Council Discuss Power Situation

Holding Special Session, 16th, to Decide West Kootenay Power Company Application to Erect Poles Streets and Lanes.

Beyond passing accounts for payment totalling $841, nothing of importance was definitely accomplished at the November meeting of the village council on Monday night. Reeve McFarland presided, with Councillor Jackson present, but Councillor Henderson unavoidably absent, and it was this lack of full attendance that decision was deferred until a special meeting on Thursday night, 16th, in connection with the application of the West Kootenay Power & Light Company for the use of village streets and lanes for the distribution of light and power throughout the town.

The correspondence included a letter from the attorney general informing that the Village Act had been amended so that villages now have the same powers as other municipalities in connection with public libraries. The Women's Institute wrote thanking for the use of Park pavilion for the flower show last month, and pointing out the shabby condition the hall was in when put in readiness for the show.

Ths registrar of titles has been advised that the purchaser of the Fulljames house h s liquidated all arrears of taxes and that title can now issue to the purchaser, W B. Muir. The council will very carefully investigate before acceding to the request of Creston Athletic Club to lay a pipe from the tennis court to give a water supply to a proposed skating and hockey rink at the park.

The council is not in favor of putting down at least two new sidewalks requested, but will undertake to extend the walk along Park Road from A. Weir's residence to the park. Of the $841 of accounts passed for payment, $407 is for labor and some material used in improving Creston Avenue, but does not include any gravel, which is being hauled at $1.50 per yard from the river.

In connection with the application of West Kootenay Power & Light Company, J. D McDonald, general superintendent, was present and discussed the company's side of the matter with the two councillors. He submitted the schedule of rates the company proposes to charge for light, power and street lights, and dealt at some length with the efforts that have been made to come to an amicable arrangement for the purchase of Creston Electric Company, Limited, plant, etc., which, to date, had got nowhere.

He outlined what the West Kootenay Company would have to do in the way of securing and placing transformers, purchasing the new and fully modern street lighting, equipment, etc., all of which took time, and urged that the council pass the resolution giving them permission to use the village streets and lanes, and place in the by-law covering the concession whatever clauses the council thought necessary to give reasonable protection to Creston Electric Compa y when terms of sale are being arranged by the two companies.

After an informal discussion of the whole matter with Mr. McDonald the council decided to let the matter stand until Thursday, when a special meeting will be held and J. G. Farris, manager of Creston Electric Company, will be asked to attend and state his company's side of the proposition.

Armistice Day Exercises Appeal

Returned Men and Citizens Out in Large Numbers for Service at Cenotaph—Rev. A. Walker's Address Makes Impression.

Remembrance Day ceremonies at Creston on Saturday were along similar lines to those in other centres throughout the British Empire. A. W. Sinclair, veteran of many campaigns, led the parade of 30 ex-service men and five members of the American Legion, to the cenotaph where the two minutes silence was observed.

Traffic, which in former times disturbed the exercises, was this year diverted by way of Victoria Avenue and Hillside Road, on instructions from the attorney general.

A. Millen blew the calls. "Fall In" "Last Post," and "Reveille."

Rev. O. A. Thomson gave the invocation, and Rev. Andrew Walker gave a short address, indicating how horrible future wars would be through the intervention of chemical science, and how futile were man's efforts for peace unless guided by true religion.

Creston band, under the direction of Bandmaster W. G Hendy, accom anied the singing of O. Canada, "O God Our Help in Ages Past," and the national anthem, with their usual ability. Representatives of local organizations and business firms placed wreaths on the monument.

A new feature of the year's exercises was the presence of the recently f rmed troop of Boy Scouts under the command of Scoutmaster Ed. Gardiner, and the large concourse of citizens was favorably impressed with the smart bearing and keenness of this younger generation.

After leaving the cenotaph the Creston and American Legion members marched to the cemetery where graves of fallen comrades from both sides of the line were decorated with poppies

Board Discusses Hospital Report

Recommends the Sale of Yearly Treatment Tickets — Resolution re Customs and Highways Withdrawn—Other Motions.

The best attended meeting of Creston board of trade this year was that of the November session on Tuesday night, with President W. L. Bell in the chair, and the feature business the report of the board's special hospital committee which submitted a comprehensive report in connection with financing Creston's new public hospital.

The report was submitted by the committee chairman, Chas. Murrell, and for the present recommends the sale hospital tickets, or contracts, at $12 each, these to entitle the holder to all the hospital care he requirs, but does not include the doctor's charges. From a careful study of hospital costs in various centres the committee had found that about $11 was the average cost per contract patient and at $12 the hospital would have a profit of about one dollar.

The committee recommended that a move should be made through the local member and other hospital associations to have legislation introduced that would make each school district also taxable for hospital support on the same line as in Alberta. Sweepstakes were not favored except in emergencies.

In connection with contracts it was recommended that public meetings be held at different points to explain them and that after a publicity campaign a drive should be made to sell at least 300, payable half-yearly if dsired, and these to become effective not later than February 1st.

Mr. Murrell and the committee were thanked for their splendid effort, and it was agreed to send a copy of the report to the local hospit l board, to the local member and to other hospital associations, requesting action.

The October resolution of Guy Constable—F. H. Jackson—that was held over till this meeting, was withdrawn. Mr. Constable spoke at some length pointing out that the resolution dea t only with customs office matters, whereas the popular impression seemed to be that the resolution was designed to undo much good work done by the board in times past in connection with the K.V. North and South highway. Mr. Constable reported that a search of the board minutes had re ealed the fa t that the resolution he sought to rescind had not, apparently, ever been passed, and in view of that fact his resolution to rescind was not in order.

The minister of public works will be written to asking for the passing of regulations to safeguard highway travel by compelling freight truck drivers to exercise greater care when loading up. Recently one of these carriers tied a keg of nails on the back of his truck and while travelling between Gray Creek and Creston the keg burst open, the nails spilled along the road, with great damage to the tires of autos travelling in both directions after the nail spilling.

Hon. H. H. Stevens, minister of trade and commerce, is to be written to asking that the proposed withdrawal of inspection of fruit entering Canada from the United States be not tolerated. Recently this sort of iuspection was dropped by the B.C. authorities. For the prevention of a possible spread of orchard pests, particularly, a continuance of inspection is deemed necessary.

Letter Sorters Are Clever

Halifax Postal Employees Delivered Letter Addressed In Figures

Letter sorters in the post-office don't invite people to address letters in code, but they made it known they could understand some of them.

One envelope arrived at Halifax, Nova Scotia, with a series of numbers but not a letter written on it. This took a little thought for the boys who toss around letters like a "hustler" does handbills. But the letter finally was delivered to a soldier in Wellington barracks.

Each figure represented the corresponding numerical position in the alphabet they discovered.

Water Buses On Thames

Passenger Traffic Is Planned For London's Water Highway

London's broadest highway, which has been practically neglected for 20 years or more so far as passenger traffic is concerned, is likely, before long, to come again into use. Private enterprise will probably soon provide a service of "water buses" on the Thames. Arrangements are afoot for the establishment of a service of vessels to call at the long-neglected piers which used to be served by the "penny steamers."

All the boats will be capable of a speed of 17 miles an hour. Express or non-stop boats will take about 33 minutes between Hammersmith and London Bridge.

During the years 1905-1908 the London County Council ran a service of passenger boats on the Thames, which was eventually stopped because it did not pay.

It is believed that with the increased passenger loads of today, and faster, more economical and weatherproof boats, such a scheme will now be a success.

History Repeats Itself

This Time United States And Russia Change Places

Apropos of President Roosevelt's gesture of recognition toward the Soviet Socialist Republic, a gesture that has been withheld for some fifteen years, it is interesting to recall that it took Russia thirty-three years to recognize the infant Republic of the United States. The great Empress Catherine thought the American Republic an infamy—a people who dared challenge the divine right of emperors; who separated the Church from the State, and who had the insolence to declare that all men were born free and equal. To her Imperial Highness, this was anarchy.

There followed the rule of the Emperor Paul, who played safe conservatism until Russia got rid of him by strangling him—the Russian alternative for elections. His successor, Alexander I., did not quite see why he should recognize a distant country across the sea, but as time went on and the other ntaions were doing it, and the thing became expedient from a trade standpoint, he consented to take the risk.

Now, after more than a century, it is the United States which is debating whether it should recognize Russia—and for the same reasons. It is a curious prank of history.—Ottawa Journal.

PAUL IN ATHENS

Golden Text: "In Him we live, and move, and have our being."—Acts 17: 28.

Lesson: Acts 17:16-34.

Devotional Reading: John 1:1-14.

Explanations and Comments

Paul In Athens, verses 16-22. — While walking the streets of Athens, Paul's spirit was aroused by the sight of so many idols. A good insight into a man's character may be gained from the knowledge of the things that stir his heart.

In synagogue and in market-place, wherever Jews and proselytes would listen to him, he "preached Jesus and His resurrection." Certain of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers heard him, and some of them mocked, asking, "What would this babbler say?" while others said that he seemed to be proclaiming strange gods. The Athenians were wont to spend all their time in telling or hearing about some new things, Luke tells us in an aside; and so one day they laid hands on Paul and brought him to the place where the Areopagus, or Council, was meeting, and bade him explain his new teaching. Paul stood up and answered them.

The Text Of Paul's Sermon, verses 22,23.—Pointing probably to the magnificent statues near by, Paul began by saying, "Ye men of Athens, in all things I perceive that ye are very religious." As many have recalled, "Ye men of Athens" are the classical words familiar through the writings of Thucydides and Demosthenes. The Greek word translated very "religious" means literally "more" God-fearing. It could be taken as a compliment or the reverse. The reverse meaning is given in the Authorized Version as "too superstitious," and in the margin of the Revised Version as "somewhat superstitious." Paul must have intended his words as a compliment, for, as Dr. A. T. Robertson remarks, it seems unlikely that he would give his audience a slap in the face at the very start. Paul was always courteous; he was "a fine old Virginia gentleman," a Southerner asserts.

"A modern St. Paul, preaching on an American Mars Hill, might charge the American people with being 'too superstitious,' as did Paul the Athenians," comments the Christian Advocate of Nashville. "According to a writer in Popular Science we are now having a wave of superstition such as has not been since the Middle Ages. This mania takes the form of patronizing fortune-telling devices of all kinds. One hundred and twenty-five million dollars is the sum spent annually on such foolishness. That sensible people should patronize these frauds is one of the vagaries for which we have no explanation.

As he had walked about their city, Paul told them, he had noted the objects of their worship, and had come across an altar with this inscription, "To an Unknown God."

"Immortal Greece, dear land of glorious lays, Lo, here the Unknown God of thine unconscious praise."—Keble.

The Athenians feared there might be some divinity of whom they had not heard, and he must be propitiated. "The inscription, as Paul knew, had a purely pagan meaning; but the phrase was a fine one; it was capable of a higher sense, and in this higher sense Paul made it the text of his sermon." (Dummelow). "What therefore ye worship in ignorance, this I set forth unto you."

Message From King George

First Canadian Sunday School Congratulated On 150th Anniversary

"The King has heard with interest of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of Sunday school work in Canada, in the Church of St. Paul's, in Halifax, with which the royal family have had many personal associations. His Majesty sends good wishes for work then begun and for the church in which the beginning was made."

His Majesty's message is one of many received by Rev. Dr. T. W. Savary, rector of St. Paul's, where the first Sunday School in Canada was started in 1783, just 33 years after the historic church was built.

Others have come from the general synod of the Church of England in Canada, the diocese of Nova Scotia, the ministerial association of Nova Scotia, various other organizations and individuals.

St. Paul's oldest Protestant church in the Dominion, was opened for services in 1750, one year after Hon. Edward Cornwallis founded the garrison city. The original building still stands, and is the place of worship for a large congregation of Church of England members. Beneath the edifice are tombs in which governors, distinguished soldiers and statesmen were buried years ago.

SYNOPSIS

Camilla Hoyt, young and beautiful commercial artist, and Peter Anson, a struggling sculptor, meet in an art class and fall in love. She is the adopted daughter of a wealthy family, but is not to share in their fortune when she comes of age. They are faced with the problem of "marriage or career" and Camilla does not want to tie Peter down when he has so much promise as a sculptor. At an art school dance, Gus Matson, Peter's roommate, who is jealous of Peter's success, takes Camilla out on the lawn to tell her "something she should know about Peter." Gus tells Camilla Peter is a cheat, that he only wants her money, and that he, Gus, loves her himself. At that moment Peter appears on the scene and knocks Gus flat. On the way home from the party Camilla tells Peter they are going to do something about their problem. She decides that they are to be married, and until Peter establishes himself, go on living their separate lives. Above Peter's protests she carries her point. Gus leaves Peter, and Peter and Camilla make plans for their marriage. They decide not to tell Mrs. Hoyt, who wants to see Camilla marry money. They are married quietly, and over their wedding dinner together, happily talk of their likes and dislikes.

(Now Go On With The Story)

CHAPTER XVII.

Their conversation about the pictures which Camilla had purchased for her room when she was nine years old, had some influence with the decoration of Peter's studio. Of course, he knew that her ideas and preferences had gone modern after the modern manner, but where there was an indigenous foundation of classic appreciation, the new structure above was bound to be influenced largely by it.

He planned and selected accordingly, delighting in his task. In this day of women's emancipation, it seemed a bit incongruous that he was the master adorning the castle for his bride, and particularly in view of their very modern marriage arrangements. It had to be worthy of her, however trivial the cost might be.

Even so, he was rather proud of the finished result, and hoped anxiously that Camilla would like it. Somehow, he was sure she would. He felt so sure about Camilla in every way. Instead of feeling panic at the thought of being married, when he had always placed that experience far beyond in his career, he felt a sense of peace and security that afforded him a greater hope than he ever had believed possible before.

After their prolonged wedding dinner at Charm Cottage, they walked through the park and down the avenue to Annex Hall, in the soft magic of the June twilight. To them the whole world was a changed place. Familiar objects and sights were enhanced by the reflected light of their dreams and hopes and the transformation of love. The fairy tale about wearing rose-colored glasses is not so fantastic as it may seem. Everyone changes his smoked glasses of gloom for the tinted ones according to his mood and the experiences of the hour. Their transformation of the same objects is as amazing as that which the advertisements promise to stout or ageing women.

With hearts beating high for no obvious reasons, they talked as casually as though they had just left Professor's Drake's class, to separate at the far side of the campus; but the sky had never been so blue nor the sunset so golden to them as it was upon that day.

To reach the entrance of Annex Hall, they were obliged to turn from the avenue into an alley and cross a paved court. The building really was an old mansion whose spacious, high-windowed rooms had been converted into studio rooms to let, but it joined the more pretentious and newer Craft building with its modern construction that catered to the whims and exacting requirements of more established and successful artists. A corridor connected them, but it was an infallible and unwritten code that tenants of the annex scorned the more sophisticated entrance of the Craft building, which would lead into the other. It was like being loyal to your caste, of refusing to be a hypocrite.

So Peter and his bride respected the conventions, and entered through the carved and weathered portal of the annex, which proclaimed its magnificent past like an impoverished dowager maintaining her hauteur in rusty silks and faded velvets. They were greeted by the odor that is prevalent in old houses, mixed with the fumes of paints and oils and the more recent odors of food, it being the dinner hour in those one-room apartments whose high doors concealed brave hopes and secret heartaches. One feels this atmosphere of intense conflict in such places, where he knows that into each small niche, aspiring genius has retired to hope and struggle until it opens its doors and strides forth to astonish the world with its achievement; like the brilliant butterfly emerging from its chrysalis.

Perhaps each of them sensed this atmosphere of retirement into obscurity, for they were silent while they climbed the old carved stairway and followed the dimly lighted corridor to the rear. But their silence was not oppressive with doubts and fears. Were they not retiring into obscurity, together, to work and hope side by side and emerge triumphant together? In their youthful imagination, they already walked the avenue of fame with laurel wreaths upon their brows and passed beneath the arch of triumph together.

Peter broke their silence with awkward bluntness as he stopped before a door on which were tacked small metal digits to form the number 27. "Well, here we are, Mrs. Anson. Number twenty-seven, Struggle Avenue, Hope Annex." He drew a key ring from his pocket and fitted one of the keys into an old-fashioned lock below a white porcelain doorknob. He pushed the door open and stood aside for her to enter.

Camilla gave the room a quick glance and then looked at Peter.

He was alarmed. "What's the matter, dear?"

"Nothing at all," she smiled. "But I was just thinking, Peter, darling, about that old custom of carrying the bride over the threshold of the new home, so that happiness and prosperity will dwell there. This may be the only home we'll have for quite a long time."

He had her in his arms before she could finish, holding her as lightly as a river supports a leaf, as he stepped into the room with her. He turned and closed the door behind them with his foot, then kissed her and set her down gently in the center of the room.

Camilla laughed happily and looked about her slowly. He waited anxiously for her verdict.

Finally, she gave a little gasp of delight. "Why, Peter, it's beautiful. I had no idea that you could—but where did you get all of these lovely things, dear?" Her enthusiasm pleased him immensely.

"It would take a while to explain the history of everything, but you can get it all gradually. For instance—well, what do you like best?"

She glanced around the room again, quickly. "I am most curious about that modeled group in the window alcove. Where did you get that—its marvellous!"

That overflowed the measure of his delight. "That, my dear, is my wedding gift to you. How did you know?"

"You made that?" with astonishment.

"And you inspired it."

She crossed the room to examine it more closely. Her fingers touched the statue reverently. The principal figure was a woman with a shawl over her head, awry; the expression of her face and the posture of her body portraying alike a wistful weariness, a timid aggressiveness, a fearful hope. Her face was lifted up toward a distant object that was vaguely obscure. But each of her hands clasped the hand of a child—a boy on one side and a girl on the other, who leaned against her and seemed to draw back in fear. But their faces, too, were lifted toward that invisible object in the distance. The clothing of all three was ill-fitting and clumsy, and there lay a knobby bundle close beside them on the plinth at their feet.

Camilla turned to Peter reverently. "You have done this beautiful thing just for me, darling?"

"Do you like it?" taking her in his arms.

"I love it next to you, because it is part of yourself," she told him, with wonder in her voice. "If you can do that for me—you can do anything. I have no fear for us, now."

He dismissed her praise with a happy confusion. "You are a prejudiced critic. I can see that. But it makes me happy just the same, and gives me hope. Remember what you said that first night when we found love together, about the brave souls who arrive at Ellis Island with shawls on their heads, and hope in their hearts. I began to work on this for you soon afterward. Then when we planned later to be married so soon, I saved it for a surprise on our wedding day."

"It's perfect, Peter, and so—right isn't it? It expresses us, exactly. Oh, I can't put into words what I feel, dear, but you have it all there; every emotion and dream and fear that a brave adventure brings."

"Your interpretation is even wider than my own," he admired thoughtfully. "You see, already, you have inspired the best thing I have done and have doubled its meaning at the first glance. If I expected to succeed without you, what shall I do with you?"

"Become very famous, of course," she told him confidently, and moved nearer into his embrace.

"You are so sweet," her murmured, holding her close.

Camilla reached her arms up around his neck and their eyes plunged deep into each other's, beyond the mysteries which had limited their vision until that hour.

"Peter, my husband," she whispered.

"Camilla, my wife," his voice trembled.

Little Helps For This Week

"My brethern count it all joy when ye fall into diver's temptations, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience."—James 1:2, 3.

For patience when the rough winds blow,
For patience when our hopes are fading,
When visible things all backward go,
And nowhere seems the power of saying.
God still enfolds thee with His viewless hand
And leads thee surely to the Fatherland.

—N. L. Forthingham.

We have need of patience with others as well as ourselves, with those below and those above us, and with our own equals, with those who love us and with those who love us not, for the greatest things and for the least, against sudden inroads of trouble and under our daily burdens, disappointments, or the breaking of the heart; in the weariness of the body or the wearing of the soul. We need it in the everyday wants or the aching of sickness, in bereavement, losses or in heaviness of heart. In all these things patience is the grace of God whereby we endure evil for the love of God.—E. B. Pusey.

An Unassuming Magnate

Sir Herbert Austin Might Easily Be Taken For One Of His Employees

Sir Herbert Austin, the motor magnate, will probably stimulate controversy with his plea that some system should be evolved that will enable women to be taken out of industry, thus helping to solve the unemployment problem for men. Sir Herbert Austin, though one of the outstanding industrialists in this country, is also one of the most unassuming. His principal hobby is work, which he accomplishes mainly with a stub of a pencil. He can do more with this stub of pencil in the way of designing pieces of automobiles than a whole staff of draughtsmen equipped with boxes of drawing instruments. Anyone visiting his factory, who did not know him by sight, might mistake him, in his old coat, for one of the less-important employees. This erroneous impression would be confirmed by a casual chat, for Sir Herbert Austin, like his fellow-manufacturer Sir William Morris, is entirely devoid of "side.'—London Correspondent Ottawa Journal.

Credit To His Training

A citizen of Cody, Wyoming, lost a ten-dollar bill while shopping. His search for it was fruitless, but when he went to feed his dog next morning, the animal was carefully guarding the missing bill. The dog had been trained to pick up anything his master dropped. Appropriately enough the dog was a Chesapeake Bay retriever.

Have You Pimples or Boils?

Mrs. T. A. Berney of 515 Wellington St., W., Toronto, Ont., says: "I had a bad case of boils due, I believe, to the condition of my blood. I certainly was in misery as the boils were all over my face. I took only two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and the boils gradually disappeared. I have had no return of these eruptions." Sold by druggists everywhere. Write Dr. Pierce's Clinic, Buffalo, N. Y.

No, Grace isn't going to miss the next dance

"Oh, isn't it wonderful!" said Grace. "Jack just called me up and asked me to go to the Country Club dance next Friday. I've been so eager to go, particularly after missing the dance last week. Jack said he had wanted to take me to that one, too, but as we had no telephone then he couldn't get in touch with me. I'm certainly glad we have a telephone now. Goodness knows how many invitations I missed while we were without one."

U.S.A. Veterans Banquet Guests

International Flavor to Armistice Day Dinner—Idaho Visitors Get Rousing Welcome—Boy Scouts Leader Complimented

Armistice Day banquet was the best attended and most successful in the annals of Creston Valley Post. Veterans of wars in many quarters of the British Empire, members of the American Legion and prominent Creston citizens, 54 in all, sat down to a bountiful repast at 12.45 at the King George Hotel dining room.

After the king's health had been honored, President John Bird made the speech of welcome, and called upon the various speakers Col. Mallendaine, in happy fashion, proposed the health of "Our Visitors," and this was replied to by State Commander Rawls of Lewiston, Idaho, and by Post Commander Deist and Adjt. Zimmerman of Bonners Ferry.

In reply to toasts, W. M. Archibald and Geo. Johnson, honorary president and vice-president respectively of Creston Valley Post, pledged their support to Legion aims, and expressed their readiness to help in every possible way. President Bird pinned the past master's badge on W. V. Jackson, and congratulated him on the splendid work he had done in the past three years.

H. A. Powell proposed the health of the Boy Scouts, and Ed. Gardiner voiced the pride of the Legion in the smart turnout of the boys, and its admiration for the splendid work done by their scoutmaster.

The outstanding talk of the day was that by R. Sinclair Smith, who, in responding for the "Fighting Services," stressed the point that the Canadian Legion is a fighting force and that in its unity lies its strength. The speaker intersperced his remarks with amusing anecdotes of adventure, and of his campaigns id tropical climates.

Speeches were also made by Comrades Judd and Winters from the American Legion. Also by L. Forsythe of the Old Contemptibles, Godfrey Vigne and Piper Ross

Then followed a varied programme of compaign and comic songs by L. Leveque, J. B. Holder, Ed. Gardiner and John Hall. The musical hit of the day was "Alouette," sung in inimitable style by mine host LaBelle of the King George, ably assisted by members of the family.

The new president, John Bird, presided throughout as to the manner born, and a pleasant afternoon came to a close with Auld Lang Syne. Those signing the dinner register were:

Chiselling

The N.R.A. campaign in the United States, if it has not added a new word to the vocabulary of the American people, has at least given a popular and significant meaning to an old word, and has brought that word into every day conversation. It is being used by everybody from President Roosevelt to the man on the street corner. The word is "Chisel," "Chiselled," "Chiselling." It has become an accepted slang phrase, and like so many slang words and phrases it is very appropriate for the use to which it is being put.

In its usually accepted meaning, "Chisel" is the name of an instrument of iron or steel used in carpentry, joinery, cabinet work, masonry, sculpture, etc., for paring, hewing, or gouging. In its slang adaptation it is applied to mean "to cut close," as in a bargain; in a word, to cheat.

Thus, under the now almost universal N.R.A. codes in the United States providing for shortening hours of labor, increasing wages, controlling sales prices, regulating production, the word is being applied to the individual or the concern which by one devious means or another seeks to pare off a little here or there from the spirit of the agreement into which they have entered, or to gouge a little out of their workmen or their customers. Such individuals or concerns are known as "Chisellers," and the tactics employed by them as "chiselling." They are apt and expressive words when so used.

One is inclined to extend the application of these terms beyond the N.R.A. in the United States, and apply them generally to the attitude of many people in all lands and of all classes and conditions to life itself, its manifold duties and responsibilities.

There is the boy and girl in school whose education is being provided for them possibly at great expense and very real sacrifices by their parents but who, instead of applying themselves diligently to their studies for the few brief years of school training, are just "chiselling" their way through, devoting only sufficient time and thought to their work to "get by" but not really and earnestly striving to make the most of their opportunities. They are responsible for waste all round,—waste of money and of personal sacrifice by their parents, waste of their own time and opportunities, waste of the teacher's time and effort. They are chiselling something out of their own lives which, to their lasting regret in later years, they can never replace.

There is the teacher who, instead of giving of their very best to their pupils, and taking a keen interest in their advancement, are content to just "get by" their inspector and retain their positions by having a sufficiently satisfactory number of "passes" by their pupils irrespective of the fact as to whether or not real instruction has been given to them.

There are the "clock watching" employees, clerks, stenographers, workmen in all trades, laborers in every field, who, instead of striving to give a maximum of efficient service in return for the wages paid to them, are time-servers, doing just as little as they can, gouging their employers of time and effort which rightfully belongs to them. On the other hand, there is the employer who in one way or another gouges his most faithful employees.

There is the contractor and the manufacturer who gouges the public by using shoddy instead of pure materials, who pares off a portion of the rightful amount of material that ought to go into the production of an article or in the construction of a building, and who is not above slipping one or two imperfect articles into a shipment of goods, or using some defective material in a building where it is buried away from sight. They are chisellers, and are indifferent to the fact that their chiselling may result in disaster, great loss and suffering to others.

There is the debtor on the one hand who resorts to every kind of a dodge in an endeavor to escape payment of his just debts, and the creditor on the other hand who takes advantage of the difficulties of his debtors to despoil them for all they have regardless of the fact that those difficulties may be beyond the debtor's control and which to the best of his ability he is striving to overcome. Both classes are chisellers.

There is that large group who have a perverted twist or kink in their characters which induces the belief that it is all right to try and get the best of Governments,—persons who will smuggle, persons who "chisel" with great ingenuity when filling out an Income Tax form, persons who surreptitiously use their radios or motor cars without a license, and so forth and so on.

Then there are numerous people who "chisel" in the discharge of their general obligations as citizens. Men and women, for example, who are too indifferent to even take the trouble to cast a ballot; who defame all persons in public office who are endeavoring to serve the public welfare; who characterise politics as dirty and corrupt and who stand aloof therefrom instead of discharging their own duty and actively assisting to raise the standard of public life.

Possibly each and every one of us is a chiseller in one way or another. And it might not be a bad idea for all of us to take stock of our own attitude towards many things and thus seek to discover just wherein we are chisellers.

Then, there is the other phase of chiselling. The sculptor who takes an uncouth block of wood, stone or marble and chisels away until there emerges a thing of beauty. Such a one is typical of many men and women who are devoting their lives to chiselling away the sordidness, the ugliness, the evil of life. They are engaged in removing the grime that may have accumulated and buried that which is beautiful and good.

The vital question is: What kind of a chiseller are you?

Testing Penny Flipping Odds

Professor Hopes To Prove Heads And Tails Are About Even

Penny flipping odds are about even on heads and tails after 40,000 scientific flips. That's what Professor Pope R. Hill, of the mathematics department of the University of Georgia, has found. Months ago Professor Hill began his flipping. He assembled 200 pennies, a hundred of one date, and the same of another. He balanced each penny against the other down to one-thousandth of a gram. He expects to flip the pennies for the 100,00th time next July and then his experiment will be complete.

LETTER FROM A MAN OF 90

About His Rheumatism

He asks us to excuse his writing. We do more than that—we congratulate him on being able to write at all at his age, especially as he has been suffering from rheumatism. This is what he says in his letter:—

"Three years ago I was in bed for six weeks with inflammatory rheumatism. Since that time I have been taking Kruschen Salts, and have not had another attack. But my hands are still somewhat stiff. I take Kruschen every morning before breakfast, and shall continue to do so, because I am sure it has kept me in good shape for three years. Excuse this writing, as I am ninety years old, and use both hands to write."—J.R.G.

Kruschen dissolves away those needle-pointed crystals of uric acid which are the cause of all rheumatic troubles. It will also flush these "dissolved" crystals clean out of the system. Then if you keep up "the little daily dose," excess uric acid will never form again.

Leaving Pacific For Summer

U.S. Fleet Is Ordered To Concentrate In Atlantic

The United States fleet will be concentrated in the Atlantic next spring for the first time in almost four years.

President Roosevelt authorized the first line of defence to start steaming from the Pacific to the east coast after the winter months. It will return to the Pacific in the fall.

The fleet, comprising the battle and scouting forces—the latter formerly known as the Atlantic fleet—have been stationed in the Pacific since the spring of 1932.

During the past 18 months the navy has explained that the scouting force was kept in the Pacific for reasons of operating economy. The situation in the far east was understood, however, to have played a considerable part in the retention of the full fleet in the Pacific.

The reason given for the order to return was explained by Henry L. Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, as a return to the fleet's normal operating policy.

"But, goodness gracious, surely you saw the bottle?" "Well, no sir. As a matter of fact, the chap had it in his pocket."

Had Outstanding Career

Director Of Pasteur Institute Dies After Long Illness

Pierre Paul Emile Roux died in Paris at the age of 80 after a long and outstanding career as director of the Pasteur Institute and collaborator with Louis Pasteur in studies of bacteriology and diseases like diphtheria.

He had suffered from tuberculosis for 40 years while a colleague, Dr. Albert Calmette, who died Oct. 29, struggled to find a cure for the disease.

To much of the world Dr. Roux seemed an ascetic recluse, for he ate simply, slept on a hard camp bed, and spent much of his time in research. From 1904 to 1918 he directed the Pasteur Institute.

He studied infectious diseases and hydrophobia and produced vaccines in collaboration with Pasteur and others for anthrax, dread cattle scourge. He aided also in the development of diphtheria toxins. With Dr. Behring he received the Nobel prize for their work on serum therapeutics.

Hard To Replace

People Always Find Something Staple About Old Friends

Old friends are so hard to replace. We meet new ones all the time, but the new ideas are not the real ideas of years ago .There is something staple about old friends You know them, and when you know someone for twenty-five or thirty years and meet them all the time, it is a different kind of a hello than the new friend gives you, the hello from an old friend means so much more. You look into each others eyes, and see each weathering the storm of life—who is gray, who is getting bald, who has grown the fatter, and when you both meet and one says you look the same as you did twenty-five years ago and the same compliment is returned makes the hello so different.

Developing New Industry

The latest Manitoba industry to be developed is the Manitoba low bush cranberry. Hitherto cranberries have been imported into the province. The type that grows in Northern Manitoba is known as the "low bush" cranberry, which the early winter frost seems to sweeten so that frozen berries can be thawed with full flavor retained. The berries are coming to Winnipeg in 1,000 pound lots.

Newspaper An Institution

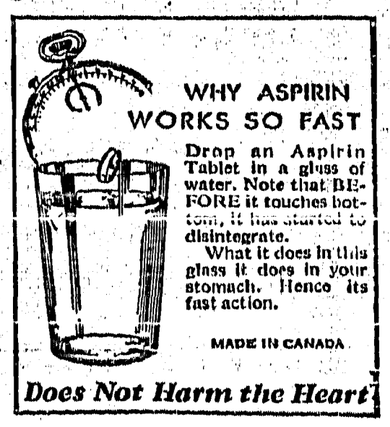
Col. R. R. Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which an Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. An Aspirin Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, be on guard against substitutes. To be sure you get ASPIRIN'S quick relief, be sure the name Bayer in the form of a cross is on every tablet of Aspirin.



Does Not Harm the Heart

SIR JOHN SIMON ON ARMS POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN

London, Eng.—Sir John Simon, British Foreign Secretary laid the issue of disarmament before the House of Commons. He frankly recognized the gravity of the hour, but he dismissed deplorable exaggerations."

Whether Germany remained at Geneva or not, the British cabinet minister declared, the supreme aim of British policy would be to promote reconciliation — to endeavor to reconcile Germany's demand for equality with France's desire for security. That was the general political issue.

Sir John's exposition of British disarmament policy, with full cabinet backing, was designed to meet the attack from two sides—from Labor members clamoring for further disarmament and from Conservative diehards seeking further strengthening of the forces.

"At a time like this, when the international system set up since the war is in jeopardy, we have declared ourselves without any qualification believers in and upholders of the League of Nations as the best possible instrument for international peace," declared Sir John.

"We shall not get out of our difficulties by trying for isolation when the conditions for isolation have disappeared. We have an immense moral authority to assert and we shall use it by making no special or secret alliance with or against any country, but work for friendship and peace between them all."

There were early signs of the coming storms in parliament. Sir John took a dig at David Lloyd George, who sat in the front opposition bench, as an international movie star. He referred to Lloyd George's talk on disarmament for a news-reel film.

The minister had hard words also for Sir Stafford Cripps, one of Labor's leaders, for his declaration at Bristol that in disarmament Britain had done nothing; that the British disarmament convention draft, basis of Geneva discussions, would "make the gods laugh."

He described Sir Staffords statement as "a classic example of the morbid delight which some Englishmen take in face of the plainest facts in fouling their own nest.

"When an appeal is made for fair play for Germany, are we not entitled to demand fair play for Britain too?" he asked.

It was a still greater outrage Sir John continued, for any man to seek to exploit the peaceful sentiment of British homes by falsely pretending there was any difference between the two sides of the House of Commons in the desire for peace.

Sir John only gave some figures to show what Britain had actually done for disarmament. Since 1914 her capital ships had been cut from 65 to 15; her cruisers from 108 to 54; her destroyers from 216 to 152; her submarines from 74 to 59; torpedo boats from 106 to nil.

The naval personnel had been reduced from 152,000 to 90,000; the regular army had been reduced from 258,996 to 206,534. The Indian army had been cut by 17,000; the air force by 20 per cent. since the post-war period.

"Shame," interrupted a voice from the Conservative benches, when Sir John said Britain now stood no higher than fifth in the list of national air forces.

"Great Britain is using and will continue to use every effort," he said, "to promote international conciliation and disarmament."

Nothing had occurred, he added, "to justify Germany's shock tactics in leaving the League of Nations."

"The most material contribution to restoring the confidence of Europe would be an international disarmament agreement to which Germany must be a party."

Roosevelt Announces Larger Relief Program

Expects To Give Work To Four Millon Men

Washington.—President Roosevelt has announced an expansion of the federal relief program aimed at taking 4,000,000 men off public relief rolls.

The plan involves the creation of a civil works administration and the use of $400,000,000 of public works funds.

Through these additional funds the administration intends to increase the part time work of men now on relief rolls so that they may be put on a self-sustaining basis.

It is intended 2,000,000 men shall be put on a self-sustaining basis by Nov. 26 and that an additional 2,000,000 men may be put on this basis by Dec. 15.

Approximately 3,000,000 families are now being cared for by public relief agencies, a reduction since April of 1,500,000 families.

Other recovery signs noted at the White House were:

A rise in farm prices for the week ending Oct. 25 from an index figure of 50 to 52.

A rise in prices paid by farmers of less than one per cent.

A decrease in retail food prices of one per cent.

An average rise of less than one per cent. in commodity wholesale prices.

The animals have been picked from herds in various parts of the province and are declared to be a particularly fine lot, with good prospects of winning some of the main prizes as in previous years.

Thirty 'Planes Leave France For Africa

Air Armada Will Make Fifteen-Thousand-Mile Trip

Istres, France.—A great French air armada of 30 'planes manned by 60 picked aviators started a mass flight to Africa on November 8. The first squadron of 15 machines took off in triads.

The start of the so-called "black cruise" was marred by a balky motor throwing one 'plane tardily out of step in the sky parade as the remainder took off.

On the 15,525-mile flight from this airport near Marseilles, dangers of desert and jungle will be braved for the sake of France's military, political, technical and commercial prestige.

Troops Parade In Moscow

Fifty Million Take Part In National Holiday Celebration

Moscow, Russia.—While all Soviet Russia observed a national holiday, Moscow's red square was the focal point. A million persons were estimated to have paraded. From a reviewing stand atop the Lenin mausoleum Stalin, Kalinin, Molotov and their colleagues in government and Communist party watched and answered the cheers of the marchers.

Some 50,000 troops of the red army's Moscow garrison, together with several battalions of sailors, carried out the military phase of the celebration. The military held the square more than three hours as infantry, cavalry, artillery, tanks and the full complement of a modern army corps paraded in smartly-trained units.

More Gasoline Used

Saskatchewan And Alberta Increased Consumption This Year

Ottawa, Ont.—Alberta and Saskatchewan increased their consumption of gasoline in the first eight months of 1933 as compared with 1932, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. All the other provinces showed decreased sales. Alberta was this year the third highest consumer, coming next to Ontario and Quebec, whereas last year Alberta was fourth, coming just behind British Columbia.

this year the third highest consumer, coming next to Ontario and Quebec, whereas last year Alberta was fourth, coming just behind British Columbia.

Total sales for the eight months were 318,335,000 gallons as against 326,447,000 in the same period of 1932.

Club At Oxford Suspended

Suspected Of Communistic Tendencies And Forbidden To Continue Activities

Oxford, England.—University of Oxford authorities have suspended the "October Club," which has a membership of several hundred students and is suspected of Communistic tendencies.

Club leaders were called into a long conference with the proctors and at its conclusion the suspension was announced, the club's members apparently having declined to agree to conditions laid down by the authorities. The club will be forbidden to continue any form of activity so long as the suspension lasts.

Supporters of the club claim it is solely for the purpose of studying Communism, not promoting it.

Mussolini May Call Meeting

Discussion Of Disarmament Stalemate Is A Possibility

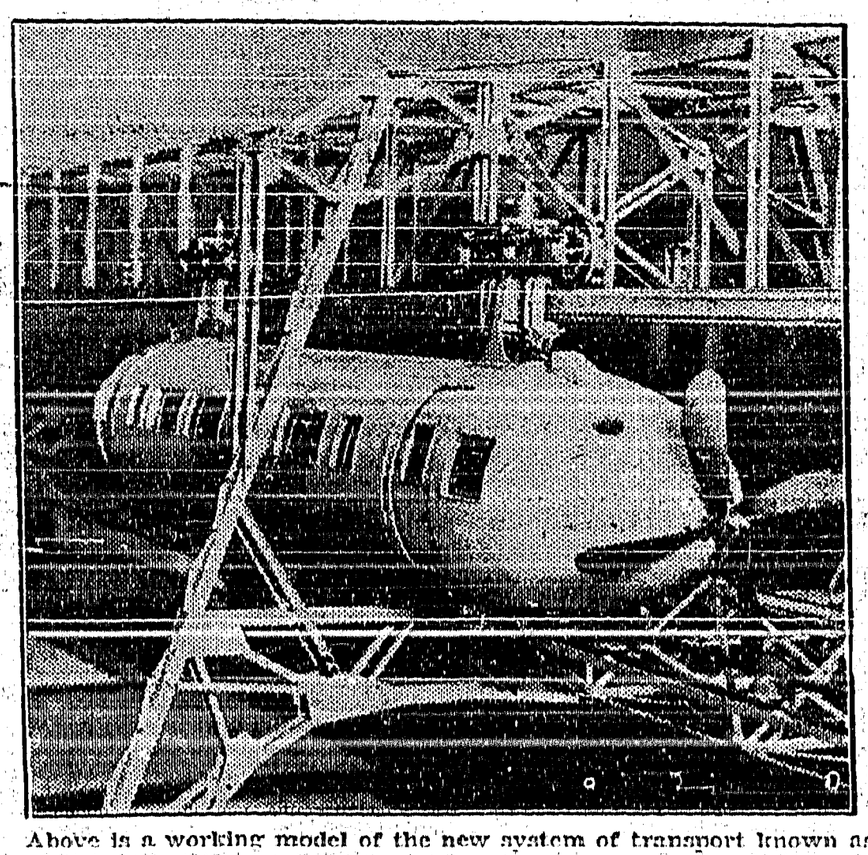
Rome, Italy.—The possibility that Premier Mussolini will call a meeting of four European powers and the United States to consider the disarmament stalemate was seen by well informed circles here after Il Duce and Hermann William Goering, German minister without portfolio, had an hour conference.

The conversation on disarmament was said to have revolved around the method to be pursued to re-open the arms parley, broken off shortly after Germany withdrew from Geneva.

Greatest Aerial Flight

Ottawa, Ont.—The greatest flight in aerial history was the crossing of the Atlantic by Alcock and Brown in 1919, in the opinion of Amelia Earhart, the first woman to fly the Atlantic solo. "It was an amazing feat, and the least appreciated. They had practically no instruments of any kind like we have now," said the aviatrix, here on a lecture trip.

MAY TRANSPORT SOME OF LONDON'S TEEMING POPULATION



Above is a working model of the new system of transport known as the "Railplane," which has been submitted to the London (England) County Council by Mr. Charles Boot, a Sheffield builder. Mr. Boot's scheme, if adopted, would involve the building of two satellite towns in Essex, linked by the railplane aerial railway to London. The railplane consists of streamlined cars slung from bogies which travel on a single overhead rail. The cars are propelled by airscrews fore and aft, are driven by electric motors or oil engines and their chief advantages are cheapness in construction and operation. The railplane is designed to work at speeds up to 120 miles an hour.

MANY KILLED AS REVOLT IN CUBA FLARES UP AGAIN

Havana, Cuba.—A state of war existed throughout Cuba, proclaimed by President Grau San Martin after a vicious army and civilian rebellion, 24 hours old, had killed an estimated 52 persons and wounded 183 others.

Reports came from Matanzas, just east of Havana, that almost the whole of Matanzas province had joined the uprising and that the ABC secret society had captured the town of Bejuca.

Previous reports said the movement had spread to Santiago and that former army and navy officers from the Isle of Pines prison were prepared to march on the capital.

A lull in the day-long fierce fighting brought ghostly silence to Havana as night fell, but further clashes were regarded as inevitable.

Rebel troops during the day took possession of three important fortresses, San Ambrosio, Dragones and Atares, placing in each nearly 1,000 well armed dissidents. A sharp battle with gunboats in Havana harbor ensued.

Official reserve shrouded the condition of the gunboats "Cuba" and "Patria" after the engagement, but its was said in shipping circles the vessels were in bad shape. Gunners at Atare fortress claimed they were both near sinking condition. Harbor police said they were "badly damaged."

President San Martin ordered the courtmartial of any "newspaper director who publishes news of an alarming nature."

Automobiles filled with armed AEC members and rebel soldiers rushed madly through the almost deserted streets and drew the fire of Loyalists lying in the grass in public parks.

Clanging ambulances speeded through the streets as frightened Cubans peeped through heavily shuttered windows, anxiously seeking information regarding the progress of the battle.

Foreign property was not attacked, except for the seizure by a group of soldiers of an automobile belonging to a Spanish employee of an American and shots fired on the American club by soldirrs.

World Tariff Truce

Britain Considers Pact No Longer Of Any Value

London, Eng.—In view of the defections from the world tariff truce negotiated in London last June the British government considers the pact is no longer of any practical value, and consequently the United Kingdom will withdraw from it on December 7.

The House of Commons, crowded as it re-assembled, cheered this statement by Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade.

With the exception of Japan and some other nations practically all the 66 nations represented at the conference adhered to the truce negotiated in the early and optimistic stages of the great London parley.

Since the abortive adjournment, if not conclusion, of the London conference, however, the truce has gradually come into disfavor. Mr. Runciman pointed out Holland, the Irish Free State, Sweden and Switzerland had given notices of withdrawal while France and Denmark had made substantial reservations.

Library Opened By King

London, Eng.—A new home for 4,000,000 books was inaugurated by the king when, accompanied by Queen Mary, he opened the new buildings of the National Central Library at Bloomsbury. "This country owes much to the late Andrew Carnegie and the generous policy of his trustees, especially for their help in developing the public library services," His Majesty said.

Ending Long Career

Ottawa, Ont.—The longest career in the history of the civil service ends with the retirement of Alfred G. Kingston, chief accountant, public works department. He is now on six months' leave of absence. Entering the service as an office boy in 1872, he has completed 61 years' service.
