and the village is also aware of its financial responsibility and is preparing to act accordingly.

The board's committee that is handling the special attractions at the fall fair reported things moving nicely, but regret was expresseb that the fall fair directors had been unable to induce the village to paint the main building prior to this year's fair.

Kootenay Presbytery

The Presbytery of Kootenay of the Presbyterian Church in Canada held the regular fall meeting in Nelson on September 2nd and 3rd. There were present representatives from all the charges, except one. Rev. Mr. Bell's term of office having expired, Rev. F. St.Denis, Trail, was elected to fill the chair for the next term. The call from First Church, Nelson, to Rev. Jas. Youngson, Kircaldy, Scotland, was reported declined. The congregation is instructed to proceed to hear candidates and Mr. St.Denis was appointed moderator during the vacancy. Rev. Dr. Douglas reported that he had, in his official capacity, visited the fields and found splendid work done by the students in charge. A few changes were made in the personnel of standing committees. Rev. P. McNab takes the place of A. A. McKinnon as presbytery treasurer. Rev. F. St.Denis convenes the home mission commi tee, and Rev. Mr. Bell that of Sabbath schools and young people's society. Rev. P. McNab was appointed interim convenor of Kimberley. Commissioners to the General Assembly reported attendance and that remarkable progress is being made throughout the 44 presbyteries of he church. The next meeting is to be held in Creston, at the call of the moderator, late in February.

September 1905–1930.

The first week of September was a red letter period in the history of the twin prairie provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan as it marked the silver anniversary of the creation of these latest members of the Canadian Confederation out of a portion of the vast North West Territories.

When these provinces were inaugurated twenty-five years ago, it was estimated for financial and other purposes that they each contained 250,000 people,—an estimate which a census taken in 1906 proved to have erred on the side of generosity to the new provinces. Today these two provinces contain over one and a half millions of people. Prior to the creation of the new provinces, the people resident in the Territories were represented by ten members in the House of Commons; today Alberta and Saskatchewan have a total of 37 representatives in the Commons.

In 1905, while population was steadily increasing through immigration, settlement was sparse indeed, and large tracts were still wholly unsettled,—even today the area within the two provinces is one of the least thickly settled portions, not only of the Dominion but of the habitable world.

Twenty-five years ago this great western empire was served by one main line of railway, and only a few branch lines; today the country is criss-crossed with lines of steel,—Saskatchewan itself being the second province of Canada in point of railway mileage, being surpassed in this respect only by the older, richer, much more populous province of Ontario.

This great fertile prairie area, to which twenty-five years ago many people questioned the wisdom of granting full provincial status, has in many other respects witnessed one of the most remarkable transformations, and recorded a more phenomenal growth, than any other portion of the world in a like period of time. Its productive capacity has amazed other countries, and today the out-turn of the year's operations in the prairie provinces is the barometer of all business in Canada.

Coincident with the settling of the farm lands, thousands of hamlets and hundreds of villages came into existence, villages became towns, towns grew into cities. With ever-increasing railway facilities, modern telephone systems, one of the most efficient educational systems in the world, good roads and modern highways, hospitals, and all the requirements and necessities of twentieth century life, the last Great West of the pioneers of the closing years of the last century has passed into history, being replaced by two of the most progressive and up-to-date autonomous provinces of the Dominion.

As has been the case with all other lands and nations, this record of growth has not always been maintained at high peak. While there has never been any retrogression, and progress has always been recorded with each passing year, there have been times when things have "slowed up," when periods of depression have come, when the more faint-hearted were inclined to raise questions and entertain doubts. There have been temporary periods of hard times, and during the quarter of a century under review there occurred the awful calamity, and progress-destroying event, of the Great War. Nevertheless, steady growth, permanent growth, has been the outstanding characteristic of the first twenty-five years of provincial history of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

This year, owing to a combination of climatic and world economic conditions, Western Canada, in common with the rest of the world, is passing through another period of business depression. There is unemployment for some, loss of crops for many, greatly restricted incomes for others, and generally less prosperous times for all. As is always the case at such times, there are croakers and pessimists abroad in the land, but they are but a slim minority among the great mass of people who live on these prairies and have made them the magnificent provinces they are today.

Twenty-five years may constitute quite a portion of a man's life, but it is only a fleeting second in the life of a nation or a province. Every individual must experience some ups and downs in life; without reverses man would become a flabby thing. The same is true of nations and provinces. Out of the difficulties of today will come the basis of still greater progress, a more permanent and satisfactory form of prosperity. What has been accomplished in Alberta and Saskatchewan during the past twenty-five years is but the forerunner and a promise of what the next quarter of a century will record. Now is the time to prepare for it in order to reap the maximum benefit from that inevitable new era of expansion and prosperity.

Use For Cherry Pits

Yield Valuable Oil Which Chemists Believe May Become Popular

Chemists have recently discovered a valuable oil in cherry pits, which should prove to be a high-grade dressing for salad and useful for the manufacture of cosmetics and for some pharmaceutical preparations. Since a hundred million pounds of sour cherries are annually canned in Michigan, Wisconsin, and New York, it is altogether likely that this new oil will become popular.

Canada's Coal Production

Coal produced in Canada in 1929, totalled 17,496,557 tons from the mines in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Imports of coal last year amounted to 18,619,300 tons of which 14,469,831 tons came from the United States.

Two inmates of the county farm, south of town, were discussing their respective vices. "I've never smoked, chewed, cussed or taken a drink and I am 78 years old," "Well," said the other, "I smoke, chew, and have taken a drink, but I can't see that you're any better off than I am."

Buy Only Empire Goods

Women Of Vancouver Have Started a Worthy Campaign

Under the instance of the Vancouver Council of Women, more than 2,000 women in Vancouver have signed pledge cards to ask with respect to every purchase, "Where from?" They are then pledged to insist upon British Columbia products made or grown in Canada, or Empire goods.

The campaign is to be continued. In the 70 women's organizations affiliated with the local council of women, there are more than 10,000 members, and all of these are to be asked to sign the "Where from" pledge and to act upon it.

The cards are in two sections, with perforations to allow tearing apart. On one half the name and address of the signatory is kept by the local council. The other half is taken by the signatory and can be placed in a conspicuous place in the home as a reminder.

THE REASON WHY

Thin, Weak Children Need Baby's Own Tablets

Malnutrition, or inability to derive nourishment from food, is a common trouble with little children and is entirely due to stomach and bowel weakness. Another cause of loss of flesh and sleep is worms.

To correct stomach and bowel troubles and thus banish constipation and indigestion, break up colds and simple fevers; expel worms and allay the pain which accompanies the cutting of teeth is what Baby's Own Tablets were designed for. They never fail to be of aid and can be given with safety to the youngest babe.

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Ship Strawberries To Australia

The extension of the British Columbia markets for frozen strawberries to Australia was effected the other day when 160 cases were shipped off, having a dead weight of more than two tons. This follows a small experimental order sent some months ago. Good prospects are seen for future business along this line.

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator will drive worms from the system without injury to the child, because its action, while fully effective, is mild.

Inspector—Got away, has he? Did you guard all the exits?

Country Constable—Yes, but we think he must have left by one of the entrances.

Four Doses Relieved Bad Attack of Cholera

Dr. Fowler's Ext. of Wild Strawberry

Mr. W. F. Cooper, Maughan, Alta., writes:—"A year ago last spring I arrived in Canada with my family, and one of my boys, aged six, was suffering very much with cholera. When we arrived I had a few hours to wait, and told one of the attendants at the station about it, and he asked me if I had ever tried Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I had never heard of it in England, so he told me I could get it in Winnipeg. I am pleased to say I had only to give the child four doses and he got well and was quite cheerful by the next morning."

Experiments With Rockets

Expect To Obtain Valuable Information By Penetrating Upper Regions

Experiments in shooting rockets to extreme altitudes, financed by Daniel Guggenheim, will be carried on by Professor Robert H. Goddard, of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., at Roswell, N.M. That site was selected because of favorable atmospheric conditions.

Prof. Goddard has been conducting rocket experiments since 1912 with the regard of the Smithsonian Institution, Clark University and the Carnegie Institution. Mr. Guggenheim recently made a grant to permit further work.

At Roswell, small rockets will be sent up first and finally one capable of ascending from 50 to 75 miles, will be sent up by gas propulsion and with parachutes to regulate the speed of the return to earth. The rockets will carry thermometers, barometer electrical measuring apparatus, air traps to collect samples of air at various altitudes and other instruments.

Pending completion of preparatory work, it cannot be announced how soon the work at Roswell will begin.

Conditions Improving

Fair indications that conditions are improving throughout Canada lie in the fact that "SALADA" tea sales show an increase in the past five months of over 400,000 pounds in Canada.

Canada's Primary Industry

Agriculture Gives Occupation To Large Percentage Of Population

Agriculture is Canada's outstanding primary industry, having a production value of nearly $2,000,000,000 annually. When considered in relation to the subsidiary industries dependent upon it, agriculture is the real leader in Canadian enterprise. As an industry it provides gainful occupations, directly and indirectly, to more than fifty per cent. of Canada's population.

But Jim Bennett suddenly pushed between them. "Clear out," he commanded brusquely, with a nod at the door marked "Private." Thus was the president of the Wickfield National Bank ejected from his own quarters. He went peacefully, but not before he had seen something that caused him to blow his nose with exceeding violence as he closed the door: Charmian was weeping, her tears soaking the shoulder of Jim's new suit.

"You promised not to cry, dear," Jim reminded her after an interval.

She stirred, as if to move away, but his arms held her so relentlessly that she relaxed and said, not raising her eyes: "I'm terribly ashamed to—to give way like this, Jim. But—but I felt so homeless all of a sudden. . . . ."

Her voice trembled with heartbreak. Jim couldn't stand it. "Don't say that, Charmian," he cried, his own voice shaking. "Homeless! Why, you've got that precious little grandmother, and—and me—any time you'll say the word."

Under the new coat she felt his heart race, as hers was racing. It gave her courage to ask shamelessly: "Then—then you aren't going to be married, after all?"

"Not unless I marry you, sweetheart," he answered.

Sweetheart! Was this her inarticulate Jimmy? Charmian didn't know his voice could sound like that. For a moment she forgot the homelessness that had brought her tears—forgot everything in the sense of relief that flooded through her as she gasped: "Then there isn't a girl in California, as Miss Lizzie said?"

Jim smiled, thinking how innocently his mother had played into his hands. His arms tightened as he answered: "Lots of 'em, Charmian—real Californian peaches, too; but I seem to be a sort of one-girl man, darling. They simply didn't exist—for me."

She lifted her head at that, her eyes so starry that he felt half blinded; but, being Jim, he dropped the arms that clasped her and moved away.

"Look here!" he said. "I didn't mean to take advantage of a moment when you're so down and out. I guess I forgot myself; but I had you in my arms, Charmian, and it played the dickens with me. Forget it, dear, till you can see clearly. You mustn't regard me as—well—as 'any port in a storm', you know. I realize that there are a lot of things about me that grate on you. Perhaps time will smooth 'em down; but I want to be fair—"

He stopped abruptly, as if speech came too hard; but Charmian moved closer, looking straight up into his honest eyes.

"I see more clearly than I ever have in all my life, Jim," she said quietly, "and I know now that for me, only one thing really matters; Are—are you sure, absolutely, that you love me?"

Jim smiled.

"Haven't I been saying so ever since George K. went out that door?" he asked.

There followed an enchanted interval that was balm of Gilead to Jim's faithful heart. Then the girl said: "We must go home to Grandma. It'll be easier now, telling her about the house. Everything will be easier, Jim. Looking back I see that all our lives you've never failed me in hard moments; and now you've made selling the old house seem bearable. Do you know, dear, I never once glanced at that deed! Even now I haven't an idea who bought the place. Did Uncle George mention it to you?"

"No," answered Jim. "He didn't say a word about it."

And then something, she couldn't have said just what, drew Charmian's eyes to George K.'s old desk and the check, which he'd left lying face up on the shabby blotter.

"How stupid of me!" she cried, "This will tell us, of course. Why! . . . . Why, what . . . ."

Her voice trailed off into silence as, bending above the desk, she looked down at a signature as familiar as her own. With an unsteady hand she drew the blue slip nearer—then raised her eyes, lips trembling, as she asked: "What does it mean? You! You bought our house, Jim? I don't understand. I—can't—seem. . . . ."

"Steady, dear," said Jim, and covered her hand with his. "I couldn't let a stranger buy it, could I? You see, I was afraid the time might come when you'd have to let it go; so when I went West I told Uncle George to keep his eyes open, and make you an offer. I thought when I took Mother away, that it didn't matter much where I was anyhow. I was—positive, that you'd marry the doctor. No," (as she would have spoken), "let me finish, Charmian. I didn't know, you understand, how well the M.D. was fixed financially, and I wanted to make sure you'd have the house. I hadn't doped out just how I'd give it back to you, but I'd found a way. It looked then as if it were the only thing I'd ever be able to do for you, dear—and I wanted to do so much! And then Uncle George wrote that he suspected you'd turned down the doctor, so—well, I thought if I owned the place, you and Grandma could stay right on as caretakers and fix it up, the way you've always wanted to. I even hoped that, as time went on, you'd get to see that the love I had for you might be worth considering.

"And then all of a sudden I couldn't bear it! I knew I'd got to come home and find out where I stood. I got up at midnight and began to cram things into a suit case. Mother looked in the door and called Aunt Sophie. She was under the impression that I'd lost my mind or. . . . ."

As Jim talked he had reached for the newly signed deed and was slowly tearing it into strips under Charmian's fascinated gaze. It was this that caught George K.'s eyes when, after a considerate rattling of the doorknob, which passed unnoticed, he returned to his own domain.

"What in the name of Sam Hill are you doing?" he demanded with a glance at the waste basket into which Jim had dropped the fragments. "Have you backed out of your bargain at this late date?"

"Yep," replied Jim happily, "but I made another—promised to love, honor, and obey, you understand. Sorry to have caused you all this trouble, Uncle George, but it would be rather foolish to have this paper recorded and then, a week or so later, deed the place back to my—my wife. I think you'll agree to that."

The president of the Wickfield National Bank sank slowly into his worn leather chair. "Jim," he announced shaking his gray head, "when it comes to picking out a wife you've got more horse sense than my three boys put together. As for Charmian, it's my opinion that she might do worse, considerably worse. But—"

"Uncle George," broke in Charmian reproachfully, "you said that the man who wanted to buy our house was some one who had driven by and—"

"Well," interrupted the banker with a twinkle, "I don't know any one who's haunted your vicinity more than Jim has!"

"You said," went on Charmian, still reproachful, "that he was going to be married, and—"

"What's wrong with that statement?" demanded George K., smiling. "You haven't the heart to let him vegetate into an old bach like Gam Garfield, have you?"

Jim made an unsuccessful effort to suppress a grin, and said: "I'd no idea you were such an accomplished liar, Uncle George; but as I drove you into it I think we'll have to forgive you—that is, if you promise not to let it happen another time."

"Clear out, both of you," commanded George K. briskly. "I'm going home this minute and tell Salina. I'm expecting a man from Portland on the eleven-ten, but he'll have to wait—darned if he won't! I haven't been so happy since I got word that I was a granddad. Run along, I'm in a hurry." Then, as the young folks reached the door he added: "Charmian, haven't you forgotten something, my dear?"

Charmian laughed, came back, and said as the president of the Wickfield National took her in his arms: "I was wondering if you'd let me go this time without a kiss!"

CHAPTER XXX.

It was twilight, and Grandma Davis sat by the window, living over every hour of the day that was drawing to a close. She had been in a sort of blissful daze from that moment when Charmian and Jim Bennett had burst in upon her, the girl sinking down at her knee as she had always done in childhood when there was anything wonderful to tell. Sometimes it was merely the arrival of the first crocus, or news that the baby bluebirds in the apple tree were trying their wings. Sometimes it was the prospect of an unexpected treat; a coming circus, perhaps, or a Sunday School picnic—but it was here at Grandma's knee that all glad tidings were poured out. Yet, thought the old lady, catching her breath sharply at its beauty, never before had such radiance shone from the girl's face.

"You'll never have to leave the old house, Grandma darling," she was saying tenderly. "Thanks to this blessed Jim it's ours forever and ever, amen."

Grandma looked up at Jim, then back at Charmian. She did not say that with some strange sixth sense she had known when they left her that Charmian was on her way to sign the deed. It had been a bitter hour for Grandma, waiting there in silence with her memories; and now she asked, not seeing the way quite clearly: "You mean, dearie, that you've sold the house to Jim?"

The young man came closer, smiling down upon her.

"That wasn't necessary, Grandma. Can't you guess why?"

His eyes met Charmian's in a glance that needed no interpretation, and Grandma cried: "You mean she—she's taken you, Jimmy? She's really taken you?"

Jim laughed, softly.

"Incredible as it seems—she has!"

"And you're not doing it just for me, dearie?" Grandma's wrinkled face bore a strange mingling of joy and fear. "That wouldn't be fair to Jimmy, Charmian. He deserves the best. You mustn't cheat him even to keep my heart from aching. You're not doing it just to get the house?"

B.C. Coal For Peru

Trial Shipment Of Coal From British Columbia Goes To South America

An initial shipment of coal from British Columbia has been sent to Callao, Peru, where it is being favorably received. In the past, Great Britain supplied 75 per cent. of the 30,000 tons required by Peru annually, but owing to some extent to the New South Wales coal strike and to the depressed shipping conditions on the North Pacific, Canada has been able to invade this market.
