Fatal Shooting Accident.

Enrico Yanz, an Austrian, was accidently shot in the arm while hunting above Comox Lake on Saturday evening last; he was climbing a hill when the gun slipped from his hand on to a rock causing it to be discharged, the contents entering the arm of the unfortunate victim, shattering it very badly. Mr. Yanz was alone at the time, and was discovered on the beach by two men in a very exhausted condition from loss of blood, having walked by himself from the spot where the accident occurred, a distance of five miles. The unfortunate man was taken to the hospital and operated upon, Sunday evening, but died from exhaustion, caused by loss of blood, about 2:30 on Monday morning. The deceased was well known, having resided in Cumberland for a number of years. He was a member of Cumberland Grove, United Ancient Order of Druids, which Order turned out in a body to pay their last respects to their deceased brother. The funeral took place on Tuesday, afternoon at four o'clock, from the residence of Mr. G. Bartholda to Cumberland R. C. cemetery.

The Cumberland roller rink still continues to be well patronized, which is proof of what a popular passtime roller skating is.

The May Rod and Gun.

Variety is the dominating feature of the May number of Rod and Gun in Canada, published by W. J. Taylor, Woodstock, Ont. In accord with the season there are some good fishing stories, while hunting receives such a full share of attention the moose, deer, bear wolves and wild geese all have particular stories given up to them. Two fine exploration papers—an illustrated review of Mr. Tyrrel's book, "Through the sub-Arctics of Canada," and one by Mr. Dickson describing a personal trip through Northern Ontario—give us some little idea of how much remains to be done in exploration work in Canada. Mr. Clapham has another fine dog article, "The Beagle for Sport," which all dog-lovers will peruse with interest. The decision of the Ontario Government to have licensed guides is noted and the order in Council dealing with the matter printed in full. Mr. Cy. Warman's paper on Wild Life appeals to every lover of the outdoors and cannot fail to have some effect in the direction the author wishes. This number completes the tenth volume and attention is drawn to the work of the magazine in Forest, Fish and Game Protection and the manner in which the movement in its favor has spread throughout Canada. The position achieved by the magazine is dwelt upon with pride and credit given to all those who have assisted Canada's sporting magazine to reach its present high position. If future numbers are as good as this birthday issue—and we are assured that not only will the high standing be kept up but efforts made to improve upon it—there can be no doubt at all as to the future of Rod&Gun. The magazine has now secured for itself a position not easily to be shaken.

LACROSSE

The lacrosse games played between New Westminsters and Reginas, at New Westminster, B. C., on Saturday and Monday last, were won by New Westminster. Saturday's score 6 to 4, Monday's 12 to 2.

The entertainment in aid of the Church of England, is postponed till Friday June 4th.

W. Wall, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Gray, R. Thomson, James Webster, jr. O. Horne, Mrs. T. Robertson and R. Cunliffe were passengers by Saturday's outgoing steamer.

BRAVE SOLDIERS.

Sacrificed Their Lives in an Attempt to Save the Colors.

In days gone by the Zulus were the boldest fighters among all the natives of South Africa, and it was not until they had been defeated in several battles that they would live in peace with white people.

In 1878 15,000 of the Zulus attacked and killed a regiment of British soldiers, and a most heroic deed was the attempt made by three British soldiers to save the two flags, or colors, belonging to the regiment.

When it was seen that the Zulus were so many that there was no hope of keeping them at bay the colonel of the British regiment called to a young officer whose name was Lieutenant Melvill and said, "You will take charge of the colors, Melvill, and try to get away from here."

The lieutenant saluted and took into his hands the two colors of his regiment. Then, with another officer and a soldier, all mounted on horses, he suddenly dashed away with his precious burden.

They were at once seen by the keen sighted Zulus, however, and after a long chase the three gallant Englishmen, fighting to the last, were killed by the enemy.

Some time afterward one of the flags was found near a rocky stream, where the heroes had fought and died, and it was taken to England and presented to Queen Victoria.

And in memory of the three brave soldiers who had died while defending it the queen placed a wreath of immortelles on the staff which held the flag.—London Mail.

Paganini's Cab.

On awakening one morning at his hotel in Vienna, Paganini, the celebrated violinist, was informed that the coloman whom the previous evening he had employed to drive him to the concert hall where he was playing was waiting to see him. On being admitted to his presence the man, after having advanced poverty and a large family as an excuse for the request that he was about to make, prayed the great musician to make his fortune. "What do you mean?" demanded Paganini. "Authorize me to write in large letters on the back of my vehicle these two words, 'Paganini's Cab.'" was the answer. Consent was given, with altogether satisfactory results.

Matrimonial Repartee.

She (in stern and rockbound accents)—You married me for better or worse, didn't you, Edgar?

He—Er—um—yes, I suppose so, my love.

She—Then what are you complaining about? I'm no worse than the average married woman, I can assure you!

He (meekly)—Well, if that is the case, all I've got to say is I'm mighty glad—

She (breaking in)—Glad?

He—Yes. Glad I'm not a polygamist. Er—um—looks a trifle squally over to the northeast, doesn't it, Miranda?

Lincoln on Money.

"Lincoln," said a senator at a banquet in Washington, "had no great admiration for mere financial success.

"'Financial success,' Lincoln once said, 'is purely metallic. The man who attains it has four metallic attributes—gold in his palm, silver on his tongue, brass in his face and iron in his heart.'"

MIXED METAPHOR.

The Wonderful Feat That Was Performed by a Bottle.

An amateur historian is responsible for this: "All along the ever flowing stream of history you can discern the silent footprints of the crowned heads of Europe."

The village reporter on the death of the village poet: "That dauntless pen shall write no more, for its eyes are closed forever."

From the speech of a rising young politician: "The fierce light of public opinion shall dog their footsteps until it strangles them. Then shall they swallow the bitter pill and drink its very dregs."

Advice and warning from a successful man of business to a gathering of young people: "Every rung in the ladder of success is paved with slippery stones, on which only the clear head and the steady hand can retain their footing."

The fearless suffragette was addressing a meeting of mere men. She had graphically related to them the fascinating story of the strenuous struggle the ladies had made for that most priceless of possessions, a vote; how every obstacle had been conquered and victory was at last in sight. "We have now," she shrieked, "almost crossed the trackless desert, and the harbor lights are stretching out their arms to greet us!"

The temperance advocate was giving a striking but a true picture of the vast amount of evil wrought by the demon of drink, and the fact that he occasionally got somewhat mixed in his metaphors did not derogate from the truth that underlay his remarks. "What is the greatest devastating agent of our time?" he asked. "It is the bottle, which smiles genially before your face while at the same time it is stabbing you in the back."—T. P.'s London Weekly.

Was Dr. Johnson Bashful?

On the eve of leaving London for Canada Mrs. Brooke, who wrote "The History of Emily Montague," the first novel written in Canada, gave a farewell party, Hannah More, Johnson and Boswell being of the company. Dr. Johnson was obliged to leave early and apparently departed after wishing his hostess health and happiness. Shortly after a servant whispered to Mrs. Brooke that a gentleman was waiting below to speak to her. Running downstairs, the fair novelist found the venerable lexicographer. "Madam," said he ponderously, "I sent for you downstairs that I might kiss you, which I did not choose to do before so much company."

Birds in Winter.

Though birds have a much higher temperature than a man's—man's is 98, while theirs is 107—they suffer cruelly from the winter cold. In a mutton country it is not uncommon to find sheep with dead birds fastened on their backs. The little, cold creatures snuggle in the sheep's wool to get warm, their feet become entangled in the fleece, and they starve to death.

Overlooked.

Visitor—And so you're leaving Paris. Of course you've been to the Louvre? Fair American—Yes; I bought this collaret there. Visitor—Ah, no! I mean the pictures, y' know. Fair American—There, mommer! I said there was a gallery by that name!

We have committed the Golden Rule to memory. Now let us commit it to life.—Markham.

JOHNSON'S JAG.

A Telephone Talk That Must Have Had a Queer Sequel.

McCarty has a fondness for a joke. If a really glittering opportunity turns up, his well controlled conscience is no obstacle to his devoting all the time necessary to the thorough and artistic performance of his jokelet, which is bad for business, but seems to be good for McCarty's digestion.

The other afternoon the telephone rang. A woman was on the wire. She had the wrong number, which made no difference to McCarty. He was in need of relaxation, and the following one sided conversation ensued:

"Yes—yes, this is humpty-umphteen-seven Rector."

"Who? Mr. Johnson? Oh, yes, Mr. Johnson—sure," he lied pleasantly.

"Did you want to speak to him?" inquired McCarty sweetly.

"You're sure it's Mr. Johnson you want to talk to?"

Here McCarty held his hand over the mouthpiece and forcibly admonished the office boy, who, with humane intentions, had come to rescue the switchboard, suspecting trouble. "G'wan now! I'm doin' this," remarked McCarty, fixing the menial with an eagle eye.

"Could you give me the message, ma'am, and I'll deliver it to Mr. Johnson?" he resumed, with engaging politeness.

"Oh, you must speak to him personally if he is busy?" McCarty's voice was an interrogation point.

"You want Mr. Johnson himself to step to the telephone, and you are Mrs. Johnson?"

"Well, ma'am, you see he ain't stepping much now—that is—I mean—he is—well—er—er"— He hesitated in elaborate confusion.

"Yes'm, I am explaining what's the matter. He—well, you see, your husband would be willing to come to the telephone, but he isn't exactly able."

"No, he's not just what you'd call busy."

"No, he's not ill. He's doing nicely."

"We have 'im on the lounge in the directors' room, and we're doing all we can for him"—

"Oh, no, ma'am, you needn't be at all alarmed. He's not able to walk yet but—we'll—soon—have—him—all—right."

"No, no—not ill. I say he's not ill—he's dr—that is, intoxicated, ma'am but you needn't— What's that?"

"You've never seen him intox—well you ought to see him now. What?"

"You—I'll"—

"Oh. She's rung off."

"Now, who in the dence—who d'yer s'pose Mr. Johnson is, and what d'yer s'pose will be comin' to him when he gets home? Oh, gee!" And McCarty gurgled with joy as he swung back into his seat, and his typewriter clicked innocently out upon the office atmosphere.

Breaking Out the Colors.

A pretty sight aboard ship is the breaking out of the flags on reaching a port. At the appointed time a seaman takes his station at the forward mast and another at the rear mast. In his hand is a small silken bundle tightly rolled. This is sent aloft. When the signal to break out the colors is given a cord is pulled, the bundle unrolls, and a splendid silk flag flutters out into the breeze. At the foremast is that of the nation whose port the ship is entering, while that on the rear mast is the flag of the steamship company, the ship's nationality being advertised by a large flag at the stern. The latter is lowered, or dipped, by way of salute when another steamer is passed out in the ocean.—H. J. Blanton in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Senatorial Temper.

A good way to tell the disposition and temperament of a senator is to watch him when he gives the three rings for the senate elevator. The rule is when three are given, no matter who is on the elevator or where it is going, the elevator man must hasten the car in answer to the rings. If the senator who rings is at peace with the world and the White House he will permit the car to go to its destination with the passengers. If the bell ringer is a grouch he compels the car to be stopped, and he has to be carried to his objective point, no matter who is aboard or how much hurry they may be in.

Arizona's Wonderful Canyon.

How many Americans trot off to Europe in search of something new who have never seen and probably never known of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, the most stupendous, awful, mysterious, beautiful and attractive natural wonder in the world! It has a depth of 6,000 feet, is over 60,000 feet wide and incloses a magnificent river framed in by giant peaks with all the colors of the rainbow. This magnificent canyon has been brought within easy reach by Pullman car from our great cities. A trip can be made from New York in three days and from Chicago in two.

The Storm Nose.

The curious name "storm nose" is given in Germany to the wave of high barometric pressure which often precedes a storm or a heavy squall. The barometer rises suddenly and then falls more gradually. It is believed that this phenomenon is responsible for sudden changes in the level of the sea. Observations on the seas surrounding Denmark have led to the conclusion that the change of level thus produced sometimes amounts to no less than three feet.

He who shall pass judgment on the records of our life is the same that formed us in frailty.—Stevenson.

GRANT SIGNED.

He Indorsed the Order "Till the Day of Judgment."

General Grant has fitly been spoken of as "an unaffected great soldier." It may have been the blending of this large mindedness and lack of affectation that invariably made him so courteously kind to any one who asked his assistance, so generous in his praise of an opponent, even when that opponent was fighting him to the death. The following little story emphasizes all these qualities:

After the fall of Fort Donelson, to prevent the needless violation of property by either the army or by camp followers, protections were issued by the United States government. To Miss C., whose six brothers were fighting in the Confederate army, such a protection was granted. It had been signed by all the commanders of the post in turn—by Buell, Rosecrans, Schofield, Sheridan, Grainger and many others—and the list was long and impressive. At last it became necessary for General Grant's signature to be added.

"When I entered the office," says Miss C., "the general was smoking, his feet higher than his head. But he seemed instantly to stand upright before me, and his cigar was thrown away in a moment.

"I handed him my protection.

"'You have rather a formidable list of names,' he said as he took it from me.

"'And I hope that you will add yours to it and make it even more formidable,' I replied.

"For answer he sat down again, ready to put his signature at the end of the parchment, when he suddenly stopped and looked at me.

"'For how long do you wish this protection for your estate, Miss C.?' he asked.

"'Until the day of judgment, general,' I answered boldly.

"Then he smiled that sweet, quizzical smile of his that made so many people, even when they were his enemies, love him and said:

"'My dear young lady, you have great confidence in your armies! But with such courage and with such a leader as General Lee I cannot wonder.' Then, with a great flourish, he added the words, 'Till the day of judgment, Ulysses S. Grant,' and handed it back to me."

AUTUMN LEAVES.

The Change of Color From Green to Red or Yellow or Brown.

Despite the commonness of autumn colorings, we do not yet know the full meaning of autumn colors of leaves. We do know that late in the summer the tree is preparing for the leaf fall by drawing the valuable substances of the leaf into the stem. It also ceases to make chlorophyl (the green substance of the leaf which aids in the making of the plant's food), and this gradually fades away in the bright light. By fading it exposes to view any other colors in the leaf, and all leaves contain yellow coloring matters called xanthophyl, whose function is not known, and it is these which give the yellow color to autumn leaves.

The red is formed differently. In bright light and cool temperature a new substance, called erythrophyl, is made from sugar and tannin in the leaf cells, and that has a red color. A brown substance is also sometimes formed, and, besides, the skeleton of the leaf itself turns brown as the leaf dies. It is the various combinations of these substances that give the many shades of autumn colors. Some students think these colors are a useful protection to the living protoplasm (life material) of the leaf after the green disappears, protecting it against the full blaze of light, which is injurious, but others think the colors have no use at all, but are simply the incidental chemical result of the processes in the ripening and dying leaf.

As yet the weight of evidence seems to favor the latter view, but the matter is still unsettled. It is generally thought that frost has something to do with it, but it has not, except to hasten it. Anything which affects the vitality of the leaf tends to hasten it, for which reason an injured branch of a maple will often show red autumn color even in summer.

The colors are brightest where the leaves receive the most brilliant sunshine.—Professor W. F. Ganong in St. Nicholas.

A Slow Horse.

One time when he was quite a young man Lincoln hired a livery stable horse to attend a convention where he expected to be nominated for some office. The horse went so slow that when he reached there the convention was over and the other fellow nominated. On his return he irately asked the stable keeper if the horse was good for anything at all. "Yes, for drawing the hearse to funerals," was the reply. Lincoln advised him earnestly never to send that horse to a funeral, for if he did judgment day would arrive before the corpse reached the grave.

Geese.

A Georgia editor wants to know in what part of the country the most geese are to be found. That is hard to say. Some would suggest California, some Georgia, some Tennessee, some Massachusetts, some New York, and, maybe, some especially mean ones the District of Columbia.

His Meek Retort.

"Convicted?" exclaimed the prisoner in disgust. "Well, I'm not surprised. My lawyer made a fool of himself."

"I tried to represent you faithfully," remarked the lawyer mildly.
