Council Enacts Fuel By-Law

Vendors of Coal and Wood Must on Delivering Furnish Buyer Much Information—Basketball League Wants Park Pavilion

The October meeting of Creston village council was brief and uneventful, the outstanding feature being the final passing of the light weight and short measure fuel by-law, governing the sale and delivery of wood and coal within the village limits. Reeve McFarland presided, and Councillors Henderson and Jackson were present. Accounts for the month totalling $206 were passed for payment.

The fuel regulations provide that the vendor of wood or coal must furnish the purchaser with a delivery slip on which is shown the name of the seller, and to be signed by the person making delivery, which will indicate the quantity and kind of wood in cords of 128 cnbic feet, along with the price to be paid. It is stipulated that all wood must be piled.

In the case of coal the buyer is to have a similar slip as well as a slip signed by the weighmaster on a set of government tested scales which shows the weight of the rig as well as the coal, stated in terms of tons, and the price the buyer is expected to pay for the fuel.

Anyone breaking this by law will be liable to a fine of not more than $50 and not more than 30 days imprisonmeut in case of nonpayment of fine. At the discretion of the magistrate the seizure of the light weight or short measure fuel may be ordered.

There was a letter from Mrs. Levirs on behalf of the basketball enthusiasts asking for the use of park pavilion on much the same terms as last winter, prefering Tuesday and Thursday nights and such afternoons as may be open. Mrs. Levirs expressed appreciation of the generous consideration shown the clubs last year and pointed out that over 100 had enjoyed the sport, many of whom were children. The letter was referred to the Parks Committee for action.

In reply to a letter sent the minister of lands in September enquiring as to whether the terms on which Creston Reclamation Company was given its acreage on the flats included provision for the company giving the village flats lands for exhibition ground, golf course, air port, etc., the minister replied that the 1932 agreement was identical with one drawn up in 1926 and that whatever arrangements it was desired to make as to air port, etc. was a matter wholly between the company and the council.

In connection with the local power and light situation Councillor Jackson pressed for action by the council to break the deadlock that had been reached as between the West Kootenay Power & Light Company as regards the power rights on Goat River canyon. There was some discussion of the subject part of which had to do with witholding action until the arrival in the west of J. J. Warren, president of the former companp, and it was dropped with the observation that it would probably be heard of after the October meeting of Creston board of trade.

Canyon City

A. L. Barnhardt of Glenlilly is a visitor here this week, with Mr. and Mrs. F. Knott.

Martin Nelson is at present a patient at Creston Valley public hospital at Creston, to which institution he was taken at the end of the week. R. Lowerison is also a Creston hospital patient.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Pochin, of Nelson, are at the ranch looking after the harvest and shipping of the winter apple crop.

Mrs. Chapman of Nelson arrived on Sunday on a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Matt. Clayton.

A. Halstead and Mrs. Lowerison left on Sunday for Pincher Creek, Alberta, where they are this week appearing as witnesses in a court case in which Alf. Nelson, formerly of Canyon, is plaintiff. Before returning Mr. Halstead will visit with Mr. and Mrs. E. Langston at Coalhurst.

Alfred and Con. Nygaard, who are taking their high school course through the postal section of the department of education at Victoria, have just received a report on their September work and it is exceptionally satisfactory.

Miss Kathleen and Bill Clayton were Friday to Sunday visitors at Nelson

The report is current that the Canyon Scotch will have some doings on St. Andrew's night. Now that the duty has been removed frou bagpipes a real celebration is in order.

Rev. Chas. Addyman of Moyie had charge of the services in the United Church on Sunday afternoon, which were quite largely attended.

In the heavy rains encountered on Friday and early Sunday morning the Canyon district received a moisture supply of about 1½ inches, and the orchards will go into winter quarters in fine shape.

Alice Siding

This section was alive with hunters at the weekend taking full advantage of the three-day open season on pheasants. A few hunters got the bag limit of three each day out.

Mr and Mrs. F. W. Ash, who have been living at Creston for the past two years, have returned to make their home on the ranch for the present, at least.

Walter Johnson is busy with the erection of quite a commodious log bungalow on his ranch at Lakeview Heights

Messrs. Andrews, Nelson and Gordon, of Nelson, were here at the weekend for the pheasant shooting season, guests of Guy Constable.

Byron Willis left earlier in the month for Granum, Alberta, where he will be Presbyterian student missionary at that point as well as Jumbo Valley in the same section. He covers a large field as he is the only Presbyterian pastor between High River and Calgary.

Friends of Mrs. M. Churchill, a former well known resident of Alice Siding, but now of Vancouver will be glad to hear of her success at the 1932 Vancouver exhibition. In a class open to ladies over 70 years of age she won first prize on embroidered centre piece and second on handmade quilt. Mrs. Churchill is just over 80 years of age, but appears to be enjoying a splendid health.

Our somewhat older residents who can recall Mr. and Mrs. Swan Swanson who, about 20 years ago, occupied the ranch now owned by Jas. Compton, will sympathize with them in the death of their second son, Cecil, who was killed in an auto mishap on October 2nd, when he was struck by an auto while walking along the road east of Dryden, Ontario, where the Swansons' now reside. Deceased was 23 years of age and a young man of great promise.

Creston W.I. Has 17th Birthday

Will Celebrate with Bridge on October 26th Hospital Committee Having Annual Canned Fruit Shower, October 29th.

Creston and District Women's Institute met in October session on Friday afternoon. The chair was occupied by Mrs. T. M. Edmondson, president, and an attendance smaller than usual due to unfavorable weather.

Word was received from Victoria that no district conference will be held this year, this being decided by the vote of the several institutes in the Kootenay-Boundary district.

The hospital committee reported having one sewing meeting. It was decided to have the annual shower of canned fruit for the hospital in United Church Hall on October 29th.

The Institute has been in existance seventeen years this month, and an anniversary bridge party was arranged to be held on Wednesday, October 26th, at which it is hoped there will be a large attendance.

Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Hayes offered to make some quilts, and anyone having suitable material is asked to donate it, clean and ready for use. There will, no doubt, be a demand for quilts during the coming winter.

Mrs. (Dr.) Warren, formerly of Warner, Alberta, was asked by the president to give a short address on institute work in Alberta. She very ably responded, giving details of the organization of this work, in which she has long been interested, and giving the impression that Alberta is very efficient. She was heartily applauded.

Tea hostesses for the afternoon were Mrs. J. E. Hayden and Mrs. H. W. McLaren. The freewill offering for the Crippled Children's Hostital was $1.10.

Demand Action Power Project

Special Council Meeting Decides Send Representatives Victoria Urging Issuance License Probably on Summit Creek.

Provided Creston Power & Light Company, Limited, can produce satisfactory evidence of their ability to adequately finance a hydro power development to serve the whole district, Creston village council will finance the sending of two delegates to Victoria to press for the immediate issuing of a license to the company to at once get on with such work.

This was decided at a special meeting of the council Monday night at which all members were present, and which was addressed by a delegation from Creston board of trade, with Chas. Murrell and Frank Putnam as spokesmen.

Several months ago the local power company staked Summit Creek and prepared and filed with the water comptroller all the necessary plans for developing power on that stream, and it is for a license on Summit Creek that the delegation will direct its efforts.

It was agreed that the council would name one delegate and the board of trade the other, and the expense of the two is limited to $250. They will leave for the capital as soon as they receive the necessary definite assurance of the company's ability to finance the project. It is understood that as soon as the license is secured construction work will commence.

Credit Means Debt

Much is being heard these days in criticism of Governments and banks, and proposals of many kinds are advanced having as their object the "reform" of the banking system, the "curtailment" of the powers of banks, the "socialization" and the "nationalization" of banking, money and credit; the gold standard is attacked on the one hand and defended on the other; bi-metalism is advocated; "inflation" is urged by many, while others argue that present inflation means ultimate "deflation" and future trouble. Drastic writing down of present indebtedness, even complete wiping out of debts, is demanded in some quarters, which others claim is a policy of "repudiation" and the destruction of future credit.

Present criticism of the banks rests primarily in the fact that, at the present time, the banks will not extend credit. If people today could go to their bank and borrow as readily and as largely as they could and did in 1928 and 1929, much of the criticism now heard of the banks would die out. It is because they cannot borrow, and in thousands of cases have no employment and so cannot earn, while in the case of farmers, prices are so low that there is loss rather than profit on their production, that people, already in debt, are bitterly critical of the banks.

Critical over what? Because the banks will not extend credit to them. In other words, the banks will not allow these people to get further into debt to them. So much is being said about banking credit,—using it, expanding it, contracting it,—that the average person is likely to have a confused idea as to what banking credit, or any kind of credit, actually means. And as most of us are just average persons, and particularly where financial and economic terms are concerned, it is perhaps well to reduce credit to its simplest and safest terms, and see what we make of it. Credit means debt. No matter at what angle we may view it, it means either immediately or prospectively, an obligation assumed, a debt to be paid. We borrow or buy on credit today and pledge ourselves to pay on some future day. This is true whether the transaction involves a dollar payable within a month or a million dollars payable in a score of years, and it is equally true whether it be an individual, a corporation, a municipality, a province or a nation. The principle is the same, no matter what the circumstance.

Our major difficulties today arise from the fact that there was too much credit, not too little, available to us in the past. It was easy to borrow; still easier to buy on the deferred payment, or instalment plan. Everybody was doing it. The nations of the world fought a great four-years war on credit, destroying cities, industries, shipping, millions of productive human lives, blowing it all away with high explosives, and promising to pay the huge bills incurred at some future time. Farmers bought more land, more implements, combines, tractors, trucks, automobiles, radios, etc., etc., on credit; the workingmen and salaried people in the towns and cities bought houses, and furniture, and automobiles, scores of things they regarded as necessities and other scores which were luxuries, on credit. Salesmen urged the people to do these things, telling them their credit was good. And all this credit meant just one thing,—it meant debt.

Governments and corporations proceeded on the same basis. Hundreds of millions of borrowed money were expended on railways, high standard highways, public buildings, and modern public services of many kinds. People demanded these things and enjoyed them. Voices raised in warning that a day of reckoning would come were disregarded, and those who gave voice to such warnings were decried as pessimists, people without vision or initiative, hopelessly non-progressive. Credit was available, so why not use it and let the future pay? And every credit used meant a debt contracted.

What was then the future is now the present, and we are called upon to pay. And that's the chief trouble today,—we have got to pay, and we don't like it. Nay, more, we have awakened to the fact that it is now well nigh impossible to pay, because we used up more credit, and thus created more debt, than our resources now enable us to pay.

Credit is an expensive things. It also is an illusive thing, a will-o'-the-wisp to the unwary and thoughtlessly venturesome. But the debt created,—and remember debt is always created by credit; you cannot have one without the other,—is not illusive; it is a hard, concrete fact. No matter what your credit may be, it is no more, if you are wise, than your capacity to pay the debt which the use of that credit creates.

Present debts cannot safely be disposed of by apparently simple procedure of wiping them out by legislative action, or through the artificial process of inflation. Repudiation would be destructive of future credits which, within reason, are essential to the carrying on of the world's business, because all credit is merely confidence; destroy confidence by acts of repudiation and you destroy credit. On the other hand, inflation beyond normal, ultimately means deflation back to normal. If the pendulum swings to the extreme right, it will have to swing just as far to the left before it gradually reaches a normal position. These are laws of nature which no legislation in the world can override.

Nor can present indebtedness be liquidated by more credit, which only means more debt, or a transfer of debt from one source to another. Debts once contracted must be honorably and honestly discharged. In some cases, in no doubt a goodly number of cases, adjustments must be made in order to prevent maximum losses by both debtor and creditor, but in the majority of case debts ought to be paid through frugal living, practised economies, painstaking work. Having enjoyed what credit bought for us, we must now pay for that credit. Because we did not know how to use credit wisely when it was obtainable, we are now realizing what it means to pass through the slow, laborious and generally painful process of paying our debts.

Suffered A Severe Attack Of Dysentery

Mr. P. L. D. Moullard, Vernon, B.C., writes:—"Last Summer I suffered from a severe attack of dysentery. I tried nearly everything on the market, without getting any relief, until a friend told me to use Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which I did, and I got immediate relief. Now I am making it a rule to always keep a bottle of it in my medicine chest.

"Wild Strawberry is sure relief for dysentery, colic and diarrhoea, but I always see I get the genuine 'Dr. Fowler's'."

An Unusual Damage Suit

Belgian Actor Claims £500 For Loss Of Beard

For the loss of his beard, which was shaved off in a French prison, a Belgian film actor, M. de Nervy, is claiming £500 damages from the State.

The beard, a luxuriant growth, was of great commercial as well as aesthetic value, M. de Nervy declared because it enabled him to play important parts in which a patriarchal appearance was required.

He bases his claim for compensation on the fact that while awaiting release after completing a sentence for fraud, he was sent by mistake to the penitentiary at Fresnes and subjected to the same regime as criminals who were required to be clean-shaven, instead of remaining simply under detention, as he was entitled.

Money is scarce yet she has pretty clothes

"You always look as if you had just stepped out of a fashion sheet. Yet money is none too plentiful with you. How do you do it?" the neighbors were always asking Mrs. Burnette. One day she told them. "My secret of pretty clothes is simple. When my dresses, blouses and underthings become faded with much washing, I renew their color beauty by a simple rinsing in Diamond Tints. These wonderful tints are made by the makers of Diamond Dyes which you know are the best dyes made for dark colors. Diamond Tints are for light shades. They need no boiling and they last through repeated launderings. All you need to do is to rinse your things in Diamond Tints. You can get such lovely shades by using them. So you see," said Mrs. Burnette, "pretty clothes are as easy for you to have as for me."

The production of creamery butter in Canada in August, amounted to 24,705,968 pounds, compared with 30,182,925 pounds in the preceding month, and 27,806,505 pounds in August, 1931. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have increased their production, but from Quebec to the Pacific, production has decreased. The largest percentage reduction was in Saskatchewan, which is down 24 per cent. compared with last year. These figures were released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Persistent Asthma. A most distressing characteristic of this debilitating disease, is the persistence with which recurring attacks come to sap away strength and leave the sufferer in a state of almost continual exhaustion. Hero Of the Sudan

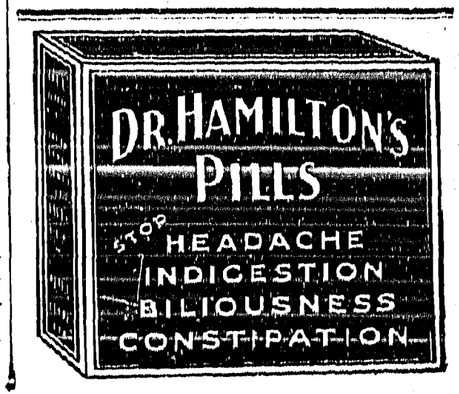
One of the last surviving heroes of the British conquest of the Sudan, Sir Rudolph Slatin Pasha, 75, died in a sanitarium at Vienna, Austria. He was an Austrian by birth. When 21 he enlisted in the British army in Egypt. He served under "Chinese" Gordon and with Lord Kitchener as chief of the British Intelligence Service, and subsequently, as the British general, Sir Rudolph Slatin, he governed the Sudan.

Health cannot be looked for in the child that is subject to worms, because worms destroy health by creating internal disturbances that retard development and cause serious weakness. Miller's Worm Powders expel worms and are so beneficial in their action that the systems of the little sufferers are restored to healthfulness, all the discomforts and dangers of worm infection are removed, and satisfactory growth is assured.

Flouted Bad Luck

When the Thirteen Club of London held its annual luncheon recently superstition was defied in many ways. The members walked under a ladder, opened an umbrella in the room, spilt salt, sat at an oval table facing ladies' shoes, and in other ways flouted bad luck.



This Method Is Simple

One Way To Combat Problem Of Soil Drifting

Soil drifting is a very serious problem in many parts of Canada, and many are the ways that have been tried to combat it. Here is a new one, and one which looks fairly promising. Spread strips of fresh manure about three rods apart. Then drive the spreader the other way across the field so as to make checkerboards. Not only does this keep the soil at home, but it catches the neighbor's soil.

CANADIAN WOMEN FIND DUSTING DISTASTEFUL

Dust cloths going into discard; Unpleasant to use; a bother to Wash

APPLEFORD WONDER PAPER HAS GREAT VOGUE

Of all household tasks, that of dusting is the least appealing to the majority of women.

However, this condition, like many another connected with housework, is undergoing radical change. In a great many Canadian homes the women are discarding dust cloths entirely, and are using Appleford Wonder Paper instead, because it actually dusts—as it cleans—as it polishes, doing a better and much quicker job than the old dust cloth ever did.

This new, and extremely modern Wonder Paper, is made from clean rags, and soft paper pulp, treated in a scientific way with a high-grade furniture polish; and absorbs dirt instead of spreading it.

Appleford Wonder Paper comes in handy-size packages, twenty-five large sheets for twenty-five cents. You crumple a sheet into a soft wad and go over the surfaces requiring attention. Then when one side is soiled or worn, turn the Wonder Paper inside out. After you have given a quick and lasting finish to furniture and woodwork, you can still use Wonder Paper on the floors, if you wish.

And when you are through, there's no old duster to shake out or wash. Throw the soiled Wonder Paper away and you've completed the most tiresome part of housework in half the time and with half the effort.

Wonder Paper is made by the makers of the famous PARA-SANI Heavy Waxed Paper in the Green Box.

Court Ruling On Auto Crash Which Killed Earl Of Egmont

Southampton, Eng.—A county judge found the automobile collision in the New Forest in which Earl of Egmont, former Priddis, Alberta, rancher, was killed last May, was caused by "gross negligence on the part of both drivers."

The judge arrived at his decision in dismissing with costs action for £100 by John Penny, driver of the car in which the earl was killed, against Ira Jack Lithauer, London, driver of the other car.

The action alleged negligence on the part of Lithauer, but the judge found both were negligent in that each failed to see the other car and both were driving too fast.

There was not "a pin to choose" between them, he said.

Advances Plan For Circulation Of Money

Solution To Economic Problem Suggested By A. C. Stewart

Springside, Sask.—Offering a solution to the present econom c difficulties by advancing a plan of putting more money into circulation in Canada and reducing the rate of interest, Hon. A. C. Stewart, Minister of Highways, spoke here.

He suggested a bank or commission be set up as a branch of the federal government for the purpose of handl ng all fiduciary money and gold. This banker commission would be authorized by the Dominion government to issue fiduciary money to such extent as could be absorbed under conditions fully explained by Mr. Stewart.

He stated that the result of this plan would mean that high-priced government securities would no longer be available to capital in Canada, but instead would be available to carry on industry and commerce.

The effect of sufficient money being put into circulation in the Dominion would mean that all great investment bodies and investors, not having access to government or municipal securities, would loan their money to industry and it would go into commercial channels at reduced rates of interest.

"Bright Fan" Sinking

Mishap Should Not Affect Safety and Feasibility Of Bay Route

The Pas, Man.—The feasibility and safety of the Hudson Bay route should not be affected by the recent sinking of the "Bright Fan."

The mishap was an act of God, declared Captain R. E. Oliver, commander of the grain steamer, upon his arrival here from Churchill.

Captain Oliver declined any statement regarding details aboard his ship when the crash came, but members of the crew declared everything was in order. Lookouts were at their posts.

Captain Oliver was reticent about telling of the accident, stating he did not wish to commit himself until he reaches the east and the enquiry into the disaster is held.

"I shall be glad when it is all over and all the facts are known to the proper authorities," he declared.

"The striking of the iceberg by the ship was an accident that no man could avoid and was one of those tragedies that strike in the night," the captain said.

Churchill is a coming port and will become the centre of one of the biggest trade and shipping routes in spite of the loss of the ship, he said.

English Woman Killed By Chinese Bandits

PREFERENCE ON WHEAT SHOULD BENEFIT WEST

Ottawa, Ont.—A highly optimistic picture of the benefits which will accrue to Canada by the tariff concessions granted to this country on wheat and wheat flour was given in the House of Commons by Prime Minister R. B. Bennett. He spoke of this farm commodity as at the moment "of most immediate importance to this country."

Free entry of flour as against a minimum general British tariff of 10 per cent. is secured to Canada under her agreement with the United Kingdom. A preference of six cents per bushel on Canadian wheat is granted.

"Not only does the increase in the sale of Canadian flour widen the Canadian wheat market, but Canadian flour is most important in promoting the direct sale of Canadian wheat," said Premier Bennett.

"In 1931, the total import of wheat flour into the United Kingdom was 6,141,192 barrels, of which 3,712,824 barrels came from British countries and 2,428,368 barrels from foreign countries. Canada being the chief British empire supplier with 2,225,490 barrels and the United States the chief foreign supplier with 1,187,190 barrels.

"This tariff preference should deflect to British empire countries a large part of the flour trade of the United Kingdom heretofore supplied by foreign countries.

"On wheat we have secured a preference of 2s. per quarter. Article 4 of the agreement makes the continuance of this preference, as well as the preference granted in respect to copper, zinc and lead, conditional upon empire producers of these commodities being able and willing to offer them a first sale in the United Kingdom at prices not exceeding the world prices and in quantities sufficient to supply the requirements of the United Kingdom consumers.

"I have never at any time represented to the wheat growers of this country that the effect of a preference would be to set up in their favor a price differential in world markets and at the expense of the British consumer. What I did maintain was that it was vital to us to find a secured market in the United Kingdom which is now by far, and is likely to continue to be, the greatest wheat consuming country in the whole world.

"There is no heed of emphasizing the value of this market to Canada. The preference, it is agreed, will substantially increase the purchase of Canadian wheat by British importers.

Fertilizer Well Distributed by Prize Drawing

Orchardists, berrymen and vegetable growers paid close attention to Mr. S. H. Hopkins' talks on chemical fertilizers at the fall fair. The tables being filled up Mr. Hopkins improvised a stand and with the aid of the prize fertilizers and some glass containers displayed the finished products of the Warfield plant. Pamphlets were distributed giving full information on the results to be obtained from the use of ammonium phosphate, sulphate of ammonia and the complete fertilizer. His talk was backed by ample proof of the efficiency of these fertilizers for he had numerous photographs showing the increase in the size of the crops where they had been used.

When it is realized that every 400 boxes of apples produced in the orchard must absorb as much nitrogen as there is in 100 lbs of sulphate of ammonia the need for maintaining fertility by the regular application of some fertilizer becomes apparent. The Agricultural Association is planning a contest for next year of an experimental nature in the use of these fertilizers; and no doubt, in time, their value in relation to local soil conditions will be fully demonstrated.

The names of the exhibitors holding the lucky entry numbers in the "Elephant Brand Fertilizer" prize drawing were as follows.

Fighting Days Are Over

Jellicoe's Flagship To Become a Gunnery Practice Vessel

Two of Britain's famous fighting ships will soon leave Portsmouth for the last time. The "Iron Duke," Earl Jellicoe's flagship in the Battle of Jutland, is to become a gunnery practice vessel. Most of her fittings, already removed when she was originally ordered scrapped under the London Naval Treaty, have been retrieved.

The cruiser "Terrible," which is leaving for Newport, Monmouthshire, for breaking up, became famous in the South African War, when her guns and naval ratings were rushed at the last moment into Ladysmith and helped Sir George White to sustain the siege for several months.

After lying 60 years in the River Thames on loan from the Admiralty, the training ship "Arethusa" has finally been condemned. The vessel will be replaced by the German sailing ship, "Peking," which will be renamed the "Arethusa." The condemned "Arethusa" was the last British vessel to proceed into action under full sail. This action took place during the Crimean War.

Before the bottle is empty you'll feel years younger—eyes will brighten—step grow sprightlier—nerves steadier—you'll sleep sound, enjoy your meals, and after a hard day's work you'll be ready for wholesome recreation—one million women already know all this.

Woman Detectives On Scotland Yard Force

Valuable Aid In Locating Women Connected With Bandit Gangs

Having proved that they can keep a secret and know how to "mix" with criminals, women are being added to the detective force of Scotland Yard, in London, England. For months they have been secretly trained at Scotland Yard, and they have not divulged a word to anybody. Three are now "on the strength" of the Criminal Investigation Department. It is expected that another 20 or 30 will complete their training shortly, and will work with men detectives. All are young, and have been chosen largely for their capacity for forming friendships. Definite evidence has been obtained by the Yard that there are clever women criminals associated with modern bandit gangs, and the women detectives will aid in locating them.

Eat Celery For Health

Ranks Higher Among Vegetables As a Source Of Mineral Supply

It is doubtful if any of the common vegetables can compare with celery as an aid to general health. Most physicians agree that as a blood purifier and for ridding the body of toxic substances, this vegetable is in a class by itself.

Like most leafy vegetables, the purpose of celery in the diet is not to provide heat or energy, but rather to furnish the vitamins, minerals and other secondary food so essential to good health. As a source of minerals, celery ranks high among the vegetables, being particularly rich in lime and magnesium. For this reason it is a great blood regulator and tends to combat any tendency to excess acidity. Celery is also a valuable source of vitamins, being one of the best for vitamin "B."—Dominion Fruit Branch.

PROBLEMS OF THE MODERN HOME

Golden Text: "As for me and my house, we will serve Jehovah."—Joshua 24.15.

Lesson: Joshua 24:14, 15; Mark 10: 2-12; Ephesians 6:1-9.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 127.

Explanations and Comments

The Challenge: Choose Whom Your House Will Serve, Joshua 24:14, 15.—Because of all God had done for them, the children of Israel owed Him loyal, undivided service, Joshua declared. They must put away the gods which their fathers served beyond Euphrates and in Egypt. If, however, they were determined not to serve Jehovah, they could choose whether they would serve the gods their fathers had served and had renounced, or the gods of the people of the land where they had settled. This he said ironically, showing them what alternatives they had if they would not be loyal to Jehovah.

"Man must worship. He must have a god. That is universally true. If men will not serve the Lord, then let them choose whom they will serve, only let them make their decision in the clear light of what the kingship of God really means. If today men say of God's anointed and appointed King, 'We will not have this Man to rule over us,' then let us urge them to choose among the alternatives which are offered them; only let them compare the results of the reign of Christ over human life with those of any other authority to which loyalty may be yielded."—G. Campbell Morgan.

"And to every man there openeth
A high way and a low;
And every man decideth
Which way his soul must go."
—Oxenham.

"But," Joshua added, "as for me and my house, we will serve Jehovah."

"The world will pay little heed to our exhortation if we do not follow it up by personal practice." — Joseph Parker.

Viennese Architect Proceeds On Foot To Visit World's Grain Show

Jules Salaman, a young Viennese architect, has already started out on a trip to visit the World's Grain Fair in Regina next year. But he needs an early start, for he is walking to the Saskatchewan capital and is earning his way by singing and playing his clarinet.

A picturesque figure clad in brown walking shorts, khaki shirt, high laced boots and a felt hat decorated with a cockade of flowers, Salaman has arrived in England and is now touring the British Isles before boarding a ship to cross the Atlantic. He is a student of architecture and an excellent vocalist.

The itinerant musician hopes to sing some of his Viennese songs for the king and queen as a finale to his British tour. He is a member of the Academie de Chanteurs de Vienne and has sung under the directorship of Bruno Walker and Felix Weingartner.

Cunard House Opened

New London Headquarters Of Line Is Now Occupied

The Cunard House, the new London headquarters of the Cunard Line and its associated companies, the Anchor Line and the Commonwealth and Dominion Line, has been opened in Leadenhall Street, the heart of the shipping centre. The building is planned in a new fashion like a huge letter S.

H. W. Corry, chairman of the company, formed to operate the building, said the structure had been planned long before the keel had been laid for the new liner 534, the giant Cunarder on which construction work has been halted.

He also explained that some of the furniture in the building had been saved from the old liners "Caronia" and "Carmania," the general impression among distinguished shipping men at present is that resumption of work on the 534 will not be long delayed.

THE HOUSE OF DREAMS-COME-TRUE

MARGARET PEDLER

Author Of "The Splendid Folly." "The Hermit Of Far End."
Hodder & Stoughton, Ltd., London.

Jean's thoughts lashed her. Her shoulders bent and cowered a little as though beneath a physical blow.

There had been a time—oh! very long ago, it seemed, before Destiny had come with her snuffers and quenched the twin flames of love and happiness—a time when dimly, as in some exquisite dream, she had heard the sound of little voices, felt the helpless touch of tiny hands. Perhaps Nesta, too, had heard those voices, felt those clinging hands, while her soul quickened to the vision of a future which might hold some deeper meaning, some more sacred trust and purpose, than her empty wayward past.

And she, Jean, had stood between Nesta and the fulfilment of that dream, forever bidding her entrance to her woman's kingdom.

She saw it all now with a terrible clarity of vision, understood to the full the two alternatives which faced her—to go with Blaise, as he implored, or to send him—her man, the man she loved—back to Nesta. There was no longer any middle course.

A voice sounded in her ears.

"No true happiness ever came of running away from duty. And if ever I'm up against such a thing—a choice like this—I hope to God I'd be able to hang on, to run straight, even if it half-killed me to do it!"

The words sounded so clear and distinct that Jean half raised her head to see who spoke them. And then, in an overwhelming rush of memory, she recognized that it was no actual voice she heard but the mental echo of her own words to Nick—to Nick at the time whe he had been passing through a like fire of fierce temptation.

How easily, in her young, untried ignorance, the words had fallen from her lips as she had urged Nick to renounce his fixed resolve! Such eminently wise and excellent counsel! And how little—how crassly little had she realized at the time the huge demand that she was making!

She had spoken as though it were comparatively easy to reject the wrong and choose the right—to follow the stern and narrow path of Duty, through the mists and utter darkness that enshrouded it, up to those shining heights which lie beyond human sight—the outposts of Eternal Heaven itself.

Easy! . . . . Oh, God! . . . .

When at last Jean uncovered her face and lifted it to meet the set gaze of the man beside her, it was wan and ravaged—the face of one who has come through some fierce purgatory of torment.

"Well?" he demanded, his voice roughened because he found himself unable to steady it with that strained and altered face upturned to his. "Well? Are you going to send me back to Nesta?"

She did not answer his question. Instead, she put another.

"Do you think she—loves you?"

"Nesta? Yes. As far as her sort can love, I believe she does."

Jean nodded, as though it were the answer she had expected.

"Blaise . . . . I'm going to send you back to her. I'm sure now. I know. It's the only thing we can do . . . . We must say goodbye—altogether—never see each other again."

"Never?" The word came draggingly.

"Never. It—it would be too hard for us, Blaise, to see each other."

"Yes," he answered slowly. "It would be too hard."

They were both silent. The minutes ticked away unregarded. Time had ceased to count. This farewell was till the end of time.

"Blaise—" All the resonance had gone out of her voice. It sounded flat and tired. "You—you will go back to her?"

"Yes, I will go back."

She stretched out her hands flutteringly.

"Then go . . . . go soon, Blaise! I—I can't bear very much more."

He opened his arms, then, and she went to him, and for a space they clung together in silence. For the last time he set his lips to hers, held her once more against his heart. Then slowly they drew apart, stricken eyes gazing lingeringly into other eyes as stricken, and presently the closing of the terrace door told her that he had gone, and that she must turn her feet to the solitary path of those who have said farewell to love.

Henceforth, she would be alone—living or dying, quite alone.

It was long past midnight when Claire returned from the Dower House.

She found Jean sitting beside the grey embers of a burnt-out fire, her hands lying folded upon her knee, her eyes staring stonily in front of her in a fixed, unseeing gaze.

Claire called to her softly, as when one wakes a sleeper.

"Jean!"

Jean turned her head.

"So you have got back?" she said dully. She stood up stiffly, as though her limbs were cramped. "Claire, I am going away—right away from here—to Beirnfels."

"Why?" asked Claire.

She waited tensely for the answer.

"Blaise has been here. He asked me to go away with him. I've sent him back to Nesta."

The short, stilted sentences fell mechanically from her lips. She spoke exactly like a child repeating a lesson learned by rote.

Claire's eyes grew very pitiful.

"And must you go to Beirnfels alone?" she asked quietly. "Won't you take me with you?"

"Will you come?"—incredulously.

"Of course I'll come. I shouldn't dream of letting you go by yourself."

And then, all at once, Jean's tired body, exhausted by the soul's long conflict, gave way, and she slipped to the ground in a dead faint.

CHAPTER XXXV.

The Eve Of Departure

A week later Jean sat at the foot of the stairs and surveyed with faint amusement the motley collection of trunks and suit-cases which thronged the hall.

She was still looking pale and worn, strung up to face her self-imposed exile from the country which now held everything that was dear to her, but no enormity of sorrow would ever blind Jean for long to the whimsical aspect that attends so many of the little things of daily life.

"What a lot of useless lumber we women carry about with us wherever we go!" she commented. "Five—six—seven packages to supply the needs of two solitary females—and Heaven only knows how many brown paper parcels will be required at the last moment for all the things we shall find we have forgotten when the time actually comes to start."

Claire, standing on the flight of stairs above and viewing the assemblage in the hall from over the top of the banister rail, giggled helplessly.

"Yes, they do look a lot," she admitted. "However" — hopefully — "there'll be plenty of room for them all when we actually get to Biernfels."

"Oh, plenty," agreed Jean. "But we've got to convey them half across Europe first—two lone women and one miserable maid who will probably combine train-sickness and homesickness to an extent that will totally incapacitate her for the performance of her duties."

At this moment the front-door bell clanged violently through the house, as though pulled by someone in a tremendous hurry. Claire hastily withdrew her head from over the banister rail and disappeared upstairs, while Jean relinquished the accommodation offered by the bottommost step and sought refuge in the nearest of the sitting-rooms, closing the door stealthily behind her.

A moment later Tucker, who had caught sight of her hurriedly retreating figure, reopened it and announced imperturbably:

"Mr. Burke."

Jean greeted him with surprise, but without any feeling of embarrassment. So much had happened since the day she had eluded him on the Moor, events of such intimate and tragic import had swept her path, that the unexpected meeting failed to rouse any feeling either of anger or dismay. Burke, and everything connected with him, belonged to another period of her existence altogether—to that glorious care-free time when it had seemed as though life were a deep, inexhaustible well bubbling over with wonderful possibilities. Burke was merely a ghost—a revenant from that far distant epoch.

"I'm in time, then?" he said, when he had shaken hands.

"In time? In time for what?"

"In time to see you before you go."

"Oh, yes." Jean spoke lightly. "You're in time for that. But who told you I was going away? I didn't know you were in England, even."

"I came back a fortnight ago — to London. Judith wired me from home that you were leaving Coombe Eavie."

"I don't see the necessity for her wiring you," remarked Jean a little coldly. "There was no need for you to see me."

"There was—every need."

She glanced at him keenly, a new note in his voice, an unexpected gravity and restraint.

"Every need," he repeated. He paused, then went on quickly, with a nervousness that was foreign to him. "Jean, I know everything that has happened—that your engagement to Tormarin is at an end—and I have come to ask you if you will be my wife. No—hear me out!"—as she would have interrupted him. "I'm not asking you now as—as I did before. If you will marry me, I swear I will ask for nothing that you are not willing to give. I'm making no demands. I've learned now"—with a faint, wry smile—"that you cannot force love. It can only be given. And I want nothing but just the right to take care of you, to shield you—to keep the sharp corners of life away from you." Then, as he read her incredulous face, he went on gravely: "If I had wanted more than that, Jean, if I had not learned something—just from loving you, I should not have waited until now. I should have come at once—as soon as I learned from Madame de Varigny that Tormarin's wife was still alive."

She looked at him curiously.

"Why didn't you come then, Geoffrey? I sometimes wondered—you being you!"—with a faint smile. "Because, of course, I knew why you had rushed off to France. Madame de Varigny explained that."

A dull flush mounted to his face.
