Lost an Eye

Private R. J. McCurdy, of Kercmeos, was visiting his sister Mrs. Joseph Richter this week, on his way back from the war. He went to France with the 48th Highlanders from Victoria. While in a bayonet charge at Festbubert last May he was blinded by a piece of shell. Unable to see, and guided by the shouts of the wounded he started for the first dressing station, a mile and a half to the rear. He stumbled against a soldier who was shot in the leg, and the two formed a partnership. McCurdy helped his comrade to walk, who guided the way to the dressing station. In seven days the sight returned to his left eye, after the right one had been operated upon and the piece of shell taken out. McCurdy has been honorably discharged and will receive a pension for impaired eyesight. His stomach is still suffering from the effects of gas on the battlefield, and he intends to camp out up Ashnola creek until his health is improved. He states that the British remove their wounded at night from the battlefields, as in the daytime the German snipers shoot any of the wounded that show signs of life; also Red Cross men if they venture out to help the wounded. The Canadians wished to pursue the same tactics towards the Germans, but the officers will not permit that kind of warfare. McCurdy lost his best friends at Festbubert and is naturally saddened by the terrible experiences of the past few months.

Kaslo Copper

It is thought by quite a number of old time prospectors and others that Kaslo will some day rank among the big copper camps of British Columbia. The indications on True Blue mountain, to the south of the town, give grounds for this belief. A large iron capping cuts across the mountain and it is said to have all the earmarks of a copper vein. It is thought that this is the lead, or a piece of it from which a quantity of high grade copper ore was glory-holed out on the True Blue claim in 1898, but the main vein appears to be difficult to locate on that side. It is much more clearly defined on the south side of the hill, where the Kane claims are located. The surface rock is all iron, and the opinion is that development upon it will open up a big copper deposit. Another hill close to town showing indications of mineral possibilities, is Kaslo mountain, just across the lake. Upon this hill is located the huge Leviathan lead, which is also iron capped, but carrying gold values near the surface. Near the summit some early day prospecting was done and another big iron lead exposed assay of some of the rock being reported as carrying good values in gold. None of these are poor men's propositions, but they might repay some investigation by capital.—Kaslo Kootenaian.

BOOZE IN VERNON

The camping of the soldiers in Vernon, has been a great boon to the gin mills of that city. The receipts of some of the bars run into hundreds of dollars a day. At certain times of the day the bars are filled with soldiers, thicker than flies around a gob of spilled sugar, all clamoring for booze, and getting their money down on the bar like white chips in a five cent poker game. A Vernon bar in the early evening has got, with the exception of the shooting, the Arizona saloons of the early days skinned to a sloppy finale. Although they are all gunmen none of the boys in khaki have as yet leaded a bar hop, or shot the lights out. Vernon whiskey must be more soporiferous than militant. It is one of the great sights of these days of war to see a Vernon barroom in action. Every two feet, entrenched behind a long breastwork of mahogany stand the noble, resolute and determined bartenders, prepared to do until overcome by the gas. Eagerly the Canadians leap into action every man burning to do his two bits towards putting down the enemy. The compact is terriffic and the spectacle bizarre. Shots are exchanged with great rapidity, and several schooners are sunk every second. Great volleys of silver are fired at the courageous bartenders, but, amid all the dim, shock, and smoke you can hear the death rattle of the Scotch, and the constant falling of the "dead marines" upon the floor. If the brave 54th can fight the Germans, as well as it does John Barleycorn and his allies, we will have Satan's brother, the Kaiser, in hock, before the last flash of Indian summer.

Spite is a form of insanity.

The wise man never wears out his welcome.

Canada needs leaders in the Departments of Trade, Labor and Agriculture.

The frost of the coming winter, will act as a tourniquet upon the European hemorrhage.

It looks to us as though the time was opportune, for Christ to drop into Europe, and size up the situation.

Since the hemorrhage broke out in Europe, the pessimist and his little hammer, have had steady employment.

When all else failes, the Kaiser can still make a living, by lecturing in the United States upon what Gott thinks about the Deitch.

Large quantities of Epsom salts are being shipped from Oroville to the Eastern States. Probably munitions of war to be used against the Germans.

How strange a thing is patriotism! Some men will boldly march up in front of thousands, hand out ten cents for a machine gun, and then go home and beat some creditor out of two cents by not putting a stamp upon a cheque.

For a long time it has been a popular belief in Canada that Wolfe recited Grey's Elegy as he floated down the St Lawerence, on the morning that Quebec was taken some years ago. Doubt has recently been cast upon this belief, but we are positively certain that he did not recite. The Charge of the Light Brigade, The Wreck of the Wood Scow, or Teddy, Get Your Gun.

Canada now has plenty of machine guns, but needs more aeroplanes. Here is another way in which we can all help the soldiers at the front. Let us collect more money, and send a fleet of airships as speedily as possible to France.

Sentiment and Editors

Last week we looked in a neighboring newspaper, expecting to see an account of how a young man had gone wrong. Not a line about the young man could be found. A broken hearted wife or relative had gone to the editor and asked him to say nothing, and the tears had won the promise from him. We have gone through the same thing ourselves many times. An editor is humane; he has his likes and dislikes. he loves and he hates; his strength between love and duty is just like that of an average citizen. We remember one case in particular. We had let a certain case go by because a tearful mother bowed down with grief had come to us and begged the favor. A big-headed man jumped on us about it, and called us a coward for so doing. A short time afterwards the shadow fell across his threshold and he came running and begging us to say nothing. "Yes," we replied, "but don't you remember the time you called me a coward for keeping still?" "I know" he replied, "but I was wrong; it is different now." And we listened to him, but there are things an editor cannot suppress. There are other things he can forget with propriety. As far as we are concerned, we would rather lessen the grief of a parent than throw out a morsel for gossiping people to feed upon. We would rather wipe the tears from the eyes of a mother than have "nerve" enough to join the heartless crowd of flying tongues and sink the iron deeper into her tender soul. So when in this neighboring paper we failed to find what we wanted, we made no comment. But deep down in our own hearts we admired that editor and thought more of him, because he had a heart that was tender and he would rather listen to the jibes of an unfeeling public than to the sobs of a broken-hearted mother, wife and sister.

The above is from a country paper in Oregon and it tells exactly as it is known to every country newspaper man who is known by all his patrons. It is different with the editor of the big city paper who is practically unknown to nine-tenths of his readers. He is seldom appealed to concerning the suppression of news matter that might reflect on a patron. But with the small paper it is different. Its editor is asked almost weekly to "say nothing about" such and such a matter and unless he heeds the appeal, he is hard-hearted and brutal. Even those who never spend a cent with a paper, will expect to be favored every time they "slip a cog." So far as we are concerned, we get beastly tired of this "favoring-by-suppression" business, but we continue to do it—probably for the reason that we still have a heart.—Whitehorse Star.

Mountain Climbing

The first mountain climber to reach an altitude of $25,000 feet was Miss Annie S. Peck, who broke all previous records by attaining the summit of Mount Huascaran, Peru. the highest peak of the western hemisphere, seven years ago. The previous record for mountain climbing was held by W. W. Graham, who reached a height of 23,800 feet in the Himalayas. Miss Peck's first attempt to attain the heights of Huascaran failed on account of the cowardice of her gudies, after a height of 17,500 feet. In 1908 Miss Peck was accompanied by Rudolph Tangwalder and Gabriel Zumtangwald, two famous Swiss guides, who suffered terribly from underestimating the cold and in consequence of failing to provide themselves with sufficient clothing. Tangwalder was terribly frozen, and one of his feet and the fingers of one hand had to be amputated. Miss Peck was better provided with clothing, and escaped unscathed from the rigors of the terrible climb. The altitude attained by Miss Peck is 10,000 feet less than the highest ever reached by aeronauts.

Gives us Cancer

That cancer is caused by eating rice flour and other foods which have been robbed by millers of some of their most valuable elements before they reach our mouths is the belief of Dr. Horace Packard, of Boston University. Such a demoralized diet, he declares, encourages the development of the parasite or fungus growth whose entrance into the system leads to cancer.

It is a momentous fact," he says, that the flour mills and the rice mills of the civilized world are busy eliminating every particle of iron, phosphrous, sodium, potassium, silica, calicum, chlorine, magnesium and sulphur (mineral salts), from our staple food supply and sending out food material rich in heat units, but pitful meagre in energizing and immunizing material.

"In a single flour mill of the Middle West, approximately one million tons of wheat are milled each year. Of this about 550,000 tons go to the human family as refined flour (wheat starch) and 450,000 tons of the by-products bearing the energizing immunizing food salts go mainly to feed domestic animals."

Dead Towns

This is a great and growing country, but there are many dead towns in it. A dead town is one in which the cemetery and the saving bank accounts do all the growing. It can be told readily by the way the citizen tells the stranger what time the next train leaves without waiting to be asked. They know he is going to escape as soon as possible. In a dead town the citizens wear badges to keep the coroner from getting confused. The milk wagon whistles for the crossings, and the children cut dandelion greens in the main street.
