A unique capture of a beaver on the Lytton road on Friday morning was related to the Prospector by Arthur Martley. An Indian started from his home at the 30-mile, at 5 a.m., starting down the river, fishing for salmon with a hand net. He quickly caught a couple of fish, when he saw a beaver approaching. The little animal swam towards the net, its meshes arousing its curiosity. Standing perfectly still until the beaver was in the net, the Indian effected the capture. At 7 o'clock he was shoveling gravel for the government at $3 a day.

THE LEDGE

is located at Greenwood, B. C., and can be traced to many parts of the earth. It comes to the front every Thursday morning, and believes that hell would close up if love ruled the world. It believes in justice to everyone; from the man who mucks in the mine to the king who sits on the cushions of the throne. It believes that advertising is the life of trade; and that one of the noblest works of creation is the man who always pays the printer.

The Ledge is $2.00 a year in advance, or $2.50 when not so paid. It is postage free to all parts of Canada, Mexico, Great Britain and the county of Bruce. To the United States it is $2.50 a year, always in advance.

Hot air has made many a man rich.

MANY an old mine has good ore on the dump.

ONE more spot has been rubbed off the sun.

THE greatest loss is the friend who is not dead.

BE without fear and nothing will hurt you.

CANADA needs an energetic Minister of Mines.

THE narrow party spirit in politics is a hindrance to good government.

SINCE the people stopped buying wildcat real estate, the interior of B.C. should soon be flooded with money.

WE strain at a mosquito, and swallow a moose. We throw the shell man over the fence, and open the gate for the real estate peddlers. All of which proves that the majority of the human race has a missing cog in its upper stope.

THIS is the forest fire season and while we are saving the hay crop, we should not forget that the lack of rain might indirectly cause the province to lose millions. So be careful when you roll your blankets and throw that lighted match into the brush.

UPON the 12th day of April the thermometer in Greenwood touched 90 in the shade, but fell to 38 in the night. That is remarkable weather even for Greenwood. During July just passed the thermometer ranged from 36 to 96 which shows that we have the best climate in the world.

A female fly will deposit 150 eggs at a laying. In warm weather these eggs hatch in eight hours. In ten days they are able bodied flies able to lay more eggs. In killing the first, fly, how many later flies do you destroy?

Thinking Themes

Does love spring from the sex-instinct, and is it but a modification of that? There are some who believe this. I do not. As for the reason that I love many persons where the sex-instinct does not enter into my feeling at all; as for instance, my brother, mother, daughter or friend.

This, however, is true, that love has a powerful affinity for the sex-motive, as alcohol has for water. The sex-feeling strongly inspires and intensifies love. And loyal love redeems passion from its degrading tendency and makes it pure and wholesome. But they remain two distant things.

Love is the forthputting of the forces of life. We do not know what life is, but we do know whatever it appears it manifests itself by loving.

Life moves in widening circles; so we see love out from the individual to the family, the state, mankind, God. For love of God is the awakening to life of the highest functioning of the human soul.

It is but natural that life should express itself in its intensest form in the creative instinct. This is at once the most essential and the most dangerous form of love. Without it the race would perish. It is the inspiration of our art, our literature and all the more interesting elements of our career. It also fills our prisons and supplies our never ending tragedy.

Love is life, And life is baffling.

The fame of many a popular author is due to the sheep-nature of men. If the bell-wether jumps the fence all the sheep follow him.

The run of popularity is like a conflagration. When it gets started it sweeps all before it.

When "everybody's reading" a book we must preforce read it too. Who can resist the latest fad, le dernier cri? The mob is our master.

And I am not so sure but that the reputation of so-called great authors rest not a little upon our facility of imitation.

I do not undertake to decry Homer and Virgil, Milton, Racine and Schiller, but I would ask you, gentle reader, to tell me honestly, do you think these writers to be great because you have read them, because you appreciate them and personally love them, or because you do not dare raise your voice against the judgement of the world?

Is it not true that the books universally praised are universally neglected?

On the contrary, whatever a famous man's name is set to is praised indiscriminately. Victor Cousin called sublime certain passages in Pascal, which were discovered to be additions by a copyist. —Dr. Frank Crane.

What's the Use.

What's the use to worry?
You've not got long to stay,
Why not take things easy
As you pass along life's way?
'Twill do no good to worry
If things are going wrong,
You may as well be pleasant,
Meet reverses with a song.

What's the use to criticize,
What's the use to knock,
What's the use to ridicule,
Or at some one throw a rock?
Don't appoint yourself a censor,
No matter what you do,
This great world was never made
For just a chosen few.

There's none of us that's perfect,
There's few of us that stay
And never stray or wander
From the straight and narrow way
So when you start to hammer
Some poor fool who's gone astray
Twill do no harm to pause and think
You may lose your grip some day.

COQUITLAM

The Coquitlam Star says;—That the remarkable growth, development and potentialities of Port Coquitlam are being observed with interest by many people, in all directions outside the city's limits is well known. Further evidence of this is found in an article by Mr. Calvin Goss, editor of the Mission City News. He states;

"The Progress Club of Vancouver is doing good work for the province and the attention of manufacturers is being attracted to the west as never before. Big things are on for Fraser Valley, but the real center of attraction at the present time appears to be Coquitlam. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy says the C.P.R. is going to make it a bigger city than Vancouver. It is an assured fact that some mighty big manufacturing concerns will be located there, and if all that are talked of are eventually located they will certainly make Coquitlam a city of importance. The real estate men who have large holdings are bound to profit immensely. A recent distinguished visitor to Coquitlam from Scotland said that in his opinion the Fraser river would in the not far distant future rival the Clyde in Scotland in the building of ships. If so this industry alone will bring quite a large population to Coquitlam. It is difficult for any man to foretell the future of the Fraser Valley."

Ten Penny Nails

Many persons are puzzled to understand the terms "four penny" "six penny" and ten penny as applied to nails. "Four penny" means four pounds to the thousand nails, and "six penny" means six pounds to the thousand and so on. It is an English term and meant at first "ten pounds" nails, the thousand being understood, but the English clipped it to "ten puns," and from that it degenerated until penny was substituted for pounds.

TAKEN AT HER WORD

A Conspiracy That Was Eminently Successful.

By JOANNA SINGLE.

John Mason did not slam the gate simply because he knew that this manifestation of rage would surely delight Rosalie. She was watching his departure from the window, and he was angrily conscious that she knew he would, as usual, return in a few days, although she had said she hoped she would be rid of him for awhile. She was so young and so beautiful—and so provoking!

At the entrance to the little park, already growing green in the April sun, he met her sister. He did not know Anne very well—he had been too busy with Rosalie. He wished now that he had made friends with her; her blue eyes were so like and still so unlike Rosalie's. Anne stepped in front of him and stopped him unceremoniously.

"Been trampled upon again!" she observed. "John Mason, for so clever a man generally you're sometimes an awful—fool!" She submitted this thoughtfully, in a voice too gentle to be insulting.

"Then you and Rosalie are agreed, and I suppose you are expert testimony. May I turn and walk with you?"

She nodded and then asked a matter of fact question, "How many times has she refused you?"

"I had not thought to keep count. Rosalie just now informed me that this was the last time. I didn't know I had been the same sort of—fool, so often. But don't you think she ought to give me credit for my persistence. Not every man proposes so many times—to the same girl."

Anne laughed dryly as he continued: "I would have given up long ago if I were not unexplainably sure that she does—care for me. In fact, she never has said directly that she does not. She simply says she won't marry me. What's the matter with me? Am I too rich? I can give away the stuff if she likes. Am I too successful? I might lose a case to please her. Should I be as ugly as Satan? Perhaps she would like a beauty and the beast effect! What does she want? I've said and done everything under heaven, and she walks on me—she trails me!"

"Precisely! That's why I called you—what I did. A girl likes to trail a man, but hates the man that will be trailed. Not logical, is it? To use her own words, you are always around, underfoot. You give her no time to want you or miss you or think about you. She's too sure of you. She knows just where you'll be. You never let her want anything bad enough to appreciate it when it comes. She has always had her own way. She needs to be a bit afraid of you. She needs to be bullied."

He frowned. "I am not a brute. That is not my way."

"No? Well, what has your way accomplished?"

He tried to laugh. "Oh, I'll take your advice. I'll do anything you say. It can't be worse than it is now."

"Well, I hate the responsibility. If you get her you'll fight. If you don't you'll both be miserable anyhow. You must get her—and then work out your own salvation. In the first place, you must give her a shock. Write her a note and accept your dismissal. Tell her you begin to see that she is right and that you wish to be friendly with her and the family. Then call sometimes—on the father or on me. Don't stay away. Absences of that sort are flattering. You must be quite unaffected by her presence."

"You know that is impossible. You know how the sight of her"—

"You've got to do it! And you must take another girl out occasionally. Being naturally modest, I dislike to suggest that you send me flowers sometimes and come for a walk with me. That will bring things home to her. A girl hates to have an admirer transfer himself bodily to any one, but especially to her sister."

When they had planned their campaign and he left Anne at the gate she had him laughing. Rosalie saw them and shrugged her shoulders. While removing her hat in the hall Anne remarked to her sister:

"Well, dear, John tells me that you have dismissed him for good. You know I never would have interfered if you had wanted him, but I am glad you do not. Now you may find time for your music. Your talent is too marked to be neglected. It will be a relief for you to have him out of the way awhile. You're too young to leave father and me, and, after all, I think you're right about his not being the right man for you."

Rosalie shrugged her shoulders.

The next day Rosalie, without comment, handed Anne this note:

Dear Miss Carleton—I want to thank you for your frankness of yesterday, and I assure you that I shall not annoy you again as I have in the past. Can you forgive me for having troubled you so much and so long? You are probably right in deciding that I could not make you happy, as I hoped to be able to do. May I hope to continue my present friendly relations with you and the rest of the family? If I may I will not again trespass on your kindness. It will be, as you said, the last time you shall have the pain of refusing. Yours sincerely,

JOHN MASON

"Well, I like a man to know when he's had enough," remarked Anne. Again Rosalie shrugged her shoulders and made a wry little face.

For a week Rosalie was blithe and busy with her music. The second week Anne observed that the gayety was a bit forced and that during the third she moped a little. John had somehow kept the other men of her set away from her, and flowers and drives and theaters were less frequent. She had no time to miss him.

In the fourth week he called—while she was out. Of course she could not know that Anne had phoned him to come. He was leaving just as Rosalie entered and shook hands with her cordially. He did not look broken hearted, and he seemed to be of very good terms with Annie, to whom next morning he sent some violets. Rosalie saw him out walking with Mary Dye. Then he took Anne driving. She began to realize that Anne was very pretty if she was a year or two older than John.

Rosalie's irritation reached its climax one morning at the breakfast table when her younger brother Ted remarked in a teasing drawl:

"John seems to be taking his medicine like a man, Rosy! He's all right, and I am glad Anne seems inclined to keep him in the family. He probably appreciates being treated like a human being after the way you always walked on him. The fellows say he's the best young lawyer in town. But I should think you'd hate to have him take his punishment so cheerfully, Rosy!"

By this time Rosalie had reached the limit of endurance. She sprang up and, before any one could interfere, had boxed Ted's ears soundly and fled to her room. No one made comment on the scene save that Mr. Carleton amusedly met the laughter in Anne's eyes and told Ted that he would have no more of his teasing. Rosalie's capricious treatment of John had long been disapproved of by her family, and, while they were all sorry for her, they thought it time she should come to her senses.

Time had been slow and torturing to John. He wanted to tell Rosalie that he loved her and her only. He wanted to send her flowers, to give her every desire of her heart, and he found it a misery to see her or not to see her. Meantime he was very attentive to Anne, who was becoming vastly bored with his raptures and sorrows and was longing for him to win his Rosalie and let her go back to her old peaceful ways.

At last one night Anne waked and heard Rosalie sobbing to herself. In the morning she pleaded headache and stayed in her room till nearly evening. Anne had a long conference by telephone with John and took pains to have her father and Ted spend the evening elsewhere.

After dinner she went to Rosalie's room and pleaded being tired. She coaxed Rosalie to arrange her pretty hair and don a pretty gown so she could go down if any one should come. While Rosalie was sulkily doing as her sister wished Anne heard the bell and slipped down to answer it. She came back saying it was some one for her father and asked Rosalie if she would mind going to the library and bringing the book she had left on the table.

Rosalie, in her trailing blue dress, went downstairs and through the hall into the library. She had half crossed the room before she saw John sitting in a great chair in the dim firelight. She wanted to flee from him, but somehow her feet would not move, nor did she find a word to say. Then, to her dismay, she knew that a slow tear was falling down her cheek. John came quickly toward her. It seemed very comfortable to be leaning against him. After awhile he held her off and looked at her. She tried to smile.

"Well," he questioned, "how shall it be? You know you said you hoped you would never have to refuse me again. I hope you will not. Just for variety, suppose you—take me."

After the little minutes had cunningly slipped away and it was time that he should leave her Rosalie exclaimed in dismay:

"Oh, Anne's book! She will be waiting for it."

"I hardly think so," John asserted dryly. "Your sister Anne is wise. She knew better than to expect you in a moment when she sent you down to me!"

"Sent me to you!" Rosalie echoed.

"Yes, my lady! Do you imagine your sister has been trailing me about for her pleasure? She is more glad to be rid of me than—ever you were!"

"Then—it—was not—Anne—ever?"

John laughed and bade her good night.

"If you were not perfectly sure that it was 'not—Anne—ever,' you would never, never have asked me!" which both of them knew to be true.

And Anne went to bed and slept the sleep of one who has successfully performed her duty.

Austrian Red Tape and a Funeral.

A funeral party at Roveredo was upset by the Austrian tariff. Two of the chief mourners came from Italy, bringing a wreath to which silk ribbon bearing an inscription was attached. At the Austrian frontier a duty of £5 was demanded on this. Vehement protests elicited the explanation that although flowers pay no duty silk pays a high one, and the amount asked for was assessed on the total weight of the wreath. After a prolonged discussion it was decided to discard the ribbon.

"Then," said the customs officer, "you must go back to Italy. If the ribbon is thrown away here you are still liable for the duty." By the time the mourners had dropped the ribbon on Italian soil their train had gone, and they reached Roveredo three hours too late for the funeral.

THE EARTH'S COLORS

Lowly Mosses and Lichens Contribute Chiefly to Most Striking of the Planet's Color Scene.

The two great elements of difference in the same landscape in winter and summer are, of course, the presence of snow in winter and of leaves and grass in summer. If we could look at our globe from the moon the variation in its aspect due to seasonal changes would perhaps be even more striking than it appears to those on the surface.

In fact, we sometimes lose sight of the very important part which vegetation plays in giving color to what might be termed the countenance of the planet.

It is not the higher forms of plants that always produce the greatest effect in this way. Some of the most striking scenes upon the earth owe their characteristic features to mosses and lichens. The famous "crimson cliffs" of Greenland, which extend for miles northward from Cape York, derive their splendid color from the growth of red lichen that covers their faces. The rocky pass called the Golden Gate in the Yellowstone National Park owes its rich color and its name to the yellow lichen covering its lofty walls.

Considered as a whole, the vegetation of a planet may give it a characteristic aspect as viewed from space. That its broad expanse of forest and prairie land causes the earth to reflect a considerable quantity of green light to its neighbors is indicated by the fact that at the time of the new moon a greenish tint has been detected overspreading that part of the lunar surface which is then illuminated only by light from the earth.

SUSPENDED TROLLEY CARS

Latest Model if Torpedo Shape, Propellor-Driven, and Indications are it will Prove a Success.

While the use of a suspended car is not altogether new, yet the one now being tried out in California is unique in many ways. The chief point of interest is the fact that it is driven by a huge propeller, itself of novel design, which is operated by a 26 horse-power gas engine. The car is no mere toy model, but a fifty-foot structure of steel and aluminium, which has a carrying capacity of 56 passengers. It is built in a torpedo shape, and will be covered with a light, flexible covering, with celluloid windows. In addition to the propeller in the rear, another will be placed in the front of the car, doubling its power, and acting as an auxiliary in case of break-down.

The short length of overhead track, about a quarter of a mile, has made it impossible to test the new device for speed, but it operates perfectly, showing that it is no mere theoretical invention. Forty people have been carried with ease at one time.

A number of ingenious devices, lifting planes to lighten the car while in motion, apparatus for raising and lowering the car at stations, etc., have been designed to perfect this new vehicle.

A Remarkable Chimney

A chimney two miles high with a brook running through is certainly something of a novelty. Such a chimney exists in connection with the copper works at Cwmavon, near Aberavon, in Glamorganshire, Wales. This is how it came to be built:

About sixty years ago the copper smoke from these works was the plague of the neighboring countryside. It settled upon and destroyed the grass for twenty miles round, while the sulphur and arsenic in the fumes affected the hoofs of cattle, causing gangrene. The company tried all sorts of devices to remedy the trouble, but in vain. Finally Mr. Robert Brenton, who was later engineer of the Sind Railway in India, solved the problem.

The copper works are at the foot of a high, steep mountain. Mr. Brenton constructed a flue or chimney running continuously from the base to about one hundred feet above the summit, following the natural slope of the ground. The brick which lined it and of which it was largely constructed was burned close by. A small spring, rushing out near the mountain top, was turned into the chimney, and allowed to flow through almost its entire length to condense the smoke. Once a year it is swept out, and about a ton of precipitated copper obtained. Its top can be seen for between forty and fifty miles.

A World in the Forming

The planet Jupiter, whose volume is 1279 times that of the earth, and superior in dimensions and weight to all the other planets put together, is just now attracting the attention of astronomers. M. Giacobini, of the Paris Observatory, who has made a special study of Jupiter, has described a red spot which possesses a relative fixity, but within the last year its mobility has increased in great proportion, and its longitude by about 30 degrees. It is possible this may be the forming of a new continent, but who can say so with certainty? M. Camille Flammarion, however, expresses himself with confidence in the matter. "We are assisting at the creation of a world. Under our dazzled eyes a new world is being created in the infinity, and in Jupiter we hail the world of the future."

Too Much Small Shot

The Smart Man burst into the room.

"Heard the news about Dickenson getting shot?" he roared, red with excitement.

Club members dropped their papers and sprang suddenly to life.

"No!" they cried. "When?"

"'Bout half-an-hour ago!" gasped the Smart Man. "I was there and saw it!"

"Where did he get shot?" broke in another. "Down at the ironmonger's!" chuckled the Smart Man, slipping into the best chair. "He bought two rounds of it!"

About Float.

Float is not a periodical. It is a book containing 86 illustrations all told, and is filled with sketches and stories of western life. It tells how a gambler cashed in after the flush days of Sandon; how it rained in New Denver long after Noah was dead; how a parson took a drink at Bear Lake in early days; how justice was dealt in Kaslo in '93; how the saloon man outprayed the women in Kalamazoo, and graphically depicts the roamings of a western editor among the tenderfeet in the cent belt. It contains the early history of Nelson and a romance of the Silver King mine. In it are printed three western poems, and dozens of articles too numerous to mention. Send for one before it is too late. The price is 25 cents, postpaid to any part of the world. Address all letters to

LOWERY'S CLAIM

During the 87 months that Lowery's Claim was on earth it did business all over the world. It was the most unique, independent and fearless journal ever produced in Canada. Political and theological enemies pursued it with the venom of a rattlesnake until the government shut it out of the mail and its editor ceasad to publish it partly on account of a lazy liver and partly because it takes a pile of money to run a paper that is outlawed. There are still 20 different editions of this condemned journal in print. Send 10 cents and get one or $2 and get the bunch.

BOUNDARY MINES

The report that operations at the Mountain Lion will be resumed at an early date has been current about the streets of Republic during the past few days. It is said that the McLauren estate is behind the proposed development and operation of the property.

It is known that F. W. Bewley and C. E. Morris, mining engineers connected with San Poil Consolidated company, have been employed by the McLauren representatives to go over the mine and mill of the Mountain Lion with a view to ascertaining the cost of making the mill up-to-date for the treatment of ore by the cyanide process, and to estimate the volume of milling ore already blocked out. Their report was completed and forwarded to Ottawa this week.

Ore at the Mountain Lion is not of a particularly high grade, but that the tonnage of good milling ore that has been blocked out is sufficiently large to justify the remodelling of the mill and the resumption of operations at the mine is said to be the embodiment of the report sent in to the owners.—Republic News-Miner.

B. C. MINING NEWS

This week there arrived in Queen Charlotte Mr. A. Jones and party of four miners, who under the supervision of Mr. Jones, left Tuesday to develop the property of the Tassoo Copper Syndicate on the west coast.

Equipment and supplies weighing about eight tons were taken to the property, of which Mr. R. R. Hedley, a Vancouver operator and mining engineer is the head.

Work will be pushed forward on this promising property as rapidly as possible, and in about a month's time, as soon as plans and surveys have been completed, an aerial tramway will be built and bunkers installed, facilitating ore shipment. Queen Charlotte News.

Jas. Wright, managing director of the G. T. B. C. Coal Co., Vancouver, arrived in town on Saturday night and the first of this week arranged for several pack horses to go out to the company's property at twenty mile and pack five tons of coal to the railway. Mr. Wright stated that the samples which he took down with him a couple of months ago created a great deal of interest and there was a demand made by some big capitalists for a sample of several tons to be tested in the Nanaimo Gas and Coke Co's plant. The coal Mr. Wright is now getting out will be sent to the Nanaimo coke ovens. It is expected that the stuff will be ready for shipment inside of a week. The assays of the last samples were very attractive and the directors of the company are all well satisfied. —Hazelton Herald.

The ledge has been struck in the Anfeas mine near Hope. Writing about it the West-Yale Review says:—

The vein was struck at a distance of 385 feet from the portal and at a depth of 450 feet from the surface.

The character of the ore is the same as that formed on the surface but the percentage of copper has increased with the depth. It will be remembered that the assays of the outcrop showed a gold content varying in value from $23 to $30 to the ton in average samples and a very high percentage of arsenic. It is obvious that the copper values will also be high.

The strike is of the highest importance to Hope. It will mean at once a producing and shipping mine, employing a large force of men, whose homes will be in Hope, and whose supplies will be drawn from Hope. It means also substantial profit to the men who had faith in the property and spent time and money on its development during the last two years.

But it means far more than that. It has only needed the success of one property in the Hope district to convince a public, pardonably skeptical since the Steamboat Mountain fraud, that there is pay ore in the Hope Mountains. There are splendid prospects at 23-Mile on the Skagit River and on the creeks that feed the Coquihalla. In both fields prospectors have been at work for several years and now have showings that will interest any intelligent mining man. They will now find people willing to look and listen.

The programme of the Anfeas Company includes the immediate installation of an aerial tram and beginning of shipments to the Tacoma smelter.

The lower terminal will be near the site of the powder magazine on the Provincial Highway. From there it will be hauled, possibly by motor trucks, to a siding near the mouth of Silver Creek. On his last visit here T. C. Holt, manager of the C.N.R. company assured members of the Anfeas company that as soon as they were ready they would be given every facility required.

As soon as ore shipment is begun the management will have a very interesting problem to solve. The arsenical content is 30 per cent or over, much higher than the ore of the Nickle Plate which in other respects, it closely resembles. The recovery of values in arsenic has hardly been seriously attempted before in the west.

Big Clean-up.

From reliable sources the Prospector has received information that the clean-up of the Coronation stamp mill for the first fourteen days of operation, is valued at $22-000. This result is considered highly satisfactory by those interested in the property, and is regarded as justification of the confidence which has been placed in the group and the expenditure of money upon its development.

During the fourteen days 1680 tons of ore was treated, with 87 per cent recovery of assay values. The mill was running 24 hours a day. The value of returns average $13.10 per ton. All of the rock treated was taken direct from the mine. Upon the dump many hundreds of tons of ore are ready for crushing. A second clean-up is to be taken during the next few days.—Lillooet Prospector.

The White Heather

Jos. Trethewey, the Cobalt millionaire, paid a visit to the White Heather group on Hudson Bay mountain last Saturday getting back to New Hazelton Monday. He was accompanied by Frank Martin, his partner in the bond, and together they examined the White Heather and several other properties very carefully.

To the Omineca Herald he said that he was very much pleased with their property. On the silver property there is not a great deal of work done but the stuff that is exposed is very rich and would not take many carloads to make quite a stake.

The native silver is not the only values on the group. The big gold bearing veins on the Hudson Mountain Mining Co's property run right into the White Heather group better than any other mountain.

Character is better than collateral.
