FROM ONE MAN'S POINT OF VIEW

NOW that the evangelistic services are at an end in Enderby, I trust that I may be permitted to discuss the objectionable feature of modern revivalism without being accused of "injuring the cause." Three weeks ago I said: "Revivalism is like most of the modern isms: it has very much of the fake about it." Good orthodox friends who should be able to read a sentence as it is written, accused me of saying, "revivalism is a fake." What was said of revivalism then was said with a view of bringing prominently forward the evils that overwrought men bring into a good cause either from love of gain or love of personal power. An evangelist is a preacher with emotion plus—a man, as good and as bad as most men. He is a worthy citizen, so long as he conducts his business as worthily and as sanely as other men conduct their's. A steeple is not more holy than a smoke-stack. The merchant and manufacturer, and the man with pick and shovel are workers in the divine plan as much as the preacher, and in some instances more. The real test is not credal. Usefulness in life's service is the real test. To separate a man's religion from his work is a monstrous error. To teach that we can serve God independent of and apart from our service of men here and now, is contrary to the teachings of Christ, and of every sane man's honest convictions.

The evangelist has his place. He helps to work up aesthetical brain storms, and these seem to be necessary to some people periodically. When times are hard the evangelist waxes warm. He points the individual away from this life by promising a surfeit in Paradise. When the evangelist is gone the individual finds that he must come back to this life, and must live in the Here and Now. Then comes the rub. Between the scoffing of the scorner on one hand and the cold indifference of the aesthetic church member on the other, the convert finds many thorns among the roses, and soon he totters and falls. A Rev. A. F. Kirkpatrick, D. D., speaking from personal experience, once said: "I would rather live next door to a pest-house than to some church members. It is not that they do not hold orthodox creeds. They are evangelistical and read their Bibles daily. But they lack the spirit of Christ. The faults and failures of others are targets for their attacks. The smell of scandal is to them as the perfumes of Araby the blest. Blind to the needs of humanity and deaf to the cry of the world's pain, they go on calling themselves Christians, and the world looking on condemns, not the loveless character, but Christianity. Because the church has tolerated such things, because men and women of unloving spirit, living for self, have been permitted to kneel at her altars and sit in her chief seats, while men with hearts filled with love and pity have been turned away, because they could not pronounce some human shibboleth—because of this, thousands of men are turning from the church." This from a D. D. is a severe arraignment. It serves to show what the modernly "converted" individual will find on awakening from his aesthetic intoxication and gets back to real life.

The error is in the evangelist. His entire intent is to kill in the man his sense of self-reliance—to make him think less of himself, and even have a scorn and contempt for his natural instincts. And he is given in exchange a superstition to lean upon. The worst harm you can do your neighbor is to make him doubt himself. The evangelist assumes that man is born a failure and then by aesthetic bull con attempts to prove it. As a matter of fact, God is in every man; and man's responsibility—and his only responsibility—is to express in a calm, sane, natural way, in his home life, business life, on the street, in the office, the working of the God within. The God men seek comes from within. He is not found by diverting men from the ills of this life to the supposed joys of another. He is found in standing by that which we think is true, and doing one's work here and now as if there never was and never would be a better heaven than this. To forsake one's work to indulge religious emotions is as bad as to forsake one's work to indulge sexual emotions.

MR. ROSS QUICKLY WINS A VOTE AT ENDERBY

DUNCAN ROSS was greeted by a house full when he stood before the people of Enderby Monday evening. As a prelude to his address, speeches were made by Chairman Fortune, Mr. Rogers and Geo. Bell. Mr. Rogers and Mayor Bell paved the way for Mr. Ross' remarks on Indian reserves and the V., V. & E. charter. Both speakers were satisfied with Mr. Ross and declared he should receive the support of the district. Mr. Bell said he had come to the meeting "on the fence," so to speak, open to conviction, and he had already heard enough to induce him to cast his vote for Mr. Ross, though Mr. Ross had not yet been heard.

In opening his remarks Mr. Ross took up the matter of Indian reserves. He said the Dominion government had repeatedly endeavored to force a settlement with the Provincial government whereby the unused lands could be opened to the white man but the Provincial government would not listen to it. As the matter stands, the Province has control of the situation. When the Dominion got the land from the Province for the Indians, it was given with the proviso attached, and quite rightly, that when the land should cease to be needed as an Indian reserve it should revert to the Province and become crown land. Now, when the Indian is prepared to sell the unused lands, he really has not anything to sell, for the moment he declares he does not need it, it becomes provincial property, and the Dominion has nothing to say. An effort is to be made to test the legal status of the case before the Privy Council, to see where the Provincial rights end and the Dominion rights begin.

Mr. Ross endeavored to explain away the injustice of deferred elections in Yale-Cariboo and Kootenay districts, by pointing to the vast territory up in Alaska somewhere, where the returning officers had to be staged 200 miles to be sworn in, all of which was about as relevant to Yale-Cariboo and Kootenay as the Cook Islands to England. He spoke in words of esteem of Mr. Burrell, said he was a gentleman worthy of his best, against whom he could not say a word. But his politics was all wrong.

Mr. Ross was patiently heard, and here and there in the course of his remarks he was applauded. However, his remarks were very largely confined to Provincial issues instead of Dominion, and his argument was directed at the McBride government rather than in elucidation of his own, and as a vote getter or confidence builder his address was a blanket. At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Ross moved a vote of thanks to the chairman for his impartial presiding.

The Deferred Election Ruse

It is just possible that Duncan Ross will not profit so much after all by the deferred election ruse. The feeling is gaining strength that since B. C.'s Dominion representation is already strongly Conservative, more can be gained by adding to our Conservative majority than taking from it. It is a feeling that is strong in the ranks of both parties, and Mr. Burrell, being a man of such clean record and sterling qualities, it is felt that this is our opportunity to place him in position to add strength to our B. C. representation.

Commenting on the wisdom of the deferred election ruse, the Summerland Review says: "It is true we would rather have expressed ourselves on the 26th, since we like cold pan-cakes no better than other people. It is true also that the election could have been held at that date, since the Tories in other less favorable days had no trouble in covering the ground in the requisite time. And the fact that this was not done is a self-evident confession of weakness on the part of Mr. Ross and his colleagues. Clearly they were afraid to take a fair chance in the general scrimmage, and, therefore sought the advantage which comes from the undue influence of example upon the indeterminate. The hope in the game is that if the government, which was supposed stronger in other constituencies, is sustained, the weakling voters of Yale-Cariboo will decide they had better fall in line with the crowd. It is sad but true that there are always those who will, through weakness, surrender the right of private judgment. They do not respect their own thinking and are sucked into the stronger current of the thought of others. This by-election ruse is always the resort only of the desperate, since it is not only a confession of weakness but it is liable to work both ways. For this reason the fact that we are condemned to a by-election should not be regarded as a crime. It is only a ruse, inconvenient no doubt to the elector, but one which does not rob him of any right, and one which, if he chooses to resent it, may readily be made very disastrous to the perpetrator."

If the voters would turn down the perpetrators of these deferred election frauds, we should soon see how quickly they would be discontinued.

Hot Shot from Lowery

Colonel Lowery is a Tory, and he has this to say of the elections: "The result proves that there must be many vacant upper stopes amongst the so-called intelligent voters of this dominion, or else that they willingly endorse a government that has been the most corrupt and wasteful of any that ever unwound red tape under the British flag. The cent belt was evidently full of a lot of pikers who would sell their country for a mess of porridge. The hypnotic influence of Laurier and the church upon the pea-soupers, the appeal to the avarice of the fish-eaters, and the general stupidity of the Rubes in Ontario enabled the Grits to once more stake the dominion for the benefit of themselves and foreign capitalists. What a lunch they will have in the next five years, while the people will scramble under the table for the crumbs. Verily, brethren, this is a wicked world. Back East the pious pimples will imprison a man who sells a postage stamp on Sunday and then go to the polls and vote into power the most polished gang of veneered land pirates that ever grabbed the domain of a great country. . . Like a bright star in a dark sky British Columbia shone last Monday and it will continue to shine until we have better terms and the brown stain is washed away from this beautiful land."

What Did It Mean?

Men accustomed to playing the game of politics are wondering what bright campaign manager booked the Hon. Frank Oliver for the meeting at Mara school house last Saturday night. For the minister of the interior to lose two days' valuable time to address an audience that couldn't possibly run over 50 and when it came to a show-down, didn't number 15, is one of the strange things of the campaign. At Mara Mr. Oliver was compelled to devote the evening to answering a list of question proposed by the meeting. A party of Enderbyites accompanied Mr. Oliver to Mara, driving up through mud and rain, and when they go there the cupboard was bare, with no lights and no fire in the school house. However, in half an hour or two lanterns were noticed moving in the direction of the school house, and by-and-by a quorum of lanterns with men attached gathered and business proceeded. Mr. Oliver isn't a quitter, though. He quietly met the situation by forgetting himself in answering the questions propounded. He remarked on the way home that he thought the country needed a great deal of saving.

The Proposition in a Nut-Shell

The Vancouver Province hits the nail squarely on the head when it says: "On Monday night last, when Mr. W. W. B. McInnes realized that he had been beaten in the election, he indulged in some reflections which are peculiar to party men in the position in which he found himself. It was not so much for himself that he grieved as for Vancouver. . . . This lamentation which has since been echoed by other members of the Liberal party, is an appeal to the basest sentiments of the community. Were we to be guided by the principle which it suggests we would never be influenced in our political conduct by anything higher than the thought of our immediate material gain. . . . However, there is another way of regarding this matter, and one which justifies the people of Vancouver even from the standpoint of their immediate material interests in opposing the Laurier government and sending an opposition member to Ottawa. As we know, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his administration are opposed to the views of the people of this province on all the important questions affecting the interests of this province with which the federal government has to deal. This, in itself, should be sufficient to determine us to express our disapproval of the policy of his government. But let us ask Mr. McInnes what benefit this province, or any constituency in this province, secured by having in the last parliament a solid Liberal representation? . . When any important question affecting the interests of British Columbia came before parliament they acted as they did when the Japanese treaty came up for ratification—they were silent. That was the policy of the Liberal representation of British Columbia in the last parliament—a policy of silence by which the best interests of the province were betrayed. . . . But it will not be continued now. The interests of this province will be looked after. The government will not be allowed to pass the word about to the members from British Columbia instructing them to refrain from discussion when matters affecting this province come before the House. The policy of the next five years will be a policy of publicity. . . There will be no railroading of measures through the House; no suppression of discussion."

What Did They Get?

What did Bill Gallagher, who is a good fellow, get for the people of Kootenay district? Every time the people of that district wanted anything that was of real advantage to them they had to send a delegation to Ottawa to get it. What did Duncan Ross, who is a good fellow, get for the people of Yale-Cariboo district? He got the V., V & E. charter for James J. Hill of St. Paul, Minnesota. What did William Sloan, who is a good fellow, get for the people of Comox-Atlin district? He got a chance to deliver an oration on "Pelagic Sealing in the North Pacific Ocean" and get it distributed through the mails for nothing. What did Bob Macpherson, who is a good fellow, get for the people of Vancouver? He got a life job for himself as postmaster of that city. Are not the above nice records for the people of Kootenay, Yale-Cariboo, Comox-Atlin and Vancouver to look back at.—Empire.

A SOLILOQUY BY THE PARSON OF WORKADAY

What's the use of saying
"What's the Use?"
TRY!

I WAS coming up the street Monday morning when a friend passed this thought to me. I had been looking for it, though I was unconscious of it. In a moment it opened before me a field of thought I had barely entered. There came before me the obstacles we daily roll up before us to bar our progress, as individuals and as a community. "What's the use of saying 'what's the use': Try! TRY! Ye, gods! if we only would! What a change we could bring about! How many of the impossibles would become possibles! How many pipe dreams would become fair pictures of the actual! There came before me a mental picture of what is now the Mack farm, on the river bank south of town. A picture of what it used to be was followed by pictures of what it is now, and a picture of what it is going to be in the future. I saw the Strickland home in the woods five years ago, then a picture of the clearings now in orchard south of town, and these were pictured again as the future will make them, laden with luscious fruits. I saw the magnificent Hazelmere Farm with its snake fences of a few years ago now cutting straight and true through the vast fields of green, and I could but marvel at the beauty of the landscape as the plans of the owner are given fuller expression.

What's the use of saying 'What's the Use'! TRY! As I read and re-read these words my mind formed a picture of Enderby, its hills and valleys, their past, present and future. The hills that have been so long only beautiful, are now being cleared and the benches put into fruit. The future pictures these hills cut up into orchards, with comfortable homes nestling in the groves of birch and pine, cotton woods and alders. There comes before me a picture of the dense forests of a few years ago being replaced by fruit orchards and vegetable gardens up and down the valley of Mabel Lake. We repeat the word, try! try! try! and see the log cabin replaced by frame buildings, with the delightful gardens of foliage and bloom. Try! And the great thicket disappears, and out of the face of the ugly rocky cliff a home appears. Mountains are brought low and low lands high.

What's the use of saying 'What's the Use! TRY! The streets and the homes lose their shabby dress and assume one of beauty and style. Homes like the Gardom residence and that of Robt. Peel, and a dozen others, spring into view out of a tangle of undergrowth, and we see the hillside spread out in terraced lawns. Try! And out of a babbling of noises we see hospitals grow, and care for the sick provided. Try! But what's the use of saying, 'what's the use! try! dimmit, TRY!

Finest in the Country

"Enderby is a charming villiage with city airs. When Paddy Murphy shook the snow of Sandon off his feet he came here, and now owns one of finest brick hotels in the country. Although Paddy is an Irishman from Michigan, he calls his hotel the King Edward. In addition to the excellence of the meals, breakfast is served up to 10 o'clock, which is an added attraction for tourists."

Your New Suit is Ready !

The Fit Reform

NO occasion to bother with merchant tailoring this Fall. The new suits we have ready-to-wear are a distinct advance over anything previously attempted in Canada, combining all the distinction of cut and finish which pertains to made-to-order clothes at much higher prices. These suits FIT—not only neck, shoulders, under arms and over the front, but all over the body, because they are cut over individual patterns, and carefully tailored throughout. To the man who seeks big value and lots of style at moderate cost, we recommend our Fall Suits as really exceptional.

J. C. English folded his tents and broke camp on the Mabel Lake road extension work last Saturday. The road is now built to Mike Huppels, and is in first-class condition.

A large crowd attended the At Home given by the Knights of Pythias, in Pythian Hall last Thursdsy evening. Games, music and refreshments occupied the early part of the evening, followed by dancing.

A new time-table went into effect on the Okanagan branch, Nov. 2nd. No. 376 leaves Sicamous at 9:25; Mara, 10; Grindrod, 10:10; Enderby, 10:25. No. 375 leaves Enderby 16:45; Grindrod, 17:15; Sicamous 18:15. Double service is maintained.

The spirits were on the rampage last Saturday night. They placed a cement-block front on Walter Robinson's store, decorated the Enderby Trading Co.'s front with Webb Wright's canoe and stacked a cord of stove wood in the doorway of the barber shop.

Five Enderby cases are booked for the Vernon hospital this month, which means, roughly, $600 or $700 transfered from Enderby to Vernon. Thus it goes. Enderby has had four resident physicians in as many years. Good physicians come to locate here. In a year or so they move to other fields. Why?

Don't forget the Church Bazaar in the Presbyterian church next Monday. Show how thankful you can be. The sale will begin at 2:30 p. m. Nothing to be sold or set aside before that hour. In the evening the Sunday School entertainment will be given, to which all are cordially invited.

George Cowan, member-elect from Vancouver, will address the people of Enderby Saturday afternoon with Martin Burrell. If you want to hear two of the most eloquent speakers in the Province turn out and hear them. Time of meeting, 1:30 p. m. Let Mr. Burrell's reception be a royal one; we know the man and we know his work.

At the meeting of the Poultry Association, held in the Bell block Saturday afternoon, F. B. Howarth reported that Salmon Arm had organized with a membership of 30, and that Salmon Arm was prepared to affiliate with the societies of Enderby and Armstrong in holding a poultry show at Enderby this winter.

Robert Waddell is planing to bring the best the world can produce in poultry to the Hazelmere Ranch. He is bringing from England a pen of the finest Black Minorcas and a pen of first-prize White Wyandottes. These will be the start of what he hopes to make as fine a poultry yard as can be found in Canada. He has hatchers and brooders for 1000 chick, and is bringing an Old Country poultry expert to handle his pens.

How litlle Enderby people know about the magnitude of the business carried on by the Columbia Flouring Mills of Enderby. The flour shipments of this company to the Orient have long eclipsed all other Canadian mills, and now the Enderby company is establishing a market in the United Kingdom. The first consignment of Canadian flour that has ever left the Pacific Coast for England will leave Vancouver this week on the ss. Ouessant. The flour is one of the Columbia Flouring Mills best brands and goes to a new market.

A yearly grant of $500 is given by the Provincial government to a public hospital that can show 365 days' treatment in the year. With this for a starter, and say $10 a year for medical treatment in case of sickness from our business men and laborers residing in town, the ladies having in hand the Enderby hospital project should find no difficulty in providing for its up-keep.

J. S. Johnstone presented us with a photo of the cement-block residence he erected at Salmon Arm for John Dolan. It is a two-story structure, 18 feet above the basement. Twenty-four hundred blocks were used in its construction, requiring just seven weeks to cast the blocks and lay them. In the late catastrophy at Fernie cement-block buildings were given a severe test. A report says: "In the fire-swept district, which includes all the business portion of the town, there are standing just three business blocks and these are built of concrete blocks. Concrete seems to have much better resisting qualities against heat than brick, as all the brick buildings were burned." For further particulars see Mr. Johnstone.

MILK POWDER.

Great Trade Can Be Built Up For Product, It Is Believed.

The Creamery Journal of London predicts a bright future for the milk powder trade. It says: Now that practical processes have been invented for the conversion of milk into powder the question of the possibilities of such a business demands the attention of all creamery proprietors and managers. The great difficulty in most manufacturing businesses is the proper utilization of byproducts. Now, separated milk in creameries is practically a waste material. It fetches on the average a price of a penny per gallon. It can only be sold in the immediate neighborhood of the creameries, as carriage to a distance is not possible at such a price.

The process referred to gets rid of practically the whole of the water contained in the milk, and the residue of milk powder amounts to only about one-tenth of the weight of the milk. Even were it possible to send the separated milk economically to a distance the heavy cost of the packages required would be a very serious drag on the business. But the milk powder may be forwarded in any ordinary light commercial package that can stand the strain of a railway journey.

For wholesale purposes it may be packed in bags, like flour, at practically no cost whatever. The trade being a perfectly practical one, the next question is, What are the possibilities of finding a successful market for the product? And it seems to us that if milk powder is properly placed on the market it will find innumerable profitable outlets. It will be used in enormous quantities by biscuit manufacturers and by bakers and confectioners to a large extent in the manufacture of milk bread, cakes and pastry of various sorts. As it will keep for any length of time, it will obviously be invaluable on board ship.

Handling the Boar.

The boar should have plenty of exercise. This is productive of well developed muscles and general thrift. Soundness of reproductive organs will usually follow. During the breeding season it will not be possible for him to get the same amount of exercise, and accordingly care must be taken that his energies are not wasted by unnecessary service. Careful feeding will do much to counteract this. It must always be remembered that the drains on a boar at this time are severe, especially if fifty or sixty sows are served. This will require ample feed, with as much exercise as possible and careful treatment. A fully matured boar should not serve more than two sows daily, preferably one in the morning and one in the afternoon. In this way he can serve fifty or sixty in a season without difficulty.—George M. Rommel.

KIDNAPPED BY INDIANS.

Maud Allan, the Canadian Dancer, Had Adventure In the West

Not for many years has a dancer created such a sensation in this country as Miss Maud Allan, who has so successfully mastered the art of conveying emotion by the graceful posing of body and limbs.

A daughter of Canada, as long as she can remember, Miss Allan desired to be on the stage, although one incident in her early days nearly put a stop to the realization of her ambition. She was kidnapped by Red Indians.

It was while she was being taken to San Francisco. The train had stopped at a small station, and a number of Indians, following their usual custom, were there to offer the passengers curios, etc.

Suddenly, the little girl was missed. A hasty search along the train was made, without effect, and then attention was called to two squaws who were rapidly moving off across the prairie. A glint of fair hair revealed the object of their flight, and a quick chase ended in the recovery of the child. That was a dance her parents did not appreciate.

"Unbutton His Weskit, Ma'am."

Before Sir Charles Santley attained fame he had many experiences which were common to the artiste of earlier days. He made his debut at Dublin as Valentine in Gounod's "Faust." After the duel, the lady who personated Martha rushed on the stage and raised the head of the dying Valentine. There was a tense silence; then a voice from the gallery rang out, sharp and clear: "Unbutton his weskit, ma'am"—an exclamation that evoked much laughter and made Sir Charles forget that he was supposed to be mortally wounded.

DOCTORING CATTLE.

Drenching Is Dangerous and Often Proves Fatal, Says a Veterinarian.

Dr. David Roberts, Wisconsin state veterinarian, gives this advice:

Perhaps the best way of demonstrating the danger of drenching cattle is to advise the reader to throw back his head as far as possible and attempt to swallow. This you will find to be a difficult task, and you will find it more difficult and almost impossible to swallow with the mouth open. It is for this reason that drenching cattle is a dangerous practice. If a cow's head be raised as high as possible and her mouth kept open by the drenching bottle or horn a portion of the liquid is very apt to pass down the windpipe into the lungs, sometimes causing instant death by smothering, at other times causing death to follow in a few days from congestion or inflammation of the lungs

Give all cattle their medicine hypodermically or in feed. If they refuse feed give it dry on the tongue. The proper method of giving a cow medicine is to stand on the right side of the cow, placing the left arm around the nose and at the same time opening her mouth, and with a spoon in the right hand place the medicine, which should be in a powdered form, back on the tongue. She can then swallow with safety.

A Two Feed Rack.

A New York dairyman has a hay and grain rack for cows which, he says, is a great help when these two feeds are given at the same time. The hay is put in space a, and then the grain is poured in at b, and the cow eats it at

c. The part of the rack holding the hay may be made of slats and will thus be easier to keep clean. Both of these racks are kept in place by 2 by 3 strips running lengthwise of the manger.

The Chinese Dentist.

The position of the Chinese dentist is not very lofty among his countrymen. He is regarded as halfway in social importance between a barber and a laborer.

Cold Snap in Alberta

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lemke returned from a trip to Alberta last Friday morning. Mr. Lemke states that the lumber trade is pradually tapering off to winter conditions, with prospects bright for the next season. At Calgary the ran into zero weather, with blizzards and snow. At Calgary he saw a party of German-Americans from North Dakota, numbering 56 men, 39 women and 173 children. They brought with them 1,149 head of horses and cattle. They have bought 35 sections of land east of Crossfield in the Rosebud district, and will there establish a colony. They are the characteristic German Adventists; sober and industrious and make splendid citizens.

Strange Bed-Fellows

Ed. Walker's Weekly: Sir: It is not a new thing to see liquor men and church men arm-in-arm in politics. In Enderby, I must say, we have an example of it. I am interested in the movement the churches are making in the interest of temperance, but I do not feel that we can accomplish anything, when I see the church leaders using their position to advance the interests of a candidate who is known to be the candidate of the liquor party, and has always worked in the interest of the liquor men. It is time our church leaders were serving one master or the other, and not straddle from one to the other, ready to sit upon the one that promises them personal advancement. I hope you will publish this. JUST A WOMAN.

Butter-making

If any butter maker makes butter that she's proud of, it's good business for her to let the world know where it came from. Nicely printed vegetable parchment butter paper, and printed with an alkali ink that won't run, will do it. The Walker Press can furnish the finest vegetable parchment, the finest ink that won't run, and the finest quality of printing. If you can furnish the finest butter, you'll have a winning combination.

THE WALKER PRESS, ENDERBY

Enderby District presents inducements for mixed farming that are unexcelled, go where you will. But the fact must be advertised.

"Deep Creek" Answered

Editor Walker's Weekly: Sir: I write as an individual and not as a merchant, and I want to know, who is "Deep Creek"? Why hasn't the man the pluck to put his name to his letter? Why doesn't he tell the merchants personally what more he wants for his money? He tells us he is equidistant from Enderby and Armstrong, but prefers to come to Enderby. Why? Evidently Enderby merchants are not as black as he would paint them. "This half holiday is all right in the summer time," he says. Let us thank him for this crumb of comfort, but if there be any logic in his argument at all he will doubtless cavil at the autocratic merchant taking either food, drink or sleep except "in the summer time." I take it upon myself, as an individual, not as spokesman for or defender of the wicked merchant, to accuse your correspondent of the rankest kind of selfishness. He, pet of the gods, can take a holiday practically when it suits him, and takes it. . . .

If "Deep Creek" will believe me, it may help him to understand why some merchants close their stores on Wednesday afternoons even after the "summer time." A merchant, and his clerks, are human beings, and a human being needs recreation to enable him to conduct his business just as much as he needs ordinary business acumen. For the convenience of his customers he endeavors to take it on some day of the week least likely to interfere with their various pursuits, in this case on Wednesday, and I think that any man with a spark of humanity in him will agree with me that "Deep Creek" has very little to kick at after all.
