Getting Back To Nature

Summer vacation days are practically over and boys and girls, youths and maidens are getting back to their school books and studies while father returns to his office or store and mother to her varied household activities. If these vacation days have been sanely and sensibly spent the result is that those who have enjoyed them go back to their studies or work refreshed in mind and body, physically strengthened, more alert mentally, and in every way better fitted for the duties that lie ahead, with stored up energy from the life-giving rays of the sun to carry them through the shorter winter days.

A well spent vacation, however, means more than this, especially for the young. There is no period, no one month or day throughout life when our education is complete, when we are not learning something, absorbing some new and possibly lasting impressions, storing up additional information, gaining in knowledge. Because for a few weeks or months we abandon the school room and text books for a camp in the woods, or a motor trip, or a sojourn in the mountains or by the sea, does not imply that during such time our education comes to a full stop. Quite the reverse is true.

Indeed, living for a few weeks in a summer cottage by one of our lovely western prairie lakes, boating, bathing, fishing, rambling through the woods by day, watching the glorious sunsets and beautiful dawns, lazily contemplating the star-besprinkled sky at night, living the simple life, both in food and dress, one is inclined seriously to question whether in this intense, highly organized, mechanical age, we are not beginning to lose some of the best things in life, and to substitute the artificial for the natural.

For example, are not those responsible for our educational system, the training of our boys and girls for their life work, not missing something very vital and important in their programme of studies? Nowadays we take a boy or girl at the age of six or seven and introduce him and her to the great realm of books. Thus early in life we open up a new world to them, and from that time onward the tendency is for them to turn only to books, or to their teachers using text books, as the source of all information. Boys and girls may thus become great students of books, but they lose the greater pleasures, the romance, the fine inspiration which comes from the study and observation of nature itself and the wonderful works of nature.

The writer confesses that he always liked the ideas and ideals and programme back of the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides movements, the training of youth in the art of close observation, of learning by doing. We like the idea of our Canadian boys and girls obtaining a knowledge of our flowers and trees, our birds and beetles and flies, yes, even our weeds, from nature itself rather than from books; we like them to recognize the evening star, and the dipper, and the north star in the great space of the sky overhead rather than in a diagram in a text book; we prefer they should know how to build a trustworthy footbridge over a stream they may have to cross rather than be forced to go miles out of their way to find a concrete or steel structure; we like to see them capable of starting a camp fire in a few minutes, cooking their own food, setting up a tent, making a bed with boughs, leaves and a blanket or two; we admire a boy using an axe expertly.

Book knowledge should come; it must come; it is absolutely essential. But are we not making the mistake of relying almost wholly on books in our task of education and neglecting the great out-doors and the wonderful works which nature alone presents to us? Is not the early education of our Canadian boys and girls too academic in character, and not quite practical enough?

Nature study in all its many branches is much more interesting to the average boy and girl in their earlier years than is book study, and the lessons they learn from nature will remain with them when much book learning is forgotten. Furthermore, the traits and characteristics developed through close contact with, and study of nature's own methods, are traits and characteristics which create habits of observation and initiative that will be found invaluable in life, irrespective of the profession or business in which one may ultimately engage, and they are real assets which are not so easily found within the covers of books.

Canada is a land of beauty and variety. Nature has been bountiful in her gifts to the Canadian people. It behooves us, therefore, to give our boys and girls every opportunity to observe, study and appreciate these beauties, to live and learn among and from them. Vacation days are happy days, but they are also, in the writer's humble opinion, among the most valuable of all our days of learning. There should be a way found to fit them more closely into our educational system.

Egg Laying Record

The Oyster Holds Undisputed Claim To This Honor

The world's egg-laying record, 25,000 in one second, 115,000,000 in 70 minutes, 690,000,000 in a year—all by a female oyster—is claimed by the oyster.

The feat was reported to a gathering of biologists, of international repute, civic, state and federal health authorities and shellfish commissioners from several states at the convention of the National Association of Shellfish commissioners and the Oyster Growers and Dealers Association of North America, Inc.

Menace To Motoring Public

Outworn Car Is Becoming Peril On Mondern Highway

The "One Horse Shay," made famous by Oliver Wendell Holmes, ran its course and then suddenly disapeared into atomic dust. Old cars are not as successfully disposed of, and unless some used-car dealer wins the gratitude of the motoring public by committing them to the junk pile they continue to obstruct traffic on the highway until they collapse in a heap of scrap at the roadside.

There is nothing romantic, uncanny or even interesting about the final chapter of the outworn car. Too often there is tragedy in the concluding lives.

The old, out-of-date, decrepit gas wagon is more than a problem—it's a peril.

It now costs $25 in Old London to impede traffic by trying to operate an old car that should be on the junk heap. Public opinion will eventually ban such vehicles from our busiest highways, for they are certainly a menace not only to the owners, but to the motoring public as well.

Chain Letters

New Flood Of Chain Letters Cause Trouble To Postal Authorities

London postal authorities are again fighting a new flood of chain letters. The latest of them begins with the names of Charles Lindbergh, Colonel Dawes, Bernard shaw, John Barrymore, Dorothy Dix and Ramsay MacDonald. By the letter, one is given to understand that all these celebrated people have written nine letters to nine other people. A subtle threat of sudden death to anyone who fails to carry on the chain is hidden in the wording.

Bright Eyes,
Rosy Cheeks

The Birthright Of Every Girl

Dull eyes mean misery and weakness—a sure sign of a bloodless condition. Anaemic girls and women have dull, heavy eyes with dark lines underneath. The bright eyed girl or woman is always happy and well.

There is one way to make the eyes bright—to bring the glow of health to pale cheeks—that is to invigorate the body with new blood—rich, red health-giving blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do this and they do it well. Concerning them Mrs. Robert Devitt, Brougham, Ont., says: "My daughter became so ill and nervous we had to take her out of school. She was pale and thin; her eyes were dull and the least exertion upset her. I began giving her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in less than six months you would not know her. She gained in weight and strength and is now the picture of health."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Pilot In Northern Alberta Flew 1,500 Miles In One Day, Making Five Stops

The latest of many air records in Northern Alberta was recorded the other day when Captain W. N. Sherlock, of Commercial Airways, flew 1,500 miles one day, making five stops en route for the delivery of letters and packages. The trip was made from Fort McMurray to Aklavik, with stops at Fort Resolution, Fort Simpson, Fort Norman, Fort McPherson and Arctic Red River. Captain Sherlock hails from Cumberland, England, and is a former member of the R.A.F.

British Columbia Minerals

A report of Hon. W. A. Mackenzie, Minister of Mines in British Columbia, shows an increased quantity production in the aggregate of minerals and metals, though the dollar gross value dropped from $34,122,722 in the first half of 1929 to $29,090,487 for the half year of 1930.

British Rule In India

What England Has Done and Can Do For People Of That Country

"Downeaster" writes as follows in the Canadian Churchman: The achievements of England in India during the last century, I think I may safely say, constitute one of the brightest pages in the history of our race and Empire. Like all human records, it is not of course without its blots. But I think it has on the whole fully justified Macaulay's closing words in his celebrated essay on the character and work of Lord Clive, "If in India the yoke of foreign masters, elsewhere the heaviest of all yokes, has been found lighter than that of any native dynasty, if that gang of public robbers that once spread terror through the whole plain of Bengal has been succeeded by a body of functionaries not more highly distinguished by ability and diligence than by integrity, disinterestedness and public spirit, if we see men like Munro, Elphinstone and Metcalfe, after leading victorious armies and deposing kings, return proud of their honorable poverty, the praise is in no small measure due to Clive." But to me, and I believe to the great majority of Britons throughout the Empire, England's noblest achievements in this connection will be the gradual fitting of the inhabitants of the Indian peninsula for self-government and should the event demand it, ultimate independence.

Nearly all children are subject to worms, and many are born with them. Spare them suffering by using Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, an excellent remedy.

TARIFF ACTION TO PROTECT THE FRUIT GROWERS

Ottawa, Ont. — The dumping of fruits and vegetables from the United States into the markets of Canada, which has been the cause of strenuous protest for some time past, has resulted in definite action by the government. Hon. E. B. Ryckman, Minister of National Revenue, has announced the fixing of values for duty purposes on ten fruits and vegetables which are among the common food commodities on the Canadian table. The fixing of value for duty purposes means that such fruits and vegetables entering Canada must pay a duty on the basis of the valuation determined by the minister.

Provisions of the Customs Act permit the government to fix valuation on commodities entering Canada if they consider such action desirable. In the past, on the floor of the House of Commons, as well as outside parliament, the claim has been made by representatives of the Canadian fruit and vegetable growers that the "cream of the Canadian market" went to United States producers because they were in a position to bring forward their product earlier than it would be produced in Canada. There was also the claim that when the United States market was satisfied, fruit, which would otherwise have glutted that market, was dumped into Canada at a much lower price than prevailed either in United States or Canada. This, it was claimed, constituted unfair competition which the Canadian producer could not be expected to meet.

Imports of fruits and vegetables from United States have grown to considerable proportions of late years. The Canadian market has proven attractive to the producers in United States who could get their product into Canada before the home-grown fruits and vegetables were available.

The effect of the action will be to ensure that the United States fruits and vegetables covered pay duty on what is considered a fair valuation.

Comparison of the values fixed on fruits and vegetables with those prevailing heretofore is practically impossible because of variations which have existed in different parts of Canada. Apples, for instance, might enter Canada at a lower value for duty purposes in the maritime provinces than in the prairie provinces. That depends on the invoiced value of shipment.

The agitation for application of the dumping duties on fruits and vegetables naturally emanated from those sections of Canada where these commodities are largely produced.

The fruits and vegetables upon which a valuation has been fixed, together with their values for duty purposes when entering Canada from United States are as follows:

Apples, six cents per pound; cabbages, five cents per pound; cantaloupes, thirteen cents per pound; celery, ten cents per pound; onions, four cents per pound; peaches, twelve cents per pound; pears, nine cents per pound; plums and prunes, eight cents per pound; tomatoes, ten cents per pound.

Noted Actor Dead

Lon Chaney Succumbs To Pneumonia After Gallant Fight For Life

Los Angeles.—Lon Chaney, noted character actor of motion pictures, died here, August 26.

Lobar pneumonia, against which the veteran actor had fought a valiant battle for more than a week, caused his death. He was considered on the way to recovery, but a hemmorrhage proved fatal.

Chaney was 47 years old.

Born on April 1, 1883, in Colorado Springs, Colo., the son of deaf and dumb parents, Chaney quit school before he had reached the fifth grade to become a tourists' guide on Pikes Peak.

His introduction to the theatre was as a property boy. Later he became a stage hand, and to his death he carried a card in a stage hands' organization. He got his first "break" as a song and dance man at a stage hands' benefit when he was 16 years old.

Has Faith In Canada

Premier Brownlee Is Optimistic Over Future Of Dominion

Simcoe, Ont.—Speaking before the Simcoe Rotary Club, Hon. John E. Brownlee, premier of Alberta, and distinguished son of Norfolk, commented on the subject of immigration and unemployment in the province of Alberta.

Referring to the continued influx of immigrants to the West, he said: "They have been coming into the Peace River country at a great rate in the last couple of years. You cannot continue to pour people into any country like that without experiencing a set back. The country again cannot assimilate them and it becomes a serious problem when an era of low prices and falling markets sets in. Many easterners have been unable to understand why Alberta wanted the bans up against immigration. The present situation affords the answer."

At the same time Premier Brownlee took occasion to refute newspaper reports of Red activities in Alberta. "You will find more Reds in the city of Toronto or the city of Hamilton in one day," he declared, "than you would find in our province in a year."

He defended the policy of the western Wheat Pool in connection with marketing the wheat crop, asserting that the pool had always been exporting its just share. "It is just one of those cycles," he believed, "when there is an over production in the basic commodities of life and the country suffers a temporary depression."

Premier Brownlee declared himself to be an optimist about the future. "It may be one month, two months, a year, or maybe more before conditions right themselves, but of the future of this country we can have no doubt."

Completes Trans-Atlantic Hop

Capt. Von Gronau Lands In New York Harbor After Northern Flight From Germany

New York.—Achieving an ambition of long standing, Capt. Wolfgang Von Gronau landed in the harbor here, completing an eight-day flight from Germany during which he and his three companions flew over the icy wastes of Iceland and Greenland.

"I can hardly believe it is true," he said. "All my life as a pilot I have dreamed of sometime landing in this wonderful harbor. We had rather a struggle with storm and rain and fog over the vast icy areas but we came through all right."

Capt. Von Gronau said he did not announce he was planning a flight across the Atlantic when he took off from the Isle of Sylt, in the North Sea, because he was not sure himself just how far he was going to be able to go.

"I thought it was best," he said, "just to start out and see how it went for a while."

The German crew followed a long northerly course, by way of the Faroes, Iceland, Greenland, Labrador and Nova Scotia, leaving Halifax this morning for New York. The route was about 4,000 nautical miles and the flying time was 47 hours.

Capt. Von Gronau, stantling on the seawall, looked out at his old ship riding easily on the swells and smiled with pride.

"Not many years from now," he predicted, "a 'plane from Europe will be landing in this harbor every day."

Air Mail From Iceland

First Delivery Made To Halifax By German Fliers

Halifax, N.S.—The first air mail from Iceland and Greenland to Canada arrived here August 25, in the custody of Captain Wolfgang Von Gronau and his companions aboard the flying boat D-1422, which flew to Halifax from Greensport, N.S., after a flight from Germany to Iceland, Greenland and Labrador. Captain Gronau delivered the mail to D. A. King, postmaster here.

Plans Bulk Shipping

London, England.—A plan whereby Great Britain would purchase in bulk primary products from the Dominions and providing for the exclusion of competing commodities from other countries, is being prepared by Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, secretary of Dominion Affairs, for submission at the forthcoming Imperial Conference, according to the Financial Times.

A Great Discovery

British Delegate To Medical Convention Stresses Value Of Insulin

Winnipeg, Man.—Insulin, discovery of a Canadian research expert, is one of the greatest advances in medical science, according to Sir William Taylor, K.B.E., C.B., of Dublin, Ireland, who is here attending the British Medical Association convention.

Diabetes mellitus, which had always proved fatal, particularly in early life, could now be controlled. Insulin had altered the whole treatment of the disease. "With the aid of insulin, I have been able to perform operations which I could not have dreamed of without it," declared Sir William.

Referring to birth control, Sir William expressed himself in favor of it insofar as it tended to raise health standard. "It is a good deal better to exercise control than to allow a super-abundance of children to be brought into the world who cannot be properly educated, or properly fed," he commented.

Device Proved Successful

Detroit, Mich.—A parachute device to bring aeroplanes safely to the ground in emergency cases, operated successfully in a test conducted here. The apparatus, carried in a tube beneath the fuselage, lowered a 'plane from a height of 2,000 feet over Grosse Ile airport.

Government Steamer Nearing Winter Harbor

"Beothic" Battling Ice and Fog In Arctic Sea

Ottawa, Ont.—After a continuous battle with ice and fog, the Canadian Government Arctic patrol steamer "Beothic" is approaching winter harbor on Melville Island, it was announced by officials of the North West Territories branch of the Department of the Interior.

The ship is carrying the 1930 Arctic expedition which will spend some time among the Canadian Archipelago. Its immediate purpose is to re-provision the cache on Melville Island established there in 1908 by Capt. J. E. Bernier, of the C.G.S. Arctic and which has played a most important part in the exploration and the policing of Canada's northern empire.

Still Holding By-Elections

No Immediate Possibility Of Law Being Amended

Ottawa, Ont.—Political observers here see no immediate possibility of amending the elections law to obviate the necessity of cabinet ministers going before their electors at by-elections when they assume office.

Two or three years ago a resolution was read in the House of Commons recommending that by-elections for cabinet ministers be dispensed with. The government of the day promised to give consideration to it and no vote was taken. Ontario is one province that has eliminated by-elections for its ministers.

Climbers Conquer Mount Robson

Members Of Mount Everest Expedition Reach Summit

Mount Robson, B.C.—Mount Robson, after many attempts has been climbed for the first time this season. A party, composed of N. E. Odell and C. G. Crawford, of London, England, both members of the Mount Everest expedition, and Terris Moore, of Haddonfield, N.Y., successfully gained the summit.

It was in a lone attempt to climb Mount Robson, 12,972 feet high, the highest peak in the Canadian Rockies, that Newman D. Waffl, of Orange, N.J., lost his life recently.

Burns' Descendant Sings Poet's Ballads

Enid Gray, a brilliant young soprano of Toronto, who will be at the Highland Gathering at Banff, and will sing in the ballad opera "The Ayrshire Ploughman", incorporating songs of Robert Burns, has the additional distinction of belonging to the Burns family, being a great-great-granddaughter of James Burns, first cousin to Robert Burns.

James Burns went to Ireland to be bailiff on the estate of Sir Robert Gore. Here he married Mary Young, and they had nine daughters, of whom Jane Burns was one. Jane came to Canada, where she married, and her youngest daughter Mary was the grandmother of Enid Gray.

It is interesting to note the strong physical resemblance as evidenced by comparison of photographs of Miss Gray and Robert Burns.

INITIAL PAYMENT OF POOL IS SET AT SIXTY CENTS

Winnipeg, Man.—Days of anxious waiting are over and now the 154,000 western farmers, members of the prairie wheat pools, know what the initial payment is to be on the 1930 crop.

It will be the lowest in the seven-year history of the pools: 60 cents a bushel on wheat; oats, No. 2 C.W., 30 cents; barley, No. 3 C.W., 25 cents; rye, No. 2 C.W., 35 cents, and flax, No. 1 N.W., $1.25. The 60 cent payment on wheat will be made on the basis of No. 1 Northern Grade at Fort William.

Along with the official announcement from A. J. McPhail, chairman of the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited, the central selling agency of the pools, and from Premier John Bracken, of Manitoba, came a plea to the creditors of the western agriculturists to be lenient. The same plea was made in Regina, at a conference of wheat growers, business men, and members of the Saskatchewan Government, under the leadership of Premier J. T. M. Anderson.

Both Mr. McPhail and Mr. Bracken drew attention to the serious situation facing the prairie farmers, who, for the second year in succession, in face of depressed world grain values, are now harvesting a crop below the average in yield.

"The government of Manitoba," said Premier Bracken, "believes that in the present emergency industrial and financial interests should refrain from unduly pressing collections from farmer debtors. It is in the interests of all Canada that our farmers should not be embarrassed by too energetic attempts by competing creditors to collect larger payments than farmers are able to pay." Sale of the prairie crops "under pressure" would depress values, with serious consequences to the agricultural and business interests of the Dominion, he said.

Mr. McPhail declared: "As the welfare of our prairie provinces is almost entirely dependent on the solvency of our agricultural industry, we hope and feel confident that all interests concerned in the welfare of western Canada will co-operate in minimizing the difficulties our farmers are facing at the present time."

The chairman of the central selling agency stated that a further payment which would involve an increase in the initial payment "will be made at as early a date as market and financial conditions will permit."

Since the formation of the wheat pools in the west, with the exception of one year, the initial payment has always been $1 a bushel. In 1928, values were depressed, the initial payment was 85 cents a bushel.

Proposed Changes In Homesteading Policies

Will Be Presented To Government By Saskatchewan Commission

Saskatoon, Sask.—Findings of the Royal Saskatchewan Commission on Immigration and Settlement which will be presented to the government will, if acted upon, involve radical changes in the homesteading policies of the past, Dr. W. W. Swanson, chairman of the commission, announced.

One of the most interesting and important researches of the commission, he stated, dealt with vacant lands. Since the return of the natural resources to the provinces it became imperative to devise a program based upon sound policy for the development of these lands and this the commission had attempted to do. Dr. Swanson would not indicate the nature of the suggestions.

Researches were made by the commission into the present condition of agriculture and its future possibilities with a view to relating these to immigration and settlement.

Many other problems, rural and urban, had been studied so that the entire report comprises a comprehensive and detailed analysis of the basic problems affecting immigration, colonization and employment.

The telephone was handy when fire was threatening

Awakened in the night by the smell of smoke. Fire! Aid had to be summoned—but how? Luckily, there was a telephone handy. A hurried call, and the alarm was put through. Soon fire fighters were on the scene, jusl in time to save the house from destruction.

Imagine the plight of that household if they had not had a telephone.

In addition to the many other advantages of having a telephone installed, its small rental cost may mean the saving of life, property and vast sums of money.

Helping Our Best Customers

If there is any merit at all to the old saying that "One good turn deserves another," W. K. Esling, M.P., has a rare opportunity to re-establish whatever friendly relations previously existed as between the Southern Alberta residents and the orchardists of West Kootenay, by taking the advice proffered by the Review last week, and insisting on Premier Bennett making good his "Canada First" policy, by applying a duty on coal that will keep the U.S. fuel off the Eastern Canada market and give the mines in Alberta a chance to supply the Canadian demand; action along the same line as that taken last week to protect the British Columbia orchardists being all that is required to bring much added prosperity to the coal mining industry.

From all over Southern Alberta, at any rate, has come a roar about the increased prices on fruit following the inauguration of a tariff that has put the duty on apples up to 60 cents a box; peaches 51½ cents a crate; plums 41½ cents a crate; prunes 30 cents crate: tomatoes, 75 cents crate; pears, 90 cents box, and other lines in like proportion. Here is what a Raymond, Alberta, writer to the Lethbridge Herald has to say:

"This increase at a time when the fruit preserving is almost at the peak, and when everyone is looking for a decline, drives home the significance of a tariff applied at a time of economic depression and on a buying public whose purchases of preserving fruit involves quite heavy expenditures. With the eyes of the buying public turned to the present fruit market, perhaps the flour industries will have temporary relief from the expression of indignation over the high price of flour."

With the Lethbridge district, particularly, providing local orchardists with its best market what could be more appropriate than Creston's federal representative insisting on the Bennett government according our best customers exactly the same appreciatrd consideration shown the fruit growers, especially when the aforesaid consideration will in no wise increase the cost of living to Creston and district residents.

If, as is authoritatively asserted, every additional ton of coal sold represents an additional day's employment; and assuming that Southern Alberta mines will contribute half a million of the two or three milion tons of coal now imported from across the line, a a little figuring will show that the quantity supplied from the nearby Alberta mines would give 1400 men work the year round.

Ever since West Kootenay has sent Mr. Esling to Ottawa he has been good enough to send us marked copies of Hansard containg his contributions to the parliamentary debates, and the Review hastens to assure that it is looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to being favored this month with a report of our member's most practical effort since entering Canadian public life.

With the fruit movement due to reach its peak about the time the demand for fuel for the prospective eastern market will be assuming attractive proportions, the Conservative party has a wonderful opportunity to demonstrate the benefits of its protective policy on a more or less unappreciative prairie public.

We have had five years of your talk, Mr. Esling; now let's see you do something.

HER FAT IS MELTING FAST AWAY

All over the world Kruschen Salts is appealing to girls and women who strive for an attractive, free-from-fat figure that cannot fail to win admiration.

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one-half teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the daily dose that takes off the fat." Don't miss a morning.

Kruschen daily means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts is carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body, and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

"I don't want anything but a cup o' tea, dearie, and maybe a slice o' toast. I remember Edward Howe saying that old folks don't need much come night. And—see here, childy — the doctor told me about your plans and everything. I guess he thought he'd save you the trouble; and you're not to worry about me. I've always thought it would be kind of fun to live in in a small house, and it'll be a sight easier for you. It'll be easier for me, too, not to go over the stairs come night. Besides, I'll be able to see a half block farther down the street from that window! And it's going to be wonderful having you home all day. You needn't worry 'a mite about how I'll take it, Charmian. Between you and me, dearie, I think it's going to be fun!"

Only after the girl had turned away, undeceived, and unable to speak at this dislay of bravery, did the old lips tremble.

"Thank God that's over," murmured Grandma brokenly, while two big tears crept slowly down over her wrinkled cheeks.

CHAPTER XXVII

There were times during the days that followed when Charmian found it difficult to believe that she and Grandma would ever leave the shelter of the homestead. They seldom talked about it, but when the impending changes could not be ignored, the old lady spoke cheerfully, stoically refusing admittance to the tears that lay so near the surface. Only when she was alone did her face show any of the dismay that filled her tired old heart. These were hard days for Grandma Davis.

"Seems somehow as if she'd grown smaller—shrunk, you might say," commented Lizzie Baker to Salina Knowles. "It ain't easy to make changes at Grandma's age; and she's keepin' up before Charmian more'n's good for her. And I'm sorry for Charmian, too. I ain't ever see a young person that set such store on anything old as she does on that old house. I declare, Salina, there's times when I wish whoever's buyin' it would back out of his bargain."

But Miss Lizzie was not to get her wish. It was the last day of August when George K. hailed Charmian as she passed the bank, and led her into the little room which had a formidable "Private" on its door; but which was in reality no more private than the air we breathe, because only on rare occasions did the president of the Wickfield National close his door. He closed it now, however, and asked: "What you been up to this afternoon?"

Charmian smiled as she responded: "Why all this privacy? I've been to the library, as you might deduce from this armful of books. But I got more than the books, Uncle George. I got a job! Miss Garfield has asked me to help at the library two hours each afternoon. Isn't that wonderful? I can easily leave Grandma that long, or get Miss Lizzie to come in and sit with her; and it will bring in a little money. It was Gam's idea. I'm going to stop at his office now and thank him."

"Well, that's fine!" George K. spoke cheerfully. "It'll do you good to get away each day, and see folks. What I called you in for, Charmian, was to say that you can sign the deed at ten o'clock tomorrow. I just got word that your man will be here then, and wants to see you. I told him to come to the bank—thought maybe it would be hard for Grandma to see the act done, as you might say. I'm thankful now, child, that she deeded the place to you. It would be hard for her to sign the house away. There, Charmian, if you feel like crying, cry on my shoulder; but I advise you to buck up. In the long run most things come out right in this old world. If I didn't believe that truth I shouldn't be as happy as I am, or as fat, either!"

"Or so helpful to the rest of us," added Charmian. "It's all right, Uncle George. I did my crying long ago, and have since acquired such a stiff upper lip that it sometimes hurts! But as Grandma's probably hurts a great deal more, I don't complain. I'll be here at ten. Now I must run up and thank Gam Garfield for his suggestion, and then skip home. Thanks for—everything."

"Haven't you forgotten something?" asked George K. as she reached the door.

Charmian turned, her eyes aglow with sudden merriment. This was an old joke of childhood's days, when as a little lass she often slipped into the room marked "Private," in search of the wee pink checkermints which George K. used to tell her "grew in his pockets." If, in those days, she forgot to bestow upon him a grateful kiss, he reminded her thusly and was rewarded by a sometimes strangling embrace. She came back now, laughing as she kissed him. Then the door closed behind her, while George K., watching from a window, saw her cross the street and start up the narrow stairs that led to Gam Garfield's office in the building opposite.

"My Bill must have been crazy when he let that girl slip through his fingers," he complained to the four walls. "However, all's well that ends well; and I hope . . . ."

What he hoped was interrupted by a fellow banker from Eastboro, who, as was everybody's custom, walked in minus the formality of a knock.

Charmian, finding Gamaliel busy with a client, delivered her thanks briefly and moved on up Main Street with lagging feet. No need to tell Grandma that the dread day was at hand, she thought. Let her sleep in peace this last night under her own rooftree. As for herself, she must swallow that lump in her throat and remember, as George K. said, that things usually turn out all right. It was wonderful that Miss Garfield needed help at the library just now. She must write Jim about it—if ever he answered her last letter. Miss Lizzie's latest bulletin from California had brought news that he had "a girl." Perhaps he was too busy playing 'round with her to write to "the girl he left behind him," thought Charmian whimsically; and, having reached the house, stopped to look up at the carved pineapple above the door.

"I hope they'll give it the coat of gold leaf it deserves," she said, and went inside, laid her books on the table by the door, and then stood still, staring into the room that had been a shop for almost as long as she remembered.

"Haven't you a word of greeting for the returned prodigal?" asked Jim Bennett.

He arose from where he was sitting beside Grandma, and caught Charmian's hands in both of his.

"Steady!" he said. "Folks have been known to expire of shock. I'd have warned you of my arrival but I started at a moment's notice, almost. Sit down, Charmian, and catch your breath."

He pushed her gently into the rocking chair, and drew up a straight-backed old Chippendale for himself. In a sort of daze Charmian heard her grandmother say anxiously: "Hadn't you better get her a drink of water?"—and at that she laughed.

"I'm not faint," she protested, "merely struck dumb, as you might say, Jimmy, you look—well—"

"Different, doesn't he?" put in Grandma; and Charmian, noticing her for the first time since this amazing homecoming, saw that her sweet old face looked happier than it had for days. "He's got a sort of air about him," she was saying. "I saw it right off when he came in. He looks—stylish."

"Gosh!" breathed Jim. "You talk like my mother before she fell in love with a fruit ranch."

Charmian laughed, spontaneously, and Grandma asked: "You mean you're playing second fiddle these days?"

"Something mighty near it," grinned Jim. "Will you believe it, Grandma, my doting mother hardly noticed when I deserted. I left her sampling a new variety of citron. Gee! but it's good to be home!"

"Then you haven't fallen in love with—" began Charmian, when Grandma interrupted in horrified reproof:

"What do you mean, child, asking such a question?"

"I was only going to say in love with California," explained the girl, and Jimmy roared.

"No," he replied, after his mirth had somewhat subsided, "I didn't lose my heart to—California. It has its good points, of course. Mother and Aunt Sophie are nuts over it—boosters, I call 'em; but as for me — I wouldn't swap one of Wickfield's winding, elm-shaded streets for the whole darn state of California, and that's the truth."

"There!" ejaculated Grandma with satisfaction. "I always said that there's not a prettier spot on earth than Wickfield. Here comes the doctor, Charmian. He seems to be in a hurry. Maybe—"

But with haste that seemed to both Grandma and the young man rather uncalled for, Charmian sprang up, and was at the door when John Carter reached the steps. She did not guess that in the moment that followed, both those loyal hearts in the room beyond were to be wrenched almost to the breaking point. She did not realize that the front door was reflected in the long mirror that hung beside it, nor would it have troubled her if she had known. All she saw or thought of was the light in John Carter's eyes as he thrust a scrap of yellow paper into her hands. She read the message and looked up, her lovely face reflecting the happiness that shone from his; and the next moment he caught her in his arms and kissed her, rapturously, exultantly. . . . .

Explore Arctic With Submarine

Sir Hubert Wilkins To Cross Polar Regions By Undersea Passage

Sir Hubert Wilkins, arriving in New York on the North German Lloyd liner "Bremen," announced that he had virtually completed plans for his undersea passage in the North Polar regions, which he will undertake next summer in an obsolete submarine, which will be placed at his disposal by the Navy Department.

He has gone to Philadelphia to examine the discarded submarine O-12, which he plans to rechristen the "Nautilus." In this out-of-date craft, Sir Hubert, with several other scientists and a crew of 18, will explore beneath the ice-choked waters for a period of about 50 days.

Sir Hubert expects to cover some 2,500 miles during this period. The submarine will be equipped with an ice-cutting device that will bore a hole upward, when the submarine's super-structure is close to the bottom of the ice floes. He will thus be able to send men to the surface of the water through the ice to conduct experiments and make observations.

The submarine will attain the speed of between three and four knots, when submerged. He expects to leave New York next May in the submarine and proceed to Spitzbergen. From that port he will then begin his undersea studies of currents, etc., and will pass under the North Pole emerging in the ice floes of the Behring Sea.

During the passage beneath the surface of the northern waters, Sir Hubert plans to broadcast daily with a special radio set. The submarine is 175 feet in length. Among those who will accompany the explorer on his Polar voyage will be Dr. H. V. Sverdrup, who accompanied Amundsen on several explorations, and Dr. Beining Meindez.

A Valuable Stamp

One Cent Stamp Issued Many Years Ago Now Worth $40,000

Probably the most classic example of the economic law that scarcity creates value is on exhibition in Boston, Mass.—a one cent stamp worth $40,000.

It is the property of Arthur Hind, Utica, N.Y., manufacturer, hotel owner and philanthropist, whose $500,000 collection of stamps constitutes, financially speaking, just about half of the National Philatelic exhibition of 1930, which was opened at Horticultural Hall, in Boston, Mass.

The history of the stamp goes back to 1866, and to British Guiana. The postmaster of that then isolated colony had found his supply of stamps exhausted. In the emergency a local printer was called into conference, and, with the aid of a picture of a ship, borrowed from a local newspaper, and a hand-set inscription, the stamp was turned out.

A few days later the regular supply arrived and the makeshifts were destroyed. Sixty years later, the only known copy came into the possession of Hind for $32,000, and today collectors say it is worth at least $40,000.

Keeping World Supplied With Paper

The forests of Canada continue to be the chief source of the world's paper supply. During June, Canadian paper was exported to 33 countries, ranging alphabetically from Australia to Uruguay.

Little Helps For This Week

"Let thine heart keep my commandments."—Proverbs iii. 1.

Rabbi Jehosha had the skill
To know that heaven is in God's will;
And doing that, though for a space
One heart-beat long, may win a grace
As full of grandeur and of glow
As princes of the chariot know.
—James Russell Lowell.

God would have us live; if we live we cannot but know, while all the knowledge in the universe cannot make us live. Obedience is the road to all things. It is the only way to grow able to trust Him. Love and faith and obedience are sides of the same prism.—George MacDonald.

Choked For Air. Some little irritant becomes lodged in the bronchial tubes, others gather, and the awful choking of asthma results. Nothing offers quite such quick and positive relief as Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy. The healing, soothing smoke or vapor penetrates, clears the passages and gives untold relief. It has behind it years of success. It is the sure remedy for every sufferer.

Hittite Castle Door

The Chicago Oriental Institute Makes Interesting Discovery

The Chicago Oriental Institute expedition, excavating at Alishar, has discovered a large Hittite castle door ornamented with bas-reliefs representing deer. The door has been transferred to the Angora Museum.

Road builders in Scalanova recently uncovered a chiseled stone, which aroused the curiosity of a highway engineer. He continued the digging and found Byzantine vases and pieces of money, apparently deliberately buried beneath the rock, which may mark a treasure trove.

U.S. Cost Of Living

The United States Department of Labor, through the bureau of labor statistics, has issued a report on changes in the cost of living in the United States in recent years, which shows a decrease of 2.1 per cent. between June, 1929, and June, 1930. The information given is based on actual prices obtained from merchants and dealers in 32 representative cities.

Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. Whenever there's need of gentle regulation. Children love the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it safe for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is always better for growing children than strong medicine meant only for adult use.

"I was very weak after an operation. My nerves were so bad I would sit down and cry and my husband would not go out and leave me alone. Now my nerves are much better, thanks to a booklet that was left under the door. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound surely put me on my feet. I have taken eight bottles. My friends tell me I look fine. My sister has taken this medicine too."—Mrs. Annie Walton, 67 Stanley St., Kingston, Ontario.

Interesting Expedition

British Scientist To Explore Old Hunting Ground In Turkestan

Sir Aurel Stein left Simla, recently, on what may prove to be as wonderful an expedition as any of those which this savant has already to his credit. His ultimate objective is his old hunting ground, the Lop Desert, in Chinese Turkestan, south-east of the Tien Shan range, but en route he has mapped out a fascinating programme. The expedition has been made possible by the generosity of Harvard University, which has contributed £20,000, and the British Museum, which is contributing £2,000 annually for three years.

JOSIAH "A ROYAL REFORMER"

Golden Text; "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path."—Psalm 119.105.

Lesson: 2 Kings 22; 23.1-3, 21-25; 2 Chronicles 34 and 35.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 119. 9-16.

Explanations and Comments

The Character and Reign Of Josiah, 22.1, 2.—Josiah was the son of Amon and Jedidah. He became king of Judah when eight years of age, and it is that during his reign of thirty-one years he "wholly followed the Lord," pursuing righteousness as did David his ancestor, not deviating from it in any way.

"In Josiah's youthful training is probably to be found the explanation of his remarkable character and work," writes Professor Kent. "The probabilities strongly support the conclusion that his youthful teacher was the prophet Zephaniah, whose sermons roused the nation as well as the young king. The stern, uncompromising spirit which characterizes the prophet's reform sermons is reflected in the extreme measures adopted later by Josiah. Jeremiah must have been born during the closing years of Manasseh's reign, and was therefore a contemporary of King Josiah and of the royal prophet Zephaniah. In the light of the narrative of Kings, it is evident that Zephaniah and Jeremiah did not stand alone in their efforts for reform. Hilkiah the priest was in full sympathy with the new movement. And Josiah had gathered about him a group of able officers who supported him in his reform messures."

The Finding Of the Book Of the Law, 22.3-8.—When twenty-six years of age Josiah turned his attention to the repairing of the ruined temple. Through Shaphan, the scribe, he directed Hilkiah, the priest, to take account of the money which the people had brought to the House of God and give it to the Levites appointed to receive it. The latter were to pay the men for their work on the temple. The overseers were Levites, other Levites encouraged the workmen with music, and yet other Levites were scribes and officers and porters. The work progressed rapidly.

During this work upon the temple, Hilkiah found the book of the law of Jehovah. This book of the law was probably the legal portions (chapters 12 to 26, and chapter 28) of our Book of Deuteronomy (which calls itself "The Book of the Law" and also "The Book of the Covenant"), for Josiah's reforms followed the directions laid down in these chapters.

The Effect upon Josiah Of the Reading Of the Book Of the Law, 22.9-13.—After telling the king that the work upon the temple was progressing well, the money having been given to the overseers and the workmen put at work, Shaphan told him of the discovery of the book and read it aloud to him. The king rent his clothes in token of his troubled mind, "for," said he, "great is the wrath of Jehovah that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us." Read Chapters 12-16 of Deuteronomy, with Josiah in mind, and it will be easy to see why he was so greatly moved.

Ban On Immigrants

Permits to bring in relatives from Central Europe will no longer be available to former inhabitants of that region who are now settled here, according to the interpretation given by those interested in Toronto to a circular sent to officials by the Dominion minister of immigration. The circular announces the striking out of the clause of the order-in-council under which permits have been secured since the war.

Motorist Pays Damages To Railway

For the third time in two months the Central Vermont Railway has collected damages from a careless motorist for damage to its equipment. In this case, the court awarded the railway damages against a man who had left his car on a grade crossing at Roxbury after a tire had blown out. It was hit by a freight train with damage to the locomotive.

4 Years without HEADACHE

How do you deal with headaches? Do you just take something to deaden the pain without getting rid of the trouble which causes the pain? Thousands do, despite the medical profession's warning cry of "DON'T!"

Such makeshift methods simply suppress the symptoms of headaches. They merely numb the nerves and leave the underlying cause to look after itself. And it only obtains a firmer grip. Headaches can generally be traced to a disordered stomach and to the unsuspected retention in the system of stagnating waste material which poisons the blood. Remove these poisons—prevent them forming again—and you'll never have to worry any more. And that is just how Kruschen Salts bring swift and lasting relief from headaches. Kruschen Salts aid Nature to cleanse your body completely of all clogging waste matter.

"For many years I suffered from severe headaches almost daily. I started taking the small dose (of Kruschen) a matter of four years ago, and I can honestly say I have never had a headache since."—(Mrs. M. W.)

High School Correspondence Courses For Saskatchewan

Premier Anderson Implements Pledge To Extend Higher Educational Facilities To Rural Communities

Implementing his pledge to extend high school facilities to boys and girls in rural communities of Saskatchewan, Premier J. T. M. Anderson, as Minister of Education, has announced that, beginning in September, high school correspondence courses in Grades 9, 10 and 11 will be inaugurated by the Department of Education. These courses, while not intended to interfere in any way with existing school arrangements, are being instituted for the benefit of Saskatchewan boys and girls who have not reasonable opportunities of obtaining a high school education in their own districts.

Optional Subjects

The courses will provide full preparation of students for Junior Matriculation and Entrance to Normal Schools. In addition to all compulsory subjects of Grades IX, X and XI, the Department is offering many optional subjects such as Agriculture, Chemistry, Physics, Home Economics, Latin and French.

Pupils eligible for these courses must be residents of Saskatchewan and have Grade VIII or equivalent standing. The course in Grades IX and X are offered to pupils who live outside an organized school district or who cannot attend school owing to some physical disability; to pupils who live within a school district but for some valid reason cannot attend school; to pupils who are in attendance at a one-room rural school, such pupils to work under the supervision of the local teacher who may refer questions to the Director in charge. The Grade XI course is restricted to pupils who live more than four miles from a school where Grade XI is being taught. A nominal fee will be charged for all the courses except those taken under supervision of the local teacher.

This new education activity in Saskatchewan is under charge of the Director of High School Correspondence Instruction, Department of Education, Regina, from whom application forms and terms of enrolment may be obtained.

Premier J. T. M. Anderson, Minister of Education, who announces a policy of High School Courses by Correspondence.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

As those two in the doorway moved out of the mirror's line of reflection, Grandma lifted compassionate eyes to Jimmy Bennett. She could not speak. Her throat felt parched. Anything she might say would seem inadequate; so it was in silence Jim arose and moved dazedly toward the door that led to the room beyond.

"I—I'll get out the back way," he managed to say huskily. "You tell her that George K. sent for me. Tell her anything you're a mind to—except the truth. I'll be all right after a minute. . . . . Don't worry. . . . I'll . . . ."

But he was too late. Charmian was back, her eyes still shining as she glanced in bewilderment from Grandma's troubled countenance to the grim face of her old playmate.

"Where are you going?" she began, puzzled. "Come back, Jim. Sit down. I've got some news for you. What makes you act so queer?" Then light broke in upon her and she cried: "Oh, look here! Did—did you see that idiot kiss me?"

Her cheeks flamed, but Jim still stood in the doorway. He might have been a statue. He didn't speak; but Grandma answered shakily: "In—in the mirror, dearie. I didn't know you cared that way—either of you. I thought . . . ."

"I see," said Charmian. She laughed, and going close to Jim, looked at him: "And you thought, too, Jim?, Really, I don't know that I blame you. It must have looked that way. That kiss—"

"You don't have to explain a kiss like that, Charmian," Jim broke in gruffly. "It spoke for itself. I wish you happiness, of course; but now. . . . . Uncle George is waiting for me, and . . . ."

The girl drew an exasperated breath.

"Let him wait," she responded. "You sha'n't go one step, Jim Bennett, till I've made you and Grandma understand this thing. Sit down. That kiss was—well, sort of a vicarious kiss, you understand. It was a kiss by proxy, so to speak. It wasn't me John Carter was really kissing, but a girl who's crossing the ocean now to come to him—a girl he's adored for ages, though he was too proud to say so—nothing to offer her and—Oh, you know that foolish line of thought.

"It's a long story, too long to go into now; but anyhow, he wrote to her after the old doctor died and he thought he'd be able to get married. His letter came back unclaimed. Then he found from a friend that she had gone abroad. He wrote in care of the American Express, and that letter came back, too. Then he tried Paris, and after following her all round Europe, the letter reached her in London, and she cabled. It was that message he brought for me to see. She sailed at once. Told him to meet her at the dock with a marriage license! Do you wonder the poor boy was a little off his head? He's been half crazy with anxiety, and—well," said Charmian, a smile curving her lips, "he just naturally had to kiss some one, didn't he?—and I was handy."

"Handy!" echoed Jim Bennett, staring. "Are you trying to tell me that if he'd run into Lizzie Baker he'd have kissed her?"

This bit of humor was an heroic effort on Jim's part to clear the atmosphere. In reality, it was difficult for him to speak. But his words were rewarded by a smile from Grandma and a dimple from Charmian as she endeavored to reply sedately: "I'm not sure that he wouldn't have, though you know, Jim, I've been a —a sister to him."

"I shouldn't hardly have thought it from the looks of things," said Grandma with unintentional humor. "At one time I was pretty sure we were going to keep him in the family. How long have you known about this girl, dearie? Why didn't you tell me?"

"If I'd known you were thinking what all the Wickfield busybodies were thinking," replied Charmian, "I would have told; but it was a confidence, and I saw no reason to violate it. John is terribly close-mouthed about his own affairs, and he didn't know that the girl loved him. I think it was an immense relief to him to talk to me, though it's my private opinion that he'd never have done so if he hadn't suspected what Wickfield was saying about —us."

"Did he think you were maybe getting to love him?" asked Grandma innocently.

Charmian flushed.

"He's not so conceited as all that; but he was quite right to let me know that his 'heart's in the highlands.' He told me ages ago. In fact, he tried to tell me the day that Moore child ruptured her appendix, but we were interrupted, and a week or so went by before he had another chance. I suppose all Wickfield thinks that he broke my heart. Sometimes I wonder why he didn't. He's tremendously easy to love."

"Are you sure that useful organ is intact?" Jim questioned.

"Intact, but battered," confessed Charmian. "Jim, where are you staying? You can put up here as well as not."

"I'm at Uncle George's—left the train at Eastboro and came over by automobile, just for the fun of surprising everybody. Aunt Salina nearly passed out when I walked in at dinner time. I told her I wouldn't be back till after supper—thought if I hinted hard enough I might worm an invitation out of somebody."

"You don't ever need to hint for an invitation here," said Grandma. "You're welcome to invite yourself any time you want to. I've missed you like anything, Jimmy, and I presume Charmian has, too, though maybe she's too bashful to let you think so."

"She means 'maidenly,' Jim," laughed Charmian, "and I fear I'm not even that. I've missed you abominably, and don't mind saying so to your face. But if you're to stay to supper you'll have to help to get it; and anyway, Grandma has talked enough for one while. You close your eyes, Grandma, and get a cat-nap while we rustle the repast."

The young man arose with alacrity, and Grandma said: "You get something good and hearty, Charmian. Jim's hungry after his long journey. Maybe he'd relish one of your nice omelets with bacon. And you'd better mix up some biscuits while you're about it."

"You're nothing if not hospitable, Grandma," smiled the guest, "but I refuse to be treated as company."

He stooped to take the old lady's hand in a gentle grip that said, "All's well after all," before he followed Charmian to the kitchen.

"This looks like an ark," he commented, glancing about appraisingly. "I suppose I've become accustomed to kitchenettes; and in these days when most of us don't keep a lot of help, I'll admit that they save steps. Come here to the window, Charmian. I want to look at you."

She smiled and answered: "Are you trying to detect gray hairs? It's a wonder I haven't got some, Jimmy." Her face clouded suddenly. "Did Uncle George tell you about . . . ."

"About what?" he prodded as she hesitated.

Charmian shivered. It had swept over her achingly that tomorrow she would be getting supper in a kitchen belonging to some stranger. She lifted her face, and Jim sensed the unshed tears behind her lashes.

"I've had to part with the old house, Jim. It was more than I could swing—alone. I sign the papers tomorrow morning at the bank. Don't tell Grandma tonight. She knows it's coming, but not when. It's silly to care so much for a house, isn't it? And yet—"

She turned abruptly away, did something unnecessary to the stove, and came back with a smile on her lips that twisted Jimmy's heart.

"I—I'm sorry, Charmian," he began, "but it's the—"

"Now don't you tell me it's sensible!" she cried, a sob in her voice. "Everybody tells me that — even Grandma. I know it's sensible, but —but . . . ."

"I wasn't going to call it sensible," said Jim patiently. "I'm not even sure it is, when it hurts you so. I was going to say that it's the way life usually treats us—lets us set our hearts on something, and then, when it seems as if we couldn't live without it, takes it away. Who's buying the old place, Charmian?"

"I don't know even that — some stranger who took a fancy to the house and asked at the bank if it could be bought. Uncle George arranged it. And we'll still have the law office, Jim. We'll live there and . . . ."

She explained their plans while Jim, staring out of the window toward the orchard, listened thoughtfully.

"It was the dear old doctor's scheme," said Charmian, "and once we get used to the change it will be all right. Now let's cheer up. It's hateful of me to thrust my burdens on you as soon as you arrive; and we must give Grandma a good time. She hasn't looked so happy for days and days, Jim. Forget my troubles now, and pare those apples. I'm going to make Dutch apple cake instead of biscuits because you like it. Wait till I tie this apron 'round you, please. That's a dandy suit, and you mustn't get it spotted the first thing."

Jim's familiar smile came back as she tied him into the blue apron. He said: "I'm glad the suit has made a hit. Mother thought I'd taken leave of my senses when she came across the bill in a coat pocket. I told her that considering the wealth she was squandering on a fruit ranch, she couldn't consistently complain of my extravagance! Then Aunt Sophie came in and took my side. Aunt Sophie's a peach. She's like my mother—well, with all the angles sandpapered. Do you catch my meaning? You'd love her, anyway. It was worth being exiled all this time to find an aunt like that, believe me."

"Was that all you found in California?" queried Charmian as she measured flour into a blue bowl. She was remembering the "girl" mentioned in Lizzie Baker's letter, but Jim answered in all seriousness:

Wool Warehouse Destroyed

Half a Million Dollar Loss Occasioned By Fire At Weston

Damage estimated at $500,000 was caused by a fire which destroyed the building of the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers, near Weston, Ont.

Charred and crumpled walls containing 3,000,000 pounds of water-soaked wool were all that remained of the structure after firemen had finally conquered the blaze. Officials were at a loss to determine the cause of the fire.

Little Helps For This Week

"I will teach you the good and the right way."—1 Samuel xii. 23.

Live to do good; but not with thought to win
From man return of any kindness done.
Do naught but good; for such the noble strife
Of virtue is, 'gainst wrong to venture love,
And for thy foe devote a brother's life.
Content to wait the recompense above.
Brave for the truth, to fiercest insults meek,
In mercy strong, in vengeance only weak.

When Pain Comes

What many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained the standard with physicians in the 60 years since its invention.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water will neutralize instantly many times as much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

H. R. TOWNSEND,
Provincial Collector.

Dated at Nelson, B. C., this 9th day of August, 1930.

Creston Baseball Champs.

Creston baseball team, with a number of Sandpoint players in the lineup made a great name for themselves at the Labor Day Sports tournament at Fernie on Sunday and Monday. The locals figured in four games in the two days, tieing one and winning three others and were thus awarded the East Kootenay baseball championship cup and a substantial cash prize.

On Sunday morning Creston beat Coleman, Alberta, the 1929 champions, by a score of 6 to 4. In the afternoon they played an eleven-innings tie game with Columbia Falls, Montana, darkness calling a halt to proceedings with the score 2-2. On Monday morning a seven innings game was ordered played between these teams which Creston won 5 to 2. and on Monday afternoon Creston stepped out and beat Michel in the final game by a margin of 9 to 2.

Allan of Sandpoint, and Fortin did the pitching. Allan gets credit for beating Coleman and Columbia Falls, and Fortin has the distinction of handing the decisive beating to Michel. The cup is known as the Chevrolet Trophy, and was presented by the Crows Nest Motors of Fernie.

Creston team batted in this fashion: Watson, c.; Allan and Fortin, pitchers; McKelvey, 1b.; Welo, 2b.; Campbell, ss.; Jacoby, 3b.; Brogan, lf.; Rolph, cf.; Telford, rf.

Large Opening Attendance

It begins to look as if the ratepayers of Creston school district will this yesr have to provide another room and another teacher to handle public school work. When school opened on Tuesday morning 197 pupils were on hand, 32 of whom were brand new beginners, and it is expected there are still scholars who will come along later. With the school law stipulating that 35 shall constitute the maximum number a teacher may instruct it is at once apparent that some divisions have more than that number, in fact the average is just about 40.

In Division 1 Principal M rriot has 21 Grade 8 pupils, and 22 in Grade 7. In Division 2, Miss Meldrum starts with 18 in Grade 6 and 19 in Grade 5. Miss Wade has 12 in Grade 5 and 23 in Grade 4. Miss Hazel Hobden in Division 4 has 26 in Grade 3, and 14 in Grade 2a. In the primary Room Miss Holmes has 10 in Grade 2b, and 32 in Grade 1.

In the high school the crowding is just about as pronounced. There is an enrollomnt already of 59, and of these 13 are from other districts. They are distributed as follows: Grade 9, 27; Grade 10, 19; Grade 11, 13.

For the present the staff is getting along with some overcrowding but the trustees are being asked to provide more help, and the board will take the matter up in a few days, on the return of Mrs. (Dr.) Henderson, who is chairman of the trustee board.
