Fall Fair Entries Close, Monday

Stage Set for Successful Exhibition—Entries Close Monday at 9 p.m.—School Sports Will be Keenly Contested — Banquet.

Now that the fall fair is almost upon us it is admissable to remind those who have not already handed their entry lists that entries close at 9 p.m. on Monday, the 23rd. Up to the present the number of entries is very gratifying and it looks as if we are going to have a really good exhibition in spite of the dry season. Exhibits have all to be placed in the fair building by noon on Wednesday, Sept. 25th, and livestock by 10 o'clock on Thursday, Sept. 26. The fair building will be open on Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock to enable the school teachers to arrange their displays.

There are still several challange cups which have not been turned in and the directors ask that those holding these cups return them so that they can be placed on display in the village.

Special attention is drawn to section 19 in the cooking section in which the donors of the prizes will give a pound tin of their coffes to each contestant.

There will be the usual wheels and raffles again this year as extra attractions, as well as the school sports. The competition in these sports seems to grow keener each year and Creston school is making every effort to again land the Jubillee Cup in the face of a big handicap. Canyon, Erickson and Wynndel schools have also to be reckoned on and we hear are all making efforts to put the best possible teams in the field. It is hoped, too, that the smaller schools will be represented this year as the fine showing made by Sirdar in their first attempt shows what can be done. The Knights of Pythias have again donated cups for the boys and girls making the best record in their sports.

S. R. Bowell, Dominion egg inspector, will be in attendance and wishes to meet local poultrymen and all those interested in the grading of eggs. He will have his egg candling outfit and will explain the method and reasons for enforcing this measure. A short meeting will be held in connection, which local poultrymen are asked to attend.

Tickets are now on sale for the banquet, for which a charge of $1.00 is being made. The judges should be able to furnish us with some worth while information and we hope, all those who are interested in the fair and agriculture will attend.

The agricultural association are also holding a dance in the Parish Hall on Friday, Sept. 20th, to help out the funds and which the directors hope will be well patronized. Christ Church Ladies' Guild will be in charge of the supper which is included in the charge for admission.

Presbyterian Fall Presbytery Meet

Elect Rev. J. McLean Bell of Cranbrook, Moderator — Ordain Princeton Seminary Graduate into Church Ministry.

The Presbytery of Kootenay of the Presbyterian Church in Canada held its regular fall meeting in St. Stephen's Church, Creston, on September 10th and 11th. Rev. J. McLean Bell of Cranbrook was appointed moderator for the ensuing year, and Rev. P. McNabb, pastor of St. Stephen's Church, permanent clerk. A. A. McKinnon of Cranbrook was appointed treasurer.

Rev. Mr. Bell has charge of the missions and budgets; Rev. Mr. St. Denis of Trail, Sabbath schools and young people's societins, and Rev. P. McNabb, finance and statistics.

At the evening sederunt there was a fine attendance of the membership of the congregation, showing their interest in the general work of the church. The new moderator spoke on the ideal church member. Rev. Dr. Douglas, superintendent of missions, spoke on the ideal church.

The pastor introduced Rev. Dr. McLean, who has recently returned rrom New Zealand, and also recently been received back into the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. McLean gave short address emphasizing the present greatest need of the church generally—loyal adherence to the inspired word of God as contained in the scriptures of the old and new testaments. A. A. McKinnon gave a short account of the General Assembly at Ottawa, to which he was commissioner from this presbytery.

A service of unusual interest and the first of its kind in Creston was the ordination of Frederick St. Denis to the holy ministry. He is a recent graduate of Princeton Theological Seminary, He is appointed to Knox Church, Trail.

The Progress of Little Things

In these modern days when it is "the thing" to boast about the bigness of this and that, and when countries and cities lay claim to the possession of the biggest of something or other, we are apt to forget how many of these "big" things were brought about, and to lose sight of the essential fact that anything "big" is in reality only a collection or combination of many very small things.

Nowadays not so much stress is laid upon old sayings of a couple of generations ago, such, for example, as "Mighty oaks from little acorns grow!" nor do we stop to contemplate that this globe on which we live is after all made up of "little drops of water, little grains of sand."

It would be better for everyone of us if we gave greater heed and attached their real importance to the little things of everyday life. The wealth of the multimillionaire is, after all, only an unusually large accumulation of pennies, and some of the very rich men of the world laid the foundation of their wealth by careful saving of their pennies. The hundreds of millions of bushels of Marquis wheat harvested in Canada every year is the result of one little kernel developed by Dr. Saunders.

The investment of a very few dollars by the parents of a baby at the time of its birth, if left to accumulate at compound interest throughout the years of its minority, would mean a very substantial sum of money upon which to commence a career in the world by the time the child became of age.

These thoughts come to us when reading a recent article about Trinity Church, in New York City. This church, which stands at the head of Wall Street, the centre of New York's financial district, began its career 233 years ago on a precarious income derived from the flotsam and dead whales cast up by the sea along the shore where one of the world's largest cities now stands. Today Trinity Church Corporation is one of the largest holders of real estate in that city, owning $15,000,000 of revenue producing real estate, bringing into the church coffers almost $1,500,000 a year. Nor do these large figures include the value of the property upon which Trinity Church itself stands, the equivalent of about two square blocks in the heart of the financial district, and conservatively valued at another $15,000,000.

The tremendous wealth of Trinity, we read in the Wall Street Journal, would appear fantastic to the organizers of this church in 1696, when King William III. made the original grant of land to the parish, supplemented nine years later by a further grant from Queen Anne. In those days the land was of no particular value, Wall Street was non-existant, and Fifth Avenue not even a foot path. But Manhattan Island was destined for great wealth, and the worthless property of a little over 200 years ago is worth many millions today.

Historical records contain efforts to obtain funds to start the church, which appear incredible when contrasted with present day values. One aid to the building of the original church in 1696 was a patent issued by the Governor of New York. It permitted vestrymen to seize all drift whales, or anything else driven by the sea onto land, and for which there was no owner. It further directed that the whales be towed ashore, fried, and proceeds used for a building fund.

The lesson of this interesting bit of history is this: Today there are thousands of young people just starting out in life. They have little or nothing. With them it is indeed a day of small things, and as they look around them and see so many huge undertakings, great enterprises, and the speed of the modern world, they are inclined to be discouraged, and become obsessed with the false idea that there is no opportunity for them.

But opportunities exist today as never before. There are a thousand today where there was but one two hundred years ago. The beginning must be small now, as it was then, but the opportunity is there just the same, while the possibilities and probabilities of growth are many times more rapid now.

Tackle the small thing at once; save the small things, the pennies; watch for and embrace your opportunities; conserve those things which come to you. The bigger things, and the rewards of work and of service to your fellowmen will follow in due course.

Story Of Privation

Tragic Case Of Two Boys Lost In Woods Of Northern Quebec

How 12-year-old Michael Courtois remained for nearly two months beside the body of his brother, Rene, 19, dead from hunger and privation in the woods, and how the two of them had wandered for miles, famished and helpless, was described at Roberval, Quebec, at the inquest into the death of Rene Courtois, found dead in the woods of northern Quebec, after having been missing since August, 1928.

Roots, berries and fish bones furnished slender means of livelihood for a time, young Michael told the coroner's jury. They were four hundred and fifty miles from Roberval, the nearest outpost of civilization. Having but two matches, they kept a fire burning in a pail for two months. When the search party found them, the fire was still smouldering but Rene Courtois was dead.

Michael had almost completely lost his reason when rescued, but it is now completely restored, though he is a physical wreck.

The boys were lost when their father left them at his cabin while he undertook a hunting trip. They wandered from the camp.

The coroner's jury returned a verdict, "death by starvation and misery."

FEELING WORN OUT

When the Blood Becomes Watery a Breakdown Follows

How many girls and women suffer from headaches, pain in the back or side, poor appetite, nervousness and a constant feeling of weariness and palpitation of the heart at the least exertion. Of course, all these symptoms may not be present in any one case, but any of them show that the blood has become thin and watery, and good health can only be regained by enriching the blood. This should be done without delay. For this purpose nothing else acts so promptly and so surely as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose helps to enrich the blood and tone weak nerves and thus brings new health and vitality to weak, and often despondent people. The truth of these statements is proved by the case of Mrs. Howard King, R.R. 5, Truro, N.S., who says: "A couple of years ago I grew so weak I could scarcely walk across a room without help. My blood was thin and I was almost breathless. I had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills on a former occasion with good results, and so decided to try them again. By the time I had taken a few boxes I felt much better, but I continued taking the pills for several months, by which time I could walk for miles with little effort. I do all my own housework and care for four children, so you will see what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail, post paid, at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Gratifying Progress In Tree Planting

The 1928 reports of inspectors of the tree plantations made on prairie farms with trees furnished by the Forest Service of the Department of the Interior from their nurseries at Indian Head and Sutherland, Saskatchewan, show that 83 per cent. of the plantations inspected were found to be in very good condition, 14 per cent. were fair, and only 3 per cent. were in poor condition.

The Singing Fool

By HUBERT DAIL

Copyright, 1928, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

SYNOPSIS

Al Stone, the singing waiter and song writer at Blackie Joe's New York night club, is discovered by Marcus, the famous Broadway revue producer. Al innsists on helping Molly, the ballad singer at Blackie's, because he loves her. Molly marries him, not loving him, and he pulls her up the ladder of fame. Meanwhile, Grace, the cigarette girl at Blackie's, who loved Al without his knowing it, is left behind. Molly discovers she is to have a baby. She resents this at first, but is reconciled after little Junior arrives. But when she returns to the stage she loses intrest in the child. Her romantic interest in John Perry, Al's best friend, is revived and one day Grace sees them riding in Molly's limousine. She also sees the man put his arm possessively about Molly.

CHAPTER XII.

Night on Broadway. The richly dressed limousine crowds had left the theatres and were pouring into the fashionable night clubs. The electric signs on the night clubs blinked, beamed and beckoned. "Here," they seemed to say, "you may find surcease from care, here you may eat, drink and be merry until dawn—if you have the price!"

Brightest among those insidiously beckoning lights was the brilliant sign of the CLUB BOMBO, where Al Stone was part owner and master of ceremonies. What a contrast to the shabby old place where he had once worked—Blackie Joe's. Al often thought of it. And what a contrast between the job he now held and his old one. Once he had been a mere singing waiter, eager for the tips that the none too affluent patrons of Blackie's place threw him when they happened to like his comic songs and his ad lib wise-cracking. Now he was using his fame as Broadway's foremost song writer to pull the shekels into his pocket at the Club Bombo. He was the magnet, the favorite of the big-time crowds. They called him the "Singing Fool" because he could put his songs over with such emotional intensity.

The ballroom of Al's club was expensive and expansive, designed to hold the huge crowds that flocked there. The tables spread across the room an army of round white tops, with a small cleared space in the middle for the cabaret performers and for dancing. One of the best jazz orchestras in the land furnished music from a raised platform at one side.

Now as Al walked slowly up and down near the doorway, greeting new arrivals, the jazz boys were sending out their plaintive, seductive strains and the floor was crowded with dancers.

The music died away, like a haunting cry echoing down a ravine, the lights went out and the couples left the floor. Then the spotlight picked up Al alone on the dance floor, and a roar of applause greeted him. He smiled happily and shook hands with himself—a symbolic gesture indicating that he was shaking hands with everyone.

"Ladies and gentlemen" — his voice came clear and resonant — "we're all here and I want you to have a good time. Forget the couvert charge and be happy. But before the show starts I want you to know a few of the celebrities we have present. Here's Dolores Costello, the famous motion picture star; there's Jack Barrymore, who needs no bush. At the right you will see Mayor Walker of our great city."

Finally Al's glance rested on a vacant table that was rather conspicuously placed. This was the special table that he always kept the reserved sign on, the table belonging to Molly and himself. Now he saw a couple stop before it and plead with the head-waiter to let them have it. He moved across the room quickly.

"Sorry, folks," he said, with polite regret, "but this table is always reserved. We'll find you one just as good—don't worry. Herman, see that the lady and gentleman are well seated."

Al gave the waiter a friendly clap on the shoulder and turned away. But when the couple had gone he glanced back toward the table, gazing at it with tender speculation. This was Molly's table and, in a moment, she would be here to occupy it. It must be held inviolate.

This table was somewhat different from the others; it was more tastefully arranged and the flowers on it had been specially selected and placed by Al himself. He was not quite satisfied with them, so he began to rearrange them forgetting his crowd entirely. Then he produced a jeweler's box from his inside coat pocket and slipped it under Molly's napkin. Attached to it was a card which read—"To my darling wife—on her anniversary and mine."

This done, Al looked up, smiling happily, and glanced at his watch. She should be here by now.

At that moment Molly and John Perry were comfortably ensconced in her blue limousine, proceeding with purposeful slowness toward the Club Bombo. Molly had told the chauffeur not to hurry.

She sat leaning against Perry's strong shoulder, while they conversed intimately in whispers. Perry was pleading, but Molly shook her head, although undecidedly.

"John, it's too complicated for me to solve. I love you, but—"

"But what?"

"Well, think of my position. Here I am, with all the money I can spend and all the public applause my nature craves. I'm sitting pretty, you can't deny that."

"I know all that. I've heard it a thousand times. But there's one thing you haven't got and that's important. You have no husband to love you whom you happen to love. Think it over."

Molly stared soberly straight before her, twining and untwining her small, white-gloved fingers.

"Are you falling in love with Al?" whispered the racketeer, banteringly and sarcastically. "Do you like him more than me?"

Molly shrugged her shoulders impatiently. "We won't go into that—you know the truth. The point is, Al has put me over. I wouldn't be famous if it wasn't for him. I'm no sap—I know that. That's why I've stuck to him so long. If I quit him he'll turn on me and where will I be? Just a girl who will drift back into the unknown."

"Nonsense, Molly!" exclaimed Perry. "You're a star in your own right. Besides, is fame everything? Doesn't love count for something?"

"You bet it does!" cried Molly vehemently, and almost bitterly. "If I didn't think so I would never have let you come near me."

John Perry smiled. He knew the cool, calculating, ambitious Molly was mad about him. But he was mad about her, too. At first his interest had been the lightest of heart affairs, for he was a born philanderer, but gradually the situation had changed. To his own amazement a longing for Molly possessed him; now he found himself willing to dare anything to get her.

Suddenly she turned to him and said gravely, "What about my baby—what about Junior?"

But Perry had no answer to that; he merely shrugged his shoulders. He wanted Molly to himself, without any entanglements. Molly gave a tired smile and fixed her gaze on the broad back of the chauffeur, just ahead. How much did that man know of her interest in John?

Her unspoken words were cut short as Perry's arm went around her, and she felt herself drawn relentlessly toward him. In the dark compartment of the limousine her lips were pressed hard against his mouth; his arms were around her like a vise. She forgot Al and Junior, forgot her ambitions, forgot everything but the passionate embrace of the man who held her. She relaxed for a thrilling moment and smiled into the eyes only a few inches from her own. Then she pulled herself abruptly away, for the car was approaching the Club Bombo!

She quickly snatched a jeweled compact from her tiny bag, gazed at herself in the mirror, patted her disarranged hair back into shape. Her rouged lips had been smeared, so she seized Perry's handkerchief, gently wiping off the excess rouge. Meanwhile, the racketeer gazed at her in admiration and brushed her face powder from his top-coat lapel.

"You've mussed me terribly."

"Sorry," whispered the imperturbable Perry.

The chauffeur swung open the limousine door and Molly stepped out. Straight ahead she saw Al in the night club doorway, smiling at her expectantly.

An Amazing Project

Plan To Make Inland Sea In Sahara Is Feasible

Ancient prophecies may be fulfilled if a project declared feasible by engineers is carried out. It involves making a vast inland sea in the Sahara, and that would be accomplished by digging a canal which would begin about twenty-five miles from Biskra and run out to the Gulf of Gabes, in Algeria. It would be 210 yards wide, thirty-nine yards deep 170 miles long. It would connect the eight shotts (shallow saline lakes), that exist in that region, and would transform it into a vast interior sea having a surface of 14,000 square miles.

While walking back to his saddle horse from the slough, which he had given the once over for ducks, he was set upon by a man of medium height who sprang from the bush and grabbed the butt of the gun Mr. Comfort was carrying and in a scuffle for posseseion both barrels were fired off at which Mr. Comfort's assailant took fright and ran away, making his escape by jumping into the slough. On a quick return Mr. Comfort notified the police who proceeded to the spot and found the man had waded the slough and made his escape. The man was about 35 years of age and, apparently. demented or suffering from too much booze, as when the gun was discharged he made his getaway shouting "I'm crazy" two or three times.

Transfers at Cranbrook

Honoring J. H. Cameron, transferred to the position of C.P.R. yardmaster at Revelstoke and who leaves to take over his new duties Saturday, the B. of R.T. held a banquet in the Victoria Cafe last night. Many nice things were said of Mr. Cameron when Gilbert Lacey presented him with a club bag, the gift of B. of R.T. members. Mr. Lacey and other speakers who followed him referred pleasingly to Mr. Camerons twenty years' residence and to his services to the Brotherhood as treasurer and to the city during his several terms as alderman.

Mr. Cameron made suitable y when he accepted the farewell gift, stating that while he expected to find pleasant associations in Revelstoke, Cranbrook and its people will ever occupy a warm corner in his heart.

Although Mr. Cameron's plans are not fully matured for the future it is improbable that Mrs. Cameron will follow him to Revelstoke until he has completed arrangements for a new home.

Other railway employees transferred to other points are Sam Whittaker, who leaves tomorrow to enter the train despatcher's office at Revelstoke, and Henry Chester, who has been appointed to a similar position at North Bend. Mr. Chester will take over his new duties within the next few days.—Cranbrook Courier.

Death of T. H. Pakenham

He was with the R.N.W.M.P. for several years, and at the outbreak of the South African war he joined up with the Strathcona Horse, and on his return to Canada took up farming at Springridge. He moved from the prairie in 1913 to Wynndel, and in 1925 he returned to Saskatchewan, where he joined the police force. Failing health, however, necessitated his return to British Columbia in 1928, when he located at Erickson. Rev. A. Garlick, rector of Christ Church, Creston, was in charge of the burial service and the pallbearers were A. S. Joy, R. Andestad, Mr. Todd, Mr. Hewitt, A. E. Towson, and Mr. Cuming. He is survived by a widow and five children, as well as a sister, Mrs. M. Towson of Wynndel, and four brothers and a sister in the Old Country.

Farmers' Institute After Egg Market

Egg Grading to be Explained by Inspector — Trading Basis is Fixed to both Members and Customers—Ordering Carload

The public meeting in connection with farmers institute reorganized was held in the secretary's office on September 9th. President Bradley was in the chair, with most of the members present. Four new members were elected to membership.

On the recommendation of the directors the meeting passed a resolution dealing with the qualification of directors which makes it compulsory for a director to be a farmer primarily engaged in the practice of agriculture in the Valley. This resolution will be added to the registered by-laws and filed with the registrar at Victoria.

In the matter of trading it was decided to work on a 5 per cent. basis when delivery was made from car, a proportion of which goes to the institute funds. When goods of any description have to be handled and stored extra charge will have to be made to cover handling charge. While orders will be welcomed from anyone an extra charge of 5c. per bag of feed and 10c. on flour will be made to all non-members.

The matter of egg grading, which is becoming a live issue in the interior, brought forth a lively discussion on the advisability of egg grading or marketing station in the village. Grading eggs is now compulsory in the interior. The station would be to grade all eggs properly and to assist local producers in securing the full market price. A well graded product is required to meet competition from large and small prairie co-operatives.

The subject being a new one a committee composed of Messss. Bradley, Holmes and Murrell was appointed to investigate and report to the next meeting.

S. R. Bowell, Dominion egg inspector, will be at the fall fair to explain the working of the act to poultrymen. He will have an egg candling outfit with him and will hold a meeting. The committee hope to meet as many of the local poultrymen as possible and to ascertain their views on the subject.

Members were asked to hand in their orders for feed as soon as possibie, and the secretary stated that he hoped to be able to order soon.

Britain and Canada

Canada is honored at the present time by having among its visitors three notable British statesmen, Hon. J. H. Thomas, Minister of Employment in the Ramsay MacDonald Government; Hon. Winston S. Churchill, former Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Amery, former Minister for the Dominions. Mr. Churchill and Mr Amery are in Canada on holiday, but they are none the less closely studying conditions and ascertaining the sentiment of this country in regard to vital questions of Empire policy such as immigration, trade and commerce, and the possibilities of closer relationships in matters for the general advancement of both Mother Country and this Dominion.

On the other hand, Mr. Thomas' visit to Canada is made in his official capacity as Minister of Employment with the object of endeavoring to find out in what ways Canada can assist in solving the serious unemployment problem in Britain without doing injury to itself, and, having discovered, or evolved, ways and means to accomplish this object, to secure the co-operation of the Canadian Government and the Canadian people in carrying them into effect.

Fortunately, the first impression created by Mr. Thomas' mission has been removed. As the minister charged with the task of solving the unemployment problem in Britain, it was felt that Mr. Thomas was coming to Canada with the idea of developing some immigration policy whereby large numbers if British unemployed would be transferred to this Dominion. Anxious as Canada may be to have a large proportion of its incoming settlers of British birth, this Dominion is not prepared to have thousands of men dumped into the country solely because they cannot find work at home and who have no training or aptitude for life in this land. Mr. Thomas has made it abundantly clear that he has no such intention; on the contrary, Mr. Thomas declares: "It is not my aim to solve my unemployment problem by creating one for you." Unemployment and immigration are, he says, two quite separate and distinct problems and should be tackled as such.

Then what is Mr. Thomas' proposal to Canada? It is simple, clear-cut, workable, and one that should find favor with, and the sympathetic support of the people of Canada. In a word it is that our large Canadian corporations, and our people generally, should, when making purchases buy British-made goods and articles, if such are not made in Canada, in preference to buying from any other country. He has asked the Dominion Government to give encouragement and support to such a policy. He has sat down in conference with the heads of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways and asked them to follow such a policy. He has said to the officials of the Canadian Wheat Pool: "Britain is the largest purchaser of your wheat. We are your best customer, just as we are Canada's best customer. Thus, when you require machinery or other things which Canada itself does not manufacture and cannot supply, we ask you to buy from us, rather than from others."

This should appeal to the people of Canada as good business. It is a self-respecting proposal for both parties to it. For example, Mr. Thomas points out that Canada imports over 16,000,000 tons of coal from the United States. He wants, and says he is going to get, some of that coal business for Britain,—Canada's best customer,—and thereby assist the coal mining industry of the Old Land and supply work for some of the thousands of unemployed miners there, as well as cargoes for British boats, thus providing employment for British dock hands, sailors, and all and sundry having to do with the business of shipping.

Such a policy will strike a responsive chord with the people of Western Canada, who are not particularly favourable to any policy of restrictive tariffs, or other forms of restraint on trade, and who firmly believe that the proper policy for this Dominion to pursue is to offset tariff action by other countries against Canada by further reducing tariffs on British goods and thereby assisting to substitute British-made goods for those of other countries.

The success of such a policy lies largely with the individual Canadian citizen. He can make it a success by stipulating when making any purchase that, first, he must have an article made in Canada, and, if that cannot be obtained, second, that it be British-made. Importers, wholesalers, distributors, retailers, will quickly adjust their stocks to comply with the popular demand.

Leaving all sentiment aside, it is good business for the people of Canada to support and buy from their best customer. The more we buy from Britain, the more Britain can afford to buy from us.

Body Of Austrian Recovered After Eighty-Three Years

Eighty-three years ago, Norbert Mattersberger, at the time 32 years old, husband of Magda, and father of Franz Otto, failed to returnn to his cottage, in the village of Kals, Austria, one day from the woods, where he won his living hunting game. A rescue party from the village decided he had been caught in an avalanche of ice.

Recently Mattersberger came home just as he left that day in 1846. The glacier had given up its prey. Although clean shaven, according to family receords, when he left, he had a two-inch beard when a party of hunters found him on the edge of the glacier. The body, clothes, and weapons were in a perfect state of preservation.

Franz Mattersberger is now 86. His father was buried at Kals, while grandchildren and great-brandchilmourned at his grave.

WHAT OUR GIRLS NEED

When Languid, Anaemic and Feeling Run Down

When a girl grows languid, dull and irritable, when her color fades and she becomes pale, you may be sure that the cause is anaemia, or impoverished blood. The bright, red color of the blood is caused by the presence in it of millions of tiny red corpuscles. It is these tiny bodies that carry nourishment from the blood to the tissues. They also cause the glow of health in cheeks and lips. When a girl's blood is deficient in these red corpuscles her body is under-nourished, her nerves starved, and there is serious danger of a decline. What is needed is an improvement in the quality of the blood, and it is a scientific fact that a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will so enrich and purify the blood that all traces of anaemia and its accompanying weaknesses will disappear. As an evidence of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind, Mrs. John Finnin, Howlan Station, P.E.I., says:—"I am glad to take this opportunity of recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My daughter was in a badly run down condition; very pale, nervous and much under weight. We tried several medicines, but they did not seem to do her any good, so I decided to give her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Almost from the start she began to improve, and after the use of a few boxes she had gained in weight, her appetite improved and she had a better color in her cheeks —in fact she had fully regained her former good health. I would advise every mother of young girls to give them Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at the first sign of an anaemic condition."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50c. a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Singing Fool

By HUBERT DAIL

Copyright, 1928, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

SYNOPSIS

Al Stone, the singing waiter and song writer at Blackie Joe's New York night club, is discovered by Marcus, the famous Broadway revue producer. Al insists on helping Molly, the ballad singer at Blackie's, because he loves her. Molly marries him, not loving him, and he pulls her up the ladder of fame. Meanwhile, Grace, the cigarette girl at Blackie's, who loved Al without his knowing it, is left behind. Molly has a baby. After her return to the stage her romantic interest in John Perry, Al's best friend, is revived. Al becomes part owner and master of ceremonies at the fashionable Club Bombo. On the third anniversary of their marriage he slips a jewel case under a napkin on her reserved table. Molly is in her limousine with John Perry on the way to the club. He pleads with her to throw over Al for him and suddenly kisses her.

CHAPTER XIII.

Brimming over with affection, Al greeted Molly as she entered the Bombo Club. Then he turned to Perry and said whole-heartedly:

"Awfully good of you, old man, to take care of Molly while I'm working."

Perry had turned away to see if any vestiges of Molly's face powder still remained on his coat. Satisfied that he was safe, he turned his coat, hat and stick over to a check girl and acknowledged Al's thanks with an appearance of sincere cordiality.

They passed into the main dining room, Al leading the way. As they moved toward the reserved table, bewildering and contrasting thoughts flickered through Molly's mind. What a strange whirlpool of emotions had sucked her down! She felt the light caressing kiss that Al had given her in greeting still on her lips, but behind it, and much more intense, was the recollection of John Perry's embrace.

Now Molly and John Perry were seated at the table, while Al remained standing, watching his wife with intense curiosity. Why did he do that, she thought. Did he suspect something?

Al was waiting for her to lift her napkin. When she leaned back in her chair and made no move to do it he pantomined definitely for her to look under the tiny square. Molly raised the napkin, saw the jewel case and card, and gave a cry of delight.

"Oh Al, this is wonderful of you!"

With eyes sparkling she tenderly lifted from the padded silken interior of the box a magnificent diamond brooch. She drew it close, held it at arm's length, studied it carefully—while Al's face was radiant at her expression of delight. Then she passed it to Perry for inspection.

A moment later she was pinning the expensive brooch to her dress, while Al turned and drew the attention of the crowd toward him.

"Folks," he said, "we have with us tonight none other than Molly Winton, the celebrated stars of the 'Merry-Go-Rounders.'"

Then, wih a proud gesture, he indicated Molly. Rousing applause was the answer of the crowd—a tribute to the girl's popularity. But Al raised his hand.

"Wait, folks!" he cried. "You ain't heard nothin' yet."

He seized Molly's hand and pulled her reluctantly to her feet. While she stood smiling and bowing to the audience he continued:

"And for the benefit of those of you who don't know it already, I want to say that Miss Winton is, in private life, my wife! Tonight we are celebrating the third anniversary of our marriage and—I want you all to congratulate us and be happy with us."

With that, Al suddenly slipped his arms about Molly, drew her close and kissed her. The roar of applause was deafening, twice the volume Molly received by herself. As she stood, with Al's arm around her waist, bowing again and again, there were insistent cries from the crowd that she give them a song. Molly nodded amiably.

Will you sing for them, honey?" whispered Al.

"Yes, I don't mind."

Al tucked his arm comfortably under Molly's and led her toward the orchestra platform. The crowd waited silently, giving her every attention. At the table she had left, John Perry sat with his elbow on the table and his chin in his cupped hand, staring after her retreating figure. A vague smile played across his features. When the song was finished and Molly returned, Perry rose and said:

"That was splendid, Molly! I never heard you in better voice. You held them in the hollow of your hand."

"Thank you, John," said Molly quickly, but with pretended indifference. Then she turned to Al: "Can't you sit down and stay with us a while. Must you always be circulating among the customers?"

"I'll be back in a moment," whispered Al. "You know I want to be with you every moment I can. But, after all, I'm master of ceremonies."

Molly shrugged her shoulders as he moved off. She had made her play for him to stay, but she was pleased he had gone off. Now she could talk to John.

"And you say you need him!" came Perry's whispered exclamation across the table.

"What do you mean?"

"Well, you heard the applause you got. You don't need him at all."

"Sh!" Molly drummed on the table-top without further words. The pink, polished nails of her white, beringed fingers went up and down with incredible rapidity. Too many rings on those slim fingers, too many glittering gems to be in the best of taste! How stridently they proclaimed her wealth and success! Molly glanced down at the brooch Al had just given her, as it reposed against the satin bodice of her gown. A few days before she had mentioned casually that she wanted a new brooch. Now—presto!—it was hers! But now, a few moments after Al had given it to her, it became just another costly ornament to add to her rich collection; the significance of the gift was lost on her.

A half hour passed, and Al returned to the table. Another half hour, and John Perry rose to go.

"'Fraid so," John answered. Now he was the one who thought of caution; he wished she wouldn't show her feelings so plainly before Al.

"Why?" she insisted. "I thought you'd run home with us for a while."

"Well, it's late for one thing. Besides, Molly, this is your anniversary. I know you and Al want some time alone together."

Perry spoke with the utmost gravity, but Molly thought she detected a sardonic gleam in his alert eyes. He was making fun of Al, and of her, too! For a moment she hated him for it. . . . . But a moment later, when Perry had gone, she hated Al for creating the situation. Her thoughts, which had been bewildered, turned bitter. Anniversary indeed!

The Rolls-Royce sped rapidly toward home, with Molly keeping silent the whole way. Al, believed she was tired, remained mum, too, out of deference to her mood. When they entered the reception hall of the apartment Molly curtly dismissed the maid and Al rushed off to the nursery, to see if Junior was sleeping.

The eyes of the young song-writer lit up with love for his baby son as he tip-toed across the nursery floor and surveyed the child, tucked safely away in bed. What a lovely picture Junior made, his mass of curls framing his delicate young face, his toy woolly dog nestled beside him on the pillow.

As Molly entered she was struck by the scene. The expression on Al's face told more plainly than words his complete love and utter devotion to Junior. For a moment she remembered her behaviour of the evening and a throb of misgiving shot through her. She was unworthy and she couldn't hide it from herself. Only a great, unselfish love could give Al's face the expression of radiance it held now. She knew she could not achieve such a love and, suddenly, the realization brought a surge of furious anger within her!

Fallacies About the Moon

When Not Visible Kaffirs Say It Has Headache

The Dakota Indians think that the moon at its waning is eaten by mice. The Polynesians believe it is devoured by the spirits of the dead. The Kaffirs say that it wanes when, suffering from a headache, it puts its hand to its forehead and hides the latter from our view. The Eskimos imagine that the moon, harassed by fatigue, retires for a moment to take a rest and food.

Little Helps For This Week

"In Thy presence is fulness of joy." Psalm xvi. 11.

O Friend of souls! 't is well with me
Whene'er Thy love my spirit calms;
From sorrow's dungeon forth I flee,
And hide me in Thy sheltering arms.
The night of weeping flies away
Before the heart-reviving ray
Of love that beams from out Thy breast;
Here is my heaven on earth begun;
Who were not joyful had he won
In Thee, O God! his joy and rest.
—Wolfgang Dersler.

We can even here be with God, so long as we bear God within us. We should be able to see without sadness our most holy wishes fade away like sun-flowers, because the sun above us still forever beams, eternally makes new and cares for all. And we must not so much prepare for eternity as plant eternity in our hearts,—eternity serene and pure, full of depth, full of light and all else.—Jean Paul Richter.

Use Of Radium

Complete Potency Of Radium As a Cure For Cancer Not Substantiated

Warnings against undue optimism were sounded at the sixth annual meeting of the British Empire Cancer Campaign, presided over by the Duke of York. Sir Thomas Horder, physician in ordinary to the Prince of Wales, and physician to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, in presenting the annual report, said that the launching of the National Radium Fund might create in the minds of many people an unfounded belief in the complete potency of radium as a cure for cancer. Such a belief might have very unfortunate results for the patient if carried into practice in any case in which the growth was completely removable by operation. In the course of time radium might come to equal or even exceed operative measures in efficiency. At present, however, it was the bounden duty of the doctor, in very many cases, in his patient's interest, to overrule his antipathy to surgical measures. All the same, the number of cases to which radium was applicable and the number in which brilliant results were achieved increased every year. But Sir Thomas added that it was open to considerable doubt whether many of the institutions that were advertising for money to purchase radium had upon their staffs men or women qualified to use it. It might even be necessary to employ some of the money collected in providing for such training in the use of a powerful but dangerous remedy.—Toronto Mail and Empire.
