W. J. Fraser has been appointed Preventive Officer at Union Bay.—This appointment while needed at Union Bay, won't benefit our merchants here in the least. We need a collector of customs here, and the sooner the appointment is made, the better.

Rev. J. G. Reid, who has been preaching in the Presbyterian church for the past month, will leave on Wednesday morning for Salmon Arm, where he has accepted a call.

The tournament for ladies' and men's singles commenced last Tuesday, The following players won their matches:—Mrs J Roe, Mrs Lawrence, Miss Brown, Mrs G Roe, Wilt Clinton. Next Thursday will be 'Club Day,' and players will please arrange with their opponents for Wednesday, if possible, as all matches must be played this week.

ROYAL BANK MANAGER GOES TO VANCOUVER

H. F. Montgomery, manager of the Royal Bank here, has been notified that he is to manage the Cordova street branch of that bank at Vancouver, and expects to leave for that city on Wednesday. He will be succeeded in the management here, by Mr. R. E. Culbert of the Courtenay branch. We regret the departure of "Monty" from among us, for we all thought a lot of him, not alone for his business ability, but also for his fine social qualities and kindliness of heart. We wish him every success in his new and important position —"For he's a jolly good fellow."

Mr. Montgomery on the eve of his departure, was presented with a handsome gold watch and chain by some of his intimate friends.

Mr. Mark Morgan and family will leave next week for Vancouver, where they will take up their residence.

Wilt Clinton will leave next week for South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, where he will attend college.

Mr. Thomas Bickle and Miss Rhoda Bickle left for Victoria by Saturday's boat. Mrs Bickle and Miss Bickle will leave here on Wednesday to take up their residence in that city.

Miss Walker, of the Big Store, left by Sunday's boat on a vacation trip to Vancouver.

Mr. W. C. Brown, of Vancouver, formerly with the Canadian Bank of Commerce here, arrived by Sunday's boat.—Cumberland must still have its attractions for Mr. Brown.

PUBLIC MEETING CUMBERLAND HALL

Provincial Organizer J. W. Whiteley, of the Orange Association of B. C., will deliver an address in the Cumberland Hall, on Wednesday evening, August 2nd, on the following subjects:—"Some Facts Regarding Roman Catholicism That Every Protestant Should Know." Special reference will be made to the Eucharistic Congress, and the Ne Temere marriage decree. Admission free.

F. J. Burde, Grand Master, of B. C. Masons, and six other prominent Masons, visited Cumberland last week, and met our local lodge in session, after which a banquet was tendered them at the Cumberland Hotel, where a very enjoyable evening was spent.

Miss Nina White arrived home from Vancouver on Saturday evening.

CONSERVATIVES APPOINT DELEGATES

Prince Rupert, July 27.—The Conservatives of this city met last night and appointed delegates to attend the district convention today for the nomination of a candidate to contest Comox-Atlin at the next Dominion elections. Several names are mentioned for the nomination. One rumor has it, that if the Liberals put Duncan Ross in the field, Premier McBride will be asked to oppose him. It is understood that Mayor Manson, M. L. A., will not accept a federal nomination.

Cumberland defeated Courtenay at baseball on Sunday last, by a score of 13—7

ANNUAL OUTING OF LADIES' AID

Last Wednesday the Ladies' Aid of Grace Methodist church, held their annual outing at "Camp Bonita," where they were entertained by two of their members, Mesdames L. A. Mounce and (Dr.) Gillespie, who are camping at that delightful resort. A most enjoyable day was spent. One pleasing feature was the presentation of a cut glass and silver fern dish to Mrs. T. Bickle, who is leaving this week for Victoria, where she will in future reside.

Mr. G. Ardley, of the Big Store staff, has accepted a position with McPhee & Morrison, of Courtenay.

CHAPTER II.

JIM ALLEN was the sole owner and proprietor of Allen Hacienda. His ranch, the Bar One, stretched for miles up and down the Sweetwater valley. Bounded on the east and west by the foothills, the tract was one of the garden spots of Arizona. Southward lay the Sweetwater ranch, owned by Jack Payson. Northward was the home ranch of the Lazy K, an Ishmaelitish outfit, ever at petty war with the other settlers in the district. It was a miscellaneous and constantly changing crowd recruited from rustlers from Wyoming, gamblers from California, half breed outlaws from the Indian Territory—in short, "bad men" from every section of the western country. They had a special grudge against Allen and Payson, whom they held to be accountable for the sudden disappearance about a year before of their leader, Buck McKee, a half breed, from the Cherokee strip. However, no other leader had arisen equal to that masterful spirit, and their enmity expressed itself only in such petty depredations as changing brands on stray cattle from the Bar One and Sweetwater ranches and the slitting of the tongues of young calves so that these would be unable to feed properly and as a result be disowned by their mothers, whereupon the Lazy K outfit would slap its brand on them as mavericks.

Allen was a Kentuckian who had served in the Confederate army as one of Morgan's raiders and so had received by popular brevet the title of colonel. At the close of the war he had come to Arizona with his young wife, Josephine, and had founded a home on the Sweetwater. He was now one of the cattle barons of the great southwest. Prosperity had not spoiled him. Careless in his attire, cordial in his manner, he was a man who was loved and respected by his men from the newest tenderfoot to the veteran of the bunk house. His wife, however, was not so highly regarded, for she had never been able to recognize changes in time or location and so was in perpetual conflict with her environment. She attempted to make the free and independent cowboys of the Arizona plains "stand around" like the house servants of the Kentucky blue grass, and she persisted in the effort to manage her husband by the feminine artifice of weeping. In the days of her youth and beauty this had been very effective, but now that these had passed it was productive only of good humored raillery from him and mirth from the bystanders.

"No wonder Jim has the finest ranch in Arizony," the cowboys were wont to say, "with Josephine a-irrigatin' it all the time."

Allen Hacienda was certainly a garden spot in that desert country. The building was of the old Mexican style, an architecture found by centuries of experience to be suited best to the climate and the materials of the land. The house was only one story in height. The rooms and outbuilding sprawled over a wide expanse of ground. The walls were of native stone and adobe clay. Over them clambered grapevines. In front of the home Mrs. Allen had planted a garden. A 'dobe wall cut off the house from the corral and the bunk house. A heavy girder spanned the distance from the low roof to the top of the barrier. Latticework supporting a grapevine formed, with a girder, a gateway through which one could catch from the plazza a view of a second cultivated plot. Palms and flowering cactuses added color and life to the near prospect. Through the arbor a glimpse of the Tortilla mountains, forty miles away, held the eye. The Sweetwater, its path across the plains outlined by the trees fringing its banks, flowed past the ranch. Yucca palms and sahuaros threw a scanty shade over the garden.

Shortly after the arrival of the Allens in Arizona they were blessed with a daughter, the first white child born in that region. They waited for a Protestant clergyman to come along before christening her, and as such visits were few and far between the child was beginning to talk before she received a name. From a "cunning" habit she had of repeating the last words of questions put to her her father provisionally dubbed her Echo, which name, when the preacher came, he insisted upon her retaining.

As Echo grew older, in order that she might have a companion, Colonel Allen went to Kentucky and brought back with him a little orphan girl who was a distant relative of his wife. Polly Hope her name was, and Polly Hope she insisted on remaining, although the Allens would gladly have adopted her.

Colonel Allen trained the girls in all the craft of the plains just as if they were boys. He taught them to ride astride, to shoot, to rope cattle. They accompanied him everywhere he went, cantering on bronchos by the side of his Kentucky thoroughbred. Merry, dark eyed, black haired Echo always rode upon the off side and saucy Polly, with golden curls, blue eyes and tip tilted nose, upon the near. The ex-Confederate soldier dubbed them in military style his "right and left wings." As the three would "make a raid" upon Florence, the county town, the inhabitants did not need to look out of doors to ascertain who were coming, for the merriment of the little girls gave sufficient indication. "Here comes Jim Allen ridin' like the destroyin' angel," said young Sheriff Hoover on one of these occasions. "I know him by the rustlin' of his 'wings.'"

The household was again increased a few years later by the generous response of the Allens to an appeal from a children's aid society in an eastern city to give a home to two orphaned brothers, Richard and Henry Lane. Dick and Buddy (shortened in time to Bud), as they were called, being taken young, quickly adapted themselves to their new environment and by the time they arrived at manhood had proved themselves the equals of any cowboy on the range in horsemanship and kindred accomplishments. Dick, the elder brother, was a steady, reliable fellow, modest as he was brave and remarkably quick witted and resourceful in emergencies. He gave his confidence over readily to his fellows, but if ever he found himself deceived withdrew it absolutely. It was probably this last characteristic that attracted to him Echo Allen's especial regard, for it was also her distinguishing trait. "You have got to act square with Echo," her father was wont to say, "for if you don't you'll never make it square with her afterward."

Bud was a generous hearted, impetuous boy, who responded warmly to affection. He repaid his elder brother's protecting care with a loyalty that knew no bounds. The colonel, who was a strict disciplinarian, frequently punished him in his boyhood for wayward acts, and the little fellow made no resistance—only sobbed in deep penitence. Once, however, when Uncle Jim, as the boys and Polly called him, felt compelled to apply the rod to Dick—unjustly, as it afterward appeared—Bud burst into a tempest of passionate tears and, leaping upon the colonel's back, clung there, clawing and striking like a wildcat, until Allen was forced to let Dick go. It is shrewdly indicative of the colonel's character that not only did he refrain from punishing Bud on that occasion, but when floggings were subsequently due the little fellow laid on the rod less heavily out of regard for the loyalty to his brother he had then displayed.

This attack also won the admiration of Polly Hope, who was something of a spitfire herself. A little jealous of Dick for the chief place he held in Bud's affection, she openly claimed the younger brother as her sweetheart and attempted to constitute him her knight, though with repeated discouragements, for Bud was a bashful lad and, though he had a true affection for the girl, boylike concealed it by show of rude indifference.

The tender relations of these boys and girls persisted naturally into young manhood and womanhood. No word of love passed between Dick and Echo until that time when the "nesting impulse," the desire to have a home of his own, prompted the young man to go out into the world and win his fortune. For a year he had acted as foreman of the Allen ranch, working in neighborly co-operation with Jack Payson of Sweetwater ranch, a man of about his own age. The two young men became the closest of comrades. When the fever of adventure seized upon Lane and he became dissatisfied with the plodding career of a wage earner, Payson insisted on mortgaging Sweetwater ranch for $3,000 and lending Dick the money for a year's prospecting in the mountains of Sonora, Mexico, in search of a fabulously rich "lost mine of the Aztecs."

Traditions of lost mines are plentiful in Arizona and northern Mexico. First taken up by the Spanish invaders of 300 years ago from the native Indians, they have passed down to each subsequent influx of white men. The directions are always vague. The inquirer cannot pin his informant down to any definite data. Over the mountains always lies the road. Hundreds of lives have been sacrificed and cruelty unparalleled practiced upon innocent men, women and children by gold seekers in their lust for conquest. Prosperous Indian villages have been laid waste, and whole bands of adventurers have gone into the desert in search of these mines, never to return.

When the time for Lane's departure came Echo wept at the thought of losing for so long a time the close companion of her childhood and the sympathetic confidant of her youthful thoughts and aspirations. Dick, in whom friendship for Echo had long before ripened into conscious love, took her tears as evidence that she was similarly affected toward him, and he allowed all the suppressed passion of his nature full vent in a declaration of love. The girl was deeply moved by this revelation of the heart of a strong man made tender as a woman's by a power centering in her own humble self, and, being utterly without experience of the emotion even in its protective form of calf love, which is the varioloid of the genuine affection, she imagined through sheer sympathy that she shared his passion. So she assented with maidenly reserve to his plea that she promise to marry him when he should return and provide a home for her. Her more cautious mother secured a modification of this pledge by limiting the time that Echo should wait for him to one year. If at the expiration of that period Lane did not return to claim her promise or did not write making satisfactory arrangements for continuance of the engagement Echo was to be considered free to marry whom she chose.

Soon after Lane's departure Mrs. Allen persuaded the colonel to send Echo east to a New England finishing school for girls, where her mother hoped that her budding love for Lane might be nipped by the frigid atmosphere of intellectual culture, if not, indeed, supplanted by a saving interest in young men in general and perhaps in some particular scion of a blue blooded Boston family.

The plan succeeded in part only. The companionship of her schoolfellows, her music and art lessons, her books (during the limited periods allotted to serious study and reading) and, above all, her attrition at receptions with another order of men than that she had known in the rough, uncultured west occupied her mind so fully that poor Dick Lane, who was putting a thought of Echo even in every blow of his pick, received only the scraps of her attention.

Dick had few opportunities to mail a letter and none of them for receiving one. Unpracticed in writing, his epistolary compositions were crude in the extreme, being wholly confined to bald statements of fact. Had he been as tender on paper as he was in his words and accents when he kissed away her tears at parting her regard for him would have had fuel to feed on and might have kindled into genuine love. As it was, she was forced to admit that in comparison with the brilliant university men with whom she conversed Dick Lane intellectually was as quartz to diamond.

On the other hand, she contrasted Dick in the essential point of manliness most favorably with the male butterflies of society that hovered around her. What one of them was so essentially chivalrous as the western man—so modest, so self sacrificing, so brave and resolute and resourceful? Dick Lane, or Jack Payson, for that matter, in all save the adventitious points of education and culture was the higher type of manhood, and Jack, at least, if not poor Dick, could hold his own in mental and artistic perception with the brightest, most cultured of Harvard graduates.

At the end of the year she came back home to await Dick's return from the wilds of Mexico. There was great anxiety about his safety, for Geronimo, attacked by Crook in the Apache stronghold of the Tonto basin, had escaped to the mountains of northwestern Mexico with his band of fierce Chiricahuas.

Now, Dick Lane had not been heard from in this region. When he neither made appearance nor sent a message upon the day appointed for his return, his brother, Bud, was for setting out instantly to find him and rescue him if he were in difficulties.

Then it was that Echo Allen discovered the true nature of her affection for her lover—that it was sisterly regard, differing only in degree, but not in kind, from that which she felt for his brother. She joined with Polly in opposing Bud's going, urging his recklessness as a reason. "You are certain to be killed," she said, "and I cannot lose you both." Jack Payson, for whom Bud was working, then came forward and offered to accompany him and keep within bounds. Again there was a revelation of her heart to Echo, one that terrified her with a sense of disloyalty. It was Jack she really loved, noble, chivalric, wonderful Jack Payson, whom, with a southern girl's intensity of feeling, she had unconsciously come to regard as her standard of all that makes for manhood. Plausible objections could not be urged against his sacrificing himself for his friend. With an irresistible impulse she cast herself upon his breast and said, "I cannot bear to see you go."

Payson gently disengaged her arms. "I must, Echo. It is what Dick would do for me if I were in his place."

However, while Payson and Bud were preparing for their departure Buck McKee appeared in the region and reported that Dick Lane had been killed by the Apaches. He told with convincing details how he had met Lane as each was returning from a successful prospecting trip in the Ghost range and how they had sunk their differences in standing together against an attack of the Indians. He extolled Dick's bravery, relating how severely wounded, he had stood off the savages to enable himself to escape.

When he handed over Dick's watch to Echo—for he had learned on his return that she was betrothed to Lane—as a last token from her lover, no doubt remained in the minds of his hearers of the truth of his story, and Payson and Bud Lane gave up their purposed expedition.

The Oldest Member.

In a short while Mr. Samuel Young British M.P., will enter on his ninetieth year. He is the oldest man in the House of Commons, though it is hard to believe it, for he is wonderfully active. Mr. Young was hailed the other day by an old friend, who congratulated him on looking so well "for a man who must be at least 75." With a twinkle in his eye the aged M.P. replied: "Yes, I am at least 75, for in a short time I celebrate my 89th birthday." He has sat in Parliament since 1892.—Westminster Gazette.

LISZT AS AN IDOL

The Great Musician Was Petted by English Royalty.

A SOUVENIR OF THE MASTER.

The Singular Memento That Was Sacredly and Secretly Treasured by a Cold, Rigid and Rather Disagreeable Old Englishwoman.

"When I was a very small boy, indeed," writes Ford M. Hueffer in Harper's, "when I wore green velveteen clothes, red stockings and long golden curls, thus displaying to an unsympathetic world the fact of my pre-Raphaelite origin, I was taken one day to a very large hall. In front of us was a wooden platform draped all in red. Upon the platform was a grand piano.

"In front of me the first row of the stalls had been taken away, and in place of them there had been put three gilded armchairs, before which was a table covered with a profusion of flowers that drooped and trailed to the ground. Suddenly there was applause—a considerable amount of applause. A lady and gentleman were coming from under the dark entry that led to the artists' room. They were the Prince and Princess of Wales. There was no doubt about that even for a small boy like myself.

"And then there was more applause. What applause! It volleyed, it rolled round the hall. All were on their feet. People climbed on to their chairs, they waved hands, they waved programs, they waved hats, they shouted, for in the dark entrance there had appeared, white and shining, a head with brown and sphinxlike features and white and long hair and the eternal wonderful smile.

"They advanced, these three, amid those tremendous shouts and enthusiasm—the two royal personages leading the master, one holding each hand. They approached the gilded armchairs immediately in front of me, and the prince and princess indicated to the master that he was to sit between them at the table covered with flowers.

"He made little pantomimes of modesty, he drew his hands through their grasp, he walked quickly away from the armchairs, and because I was just behind them he suddenly removed me from my seat and left me standing under all the eyes, solitary in the aisle of the center of the hall, while he sat down. I do not think I was frightened by the eyes, but I know I was terribly frightened by that great brown, aquiline face, with the piercing glance and the mirthless, distant, inscrutable smile.

"And immediately just beside me there began what appeared to be a gentle and courtly wrestling match. A gentleman of the royal suit approached the master. He refused to move. The prince approached the master. He sat indomitably still. Then the princess came and, taking him by the hand, drew him almost by force out of my stall, for it was my stall, after all.

"And when he was once upon his feet, as if to clinch the matter, she suddenly sat down in it herself, and with a sudden touch of good feeling she took me by the hand—the small solitary boy with the golden curls and the red stockings—and sat me upon her lap. I, alas, have no trace of the date on which I sat in a queen's lap, for it was all so very long ago; the king is dead, the master is long since dead, the hall itself is pulled down and has utterly disappeared.

"I had a distant relative—oddly enough an English one, not a German—who married an official of the court of Weimar and became a lady in waiting on the grand duchess. As far as I know, there was nothing singularly sentimental about this lady. When I knew her she was cold, rigid and rather disagreeable. She had always about her a peculiar and disagreeable odor, and when she died a few years ago it was discovered that she wore round her neck a sachet, and in this sachet was a half smoked cigar.

"This was a relic of Franz Liszt. He had begun to smoke it many years before at a dinner which she had given, and, he having put it down unfinished, she had at once seized upon it and had worn it upon her person ever since. This sounds inexplicable and incredible, but there it is."

Settling a Bill.

When Andrew Jackson lived at Salisbury, N. C., he once attended court at Rockford, then the county seat of Surry, and left without paying his bill, which was duly charged up against him on the hotel register, which seems to have been the hotel ledger at that time, and so stood for many years. When the news of the victory of the 8th of January, 1815, was received in this then remote section the old landlord turned back the leaves of the register, took his pen and wrote under the account against Andrew Jackson, "Settled in full by the battle of New Orleans."

She Meant Well.

The late Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the rigid apostle of temperance, while on a week end visit made the acquaintance of a sharp young lady of seven, to whom, on leaving, he said: "Now, my dear, we have been talking some time. I am sure you have no idea, who I am."

"Oh, yes, I have," the little missy replied. "You are the celebrated drunkard."—London Graphic.

Not by years, but by disposition, is wisdom acquired.—Plautus.

LIFE'S MISTAKES.

Judge Rentoul Says There Are a Dozen Principal Ones.

The average man of to-day does not, as a rule, like admitting any mistakes he has made, but, judging from an address recently delivered by Judge Rentoul, of the City of London (Eng.) Court, the well-known administrator of the law is quite willing to own up to this. The text of his discourse was "The Twelve Mistakes of Life," and he frankly confessed he had committed the whole of them. This was the list he gave:

To attempt to set up our own standard of right and wrong and expect everybody to conform to it.

To try to measure the enjoyment of others by our own.

To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.

To look for judgment and experience in youth.

To endeavor to mould all dispositions alike.

Not to yield in unimportant trifles.

To look for perfection in our own actions.

To worry ourselves and others about what cannot be remedied.

Not to alleviate, if we can, all that needs alleviation.

Not to make allowances for the weaknesses of others.

To consider anything impossible that we cannot ourselves perform.

To believe only what our finite can grasp.

Judge Rentoul was both a Presbyterian minister and a member of the British Parliament before he took to law as a profession. Not long ago his honor told an amusing story of the first illuminated address he ever received. It was presented to him on his first election to the House of Commons. Scanning it closely, he was rather chagrined to find that following his name the word "barrister-at-law" was inscribed, in very large characters, whilst "member of Parliament" was very small. On drawing the attention of the artist to the fact, he got the answer: "Well, sir, it requires a clever man to be a barrister, but any duffer can be a member of Parliament."

Song-Birds for Gourmets.

A recent prosecution in Norfolk, Eng., has thrown some light on the trade in larks for London. A farmer was fined for laying down grain poisoned with strychnine for the purpose of catching larks, which would afterwards appear on the tables of epicures.

This man sent seventy-seven dozen larks to London in three weeks, the price being 1s. 9d. the dozen. It has been said that between January and March 40,000 larks arrive in Leadenhall Market every day!

Those who consider pigeon-pie a delicacy may be interested to learn that the birds are often cruelly treated before they appear in the poulterers' shops. Some 10,000 are annually brought to London from Italy.

They are taken when quite young, and packed in crates containing eighty to a hundred, arriving in Paris two days later. Twelve hours later they continue their journey, and reach London after traveling two days and three nights, a very large number of them dying on the way.

Quails are also packed in crates in the same cruel way, attention having been frequently called to the scandal. Then there is a certain amount of cruelty in catching plovers, and those whose business it is to carry on the trade have been prosecuted more than once, although the number of convictions have been few.

Like Father Like Son.

Another of Mr. Asquith's sons is following in his distinguished father's academic footsteps and having a brilliant university career. This is Mr. Cyril Asquith, who, having, like his father, obtained a scholarship at Balliol in the first place, has now gained a first in "Mods.," upon which distinction he and his father alike will be heartily congratulated. Mr. Cyril Asquith's elder brother, Mr. Raymond Asquith, it will be remembered, had one of the most distinguished University careers of recent times. Mr. Asquith's own achievemnets at Oxford are, of course, now a matter of tradition, though others have been perhaps more outstanding But there was something about him which seemed to breathe of success, and of an assured future. An astute judge of men, the late Master of Balliol, put it in a sentence: "Yes," he said, "Asquith will get on; he is so direct."

Hope of Romantic Fiction.

It was really as a lecturer that Mr. Maurice Hewlett, whom someone has described as "the darling hope of romantic fiction," first became famous, and many an interesting anecdote he tells of those days. Once, speaking at a small Scottish village, the chairman, having referred to "the mon wha's come here tae broaden oor intellects," remarked that a short prayer would not be out of place. "And, O Lord," the good man went on, "put it intae the heart o' this mon tae speak the truth, the hale truth, and naething but the truth, and gae us grace tae understand him." Then, with a glance at Mr. Hewlett, he added, "I've been a lecturer mesel!"

Blessing the Nets.

The ancient service known as the blessing of the nets, which has been revived in Lowestoft, where it is now held each year prior to the departure of the local fleet for the westward fishing, was held recently in the parish church. Rev. A. D. Carey, the previous rector, now a canon of York, officiated, and blessed the nets by taking them in his hands and invoking success on the fishermen's endeavors, and praying for their preservation from peril.

A Ship Photographed While She Was Sinking.

The illustrations shown above are reproductions of the remarkable photographs taken of the three masted sailing ship Arden Craig as she was foundering off the Scilly isles, which are situated twenty-five miles southwest of Land's End, the extreme southwesterly point of England, says Popular Mechanics. The first photograph was taken just after the deck became awash, the second as she heeled over for the final plunge and the third a moment or two after she went down. Several hundred people watched the sinking from the shore.

The Particolored Bear.

The particolored bear (Aeluropus melanoleucus) is so rare an animal that it deserves more than passing notice. This particular specimen was acquired by W. N. Fergusson, a missionary in Szethuen, from a Tibetan hunter. Its habitat is the dwarf bamboo and rhododendron forests which clothe the hills at an altitude of from 9,000 to 11,000 feet in this part of China. It is a vegetable feeder. The soles of the feet are hairy, and, though very bearlike in appearance, it has been named the great panda by Sir Ray Lankester, as the structure of the skull and skeleton shows it to be closely related to the Himilayan panda or wah. It has never been obtained by a European sportsman and was originally discovered in 1869 by Pere David in the mountains of east Tibet. The panda, a very handsomely colored little beast, is the only old world representative of the raccoon.

On the Cars.

Here is something that may amuse you some time when you are in the trolley car or elevated train and are beginning to feel tired. Compare the advertisements in the car with the people who are sitting beneath them. The contrast is often very funny. For instance, you may see an elderly gentleman below an advertisement for babies' food, or a baby beneath a shaving soap advertisement, or a very bald person sitting unconsciously beneath a hair tonic sign, or a tramp beneath a soap advertisement. It is fun, too, to read from one advertisement on to the next, as though they belonged together. You may read, for instance, that a certain breakfast food is excellent for the hair or that condensed soup frequently applied will make your garments look like new.

A Queer African Town.

The town of Abu Hamed is located where caravans quit the river Nile and begin their journey across the desert. Merchants leave their merchandise there and load up again with goods that other merchants have left there for them. There is nothing unusual in this, the strange part being that no storehouses or depots are used for the protection of these goods, often of priceless value. The curious story about Abu Hamed is that goods left under the monument dedicated to St. Abu Hamed are safe. Here they remain in the sand beneath the monument for months or years. No one will molest them. They are considered to be under the protection of the saint himself. There has never been known an instance of loss or theft of any goods.

Tree City.

I know a little city on a green and sunny hill,
Where a hundred tiny families have homes;
Its byways are uncrowded, its leafy lanes are still,
And there no noisy railroad ever comes.

The homes are high and airy. They hang and rock and sway
Whenever way the summer breezes blow;
They have no doors or windows, no roof to blow away,
But leafy awnings shade the babes below.

The fathers and the mothers all earn their daily bread
And bring it to the little ones who cry
They do not ride or motor, they do not walk; instead
They choose the very latest mode—they fly.

The happy little citizens who live so light and free
They sing and sing and sing the whole day long.
For the peaceful, quiet city is a green and lovely tree,
And the dwellers there are birds, whose life is song.

WESTERN FARMERS PROFITS IN TEN YEARS

He Pays Only $35 per Year in Duties on Implements—What 640 Acres Can Do.

A farmer writing to a Toronto daily paper from Indian Head, Saskatchewan, under the nom de plume, Saskatchewan Farmer, refutes the statement made by many Westerners, that the farmers of the West have been ill-used by the Dominion Government which is identified largely with Eastern interests. This Saskatchewan farmer gives a typical instance of the expenditure and revenue connected with a section of land, 640 acres, from the year 1900 to 1910. He says:

"I will give you an idea of what a section of land, 640 acres, will earn and how it will increase in value in the most favored wheat producing districts of Saskatchewan under normal conditions, from 1900 to 1910, allowing the average price of land to be $10 per acre for that period. In so doing it should be borne in mind that 30 per cent. of the land in this province was Free Grant.

Capital Expenditure

Land, 640 acres at $10 per acre		$6,400.00
Cultivation, 440 acres at $6 per acre		2,640.00
Dwelling house		2,000.00
Stable for 12 horses, granary and implement shed		3,000.00
1910.
12 horses and harness		3,000.00
Implements.	Duty
3 seed drills	$33.00	330.00
3 plows	30.50	210.00
2 disc harrows	10.00	80.00
2 six-section harrows	6.50	60.00
3 7-ft. binders	53.00	465.00
4 wagons, complete	72.00	360.00
One-sixth interest in thresher	125.00	500.000
Extras, say	20.00	455.00
	$350.00	$18,000.00
Crop for 10 years from 400 acres at 25 bush. to the acre, at 75 cents		$75.000.00
Working expenses for ten years at $5 per acre	$32,000.00
Interest on capital for ten years at 6 per cent.	10,800.00
		42,800.00
Surplus (not taking into account increase in value of land, which may be figured at $18,000)		32,200.00

Duty on Implements

"Now note right here, that all a farmer working a section of land under these conditions would pay in duty on the implements required to earn this large profit, assuming the average life of same to be ten years, comes out at approximately $35 per annum. This is no exaggerated statement of profits and increase in value of land, as thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan can testify, and hundreds who have specially applied themselves and taken advantage of the opportunities at hand, have realized far greater profits than are here shown. How, then, can the farmers of the West claim that they have been ill-used, or not given a fair deal?"

A Book of Interest to Horse Owners

Every horse owner worthy of the name takes a natural and commendable pride in keeping his horse in prime condition. With sensible feeding, proper care and a reasonable amount of work, there is no trouble in doing this. Under such conditions a sound horse looks fine and feels well—is always ready for service and brings the top price when sold.

But accidents will happen, a slight wrench, a sprain, a cut, or some unknown cause may result in lameness. Spavins, ringbones, curbs or splints come sooner or later to every stable. Taken promptly and treated properly none of these troubles are serious. But if neglected or given the wrong treatment, they quickly decrease a horse's ability for work as well as his cash value. It is most important therefore, that every horse owner should have a good knowledge of the horse, his ailments and diseases, and the remedies to be applied. He should know just how to treat all ordinary ailments, and just when it is necessary to call in the greater skill of the veterinary.

One of the quickest and best ways to get posted on this matter is to read the little book, "A Treatise on the Horse and His Diseases," published by the Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vermont. The information which it gives is simple, accurate, and easy to find—a valuable point in a book of reference.

This book can be had free of charge by simply writing the publishers or by asking for it at any drug store where Kendall's Spavin Cure is sold by almost every druggist in the country.

To Get Poisons From the Blood

You Have to Depend on the Filtering Process of the Liver and Kidneys

These Organs Alone Can Purify the Blood, and They Do Their Work Well when Helped by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

No medical treatment can possibly purify the blood except as it sets in healthy working order the kidneys, liver and bowels.

To these organs is assigned the duty of filtering from the blood the poisonous waste matter which is left over when the nutritious elements are extracted from the food you eat. If they are not overcrowded or slow and sluggish in action they keep the blood pure and healthy.

For this reason Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are the most satisfactory treatment you can possibly obtain to purify the blood.

Their efforts are prompt, definite and certain. The liver action is quickened, the kidneys are invigorated, the regular movement of the bowels is assured. It is only a matter of a few hours until you begin to feel the benefits of this great medicine. Further use, as often as is necessary to keep these organs active, will cleanse and purify the blood and enable the digestive system to properly do its work.

Backache, headache, and bodily pains will disappear, and the fatigue which is an accompaniment of poisons in the system will give way to new vigor and energy. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

A MOTHER'S PRAISE OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. Allen Mason, Carleton, N.B., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets ever since I have had children and that is going on fifteen years. Mrs. Mason's praise is just that of thousands of mothers who consider Baby's Own Tablets the only safe and sure remedy to keep in the house for their little ones. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TRAVELING IN INDIA.

Changes of Temperature Necessitate Wide Range of Clothes.

Everybody when on a journey in India carries his own bedding, and outside the large establishments of the Government officials everywhere it is needed. You are supposed to carry your own bedding with you just as you carry your own tooth-brush. In the trains—and there are very long train journeys, by slow trains, in India—in the guest-houses of the native princes, in camp, of course, always, and in the hotels and inns, your own bedding is a necessity. Indeed, you can scarcely carry too much in India if you wish to be comfortable.

All sorts of clothing, from fur coats to the thinnest of linen, all sorts of hats from a cap to a pith helmet, a spirit lamp, a folding table and chair, a small amount of tinned or bottled food and a supply of mineral water for the train, a large supply of linen and underclothing, for one changes them often, and the laundry work is done by beating on flat stones.

The changes of temperature from noon till midnight are startling. One must give up cold baths and take to tepid or hot water, and be careful, indeed, what, and how much, one eats and drinks. No alcohol before sunset, and very little then, and the plainest and most nourishing food. In this land, as large almost as the whole of Europe, there are only a few large cities, where one can buy any of the luxuries or comforts of life outside the obvious, and what you need you must carry with you. On a large scale you do what the native does, you carry your household gods and goods about with you.

How differently "pick up your bed and walk" sounds in your ears when you see a whole population of hundreds of millions actually carrying their beds with them whenever they move. Why should one take heed as to what one shall eat, or drink, or wear, when a handful of rice, a thimbleful of water, and a loin-cloth surface. The group of servants in front of their master's door at the hotel, or the hundreds of families traveling by train, by bullock-cart, or even on foot, have squeezed and sifted life's necessaries down to the vanishing point.

One of the Tallest Officers.

Lieutenant-General J. M. Grierson has had a long and varied career in the army, and is generally regarded as one of the best of what may be described as our younger generation of soldiers. His abilities were first discovered by Sir Evelyn Wood, whose right hand on Salisbury Plain he was for some years. Since General Grierson is one of the tallest soldiers in the army at the present day, and Sir Evelyn Wood is, to put it mildly, below the middle height, the contrast between the two, when standing side by side, used to be most amusing, and the name of "Dignity and Impudence" was bestowed upon them by some of the younger officers in the command. General Grierson has a very nice wit, and on one occasion, during manoeuvres, a Howitzer was fired before the sponge stick—the rod used for cleaning the weapons out after a shot has been fired—had been removed. The result was that the stick went sailing through the air, to fall to the ground some distance away. "One of the best efforts I ever saw to 'sweep' the enemy in front of you," was General Grierson's smiling remark to the officer in charge of the gun. It is considered probable that he will be given the command in India before the end of the year, and if this is so it will recall one of his aphorisms to the effect that "India is a mighty convenient place to send soldiers whose presence is not desired at home."

Caste Law.

It is difficult for a European to realize the insuperable barriers which separate the castes of India, but the following may be interesting. The Hindus are divided into over three thousand castes, most of them with sub-castes, speak about nineteen developed languages, and over one hundred dialects.

There are two essentials to a true caste: (1) There is no entry, except by birth; (2) marriage outside the caste is absolutely forbidden.

The highest caste is the Brahmans, admittedly and undoubtedly superior to all the rest. After them come those who are acknowledged to be twice born. The less honored follow in a graduated descent until the untouchable and unspeakable are reached at the lowest depth.

If a man is excommunicated by his caste-fellows, nobody in the caste will marry him. He is dead to his family. Nobody will eat or drink with him. If he is married his wife will not touch him or speak to him. The village barber will not shave him, and the washerwoman will not wash his clothes.—Indian Daily News.

Reviving Grist Mills.

English newspapers tell of an organization of 200 farmers of Hawarden to revive the ancient water wheel gristmills in their vicinity and grind there all the wheat reserved for their own use. Numbers of old country mills are elsewhere being put to a similar use. It is declared that the flour thus produced is "nutritious and fragrant beyond any other in the world."

A "Fifteen-Gunner."

The number of guns to be fired in honor of great officials and foreign potentates is carefully calculated, and the honor is jealously prized. King Edward conferred an inestimable boon on the Nawab of Junagarh when he raised his saluto from eleven to fifteen guns. But this has caused the dusky prince to be fiercely envied by all the other Indian princes, who are only "eleven-gunners."

Musical Glasses.

Richard Pockrich, an Irishman, was the inventor of musical glasses—ordinary drinking glasses tuned by selection and played by passing wet fingers over the brim. He showed his invention first in Dublin and took it to London about 1750.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Public Building, Revelstoke, B.C." will be received until 4.00 P.M., Monday, July 24, 1911, for the construction of a Public Building at Revelstoke, B.C.

Plans, specification and form of contract can be seen and forms of tender obtained at the office of Mr. Wm Henderson, Resident Architect, Victoria, B.C., at the Post Office, Revelstoke, and at this Department.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures; stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

FIRST BOX CURED HIS LAME BACK

High Praise For GIN PILLS.

Smithville, Ont.

"I suffered for three years with a Pain In My Back. I am now taking Gin Pills and find a great relief after taking only one box."

W. J. Baldwin.

Is it any wonder that we sell GIN PILLS with an iron-clad guarantee of money back if they fail to give relief? We know that GIN PILLS will stop the pain in the back—relieve the bladder—and cure every trace of Kidney Trouble and Rheumatism.

GIN PILLS have cured thousands of cases of Kidney Trouble that were regarded as hopeless.

We don't ask you to buy GIN PILLS to find out what they will do for you.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOLYROOD PALACE.

Historic Castle Has Been the Scene of Stirring Episodes.

Few regal edifices have undergone more vicissitudes than Holyrood Palace, which is now being subjected to several alterations and improvements to fit it for the occupation of King George and Queen Mary when they stay there in July. It occupies the site of Holyrood Abbey, founded in 1128 by King David I., on the spot where he was supposed to have been saved from an infuriated stag. The legend goes that the King was hunting in the forest of Drumslech, in the immediate vicinity of Edinburgh, and was assailed by an enraged stag, which unhorsed him, and probably would have put a very speedy end to his existence had not this Scottish monarch, like the first Christian Emperor, been favored of the saints.

As a reward for his piety, and in consideration of his great liberality to churchmen, a cross descended from Heaven in the moment of his danger, with which he stoutly attacked the beast. The latter, finding itself overcome, quickly made its way out of the woods, and left the King and the cross masters of the situation. Thus to prove his gratitude to the saints who had interceded in his behalf, he founded the Abbey of Holyrood for the canons-regular of St. Augustine.

The canons were allowed many privileges, and succeeding monarchs added to the gifts of the founder, Holyrood Abbey becoming the most opulent of all religious institutions in Scotland. In due time a royal residence was erected close to it, although it is doubtful how soon it became the permanent home of the Kings of Scotland. Certain it is, however, that James IV. lived there. It was during his residence, on account of Mass having been celebrated in the chapel, that a revolutionary mob broke in and despoiled all the religious ornaments, leaving only the bare walls. The rioters even profaned the vault which had been used as the royal sepulchre, broke open the leaden coffins, and carried away the lids; but as the royal bones were not negotiable articles, the anti-Papists were forced to leave them behind.

But worse misfortunes were still to come, and they came with Queen Mary. Her Majesty's misfortunes commenced at a very early period. The first Sunday after her arrival a mob beset the palace for the purpose of instructing her in the proper way of worshipping God. To such a pitch of enthusiasm had the spirit of these religious instructors risen that it was only with difficulty they were restrained from hanging the priest who at that moment was officiating in the chapel. Mary locked herself in her apartment with her Mass-book and her father-confessor, while tumultuous zealots assailed the gates and pronounced themselves certain Her Majesty was making for eternal perdition, and must soon be utterly lost unless she listened to John Knox and abjured beads and images.

Then came the historic night of March 9th, 1566. As Mary and a small party were having supper, Darnley and Ruthven, followed by other conspirators, entered for the purpose of seizing David Rizzio, the accomplished Italian secretary and skilful musician, who had gained the Queen's confidence and roused the jealousy of the Presbyterian lords and ministers of the Kirk. Anticipating their purpose, Rizzio threw himself behind the Queen and clung to her dress; but was stabbed by George Douglas, leaning over Mary's shoulders. During this exciting scene the Queen's husband held her fast in his arms, while another of the conspirators held a pistol at her breast. The room in which the fatal supper-party took place is still in existence.

Queen Mary's Daily Life.

According to a letter published in The Yorkshire Post, and written by a lady holding a high position at court, the Queen at 9.30 a.m., begins the day's work by going through her large correspondence (which she has previously opened) with two secretaries. Then come interviews with the governess, nurse, housekeeper, and the heads of departments in the palace. Then appointments with furniture makers and various trades-people till 1.30. In the afternoon Her Majesty visits an hospital or some charitable institution, or a picture gallery, or visits some other interesting places in or near London, such as the City churches, the halls of the various City companies, etc. After tea the Queen again summons her secretaries for more correspondence, and gives one or two interviews. After dinner she reads till 10.30, and then retires to rest. In the country, expeditions to historical or other interesting places in the neighborhood with some of her children are arranged, or some local charities or institutions are visited.

Dangerous to Use "Esquire."

The recovery of a letter which had been sent to a little town in Germany and never delivered to the person addressed cured the writer of the custom of adding "Esquire" to a name on the superscription of mail matter. The letter in question would probably have been promptly delivered had the address read simply, "Mr. John Brown." But the sender had addressed it, "John Brown, Esquire," and the communication rested comfortably in the "E" compartment of the post restante department, waiting to be called for by "Mr. Esquire." One of the popular guide books warns against the use of "Esq." saying that it might be mistaken for a name.

FADING AT THIRTY

When Woman Should be in the Prime of Charm and Beauty

At thirty to thirty-five a woman should be in the prime of charm and beauty, and yet many woman begin to fade before then. Wrinkles appear and the complexion grows sallow. Dark rings surround the eyes, and headaches follow, with backaches and low spirits. The cause of this is simply need of blood nourishment. Good, pure blood is the life of a woman's beauty and health. It is good blood that brings the glow of health to the cheek, brightness to the eye, and elasticity to the step, and the general happiness of good health. When woman feels jaded and worn out her blood simply needs attention, and the one unrivalled and sure remedy is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which supply the rich, red blood that repairs the waste, dispels disease and restores the brightness and charm of womanly health.

Mrs. H. G. Hart, Winnipeg, Man., is one of the thousands of sufferers who owes her present health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says: "I had suffered for a long time, not knowing what the trouble was, I had doctored with several doctors, but only seemed to be growing worse. The last doctor I had told me the trouble was anaemia, that my blood was turned to water and that my condition was serious. But his treatment, like the rest, did me no good. I got so bad that if I excited myself, or went up stairs, I was completely out of breath and felt as if I was going to suffocate. My heart would palpitate violently, and at times I would suffer with terrible pains from it. I had a yellow complexion, my lips had lost their color, and I had no appetite and could not eat. I grew so weak I could hardly drag myself along, and my feet seemed to have weights on them. I was so completely run down that I thought I was going into consumption. At this time a friend urged me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After taking a few boxes I found my health improving, and after taking the Pills for a couple of months I was entirely well, and have since enjoyed the best of health, and I feel that I can never say enough in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Had Done His Duty

"I wish some time, Mr. Speeder," said the doctor, "that you would bear our hospital in mind, and if it appeals to you do something for it."

They Cleanse While They Cure.—The vegetable compounds of which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are composed, mainly dandelion and mandrake, clear the stomach and intestines of deleterious matter and restore the deranged organs to healthful action. FOUND A CURE FOR ALL HER ILLS IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

She was tired, worn-out and nervous and suffered from Rheumatism, but two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

Hawthorne, Ont. (Special).—Mrs. T. G. Alexander, wife of a well-known farmer living near here, adds her testimony to that of the thousands who have learned from their own experience that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Kidney Disease.

"I suffered for twelve years," Mrs. Alexander says, "My back ached, my sleep was broken and unrefreshing, I was nervous and tired and I was troubled with heart flutterings. Rheumatism developed and added to my suffering.

"I was in a very run-down, worn-out condition when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, but I am thankful to say they gave me relief almost from the first. Two boxes cured me completely."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. Cured Kidneys mean that all impurities are strained out of the blood. That means pure blood all over the body and the banishment of that tired, heavy feeling and those pains and aches that impure blood brings.

THE TOMATO DOWN TO DATE

WHAT is, beyond question, the most wholesome, popular and altogether most interesting vegetable that comes to the modern table was unknown to our great-grandmothers except as a curiosity.

The early history of the tomato, in the form of an eatable esculent, is wrapped in a thin veil of mystery. We are told by scientific horticulturists that it is a native of tropical South America. Also, that its virtues as a vegetable were known in Europe early in the sixteenth century, and that it worked its way slowly northward to its present estate of universal regard in all lands and among all classes. In the same paragraph we read that it was known to the Italians, who got it from the Moors, proof of its origin being perpetuated by the name "Pomo del Mori." The Italians had known and used it under that title before the French became acquainted with the fruit dubbed by them "Pomme d'amour." The perversion of the Italian "Pomo del Mori" by their fanciful neighbors led to the superstition that the "Love Apple" had certain qualities which commended it to romantic youths and the compounders of love charms.

One breath of truth suffices to dispel the illusion. The love apple was in the mouth of the Italian the "Moorish Apple." "Only that and nothing more."

The Spaniards probably carried the seeds into their country from South America. That is, if it were really indigenous to that country. We grow skeptical of historical details where we detect so many palpable errors as confront us in the study of our botanical treatise. The cannibals of Polynesia had a species of our vegetable which was made into a sauce considered as indispensable at their horrid feasts as mint sauce with our roast lamb and cranberry sauce with turkey. Botanists catalog it as "Solanum anthropophagorum" — vulgarly known as "cannibals' tomato."

Continuing our ungracious quest for blunders down the centuries, we happen upon the flat assertion: "It was known only as a curiosity in the United States until about 1830."

Yet in a time-sallowed copy of "The Virginia Housewife," by M. Randolph, published in 1828 (bequeathed to me by my mother) I find recipes for "stewed tomatoes, baked tomatoes," etc., introduced without a word of explanation. The Virginia housemother of that day was evidently on familiar terms with the "curiosity." In "The Old Homestead," Aunt Tilda and her ancient wooer talk of their youth and how nobody thought of eating "love apples" then.

It is a pleasant reflection that our tomato—alias "tomate" in French, Spanish and Portuguese; "tomati" with the Mexicans, who make abundant use of it, and "lycopersicum esculentum" in botanical lingo—has been recognized far and wide as the most valuable of esculents for a much longer period than we generally believe and teach.

It deserves prominence as part of our daily diet. We were told half a century ago that it contained calomel in very minute quantities. The chemist of our century stoutly denies this, and we who do not pin our faith to drugs as health preservers are glad to readjust our ideas on this point. We know that it is slightly laxative and a gentle sweetener of the blood. Almost everybody likes it in one form or another. We yield to the apple the title of "King of Fruits." We may as truly claim for the tomato the rank of "Prince of Household Vegetables."

Still tracing its history down to date, we learn that it was the first vegetable to be canned in these United States. I contribute a wee item of information in that line.

It is now nine years since my attention was directed especially to the adulteration of canned foods by the results of actual analysis of the contents of the glass jars and tin cans sold to and eaten by families in all quarters of the country. I have published the revelations made by chemists with whom I wrought during the investigation. I record with gratification that every specimen of canned tomatoes submitted to chemical test in the course of the work was pronounced free from deleterious preservative agents. Under the beneficent pure food laws enacted since that time, we may partake of fruits and vegetables sealed hermetically, without dread of salicylic acid in moderate doses, and benzoate of soda in larger. Heat, scientifically applied and continued for a given season, is the one and only preserving agency. American housemothers may well chant peans of thankfulness at the deliverance from dangers untold and terrible to health and life, of which the major part of them never heard until science revealed the enormity of the iniquitous manufacture. It is now practicable to feed our growing children and ourselves upon green vegetables and ripe fruits full of sweet succulence all the year round.

Returning to our prince of table vegetables, we note the marvelous improvement in quality and size wrought upon it by intelligent cultivation. We dwell, too, with especial pleasure, upon the fact that, whereas other fruits often lose in flavor as they gain in dimensions, our tomato responds gratefully to superior conditions of culture in increased richness of juicy fleshiness. The smooth crimson specimen, ripe to a turn, that tilts the scale at ten ounces is far more luscious than those sliced for salad by our mid-nineteenth-century cook.

I cannot resist the temptation to commend, at this stage of my story, to the progressive housewife, the best way of preparing our perfect representative tomato for the table. It is something akin to desecration to cook it. As I have observed, more than once or twice, the juice of the tomato loses sweetness under heat. I invariably try to restore this, as far as artificial means can accomplish a natural process, by adding a very little sugar. If you would taste the prince in his perfected wholesome palatableness, treat him as I shall now direct.

Tomato Salad With Whipped Cream

With a keen knife, pare large, smooth, ripe tomatoes.

(N. B.—Always remove the skin from tomatoes to be eaten raw, and never by scalding. Take time and pains to pare them delicately as you would a luscious peach. Scalding impairs the flavor. To serve without paring is slovenly and unwholesome. The skin is tough and indigestible.)

Having pared the fruit, cut each in half and lay upon a crisp lettuce leaf. Sprinkle lightly with salt and paprika, and lay upon the top a great spoonful of whipped cream.

Send around heated and buttered crackers and cream cheese with the tomatoes, or thin slices of buttered graham bread.

Unless the tomatoes have been kept in the ice, pare them an hour before serving and set in a chilled place directly upon the ice. The whipped cream should likewise be ice cold.

This is the simplest and most elegant way of serving tomato salad. Select the finest fruits for it.

Tomato and Cucumber Salad

Here is an exception to the rule just laid down for preparing tomatoes for salad by paring them.

Cut off the tops of fine, ripe, firm tomatoes, and with a small spoon dig out carefully most of the pulp. Set in the ice while you prepare the cucumbers. Do this by peeling and cutting them into dice. As you cut them, drop the dice into ice-cold water. When all are ready, drain off the water to the last drop and mix the bits of cucumber with the tomato pulp. Fill the tomato shells with the mixture, heaping it on the top; set the tomatoes upon crisp lettuce leaves and pour a great spoonful of mayonnaise over each.

As the tomatoes are to serve as cups from which the mixture is eaten, it is necessary to leave the skins. They are not eaten.

Tomato and Corn Salad

Prepare large, firm tomatoes as directed in the preceding recipe. Have at hand enough cold boiled corn to fill the excavated tomatoes. Save the pulp you remove, for cooking. Fill the shells with the corn, which should be previously seasoned with mayonnaise, and set the filled tomatoes on the ice until you are ready to serve them. Lay upon crisp lettuce, or stick small stalks of endive upright in the corn after dipping the endive in mayonnaise.

Tomato Aspic Salad

Soak half a box of gelatine in cold water until soft and clear. Strain the liquor from a quart of canned (or of fresh stewed) tomatoes through doubled cheesecloth into a bowl. Season with a teaspoonful of onion juice, 2 teaspoonfuls of sugar, a saltspoonful each of paprika and salt. Set over the fire and bring to a boil. Cook gently for 20 minutes; add the gelatine; stir until it is dissolved and strain through a flannel jelly bag into a mold wet with cold water, or in small pate pans to be served as individual portions.

Serve as a whole in a glass bowl set about with endive or with the crisp inner leaves of lettuce, and pass mayonnaise with it.

A prettier way is to lay a small mold of the aspic with a crisp lettuce leaf upon a chilled plate, and put a spoonful of mayonnaise or of whipped cream upon the top. Pass one of these to each person.

Tomato and Nut Salad

Pare the tomatoes carefully and extract yet more gingerly three-quarters of the pulp, leaving enough to make the walls of the "cup." Have ready a pint or so of blanched and minced nut meats —almond, pecan or walnut—mixed with mayonnaise or with a good French dressing, and fill the tomato cups with the mixture. Serve upon lettuce or romaine.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

IMPORTANT NOTICE

BECAUSE of the enormous number of letters sent to the Exchange, I must ask contributors to limit their communications to 100 words, except in cases of formulas or recipes which require greater space. I want all my correspondents to have a showing in the Corner, and if my request in this respect is complied with it will be possible to print many more letters.

Attention is called to the fact that Marion Harland cannot receive money for patterns, as she has no connection with any department that sells them.

Disappointed

THE ginger beer recipe you published in reply to my request was not what I wanted. It was ginger ale. If any of the members have the right one, I shall be thankful for it.

I inclose a cake recipe which is very simple. You will be surprised at the result.

Iowa Cake

One and a half cups of granulated sugar; 2 level tablespoonfuls of butter; 2 cups of well-sifted flour; 2 level teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a hot oven.

M. E. (Burlington, Ia.).

I did my best to meet your wishes in the matter of the ginger beer. Somebody else will send in just what you want. Thank you for the cake recipe.

Rouladen

Some weeks ago a correspondent asked for a recipe for rouladen. This is the way I make mine:

Cut pieces the size of your hand from round steak; sprinkle salt and pepper over them; then spread with mustard. Lay a slice of bacon and some chopped onion upon each. Roll up and fasten with toothpicks or tie with thread. Fry brown in bacon fat or in butter. Add water; cover and let them simmer from 2 to 2½ hours. Add as much water as is needed to make gravy and thicken with cornstarch. A little cream or a glass of wine will improve it.

We Germans like to use cream upon meats and wine in soups.

Some time ago I sent you some recipes, but I never saw them in print. I also offered German books; music for beginners in English and in German; a long list of school books; some pieces for woolen quilts, etc.

I still have all those to dispose of; also old linen and muslin.

I am a very busy woman, and yet I often wish I had time to do some etching for your Exchange. It is such a blessing.

Mrs. W. L. (Auburn Park, Ill.).

Your former letter must have miscarried on the way, for it is not in the drawer of "unanswered, keep and use" —from which we draw our best material. Nor have we any record of the contents. We make room cheerfully and gratefully for your liberal offers and hold your address for those who should profit by your goodness.

"Making Soap"

Can you inform me in what book I can find the humorous dialogue entitled "Making Soap"?

Mrs. S. B. S. (Chepachet, R. I.).

We cannot undertake to get poems, recitations and the like through our page. We can and will let you know where the dialogue is to be found when the information is handed in to us.

Danish Recipes

I hope the candy housekeeper, "Jane" (Chicago), will find time to come again soon, bringing her Danish recipes with her. The Danes have a way of cooking common, everyday dishes in such a way that they taste unlike themselves as we know them.

I will set her an example by sending in my recipe for plum pudding, which was given me by a Danish friend.

Plum Pudding

Four large tart apples; 2 eggs; 2 cupfuls of zwieback crumbs; 2 tablespoonfuls of sugar; butter the size of an egg.

Mix the sugar with the crumbs and fry them in the butter. Stew the apples in as little water as will keep them from burning. Sweeten and remove from the stove. Add the beaten eggs. Put a layer of the fried crumbs into a buttered pudding mold; then one of apples, continuing in this order until all the ingredients are used, the top layer being of crumbs.

Cover and set away to cool. This will keep good for several days. Turn out and serve with whipped cream.

Thanks for directions for preserving figs. I am still waiting for recipes for guava jelly and preserves.

G. E. M. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

I insert the pudding recipe just as you give it. I had expected to read "bake in a moderate oven." As all the ingredients except the eggs were already cooked before they were put together, perhaps the Danish pudding is all right.

I, too, am hoping for further communications from our well beloved "Jane," of Chicago.

To M. E. G.

An article signed "M. E. G." appeared in the Exchange some time ago, speaking of a cure for rheumatism. Can you give me the prescription in its entirety?

Mrs. C. C. S. (Oskaloosa, Ia.).

Another correspondent writes, and more importunately, to the same effect. I quote in part:

Miss B. writes in good faith for herself and other sufferers from rheumatism, confident that "M. E. G." will not refuse to forward specific directions for treatment praised so highly by herself.

Is it too much to ask that letters be forwarded to "M. E. G.," who may respond without signing a name, should she decline to remain the quiz? But will she please let us have the formula?

L. A. B. (St. Paul's Park, Minn.).

When, in response to Miss B.'s first letter containing a request for the address of "M. E. G.," I said that the same was confidential, but that I was asking that "M. E. G." would let us have the formula in full for publication in the Exchange, I acted "in good faith," and in the firm conviction that I was doing the right thing for all concerned. For there lay then upon my desk such a pile of letters beseeching me to put the writers into communication with the owner of the coveted formula that I dared not let her have even the moderate percentage of these which contained stamps for reply. Miss B. sent not one but four stamps. I have begged "M. E. G." to make public what so many need. I now reiterate the petition. Unless she does this I am powerless to satisfy the applicants. Every mail brings entreaties from those whose addresses have gone by mail in response to requests couched in some such terms as this:

"Please! please!! please!!! send my address to nobody else! My stores of articles offered are exhausted, and forty letters still remain unanswered!"

The above is a verbatim extract from the letter of a woman who put a go-cart at our disposal. It is but a sample article.

I am in high hopes that the remedy described by "M. E. G." (Boston, Mass.), will be forthcoming before long. If not, it is not my fault.

No Addresses Given

Do you know where roots of the Luther Burbank crimson winter rhubarb may be bought?

If not, and there is a possibility of inserting this query in the Exchange during the next month, will you kindly publish the information? ROSE V. G. (Aurora, Ill.).

Business addresses are not printed in the Exchange for obvious reasons. Should the information asked for by an esteemed correspondent be sent in to me it will be forwarded to her by mail.

Too Late

"Clementine" (Louisville, Ky.) will pardon my apparent neglect of her request for hints as to a surprise-dance she wished to give her "very best friend," in April, when I tell her that the letter was received altogether too late for me to have the answer I should have been glad to give published in season to be of any service to her.

I may say the same to a masculine member who wrote of his desire to get a program for an entertainment to be given upon his twentieth wedding-day anniversary. The letter could not possibly be inserted before the important day had passed by a week or two.

In each case my chagrin was sincere. I should have esteemed it a pleasure to take a hand in the festivities.

Wanted—A Floor Polish

A short time ago there was a recipe for floor stain published in the Exchange, the base being permanganate of potash. Could I get it? I was visiting when I saw it, and the people with whom I was staying would not let me cut it out of the paper, as they wanted it themselves. They "would see that it was saved for me." I asked for it last week, but they had "forgotten all about it." Can I hope to have it reprinted?

Mrs. T. S. F. (New Albany, Ind.).

Referred! I am sorry you did not take a copy of it. I do not recollect the formula. It will probably be sent in again.

Home-Cured Ham

I read in the Exchange that "L. L. A." (Joliet, Ill.) would like to get a recipe for sugar-cured hams. I can indorse that which I contribute as good, having used it in my family for years.

Sugar-Cured Ham

One pound of saltpeter, 1 pound of pepper, 3 pound of brown sugar and 10 pounds of salt to 1000 pounds of pork.

Dissolve the saltpeter in a very little hot water; mix all the ingredients thoroughly into a stiff pickle and rub this on and into the meat. Do this with the hand and hard, until the meat is covered and will take in no more. The salt should lie all over the surface.

Insert your finger under the central bone of hams and shoulders, and fill the openings with the mixture.

When the pickle is all in, lay the meat in a cool place for about two weeks, not letting it get down to freezing point, and it will be ready to smoke.

Smoking is a preventive against the inroads of insects, and the meat will be sweet and tender, warranted to keep all summer.

Beef may be put up by the same recipe, but one week in the pickle is long enough for it.

L. C. W. (San Jose, Ill.).

Your formula has the prime recommendation of simplicity. I wish you had told us how long the meat should be smoked and how it should be packed to insure preservation during hot weather.

Perhaps you will some day.

Currant Pie

May I read in next Sunday's issue a recipe for making dried currant pie? I should appreciate your compliance with this request, as I should like to make the pie on Monday.

ONE WHO APPRECIATES YOUR RECIPES (Meriden, Conn.).

It was not practicable to print the recipe at the date you name. The letter was forwarded to me from the office several days after the Monday on which you wished to make the pies.

Recalling the pleasant fact that there are many more Mondays and Sundays to come, I give the formula:

Dried Currant Pie

Soak a pound of cleaned currants for two hours in lukewarm water and drain. Add the juice of half a lemon and a cup of white sugar. Leave currants (dripping wet) and the sugar together in a bowl until the sugar is dissolved into syrup. Have pie plates lined with a good paste, fill with the fruit or I fancy lay a top crust over all and bake. With a keen knife make fashions in the top crust to let out the steam and prevent the crust from bulging.

"In Time of Peace"

Please tell me if there is a "carbol" or acid or by whatever name it may be called that will exterminate bugs.

May it be used upon cots and upholstered furniture in a room where there is an open fireplace, and lighted lamps burn all night? Tell me all about it, please.

I do not know that there is a single "chinch" in my house, but I would be prepared for them.

L. M. S. (South Union, Ky.).

I do not know to what preparation you refer. The best exterminator of which I have any ken is gasoline, and this must not be used where there are artificial lights. A mixture of spirits of turpentine and corrosive sublimate is also potent. You are wise, "in time of peace to prepare for war."

COMMUNICATIONS

EDITOR NEWS:—I beg leave through your columns to ask the city council why they awarded one tailor in the city the contract for making two uniforms for the sum of $80.00, without calling for tenders, or getting another tailor's prices. I am doing business as a tailor in this city, and would like a chance to put in a bid in a straight business way, and as a ratepayer would like to see the city's funds spent in a straight business way. Will the city council please take this matter up and answer through these columns why and how the people's money comes to be used in this manner?

Awaiting your reply,
W. S. D. SIDDAL.

On May 3rd of this year a Methodist church in St. Louis, Mo., was destroyed by fire. It had been an institutional church and was located in an industrial centre of the city. When fire swept the church away the Rabbi of the Jewish synagogue, which was built on the opposite corner, offered the synagogue to the Methodists for their use until their own new church could be built. The Rabbi, in handing over his temple for service on the first Sunday said: "May Jehovah the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, richly bless you." The Christian papers everywhere are applauding the generous and liberal spirit that prompted the deed.—Times.

The Milwaukee News tells of an African custom that might well be extended to colder climes. "Among certain negroes of Africa orators must stand on one leg while they orate. When the leg weakens the speech ends. But in this country it is not infrequent for orators to keep right on talking when they haven't a leg left to stand on."

A detachment of British soldiers was about to attack a band of rebel Indian tribesmen, who awaited them drawn up in battle order. A seasoned old sergeant noticed a young soldier, fresh from home, visibly affected by the nearness of the coming fight. His face was pale, his teeth chattered, and his knees tried hard to knock each other out. It was sheer nervousness, but the sergeant thought it was downright funk. "Callaghan," he whispered, "is it trimblin' ye are for yer own dirty skin?" "N-no sergeant," replied Callaghan, making a brave attempt to still his trembling limbs, "I'm trimblin' for the inimy. They don't know Callaghan's here."

At a banquet given by the mayor of Vancouver in honor of the officers of the U. S. cruiser West Virginia, now in Vancouver harbor, the toasts and responses expressed the feeling that Great Britain and the United States are bound together with strong bonds of blood, and that in all difficulties these two great powers would stand together, shoulder to shoulder, against the whole world.

TENDERS

Tenders will be received up to August 2nd, for painting two rooms in the public school and building an outhouse. For particulars apply to any of the school trustees, or to T. H. Carey, Secretary.

Road going to Hell

George Gould was making one of his trips as president of the Missouri Pacific. His car was laid out on a siding for some reason and he got out to stretch his legs. An old Irishman was tapping the wheels.

"Morning. How do you like the wheels?"

"Not worth a darn," said the Irishman.

"Well, how do you like the car?"

"It's good enough for the wheels."

"What do you think of the road?"

"It matches the car."

Gould looked at the old chap for a minute. "Maybe you don't know who I am?"

"Yes, I do," retorted the Irishman. "You're George Gould, and I knew your father when he was president of this road. And by gob, he's goin' to be president of it again."

"Why, my father is dead," said Gould.

"I know that," replied the Irishman," and the road is going to hell."
