PHOENIX HOCKEY

At Hockey, last Thursday, Greenwood was defeated in Phoenix by a score of 10 to 3. The Pioneer makes the following remarks:

"The visitors had no combination and their individual work was fruitless, but they did some excellent shooting at long range and only for the alertness of Lang many of them would have tallied; in fact this was the one dangerous feature displayed by the visitors. Greenwood has some new recruits this winter, but the "ringers" did not appear to stack up particularly. The Russels and McDonald of last year's team did more effective work."

When his satanic majesty tempts some people they want him to get behind them—and push.

True to Instructions.

My friend the newspaper man told me a funny little story which happened during the last election in a certain newspaper office in this city.

They were pressed for men and had to take on some of the old printers that went out of office with the arrival of the typesetting machines. One of the editorial writers wrote what he considered a fine effort of rhetoric on McKinley. Every page was sorely crowded, and the fiat had gone forth that nothing should be leaded, not even editorials. In the midst of the editorial effusion occurred the following sentence: "McKinley's name led all the rest."

This piece of copy was turned over to one of the old discharged men. To everybody's astonishment half of the editorial in point was leaded, making a very offending column to the eye.

The old printer was sent for. He declared he had followed copy exactly. Asked to bring the proof, he hurried up stairs and from a bundle of written sheets extracted what he wanted.

In the meantime the editorial writer had discovered that "led all the rest" had been omitted entirely, and he was madder than ever.

"Where is the rest of that sentence?" he growled when the ancient fossil appeared with the copy. "You've chopped this off at 'McKinley's name.'"

"There is the copy," said the aged file. "Right after McKinley's name you wrote 'led all the rest,' and I leaded it, of course."

The editorial writer had nothing more to say after that.—St. Louis Republic.

Puzzling the Royal Society.

The proceedings of the Royal society of London were not taken so seriously 150 years ago as they are now. A sailor who had broken his leg was advised to send to the Royal society an account of the remarkable manner in which he had healed the fracture. He did so. His story was that, having fractured his leg by falling from the top of a mast, he had dressed it with nothing but tar and oakum, which had proved so wonderfully efficacious that in three days he was able to walk just as well as before the accident. This remarkable story naturally caused some excitement among the members of the society. No one had previously suspected tar and oakum of possessing such miraculous healing powers. The society wrote for further particulars and doubted, indeed, whether the leg had been really fractured. The truth of this part of the story, however, was proved beyond the shadow of a doubt. Several letters passed between the Royal society and the humble sailor, who continued to assert most solemnly that his broken leg had been treated with tar and oakum, and with these two applications only. The society might have remained puzzled for an indefinite period had not the honest sailor remarked in a postscript to his last letter:

"I forgot to tell your honors that the leg was a wooden one." — Harper's Round Table.

HOCKEY.

Greenwood v Grand Forks

The first Hockey match in the new rink between the above teams was played on Monday evening, a large company being present. The game was keenly fought and excitement ran very high as each team visited the opposing end. Grand Forks were the first to score but the home men soon equalized. Each team scored again and at the call of time the score was 2 up each. Extra time being played the visitors put on two more and won out by 4 to 2. The return match takes place on Friday evening, when, with another referee, Greenwood should win. It seems strange that a referee cannot keep his eyes on both teams. Excess of zeal often produces roughness in a game, but the way in which player after player on one side was sent to the fence, gave the impression that only one team was guilty, when, as a matter of fact, considering the injuries received by the home players, they had a good deal of roughness to put up with.

Boxing Competition.

Under the auspices of the Hockey club a boxing competition was held in the Auditorium, last Saturday evening, a large company was present. Two preliminaries, McMillan, Greenwood, vs Montana Kid, Phoenix; and Angus McGilivray, Butte, Mon., vs Billy Biner, Phoenix, in which good boxing was shown, especially in the second bout, were disposed of and the event of the evening announced, C. J. Smith, champion bantamweight of Alberta, vs C. McCarthy, ex champion bantam-weight of Canada, quickly got work. Early on in the first round it was seen that McCarthy was the heavier man and possessed also a longer reach and he soon had the measure of his opponent. In the second round the boxing was much more even and was an even break at the end. In the third round McCarsoon had his man in difficulties and finally knocked him out. Wes. Connell was referee.

An Old Crime.

A year or so ago a jeweler named Zimmerman was brutally murdered at Penticton. The object of the crime was robbery. A large amount of jewelry was taken. A suspect was arrested, but a careless official permitted the prisoner to escape. The whole police force of the Boundary country went to work on the case. Over on the other side a crime is never forgotten. The guardians of the law never cease hunting a criminal. Perpetrators of a crime may keep under cover for a time, once in a while escape altogether, but if they stay in the country the chances are against his enjoying protracted liberty. Recently a clue has been discovered to the Zimmerman murderer. Articles of jewelry taken at the time of the murder have been found at Sidley, where they were in the possession of a woman. The police are hot on the trail, and the guilty party may be landed at any time.—Oroville Gazette.

A Long Romance

It Ended Realistically In Wedlock

By RICHARD G. WHITE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

An elderly gentleman sat on the broad piazza of a summer hotel overlooking the ocean. Beneath him the waves were curling in on the beach, casting a line of foam over the smooth sand, and receding with an effervescing sound. There may be people who can sit and watch this incessant rolling in and recession of waves with a stolid indifference. Not so George Warrington, whose spiritual part was made of finer stuff than that of the average man or woman. To him the billows told stories of infinity. More than that, they brought him memories. There was a tinge of sadness in it all, for he was alone in the world, without wife or child.

The waves were recalling to him a picture of his youth. He had seen it from a hotel window. The hour was between daylight and dark. Far out on the horizon a full moon was rising, a belt of cloud across its center. Nearer a black hulk was rising and falling monotonously. Nearer still lay a point of rocks. At low tide it was a little peninsula, at half tide an island embracing a few square yards, at full tide submerged. On its face, looking out upon and absorbed in the beautiful scene, sat a girl. Since she had gone there the sand behind her had been covered by the rising waters, and she was unconscious that her retreat over dry land had been cut off.

Quick thought shot through the brain of the young man looking out of the window. The tide his fancy transfigured to a savage in the wilderness with raised tomahawk stealing on his prey. Again it was a serpent encircling the girl and drawing its coils closer and closer about her. It was really an inanimate ocean unconsciously surrounding a girl unmindful of all save the beautiful scene before her.

In that region the tide runs with great rapidity. Warrenton knew this and, rushing down several flights of stairs, dashed over the sand toward the girl. As he ran he looked to see if a boat were lying anywhere near on the beach. None was in sight. Reaching the strip of water closing in behind the rock, he plunged in and swam across.

The girl's reverie was broken by looking up and seeing a dripping figure beside her.

"Come, quick! You're cut off by the tide."

Turning, she saw the swirling waters behind her. Her face lost its color, for she would be helpless in that quick current. She stood paralyzed.

"Come!" repeated Warrington. But he did not wait for her to move. Seizing her hand, he drew her, supporting her at the same time, to the margin of the torrent. She shrank back. Forcibly dragging her into it, encircling her with one arm, he swam with the other. The distance across the current was not long, but it ran so swiftly that the two were carried along till they found themselves at the end of the little strait, where they were tossed on the waves.

Then came a test of endurance. Warrington was strong and a good swimmer, but by this time the girl was clutching him so as to impede his efforts. At that hour few were on the beach and none within call. Warrington's efforts were having less and less effect, and he was about to give up hope both for himself and his burden when he heard the sound of oars. Making an effort, he got his head as far as possible above the surface and shouted: "Help!"

The sound of oars ceased, then recommenced with a quicker stroke, and in less than a minute the dark body of a boat appeared on the crest of a wave above the drowning couple. Then a hand was extended, and Warrington put out his own hand and grasped the gunwale of the boat. Between the newcomer and Warrington the drowning girl was got into the boat. Then Warrington was helped in by the boatman.

While Mr. Warrington was passing in memory over the scene that had occurred more than thirty years before a woman whose white hair contrasted with her comparatively young face came up and stood with her hands on the piazza rail, looking out upon the shimmer that was beginning to extend itself from the rising moon. She turned and was about to go away when she noticed the man sitting near her. There was something in his appearance, his wrapt attitude, to tell her that he, like herself, possessed the gift of appreciation of the beautiful. She felt impelled to address him.

"Isn't it charming?" she exclaimed, half to him.

"Say, rather, infinitely grand," he replied, rising and uncovering.

"We women are apt to see the beautiful, you men the grand," she continued. "A child once said, 'God is a beautiful painter.' While the statement places the lesser above the greater, it is still a beautifully expressed thought."

"Indeed it is. But the most absorbing effect of this scene to me is not that it is a picture, but a combination of infinite material forms. It is the wonder in it that impresses me."

The lady having assumed the privilege of her sex to first address the man, he assumed the privilege of proceeding further by asking her to be seated.

"This is the first time in years," she said, "that I have been to the seashore. I love it, yet I fear it. It is to me like the serpent that charms the bird to destroy it. Fancy this tranquil scene transformed by a tempest. There is nothing in nature that is to me so miraculous as those waves. See that leviathan out there rolling in. True, his mane is gilded by the moon, but his body is black. There is a terror in his very silence. There, it breaks! How it pounds the beach!

"I dread the water in any form," she went on after a pause. "Even when it is tranquil it is treacherous. One who cannot swim may drown within a few feet of land. A current will glide along like a crawling reptile, carrying one who may be caught in it out into the great, dark, unmerciful ocean. Oh, I hate the water! I don't know why I came here. I will never come again."

"Madam," said Warrington, "you speak as one who has been caught in the toils of the watery element. You have had what swimmers call a scare. One who has suffered from a fright in the water will never get over it. Once conscious of its terrible grip, one can never be induced to trust it again."

"You are right," she said. "The relentlessness of any inanimate force is terrible, but it seems to me that the power of water is the most terrible of all. How can people cross and recross the ocean? It would seem that one ship being sucked down into the maw of the monster would be enough to deter others from trusting themselves upon its treacherous bosom."

Warrington was sure that the lady had experienced some mishap to give her this dread of the water and was curious to know the incident. But he was too well bred to ask a direct question. Moreover, it occurred to him that possibly it might have given her a mental as well as a physical shock from which she had never recovered.

"I have had," she went on, "what you call a scare. It gave me an incurable dread of water, but in itself it gradually passed into comparative unimportance. There was that connected with it which has affected my whole life."

"Indeed!"

The word "indeed" is an extremely well bred expression and means nothing. It doesn't trespass on any one's feelings, asks no questions, invites confidence only if the confider is minded to give it and leaves him or her to proceed or turn the subject at will. It is one of the most useful words in the English dictionary.

"When I was a girl I was sitting one evening on a rock viewing a scene like this, so enraptured that I was unconscious of the tide rising behind me. I was already cut off when a young man not only warned me, but saved me. Only a fortunate circumstance enabled us to get to the shore."

"Not for the world would I dwell on that occurrence. It is of what followed that I am going to speak. In novels when a young man saves a girl from a catastrophe they love and marry. In my case a romance was started that was continuous, leaving me with old age before me without a single companion. I could never forget my rescuer, but my rescuer apparently never considered me in any other light than as one he had rescued. At any rate, he never sought me out, never came near me. I had a number of excellent offers, but my mind had become absorbed with one person, and I would yield to none other. And here I am at nearly fifty years of age, desolate because a man saved me from drowning. I would prefer that he had left me to have been engulfed."

After this burst of confidence the lady suddenly remembered that she was giving it to a stranger. There was a momentary silence, at the end of which Warrington was about to speak, when she forestalled him.

"I dare say," she said, "that you are surprised at my revealing to one I have never met before so sacred an experience. Perhaps you will not believe me when I tell you that till this moment I have kept the secret in my own bosom from every living soul. When I came upon you just now this scene brought back the incident of my youth, and a certain kindliness I saw in your eye invited me for once to open the floodgates and permit the long pent up waters to flow forth."

"Madam," said Warrington, "I am aware of that propensity engrafted in humanity to confide. In this case you could not have confided in a person better calculated to console you. It is said that misery loves company. You and I, having been made miserable by the same incident, should love each other's company for the rest of our lives."

"Indeed!" said the lady, in her turn using that convenient word.

"Thirty years ago I saved a girl from drowning. Unfortunately I was so cursed sensitive that I feared to make any advance whatever lest she should think I was presuming upon my service at having saved her. I did not see her again for some time after we left the water, and when I met her on her face was a scowl."

He paused, and the two regarded each other intently. Suddenly the lady burst forth reproachfully:

"Why shouldn't she have scowled? Hadn't you ignored her?"

And so it was that a lady, not recognizing the man who had condemned her to spinsterhood, told him frankly the story of her life. It was the beginning of the end for both of them. A romance that had endured for thirty years was at last ended in realism—that is to say, marriage.

Singing Statesmen.

Dr. Macnamara, the popular English member for Camberwell and a rising member of the Government, seldom goes down to address his constituents without being asked to oblige with a song; whilst no social gathering in his constituency is considered a complete success unless the "Doctor" is induced to give "Tom Bowling."

The new Governor-General of South Africa, Lord Gladstone, the youngest son of the great Victorian statesman, probably has the finest tenor voice in Government circles; and his wife, who was one of the Somerset Pagets, also sings beautifully. The two are always in request, wherever they go, for duets, and during the voyage to South Africa Lord and Lady Gladstone, on more than occasion, assisted an impromptu concert on the liner in charming fashion.

His Majesty King George, like most sailors, used to be fond of singing rollicking comic songs, and certain it is no concert on shipboard used to be considered complete without Prince George's contribution. The Prince of Wales, too, is distinctly musical, and everybody will remember the occasion on which he sang the famous hunting song, "D'ye Ken John Peel" at a concert at the Royal Naval College at Osborne.

NERVE AGONIES

All Nervous Diseases Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Nerves that are over-worked or weak quickly indicate their distress by pain. That pain may be neuralgia or inflamed nerves, usually affecting the head, but often the spine and limbs. It may be nervous dyspepsia, easily started by worry, excitement or weakness. It may be St. Vitus dance, a common affliction among children, or neurasthenia, a condition of general nervous exhaustion accompanied by acute melancholy. Worst of all the pain may signal the early stages of paralysis or nervous decay. All these disorders signify that the hungry nerves are clamoring for nourishment in the form of good, rich blood. The numerous cures of the above named nervous diseases and weakness in both sexes by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, are accounted for by the fact that these Pills actually make new, rich blood and so supply the starved nerves with the vital elements needed to strengthen them. Mr. Wm. G. Jones, Westmead, Man., says: "A few years ago it was my misfortune to suffer from nervous debility, brought about through a severe attack of la grippe or influenza. When the first effects were felt I used to wake up in the middle of sleep trembling like a leaf, and in a bath of cold perspiration. Later the trouble grew so bad that I scarcely got a wink of sleep, and would toss about in bed, growing so weak that I feared for my life. A doctor was called in, and then another, but without avail. I became more and more low spirited, and without any apparent reason would have fits of crying. While in this condition, a nervous wreck, a pamphlet was given me telling what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had done for others, and I determined to give them a trial. By the time I had finished a few boxes I began to get some sleep, and this greatly encouraged me. Then my strength began to return, my nerves grew steadier and in a few weeks more I was feeling as well as ever I did in my life, and you may be sure I will always gratefully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to every one sick or ailing, as they restored me to health and strength after all other medicines had failed."

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A LAND OF MANY TRIBES.

India's Races Outnumber Those on the American Hemisphere.

Hindustan has more nations than the continent of Europe, and more races than you will find on the hemisphere of the Americas. Every locality has its own tribes and peculiar castes, and here and there are peoples of whom the world knows nothing, writes Frank G. Carpenter.

There is one great class known as jungle people. They live in the woods and are about as savage as the natives of the Congo. They believe in witches and witch doctors and make bloody sacrifices. Wild dances are a part of their worship. These people are generally known as Animists and they number 8,000,000 or 9,000,000. They live in all sorts of ways, feeding largely on wild herbs and fruits, and dwelling in caves or temporary shacks, which they leave when they seek a new location.

In the eastern Himalayas are the Nagas, the descendants of the ancient snake worshippers. They are head hunters and now and then raid the lowlands. In southern India are the Yanadis, who have round huts made of brushwood, and who support themselves on jungle fruits and wild honey. They are as shy as our Negritos and will run at the sight of a white man.

The upper Himalayas are spotted with non-Aryan tribes, whose ancestors were thrust back by our ancestors over 3,000 years ago, but who still exist. There are hill men in Assam who have no method of telling distances, but who measure the length of a journey by the amount of betel leaf they can chew on the way. There are tribes who paint their faces like our Indians, and many who tattoo and deform themselves in various ways. The Nagas stretch the lobes of the ear and pierce it in such a way that it forms a ring of flesh three or four inches in diameter. They also split the ear so that it looks like a great lump of flesh.

These Nagas are Mongols and number in all about 162,000. The largest of their tribes is the Angami, who have lately come under British subjection. The Angami believe they were the first people on earth, and say that they sprang from the dew. They call the earth their only master, and worship it. Their homes are villages surrounded by stockades and guarded by thorn bushes and nettles. They come into them through sunken paths, the entrances being protected by doors. Each tribe has its chief, and the people have a blood brotherhood, like some of the African tribes.

Another of the Naga divisions is known as the Aos. These people were once notorious slave holders, and they sacrificed the slaves which they caught in war. Another is the Semas, who until recently were head hunters and did not scruple to entertain guests and slay them when off guard.

A House In Two Parishes.

The Revising Barrister at Northwich, England, had to deal with the problem of a house which was suitable in two parishes. The barrister remarked that the voter's head would be in one parish and his feet in another. It reminded him of a conundrum which once confronted him at Warrington. A voter was there found to sleep in Lancashire and Cheshire, "and," remarked Mr. Williams, "I presume the head was the best part of him and put him in Cheshire."

Lord Kitchener's Sarcasm

A certain nobleman whose son was serving in the yeomanry and who had a large idea of his own importance, sent ithe wire: "Please allow my son to return at once; urgent family reasons." Kitchener answered it laconically: "Son cannot return; urgent military reasons."

"I don't make a business of writing," smiled the would-be contributor; "it's merely my avocation."

"Are you sure it isn't your aberration?" snapped the unnecessarily cruel editor.

WARRANT FOR CONDUCTOR.

Wanted for Stealing Fares and Selling Tickets.

(From Montreal Gazette.)

Judge Lanctôt, at the request of the crown prosecutor, has issued a bench warrant for the arrest of E. Smith, a former sleeping-car conductor in the employ of the Canadian Pacific railway company, who at one time ran between Montreal and Vancouver, and latterly between Montreal and Toronto.

Early in October information reached the Crown authorities which led up to Smith's arrest for stealing sleeping car fares, and for stealing and selling railway tickets to various persons in Montreal and elsewhere. Smith had a preliminary hearing and was committed for trial to the Court of King's Bench, his case being set for the 10th. When called, he failed to appear, with the result that his bail was forfeited and a bench warrant issued for his arrest.

The case caused a good deal of interest in railway circles, and it is probable that other than railway people will become interested, as the names and addresses of quite a number of people with whom he has been doing business are known, and it is likely that before the matter is finally disposed of several of the hunters for bargains in railway transportation will be dealt with.

"It is really too bad," said a high official of the Canadian Pacific, "that the travelling public should suggest such dishonesty to conductors. If passengers would refrain from making conductors steal from the company by offering them facilities and inducements to do so, it would be better for them in every way. We have the names of a good many men who have done this in Montreal and other places and they include some pretty prominent men. Morally they are as guilty, if not more so, than the conductors whom they train to become thieves, and the practice of trying to get this cheap transportation at the expense of the company and the honesty of the conductors cannot be too sharply repressed.

"In the present instance it has led to the ruin of a young man and the breaking up of his home. While we are sorry for those who suffer by it, the company must stop this business of stealing fares, and prosecution will follow every instance that is discovered."

At breakfast recently, Andrew Carnegie indulged in a piece of pie. A diet reformer present remonstrated.

"Why, Mr. Carnegie," he said, "do you eat pie?"

"Of course," replied the noted philanthropist benignly, "what do you do with it?"

COLOSSAL LONDON.

Some Facts and Figures About the World's Metropolis.

No man living has ever yet seen London as it really is. There are, in fact, twelve Londons, one of which—the county — is controlled by 4,300 popularly elected men and women who sit on 144 public bodies.

The biggest London of all is the police London, covering 692 square miles; the smallest is the City of London, extending to one square mile.

When one speaks of London one must put an adjective in to describe what London is referred to. Here are the Londons with their areas as known to the law:

City of London, one square mile.
County of London, 115 square miles.
Water London, 537 square miles.
Postal London, 220 square miles.
Telephone London, 630 square miles.
Parliamentary London, 117 square miles.
Ecclesiastical London, 120 square miles.
Greater London, 692 square miles.
Police London, 691 square miles.
Police Court London, 114 square miles.
Central Criminal Court, London, 420 square miles.
County Court London, 205 square miles.

The smallest population of one London is 26,000—in the City—and the largest population 6,550,000—in Greater London.

In the County of London 16,000 companies own property of the yearly value of $70,000,000, the rentals of which are about $100,000,000 a year, and yet they have no vote for the election of a single person to represent them for their total payment every year of $25,000,000 in rates. They pay one-third of the total rates raised. Less than half the people who have a vote for the rates they pay ever use them. So far as taxation and representation is concerned a third of the tax-paying property has no share in controlling the expenditure. In Bermondsey and Poplar half the rates paid have no voters behind them.

Every year at least 7,000 Londoners die violent or sudden deaths, 300 are sent to prison for long terms, and 120,000 are brought before the police magistrates on various charges.

Within the 113 square miles of the County of London there are 135,000 people who have come from foreign countries. Russians number 38,000, Germans 27,000, Poles 15,000, French 11,000, Italians 10,000, and Americans 5,000.

On the average there are ten fires a day in London. To keep the metropolis well protected from fire nearly $1,500,000 a year is spent by the County Council.

The water, which is abundant and pure, is poured through millions of pipes daily, by one responsible body, into the homes of seven million people, a population nearly equal to that of Norway and Sweden, about the same as that of the Dominion of Canada, more than two million above that of Australia and New Zealand combined, and larger than the whole population of Scotland and Wales. This population of seven millions uses up 224,000,000 gallons of water a day, drawn from the reservoirs, in which there are always over 11,000,000,000 gallons ready for use.

The wealth of London is astounding and can only be gauged by taking the twenty-eight boroughs of which it is composed and comparing the yearly value of their property with that of provincial towns. Thus Westminster is richer than Glasgow, the one square mile of the city than the whole of Liverpool or Manchester; Kensington is richer than Leeds, and Lambeth than Bristol, Sheffield or Newcastle.

The smallest boroughs of London—Stoke Newington — has more valuable property than some twenty-eight of the best-known towns, including Bath, Exeter, Yarmouth, Londonderry, or even Cork.

There are more people in Islington than there are in Edinburgh, more in Lambeth and Stepney than in Bradford, more in Camberwell than in Hull or Nottingham. Twenty-four of the London boroughs have populations equal to some of the thirty greatest towns of the kingdom, while the remaining four have populations equal to some fifty other towns, the smallest of which is Burton-on-Trent.

A Lucky Escape.

The following incident is not an invention of imaginative journalism, but an actual fact. A gentleman, who resides near Bolton, in England, was proceeding leisurely to church when the ringing of the church bells intimated to him that he was not quite as early as he had thought. Taking out his watch, to look at the time, he heard a noise as of a pistol report, and at the same time felt a jar in his hand and on looking at his watch saw that it had apparently exploded. Recovering his composure, he found on examination that the cause was as follows: Some boys had been throwing stones high in the air, and just at the critical moment of taking out his watch, and holding it face upwards, it had received the impact of a falling stone. Certainly a lucky escape from personal injury, the watch being minus glass, hands and the dail broken, denoting the force of the fall.

It seems that the Pullman company has decided that upper berths shall be lower. DOCTORS FAILED

Suffered Several Years With Kidney Trouble, "Peruna Cured Me."

Mr. John N. Watkins.

Mr. John N. Watkins, 3133 Shenandoah Ave., St. Louis, Mo., writes:

"Among all the greatly advertised medicines for kidney and bladder trouble there is nothing which equals Peruna. I suffered for several years with this trouble, spent hundreds of dollars on doctors and medicine and all to no purpose until I took Peruna.

"One bottle did me more good than all the others put together, as they only poisoned my system. Peruna cured me. I used it for four months before a complete cure was accomplished, but am truly grateful to you. The least I can do in return is to acknowledge the merits of Peruna, which I take pleasure in now doing."

Bladder Trouble.

Mr. C. B. Newhof, 10 Delaware street, Albany, N. Y., writes:

"Since my advanced age I find that I have been frequently troubled with urinary ailments. The bladder seemed irritated, and my physician said that it was catarrh caused by a protracted cold which would be difficult to overcome on account of my advanced years. I took Peruna, hardly daring to believe that I would be helped, but found to my relief that I soon began to mend. The irritation gradually subsided, and the urinary difficulties passed away. I have enjoyed excellent health now for the past seven months. I enjoy my meals, sleep soundly, and am as well as I was twenty years ago. I give all praise to Peruna."

Weak, Sickly Babies Make Home Wretched

No home is happy where there is a sick baby. The sufferings of the little one makes the whole household wretched, for what mother or father would not rather suffer themselves than to see their little one suffer. But there is no reason for wretched homes because baby is ill. Baby's Own Tablets will cure all the minor ills of babyhood and childhood; not only that, but an occasional dose of the Tablets will keep baby well. Thousands of mothers have found happiness through the Tablets making their little ones well and happy. Among them is Mrs. C. C. ODDITIES OF NAMING.

Process by Which Things Receive Their Designations.

Besides port and sherry, other wines indicate the districts or countries from which they are obtained by their names are madeira, champagne, moselle, and the town of Cognac, in France, is inseparably connected with good brandy. It may not be so generally known that the word "grog" was derived from the nickname of Admiral Vernon, who introduced the mixture into the navy, and who was called "Old Grog," from the grogram breeches that he wore.

Another textile derived from the name of a place is calico, from Calicut, in India; and the province of Ulster has given its name to the long overcoat with a cape much in vogue a few years ago; while millinery is generally supposed to be derived from "Milaner," a trader in Milan goods.

Wellington and Blucher boots obtain their names from the two famous generals who took so prominent a part in the Battle of Waterloo, and Hessian and Balmoral boots were named after places. Names of vehicles which originated from names of persons are hansom, after its inventor, Joseph Aloysius Hansom; brougham after Lord Brougham; and Victoria, after her late Majesty, Queen Victoria. The name of Charles Mackintosh is preserved in the waterproof coat invented by him, and of John Loudon Macadam in the word macadamize, the process of mending roads by rolling in broken fragments of granite or other stones, which he invented.

Currant takes its name from Corinth, from the neighborhood of which the small dried grape is exported; cayenne pepper from the province of Cayenne, in French Guiana; peach is the Persian fruit, damson the Damascene or Damascus plum, but the so-called Jerusalem artichoke has no connection with the capital of Palestine, being a corruption of the Italian girasole (sun-flower), a plant which it much resembles in growth.

Kidderminster, Axminster, Turkey and Brussels give their names to special kinds of carpets, and the last-named to Brussels sprouts; Gruyere, Cheddar, Stilton, to special kinds of cheese; Manila and Havana, to well-known brands of cigar; while Cochin-China and Guinea are represented in the names of farmyard fowls, and the latter also in the now obsolete coin at one time minted from Guinea gold.

Personal names given to roses and other flowers and plants, to pears, apples, and other fruits, to names of towns, rivers, mountains, and other geographical features are too numerous to mention. Among names of countries and states the following, however, are worthy of notice: America, after Amerigo Vespucci, who did not discover America; Columbia, after Christopher Columbus, who did; Victoria and Queensland, after her late Majesty Queen Victoria; and amongst the latest creations Rhodesia after the late Cecil Rhodes.

Prints Own Dictionary.

Mr. Edward Dwelly, of Herne Bay, better known by his pen-name of Ewen MacDonald, is now completing the self-imposed task of compiling, printing and publishing a Gaelic dictionary entirely by his own labor. To extend his knowledge of Gaelic he joined various Scottish regiments, and for the last fourteen years he has worked at the production of "Faclair Gaidlig" in monthly parts. Unable to afford to pay for publication in the ordinary way he decided to print the work himself. He taught himself the art, and after compiling a list of a million words giving their meanings and local variations, and drawing a thousand illustrations, he turned to composing, plate-casting, printing, trimming and binding, finally posting the parts to subscribers. Next year he hopes to have the work completed. Mr. MacDonald has been cheered and helped in his efforts by the grant of a civil list pension of $250 early this year. Mr. MacDonald is a Welshman and speaks Welsh fluently as well as Scotch Gaelic. The work will be completed in three volumes.

An Ancient "Frickaise."

A manuscript cookbook of the year 1734 contains this recipe for "a frickaise": "Take ye fowls, cut them in pieces and clean them season with peper & salt a little mace nuttmeg cloves some parsley, a little bit of onion. Let them lay 2 hours then flowr them very well, fry in sweet butter & make ye butter hott before you put them in. Fry a fine brown. Wash ye pan & put them in a gain with a pint of gravy. Lett them swimyer in ye gravy. Take the yolks of 3 eggs with a little grated nuttmeg & a little juce of lemon & 2 spoonfulls of wine. Shake it over the fire till it is as thick as cream, pour over ye frickaise and so serve it to ye table hott."

Doesn't Wear Dressing Gowns.

The kaiser possesses a remarkable collection of foreign uniforms. They fill two large rooms and are kept in immense cupboards. But in the many presses there is not to be found a dressing gown. Shortly after the war of 1870 a manufacturer in the south of Germany sent to the then emperor a costly dressing gown of gold brocade. This dressing gown was returned to the manufacturer with the brief remark, "The Hohenzollerns do not wear dressing gowns," the meaning being that the Hohenzollerns are scarcely out of bed before they are in their uniforms. William II. has kept up the habit, and has never felt the necessity of possessing a dressing gown.

Mediterranean Blue.

The extraordinary blueness of the Mediterranean has two causes. One is that very few large rivers of fresh water run into this sea; the second that the Mediterranean is practically landlocked and, being exposed to a powerful sun, evaporation is great. By actual test the waters of the Mediterranean are heavier and more salt than those of the Atlantic.

IT IS NEWS WORTH GIVING TO THE WORLD

HOW RAVAGES OF KIDNEY DISEASE ARE CHECKED IN QUEBEC.

Mrs. Julien Painchaud, for seven years a sufferer, finds quick relief and complete cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Whitworth, Temiscouata Co., Que., (Special).—With the coming of winter the ravages of Kidney Disease are again felt in this province, and the fact that a sure cure is vouched for in this village is news worth giving to the world. Mrs. Julien Painchaud is the person cured and she states without hesitation that she found her cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"For seven years my heart and Kidneys bothered me," Mrs. Painchaud states, "I was always tired and nervous. I could not sleep. My limbs were heavy and I had a dragging sensation across the loins. My eyes had dark circles under them and were puffed and swollen. I was so ill I could hardly drag myself around to do my housework.

"A neighbor advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I found relief in the first box. Six boxes made me perfectly well."

If you have any two of Mrs. Painchaud's symptoms your Kidneys are diseased. Cure them and guard against serious, if not fatal results by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

It makes the average man unhappy to see his wife working—for anybody but himself.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

Farmer Giles (who has just cashed a check)—I don't think the money's right.

The Cashier—Would you mind counting it again, sir; I think you'll find it correct.

Farmer Giles (having done so)—Yes, but you be careful, young man; it's only just right.—Sketch.

For Skin Sufferers

If you, or someone dear to you, have undergone the itching, burning, sleep-destroying torments of eczema or other cruel skin eruption and have suffered from its embarrassing, unsightly disfigurement; if you have tried all manner of treatment, no matter how harsh, to no avail, and have all but given up hope of cure, you can appreciate what it means to thousands of skin-tortured sufferers, from infancy to age, when the first warm bath with Cuticura Soap and gentle application of Cuticura Ointment brings instant relief, permits rest and sleep, and proves the first step in a speedy and successful treatment.

GRIMSBY'S BUSY HOUR.

It Is Grim But Profitable When the Catch Comes In.

Grimsby's (Eng.) busy hour means a lot.

A dark day, with mists rolling from the grey North Sea. Shrill hoots sounding from outside. A churning of oil water, and up race long, narrow fishing boats, the very latest in this scientific sea-scouring competition, captained by men equally up to date in language of the choicest.

But you've no time to look at darting, jumbled shipping. You're on the fish pontoon, a huge landing. Overhead electric lights, a low roof, a roof to which steel ladders run in darkness.

Along the vast landing sweating, toiling men—men heading fish, cleaning fish, men packing cases, men filling barrels, men fetching ice from that great building opposite. Outside, that long, panting line of steamers. All for fish!

You pause beside one shining heap. Watch a hand, watch a hundred hands, "gutting" with lightning rapidity; watch huge monsters jambed into barrels; watch the struggle for the many weighing machines; leap aside as some roaring giant, heading a shouting string of carriers, hurries past.

Now a train backs in; trolleys tear across the platforms; trucks are labelled for every town in the British Isles. You watch them fighting against time in this cold morning air; and an engine roars and sparks, gives a warning scream, and is gone. That doesn't matter. Here comes another! You are infected with the spirit; find yourself heaving with the best.

Here an auctioneer, surrounded by a mob, who have hardly time to bid; here a policeman taking a man, who's so busy that he hasn't time to discriminate, and has awkwardly got mixed over other people's property. Other boats back up; other huge scaly heaps are sorted. The crowd grows larger. Blue-jerseyed figures work in this rush and scurry like machines.

"Here for Sheffield! Sheff——" That's drowned in a roar of "Brummicham." "Come out! Clear away!" She goes in five minutes. Already the escape's blowing off; already the platform's clearing; already the big boats lie quiet and deserted, and down the broad platform timid housewives are coming, basket in hand, for that bargain in fish.

"Money, mum! Daren't tak' it!" roars one stalwart. "Tak' yer basket 'ome, an' if it ain't enough, come again!"

That means there's a glut on the market! Then that generous giver of other people's property leans back virtuously, lights his clay, and takes his very first rest for five hours. And others are resting; and the swarming crowd round that quarter-mile length of trucks thins. Roars of "Standard clear!" arise. A bell clangs. "Puff! puff!" sounds hollow and heavy in this dark space, and she's going, is gone, taking all England's fish dinners, not to mention fish-shop suppers, with her.

Why They Have Cholera.

In Siam, as in many parts of the east where a waterworks system has not been installed, the population is absolutely dependent upon canal, river and rain water for drinking and bathing purposes. In Bangkok, a city of so many klongs, or canals, that it has been called the Venice of the east, the native population drink the river and canal water, not having the means for storing rainwater, and thus usually without filtering or boiling, with the result that all the year round there is a large mortality from cholera which, immediately before the commencement of the rainy season in April and May, when the river and canal waters become brackish, runs up into thousands daily. Those who can afford it use filters, and some even boil the water after it has been filtered. Several artesian wells have been sunk, but this water, as well as distilled and soda water, is sold and is therefore beyond the reach of the natives.

A Trick With an Egg.

Place two V shaped wineglasses of the same size near the edge of a table. In the right hand one put an egg, just fitting the rim of the glass. Hold the bases of the glasses firmly down, the top rims touching each other. Now, with a quick, sharp breath blow upon the line where the egg and the glass meet. The egg will jump to the other glass. With a little practice this can be done every time. Be careful to blow in a line with the left hand glass, or the egg will jump in the wrong direction and land on the table with disastrous results.

A Traveler's Tale.

The early explorers of the Brazils brought back some strange tales. One of the most curious of those which Mr. Guy Rothery recalls in his book on "The Amazons" is of a race of men "whose feet were turned the wrong way round, so that if any one attempted to follow in their tracks the pursuers were misled, actually receding from those whom they desired to catch up."

The Phrenologist and the Grocer.

Phrenologist—Here is a man out of his proper sphere. His head betokens high intellectual and spiritual qualities, yet he is spending his time behind a grocer's counter. Sir (to the grocer), I wish to ask you a question. Have you any aspirations?

Grocer (calling to clerk)—John, have we any aspirations?

Clerk—All out, sir; have some in the last of the week.

Method In Her Badness.

"Why in the world did you try to evade the payment of duty?"

"I expected all the time to pay it," replied the star.

"But the horrid customs men went through your trunks."

"Of course they did, and found several gowns worth $800 apiece. I couldn't have given the figures to the reporters myself, could I?"

Mr. Penn—They say the streets in Boston are frightfully crooked?

Mr. Hubb—They are. Why, do you know, when I first went there I could hardly find my way around.

"That must be embarrassing?"

"It is. The first week I was there I wanted to get rid of an old cat we had, and my wife got me to take it to the river a mile away."

"And you lost the cat all right?"

"Lost nothing! I never would have found my way home if I hadn't followed the cat!"—Yonkers Statesman.

As some men climb the ladder of success they push others off.

Your Time Is Not Yours

It Belongs to Those Depending on You. For Their Sakes Preserve Health and Strength.

You never thought of it just this way before. While not feeling well you have neglected to take active means of restoring health, thinking all the time that you were the only one to suffer by delay.

Not so. For who among us has not someone depending on him for comfort, happiness or the means of livelihood?

When you lie awake nights, worry over little things, get nervous and irritable, have indigestion and headaches, you may be sure the nervous system is becoming exhausted.

Time is not yours to delay. You must call a halt to the wasting process. Otherwise you will have a rude awakening some day, when prostrations, paralysis or locomotor ataxia lays you low. For such is the natural and inevitable results of neglected nervous diseases.

You can restore the nervous system by using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Being composed of Nature's most potent nerve restoratives, it cannot fail to benefit you. Each dose must of necessity bring you nearer to health, strength and vigor.

Mr. William Branton, Victoria St., Strathroy Ont., writes:—"Before using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food my nervous system seemed all unstrung. I could not sleep, had no appetite, hands and feet were cold, my digestion was poor and I had jerking of the limbs. The first box of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food helped me, and I continued until I had taken twenty-four boxes. This treatment has made a radical change in my condition, building up the system and strengthening the nerves."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

A New Tipping Hat

One of the most curious of all labor saving devices is that for a self-tipping hat, according to Papular Mechanics. The inventor, believing that even a Beau Brummell wastes much valuable energy in the frequent lifting of his hat, describes his invention as "a novel device for automatically effecting polite salutations by the elevation and rotation of the hat on the head of the saluting person, or persons saluted, the action of the hat being produced by mechanism therein and without the use of the hands in any manner." The hat is provided in the crown with a clock gearing which is set into action by a pendulum. When the man bows the pendulum swings, and the spring gearing being released thereby, raises and tips the hat.

Wanted To Know

A young lady who appeared to be in perfect health, but who had a very worried expression upon her blooming face, entered the consulting room of a New York physician the other day. "Doctor," she said, "it is absolutely essential that I go to White Sulphur this summer." "Oh, perhaps not," the physician remarked, reassuringly. "Tell me fully your symptoms. What do you expect to cure at the springs?" "That is just what I came to find out, doctor," she confessed. "You see, I have got to talk with papa. What do you go to White Sulphur to be cured of?"

Brothers-in-Law

In an English town a gentleman and a countryman approached a cage in the travelling zoo from opposite directions. This cage contained a very fierce looking kangaroo. The countryman gazed at the wild animal for a few minutes with mouth and eyes both open, and then, turning to the gentleman, he asked, "What kind of animal is that?"

"Oh," replied the gentleman, "that is a native of Australia."

The countryman covered his eyes with his hands as he exclaimed in horror, "Well, well! my sister married one of them!"—Judge.

He Did Not Need a Wife

Kansas newspapers are getting a lot of pleasure out of this incident, which is said to have actually happened in an eastern Kansas county. A farmer received a note from a young man who had been "going with" his daughter. It read: "Deer Sur: Wood like your dauters hand in marriage. She and me are in luve. I think I needs a wife. Yours trooly."

The farmer replied by letter, saying: "Friend: You don't need a wife. You need a spelling book! Get one and study it a year. Then write me again."—Kansas City Journal.

An officer bet another a large sum of money that he could not empty a quart bottle of champagne at one draught. He asked for half an hour to think the matter over, which was granted. When he returned he took the champagne, drank it off, and claimed the money. He was asked why it took him so long to accept the bet. "Well," he said, "I was not quite sure that I could do it, my dear fellow, so I went home first and tried the experiment."

"So you broke your engagement with Miss Spensive?"

"No. I didn't break it."

"Oh, she broke it?"

"No, she didn't break it."

"But it is broken?"

"Yes, she told me what her clothing cost and I told her what my income was, then our engagement sagged in the middle and gently dissolved."

"It seems to me that our new maid ought at least to know how to serve water, if she was six years with her last employer."

"Well, it's not surprising, dear. I know her last employer."

New Maid—Please, mum, there's a man at the door come to collect on something yez bought on the installment plan.

Mistress—Ask him whether it's the encyclopedia, the phonograph, the brass bed, the piano, or the sewing-machine.—Harper's Bazaar.

A Pill That Proves Its Value.—Those of weak stomach will find strength in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, because they serve to maintain the healthful action of the stomach and the liver, irregularities in which are most distressing. Dyspeptics are well acquainted with them and value them at their proper worth. They have afforded relief when other preparations have failed, and have effected cures in ailments of long standing where other medicines were found unavailing.

THE "RIPPER" RECALLED.

Police Official Gives His View of Famous Murder Mystery.

Jack-the-Ripper and his dreadful doings are still of interest to the psychologist — and the man in the street. Lieut.-Col. Sir Henry Smith, in his reminiscences just published under the title of "From Constable to Commissioner," gives us something fresh about Jack. He draws up the curtain on the revival of a drama 20 years ago, and the old scenes and the old terrors live again.

"There is no man living," says Sir Henry, "who knows as much of these murders as I do; and before going farther I must admit that, though within five minutes of the perpetrator one night, and with a very fair description of him besides, he completely beat me and every other police officer in London; and I have no more idea now where he lived than I had 20 years ago.

"After the second crime I sent word to Sir Charles Warren that I had discovered a man very likely to be the man wanted. He certainly had all the qualifications requisite. He had been a medical student; he had been in a lunatic asylum; he spent all his time with women of loose character, whom he bilged by giving them polished farthings instead of sovereigns —two of those farthings having been discovered in the pocket of the murdered woman. Sir Charles failed to find him. I thought he was likely to be in Rupert street, Haymarket. I sent up two men there, and there he was; but polished farthings and all, he proved an alibi without the shadow of a doubt.

"In August, 1888, when I was desperately keen to lay my hands on the murderer, I made such arrangements as I thought would ensure success. I put early a third of the force into plain clothes, with instructions to do everything which, under ordinary circumstances, a constable would not do. It was subversive of discipline; but I had them well supervised by senior officers. The weather was lovely, and I have little doubt they thoroughly enjoyed themselves sitting on doorsteps, smoking their pipe, hanging about public houses and gossiping with all and sundry.

"Did he live close to the scene of action, or did he, after committing a murder, make his way with lightning speed to some retreat in the suburbs? Did he carry something with him to wipe the blood from his hands, or did he find means of washing them? were questions I asked myself nearly every hour of the day. It seemed impossible that he could be living in the very midst of us; and, seeing the Metropolitan Police had orders to stop every man walking or driving late at night or early in the morning, till he gave a satisfactory account of himself, more still that he could gain any suburban district without being arrested.

"The excitement had toned down a little and I was beginning to think he had either gone abroad or retired from business, when 'Two more women murdered in the East End!' raised excitement again to concert pitch."

As a descriptive reporter, Sir Charles shines in his thrilling "story" of the two quick murders of Elizabeth Stride and Catherine Endowes, and the almost miraculous escape of the murderer from Mitre Square, the severed piece of apron discovered soon afterwards a third of a mile away, and the writing on the wall immediately above it:

"The Jews are the men that won't be blamed for nothing."

Sir Charles Warren immediately ordered these words to be wiped out, alleging as his reason for so doing that he feared a rising against the Jews.

This was, I thought a fatal mistake, as Superintendent MacWilliam plainly told Sir Charles. It is just possible that the words, if photographed, might have afforded an important clue.

"Jack" washed his hands at a sink in Dorset street, six yards away, and though Sir Henry arrived there in time to see the water still bloodstained, and though the police pack bayed the district all night— "I finally got to bed at 6 a.m., after a very harrassing night, completely defeated."

Sir Charles laughs at Sir Robert Anderson's "confessions" in Blackwoods and his reinvestigation of the whole case of Jack. He says, with some sarcasm: "If Sir Robert can spare a few minutes, there are two books, I think, well worthy of his perusal—'Bleak House' and the Bible. In the former book, Mlle. Hortense, to divert suspicion from herself, writes 'Lady Deadlock, murdress'—with what result Inspector Buckett tells us. In the latter Daniel interprets the writing on the wall which brought things to a crisis at Belshazzar's feast."

To Sell Its Estate.

The city of Glasgow is going to sell its Highland sporting estate. It is an island off the Lorne coast of Argyll. Game is varied. The sportsman can collect a mixed bag of grouse, blackcock, wild duck, rock pigeon, woodcock, and hares. The salmon fishings are also an attraction. There is an acreage of 1,118 acres, and the yearly let is $750. Most of the land is not adapted for the plow. Last year the surplus revenue was $475. The City Fathers have fixed the upset price at $20,000, and some capitalist of a misanthropical frame of mind would find the island of Shuna an ideal abode, as it is two miles from the mainland, and off the track of steamers.

"The Baby."

Lord Winterton earned the nickname of "The Baby" when he was returned as M.P. for Horsham just after his twenty-first birthday. But although he was barely of age, he soon attracted considerable attention by his debating powers, his debut as a politician being watched with considerable interest by both parties, on account of the fact that one of his ancestors, Sir Edward Turnover, was at one time Speaker of the Commons. Lord Winterton, who now edits The World, is a fine all-round sportsman and a magnificent shot. He owns, besides his acres in Sussex, a goodly section of St. George's-in-the-East, including 700 houses, which bring in about $75,000 a year.

True After All

A schoolmaster had just finished a lesson on food when a little boy put up his hand. On being asked what he wanted he replied:

"Please sir, Jones said he knew a baby that was brought up on elephant's milk and it gained ten pounds in weight every day."

"Jones ought not to tell you such rubbish," said the master. Then, turning to Jones, he added: "Tell me whose baby was brought up on elephant's milk."

To which Jones hesitatingly replied: "Please sir, it was the elephant's baby."—New York Herald.

LOWERY'S CLAIM

During the 87 months that Lowery's Claim was on earth it did business all over the world. It was the most unique, independent ond fearless journal ever produced in Canada. Political and theological enemies pursued it with the venom of a rattlesnake until the government shut it out of the mails, and its editor ceasad to publish it, partly on account of a lazy liver and partly because it takes a pile of money to run a paper that is outlawed. There are still 25 different editions of this condemned journal in print. Send 10 cents and get one or $2 50 and get the bunch.

IF news print was not so cheap, many of the newspapers at the seaside would not bear such a striking resemblance to posters.

SINCE the first of the month about a million people have fallen off the water wagon. They should have put gum on their pants.

ONE thousand dollars a month is being offered for recruits to fight with the rebels in Mexico. All the pugilists in America will now have a chance to win a meal ticket by rushing against the real goods.

INSTEAD of giving five places the monopoly to sell liquor in this city for $800 a year, the city would make more money by going into the booze business to the exclusion of all others. This experiment is to be tried in Camas, a town in western Washington, that has recently declared for alcoholic humidity.

FOR the third time Nelson has elected Selous for its mayor, and Charley Waterman has saved his bacon. In its civic election Nelson shows that it wants saloons, draw poker, and that the trail-blazers are favorites in that city. James Albert McDonald made a strong run, but the time has not yet come for reformers like Jim to succeed in the city that once had Houston for a boss.

GIVES A BLACK EYE.

Patsy Clark, J. A. Finch, and other men of their class often injure mining camps by bonding large numbers of claims, scratching the surface, and then throwing up the bonds. In the Slocan years ago, Clark bonded the Reco and threw it up. That mine has produced nearly half a million since then. Finch and his partner bonded 24 claims in the Slocan nearly two decades ago, dug into them a few feet, and abandoned the entire lot, with probably the exception of the Enterprise. This method of throwing up everything that does not pay from the grass-roots is injurious to any camp, as others are slow to follow where eminent mining and plunging men have pulled their freight. The San Poil Eagle has the following wise remarks upon the subject:

"The fact that Patsy Clark is butting into the Republic mining camp may indicate sincere business intentions. But it often happens that a business conspiracy is imposed on a valuable industry for purely speculative reasons. Mr. Clark once took options and accepted bonds on properties in the Keller camp. He let his bonds lapse, after a small payment and then deserted the district. While he held the bond options many speculated; many invested and many lost their money The properties here on which Mr. Clark took options are as valuable today as ever, but his manipulations impaired their standing after he surrendered his bonds. The best business method in mining is to first find ore values and put the ore on the market at current market prices, receive the profits and not depend upon what Patsy Clark or some speculative plunger may say. Jay Gould made his millions wrecking railroads, not by building or operating them, and there are many of that same class of men engaged in mining. Mr. Clark's name in this district gave it a great standing for the time; but when he withdrew his interests he did the camp great harm. Our honest advice to investors is to first find a mine, and then work it regardless of any speculative hot air splurge Patsy Clark or anybody else may make. Money and mining go together but until the mine proves itself to be a money maker why speculate on the reputation of Patsy Clark or any other millionaire."

THE DAY WORSHIPERS.

During the past year the Day Worshipers in Canada succeeded in having the lobbies closed on Sundays in the government postoffices of B. C.. The editor of the Cumberland Islander does not like this interference with the liberties of the people and remarks as follows.

"While the Lord's Day Alliance people may take great credit upon themselves for the Sunday closing of post-office lobbies, it is doubtful if the general public will give them credit for anything but a vacuum filled cranium, and with being meddlesome maniacs who have with the co-operation of an equally demented Postal Department succeeded in curtailing the liberties of the people.

If Christianity is on the decline, as is claimed, the bulk of the blame may be placed upon the shoulders of fanatics of the Lord's Day Alliance class, who, by linking the name of the Lord with an unjust cause are proving themselves amongst the Devil's most powerful agents in this world.

Whenever you are inconvenienced by being unable to get to your post-office box on a Sunday remember it is not the Lord, but the Lord's Day Alliance people upon whom you must place the blame.

The lesson that these fanatics seem unable to filter into their empty think-tanks is that the ordinary mortal is much more easily led then driven, and that you cannot legislate a soul into heaven."
