The Ladies' Aid of Grace Methodist church intend giving a supper and entertainment on Thursday, Nov. 28th, America's Thanksgiving Day.

Dr. and Mrs. MacNaughton are expected home this week.

Whatever may be done in the near future, no union was organized by the United Mine Workers of America on Sunday last. We are informed that quite a number signified their willingness to join such a union.

HARVEST HOME

The Harvest Home Anniversary services in Grace Methodist church last Sunday evening, well maintained the high standard of former years. The church was decorated in Mr. Banks' best style, with ten-foot corn stalks, sheaves of wheat and oats, grape vines and trailing blackberry vines loaded with clusters of fruit, ivy, hop vines etc., interspersed with a profusion of Cumberland's beautiful flowers, these all forming a background for a good display of a splendid variety of the very choicest fruits and vegetables the Comox valley produces. Many of the vegetables we noticed bore entry tickets from the Comox exhibition, and do credit to the productiveness of the soil as well as the generosity of the donors. The service was well attended, bright and inspiring. The choir voluntary, "We plough the fields," is dear to most by old associations, and Mr. Jack's solo was well received. The sermon, sketching the early records of such sermons in America, reminded us of our greatly increased priveleges and corresponding responsibilities, and looked forward to the great final Harvest Home. The special thank offering, to be applied to the balance of expense of shingling and repairing the church, amounted to one hundred dollars, a very generous sum considering the portion of the community represented.

Our merchants would like to have the lights turned on a little earlier in the evening for business reasons.

Young Britons Masquerade Ball on the 20th.

FATAL ACCIDENT

Samuel Hudson, brother of Mr Thomas Hudson, of Union Bay, and Mr. Walter Hudson of this city, was killed at Denman Island on Sunday morning last, by the accidental discharge of a rifle in the hands of Alexander Chapman. The deceased with several others, went to Denman Island on Saturday last, on a hunting expedition, and early on Sunday morning the party were preparing for the day's shooting, when Chapman in charging his rifle, let the hammer slip, causing the discharge of the rifle, which hit Mr. Hudson who was standing outside the cabin, in company with a companion. The bullet penetrated a three inch plank and went clean through Mr. Hudson's neck, killing him instantly. The deceased was a native of Nova Scotia, and was 38 years of age. He leaves a wife and two brothers here to mourn his sad and sudden taking off. The funeral will take place on Wednesday, Rev. Laffere officiating.

At the Nanaimo Presbyterian Church maase on Thursday last, Rev. J. R. Robertson united in marriage A. H. McFarlane of Vancouver, and Miss Bessie McDonald, daughte of the late Geo. McDonald of Comox. Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane will take their residence in Vancouver.

Miss Ethel Furbow will leave by Wednesday's boat on a two-weeks vacation to Nanaimo and Vancouver.

A number of gentlemen financially interested in the Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Ltd., with their ladies, arrived here on Tuesday on a tour of inspection of the mines.

ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Ltd., Medical Board, was held in Cumberland Hall on Saturday evening, Chairman Joseph Horbury presiding. Secretary Clinton read the minutes of meetings for the year. A printed financial statement for the year was distributed through the hall. It was decided after November 1st. to discontinue the supplying of medicines, dressings, bandages etc. by the board to outsiders as heretofore. It was also decided that the funeral benefit be increased from $80 to $100. The following will compose the new board.—No. 4 Slope, J. Comb G. Peacock, J. Aspecie.

No. 5 Shaft, W. Henderson.

No. 6 Shaft, T. Leeman.

They rode up to Allen Hacienda shortly after Slim Hoover had arrived. They could hear the merriment of the wedding guests in the kitchen. Loud laughter was punctuated by the popping of corks, and McKee, who rode in advance of Bud, distinguished the voice of the sheriff in expostulation against the general raillery concentrated upon him.

The half breed grinned wolfishly. It was evident that the bloodhound of the law had tracked the supposed murderer just as the real criminal had conjectured and desired.

Polly ran out on the piazza. She saw the man whom she regarded as her lover's evil genius. As he greeted her ingratiatingly, "Howdy, Miss Polly?" she replied sharply:

"You ain't got no invite to this weddin'."

"I come with my friend Bud," he explained, with an elaborate bow.

"I didn't see you, Bud," answered Polly, slightly mollified, as she crossed the dooryard to shake hands with her sweetheart. Buck offered her his hand, but she ignored him. McKee shrugged his shoulders and started for the house.

"Bud, he's some cast down because it's not his weddin'," was McKee's parting shot at the young couple. "I 'low I'll go in an' join the boys. Excuse me."

"With pleasure," coldly replied the girl.

The half breed ignored the sarcasm, and, answering innocently, "Much obliged," he entered the house.

Polly turned on Bud, displaying her resentment. "You an' him always kick up the devil when you're together. What did you bring him along fer?" she demanded.

"It's his last chance to see any fun around here. He's leaving for Texas," explained Bud.

"Fer how long?"

"For good."

"Fer our good, you mean. There's too many of his kind comin' into this country. Did you hear about 'Ole Man' Terrill?"

Bud did not wait for her to explain, but nervously answered: "They told us about it in Florence when we were coming through. We've been at the Lazy K."

"Wasn't it dreadful?" rattled on Polly. "Slim's here. The boys are goin' to turn out with him after the weddin' to see if they can ketch the feller who did the killin'."

Bud paled as he heard the news. To conceal his distress he moved toward the door—anywhere to get away from the girl to whom he feared he would betray himself. "I'll join 'em," he huskily answered.

Polly, however, could see no reason for his evident haste to leave her.

She felt hurt, but thought his actions were due to her scolding him for being with McKee.

"You ain't ever ast me how I look?" she inquired, seeking to detain him.

"You look fine," complimented Bud perfunctorily.

"When a feller ain't seen a feller in a week, seems like a feller ought to brace up an' start somethin'," replied Polly in an injured tone.

Bud smiled in spite of his fears. Catching the girl in his arms, he kissed her and said, "I was waiting for the chance."

Polly disengaged herself from his embrace and sighed contentedly. "That's somethin' like it. What's the use of bein' engaged to a feller if you can't have all the trimmin's that goes with it. You look as if you wasn't too happy."

Bud pulled himself together with an effort. He realized that if he did not show more interest in the girl and the wedding he might be suspected of connection with the murder.

He trumped up an explanation of his moodiness.

"Well, what call have I to be happy? Haven't I lost my job?"

"Yes, but that's because you was not headed an' give your boss too much lip. But everything will come out all right. Jack says"—

"Has that low down liar and thief been coming it over you, Polly? Did he tell you how he gave the place he promised me to Sagebrush?"

"That wasn't until you gives him slack, Bud. An' I'm sure he ain't a thief. Why"—

"Thief! Of course he is, and a blacker hearted one than the man that killed Terrill. Isn't he going to steal my brother Dick's girl this very night?"

"But Dick is dead," expostulated Polly.

"Dick isn't dead. I know it—that is," he stammered, "I feel it in my bones he isn't dead. And Jack feels it too. That's why he's hurried up this wedding."

"But your own friend, Buck McKee, saw Dick just before the 'Paches killed him."

"But not after it, and Buck now thinks the rurales may have come up in time to save him."

"Seems to me if that's so he has had time enough since then to write," objected Polly, who was nevertheless impressed by Bud's vehemence.

"How do you know that he has not written?"

Polly could only gasp. These accusations were coming too fast for her to answer.

"You can't tell what a man might do in a case like that. Perhaps Dick's away in the mountains, away from the railroad, prospecting down in the Ghost range, where he has been trying to locate the lost lode. There's lots of reasons for his not writing to Echo, but Echo doesn't seem to mind. A year and a half is enough to mend any woman's heart."

"Now, you"— began Polly, who was growing angry under the charges which were being heaped on her two best friends by the overwrought boy.

Bud would not let her finish, but cried: "Echo never loved him. If she did she would not be acting as she is doing tonight."

Rushing to Echo's defense, Polly answered, "She may or may not have loved Dick Lane, but I know that she loves Jack Payson now with all her heart, an' even if the 'Paches did not get your brother he is as dead to her as if they had."

Polly was startled and confused by Bud's accusations. Accordingly it was a relief to her when Jack Payson appeared on the scene. They had been so interested in their conversation that they did not hear him ride up to the house. "Hello, Polly! Hello, Bud!" were his cordial greetings, for he was determined to ignore his former employee's hostility. Bud did not answer, but looked moodily on the ground.

To eastern eyes Payson's wedding attire would appear most incongruous. About his waist was strapped a revolver. His riding trousers, close fitting and corded, were buttoned over the calves of his legs. Soft, highly polished leather boots reached to his knees. His shirt was of silk, deeply embroidered down the front and at the collar. His jacket gave him ample breathing room about the chest, but tapered at the waist and clung closely over the hips. He wore a sombrero and a knotted silk handkerchief. His face was deeply sunburned except a spot shaped like a crescent just below the hair line on the forehead, which was protected from the sun by the hat and the shade of the brim. A similar line of fairer skin ran around the edge of the scalp, beginning over the ears. His hair shaded the upper part of his neck from the sun's rays. When his hair was trimmed the untanned part showed as plainly as if painted. It is the mark of the plainsman in a city or on a holiday.

"Hello, Polly! Hello, Bud!"

"Well, it's about time that you got here," said Polly, with a sigh of relief. "Where have you been?"

"I stopped over at Sam Terrill's to see about something that I ordered from Kansas City. Then I had to go back to my ranch"—

Bud started guiltily. Forgetting his determination to ignore Payson, he asked anxiously, "You didn't see Terrill, did you?"

"Oh, yes. Why do you ask?"

Polly laid her hand on Payson's arm and told him briefly of the shooting of Terrill.

"Who shot him?" he asked when she had finished.

"They don't know. He was robbed of a pile of money. Slim Hoover's just rode over to get a posse," she replied, looking toward the door. At this bit of information Payson became anxious about the plans for his wedding. The ceremony was uppermost in his mind at the time.

"Well, he can get one after the wedding." Then he asked, "Is the minister here yet?"

Polly laughingly replied: "You're feelin' pretty spry now, but you'll be as meek as a baby calf in a little while. In this section a bridegroom is treated worse than a tenderfoot."

Payson smiled. He knew he was in for a thorough hazing by the boys. "That's all right. I'll get back at you some day, when you and Bud"—

Polly interrupted him with a remark about minding his own business.

Bud avoided entering into the conversation. He had walked toward the door and was standing on the steps when he answered for Polly.

"Looks as if your chances of getting even with us is a long way off," he said. Turning, he entered the house to join the other guests, who, by the noise, were enjoying Allen's importations from Tucson to the bottom of every glass.

Polly looked after Bud, smiling quizzically. "Bud's mighty hopeful, ain't he? Ain't you happy?"

"You bet! Don't I look it?" cried Jack, rubbing his hands. "Never thought I could be so happy. A fellow doesn't get married every day in the week."

"Not unless he lives in Chicago. I hear it's the habit there," answered Polly.

"The sweetest girl in the territory"—began Jack.

"You bet she is!" Polly broke in. "If you just want to keep her lovin' an' lovin' you, all you've got to do is to treat her white an' play square with her."

"Play square with her," thought Payson. Was he playing square with her? He knew that he was not, but the chance of losing her was too great for him to risk.

"For if you ain't on the level with Echo Allen—well, you might as well crawl out of camp. That's the kind of girl she is!" Polly exclaimed loyally.

CHAPTER VII.

ENTERING the living room, Bud found Echo surrounded by several girls from Florence and the neighboring ranches, who were driving her almost distracted with their admiring attentions, for she was greatly disturbed about her lover's inexplicable absence. Had she been free from the duties of hospitality she would have leaped on her horse and gone in search of him.

Echo's wedding attire would seem as incongruous as Jack's to the eyes of an easterner, yet it was entirely suited to the circumstances, for the couple intended as soon as they were married to ride to a little hunting cabin of Jack's in the Tortilla mountains, where they would spend their honeymoon.

She was dressed in an olive green riding habit which she had brought from the east. The skirt was divided and reached just below the knees. Her blouse, of light material and brown in color, was loose, allowing free play for her arms and shoulders. High riding boots were laced to the knees. A sombrero and riding gloves lay on the table ready to complete her costume.

Bud coldly acknowledged Echo's affectionate and happy greeting and curtly informed her that Jack had arrived.

She rushed out of doors, with a cry of joy.

Running across the courtyard toward her lover, who awaited her with outstretched arms, she began:

"Well, this is a nice time, you outrageous"— Then Polly stopped her with a mock serious look. "Wait a minute—wait a minute," the girl drawled as if reining in a too eager horse. "Don't commence callin' love names before you get the hitch. Time enough after. He has been actin' up somethin' scandalous with me."

Jack threw up his hands in protest, hastily denying any probable charge that the lease might make. "Why, I haven't been saying a word," he cried.

Polly laughed as she ran to the door.

"No, you haven't," she answered mockingly, as one agrees with a child whose feelings have been hurt. "He's only been tellin' me he loved"—Pausing an instant, she pointed at Echo, ending her sentence with a shouted "you."

ARTIFICIAL EYES.

The Art of Making Them Resemble Their Human Patterns.

MATCH IN SHAPE AND COLOR.

They Fit the Eye Socket Perfectly and May Even Be Worn During Sleeping Hours—Made of Glass, For Which No Substitute Has Yet Been Found.

Germany leads all other countries in the manufacture of artificial eyes. The American consul general at Coburg relates that probably ever since the beginning of the world civilized people have endeavored to hide or remedy any flaw in their appearance, such as the loss of an eye would cause. How this was done by the various nations it is hard to say. Up to the present time no discoveries have been made that would offer enlightenment on this subject. There are, it is true, a few unauthenticated accounts as far back as the middle ages, but the first reliable report is given by the French surgeon Ambroise Pare in 1560.

Two kinds of artificial eyes were known to him, the ekblepharos and the hypoblepharos. The ekblepharos was made by painting the eye and all surrounding parts as far as the brows on a plate, which was placed in front of the eye socket and held in position by a string tied over the head. The hypoblepharos was used in a manner similar to that of today, being put behind the eyelid, in the eye socket itself, and was composed of a metal shell of copper, silver or gold, covered with enamel and glass fusions.

It was only at the close of the eighteenth century that these artificial eyes really became of practical use, it being then found possible to do away with the metal shell altogether and employ enamel and glass. The material used was a soft lead glass, easily shaped, but also easily destructible, and an eye had to be renewed every three or four months to prevent the socket from becoming affected.

It is known that in the middle of the nineteenth century eyes were made by enamelers in Dresden, Prague, London and Stockholm, and in Thuringia. The Thuringian makers were not enamelers, but glassblowers working in connection with the porcelain painting industry, whose endless and untiring experiment resulted in the discovery of an ideal material, cryolite glass, the use of which led to a new technique in eye manufacture. Moreover, there can now be produced all the characteristics of the human eye which had been possible in enamel work. The new prosthetic eye received the name "reform eye." To be of value, however, it must be made to exactly fit the eye socket.

Today it is possible to give to the reform eye any form and color desired, and in most cases it can be even worn at night, thereby preventing the lid from sinking into the socket and the lashes from sticking together. At times attempts have been made to replace the breakable glass by vulcanite or celluloid, but such efforts have long since been given up as useless.

In 1852 the method used in France for making eyes was as follows: On the broadly pressed end of a small, colorless, transparent rod of enamel the pupil was first made, and the iris was then formed on this by means of a small, thin pointed, colored enameled rod, the designing of the iris being made possible by melting the point of this rod.

In Paris the good eyes are now so made. A glass tube, closed at one end and of the color of the sclerotic, is next blown into the form of an oval, and in the middle of this a hole is melted, the edges of which are rounded off evenly and pressed a little outward. The iris is then placed in this opening and well melted in. A thick coating of glass remains behind. The eye is rounded off, the projecting rim of the white coat is smoothed with a metal rod, and this coat is thereby joined to the sclerotic. By means of a thin, pointed red rod the blood vessels to be seen on the hard coat of the human eye are then melted in. The superfluous back part of the eyeball is melted off, thereby giving to the eye the desired form. The eye is finally placed on hot sand, where it becomes gradually cooled off.

Glass eyes are made in quite a different manner in Lauscha, the center of this industry in Germany, where their manufacture is altogether a house industry. The eyes are usually made by one member of a family, and the art is handed down from one generation to another. A gas flame is used for melting the glass. A small drop of white glass is put on the white blown ball from which the sclerotic is to be made and is then blown so as to make a circle about eight millimeters (0.315 inch) in diameter. On this circle the structure of the iris is built by means of variously colored glass rods. A drop of black glass makes the pupil. Over the finished iris crystal glass is melted in order to imitate the cornea. The further manufacture is similar to that given in the first description.

A BUSH HOLIDAY.

A Day Off In B.C. as Described by a Hospital Worker.

An hospital in the bush sounds very lonely; but only those who have lived along the coast of Vancouver Island can realize how wonderfully grand it is. The hospital of which I have charge is situated many miles north of Vancouver. I had had heavy work for many months, and was just getting a bit slack when I awoke one morning in August to find the sun streaming into my room. It was one of those sparkling, clear mornings when everything stands out with that remarkable clearness peculiar to Western Canada.

Think how much I should like to take a "day off," and repair to one of the lakes to fish, I made known my wish at breakfast time, and we arranged that the doctor's wife and myself should go off, taking with us a male patient convalescing, after amputation of leg, and a mad scramble followed.

After helping with the morning ward work, and packing up a hasty lunch, I was just fixing up my fishing tackle when the whistle of the first train of logs came down to us from not very far up in the woods.

This meant hurry, for the men cannot lose time waiting for holiday makers. So off we trotted just in time to scramble into the engine cabin, and away eight miles through the bush till we reached the beautiful lake which was to be our destination.

Having got down again from the engine, we made our way to the lake edge, there to find an old boat; into this we scrambled, and pulled out a little way, then threw out our lines. We had plenty of bites, and landed some half-dozen fine trout; but the sun shone too brightly for the fish, and they soon became lazy.

While they were enjoying a "siesta," we rowed about two miles across the lake, and landed on the very smallest of islands, which we christened "The Isle of Delight." Here we made a fire and prepared a lunch, giving our patient his in the boat, as he, poor fellow, could not land.

After our repast we again settled down to fish, and a very exciting two hours followed, landing trout as fast as we could for two hours. In fact, we were so engrossed that we had forgotten the train foreman's instructions to be at the water tank at 4.30 p.m. Now it was after 5 p.m. The last train of logs had gone down, and our position was indeed a serious one.

After much consultation between ourselves we finally agreed that there was at any rate no use remaining in the boat, that we had better get to shore, and that I should walk the two miles to the nearest camp and ask the manager to kindly send us home on a "loose engine."

Suddenly through the stillness came a strange sound. Oh, joy; it was the whistle of a train! We could scarcely believe our ears, but it surely came nearer and nearer, and at last hove into sight. We waved frantically, and pulled with all our might to shore, but the men saw us and called out to us to hurry. And we obeyed their instructions to the letter, but the task of getting our patient out of the boat and up through the bush to the train in a hurry was an extremely difficult one, and, looking back on it, I hardly know how we accomplished it.

However, we eventually reached the line, and managed to squeeze ourselves into the small space available, for it was no train and carriage we had stopped, but an engine only, and we were soon speeding on our way home. We learned that the engine was going down to bring back a water tank, otherwise we should have fared badly—how badly I do not like to think. As it was, we got back safely with our fine load of fish.

And a very nice homecoming it was! Patients waving to us, as we rounded the corner, evidently on the look-out, and even military honors, for the gramophone was playing on the veranda.

Ontario's Prison Figures.

According to the annual return for 1910 for the prisons and reformatories of Ontario, issued by the Provincial Secretary, a decrease of 65 in the number of prisoners sent to Kingston is shown, while there was an increase of 61 in the number sentenced to the previous year. The commitments for murder last year were 41, as compared with 21 in 1909; manslaughter 10, as compared with 11 the previous year.

The total number of persons committed to jails or lock-ups of the province last year was 13,687, an increase of 152 over 1909. Of this total number, 3,881 were temperate, but less than 13 per cent. could read and write.

Dr. Bruce Smith lands the parole system which has been recently introduced.

Refused a Title.

The recent batch of titles that has been granted to Canadians emphasizes the fact that during the past few years the title has been offered on two occasions to Mr. R. B. Angus, who is now president of the Bank of Montreal. For some reason, however, which he has never even told his friends, Mr. Angus has always preferred not to accept it, evidently being quite satisfied just to be known as he always has been—plain Mr. Angus. His refusal to accept a title, however, is all the more surprising as a number of the men with whom he is daily associated have been rather eager to accept them.—Courier.

U. S. Emigration to Canada.

Immigration into Canada during 1910 reached a total of 303,091, as compared with 184,281 for 1909, an increase of over 64 per cent.; 178,489 arived via ocean ports and 124,602 came from the United States; 179,422 were men, 68,015 women and 54,754 children. Of the immigrants from the United States 74,990 were men, 25,215 women and 24,397 children.

Of the immigrants from the United States the largest number was furnished by the State of Washington, 17,830, followed by North Dakota 15,881, Minnesota 13,687 and Michigan 8,655. Every state and territory, however, was represented.

THE NEWEST SENATOR

BENJAMIN C. PROWSE A WELL-KNOWN P. E. I. MAN.

The Man Who Will Succeed the Late Senator Ferguson is a Prominent Business Man of Charlottetown, and Has Been Mayor of His Home City—His Brother, L. E. Prowse, Is Member of the House of Commons.

Benjamin C. Prowse, who has just been appointed to the Canadian Senate to succeed the late Senator Ferguson, is one of the best-known business men in the province of Prince Edward Island and one of the most prominent citizens of the city of Charlottetown. He is not quite 50 years of age and entered commercial life when only 17 years old as partner of Prowse Bros. Later he became president of Prowse Bros., Ltd., and early took an active interest in public affairs.

Senator Prowse served two terms as alderman and once as mayor of the city of Charlottetown. He has always been a prominent Liberal and is a brother of the sitting member of Parliament, L. E. Prowse.

Escaped From Bastille.

The Earl of Verulam has kept his fifty-ninth birthday, and, as head of the Grimston family, descends, though not in a direct line, from the Sylvester de Grymstone who was one of the Conqueror's standard bearers. The family archives contain many stories of this adventurous family, one of the most famous being that of the escape of Sir Edward Grimston, Controller of Calais in Edward VI.'s day, from the Bastille.

Sir Edward had languished in that terrible prison for two years before his opportunity came. Then a file was smuggled into him, and with infinite labor he cut through the bars of his cell, and changing clothes with his servant, not only got clear away, but lived till he was ninety-two.

To his grandson, Harbottle Grimston, Sheriff of Essex in the first Charles' time, a baronetcy was given in 1612, and with the death of the third baronet the Grimstons gave way to the Luckyns, the first of whom was made Viscount Grimston, and thereupon adopted the family name. The Barony of Dunboyne was conferred upon him, and later on came that of Forrester of Corstorphin.

Thus is comes about that the Earl of Verulam of to-day is one of the only three members of the Upper House who are English, Irish, and Scottish peers. Among Lord Verulam's treasures at Gorhambury, St. Albans, are a quantity of priceless Elizabethan manuscripts whose secrets have never yet been wholly revealed.

A Bootmaking Ancestor.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain, M.P., has been telling his brother members of the Cordwainers' Company an interesting story as to the circumstances in which his family became connected with the craft and the guild. It seems that Mr. Chamberlain's great-great-grandfather was apprenticed to an uncle, who was a confectioner. One morning he was practising a balancing trick, and unfortunately the "property"—in this instance a broom—fell and damaged some goods. Angrily the uncle told the lad that he had better turn his attention to some other trade. The scapegrace took him at his word, and entered the service of a bootmaker. Prosperity attended him, and he became eventually a master, then joined the guild. Four generations subsequently carried on the business in the same premises in the City—within a few yards of the present Cordwainers' Hall.

Taking No Risk.

Very skeptically the terrace landlord surveyed the prospective tenant.

"Do you play football?" he grunted.

The prospective tenant raised his eyebrows and replied in the negative.

"Nor referee?"

"No, nor referee," answered the P. T. "Why?"

"'Cos I'm taking no risks," explained the landlord. "The last feller that took this house was a referee. Gave a wrong decision. Was trampled on the back. Swallowed the whistle. After that he couldn't breathe without shrieking like a goods engine. Kept the neighbors awake all night. Had to give him notice."

"Bad luck on the referee," commented the P. T.

"I don't know," returned the landlord. "He got a good crib on a lighthouse. On foggy nights he puts his head out of the window and simply breathes. Noise enough to scare a navy off the rocks. Soft job."

NOVEL MARRIAGES.

English Couples Take Special Care to Be Unique.

Americans have not shown much desire for uniqueness as regard to equipages in which they ride to get married. Most everybody who has a thought of getting married never thinks of departing from the usual cab or taxi and as a result all weddings in this country are noted for a certain sameness. The people of "Merry England" have different tastes in the matter and when it comes to getting married they spend a great deal of time devising some novel way in which to be carried to the church. Speaking on the subject an English writer says:

A fire engine makes a very smart turnout at a wedding. There is nothing dull or commonplace about a fire engine. It is always bright and up to the mark, and ready for action. Evidently this line of thought occurred to a happy couple in Devonshire some time ago, for the five bridesmaids who were to support the bride at her nuptials rode to the church on the local fire engine, and it was one of the best attended weddings in the annals of the parish.

A circus equestrienne had a very unique wedding in a continental town some time ago. The man who drives the team of 40 horses was the bridegroom, and he drove his own bride to church behind his 40 steeds, the bride herself being seated, dressed in all her splendid robes, on the top of the triumphal car. Whether their married life has been as triumphal as their wedding procession history does not relate, but we may hope so.

Six artillery horses, driven by non-commissioned officers in uniform, formed a bridal team at a Brighton wedding and a very smart turnout it was. It was not so commodious, however, as the gayly decorated tram car, with white-gloved driver and conductor, which was the chosen vehicle at another lady's wedding in a Midland town. The bride, the bridegroom, their respective fathers and mothers, and all relatives and guests rode in their best attire both inside and upon the outside of the car, and the whole made a very brave show indeed.

A Betting Transaction.

Addressing a conference of the National Association of Head Teachers, at Manchester, recently on "The School and the Home," Bishop Welldon, Dean of Manchester, said it sometimes happened that the home militated against school because of the ill-example set by the parents.

"I remember," said Dean Welldon, "writing to the father of a pupil of mine—a peer of the realm—to tell him that his son had opened an account of transactions with a betting agent. He wrote back thanking me for the information, but adding, 'I think I ought to tell you that I am much worse myself.' I believe that statement was strictly true.

"Every child deserved study and care, as though there was no other child in the world. If you go to Stratford-on-Avon and see the records of Shakespeare's baptism, and the cottage in which he sat with Ann Hathaway, you will realize that genius is something which God has kept in his own hands, and you and I must always be on the look out for genius."

Sir James P. Gibson, M.P., who has been unanimously elected president of the United Kingdom Commercial Travelers' Association, adds one more to the long roll of legislators who, prior to entering Parliament, were "knights of the road," in a trading sense.

Sir George White, M.P., confesses that he gained experience as a commercial traveler which has been of inestimable value to him, while Sir Robert Ropner, when M.P. for Stockton, owed much of the great success of his business career to the training he went through as "an ambassador of commerce."

The first great step in life that Richard Cobden obtained was when he was promoted from clerk to commercial traveler, and Mr. Joseph Nolan, M.P., has been a commercial traveler.

Dress and the Man.

The late Lord Beaconsfield was not the only individual who endeavored to make his first "splarge" in the world of men by means of a fancy waistcoat. Theopile Gautier was likewise a lover of eccentric costume. His crimson waistcoat of the first performance of Victor Hugo's "Hernoni," when as a young man he was one of the leaders of the band of students who had turned up in force to ensure by the tumultuous applause the success of the play. "You became celebrated when very young," said Maxime du Camp to him in later years. "Yes, when very young," he answered, "because of my waistcoat."

The Duke of Argyll's Wit.

To the writer Mr. J. Calvin Brown, the presiding genius at Earl's Court Exhibition, related the following story the other day during the course of an interview. On the opening day of the exhibition the Duke of Argyll asked Mr. Brown, who is an American, from what part of the States he came. "From Nebraska," replied Mr. Brown. The duke thought for a moment, and then replied, with a smile, "Oh, Nebraska: it is famous for its horizons, is it not?" Nebraska, of course, is one great plain. Mr. Brown, by the way, was being chaffed a short time ago about being an American. "That I was born in America," he said, "was the fault of my parents; that I live in England is my own fault."

WESTERN HARVEST PROBLEM

How to Supply the Pressing Needs of the Growing Western Country

Winnipeg.—As the summer progresses and the wheat growth of the West advances towards maturity there comes this year, as there comes most years, an appeal for help in the harvest fields; and the probability is that even though Eastern Canada may send out thousands of men and boys to aid in the garnering of the grain, the West will, Oliver Twist-like, ask for more.

This problem of how to supply the pressing needs of a new and rapidly growing country for a few weeks (because that is all that the invitation really means to Easterners) is one of these which can only be solved by co-operation and looking ahead. It is true that the Government, through its immigration department is advertising in thousands of newspapers throughout Great Britain and the United States that "the harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few," and that some relief can be gained in that way; but the result would undoubtedly be much better if more dependence was to be had upon individual effort.

Take the case of a man who goes to the Canadian West from old Canada or from any of the Western or Central States or from Great Britain. He is a very unusual man, indeed, if he does not "take up his pen in hand," at some period of his pioneering and write home to complain either of his loneliness or of the weather or of the gophers or of the snow or of the heat, or of any dozen other difficulties which pioneers have to overcome. He does so, as a matter of course, not with any desire to 'knock' the new country, but animated by that human sentiment which seeks comfort in trouble and, failing to find it in a new locality, looks for it in the old home.

But when that same man has made good, how often does he write home to tell of his fortune? The habit of writing home is much like the habit of taking the local newspaper from home; it lasts a year or two or three, and then it is dropped, because of the new environment crowding out interest in the old. How much better both for himself and the country would it be for such a man to write home, tell the old folks at home of his good fortune and ask them to send a brother, a cousin or even only an old schoolmate to help him gather the crops?

That would be a practical individual way of solving the harvest problem, partially at least; it would be good advertising for the West, because we all know that there is no advertisement so good as a satisfied settler; and it would create a new bond of interest between the man in the West and those left behind at home.

And the most attractive feature of the suggestion (which comes from W. D. Scott, the head of the immigration branch) is that it is just the sort of thing which will appeal to the sentiment of the westerner and is at the time reasonable in cost.

Soft corns are difficult to eradicate, but Holloway's Corn Cure will draw them out painlessly.

Worn Out by the Monotonous Indoor Life of Winter

Spring Finds the Blood Weak and the System Run Down—Vigor is Restored by

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Just at the time when the buds are bursting and the birds are chirping merrily in the tree tops, many people feel most keenly the debilitating and enervating effects of indoor winter life.

The blood is so thin and watery that it fails to supply nutrition to the nervous system and to the vital organs. You feel tired, weak and discouraged, energy and ambition are lacking, and strange depressing feelings come over you.

But nature has provided certain restoratives to be used at this time of year to form new, rich blood and create new nerve force. These elements are found in condensed and easily assimilated form in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Thousands of men and women have learned to escape this spring depression and weakness and discouragement by using this great restorative.

Vitality is increased, strength and confidence return, buoyancy is felt in every movement of the body, pallor and weakness and disease give place to the glow of health and vigor of mind and body.

A CITY IN ANGUISH.

What the Motor Has Done for London —Pandemonium Re-born.

The London of to-day, complains a Britisher of the samewhat old-fashioned, conservative type, is replete with horrible sounds, bewildering and destructive of legitimate peace; the city grows wilder and more chaotic every year. Just imagine the London night of twelve years ago, with the easy rhythm of the horse 'bus, the swinging, half-silent dash of the brougham, and the eternal tinkling melody of the hansom—like a solo piping through the whole opera; then think of the shriek and tootle of the London of to-day. It is like a city in anguish, a city racked and torn by devouring pains which can find relief only in groans and shrieks, in coughings and belchings. The motor has altered the tune of the music of London, melody-embroidered harmony no longer exists; the music of London is now a modern tone-poem in which cacophony plays the part of melody. Perchance one of these days we shall get used to the new tune of the metropolis, but in the meantime it is very disconcerting.

Not so many years ago the chief way of getting lost in London was a mere matter of geography; it was difficult to find your bearings in the wilderness of streets; and you had to learn very thoroughly whether the omnibuses marked "Bank" were on their way backward or forward journeys; once that was accomplished, half the battle, that at least pertaining to the main thoroughfares, was won. Now there is a new terror for the stranger in the traffic noises.

In the old days the traffic puzzled you by its immensity; it sound was, on the whole, a rather pleasing rhythm, inviting your confidence. That sonorous old song of the streets is gone for ever. The traffic of London to-day roars and shrieks like a wild beast show; the stranger in London stands aghast no longer at its immensity, he stands aghast at its war-whoops and its mutterings; at the infinite and appalling variety of its motor horns. The invention of the rubber type promised us comparative quietness in our streets, and for a while its use on horse-drawn vehicles did actually reduce the clamor of the traffic; but then came the motor, with musketry rattle of machinery and its pneumatic horns, and pandemonium was re-born.

A New Zealand Bull.

Here is a good story told by Sir Joseph Ward:

A few years ago, the Chinese in New Zealand were found to be doing a very great deal of the laundry work available, and had so thrown out of employment the women-workers in some of the laundries.

In New Zealand a laundry is a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, and numerous restrictions for the purposes of health and for other reasons are placed upon the hours during which young girls under eighteen years of age may be employed. These provisions are extensive, and are found in the New Zealand Factories Act.

It occurred to a law-maker that he could settle the difficulty of this Chinese competition by a neat amendment in the interpretation clause of the Act above mentioned. An amendment was therefore drafted and printed, and sent with the utmost seriousness and good faith to the Crown Law Office for consideration. It contained a provision in these words:

"For the purposes of this Act (the Factories Act) a Chinaman shall be deemed to be a girl under eighteen years of age."—M.A.P.

Privileges of Hendon.

Hendon, the haven of flying men, was noted for the facilities awarded its inhabitants for traveling in the past. Mr. Walter Jerrold, in "Highways and Byways in Middlesex," recalls the good times enjoyed by the ancient Hendonian. "Edward the Confessor granted an extraordinary exemption, renewed by many succeeding monarchs. In giving certain lands at Hendon to Westminster Abbey the King freed the inhabitants from all tolls both by land and water. The last renewal of this great privilege was in the fifth year of William and Mary and it 'freed the inhabitants from all tolls in all fairs and markets, and from all street tolls and every other toll whatever in every fair and every market, and every bridge, and every way by water and also by sea, for themselves and their wares for ever'."

Making Themselves Known.

"Persons who expect to receive money orders in a strange town take infinite precautions to identify themselves," said a postal clerk. "One way that particularly commends itself is for the stranger to call on the paying teller in the money order department before his own order arrives and present a bunch of correspondence showing pretty clearly who he is. He then explains that he is expecting a money order from a certain person. Can the clerk rememeber him when he presents it for payment? After that impressive introduction the clerk usually can remember, and when the order is presented he cashes it."

DOCTORS TELL HOW "CUTICURA" CURED SKIN DISEASES

One says, "I have Great Faith in Cuticura Remedies." Another, "They Always Bring Results."

"I wish to let you know of a couple of recent cures which I have made by the use of the Cuticura Remedies. Last August, Mr. ——— of this city came to my office, troubled with a severe skin eruption. At first I could not understand the nature of the case. I finally traced it to his occupation, as he was a painter and decorator. It was dermatitis in its worst form. It started with a slight eruption and would affect most parts of his body—thighs, elbows, chest, back and abdomen—and would terminate in little pustules. The itching and burning was dreadful and he would almost tear his skin apart, trying to get relief. I recommended all the various treatments I could think of and he spent about fifteen dollars on prescriptions but nothing seemed to help him.

"In the meantime my wife who was continually suffering with a slight skin trouble and who had been trying different prescriptions and methods with my assistance, told me she was going to get some of the Cuticura Remedies. But as I did not know much about Cuticura at that time I was doubtful whether it would help her. Her skin would thicken, break and bleed, especially on the fingers, wrists and arms. I could do nothing to relieve her permanently. When she first applied the warm baths of Cuticura Soap and applications of Cuticura Ointment she saw a decided improvement and in a few days she was completely cured.

"I lost no time in recommending the Cuticura Remedies to Mr. ———, and this was two months ago. I told him to wash with warm baths of the Cuticura Soap and to apply the Cuticura Ointment generously. Believe me, from the very first day's use of the Cuticura Remedies he was greatly relieved and today he is completely cured through their use. I have great faith in the Cuticura Remedies and shall always have a good word for them now that I am convinced of their wonderful merits." (Signed) B. L. Whitehead M.D., 108 Dartmouth St., Boston, Mass., July 22, 1910.

As though in confirmation of this most convincing statement, G. M. Fisher, M.D., Big Pool, Md., writes: "My face was afflicted with eczema in the year 1897. I used the Cuticura Remedies and was entirely cured. I am a practicing physician and very often prescribe Cuticura Remedies in cases of eczema, and they have cured where other formulas have failed. I am not in the habit of endorsing patent medicines, but when I find remedies possessing true merit, such as the Cuticura Remedies do, I am broad-minded enough to proclaim their virtues to the world. I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and must say I find your Remedies A No. 1. I still find the Cuticura Remedies as good as ever. They always bring results."

Cuticura Remedies are sold by druggists everywhere. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, Mass. Mailed free, on request latest 32-page Cuticura Book on the speedy treatment of skin diseases.

Not Picture Proof, But The "Try On" Test

Pictures are very valuable to give you an idea of how a suit of clothes will look when worn, but you need to actually see a "Fit-rite" tailored suit to appreciate the elegance and distinction of its style and finish, and the sound careful work that goes into its making.

The "Fit-rite" line comprises clothes for all occasions. They are meant for the man who demands first-class quality, and who wants to see what his clothes look like before he buys them.

A visit to the "Fit-rite" store will give you an entirely new idea of what can be achieved in "ready-to-wear" clothes.

Either call at the store or send us a post card bearing your name and address, and we'll give you a copy of the "Fit-rite Style Forecast," containing the latest news of fashion tendencies for the coming Fall and Winter.

Any Old Mark

"That's all right," replied the patient. "Leave any kind of a mark you like that will prevent some strange doctor from coming along and operating again."—Winchester Herald.

TRIED TWO DOCTORS WITH NO BENEFIT

THEN DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS WROUGHT A LASTING CURE

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made so many remarkable cures in serious cases that people are liable to overlook their value as a tonic for the blood and nerves in debility and general run-down conditions. That such conditions are the cause of much misery and unhappiness is fully known to those who suffer from them and the need of curing them is as vital as is relief from diseases with higher sounding names. We commend the following statement to any one suffering from weak, thin blood, or shattered nerves. Mrs. Mac Macabe, Gleichen, Alta., says: "A few years ago I became run down, not seriously ill, but just tired and weak all the time. I consulted our family doctor, who gave me tonic after tonic with no effect. I gradually got weaker and weaker until I could not do my work. Then I went to another doctor, who pronounced by case one of decline, and recommended a warmer climate with complete rest. This I could not afford and I became a complete nervous wreck. One day while visiting a neighbor an old gentleman who was taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for partial paralysis recommended them to me. I sent out and got three boxes, but without much faith that they would help me, but before they were gone I noticed an improvement and I continued taking the Pills, constantly growing stronger, until I had taken seven or eight boxes, when I was completely cured. I could do my work as easily as ever I had done in my life, and the doctor told men that he could scarcely believe the change in me, as he had not had the least hope that I would be strong again. Now I always keep the Pills on hand and if I feel fatigued or weary take them for three or four days so as not to get run down."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"He told her that he would gladly die for her." The same old bluff, did it catch her?" "No. She told him she would gladly let him."—Houston Post.

Costiveness and Its Cure.—When the excretory organs refuse to perform their functions properly the intestines become clogged. This is known as costiveness and if neglected gives rise to dangerous complications. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will effect a speedy cure. At the first intimation of this ailment the sufferer should procure a packet of the pills and put himself under a course of treatment. The good effects of the pills will be almost immediately evident.

A colored preacher in closing his sermon addressed the congregation thus: "And now let us pray for the people of the uninhabited portion of the earth."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND THE TARIFF

How it Effects the Manufacturer and the Farmer

It was Abraham Lincoln, who gave popularity to the Protectionist side of the tariff question, when he said: "I do not know a great deal about the tariff, but what I do know is, that when we buy goods abroad the foreigner gets the money, but when we buy goods at home, we get both the goods and the money." This sound philosophy characterizes another of the late president's famous homilies. "The farmer and the manufacturer," the president once said, with his characteristic shrewdness, "are both in the same boat and I reckon they've got to learn to navigate the craft together or they'll upset." "He compared the case of a Pennsylvania farmer," continues the historian in question, "and a Pennsylvania iron merchant and implement maker whose properties adjoined. Under a protective policy the farmer supplied the ironmaker with bread, meat, vegetables, fruit, fodder for horses, etc., and the ironmaker supplied the farmer with all the iron, iron implements, etc., which he needed. Assuming that a change is made and the Protective policy abandoned, the farmer then discovers that he can buy his iron implements cheaper from Europe than from his neighbor, assuming that he sells a sufficient quantity of flour in Europe to enable him to effect the purchase of the iron. He ultimately discovers that the cost of carriage to the coast, transportation by sea to England, insurance and cartage on arrival, does not enable him to receive such a good reward for his labor as he formerly did when selling his flour to his neighbor, the ironmaker. He, therefore, determines to sell his flour as before to his neighbor. But meantime the farmer discovers that while he has been purchasing his iron implements from Europe his neighbor, the ironmaker, has been compelled to stop his works and dismiss his employees, not having sufficient work for them. The farmer, therefore, now finds that he has more wheat than he knows what to do with, also that he is no longer able to sell his fruit, vegetables, fodder, meat, horses, etc., to his neighbor, the ironmaker, as he has gone out of business. In fact, he finds that through buying abroad in the cheapest market he has destroyed the home market for his own products and thrown a number of his fellow-countrymen out of emplyment."

BLACK NECKLACE FOUND.

Mary Queen of Scots Lost It at the Scaffold.

After many centuries, and in a curious way, a historic necklace of black pearls, which Queen Mary of Scots wore on the morning of her execution at Fotheringay Castle, has been recovered in a romantic way. From that morning, when, at the foot of the scaffold, the ill-fated queen distributed her jewels and money among her friends, the black pearl necklace had been lost sight of, and was only recently unearthed in an old curiosity shop in a small village in Scotland. The keeper of the shop parted with the pearls to a lady customer for 12s. 6d., but there was then nothing to indicate their real value. Now experts have declared that they are incomparable, and, in fact, they have been resold for no less a sum than £16,000 (about $80,000). It seems that a short time ago a lady, riding her bicycle in Scotland, accidentally broke the chain by which her eye-glasses were suspended. Remembering that in a little shop she had seen a few strings of beads and other trifles dear to youthful village maidens, she rode there to see if she could find something to replace for a time her broken chain. She found nothing to serve her purpose, and was on the point of leaving, when the old lady behind the counter said, "I have got an old necklace that might do, but it is much more expensive. Shall I fetch it for you?" A necklace of rather large, dull-looking "beads" was produced. It did not seem to be quite what she wanted, but the curious workmanship of the clasp took the lady's fancy and for the sum of twelve, shillings and sixpence she became its owner, and to it attaching her eye-glasses, she resumed her ride.

To her purchase she attached but little importance, but being one day in London, a friend admired the "beads" not a little, and expressed a wonder as to where such a pretty string had come from. It so chanced that shortly afterwards the owner of the "beads" had occasion to visit the shop of a dealer in antiques, her object being the purchase of a grandfather clock, and while there she showed her "beads" to the dealer, asking him what he thought of them. After a short inspection, the dealer became quite animated, fingering each "bead" in turn, and asking so many questions as to how and when the lady had become their owner, that her curiosity was completely aroused. Subsequently the "beads" were submitted to a jeweller and his interested inquiries served to confirm the owner's impression that her possession was positively of rare value, and the impression was strengthened when an offer was made of £6,000 for the string. This offer was declined, and instead the string was submitted to an acknowledged expert in matters connected with antiquities and ancient jewellery. Here a brief examination of the "beads," and a glance at a book of reference, were sufficient.

"This, madam, is the string of black pearls worn by Mary Queen of Scots on the day of her execution. The pearls have suffered by neglect, but I can buy them from you, should you wish to sell them, for sixteen thousand pounds. I shall re-sell them at a profit to a customer if you accept my offer which remains open for your consideration as long as you like."

The lady accepted the offer, and shortly afterwards the old shop woman in the little Scotch village was equally delighted and astonished to receive a cheque for one thousand pounds.

Queer Ideas of Arithmetic.

In a village churchyard in Worcestershire there is, or used to be, a tombstone stating the age of the tenant of the tomb below to be 304. The mason apparently had the crudest notions of the mysteries of arithmetical notation.

Oddly enough, to the present day we would find in Burma 1000 900 11 1 used for the year 1910, this being a case of an admixture of an old notation with modern symbols. The same kind of admixture of new and old is taught in the indigenous monastic schools of Thibet, and is prevalent all over India among the Hindu astrologers. In the purely native schools Indian children are said to learn their multiplication tables up to 100 times 100.

Teachers in our own elementary schools may bless their fortune that they are not called upon to listen to such a nerve-ending drone from "twice two are four," up to the numbers just mentioned. Even in the Government schools of the United Provinces the children had to learn up to 40 times 40 until a few years back.

Beautiful, But Dangerous.

The laburnum is a beautiful tree. Unfortunately, however, like many other beautiful things, laburnum blossom is dangerous. The long, yellow flowers and the seeds which presently take their place contain poison—cytisus—so powerful that a hundredth part of a grain injected under the skin of a cat or a dog is sufficient to cause its death. In ten seeds of laburnum there is sufficient poison to kill a child, and there are a number of cases on record of death from this cause. Also the laburnum exercises an evil effect upon the vegetable world. The gardener will tell you that flowers will not flourish in the ground about a laburnum tree.—London Globe.

The Victim.

"I hear poor Dobbs, the humorist, has gone to a sanitarium," Binks said.

"Yes," Higgins said. "He's worked himself into a state of nervous prostration that I fear is incurable."

"That's to bad," Binks said. "How did he come to do that?"

"Why, six weeks ago he got an answer to a riddle, one's a chauffeur and the other's a fur show, and he says he'll never be able to sleep until he finds the question it will make a good answer to," Higgins said.

STORY OF KING GEORGE.

The Child Admired His Father More Than His King.

His Majesty's versatility and the thoroughness with which he carries through whatever he attempts are the theme of an article entitled "King George the Thorough," from the pen of one who knows him, that appears in the June number of Pearson's Magazine. The author relates a number of anecdotes illustrating the many-sidedness of His Majesty's activities, and others that show his kindliness. A typical incident showing the King's special liking for children is the following, which occurred quite recently:

"An officer in the army, serving in India, died before he had received a medal to which he was entitled. Shortly afterwards his widow received a command to repair to Buckingham Palace, bringing with her a son, if she had one, or else a daughter. The lady obeyed the command, accompanied by her little five-year-old son. They were conducted into the Presence, and presently found themselves all alone with the King, who, drawing the boy to him, and giving him his father's medal, said: 'What I am doing you do not understand now, but you will understand some day. Tell me, what are you going to be when you grow to be a man?'

"'I am going to be a soldier, like my father,' answered the child.

"'Well,' observed His Majesty, 'it is a good thing to be a soldier like your father; but still, I should advise you to be a sailor, like your King.'

"'No,' the child persisted, 'I must be a soldier, like my father.'

"Soon afterwards the audience was at an end, and then the child, reaching the door, turned and made a low bow, saying, 'Good-bye, your Magistrate'—his father had been a magistrate in India.

"The King smiled kindly, and replied—'Ah, I see you have learned your lesson well; only you have not got it quite right'."

Finger-Print Lore.

The study of finger prints is becoming quite a fashionable one, and is being taken up with enthusiasm by young ladies. The following are stated to be established "axioms" of the cult. A man with white spots on his nails is unquestionably very fond of ladies' society; but, alas, is very fickle in his attachments. A proud man is invariably told by well-rounded finger nails, while transparent nails, suffused with light red, denote a cheerful, gentle, and loving disposition. But ladies must particularly beware of the man who bites his nails till a large portion of the skin is uncovered, for such a one would prove a perfect Othello for a husband. A man with long and pointed nails betokens that the owner is either a player on the guitar, a budding Chancellor of the Exchequer, a fashionable tailor, or an ambitious attorney; while anyone having the nail of his left thumb all streaked—as though it had been stained with snuff—is sure to turn out to be a schoolmaster. Thick nails indicate obstinacy and cruelty, while yellow ones are the clearest proof that the possessor is a "villain of the deepest dye."

Incense.

Incense is the resinous gum that exudes from a tree found in British Somaliland from near Berbera to Cape Guardaful. Some incense comes from a region adjoining Maskat, near the Arabian coast. Inferior incense is found in India, but the best and greatest quantity comes from British Somaliland.

HATS MADE AT HOME

THIS summer the hat that is not of straw occupies just as important a place in the millinery scale as the straw shape. The fact that fashion looks with a friendly eye on the fabric hat gives opportunity to all needlewomen to make these attractive shapes at home. Suppose that you are not a needlewoman. Well, it is never too late to begin a profitable task. Try one of these models just to prove that you were wrong when you said that you never could sew.

If you buy or make the wire frame you must provide yourself with milliner's scrim or a coarse quality of net. Cover the frame with this and use either white or black for the foundation, according to the color of your outer shape. It is easy to separate crown from brim and cover each separately. If you do not wish to do this, you will apply the net as shown in the picture. Whip it over the edge of the brim; gather the inner edge and sew firmly on the wire frame. Cover the crown by stretching the scrim over it, pleating it in at the sides and binding it around the crown with strong thread.

With this preliminary work for our starting point let us consider the selection before us.

The taffeta hat is quite simple. First, the outer edge is covered with a bias band of silk that is folded for two inches on the upper and under surfaces. Pleatings of silk are made at regular intervals of one inch and basted in place. The remaining part of the brim is covered with a fitted circular piece, seamed at the back. A cording edges it and is stitched down over the pleated edge. The under surface is faced in the same way. When making the crown a large circle of silk is laid in parallel folds and placed over the top. Any fullness is pleated in at the sides, and a bias band is added to conceal the joinings.

To this taffeta hat there is added a Dresden ribbon twisted band that ends in a rosette at one side. This is a double row of pleated ribbon surrounding four loops. With a silk dress or suit this type is particularly appropriate and suggests an idea for using the pieces that are left from the dress.

A black net hat is always in style. You will see that a band of shirred net about two inches in width is used. The net is very soft and is easily applied over the frame. The remaining portions of the brim and crown are covered with plain net. The special charm of this net hat lies in the trimming of silk cording applied at the edge and in concentric circles on the crown. A large rosette of pleated net is placed at one side. The under surface is one piece of bias net, drawn in in folds to the edge of the crown. This is a very easy type to be copied in white or ecru net and trimmed with a rosette or with a large silk rose.

White lace is used on the rose-trimmed hat in another model. A bias band the width of the brim is cut and the usual rule for gathered goods is followed; that is, one and a half times around. Then the material is shirred on the outer edge, in a double row at the center and on the inner edge. After this it is fitted to the brim. A bias binding of silk is added to the edge and a band is placed over the double row of shirring in the center of the brim.

The crown is covered by taking a strip of lace and drawing it up under a lace-covered button, and from this the material radiates over the crown. A bias cording outlines the edge of the crown. The brim is turned up at the side and a rose is placed there. Two roses are then placed on the brim, and the whole is as dainty as you could wish.

Last in this hat story is the linen eyelet-embroidery shape. The frame has a round crown, and the entire wire shape is covered with pink linen. Ribbon two inches wide is used to bind the edge, and the oval crown is covered with eyelet work dyed pink to match. It is fitted over the round top by slashing it at the corner edge and lapping the cut parts. The brim is covered with triangular pieces of eyelet embroidery placed so that the point of one is down and of the next one up. This arrangement allows a portion of the linen to show through.

Around the edge is a fringe of pink straw, bought by the yard. It is joined at the back. A bow of pink ribbon is placed at the side. Another favorite trimming for this kind of hat is a large butterfly of eyelet, wired and perched on the side of the crown.

The under surface of this hat is plain linen.

Fabric hats are light weight and have the commendable feature of being excellent ways to use small pieces of organdie, dimity, lace, silk and linen. They are so easily constructed that the left-over pieces should not be allowed to suffer from disuse. The fabric hat, besides being one of the summer innovations, gives a delightful sense of completeness to a costume.

For practical hands these suggestions should open the way to successful work in millinery. The wire frame, covered, a little remnant of summer material, a spool of strong thread and a milliner's needle, plus an intelligent ability to follow directions, will result in a satisfaction that economy and beauty never fail to give.

Turkish Women

SINCE the revolution in Turkey the women of the progressive classes, the hanoums, have been gradually freeing themselves from the shackles in which they have lived so long.

The black yashmak, as the veil was called, is now to be seen no more. Veils are so thin as to show the color of the hair plainly, and many Turkish women go about with faces uncovered. The feredje, or upper garment, has also undergone modifications. It has ceased to be wide and loose and shows the lines of the figure, often being confined at the waist by a belt.

Women are seen now on the streets with men who are not their husbands or brothers. They ride in carriages and go boating with them. In social gatherings at which Europeans are present women even of the highest class are now seen, and they mingle freely with foreign women and with men.

Public schools are being opened, and the hanoums have established at Constantinople a school of domestic science taught by Europeans. The new minister of public instruction is very much in their favor and will doubtless do great things for them.

Even in Turkey the germ of progressiveness has taken root, and the Ottoman empire will not be far behind its brother countries of the west.

A Golden Rule

FOR you the golden rule is to avoid extremes. Doctor Johnson's remark, "I am sure she was well-dressed, for I cannot remember what she had on," suggests a clue to the secret of being faultlessly attired. Refinement in dress and refinement in character often go together, as well as a love of the beautiful in nature and in art.

Indifference and consequent inattention to dress often show pedantry, self-righteousness or indolence. It is not a virtue, but a defect in the character. Every woman should study to make the best of herself with the means at her command. Among the rich, the love of dress promotes some degree of exertion and display of taste in themselves, and fosters ingenuity and industry in inferiors; in the middle classes it engenders contrivance, diligence, neatness of hand; among the humbler it has its good effects. So long as dress merely interests, amuses, occupies such time and such means as we can reasonably allot to it, it is salutary, refining the tastes and the habits and giving satisfaction and pleasure to others.

An attention to dress is useful as relaxing, even in the minds of [illegible] men that pride in a wife's appearance which is so agreeable to her, as well as that due influence which, in the present state of society, cannot be attained without it.

A Wrong Choice

THERE is no act, nor option of act, possible, but the wrong deed or option has poison in it which will stay in your veins thereafter forever. Never more to all eternity can you be as you might have been had you not done that—chosen that. You have "formed your character," forsooth! No; if you have chosen ill, you have deformed it, and that forever!—Ruskin.

The Gingham Furnished Bungalow

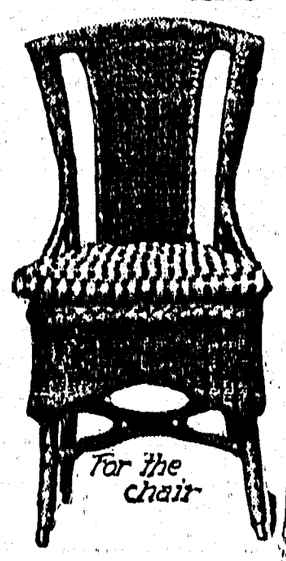
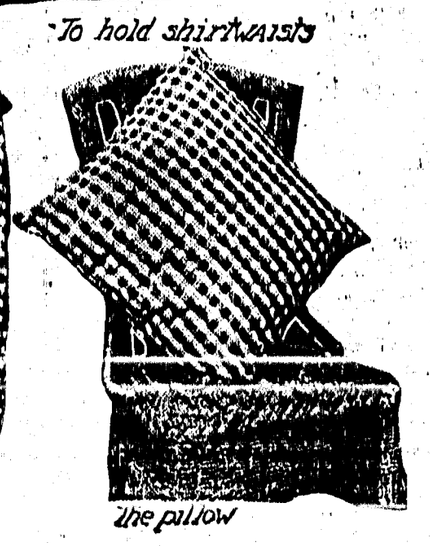
The curtains

To hold shirtwaists



For the chair

Covering the table



The pillow

"HOW delightfully cool!" That is the first thought that strikes you as you enter the gingham-furnished bungalow.

The walls of the living room are painted—a cool green or blue or lavender or gray. The floor is painted in a darker shade of the same color, or if the walls are only whitewashed, the floor is in a clayey yellow that sounds ugly, but is really very attractive. At the windows are curtains of checked gingham, again reflecting the color of the walls and floor. A gingham screen stands guard over a gingham-clad table. Upholstered chairs, chair cushions, sofa pillows, even the wastebasket and the lampshade are of the same inexpensive material. Go into the bedrooms; beds, dressing tables, chairs, shirtwaist boxes—all the same. There is a gingham cover on the dining-room table, and the sideboard shows its clean plates from the gingham background. And out on the porch the hammock cushions, the lounging chairs—everything—is still in gingham.

Not all the same color, of course; that would grow monoton us. The blue room may be separated from the green room, for instance, by a double curtain, one side in each of the two shades. The checks, too, may be of different sizes; but, on the whole, checked gingham is better for several reasons than plain. It relieves the eye more; it is cooler; it is usually cheaper, and it can be had in a greater variety of colors.

A word now as to the making of some of these articles. The curtains are quite easy. They are simply deeply hemmed and then gathered over the curtain pole, the two long sides being edged with coarse embroidery, or fancy white braid. Be very careful about the fitting of your doors and windows; take your measurements with a folding rule or a tape measure, and go over them twice to make sure that they are accurate.

When it comes to covering a screen with the gingham the method is even easier. Buy a cheap screen—any hideous variety will do, so long as the frame is strong. Then stretch the gingham taut and fasten with gilt upholstery tacks to both sides of the screen, either covering it entirely or leaving the wooden frame (which in this case should previously have been painted to match the gingham and varnished) exposed. The latter plan is really prettier, as the wood gives an attractive contrast to the gingham.

The sofa pillows, of course, need no directions, since they are like cushions for the same purpose of any material; but a few words must be said as to the padded chair cushion. A flat cushion may be used as a foundation, or the gingham may simply be stuffed with cotton or straw, with a muslin interlining. Each side is covered separately, a carpet needle being used to produce the regularly spaced knots. Each knot is made by simply turning the heavy white thread two or three times upon itself and then running the needle through it. When the knots are finished the gingham should be stretched almost taut over the foundation. The edges are then stitched down and a narrow hemmed band is sewed on to hide the joining. There are four of these bands, of course, in a square cushion and they are doubled and stitched down at the corners.

The shirtwaist box looks as if it were quite a task, but really it is a simple matter of upholstery tacks. The important thing is to cut your material straight and stretch it tightly, so that there are no wrinkles. The top edge of the box proper and the lower edge of the lid should be bound in furniture gimp, held down by smaller tacks. The brass handles can be screwed on last of all. The box should be lined with plain gingham of the same shade as the checked. Do not, lastly, forget the casters or rubber balls to protect the floor.

The same principle is observed in the covering of the dressing table. To tell the truth, the particular table shown here was originally a small one of the kitchen variety! Gingham is stretched and tacked down over the top and is gathered very fully at the sides, being tacked on at the middle of the gathered hem. That is really all there is to it.

The wastebasket is of gingham-covered cardboard, each piece made separately and then laced together with cord, just as in the plain cardboard baskets. The lampshade is gathered over a wire frame, such as may be bought for a quarter; at every place where the wires join, the thread is run over and over until it holds firmly.

Did it cost a great deal to build your bungalow? Then here is a way to furnish it cheaply, and yet daintily and coolly.

Prehistoric Monsters

LUCKY, indeed, is the museum that possesses so much as part of a skeleton of one of the enormous reptiles that roamed the world before the flood. But now comes a British explorer who declares that these antediluvian monsters still live, and may be found in the Rhodesian swamps, along the southern border of the desert of Sahara, in Africa. There exist there (he says in his appeal for funds to the British government), in all their glory, the ichthyosaurus, the diplodocus, the pterodactyl and the dinosaur. Natives have reported animals beside which an elephant looks like a cat, others corresponding in every way to the fabled unicorn and others which cannot, according to accounts, be anything more or less than dragons.

Who knows? Perhaps some day a scientist will do more than merely catch sight of a sea serpent.

Colors to Wear

IN SPITE of advice to the contrary, blondes should avoid the lighter shades of blue, which make their complexions seem ashen. The darker shades, however, [illegible] in high relief and are vastly becoming.

True brunettes should not wear blue, which makes the skin yellower than ever, but florid brunettes can do so. Blondes may wear green, but not brunettes. Pale brunettes may wear any shade of red but crimson, which, however, looks well on the blonde. Yellow is the best color for pale brunettes, especially for evening wear. It clears the complexion and sets off the dark eyes and hair wonderfully.

P S —We Do Repairing

The first fruits of the Conservative victory are already in full bloom as proved by the woollen manufacturers' demands already made upon Mr. Borden. They are really showing indecent haste to get their pound of flesh. Their demand is that the government shall raise the duty upon woollens from 30 to 50 per cent. And who is it they desire to discriminate against? Listen! it is England—not those naughty Americans—but against the old mother country. What about that closer preferential tie that was to knit us together as "one nation, one flag." What about loyalty, reciprocal trade, and the waving and shouting and marching the streets under the Union Jack, when the very first request Mr. Borden listens to purposes an injury to our British manufacturers, that our already rich makers of woollens may become richer. What does it matter now that the appeal to our loyalty has answered its purpose. We shall have to pay another 20 cents on the dollar for our $30 or $40 suits. The consumer's or wearer's interests are simply ignored; not worth consideration. Now is our chance to make them pay, and still further increase our bank balance. Who is the disloyal party now?

What appears an amusing result of the election happened not a hundred miles from Cumberland. The road foreman appears to have been so excited that he began the new road in the wrong place; expended the labor of the whole gang to blow up stumps galore, notwithstanding a protesting telegraph pole right in the centre of the opening made to start the new road, and only for the timely arrival of the road superintendent would have continued wandering on in the wrong direction, instead of the route arranged and plainly laid out for him by the surveyors. Political excitement is indeed responsible for much foolishness.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Editor NEWS:—

I read in your issue of the 26th ult., what I considered a very unfair attack on Provincial Constable Davidson, purporting to have been written by Mr Crawford. I do not think, however, that he would have written in that strain had he considered the following:—

It is the right of every individual to resort to the courts if he considers his rights have been illegally violated. It is then for the presiding Judge or Magistrate to decide by the evidence adduced who is at fault.

This course was pursued in the matter under consideration, and the presiding magistrate evidently concluded from the evidence that Mr Douglas was at fault and the complaint of Mr Davidson well founded, or he would not have imposed a fine on the accused.

If, however, the magistrate was wrong as regards the conclusion he arrived at, being of course based on the evidence, he is to blame and not the constable. I might mention as regards the facts of the case, that neither Mr Crawford nor myself have a personal knowledge of the same, but I have been informed, and I assume my source of information to be as reliable as that of Mr Crawford, that Mr Douglas pleaded guilty to the charge but stated in mitigation that his horse was balky and so made it difficult for him to turn to the left, but no mention was made by him of the conversation alleged by Mr Crawford to have taken place.

Mr Crawford states that the magistrate fined accused $7.50, and handed the same to Mr Davidson, and continues by asking, "I would like to know if this man is paid a salary by the government, or does he adopt these contemptible ways to make it?"

In reply to this base insinuation, I beg to say that the party in question is paid a salary by the government and that he gets no commission, take-off, share or anything of a like nature from or out of any fine or costs imposed by any judge or magistrate in the province. That it is the duty of the magistrate to hand all fines and costs levied to the constable, who in turn pays the same into the office of the Government Agent.

If Mr Crawford has any doubts as to the disposal of this $7.50, or any other fine or costs for that matter, he has but to ask the Government Agent, who will substantiate my statement as to the disposal thereof.

There is another matter for Mr Crawford to consider, and it is this: A constable is precluded from replying, through newspapers, to letters published criticising his action as a government official. The only manly course to pursue would be to report the matter to the authorities who have control over provincial constables, and thus give the constable an opportunity of defending himself.

Any other course, under the circumstances, is on a par with binding a man securely and then administering a sound beating.

Yours, &c.,
FAIRPLAY.

BENEVOLENT PROTECTIVE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF LIONS TO INSTITUTE LODGE HERE.

Mr. Chas. S. Moris, Provincial Deputy Organizer for Vancouver Island, is in town for the purpose of organizing the above order, and since his arrival has succeeded in getting 50 candidates for the order. Among them are a number of prominent business men, who have signified their intentions of becoming members of the order and have pledged their ernest support in making this order the Banner one of the city. Although there is competition in the field for the Fraternal honors, Organizer Morris was last in the field to start, and in the 48 hours after his arrival he had succeeded in signing 35 candidates and expects to have 100 candidates on the night of institution, which will be held on Monday night Oct. 10th.

The order is only a year old, and since the inauguration it has progressed and advanced considerably. It now boasts of having the largest order of its age financially and socially in the world.

For further particulars about this order, call at A. McKinnell's store or write to box 18, and it will be respectfully given.

Coroner Abrams left for Campbell River on Tuesday last, to hold an inquest on the remains of John Middlebrook who was found dead in his shack at that place on Monday. A postmortem disclosed the fact, that the cause of death was enlargement of the heart. The deceased was a native of England, and was 50 years of age. Mr. Abrams returned to town on Friday.

$20 REWARD

A reward of $20 is offered for information that will lead to the conviction of the party or parties who removed a rudder, gasoline tank, and some pipe fittings from my boat which is lying on the beach near Roy's.
