The first trainload of Connellsville coke, which left West Superior, Wis., last Saturday, arrived at the Granby smelter this evening. There rumor current to the effect that the Boundary coke trains will soon carry the fast mail across the continent.

Death of Capt. Disbrowe

The Winnipeg Free Press has the following article regarding the recent death of Capt. W. H. Disbrowe, who was one of the pioneers of Grand Forks, and who resided here until four or five years ago:

A letter has been received by Clark Bros. & Hughes from Superintendent Constantin, of the northwest mounted police at Prince Albert, enquiring for particulars as to the late W. H. Disbrowe, who died in St. Boniface hospital about two weeks ago. It seems that Mr. Disbrowe's father, who was a Church of England clergyman, died some time ago, and friends asked the R.N.W.M.P. to locate the son several months ago, with the idea of getting him to take charge of the estate.

W. H. Disbrowe was a guest at the Dominion hotel, Main street, Winnipeg, all the time.

The late Mr. Disbrowe was an interesting personage. He came to Canada in 1876, and for a time settled in Ontario, coming to Winnipeg, where he established a farm implement emporium on Main street, close to where the Union bank now stands. For a time afterwards he was in the real estate business, and became manager for A. W. Ross in the Birtle Farming company, situated near Beulah, Man.

Later Mr. Disbrowe was appointed government guide by the late Sir John A. Macdonald, then premier of Canada. He was prominently connected with the militia in the early days, and was also a member of the volunteer fire brigade. He then went to Quebec citadel for a course of instruction as an officer in field battery work. While there he was appointed by the then lieutenant-governor of the province as aide-de-camp. When the troops were called out for the Riel rebellion he came to the northwest again, as transport officer, and became a "galloper" to General Middleton. He was an officer along with Hugh John Macdonald in the first cavalry corps of Manitoba, which he organized and captained, and he was prominent here in both military and social circles. At cricket he was also quite an expert. He was a personal friend of Lieutenant-Governor Schultz, Lieutenant-Governor MacIntosh, A. W. Onderdonk, James Isbister, the two latter being big railway contractors. T. G. Poyntz, James H. Ashdown, Thomas Scott, and other prominent men were among his acquaintances in the early days. A strong Conservative, he was alwhys active in the organization work of that party.

Years ago Mr. Disbrowe went to Banff, where he established an outing house some distance away from the present hotel at that place. From there he went to Nelson, B. C. His latest achievement last fall was to carry a pack from Fort Georg through the mountain fastnesses and across the prairie to Edmonton, where he took the train to Winnipeg, and remained here until his death.

He had a fund of stories relating to the early days here, when sidewalks were practically unknown, and he told many interesting anecdotes of the straits men, now wealthy and prominent, were in after the early boom collapsed.

After his death his brother, who also has been in Canada for years, was located at Berens river, north of here, on Lake Winnipeg.

Route Approved

J. H. Kennedy, chief engineer of the Vancouver, Victoria & Eastern railway, has announcod that the Great Northern railway has definitely abandoned the idea of building a ine between Sumas Landing and Hope, paralleling the Caoadian Northern line, but through an arrangement with Sir William Macbenzie will use that line for a distance of thirty-eight mi es. The Great Northern will probably reciprocate by permitting the Canadian line to use its tracks between Vancouver and Port Kells, at least until the latter has built its line between Port Mann and Port Kells.

During his month's tour Mr. Kennedy secured the approval of the board of railway commissioners at Ottawa of the plans of the Vancouver, Victoria & Eastern railway for forty-one miles from Tulameen to the source of the Coquihalla river. While at St. Paul Mr. Kennedy was authorized to call for tenders for the construction of nine wooden bridges on the line between Abbotsford and Sumas Landing, in the building of which some five million feet of timber will be used.

No instructions for the construction of the line from Tulameen to the summit have yet been issued. The work will be heavy. The impression prevails that it will not be undertaken until next year, as the outfits of railway contractors working have been withdrawn from railhead to Tulameen.

Compressed Air Blasting

In modern mining the operators are ready and willing to avail themselves of any new methods or devices which will cheapen and increase the production, and a method recently adopted in some coal mines dislodges the mass of coal by the direct application, behind the mass, of a charge of compressed air. The method appears to be effective, and seems to have no element of danger either to the mine or the miners.—Scientific American.

A Good Shot

The viceroy of India, Lord Dufferin, once had a shikaree, or hunting-servant, whose duty it was to attend the visitors at the viceregal court on their shooting excursions. This young man was above all noted for his tact.

Returning one day from one of these expeditions, the shikaree encountered the viceroy, who, full of courteous solicitude for his guests' enjoyment, asked:

"Well, what sort of sport has Lord —— had?"

"Oh," replied the scrupulously polite Indian, "the young sahib shot divinely, but God was very merciful to the birds."—Youth's Companion.

Venner produced a small knife and Gurdon attempted to insinuate the point of the blade under the elaborate moulding. Surely enough, the moulding yielded, and presently came away in Gurdon's hands.

"There you are," he said. "It is exactly as I told you. I thought at first that those mouldings were plaster, but you can see for yourself now that they are elaborately carved wood."

It was exactly as Gurdon had said Venner laid the ornament aside and stood watching Gurdon with breathless interest whilst the latter attacked another of the mouldings. They came away quite easily, pointing to the fact that they must have been removed before within a very short period. Once they were all cleared away, Gurdon placed the point of the knife behind one of the panels, and it came away in his hands, disclosing beyond a square hole large enough for anybody to enter. Here was the whole secret exposed.

"Exacty what I thought," Gurdon said. "If I removed the other three panels there would be space enough here to drive a trap through. I think we have been exceedingly lucky to get to the bottom of this. It is wonderfully clever how ingeniously the whole thing has been managed. However, I don't think there is any occasion for us to worry about moving any more of the panels, seeing that we can get through quite easily. Wouldn't it be just as well to put out all the lights?"

The house was reduced to darkness and very cautiously the two adventurers crept through the panel. They were in the hall on the other side, of which fact there was no doubt, for they stepped at once off a marble floor on to a thick rug which deadened the sound of their footsteps. They had, naturally enough, expected to find the whole place in darkness and the tenant of the house and his servants in bed. This would be in their favor, for it would enable them to take all the observations they required with a minimum chance of being discovered.

A surprise awaited them from the first. True the hall was in darkness, and as far as they could judge, so was the rest of the house. But from somewhere upstairs came the unmistakable sound of a piano, and of somebody singing in a sweet but plaintive soprano voice. Gurdon clutched his companion by the arm.

"Don't you think it is just possible that we have made a mistake?" he whispered. "Isn't it quite on the cards that this is a genuine affair, and that we are intruding in an unwarrantable manner upon some respectable private citizen? I am bound to confess that that beautiful voice does not suggest crime to me."

"Oh, we must go on now," Venner said impatiently. "It won't do to judge by appearances. Let us go up the stairs and see what is going on for ourselves. If we are intruding, we will get away as speedily as possible."

Gurdon made no further objection, and together they crept up the stairs. They were getting nearer and nearer now to the sound of the music, which appeared to come from the drawing-room, the door of which was widely enough open for the brilliant light inside to illuminate the staircase. A moment later the music ceased, and someone was heard to applaud in a hoarse voice.

"Sing some more," the voice said. "Now don't be foolish, don't begin to cry again. Confound the girl, she makes me miserable."

"Do you recognize the voice?" Venner whispered.

"Lord, yes," was Gurdon's reply. "Why, it's Fenwick. No mistaking those tones anywhere. Now, what on earth does all this mean?"

"That we shall find out presently," Venner said. "You may laugh at me, but I quite expected something of this kind, which was one of the reasons why I obtained the keys of the house."

"It's a most extraordinary thing," Gurdon replied. "Now isn't this man Fenwick one of the last persons in the world you would credit with a love of music?"

"Oh, I don't know," Venner said. "You never can tell. But don't let's talk. We are here to listen more than anything else. I wish we could get a glimpse of the singer."

"I am going to," Gurdon declared. "Unless I am greatly mistaken, I have made a discovery too. Oh, I am not going to take any risk. Do you see that mirror opposite the door? It strikes me that if I get close enough to look into that I shall be able to see who is in the room without betraying my presence."

So saying, Gurdon crept forward till he was close enough to the mirror to get a very good idea of the room and its occupants. He could see a pale figure in white standing by a piano; he could see that Fenwick was sprawling in a big arm chair, smoking a large cigar. Then he noticed that the girl crossed the floor and laid a slim hand half timidly, half imploringly, on Fenwick's shoulder.

"Why are you so unkind to me?' she said. "Why so cruel? How many times have you promised me that you will bring him back to me again? I get so tired of waiting, I feel so sad and weary, and at times my mind seems to go altogether."

"Oh, patience,'" Fenwick said. "If you will only wait a little longer he will come back to you right enough. Now go to the piano and sing me another song before I go to bed. Do you hear what I say?"

The last words were harshly uttered; the girl shrank back as if fearing a blow. Gurdon standing there, clenched his fists impulsively; he had some difficulty in restraining himself.

"Very well," she said; "just one more, and then I will go to bed, for I am so tired and weary."

Once more the sweet pathetic voice rang out in some simple song, and the words gradually died away, and once more there was silence. Gurdon had barely time to slip back to the head of the stairs before the girl came out and made her way to the landing above. Standing just below the level of the floor, Venner gazed eagerly at the pretty tired face, and mournful blue eyes. He grasped his companion by the arm in a grip that was almost painful.

"We are getting to it," he said. "It was a good night's work coming here to-night. Do you mean to say you don't notice the likeness? Making due allowance for the difference in height and temperament, that poor girl is the image of my wife."

"I must have been a dolt not to have noticed it before," Gurdon said. "Now that you mention it the likeness is plain enough. My dear fellow can't you see in this a reason for your wife's reticence in speaking of the past?"

There was no time to reply, for the sinister evil face of Fenwick appeared in the doorway, and he called aloud in Spanish some hoarse command, which was answered from above by someone, in the same language. Gurdon whispered to his companion with a view to ascertaining what had been said.

"Oh, you will see for yourself in a minute," Venner said in an excited whisper. "You are going to have another surprise. You wanted to know what had become of Bates. Unless I am greatly mistaken you will be able to judge for yourself in a few moments. I believe the man to be a prisoner in his own house."

CHAPTER XIII.

The White Lady Again.

It was perhaps an imprudent thing for the two friends to remain there exposed as they were to the danger of discovery at any moment, but so completely were they fascinated by what was going on about them, that they had flung caution to the winds. One thing was in their favor, however, there was not much likelihood of their being attacked from below, seeing that all the servants had gone to bed; unless perhaps, some late comer entered the house. Still the risk had to be run, and so they stood there together, waiting for the next move. It was Venner who spoke first

"I cannot get over that extraordinary likeness of that girl to my wife," he said. "Is she anything like the woman you saw next door? I mean the poor half-demented creature who happened to come into the room when you were talking with the owner."

"Why, of course, it is the same girl." Gurdon replied.

"Then I am sure she is Vera's sister. I'll ask her about it the first time I have an opportunity, but be silent and get a little lower down the stairs. There is somebody coming from the top of the house. We can see here without being seen."

Assuredly there were sounds emanating from the top of the house. A voice was raised in angry expostulation, followed by other voices morose and threatening. As far as the listeners could judge, two men were dragging a third down the stairs against his will. But for that, the house was deadly silent; the watchers there could hear the jingle of a passing cab bell, some belated foot passenger whistled as he went along. It was almost impossible to believe that so close to light, and law and order and the well-being of the town a strange tragedy like this should be in progress; hidden from the eye of London by mere skill of brick and mortar, this strange thing was going on Venner wondered to himself how many such scenes were taking place in London at the same moment.

But he had not much time for his meditation, for the shuffling of feet came closer. There were no more sounds of expostulation now; only the heavy breathing of three people, as if the captive had ceased to struggle and was making but a passive resistance. Then there emerged on the landing the figure of the handsome cripple with a guardian on either side. His face was no longer distorted with pain; rather was it white with an overpowering anger—his eyes shone like two points of flame. On his right side Venner and Gurdon recognised the figure of the man in the list slippers—the man who had been handling the sovereigns in Fenwick's rooms. His comrade was a stranger, though of the same type, and it seemed to Venner that anyone would have been justified in repudiating either of them as an acquaintance. It was perfectly evident that the handsome cripple came against his will, though he was struggling no longer. Probably the condition of his emaciated frame had rendered the task of his captors an easy one. They dragged him now, limp and exhausted, into the drawing room where Fenwick was seated and they stood in the doorway awaiting further instructions.

"You needn't stay there," Fenwick growled. "If I want you I can call. You had better go back to your cards again."

The two men disappeared up the stairs, and just for a moment there was silence in the drawing-room. It was safe for Venner and his companion now to creep back to the drawing-room door and take careful note of what was going on. With the aid of a friendly mirror on the opposite side of the room, it was possible to see and note everything. The handsome cripple had fallen into a chair where he sat huddled in a heap, his hand to his head, as if some great physical pain racked him. His heavy breathing was the only sound made, except the steady puffing of Fenwick's cigar. A fit of anger gripped Venner for the moment; he would have liked to step in and soundly punish Fenwick for his brutality. Doubtless the poor crippled frame was racked with the pain caused by the violence of his late captors.

But under that queer exterior was a fine spirit. Gradually the cripple ceased to quiver and palpitate, gradually he pulled himself up in his chair and faced his captor. His face was still deadly white, but it was hard and set now. There was no sign of fear about him. He leant forward and stared Fenwick between the eyes.

"Well, you scoundrel," he said, in a clear, cold voice. "I should like to know the meaning of this. I have heard of and read some strange outrages in my time, but to kidnap a man and keep him prisoner in his own house is to exceed all bounds of audacity."

"You appear to be annoyed," Fenwick said. "Perhaps you have not already learnt who I am?"

"Oh, I know perfectly well who you are," the cripple responded. "Your name is Mark Fenwick, and you are one of the greatest scoundrels unhung. At present, you are posing as an American millionaire. Fools may believe you, but I know better The point is, do you happen to know who I am?"

"Yes, I know who you are," Fenwick said with a sardonic smile.

"You elect to call yourself Mr. Bates, or some such name, and you pretend to be a recluse who gives himself over to literary pursuits. As a matter of fact, you are Charles Le Fenu, and your father was, at one time, the practical owner of the Four Finger Mine."

Artificial Rose Making.

Don't throw away your bits—even small bits—of silk and velvet, but save them for making the very fashionable flowers which ornament neckwear, hats and frocks.

You have no idea what charming little floral specimens you can evolve.

A PRETTY SPRAY OF MOSS ROSE BUDS.

A bias piece of pink satin rolled tightly and incased in a calyx of green silk or velvet will materialize into a lovely rosebud A bunch of these buds hung from narrow ribbons are smart to trim a blouse or to place among folds of the lingerie jabot. All kinds of flowers are made at home by the skillful worker who tries her art on the white kid butterflies that so modishly trim big black velvet hats this winter.

A Versatile Peer.

Poet, book-lover, sportsman, model landlord, and a keen agriculturist, the Earl of Crewe, who succeeds Lord Morley at the India Office, has gained the reputation of being one of the most versatile as well as broadminded of peers. In addition, he is one of the best-dressed, and the term "Crewe's elegance" is often heard at St. Stephen's. He is married to the daughter of Lord Rosebery who, prior to the wedding in 1899, was known as Lady "Peggy" Primrose. Lady Crewe has developed into one of our leading political hostesses, and has proved of great service to her husband in his political work. She is an exceedingly clever, tactful, and witty woman. On one occasion at dinner she noticed her father seated between Mrs. Asquith and the late Duchess of Cleveland. "Look at papa," she said, "sitting between the nineteenth and twentieth centuries."

Mrs. John Pettigrew, of Central Economy, N.S., was practically helpless from rheumatics. She could not stoop, and her limbs ached so it was torture for her to be up and around the house.

As Mrs. Pettigrew put it, "I was all crippled up. I saw Gin Pills advertised and sent for some, and after taking only two boxes, am a different woman. Gin Pills are the only things that helped me, and I cannot say too much for them."

Would Do Just as Well

An orchestra leader was working over a new musical play at a rehearsal with Charles Frohman, the theatrical manager.

"That's too loud," interrupted Mr. Frohman.

"I can't help it, Mr. Frohman," returned the leader. "It calls for forte."

"All the same," answered the manager, "make it thirty-five."

Philas Gagne of Montreal claims the championship of the world at bricklaying. In a day of nine hours at Montreal he laid in a wall eight inches thick and 50 feet long 6218 bricks. In a wall 16 inches thick and 50 feet long his record is 7162 bricks. In a wall 20 inches thick and 50 feet long he laid 9015 bricks. This work, he says, was approved by the architects and contractors.

A Power of Its Own.—Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has a subtle power of its own that other oils cannot pretend to, though there are many pretenders. All who have used it know this and keep it by them as the most valuable liniment available. Its uses are innumerable and for many years it has been prized as the leading liniment for man and beast.

When Mrs. Jacob Latschaw, of Ontellaunee, Pa., went to get the eggs, a huge rooster jumped at her and struck her a number of times with his sharp spurs, tearing her flesh deeply. Her husband came to the rescue and the chanticleer pitched into him and hit him on the ankle piercing a blood-vessel, so that the man was unable to walk.

One raw March morning as a professor at one of the colleges was calling the roll of an eight o'clock class in English he came to "Mr. Robbins," and receiving no answer called again, "Mr. Robbins?"

Still no reply. "Ah," said the professor, looking around upon the class with a smile, "I suppose it is rather early for robins."

A piece of leather can now be transformed into a pair of boots in thirty-four minutes, passing through the hands of sixty-three people and through fifteen machines.

"Never mind," answered Adam. "The ultimate consumer always gets the worst of it."—Washington Star.

The Village Grocer—Look here, John! What makes you put the big apples in the top of the bar'l?

The Honest Farmer—What makes you comb that long scalp-lock over your bald spot?

Thomas Hughes, when a small boy, had a guinea given him. This coin his grandmother took away, without his consent, and purchased for him a fine copy of Milton's poetry, saying that he would value it when he grew up, whereas, had he spent the money, he would only have wasted it on the transitory joys of marbles, tops and candy.

Needless to say, the unfortunate boy did not see matters in this light; and in after years Thomas Hughes wrote in his "Early Memories:"

"I owe to my grandmother a dislike to Milton's poetry, which I doubt if I have ever quite got over."—Youths Companion.

WHY NOT THIS?

Tibet Headdress Might Be Adapted to American Styles.

THE PAGOE, HEADDRESS WORN IN TIBET.

Take off the pigtails and this headdress worn by the upper class women of Tibet might adorn the pretty head of America's upper tendom. Indeed, it is not as outre as many of the hats of the day that are considered "perfect dears."

And as for expense, it lines right up with the most exclusive winter models, the price being practically fifteen hundred of our dollars.

This costly piece of Tibetan headgear is interwoven with the wearer's hair and is ornamented with many turquoises, corals and small pearls. The decorations can be easily removed. It is worn only by women who are purely Tibetan and have not married Nepalese. In other words, it is as "classy" as a Georgette or Carlier French model. American millinery artists please take notice of the "lines" and profit thereby when genius takes another eccentric chapeau flight.

A New Negligee.

For the woman who likes red and is fond of adding eccentric garments to her wardrobe comes the chanticleer negligee jacket—a gorgeous affair in cockscomb red satin. Lace medallions are used as a border trimming, and feathered rooster heads of startingly realistic aspect ornament the edges of the sleeves and form a corsage adornment. The chanticleer craze dies hard, and this aftermath expression of the rooster fad is certainly a strange one.

THE CHANTICLEER DRESSING SACK.

Suit Case Polish.

Some persons are surprised when they go to pack their suit cases for a journey to find them shabby or spotted, the leather dry and cracked or covered with greenish mold. They have been stored away either too near furnaces and steam pipes or in damp cellars.

All leather goods, chair seats, book covers, traveling bags, etc., must have consideration if they are to retain a fresh, attractive appearance. Shoes are preserved by the dressing on the leather. Book covers of leather or calf which are beginning to grow dry and brittle should be rubbed with a very small quantity of vaseline. If merely shabby and spotted they should be rubbed with well beaten white of egg, as should chair seats and all other leather articles, with the exception of sole leather suit cases, which are best cleaned by using ordinary russet shoe polish.

Eczema on Leg for 25 Years

I have been treated by doctors for twenty-five years for a bad case of eczema on my leg. They did their best, but failed to cure it. My own doctor had advised me to have my leg cut off, but I said I would try the Cuticura Remedies first. He said, "try them if you like but I do not think they will do any good." At this time my leg was peeled from the knee down, my foot was like a piece of raw flesh and I had to walk on crutches. I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. After the first two treatments the swelling went down and in two months' use of the Cuticura Remedies my leg was cured and the new skin grown on. The doctor could not believe his own eyes when he saw that Cuticura had cured me and said that he would use Cuticura for his own patients. But for the Cuticura Remedies I might have lost my life. I am truly grateful for the wonderful cure that Cuticura wrought. I have many grandchildren and they are frequent users of Cuticura and I always recommend it most highly as a sure and economical cure for skin troubles.

CANNOT FAIL TO INTEREST WOMEN

ALBERTA LADY TELLS OF HER CURE BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

Was Weak, Nervous, Run-down and Suffering from Rheumatism — Dodd's Kidney Pills made her a New Person.

Beauvallon, Alta. (Special).—Women who are nervous, run-down and suffering from Rheumatism, cannot fail to be interested in the case of Miss Gertrude E. Reyome, of this place. She was exactly in that condition. To-day she is as she puts it herself "a new person." Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her. Here is her statement given for publication.

"My kidney disease started from a cold two years ago. Rheumatism set in, and I was weak and nervous, and in a run-down condition. I was attended by a doctor who did not appear to understand my case. Three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills made a new person of me."

Is not Miss Reyome's condition an exact description of nine-tenths of the ailing women of Canada? The doctor did not understand her case. It was simple enough. It was Kidney Trouble. And Kidney Disease is the one great cause of women's troubles. Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure it.

He Soothed Her All Right

"You'll find," said the proprietor of a dairy to a new milkman who was taking over the "walk," "that the lady at 75 is inclined to find fault. You must soothe her down, and not be rude to her; she is a pretty good customer." "Leave that to me, sir," answered the milkman.

"Those eggs you left here yesterday were stale," grunted the woman at No. 75 on the milkman's second visit.

"Them heggs was laid 'arf an 'our afore you 'ad 'em by special quick-laying birds imported from the Mooley Wampoo island, ma'am, and they came down to this very house by Marconigraph, so as ye should get 'em fresh. A bit of twangy flavor they may 'ave, madam, but you lay odds they worn't stale."

The fault-finding lady gasped.

"The milk didn't seem so good as usual yesterday either," she ventured.

"The guv'nor will be cut hup when 'e 'ears that, madam," continued the milkman. "'E sent down to Halderney a purpus for a cow what'll eat nothing but peaches and pine-apples. 'Never mind the hexpense,' says he, 'this cow we keeps a purpus for the lady at 75; and mind it sleeps on a feather bed at night,' he says, 'and don't forget the heiderdown quilt.' Was there anything wrong with the butter, ma'am?"

But the lady shook her head; she had been effectively appeased.

Not in the Index

"Sir," said the sleek-looking agent, approaching the desk of the meek, meaching-looking man and opening one of those folding thingumajigs showing styles of binding, "I believe I can interest you in this massive set of books containing the speeches of the world's greatest orators. Seventy volumes, one dollar down and one dollar a month until the price, six hundred and eighty dollars, has been paid. This set of books gives you the most celebrated speeches of the greatest talkers the world has ever known and——"

"Let me see the index," said the meek man.

The agent handed it to him and he looked through it carefully and methodically, running his finger along the list of names.

Reaching the end he handed the index back to the agent and said: "It isn't what you claim it is. I happen to know the greatest talkers in the world, and you haven't her in the index."

In this day most of us kick on being our brother's keeper unless he pays his board in advance.

Didn't Have Them

"Have you frogs' legs?" asked a man of the waitress in the restaurant.

"No, sir, I haven't," said the girl as she flushed and drew herself up. "It's rheumatism that makes me walk like that."

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE BABY

Baby's Own Tablets is the one medicine that can be given little ones with the firm knowledge that nothing but good will result. The Tablets are sold under the guarantee of a government analyst to contain no opiate nor any other drug which will harm the youngest child—they cannot possibly do harm; they always do good, and once a mother has used them she will never again give her little ones castor oil or the "soothing" stuffs which simply drug baby into temporary relief and in the end do harm. Mrs. Philias Paradis, Frampton, Que., writes: "Send me two more boxes of Baby's Own Tablets. I have used them for constipation and have always found them very good. My baby is certainly progressing under the Tablets." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Nerves Are Exhausted

And Nervous Prostration or Paralysis Are Creeping Steadily Upon You

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

You hear of people suddenly falling victims of nervous prostration or some form of paralysis but when you get all the facts of the case you find that they have had months or years of warning.

They haven't slept well. There has been frequent attacks of nervous headache. Digestion has failed. They have been irritable, easily worried and excited and have found memory and concentration failing.

Had they but known that these symptoms tell of exhausted nerves or had they realized their danger they would have restored the feeble, wasted nerves by use of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

This great restorative treatment cures by forming new, rich blood and by rebuilding the wasted nerve cells. No medicine is more certain to prove beneficial, for each dose adds to the system a certain amount of rich, red blood.

Nervous diseases come on slowly and can only be overcome by patient and persistent treatment. Prevention is always better than cure, and for this reason you should endeavor to keep the system at high water mark by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food at the first sign of trouble. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50; at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

WHAT WILL THE BABY BE?

Superstition Which Various Nations Use to Safeguard Their Young.

Most of us are superstitious upon at least one point, and mothers are particularly so with respect to their children.

It is still considered a necessity in many parts of England that a child, when first leaving the mother's room, should go upstairs before going down. It frequently happens that the room of the mother is the highest in the house. When such is the case the difficulty is met by the nurse setting a chair and stepping upon that before she leaves the room.

There are numerous other superstitions. Prosperity and long life are assured to the baby in whose hand a silver coin or a new-laid egg is placed, and the same good luck will be the lot of the infant if it is placed in a maiden's arms before anyone else touches it.

The baby should on no account make its first public appearance out of doors unless it is accompanied by a small loaf of bread, an egg, some salt and a penny. If this precaution is omitted the grown-up career of the baby will be one of poverty and distress. The baby that cries lustily during the christening ceremony is supposed to have good luck.

The Spaniards also believe in determining the baby's walk in life at once. To do this they place a silver coin, a silver cross, a sword, a book and some fruit in front of him and let him make his choice. If he takes the coin he will go into business; if the sword, he will be a soldier; the cross, a priest; the book, a scholar, and the fruit, a farmer. They also believe that a band of gold or silver, or even jet, put around baby, will keep him from harm.

The Truks put a piece of mud, which has been steeped in hot water, upon baby's forehead, believing that the charms which have been used in preparing the mind will protect the child. The Hindus declare that baby must be called after the name of a god, for then will the deity be flattered at the frequent use of his name and be induced to think well of the child. The Arabians name the child as soon as it is born, as then the tribesmen will honor it. The Persians string amulets and necklets around baby's neck, as then the bad spirits will not touch him.

The Belgians teach their babies to make the sign of the cross, for they believe that this will certainly outwit the devil.

France a Marvel of Thrift.

The thrift of France is wonderful. It enabled the nation to bear the enormous losses of the Franco-Prussian war, including the payment of 5,000,000,000 francs as war indemnity, with no demoralization of trade and with hardly any depression of industry. Out of 10,000,000 French electors 9,000,000 have money in the bank or invested at interest or own land. Everybody saves. In various savings institutions there are 4,000,000 accounts of only 20 francs or less each, and the total number of all savings accounts reaches 13,000,000. One million five hundred thousand small investors hold probably 20,000,000,000 francs of Government bonds. Of 12,000,000 French householders 9,000,000 occupy their own homes, paying no rent. The country holds over 100,000,000,000 francs of domestic and foreign securities and saves, available for investment, 2,000,000 francs a year. This thrift is really wonderful.

Eyes With Double Pupils.

Cicero says that "the glance of all women with the double pupil in the eye is noxious, blighting and withering." Cadmus tells us that such persons would not drown. Still others say that if they did drown the body would never sink, neither would it decay. They could cure the disease of the chest—consumption—by rubbing their perspiration on the affected parts of the individual, and in case the double pupils were red instead of black they could cure the lepers and the blind. So thought the ancients.

Nothing Doing.

It is the soft answer that successfully turns the attention of the persistent borrower who never by any chance turns up on settling day.

The other day a particularly absent-minded borrower asked:

"Will you lend me $5 for a week, old man?"

To which came the natural inquiry, "What is the name of the weak old man?"

Poor Cupid.

"Pa, what's in that little thing the artists always put on Cupid's back? Is that where he carries his arrows?"

"It used to be supposed that he had arrows there, but in these days he usually carries a divorce decree in his quiver."

Envious.

"We've just had a letter from my daughter, the countess," said the proud mother.

"Is that so? How much money does she want this time?" sneered the neighbor, whose daughter married a mere banker.

Ye Modern Miss.

"How old are you?"

"I am 12."

"A girl of 12 should tell her mother everything."

"But my mother is so innocent. Really, I haven't the heart."

FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1911

THE SUN ventures the opinion that there is not a person in this province today who does not rejoice because American coke is one of the commodities on which there is no duty. Picture to yourself the condition of the mining industry in this district if the smelters were entirely dependent on domestic coke. Every blast furnace would be cold, and every shipping mine closed down, with thousands of skilled laborers willing to work out of employment. Reciprocity in coke is good for British Columbia today; a few months hence, when the coke ovens in the Crow's Nest resume operations, there might be labor disturbances in the States which would make it advantageous for the American smelters to use Canadian coke, thus benefiting the people of both countries by the free interahange of one industrial commodity. And if reciprocity in coke is beneficial to the two countries, is it not a logical conclusion to surmise that reciprocity in fruit, farm products, farm implements and all kinds of manufactured goods would prove equally advantageous. A high protective tariff wall between two contiguous friendly nations, speaking the same language and possessing practically the same ideals, is an unnatural and antiquated institutien.

THERE is some talk of a federal election this fall. One thing is certain: If it comes, the reciprocal trade agreement will carry the country by a larger majority than the Grand Trunk Pacific did a few years ago.

THE treatment of newspapers by municipalities in different sections of the country is an interesting study. Some cities pay the papers advertising their resurces; others charge them a license for performing the same service.

NEWSPAPER COMMENT

Whatever Mr. Bordon and his friends may do or say in the west, and whatever impressions they may receive from their visit, the fact remains that they are taking the side of privilege against the interests of the masses; that they are trying to dam a trade stream which carries with it equal privileges and generous prosperity; and that the effect of their campaign, if successful, would be to put this country bad commercially for years, and injure, at least to some extent, the growth of friendship and understanding between the United Kingdom and the United States, which is beneficent politically, and which may lead practically to open markets between the two great countries. It the Conservatives are happy in this sort of quest, we do not envy them.—Montreal Witness.

If women were admitted to seats in the house of sommons, we suppose Burrell and the other members would welcome them with open arms.—Greenwood Ledge.

At last Hon. Richard McBride, premier of British Columbia, has contrived to get in the spotlight. We were wondering whether he and Hon. W. J. Bowser had got lost in the crowd or mashed in the crush, but it is comforting to know that it is not so. It is in connection with the comfort of the accommodation afforded him by the steamship company whose liners he honored with his passage on the journey across the big pond. Here is the paragraph from his letter which calms our excited and wrecked nerves: "I beg to express my very high appreciation of the unfailing kindness and courtesy shown by the White Star line and the captain, officers and staff of the Celtic during our trip across the Atlantic. The ship has been so steady that one could hardly think it was in midocean, and everything possible was done for our comfort." All is well that ends well.—Victoria Times.

A fearless editor is worth more to a country than a regiment of soldiers with the Canadian navy thrown in. —Greenwood Ledge.

"It is alleged by friends of reciprocity in the United States that the farmers who went to Washington to speak against it traveled in Pullman cars, and put up at the most expensive hotels. But that is nothing," says the Toronto Mail and Empire. No, it's nothing when you know that they traveled at the expense of the bankers, insurance men and trust interests.—Victoria Times.

There is now a church in Montreal which owns and operates a convalescent home. The spectacle of a church really doing something may horrify some of the stricter brethren, but we incline to think it is calculated to give the ordinary Canadian a greater interest in that church than he could get from the best sermons or the most exquisite music or even the largest Wednesday evening prayer meetings.—Montreal Herald.

Hsu Ping Cheu, the popular Chinese consul at San Francisco, discussed at a recent dinner his country's customs.

"There is one custom," said a young girl, "that I can't understand —and that is the Chinese custom of committing suicide by eating gold-leaf. I can't understand how gold-leaf can kill."

"The partaker, no doubt," smiled the consul, "succumbs from a consciousness of inward gilt."—Los Angeles Times.

"What did your wife say when you got home the other night?"

"Not a word. She just sat down at the piano and played 'Tell Me the Old, Old Story.'"

"What's your husband so angry about?"

"He's been out of work six weeks."

"I should think that would suit him first-rate."

"That's it! He's just got a job."

6 Year Old Girl Cured of Kidney Trouble

Mrs. Alex Moore, of James St., Oxford, N.S., says: "Booth's Kidney Pills cured our little daughter, Christina, aged six years, of many symptoms of kidney weakness. She complained of a sore back, the kidney secretions were frequent and uncontrollable, especially at uight. Her stomach was weak and her appetite poor. This caused her to have frequent headaches, and the least exertion would tire her. We had tried many remedies, but she did not improve. Finally we learned of Booth's Kidney Pills and procured a box. In a short time she was well and does not now complain about her back, the kidney secretions have become normal, and she plays around the house with no apparent fatigue We always recommend Booth's Kidney Pills."

RESUMES MONDAY

Six Furnaces at Granby Smelter Will be Run by Eastern Coke

In an interview in the Spokesman-Review on Tuesday last, Frank M. Sylvester, assistant general manager of the Granby Consolidated Mining, Smelting & Power company, is quoted as saying that "the Granby mines and smelter will resume work with a full force next Monday. So far as the mines are concerned, the resumption of operations on that date is absolutely certain. The smelter might possibly be twenty-four or forty-eight hours later blowing in, but I hardly think it will be.

"We now have on the road from Pennsylvania two special trains entirely loaded with coke, the first of which is due to arrive on Saturday. Other trainloads will follow at intervals of a day or two. We shall start with six furnaces, and if the test with them proves that the cost of operating with eastern coke is not much greater, owing to its higher grade, than that of running on Crow's Nest coke, we will put the other two furnaces also into operation.

"Our prospecting work on the claims we have under bond near Chesaw has not progressed far enough to enable us to determine whether they are the kind of properties we want. Our engineers are constantly in the field investigating everything which appears to be at all likely to meet our demands. It is the settled policy of the company to go on acquiring properties until it has an ample supply of all of the various sorts of ore which we require to run our smelter at its fullest capacity on the most economical basis.

"The visit of Jay P. Graves, the vice-president and general manager of the Granby company, to New York, where he has been for the past week, already has borne fruit in the issuance of a circular letter announcing a special meeting of the stockholders in New York on June 13, for the purpose of considering the purchase of Hidden creek properties, which are now held under an option, expiring June 15. The circular also states: 'Your directors expect to be prepared to recommend the purchase. The latest information bearing upon the subject will be laid before the meeting, and the advice of stockholders is desired, as intimated in the circular under date of December 30, 1910.'

"The Hidden creek property is a large group of claims situated at Goose Bay, Observatory inlet, in the Portland Canal section of northern British Columbia. It contains tremendous bodies of copper ore, carrying a high excess of iron. Should the property be taken over by the Granby company it is the intention to equip it with a matting plant, which would produce a matte containing anywhere from 25 to 40 per cent of copper and carrying a high excess of iron. This matte would be shipped to the Granby company's smelter at Grand Forks, B.C., where it would be found very useful in fluxing the ores of the Phoenix mines."

MARRIED

One of the first of the June weddings took place at Cascade, at the home of the bride's parents, when Mr. J. A. McVicar, the well known and very popular traveling auditor for the C.P.R., and Miss Alice M. Jordon, late of Jeff Davis & Co.'s, Grand Forks, who was much thought of among her many friends, were united in marriage by Rev. M. D. McKee, of Knox Presbyterian church.

The happy couple were supported by Dr. A. E. Joselin, of Nelson, and Miss M. Armstrong, of Grand Forks, while Miss Jessie Spraggett played the wedding march. After hearty congratulations they and their many friends enjoyed a most appetizing lunch. Amid a shower of flowers and rice, Mr. and Mrs. McVicar left on the C.P.R. for Banff and several points in eastern Canada and the United States. They will reside in Calgary.

You would not put a coarse mass of animal fat, colored by various mineral poisons (such as many crude salves are) into your child's blood by way of the stomach? Then why do so by way of the pores?

Take no risk. Use always the pure herbal essences provided in Zam-Buk. Zam-Buk contains no trace of any animal oil or fat, and no poisonous mineral coloring matter. From start to finish it is purely herbal.

LONDON THEATERS.

The Historic Pit That Is Fenced Off From the Stalls.

In the orchestra of a London theater there are only eight or ten rows of stalls, and immediately behind them is the pit, which is walled off by a barrier or fence that stretches clear across the theater. In the pit there are no individual seats—merely rows of long benches on which the people sit rather closely together.

It is, of course, impossible to reserve seats in advance, and people who are going to the pit have to come early on the evening of the performance in order to secure the best places.

Hence in the case of a popular play a long queue of people may be seen at 7 o'clock stretching from the pit door all along the sidewalk, waiting for the house to open. They keep their places very patiently in line, united by a common mood of pleasurable anticipation.

One manager awhile ago made the experiment of selling reserved seats in the pit at the usual price, but to this the pit people objected strenuously on the ground that they could seldom know in advance just when they would find themselves possessed of that happy combination of money and an evening off which would permit of theater going and preferred to take their chances waiting in line when the fortunate opportunity arrived.

The pit is patronized by people of a very estimable class and is often frequented by well educated men and women who wish to save money and do not care to dress. Whereas a seat in the stalls costs half a guinea (or approximately $2.50), a place in the pit costs only two and six (or approximately 60 cents), and the play can be seen very nearly as well.

In the pit the same program that is sold in the stalls for sixpence is sold for twopence, and the pit has a refreshment bar of its own which is cheaper than the main bar of the theater. Of course the real reason why there is a pit in the London theater is that there has always been a pit. That in itself is sufficient for the British mind, but it must be admitted that the system is on grounds of common sense an exceedingly good one.—Bookman.

HOUSE OF SURPRISES.

The Home of British Diplomacy, No. 10 Downing Street.

Why does the residence of the prime minister of the kingdom resemble the dwelling of a retired grocer of simple tastes? The reply to this is forthcoming. It does not. It only pretends to resemble the dwelling of a retired grocer. No. 10 Downing street begins to reveal itself as a surprise packet when you have rung one of its three bells and persuaded its front door to open. You then discover yourself in an entrance hall whose mats, walls and general shabbiness would be the instant ruin of a Bloomsbury temperance hotel, and you perceive that you have unwittingly done an injustice to the retired grocer. You decide that no grocer, at any rate no English grocer, would tolerate such a kennel.

But when you have penetrated a little farther, and especially when you have mounted the first flight of stairs, you will be ready to remodel your views once again. Within thirty seconds you will have lost your bearings. Within sixty you will admit that you are in a palace full of bewildering corridors and endless sumptuosity, with here and there a glimpse of some immense and stately apartment. No. 10 Downing street begins just exactly where you might have expected it to finish. Its ramifications are innumerable, its geography an enigma even to the most ancient janitor.—From Phillpotts and Arnold's "The Statue."

The Ghost of Clopton.

A grewsome story of Clopton House, Stratford-on-Avon (which Mrs. Gaskell visited as a girl) is told in Mrs. Chadwick's book on the novelist. Charlotte Clopton, who was supposed to have died of the plague, was buried "with fearful haste." She was discovered—when the ancestral vault was opened to receive another victim of the plague—leaning against the wall in her grave clothes; she was, indeed, dead, but in her agonies of despair and hunger she had bitten a piece from her shoulder. "Of course she has walked ever since," as Mrs. Gaskell says.

Cost of Crippen Case.

A police estimate of the cost of the proceedings in the Crippen case is $12,500. The telegraphic output, on the authority of the postoffice, was second only to that of the Monson trial in the Ardlamant case, in Scotland. The cablegrams to the United States papers exceeded those of any previous murder trial.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

Can Be Removed by Toning up the Blood, Thus Strengthening the Nerves

Nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. This is the opinion of the best medical authorities after long observation. Vital changes in the system after long winter months may cause much more than "spring weakness," and the familiar weariness and achings. Official records prove that in April and May neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy and various forms of nerve disturbances are at their worst, especially among those who have not reached middle age.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strengthening while purgatives make you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have a special action on the blood and nerves, for they give strength and have cured not only many forms of nervous disorders, but also other spring troubles, such as headaches, weakness in the limbs, loss of appetite, trembling of the hands, as well as unsightly pimples and skin troubles. They do this because they actually make new, rich, red blood, which means a return to perfect health.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Teacher—"Does your ma brush your hair like that?"

Tommy—"No'm."

Teacher—"Who does, then?"

Tommy—"I fell down on de way to school an de street sweeper ran over me."—Chicago Daily News.

The transition from winter's cold to summer's heat frequently puts a strain upon the system that produces internal complications, always painful and often serious. A common form of disorder is dysentery, to which many are prone in the spring and summer. The very best medicine to use in subduing this painful ailment is Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial. It is a standard remedy, sold everywhere.

ON THE JOURNEY.

Amy's Experience in an Upper Berth and What Followed.

By CICELY ALLEN.

"I am very sorry it cannot be arranged," said the young man, with a deprecatory wave of his hand, "but"—

"All the latest popular novels! Last chance to get your reading matter! No books sold on train after it starts!" The newsboy bawled this in Amy Curtis' ear, and she lost all the young man said except the words "can't climb those beastly steps."

Not that she cared. She was quite able to climb the little ladder to the upper berth. Her lip curled scornfully.

"Oh, it doesn't matter in the least, you know. It was the conductor's idea, I assure you. Only in the south, where I come from, men, as a rule, are more obliging."

She picked up her novel and proceeded to ignore McKean's presence. He looked at her blankly, then flung himself down the sleeper to the smoking compartment. "Well, I do think she's a bit harsh!" He pulled out a paper and tried to forget the scorn in the eyes but recently lifted to meet his.

In the meantime the girl in section 7 stared wrathfully at the letters in her book, which fairly danced before her eyes. "A nice beginning for my trip! I never wanted to go to Colorado Springs anyhow. I had much better remained at Bar Harbor than to let the Carters inveigle me into coming west."

With this final reflection she commenced to read in earnest, but somehow her mind went back to the very disagreeable young man who had disregarded the sleeping car conductor's request that he yield the lower berth to the young woman, whose Pullman ticket had been duplicated by a careless employee in an uptown office. She could not forget the real regret in his eyes nor the nervous, embarrassed way in which he had smoothed his hair while he was offering his halting explanation. She could not reconcile this, however, with the fact that he had declined to climb the little steps in her stead. It was most annoying, she argued, that she could not forget a certain fascination which his long, firm hand had held for her and the hair he had smoothed.

She could imagine that he had spent hours trying to brush out a certain tendency to crisp curls. She was very glad there was something that could defeat him, if it was nothing more than curls, and after deciding thus she was more content.

She did not see him again until she entered the diner at dusk. The only place left for her was a single seat at a table meant for four. The three passengers already seated were men, talking business in rather loud tones. Amy hesitated. A figure at the table opposite rose suddenly. The very disagreeable young man who had sentenced her to the upper berth was standing beside her.

"Take my place," he said eagerly, "and I will go over there with the men." He had been occupying a seat at one of the small tables, and a gray haired woman was sitting opposite him.

Amy saw all this at a glance and with a surprised uplifting of her eyebrows and a mechanical "Thank you" accepted the seat. The young man had not yet been served, and she realized that the change had not embarrassed him in the least.

"Quite willing to do things that do not incommode him," she thought scornfully.

The young man did not presume upon the reception of this courtesy. Directly after dinner he once more retired to the smoking compartment, and Amy early ordered the porter to make up her berth. Once tucked snugly away, she forgot her grievance. The steady clunk-clunk of the wheels was a singular lullaby to which she soon yielded.

It seemed as if she had not been asleep more than three minutes when she awoke to the most horrible noises that she had ever heard. What had happened? Had the train run into a circus or a jungle of wild beasts? No; the train was still moving. Its unremitting clunk-clunk could be heard at intervals between the awful sounds which no wassailed her ears. If it were not wild beasts, then maybe some one around her was dying.

This pretty, carefully reared, ever protected southern girl had never seen any one die, and in her ignorance of this and various other matters she was working herself up into a fine frenzy. A particularly deep and agonized roar was followed by a sound that was a cross between a penny whistle and a sob. She could stand the suspense no longer. She pushed the tiny button and, carefully arranging the curtains, stuck out her head to meet the look of inquiry in the porter's black face. Up and down the car she gave a hasty glance. Apparently no one else realized the tragedy that was going on so close at hand, for no other curtains were swaying, no other heads were thrust out.

"Sumfin you want, miss?"

"Why—why, don't you hear that dreadful noise?" she said. "I think some one in the berth next to me is dying."

In the dim light she could see the darky's teeth gleam ivory white in a grin that reached from ear to ear.

"It's just the gentleman in the lower berth, miss, snoring. I will wake him up. Soon as he rolls over he'll stop."

Amy jerked in her head as if the porter had struck her. She could feel him switch aside the curtains below her. Two masculine voices were wafted toward her, then the sound of a deep grunt that was decidedly masculine—and silence.

Up in her eyrie Amy lay, still flushing hotly with mortification. She knew that porter would tell everybody on the train next morning. She wished she could change cars. Then suddenly from the berth below the hated sound rose again. Evidently there was no respite from this infliction, and, oddly enough, she felt herself pitying the man who was responsible for it. It was really a disease, she decided, and he was so young too!

The next morning she met him face to face in the dining car. Her cheeks were flooded with crimson. She knew by the quizzical light in his eyes that he had heard of her mistake, and undoubtedly every one on the car knew it by this time and would consider it a fine joke.

She ate her breakfast in a resentful humor. She felt reckless and miserable, and it may have been this mood which caused her to sway uncertainly as she crossed from the diner back to the sleeper. She reached out a hand to steady herself against the side of the vestibule. Suddenly it seemed to her as if a sharp, redhot iron had been thrust into her finger tip and run up to her shoulder. She tried to draw away her hand as a child does from a hot stove, but something held it tight, and then she awoke to the truth. The train had been swinging around a curve, and the iron plaits, or folds, of the vestibule, left uncovered by a careless employee, had opened just far enough to admit her finger and then had closed upon it again. She was held as in a vise, and her calls for assistance could not be heard above the roar of the train. And so it happened that the "hateful young man" came upon her, white lipped and fainting. When they had pried the hand loose he carried her unconscious figure into the vacant drawing room. The conductor came hurrying up, greatly perturbed over the accident, which meant a damage suit for the company. He turned to the porter.

"Hustle through the train and find out whether there is a physician on board."

The young man spoke sharply. "I am a physician. Porter, bring me that long, narrow black bag from my berth."

And so it happened when Amy woke up it was to find the hateful young man deftly bandaging her injured hand. The drawing room was placed at her disposal by the anxious conductor, and the entire train force was on its knees before her. The uncovered vestibule meant that some employee's head would fall into the basket.

Toward noon, in spite of the terrific pain in her crushed finger, Amy commenced to feel drowsy, thanks to the mild narcotic which Dr. McKean had administered. He plumped up the pillows for her, and she murmured drowsily, "I didn't sleep very well last night."

McKean bit his lip. "I was afraid you wouldn't. That was the worst part of my having to put Mr. Carter in the berth with you, but I couldn't get him another lower in the car, and he stubbornly refused to buy up a drawing room."

Amy felt suddenly wide awake. "Mr. Carter! Why, didn't you"—

"Lord, no! You didn't think I was raising the roof of my berth, did you? Mr. Carter has been at a sanitarium just east of Harrisburg. He is a patient of my father's, and his people asked me to pick him up and bring him on to Colorado Springs, where I am visiting for a week or so. That's what I was trying to tell you last night."

A sudden light dawned on Amy. "Oh, it's all the fault of that newsboy! I am going to the Carters myself. They're giving a house party."

"Yes, I know," said McKean. "I saw your name on your luggage. But now you're going to sleep, and if you don't mind I shall sit here beside you and see you are not rocked off when we make a fast run."

Amy dropped back weakly among the pillows. "No, I don't mind. I will be only too glad to have—you—stay." Suddenly she raised her heavy eyelids. "But promise me you will never tell—what—I said to the porter last night."

Dr. McKean's eyes twinkled. "I promise on my honor."

THE USEFUL CASSEROLE.

How to Make Cheap Dishes Pleasing to the Palate.

The casserole is a utensil which should be known in the American kitchen.

Awhile ago the casserole was an expensive imported dish. Now it is made in this country and can be bought for a small sum. Any fireproof earthenware dish, large or small, with a cover is a casserole or may serve in the place of one. The food cooked in the casserole is sent to the table in the same dish and has won by the process of cooking a savoriness it could hardly gain in any other way.

To make cheap dishes pleasing to the palate is the object of housekeepers at all times, but especially now, when the cruel rise in prices sends us all searching for ways in which to keep our bills down without letting our families feel they are being pinched in their food supply. In this effort the casserole is of distinct service.

Take, for instance, a casserole of veal. For this you may use the leg pieces or any other cheap lean portions. Cutlet is altogether too good and too expensive. You put the casserole on top of the stove and fry in it an onion in a little dripping and when this is hot lay in the slices of meat and turn them until their surfaces are lightly seared. You arrange the meat and sliced or stewed tomatoes in alternate layers, pour in a cup of weak gravy, cover your casserole and put it in the oven and leave it there for an hour and a half to two hours.

Try the meat from time to time with a fork to see if it is tender. If you choose to add a few sliced mushrooms to the dish you may do it, but it is good without these. At the last turn off the gravy, put it in a saucepan and thicken it with browned flour, add a little kitchen bouquet, pour back over the meat in the casserole, leave this in the oven five minutes and send to the table.

The same plan may be followed with lamb or with liver. Use lamb's liver instead of calf's liver, if you really wish to economize, and fry the onion with two or three slices of bacon, searing the liver in the bacon fat. If you choose you may add balls or dice of potatoes to the dish, parboiling them and putting them into the dish about half an hour before you take it from the oven.

An Up to Date Present.

A dozen new laid eggs may cost a pretty penny the way prices are now, and when fresh eggs are carried to the friend at the hospital or even taken, instead of cheaper fruit or flowers, to an invalid relative at home they are carefully kept, and often each one is marked so that they may not be used for cooking purposes by mistake. A pretty refrigerator stand like the one pictured makes an acceptable gift for the sickroom. Each egg rests separately in a rack, and the ice is packed in a compartment back of the racks. The cupboard closes with a brass lock and key.

Punctuality Promised.

"Has your husband an old suit that he ain't usin', ma'am?" asked the tramp, respectfully removing from his head the shapeless remnant of a hat.

"No!" shortly answered the woman of the house, eyeing him suspiciously. "My husband has only one suit, and it'll last him six months yet."

"All right, ma'am," he rejoined, taking from an inside pocket a soiled scrap of cardboard and making a memorandum on it with the stump of a lead pencil. "I'll be round ag'in six months from to-day. Afternoon, ma'am!"—Stray Stories.

Britain's Autos.

The demand for automobiles in Great Britain is constantly on the increase, and, while the area of Great Britain is comparatively small, the number of motor cars in use is proportionately greater than in any other part of the world.

Sirloin of Beef.

King Charles I., being greatly pleased with a roast loin of beef set before him, declared it "good enough to be knighted." It has ever since been called "sir loin."

IDEAL CITY.

Wonderful Changes Predicted By an Englishman of Note.

"Light and energy will be conveyed by electricity. Gasoline and oxygen will supply heat. Liquid air will keep up refrigeration in every larder. In addition to heat radiators there will be cold radiators, which will enable each house to be kept at the required temperature."

Such is the beginning of some most interesting predictions concerning our future that were recently made by Eugene Hanard at the international town planning conference held in London, Eng. Mr. Hanard's forecast of what the ideal city of the coming years will be like is well worth reading, even though one may be a trifle skeptical concerning some of the great things outlined.

"By this power," he declares, referring to control of temperature in our dwellings, "it will be possible to provide in each house one or more health chambers closed by close fitting double windows and doors in which the overworked occupant on his return from town will find all the hygienic conditions which now he can obtain only by taking an annual holiday.

"Glass verandas of various shapes joined together and with covered footpaths, according to standard models, will shelter pedestrians against rain, and the normal height of buildings will be exactly the width of the street. The roofs of houses will be platforms upon which small flower beds and verdant shrubberies could be laid out, as they would be the landing stages for aeroplanes.

"When this progress shall have been accomplished the physiognomy of towns will be changed. All terraces will have become landing stages for flying automobiles. Aviators will be able to fly from one terrace to another, starting and landing as they please. The natural consequence of this new state of things will be that each building will have to be furnished with big elevators capable to raising machines when they are ready to start and taking them back to the garage on their return. Houses of this description will also be used to house motor cars.

"Finally the town of the future will be traversed by large radiating thoroughfares, occupied partly by raised platforms continually moving, which will insure rapid communication between the different ones. These platforms will be terminated by large revolving crossways at the intersection of the main roads. Large parks and flower gardens as residence and pleasure resorts will be laid out in various parts of the town."

Matrimonial Catechism.

Question—What is marriage?

Answer—Marriage is an institution for the blind.

Q.—Why do some people never marry?

A.—Because they do not believe in divorce.

Q.—When a man thinks seriously of marriage, what happens?

A.—He remains single.

Q.—Should a man marry a girl for her money?

A.—No. But he should not let her be an old maid because she's rich.

Q.—When the minister says, "Do you take this woman for better or for worse?" what does he mean?

A.—The bridegroom's family construe it one way, and the bride's family interpret it another. It is very sad.

Q.—When a man says he can manage his wife, what does he mean?

A.—He means that he can make her do anything she wants to.

Q.—When a child is smart and good, to whose family is it due?

A.—To the mother's.

Q.—When a child is bad and stupid, to whose family is it due?

A.—We refuse to answer.

Q.—Is it possible for a married man to be a fool without knowing it?

A.—Not if his wife is alive.

A Thirst For the West.

That the glamor of the "Wild West" still sways the youthful mind is borne out by a remarkable story told at Bristol one day lately when Thomas Burt, seventeen, who said he was from London, was remanded on a charge of wandering with a boy of fifteen. A police officer said he found the lads wearing spurs, one having his fixed upside down. They said they were horse trainers, and were going for two horses they had bought. Each had an airgun, revolver in case, bowie knife, masks, and a complete outfit of highwayman, and "penny dreadfuls." They said they were going out to the Wild West and had equipped themselves with money stolen in London.

Cost of British Elections.

The recent general elections in Great Britain and Ireland cost $8,750,000. The cost to the candidates was $6,481,910. In addition, there were extraneous expenses footing up close to $2,500,000. Nowadays numerous societies and leagues, such as the Free Trade Union, the Tariff Reform League and societies specially advocating this and that measure, send out battalions of speakers, engage halls and flood the country with leaflets and posters.

The Apple.

The apple is not considered to be a complete food in itself, but on the food list it has a value far above the nutriment it possesses. Apples aid the stomach in the digestion of other foods, and therefore the best results are obtained from eating them after rather than before meals.

SOLDIER OF THE EMPIRE

SIR FREDERICK BENSON IN HARNESS 45 YEARS.

First Soldiering of New Knight Was In the Fenian Raid of 1866 When He Served as a Volunteer—He Was Born at St. Catharines and Entered the Imperial Forces Through Royal Military College.

Major General Sir Frederick William Benson, K.C.B., who recently received knighthood from His Majesty King George, is the third son of the late Hon. James K. Benson of the Canadian Senate. He was born at St. Catharines in 1849, educated at Upper Canada College; served as a volunteer in the 19th Battalion Canadian Militia in repelling the Fenian Raid of 1866 in the Niagara Peninsula; a few years ago made honorary colonel of that regiment. In 1867 he went to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst; won his free commission by competition in the days of purchase and was given the privilege of selecting his regiment. He chose the 21st Hussars (now 21st Lancers), of which he has now been appointed full colonel. In January, 1876, he exchanged to the 12th Royal Lancers, was A.D.C. to Sir George Couper, Bart, K.G.S., lieutenant-governor of the Northwest Provinces of India. In 1878 he passed 7th into the Staff College at the head of the Cavalry Infantry, which he left with his certificate in 1880. Wishing to serve again in India he exchanged to the 7th Lancers and joined that regiment in 1881 at Mhow. He officiated as station staff officer at Mhow in 1882, and was offered an attacheship in the Intelligence Department, Simla, by the then Quarter-Master General Sir Charles McGregor, but he had already accepted the brigade majority of Poona, one of the largest brigades at that time in India. In 1892, at Sir F. Grenfell's request he took over the command of the Egyptian cavalry, and reorganized and increased that force. In 1895 he was appointed D.A.A.G. for instruction at Dublin under Field Marshall Lord Roberts, and in 1896 appointed A.A.G. and promoted colonel. In December, 1899, he was selected by Lord Roberts for special services in South Africa. Since that time his career has been one of increasing prestige at the War Office till his retirement last year.

Was Too Energetic.

Many stories are told of the ready wit and humor of Sir Rufus Isaacs, Attorney-General of Great Britain, who has been the guest at dinner in London of the Maccabaeans, the influential society of Jewish professional men which delights to honor distinguished members of the Jewish race.

Once, as a member of the Junior Bar, he was marching boldly through St. Stephen's Palace yard, when the officer on duty confronted him. "Excuse me, sir, but are you a member?" "Not yet," was the reply, "but I am going to be soon." "I hope you will, sir," said the policeman, "but, meanwhile, would you mind going round the other way?" "That 'meanwhile'," Sir Rufus has since said, in telling the story, "lasted twelve years," and then Reading accepted him as its member.

When about six years old Sir Rufus was sent with a brother a year his senior to a school at Brussels. About a fortnight afterwards the schoolmaster urgently requested their father to come over, and on the parent's arrival explained that his boys were two of the brightest and most intelligent lads imaginable, but that, unfortunately, he could not keep both, their energy being too much for him. Whereupon Rufus was removed to another school on the other side of Brussels, and peace was restored.

Hyomei

The Breatheable Remedy for Catarrh.

The rational way to combat catarrh is the Hyomei way, viz., by breathing. Hyomei is the most powerful yet healing antiseptic known. Breathe it through the inhaler over the inflamed and germ-ridden membrane four or five times a day, and in a few days the germs will disappear.
