To My Patrons:

I take this opportunity of thanking the people of Moyie for their generous patronage since I have been in business here. I have decided to close my store for the present, and I trust it will only be for a short time. I will be pleased at all times to answer inquiries and supply your wants from Cranbrook. Any account remaining unpaid I would ask that they be remitted to me at once as I am anxious to close the books.

TRAGY'S BODY IS IDENTIFIED

Fellow Convicts View Remains.

BURIED NEAR THE PRISON

The Returning of Tracy's Body It Is Said will Have a Good Effect on Prisoners.

Salem, Oregon, Aug. 13.—The remains of Harry Tracy were received at the penitentiary at noon today just two months after his sensational escape.

The body arrived in charge of Dr. Lantner, Attorney Smith and Constable Straub of Creston, and was by them delivered to Superintendent Lee at the railroad station. The box concontaining the remains was immediately conveyed to the prison by trusties, opened and the remains positively identified by Superintendent Lee, Warden Jones and other prison authorities. A force of trusties, employed about the prison—men who had served in prison with the dead convict—also positively identified the remains as those of Harry Tracy.

Immediately after the identification was complete, the box was moved into the chapel in prison and the convicts allowed to see the remains. At 2 p. m. vitrol was placed on the face to destroy it, in order to prevent any attempt at stealing the body and placing it on exhibition. The box was then transferred to the prison cemetery and buried among other deceased convicts, thus ending one of the most sensational episodes in the history of the prison. The rifle of the dead convict was delivered to Superintendent Lee. The effect of the return of Tracy's body will, it is believed, have a salutary effect on the convicts, and be of great benefit in the matter of improving discipline.

CRANBROOK ITEMS.

Cranbrook Herald:

The families of W. T. Reid and Mr. Hungerford will go into camp at Moyie lake next week.

Mrs. F. E. Simpson left here Thursday for an extended visit with relatives in the States. She will go direct to her old home in Sioux City, Ia., and later to Colorado.

W. W. Doble died at the St. Eugene hospital last Wednesday morning of heart disease. Few men were better known in South East Kootenay than Mr. Doble. He came to Fort Steele five years ago from Cornwall, Ont., and engaged in the hotel business with his brother-in-law G. J. Shier, afterwards selling out and entering the employ of M. McInnes & Co. as head bookkeeper. He was off a year for his health and spent one summer in Alaska, returning to Cranbrook and resumed his position, continuing as district manager after the business was taken over by P. Burns & Co. He leaves a wife, three children, two brothers and three sisters. Arrangements have not been completed for the removal of the remains, but they will probably be forwarded to Toronto for interment.

Johnston Bros. Dissolve Partnership.

This week a dissolution of partnership took place between Johnston Bros., proprietors of the Moyie hotel. Andrew Johnston has disposed of his interest to his brother Frank, who will hereafter conduct the business. Andy will look after some mining claims which he and Frank have in the Lardeau district, after which he may decide to locate in one of the various new towns east of here.

How Louis Collins was Hurt.

Louis Collins, conductor on the branch to the mines, almost lost his life on Wednesday night, about 11 o'clock. As it was both his hands were horribly mangled. He was switching in the yard at the Coal creek mines when he slipped and fell in front of the engine and before he could make a move to save himself it passed over him. Fortunately for him he is a small man and aside from several bruises on his back he escaped being crushed, but both hands were partly on one of the rails, the wheels passing over them. He was immediately taken to the Fernie hospital, where it was found necessary to amputate all the fingers on the right hand and two on the left. The operation was performed by Drs. Corsan and Bonnell. Collins has a wife and family to support and the accident renders him useless for a long time to come.—Fernie Free Press.

Married in Fernie.

A wedding took place in Fernie last Thursday evening at 9 o'clock in which Mr. H. M. Fullerton and Miss Marion Katherine Eaton were united in Marriage by Rev. Father Mellow.

Mr. Fullerton is a commercial traveler representing the wholesale grocery firm of Wilson Bros. of Victoria, and is one of the most popular men on the road.

Miss Eaton is of San Francisco and is one of California's fairest belles. She has been a guest at the Kootenay hotel at this place for several weeks past.

Mr. and Mrs. Fullerton will spend a month or six weeks traveling through the Northwest terrorities, after which they will return to Nelson, where they will make their home.

WILL CLEAR LAMB CREEK

Work was Begun this Week.

BY MOYIE LUMBER CO.

Another Mill will Be Built Soon Not Far Below Moyie on the Moyie River.

The Moyie Lumber Co. commenced the work of clearing Lamb creek this week. A force of ten men are employed, but more will be added within a short time. The clearing of the creek will necessitate considerable labor, but when completed it will afford an easy route in which to bring logs down to the mill. The company has 2,000 acres of splendid timber tributary to this creek. The mill has been doing excellent work this season and will have all the logs on hand cut in a few weeks' time.

Those in position to know say that within a very short time a sawmill will be built on the lower Moyie river in the neighborhood of Yahk or Tochty. Several valuable timber limits have been staked there recently, and it is stated that there is sufficient timber in that locality to warrant the building of a large mill, and parties already have such a project in view.

At a time when the mines are closed down the activity in the lumbering business in this vicinity means much for Moyie.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES.

It is reported that the Nelson News is to soon cease publication.

It is reported that J. J. Hill is recommending the building of a smelter on Kootenay lake.

The townsite of Morrissey is soon to be placed on the market. It will also have a newspaper, which will be published by F. E. Simpson of the Cranbrook Herald.

King Edward has signalized his coronation in a memorable manner by the munificent gift to the nation of the Osborne house, one of the favorite residences of the late Queen Victoria.

The United States congress has appropriated $15,000 for the purchase of additional buffalo for the Yellowstone park. There are now in the park about 20 buffalo. Originally there were 22, but two escaped.

H. W. Barnes of Fernie has resigned his position as constable. He refused to occupy a subordinate position under Mr. Forbes after having served on the force in South East Kootenay for over ten years.

The "Father Pat" memorial fund will be utilized for the acquisition of an ambulance. The ambulance does not entail the outlay of the entire sum at the disposition of the committee, and a balance will be left aggregating $400 or $500.

Buffalo Bill and Senator W. A. Clark, the Montana copper king, are great friends. When they first became acquainted Clark was peddling clocks and Cody was carrying out his contract to furnish Buffalo meat for the laborers, who were building the Kansas Pacific railway. In a year and a half Cody killed over 4,000 of the animals and earned the sobriquet by which he is now known.

New Coal Fields.

D. B. Young is back from a prospecting trip through the Okanogan district, from Vernon, to Penticton, made in the interests of the Ashnola Smelter Co. He was successful in locating several thousand acres of coal lands within easy reach of transportation on Okanogan lake. The principal location was made on Mission creek, about six miles back from the lake, where he staked over five thousand acres of coal lands. The other location was made on Trout creek, two and a half miles from the lake and consisted of twelve hundred and eighty acres. There is an eight foot seam on the Trout creek property, samples from which have been assayed by A. L. McKillop, with very satisfactory results. Mr. McKillop states that the coal is first class for steam and domestic purposes.

The Ashnola Smelter Co. will commence development work on their new properties at an early date. Mr. Young is confident that they will be shipping coal into Nelson by January 1st, 1903.—Nelson News.

THE LADY OF LYNN

By SIR WALTER BESANT.

(Copyright 1900 by Sir Walter Besant.)

CHAPTER XV.

A NEW COMPACT.

WHAT followed, by invention and design of the pious ecclesiastic Mr. Purden, was a villainy even greater than that at first designed, more daring, more cruel. The bride, accompanied by the minister officiating in the late ceremony, walked back to her lodging. She was still exultant in the first glow and triumph of her revenge. He, on the other hand, walked downcast, stealthily glancing at his companion, his big head moving sideways like the head of a bear, his sallow cheeks paler than was customary. The bridegroom, for his part, flung himself into his chair and was carried to the lady's lodging. A strange wedding procession!

She threw off her cloak and her domino and stood before her newly made lord, her eyes bright, her face flushed, her lips quivering. She was filled with revenge half satiated, but revenge can never be wholly satisfied, and with the triumph of victory.

"I have won," she said. "You tried to deceive me again, Ludovic, but I have won. You have been caught in your own toils."

He took the nearest chair, sitting down in silence, but his face was dark. As she looked upon him some of the triumph died out of her eyes; her cheek lost its glow; she began to be frightened. What would he say or do next? As for his reverence, he stood within the door as if ready for instant flight. Indeed there was cause for uncertainty because the man was desperate, and his sword was at his side.

"Silence," he said, "or I may kill you!"

Then there was silence. The other two did not speak. The lady threw herself upon the sofa, twisting her fingers nervously.

"You have married me, you say. You shall be a happy wife. You cannot imagine how happy you will be."

In a contest of tongues the woman has the best of it.

"So long as you, my lord, enjoy the same happiness or even greater I shall not repine. You intended my happiness in another way."

"You have destroyed my last chance. It is a good beginning."

"And ending, my lord. The fond mistress whom you have fooled so long becomes the wife. It is not the duty of a wife to provide for her husband. Nor will the Countess of Fylingdale allow the earl to enter her house. She will want the proceeds of her bank herself. In a word, my lord, you are not only my husband, but you are now privileged to provide for yourself."

He sprang to his feet and fell to common and violent cursing, invoking the immediate and miraculous intervention of that Power which he had all his life insulted and defied. The lady received the torrent without a word. What can one say in reply to a man who only curses? But she was afraid of him; his words were like blows. The headlong rage of the man cowed her; she bent her head and covered her face with her hands.

Then Mr. Purden ventured to interfere. "Let me speak," he said. "The thing is done. It cannot be undone. Would it not be better to make the best of it? Does it help any of us—does it help your lordship—to revile and to threaten?"

The bridegroom turned upon him savagely. "You to speak!" he said. "You are too mealy mouthed and too virtuous even to tear up a page from a register."

"I do not wish to be unfrocked or to be sent to the plantations, my lord. Meantime it would be doing you the worst service in the world if I were to tear out that page."

"Oh, you talk! You always talk!"

"Of old, my lord, I have sometimes talked to some purpose."

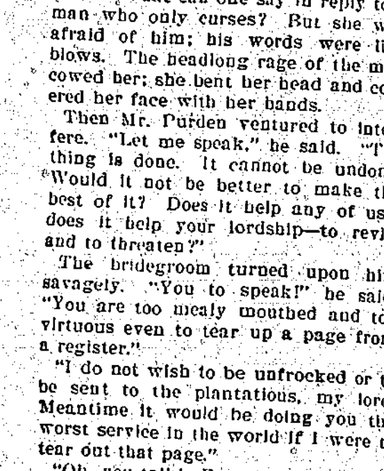
"Talk again then. What do you mean by disservice? You will say next, I suppose, that this play acting was fortunate for me."

"We may sometimes turn disasters into victories. If your lordship will listen."

His patron sat down again, the late storm leaving its trace in a scowling face and twitching lips.

"Why the dickens wasn't Molly there? How did this woman find out? How did she know that Molly was not coming?"

"I can answer these questions," said the lady. "Molly would not come because she learned last night, just in time, certain facts in the private life of the bridegroom."



HIS PATRON SAT DOWN AGAIN.

"What?" Lord Fylingdale betrayed his terror. "She has heard? What has she heard?"

He had not received Molly's letter nor had he opened the captain's.

"More than enough. You have lost your bride and her fortune. I might have warned you, but I preferred to take her place."

"What has she heard?"

"Apparently all that there is to be heard. Not, of course, all that could be told if Mr. Purden and I were to speak. Merely things of public notoriety. That you are a gambler and a rake; that you have ruined many; that you are ruined yourself—quite enough for a girl of her class to learn. In our rank we want much more before we turn our back upon a man. I myself know much more. Yet I have married you."

"She has heard," Lord Fylingdale repeated.

"Dear, dear!" said the parson. "All this is most unfortunate—most unfortunate. Your lordship had already lost your bride—lost her," he repeated. "Lost her and her fortune. Is there no way out?"

"Who brought these reports? Show me the man!"

"Ta-ta-ta! You need not bluster, Ludovic. Reports of this kind are in the air; they cling to your name; they travel with you. What? The notorious Lord Fylingdale? They have come, you see, at last, even to this unfashionable corner of the island. They are here, although we have done so much to declare your virtues. Acknowledge that you have been fortunate so far."

"Are these reports your doing, madam? Is this a part of your infernal jealousy?"

"I do not know who put them about. It is not likely that I should start such reports, especially after the scandal at Bath. I am, in fact, like his reverence here, too much involved myself. Oh, we have beautiful characters—all three of us."

"Who told Molly?"

"I say that I know nothing. She has been warned. That is all I can tell you, and she has been advised to take no further steps until full explanations have been made in answer to these rumors."

"Full explanations," repeated Mr. Purden. "Dear, dear! Most unfortunate—most unfortunate."

"Your lordship can refer to his reverence here, or to the admirable Semple, or to the immaculate Sir Harry, or to the colonel, that man of nice and well known honor, for your character. But who will give them a character? Understand," she said, facing him, "you had lost your bride before you got out of bed this morning. Your only chance is to imitate the example of Tom Rising and to carry her off, and she will then stick a knife between your ribs, as she intended to do to that worthy gentleman. But, no; I forgot. You cannot do that. You are already married."

His reverence again interposed. "With submission, my lord, some explanations will be asked. It will not certainly be convenient to offer any. There is, however, one way, and only one, that I can suggest." He looked at the Lady Anastasia. "It will be perhaps at first distasteful to her ladyship. It has, however, the very great advantage of securing the fortune, which, I take it, is what your lordship chiefly desires. As regards the girl, she is, in point of manners and appearance, so far beneath your lordship's notice that we need not consider her in the matter."

"I care nothing about the girl. But hang me if I understand one single syllable of what you mean—or how you can secure the fortune without the girl."

"A moment. Madam saw her way to the revenge of jealousy. She took the place of the bride, and she was married as Miss Molly. She signed the name of Molly Miller; the license was in that name. The clerk who was present has, I am sure, already carried the news all over the place. We have the evidence, therefore, of the bridegroom, the parson, the clerk, the license and the registers. Who is to prove that the real Molly was at home all the time? Captain Crowle, perhaps, though I doubt. The girl herself— But who will believe her? My lord, you have married Miss Molly and not the Lady Anastasia."

"What then?"

"You have only to claim your bride."

"Sir, you forget that I am the bride," Lady Anastasia interposed quickly.

Mr. Purden bowed and smiled, rubbing his hands softly. "With submission, madam. I do not advise that his lordship should carry her off nor that he should claim her ad mensam et thorum, as we scholars say. His principles would not, I am sure, allow that he should carry off an unmarried woman. Not at all. He will leave her with her friends. Indeed he would prefer to do so. I suggest only that we should proclaim the marriage and lay hands upon the fortune."

"And what am I to be?"

"His lordship's best friend. You will rescue him in his deepest need; you will restore him to affluence. It will be a service, madam, of the purest and most disinterested affection, instead of an ugly and ruinous revenge. Heavens, can you hesitate?"

They both looked at Anastasia, who made no response, her eyes in her lap.

"The trick will lie with us three," the tempter went on. "Neither of us will reveal it."

"As regards jealousy, Anastasia," said Fylingdale, "the girl will be here, and everything will continue just as before."

She threw up her arms and sprang to her feet. "Oh," she cried, "it is the most monstrous villainy!"

"We need not think of the girl. We must think of ourselves."

"The fortune is immense, Anastasia. It is ridiculous that the girl should have so much. We will leave her a competence, and there are the jewels."

Lady Anastasia gasped, and Fylingdale continued:

"You yourself will adorn these jewels. It will be my greatest pleasure to atone for my ill judged deception by giving you all those jewels—the diamonds, the rubies, the chains of pearls and all the rest of the pretty, glittering things." He took her hands, the parson looking on all the time as a physician looks on at a bloodletting or an operation. "What can that girl do with the jewels? They shall all be yours. Forgive me, Anastasia, and let us again work together, as we have already done, you and I, with no more jealousy and no more suspicions."

He kissed her hand. His manner was changed almost suddenly; he became soft, caressing and persuasive. It was the old charm, which the poor lady could never resist. She suffered him to hold her hand; she allowed him to kiss her; her eyes grew humid.

"Oh," she murmured, "I must do everything you ask, Ludovic, if you are only kind!"

"How can I be anything but kind?" he replied, with a smile. "You must forget and forgive. The thought that all I had schemed and planned for was torn from me, and by you—Anastasia, by you—was too much. My mind was upset; I knew not what I said. Forgive me."

"Oh, Ludovic, I forgive!"

"And the jewels shall atone, the lovely jewels. You shall have them all."

"You will truly give me the jewels?"

"Truly, my Anastasia. After all, we are man and wife. Henceforth we shall only live for each other. Your happiness shall be mine. The jewels shall be yours."

She yielded. She fell into his arms. There was a complete, a touching, reconciliation.

Lord Fylingdale was going to declare that it was Molly and none other who was married that morning at 6 o'clock and to assume the rights and powers of a husband. So that the news of his evil reputation came, after all, too late to be of any use. And as for explanations, who would have the right to ask any explanations of a married man on behalf of his wife?

The counsel learned in the law gave his written opinion that, considering that the marriage ceremony was fixed for 6 a. m., the bridegroom had no knowledge of the bride's intention not to present herself; that he left his lodgings a few minutes before 6; that a few minutes after 6 one Pentecrosse, well known to the lady, witnessed the marriage ceremony and believed the bride to be the lady in question, dressed as she was accustomed to dress, although he did not see her face; that the parish clerk also recognized the lady; that the clergyman was ready to swear that the bride was the lady, and that the registers showed her signature, there could be no chance whatever of success in disputing or denying the marriage.

CHAPTER XVI.

A DAY OF FATE.

THIS was the day when all the villainy came to a head and did its worst and met with the first installment of exposure. I have told you what was done at the church and what was our own bewilderment, not knowing what to believe or how to explain things. For my own part, though I might have guessed because I had discovered the jealousy of Lady Anastasia, yet the truth, even the possibility of the truth, never came into my head. I had no manner of doubt in my own mind but it was Molly herself, and none other whom I saw standing as a bride at the altar rail with Lord Fylingdale for a bridegroom. The fact, I say, admitted of no dispute. Yet why should Molly change her mind? And why should she deny the fact?

I sought her at the house. I begged her to come into the garden and to talk with me privately. Then I asked those two questions. Her answer to both of them was most amazing.

"Jack," she said, "I know not what you mean. I have not changed my mind. It is impossible for me to marry a man of whom such things can be said unless he can prove that they are false. How can you think that I have changed my mind? As regards this talk about an early wedding, what do I know about it? At 6 o'clock I was in the kitchen with my mother and Nigra. I have not been out of the house at all."

Then I persisted. I asked her if she could have gone out and had perhaps forgotten.

"Forgotten!" she repeated scornfully. "Do you suppose that a woman could by any possibility forget her own wedding? But what is it, Jack? What is in your mind?"

Then I told her. "Molly," I said, "last night I forgot your letter. There was so much to think and talk about with these disclosures that I forgot. This morning I remembered. Then I hurried ashore. I ran to the Crown. It was just upon 6. I was too late. His lordship had gone out in a chair. I ran to the church. It was just after 6. The doors were open. I heard voices. I went in, Molly. Do not say that I am dreaming. I saw you—you, I say—you yourself, with your pink silk cloak, the hood pulled over your head, a domino to hide your face, just as had been arranged."

"You saw me, Jack? You saw me? How could you see me?"

"And your hand was in Lord Fylingdale's, and Mr. Purden was pronouncing the words which made you his wife, 'Whom God hath joined together let not man put asunder.'"

She stared at me with blank amazement.

"In my pink silk cloak? Jack, are you in your right mind, or is it I myself who am gone distraught?"

"Indeed I know not which."

"Did you speak to me? Did you congratulate the bride, Jack?"

"No; I was sick and sorry, Molly. I went out of the church. I had seen enough. The clerk, however, has been telling the story of this private marriage all over the town. Everybody knows it. The marriage is duly entered in the registers. It was a marriage by the archbishop's license. The man Purden may be all that the vicar's letter exposed, but the marriage was in order."

Molly said nothing for awhile; then she said gently: "The letter from the bookseller, your cousin, spoke of Lord Fylingdale as ruined. If he were to marry a woman with money, it would be his"—

"I believe that there are sometimes letters—bills of lading or whatever they are called—which give the wife the control of her own property; otherwise everything becomes her husband's."

"Why did he wish to marry me? There was never a gleam of love in his eye nor a note of love in his voice. Why, except that he might get my money?"

"That is, I am convinced, the reason."

"Villainy, villainy, villainy! Jack, this is a conspiracy. Some woman has been made to play my part. Then he will claim me as his wife and lay hands upon all that I have."

"No, Molly; he shall not while you have friends."

"Friends cannot help where the law orders otherwise. So much I know, Jack. Yet you can do one thing for me. You can protect me from the man. He must not take me away."

"All Lynn will fight for you."

"Jack, I want more. I want all Lynn to believe me. You have known me all my life. Am I capable of such a change of mind? Am I capable of so monstrous a falsehood as to steal out to marry the man and then to declare that I have never left the house? Oh, the villain, the villain!" Her cheek was aflame; her eyes flashed.

I seized her hand. "Molly," I cried, "they shall all believe you. I will tell the truth everywhere."

Just then the garden door was thrown open, and Sam Semple appeared. With a smiling face and a bending knee he advanced, bowing low.

"Permit me to offer congratulations to the Countess of Fylingdale."

"I am not a countess. I am plain Molly Miller."

Sam looked disconcerted and puzzled. I perceived that, plot or no plot, he had no hand in it.

"I am come," he said, "from his lordship"—

"I have nothing to do with his lordship."

"Surely, madam; surely, my lady, there is some misunderstanding. I am sent by his lordship with his compliments to ask when it will be convenient for the countess to receive him."

"You have been informed, I suppose, that I was married to him this morning."

"Certainly, my lady."

"Then go back to Lord Fylingdale and tell him that he is a villain and a liar, that I have learned his true character, that I am not married to him and that if he ventures to molest me my friends will protect me. Give him that message, sir, word for word."

"I believe, Sam," I said, for his discomfiture and bewilderment made him reel and stagger, "that you have no hand in this new villainy. It was you, however, who brought that man to Lynn, knowing his true character and his antecedents. Let us never see your face here again. Go. If I thought you were in the plot, I would serve you again as the captain served you three years ago."

He went away without another word. Then the captain came home, his face troubled.

"I know not," he said, "what has happened in this place. I have seen Lord Fylingdale. I told him of the charges and accusations."

"Well, did he deny them?"

"He denied nothing, and he admitted nothing. He says that you married him this morning, Molly."

"I know. He has sent Sam Semple here with the same story. Captain, you believe me, do you not?"

"Believe you, Molly? Why, if I did not believe you, I should believe nothing. Believe you? My dear, I would as soon doubt the prayer book." He laid his hand upon her arm, and the tears came into his eyes. "My dear, I have been an old fool. But I did it for the best. He says that you are his wife. Let him come and take you—if he can!"

"It is not Molly that he would take; it is Molly's fortune."

"Why, sir," she said, "if he takes the whole and wastes and dissipates it, so long as he does not take me, what does it matter?"

Then the vicar came again, and the whole of the business had to be discussed again. At first he adhered to his theory of unconscious action, because a scholar always likes to explain every theory by examples chosen from Latin and Greek authors. He had looked up several more stories of the kind from I know not what folio volumes in his library and came prepared to defend his opinion. But the absolute certainty of Molly's assertion, the evidence of her mother, who declared that Molly had been working with her since half past 5, the firm belief of the captain and my own change of opinion and the possibility of deception shook him.

Thick Gravy.

For a thick gravy fry a minced onion in butter to a dark brown color, stir into it one ounce flour, stir well, then add half pint of stock, pepper and salt to taste and a little catchup. Stir while all boil for a few minutes, then strain and serve.

COOKING HINTS.

Don't add lard, molasses or sugar to bread if you wish to keep well and be wholesome.

Potatoes baked thoroughly, but not allowed to turn dark, are the best to be used for creamed potatoes.

If salad dressing curdles when being mixed, add a little cold water, stir quickly, and it will become quite smooth.

If tea be ground like coffee or crushed immediately before boiling water is poured upon it, it will yield nearly double the amount of its exhilarating qualities.

If a sliced onion and carrot are cooked with veal, it will be found that the flavor of the rather tasteless meat is much improved. Veal cutlets rely for their flavor on the tomato sauce that is usually served with them.

A delightful flavor is sometimes given to steak by placing it overnight in a bath of oil and vinegar. In the morning it is wiped before the broiling, but enough of the mixture has been absorbed to give it a decided flavor.

If in making split pea soup a teacupful of whipped cream is put in the tureen just as the soup is poured over, the improvement in flavor of the soup will be noticeable. This puree has sometimes a flat, even watery taste that is not at all agreeable, which the whipped cream entirely removes.

A Scotch Antigolf Law.

Scotland, as everybody knows, is the land where golf originated and the land where it most flourishes. But if the law were strictly enforced north of the Tweed it would go hard with the players of the royal game in "Bonnie Scotland." Golf players there may not know it, but they are liable to a sentence of death for their indulgence in their favorite sport. Technically this is literally a fact. In ancient times, when Scotland always had work for her soldiers to do, all young men were required to perfect themselves in archery. They preferred to play golf, and so serious a rival did the game become that it was for a time suppressed and made a capital offense. That curious law never has been repealed and may still be found on the statute book. There seems to be no record, however, of the law ever having been enforced.

Browning's Cure For Health.

Browning never passed a day without taking one or more long walks. Indeed his panacea for most ills was exercise, and the exercise he chiefly advocated was walking. He wrote:

"I get as nearly angry as it is in me to become with people I love when they trifle with their health—that is, with their life—like children playing with jewels over a bridge side. Jewels which once in the water how can we, the poor lookers on, hope to recover? You don't know how absolutely well I am after my walking, not on the mountains merely, but on the beloved Lido. Go there, if only to stand and be blown about by the sea wind."

A Queer Japanese Marriage Custom.

Wild geese are considered the best examples of conjugal felicity in the animal world. Thus the Japanese groom sends the bride a pair of these birds, and she in turn presents them to her parents. To further emphasize the matter the groom brings another pair to the wedding, and they roost in the room during the ceremony. Their conduct is watched with care, for they must not struggle to escape during the proceedings. Fortunate is the bridegroom who cannot secure the geese alive and must be content to substitute toy imitations of the birds, for then he has no anxiety lest the wild propensity assert itself during the marriage rites and thus prove an ill omen to the household.—Woman's Home Companion.

How to Live on Love.

The girl was having a private conference with her father on the subject of marriage.

"The young man hasn't enough to support you on," urged the father.

"But you will give us something," she said.

"Not a great deal, my dear."

"Then we shall live on love."

"Ugh," sniffed the father.

"Don't you think we can?" asked the girl with the beautiful confidence of youth.

"Yes, if you both stay single." And the father declined to discuss the matter further.

Finding For the Lawyer.

Sometimes the jury returns a verdict for the lawyer, of which the following is a good instance: Mr. John Jones, a barrister of great influence and ability, was a leading counselor practicing in the Welsh circuit. Upon one occasion after a felicitous speech on behalf of his client in a criminal case the jury as soon as the judge had summed up, without waiting for the officer to take their verdict, called out, "My lord, we are all for John Jones, with costs!"

At Home.

"Can you talk on your feet?" said the young man who was thinking ruefully of the time he tried to make an after dinner speech.

"I can," was the answer, accompanied by the baleful smile of a person who is about to make a deliberate joke. "I used to lecture on chiropody."

Piqued.

"What's the matter with grandfather?"

"He's insulted. You see, he's nearly ninety, and he happened to hear you remark that the good die young."

HOT WEATHER AILMENTS.

Careful Mothers Should Keep at Hand the Means to Check Ailments That Otherwise May Prove Fatal.

When the weather is hot the sands of the little life are apt to glide away before you know it. You can't watch the little one too carefully at this period. Dysentry, diarrhoea, cholera infantum and disorders of the stomach are alarmingly frequent during the hot moist weather of the summer months. At the first sign of any of these, or any of the other ailments that afflict little ones, give Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets will speedily relieve and promptly cure all hot weather ailments. Keep them in the house—their prompt use may save a precious little life. Mrs. Herbert Burnham, Smith's Falls, Ont., says: "When my eldest child was six weeks old he had an attack of cholera infantum and was at death's door. My doctor advised me to use Baby's Own Tablets, and in twenty-four hours baby was better, the vomiting and purging ceased and he regained strength rapidly. I have used the Tablets for other ailments since, and always with the happiest results. I can sincerely recommend them to mothers as a medicine that should always be kept in the house."

Little ones thrive, are good natured and grow plump and rosy in homes where Baby's Own Tablets are used. Children take them as readily as candy and crushed to a powder they can be given to the youngest infant with the best of results. Sold at drug stores or you can get them post paid at 25 cents a box by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y.

Never put off till to-morrow what you can get someone else to do today.

"And was my present a surprise to your sister, Johnny?" "You bet! She said she never suspected you'd give her anything so cheap."

Fever and Ague and Bilious Derangements are positively cured by the use of Parmelee's Pills. They not only cleanse the stomach and bowels from all bilious matter, but they open the excretory vessels, causing them to pour copious effusions from the blood into the bowels, after which the corrupted mass is thrown out by the natural passage of the body. They are used as a general family medicine with the best results.

Faith.

A mother in one of the suburbs of New York, wishing to prepare the minds of her two children for a coming event of great importance, told them that if they would like to have a little brother or sister she thought if they prayed earnestly every night and morning God would send them one.

In due time the desired baby arrived, to the children's great delight and evidently to the strengthening of their faith, for the next day the father came into his wife's room, saying:

"Look here, Lizzie, this thing has got to stop. I just went into the parlor and found both those children on their knees praying hard as they could for goats!"

William Wirt's Reformation.

William Wirt, the great lawyer, attorney general of the United States and prosecutor of Aaron Burr when he was tried for treason, was stupefied and made sensuous by liquor. At times he lost all self control and self respect. On one occasion while drunk he fell in the streets of Richmond. While lying there asleep Miss G., the most beautiful woman in the city, to whom he was betrothed, came along, saw him and placed her handkerchief, on which was her name, over his face. He wakened, saw the name, learned the incident, and it reformed him.

MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

WHEAT—During the past week the speculative wheat markets in the States have developed considerable weakness and displayed a good deal of nervousness. Prices have resorded a gradual decline every day without any sign of reaction until yesterday when closing prices were ¼c better than the day before. The decline on the week is 1¾c to 2c per bushel.

There is little to be said about the crops at present. Winter wheat harvest is over in the States and Europe as far north as the north of France. It begins in the south of England this week and the spring wheat harvest in the southern part of South Dakota and Southern Minnesota is beginning this week. In Argentina the weather has been favorable for the new crop which has got a good start. In Australia some rains had fallen in the wheat districts, but not sufficient to make the situation for the new crop favorable, and at present Australia is not counted as an exporter for next year. India has been a good shipper to Europe recently, but the prospect for the coming season's crop is not flattering.

There is very little doing in Manitoba wheat and the business for the season 1901-2 is getting pretty well wound up. Prices are firm and held above export value, but this is owing to the moderate quantity of wheat available to work on. The stock at Fort William is wearing down and shipment from the country points is on a gradually decreasing scale. At the close of last week values were: 1 hard, 76½c; 1 northern, 74½c, 2 northern, 72½c, in store Fort William or Port Arthur, spot or delivery first half of August.

FLOUR—Demand is light and the market is unchanged as follows: Ogilvie's Hungarian, $2.05 per sack of 98 lbs.; Glenora Patent, $1.90; Alberta, $1.75; Manitoba, $1.60; XXXX, $1.25.

MILLFEED—Bran is firm and worth $15 per ton in bulk. Shorts firm at $17 per ton in bulk, delivered, subject to usual trade discounts.

GROUND FEED—We quote: Oat chop, per ton, $23; barley chop, $24; mixed barley and oats, $26; chop screenings, $15.50; oil cake, $30.

OATS—There is very little doing in the oat market. Offerings are ample for all requirements here, and as the export demand is quiet, there is not much doing. Prices for No. 2 white are firmer and 1c higher. Feed grades are unchanged. We quote: No. 2 white, 41 to 42c per bushel, for car lots on track here; feed grades, 37 to 38c. At country points farmers are getting 31 to 34c for No. 2 white oats.

BARLEY—All offerings are now being taken for feed at 40c per bushel. The movement is very light.

SPELTZ—Dealers are doing a little business in speltz for feeding purposes at 50c per bushel of 50lbs.

HAY—Demand is fair and the market steady at $7 to $8 per ton for carlots on track here for fresh baled.

POULTRY—Spring chickens, 40 to 45c per pair, alive; fowl, 70 to 75c; ducks and geese, 9c per pound; turkeys, 11c, live weight.

BUTTER—Creamery—Factories are turning out considerable quantities of butter, for which there is a good market. Choice grades are worth 16½ to 17c per pound at factory points.

BUTTER—Dairy—Receipts are moderately large, and the market is steady. Considerable quantities are paying 13c per pound for choicest dairy in tubs or boxes, and from that figure the market ranges down to 10c per pound for low grades, all commission basis.

CHEESE—The market is steady and purchases have been made at 8½c per pound. The range of prices is from 8½c to 9c per pound delivered here.

EGGS—Receipts are moderate, and the market holds at 13c per dozen for choice case eggs delivered in Winnipeg.

DRESSED MEATS—Receipts are improving, and the market is easy. We quote: Beef, city dressed, 7½ to 8½c per lb.; veal, 8 to 9c; mutton, 9c; spring lambs, each, $3.50 to $4 hogs, per pound, 7½ to 8½c.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The export movement of range cattle is increasing, and a fair movement has been noted this week. The cattle are in fine condition now, and as the markets are right, a rapid movement may be looked for. The Manitoba cattle are not so fat as those from the west, especially the steers. Choice export steers from the western ranges are worth 4¼c per pound off cars in Winnipeg; butchers' cattle, 3¾ to 4c.

SHEEP—Receipts are moderate and prices range from 4 to 4¼c per pound, off cars, Winnipeg. Lambs are worth 3¾ to 4c.

HOGS—Live hogs are coming in freely, and the market is easy at 6¼c off cars here.

MILCH COWS—Cows are scarce. Good milkers readily bring $45 in this market, the range being from $35 to $45 each.

PLASTERS FAILED

LINIMENTS, OILS AND MANY OTHER MEDICINES DID NO GOOD.

A New Brunswick Postmaster Tells of His Efforts to Cure His Kidney Trouble—He Suffered for Years and Tried Many Medicines, but Only Recently Found the Right One.

Lower Windsor, N.B., Aug. 4. (Special.)—Mr. T. H. Belyea, postmaster of this place, has made a very interesting statement of his experience in his efforts to be cured of Kidney Trouble which has bothered him for many years.

At times he would have very bad spells, and when these came on he was almost laid up.

He tried several doctors and used many medicines, but nothing seemed to help him in the least.

Plasters, oils, liniments on the outside and doses of all kinds and descriptions taken internally seem to have but one result. He was no better.

Finally through reading an advertisement he was led to the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. He says:

"Dodd's Kidney Pills were so highly recommended for Kidney Trouble that after reading some testimonials, I concluded to try them according to directions.

"I had tried so many things that I was very skeptical and had but little faith that Dodd's Kidney Pills or would help me. However, I did not use them long before I found that they were all and more than was claimed for them.

"I have received more benefit from them than from any other medicine I have ever used for they seem to have made a complete cure of my case.

"I feel as well as ever I did and have not the slightest trace of the Kidney Trouble that bothered me ever so much.

"I want to say that I believe that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the right medicine for Kidney Trouble."

Mr. Belyea is very well known to there are but few who have not been aware of his serious illness.

Everyone is delighted at his improved health and his published statement has done much to make Dodd's Kidney Pills even more popular in this neighborhood than they have been.

AN ILLUSTRATED VILLAGE.

Little Swiss Town One of the Quaintest in Europe.

When next you go to the Lake of Geneva, by all means pay a visit to the little known village of St. Legier, near by, on the road between Vevey and Blonay, one of the quaintest villages in Europe and one of the proudest on account of its extraordinary adornments. St. Legier and the adjoining village of La Chiesaz are nothing more or less than illustrated villages. They are as profusely illustrated as the modern magazine, for nearly all the houses bear on their outside walls some striking picture or comical caricature from the brush of a great man in the village, M. Alfred Beguin, a painter of local renown and not unknown in Paris, says Pearson's Magazine.

A house in St. Legier has no use for a signboard to tell the world that it is an inn, a cycle shop, a forge or a dairy. M. Beguin's picture does that. On a stable wall he draws a picture of a spirited runaway horse knocking down men as he leaps for freedom; on the white wall of the little village forge are pictures of men making horseshoes for dear life and shoeing a frisky steed; on the wall of the dairy a dairy maid balances a pail of milk on her head, while scenes of local life, as pictures of the annual summer exodus to the mountain pastures with the cows and goats, and caricatures of the local bigwigs make a bright picture gallery of the village. M. Beguin lives in one of the most imposing houses in St. Legier, whence he obtains a full view of the crooked little village street and of the Dent du Jaman towering up in the distance. For many years past he has amused himself by painting the houses, and in the first place he acquired most of his skill and boldness in painting in this way.

THE SAME OLD WAGES.

It seems like wasting good time to point to the moral to be drawn from the fate of Harry Tracy, says the Spokane Chronicle. It is too plain—too simple—too sharply outlined against the lurid background of crime. The wages of sin—death.

Harry Tracy had brains, he had courage in plenty, he had endurance such as few men could boast. Born in free America, he could take his own choice of paths. The land was full of opportunities. The life of a holdup man seemed to him a short cut to money—easier than work and earn like an honest man. He chose a career of crime of his own free will—and he won its rewards.

The shame of the prison bars; the doom of 20 years—years that should have been given to the building up of useful, honorable, successful manhood—now to be spent in the weary round of a felons life. The drudgery, the stripes of the convict, the dark cell—these his portion, these his present life and his future promises.

Then one desperate chance—a mad dash for liberty—a few hours of triumphant crime—the life of the hunted outlaw in the swamps and forests—the flight from hundreds of armed pursuers—the bloodhounds on his path—the quarrel with his one companion, ending in a fresh murder—weeks of hiding and skulking; riding by night, lying in the brush by day, with never an hour of peace, never one moment of security. And then—

Lying there amid the waving grain, his glazing eyes turned up to the silent stars—dead by his own hand—dead by defeat and disgrace—his last moments filled with agony—his last act the confession of complete despair.

Did it pay? The old temptation—the old wages—the paymaster who cannot be evaded. King of criminals though Harry Tracy was—wonderful in his skill, wonderful in his endurance, wonderful for a time in his luck—how did it pay.

We are constrained to the conclusion that the symphony of the average political machine is built with but three notes—"dough," "see," and "nine."—Chicago Post.
