Moyer and Heywood Arrested.

DID ORCHARD CONFESS?

He Is said to Be a Tool of the Mineowners Association.

Charles E. Moyer, president of the Western Fedecation of Miners; W. D. Heywood, secretary of the same body, and G. A. Pettibone, a former member of the executive board of the federation, were arrested in Denver Saturday night, charged with complicity in the assassination of Frank Steunenberg, former governor of Idaho.

The special train of engine, combination car and Pullman coach, which left Denver at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, arrived at Boise at 9:15. The necessary changes of engines en route were made at suburban sidings and the train took water at obsoure tanks, so that no stops were made in cities or large towns. The prisoners were taken direct to the Idaho penitentiary.

Detective McPharland declares the evidence against the men arrested at Denver is overwhelming and conviction certain.

Vincent St. John, alias John Vincent, president of the miners' union at Burk, was arrested by Sherriff Sutherland. He and two others unnamed are also implicated with others by Orchard's alleged confession.

The Denver Times says that Harry Orchard, who is under arrest in Idaho charged with assassinating former Governor Steunenburg, and who has made a confession charging the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners with instigating a number of dynamite outrages and mudera, was in the employ of the Cripple Creek mineowners' accociation as a detetive during the great strike in the Cripple Creek district. This most important fact will be used in the defence of the accused labor leaders when they are brought to trial in the courts of Idaho.

A meeting of the executive board of the Western Federation of Miners probably will be held within a week to adopt measures for the defence of the officials now under arrest. The arrest of the officers of the union is looked upon as a further attempt to break up the federation. The prime object being to compel the federation to drop its civil suits against mineowners of Colorado for damages growing out of the Colorado labor troubles of the past two or three years. It is said that the federation has a million dollars available for the defence of the leaders and the very best legal talent will be engaged both for the Idaho trials and in the civil suits against the mineowners.

WATER CO.'S MEETING

Was Held in Moyie Thursday.

THE OFFICES RE-ELECTED

Money will Be Expended During Year to Improve System.

The regular annual meeting of the Moyie Water Co. was held here on Thursday, Feb. 22, and it is said to be the best meeting in the history of the company. The affairs of the company were found in a very satisfactory condition. Considerable money will be expended during the year to improve the system and make it more secure against frost, etc. The old offices and directors were re-elected. They are:

J. A. Harvey, President;
A. P. Macdonald, Vice-Pres;
J. F. Farrell, Secretary;
V. Desaulnier, Treas;
E. A. Hill,
C. A. Foote,
P. F. Johnston.

Athletic Association.

Officers and directors for the new athletic association were elected at the meeting held last Monday evening, and Eagle hall has been rented. The officers are:

G. A. Clothier, President;
D. A. Ayres, Vice-President;
G. Stewart, Seery-Treas.
C. A. Foote, P. J. Bonner and E. O. Kamm, directors.

At the meeting the constitution and bylaws were adopted. There are nearly 60 names on the list for membership. The hall will be open next week, and there will be basket-ball, hand-ball, trapeese, punching bag, boxing gloves, etc.

Home Production.

The first beer turned out by Julius Mueller, the new proprietor of the Moyie Brewery, is on tap today and samples are being sent around. The beer is of good quality, and it is not likely that anything but home production will be drank in Moyie in future.

Work on Lamb Creek.

About 15 men are employed by the Moyie Lumber Company improving Lamb Creek so that logs may be brought down to the mill. The work is not as difficult as was anticipated. Logging will be commenced in about a week's time.

Men Are Scarce.

While the average wage is higher than ever before employment agents in Spokane are unable to supply the demand. One agency says it could place 500 men in sawmills, warehouses and various lines of railways at wages from $2 25 to $2.50 a day.

Hutch Sells Out.

John Hutchison has sold his real estate and insurance business in Cranbrook to Archie and Harry McVittie. "Hutch" is contemplating moving to some town in Alberta to locate.

Spokane & International.

The Spokane & International are laying rails on their line, commencing at the International boundary where they connect with the C. P. R. branch from the Crow's Nest road, rails having been been laid on the C. P. R. branch last December, says the Bonners' Ferry Herald. Tracklaying will progress towards Bonners Ferry as conditions will permit, but there will be no great rush for the reason that in places the contractors will not be out of the way, and in others bridges and culverts are to be constructed causing a delay. Then the 900 foot bridge across the Kootenai will not be ready before May 1, at the earliest. As fast as the grade is ready, however the rails will be laid, and when they are forced to stop by reason of uncompleted work, the work trains will have plenty to do to improve the grade on which rails have been laid.

Dr. McInturff Tomorrow.

The people of Moyie wil be given a treat tomorrow evening in listening to Dr. D. N. McInturff, bishop of the People's United church of Spokane. The members of the church have organized a colony, called the Almo colony, situated in the Kootenay valley not for from Bonners Ferry, Idaho. The doctor is one of the most eloquent pulpit arotors in the west and those who have the opportunity should not fail to hear him. Mrs. D. H. Chisholm, deaconess in charge of the Almo Colony, has been in Moyie since yesterday.

Dr. McInturff will address the people of Moyie in Eagle hall at 4:30 and at 8 o'clock p. m.

Putting Up Ice.

The people of Moyie have become alarmed that the ice will not be any better than at present, and during the past few days most of the supply for next summer's use was put up. The ice is only about 10 inches in thickness, while at this time other years it was seldom less than from 18 to 24 inches.

To the Ladies of Moyie. . .

I have ordered from a Chicago house a full line of millinery which will be here on or about March 10th. I intend selling same as cheap if not cheaper than you can buy in any part of the country. Hoping you will not purchase until you examine my new and up to date stock. I am

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

It was more than a pleasant dinner for Lady Fanworthy made it a charming one. In spite of himself Julian was drawn within the circle of the spell of her brilliant eyes and the clear, low voice in which she said the wittiest things with the air of an innocent girl.

"We won't let you go all alone to that Madame Tussaud of a drawing-room, Lady Fanworthy," Vane said when the dessert was over. "We'll go into the music-room. Julian here is a tip-top performer. Send the coffee in there, please, will you, France? You won't mind our cigarettes, I know, Lady Fanworthy."

"Not if you give me one for myself," she said.

Vane led her, with a certain courtesy which he did not usually display, to the easiest of the chairs, and, when the cigarettes were smoked, took Julian by the arms and gently pushed him towards the piano.

"Sing us that thing you sang to me at your rooms, will you?" he said; and he went and seated himself in a low chair beside Lady Fanworthy's, and with his arms folded behind his head listened with half closed eyes; he was back on the island again, be sure.

Julian sang three songs in response to Lord Fanworthy's eager murmur of admiration and delight and Vane's almost proprietorial "Go on, Julian!"

The light from the shaded candles fell full on the performer's dark face, and Lady Fanworthy watched it steadily.

"Julian's a regular nightingale, isn't he?" said Vane in a low voice. "Isn't it a fine voice?"

The old lady withdrew her eyes slowly.

"Yes," she said. "He is very good looking, and has a fine voice, and quite pretty manners. Did you ever see the black panther at the Zoo, Vane?"

Vane stared at her, then laughed.

"The black panther, when it is asleep, or has just been fed and is purring and licking itself."

Vane colored with momentary annoyance, then he laughed again.

"This is the first time I have ever known you to be—unjust and hard," he said in a low voice.

The ordinary eyes regarded him steadily, gravely.

"How do you know that I am—unjust and hard now?" she asked, with a slight imitation of his voice.

Vane moved with a gesture of impatience and deprecation.

"He's too good a fellow, is Julian, to be compared to a tiger," he said.

"Panther, I said," retorted Lady Fanworthy, sweetly. "And a black one. Thank you so very much, Mr. Shore. You have a charming voice, charming. Godfrey, we must not rob these young people of their beauty sleep, it is late."

Lord Fanworthy was glowing all over with satisfaction, as they drove home.

"Splendid thing for the county, Vane's succession. I'll get him to take the hounds! And I say, Emily, what a delightful young fellow this Julian Shore is, eh?"

"Delightful," responded Lady Fanworthy; but, as she spoke she looked at her radiant husband with the tender pity with which the clever wife tolerates the spouse whom she loves notwithstanding his duller intelligence.

"There go the happiest pair I ever met," remarked Vane, as the two men sat in their smoking jackets in the billiard room.

"They seem devoted to each other," said Julian. "I suppose the man who said that marriages were made in Heaven must have had such a couple in his mind."

"Marriages are made in Heaven, but they smuggle a very fair counterfeit from quite another place," observed Vane, absently. "How is it you never married, Julian?" As the question left his lips he would have like to have checked it, for the subject was a sore one for him; but the question was asked, and he waited for the answer.

Julian knocked the ash from the cigarette and looked before him under his dropping lids.

"I don't know," he replied, as if he himself were wondering. "I suppose it is because I have never seen the woman I wanted to make my wife."

"You have never been in—love?" asked Vane, though he could have kicked himself for the banality of the thing.

"No," said Julian, after another pause. "No; I suppose not!"

Vane laughed grimly.

"You suppose not," he said. "You certainly have not, or you'd have known it. Bed? Right!"

Julian went to his room, but it was some time before he went to bed. It was a moonlight night, and he leaned against the window and looked at the park, and the hills beyond, the land that represented to some small extent the vast wealth into which his cousin had come; looked at it with an expression in his eyes which, if she could have seen it, would have justified Lady Fanworthy's comparison.

But it was not the black panther asleep, or placidly satisfied and purring. There was a hungry, restless look in the dark eyes, and the white, even teeth gleamed as the lips closed and unclosed with a nervous movement.

They stayed three days at the Court, and during the whole of that time Vane treated Julian as the heir and "did him honor," as the significant old phrase has it; so that the servants, even Mr. Holland, came to regard Mr. Julian Shore as almost of equal importance to the earl himself.

Before they started to return to London, Julian gave orders for the cleaning and doing up of the Wizard's Room and, at Vane's suggestion, even instructed a mason to alter the fireplace.

They reached London just before tea-time, and Vane suddenly remembering his promise to Judith Orme, said:

"Engaged this afternoon, Julian?"

Julian replied in the negative.

"Well, then, come with me to call on a lady, will you?"

It would be as well, if he were going to call on Judith, that he should make the visit as conventional and void of significance as possible by taking a friend with him. A year ago the proposal of a tete-a-tete with Judith Orme would have set his heart beating; but now—There is safety in numbers, though it be only two.

"Who is it?" asked Julian.

"Miss Orme," replied Vane.

"The Miss Orme?"

Vane nodded. "The very Miss Orme," he assented. "You know her?"

"No; I have not even seen her," said Julian; "but, of course, I have heard of her; who hasn't?"

"Who, indeed?" said Vane, drily.

A neat maid-servant admitted them and took them upstairs.

Judith was seated at the piano, but at the sound of Vane's name—he had not given Julian's—she rose quickly. But at sight of Julian she paused in her advance and the color of resentment rose to her beautiful face. It was there only for an instant, the next she came forward with outstretched hand, her sapphire eyes smiling, her lips half parted.

"How do you do, Lord Lesborough? Did you meet my father? He has only just gone out. I'm so sorry!"

"I've brought my cousin, Mr. Julian Shore," said Vane.

The smile shone on him, and her hand went out to him, and as Julian took it, he drew a long breath and raised his lids slowly, as a man does who is trying to hide some deep, intense emotion.

What had happened to him? A moment or two ago, before he had entered the room, he had been master of himself, sole possessor of his soul. And now His dark eyes sought the lovely face, and all the world seemed to stand still, as if it were gazing with him and listening with him to the exquisite voice, so low and sweet, so full of music, so sad, and yet with a subtle suggestion of tenderness and passion.

He threw his head up as if he were trying to throw off the impression, the spell, under which he had fallen as suddenly, as helplessly as if he had been mesmerized.

"We've just come from the Court," Vane was saying in cool, conventional tones. "Mr. Shore and I have been playing Bachelor Hall there."

She turned her eyes to Julian and smiled, and he felt a thrill, the thrill of a sudden passion which sways a man as a reed is swayed by the wind, the passion against whose tyranny the strongest man is as weak as the veriest babe. Unconsciously he moistened his lips with his tongue for the power of speech seemed to have deserted him.

"My first visit," he said, scarcely knowing what he said.

"Yes?"

That was all, just the one word, but in Julian Shore's ears it was like a note of heavenly music.

CHAPTER XIV.

Nina had, at last, found her good Samaritan.

"To think of your finding the way to the very street, and me just driving up at the very moment!" Polly exclaimed the next morning with infinite satisfaction. "That's what they call the long arm of coincidence, isn't it? Anyhow, whatever it was, I'm jolly glad. You look better after your night's rest, dear, and as beautiful as ever. What luck for me that I haven't gone to the Provinces! Mr. Harcourt's taken a London theatre. The Momus, you know, and 'My Lady's Pride' is going strong. Now, do try to eat some breakfast, there's a dear, good girl! And don't sigh so! You're safe and with a friend—if you don't mind having me for one."

Nina tried to express her gratitude, but Polly waved it aside with the hand in which she held her needle; she was hard at work trimming a hat.

"Don't you talk like that, Miss Wood; and you wouldn't if you knew how proud I was to have you here. Why, too, didn't you see that I'd taken a fancy to you on board the ship? I've thought of you ever so many times since, and wondered what had become of you and whether we should ever meet again. Bother this feather; it won't go right! And now you're actually sitting there—and going to sit there, leastways stop here with me for a long time—for always, if you like. But, lor' bless me, I know that's nonsense. You'll be off to your friends directly and forget all about Polly Bainford—no, I don't mean that! You're not the sort to forget."

"No, I shall not forget you and your great kindness, Polly," said Nina. "Won't you call me Decima, please?"

Polly jumped up to the infinite peril of the hat, and kissed her.

"Of course I will! I've been dying to do so, but I thought you wouldn't like it. You see you're a swell, a lady, and I'm only a poor girl."

Nina sighed woefully.

"You cannot be so poor as I, or so friendless," she said. "I haven't a penny in the world, or a friend—"

Polly jumped up again, and taking an old tobacco jar from the mantelshelf emptied its contents on the table.

"You've half of that, anyhow," she said, emphatically, "and you've got one friend, at any rate. There, don't cry"—for Nina's eyes had filled with tears. "There's nothing to cry about in being poor. If I haven't been quite without a penny, I've been pretty near it. Something always turns up just when things are at their worst. There's a kind of luck, chance, in it. It's always just when you think you're going under that a friendly wave carries you on shore. I'm your friendly wave."

"Yes, indeed!" said Nina. "But, Polly, dear, I could not be a burden to you. I cannot stay and be a drag on you. I must find some work—" she sighed bitterly. "How easy it is to say that, but how difficult it is to find the work!"

She gave Polly an account of her experiences with the agents, and Polly snorted wrathfully.

"I should like to punch that young bounder's head!" she said. "The colossal impudence he must have had! To think that you'd be seen out with him! But there are plenty of things you can do. Let me see. You wouldn't for instance, like the profession, I suppose?"

"What is the profession?" asked Nina, eagerly.

"Why, the theatrical—mine—ours!" replied Polly with surprise. "Don't you know that it's the only profession worth speaking about?"

Nina shook her head and smiled.

"I'm afraid I've no talent for the stage," she said. "And—and I don't think I should like it."

"Really?" said Polly with a surprise that was flattering to the dramatic profession. "That's a pity, for you're cut out for it. Such a face and figure! Oh, you may smile, but in my opinion you're one of the prettiest girls I've met, and Mr. Harcourt would agree with me if he saw you. Well, of all the stupid hats! And yet I thought I'd got the one I saw in the window quite fixed in my mind. I went in and bought the materials, you see you get the hat so much cheaper if you trim it yourself. But I suppose I've forgotten just how the trimming went." She put the hat on her head, and surveying herself in the glass, uttered an exclamation of impatient disgust and made a grimace at herself in the mirror. "I wouldn't be seen dead in a ditch with it!"

"Let me look at it. Give it to me. May I try?" said Nina.

Under a Fly's Wing.

One of the Nuremberg toymakers inclosed in a cherry stone, which was exhibited at the French Crystal palace a plan of Sevastopol, a railway station and the "Messiah" of Klopstock. In more remote times an account is given of an ivory chariot, constructed by Mermecides, which was so small that a fly could cover it with his wing; also a ship of the same materia which could be hidden under the wing of a bee. Pliny, too, tells us that Homer's "Iliad," with its 15,000 verses, was written in so small a space as to be contained in a nutshell, while Elian mentions an artist who wrote a distich in letters of gold which he inclosed in the rind of a kernel of corn. But the Harleim manuscript mentions a greater curiosity than any of the above, it being nothing more or less than the Bible written by one Peter Bales, a chancery clerk, in so small a book that it could be inclosed in the shell of an English walnut.

Handle Work With Gloves.

"I hope," said the woman who was ordering a pair of slippers made of flowered satin, "that you will tell your workman to wash his hands before he begins to make these up."

"Wash his hands!" repeated the clerk. "Why, madam, he never will touch these with his bare hands!"

Then the clerk explained that all workmen employed in making slippers of light colors worked with white gloves on.

"Try to keep them clean!" he continued. "I should say they did. They try so hard that they change their white gloves three times a day. Which is not so fantastic as it may seem, for if a shoemaker soils material of this kind the expense to him of replacing the material, to say nothing of the loss of his time, makes it worth his while to work in gloves and keep them clean at that."

The Smelt.

It is the opinion of the true gourmet that of all marine pan fish there is none to compare with the smelt (Osmerus mordax). This primary rank is its own by reason of its delicacy and delicious flavor, and when fried a light brown in very fine breadcrumbs and served with melted butter there is none that disputes its pre-eminence. Its delightful flavor, however, as well as its peculiar odor, is evanescent. Like the mackerel, it cannot be too fresh. It is from its odor that the smelt derives not only its familiar but Latin name, an odor so aggressive of sliced cucumbers that if its presence be manifested only to the sense of smell people are often deluded into such supposition. This odor is not marked except in the freshly caught fish and disappears in the cooking, giving place, however, to a fitting resurrection of the smelt to an olfactory sense still more savory and delightful.

"Rule Britannia."

"Rule Britannia" is usually credited to James Thomson. It first appeared in a play entitled "Alfred," by Thomson and Mallet, in 1740. The air was by Dr. Thomas Arne.

Spiders That Change Colors.

An interesting instance of color mimicry in spiders has been observed in the south of France. The spiders of that region when in search of prey hide in the convolvulus flowers. It has been noticed that a white variety of spider frequented the white flowers. A greenish colored variety made the green flowers his home, and a pink one lived principally in the pink flowers. The colors of the three varieties were at first supposed to be permanent, but it has recently been discovered that the color of any one of these spiders changes within a few days if the insect be placed in the convolvulus of a different colored flower from that which he has been using as his home. Four spiders—pink, white, green and yellow in color—were all put in a box together and within three days all were white.

The Girl He Left Behind.

There is a public library in Baltimore that has a regulation by which any member wanting a particular book which is not "in" can by paying a small sum secure the next turn, and upon the book's coming in the librarian sends him a notification.

In this connection an attache of the library tells of an amusing incident. A member desired a copy of a novel entitled "The Girl He Left Behind Him." The book not being in, he made the customary deposit and in due course received a notification. This the member's wife received—to her alarm at first—for it read as follows:

"Mr. Blank is informed that 'The Girl He Left Behind Him' is now in the library and will be kept for him till Friday morning next."—Success Magazine.

London.—In proposing the toast, "Canada," at the Canadian Society dinner, Hamar Greenwood, who presided, announced that three matters of Canadian interest would receive early attention by the new government. They would be the cattle embargo, the deceased wife's sister's bill, and a reduction of the postage on British publications to Canada. Ladies were present for the first time. The speakers to the usual toasts were W. T. R. Preston, Wm. Black, Halifax, Dr. O'Reilly, Toronto, J. H. Thorold, Roy Somerville, Dr. Baynes and Maurice Egan.

According to the Mohammedans of southern India, pulverized diamond is the least painful, the most active and the most certain of all poisons. According to "Wilke's History," the powder of diamonds is kept on hand (by the wealthy only presumably) as a last resource. But a belief in the poisonous character of the diamond also existed in Italy in the sixteenth century.

PARALYSIS YIELDS TO DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS

AFTER SEVERAL DOCTORS HAD PRONOUNCED THE CASE HOPELESS.

Convincing Proof That Cure Was Permanent—in Five Years the Patient Has Had no Relapse—Facts in a Remarkable Case Substantiated by Sworn Statements.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not a patent medicine, but the prescription of a physician, placed on sale with full directions for use under a trade mark that is a guarantee of their genuineness to every purchaser. They contain no stimulant, opiate or narcotic, and while they have cured thousands have never injured anybody. To show that cures effected by this remedy are really permanent and lasting we recently investigated the case of Mr. Frank A. Means, of Reedsville, Mifflin County, Pa. Mr. Means has been an elder in the Reedsville Presbyterian church for many years, has served three years as county commissioner and as school director for nine years. He was afflicted with creeping paralysis, losing the entire use of the lower half of his body, and for a year was a helpless invalid, confined to his bed with no power or feeling in either leg, and physicians had given him up as hopeless. Mr. Means was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and his testimonial was printed five years ago as follows:

"I had the grip for four winters and as a result my nerves broke down. I lost the entire use of the lower half of my body. My stomach, liver, kidneys, heart and head were never affected, but the paralyzed condition of the lower part of the body affected my bladder and bowels. For a whole year I lay in bed perfectly helpless with no power in either limb and the feeling gone so that I couldn't feel a pin run into my legs at all. I couldn't turn over in bed without help. To move me a pulley was rigged up on the ceiling and a windlass on the floor.

During two years of my affliction I had six different doctors, but none of them gave me any relief. A specialist from Philadelphia treated me for three months but he was of no benefit to me. These doctors gave me up and said it was only a question of a few weeks with me as nothing more could be done. After the physicians had given me up, a friend sent me a pamphlet containing statements of two men who had been afflicted something like me and who had been cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began taking them at once and although my improvement was slow it was certain. Now I can walk most of the time without a cane and everybody around here thinks it is a miracle that I can get about as I do. Your pills have certainly been a God-send to me. Within the last three years I have answered dozens of letters from invalids who had heard of my case and who asked me if it was true that I had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I have told them all that this remedy cured me and I am glad of this opportunity of telling about my case so that others may find relief as I have done."

Signed, F. A. MEANS.

ALBERT S. GIBBONEY, Notary Public.

One day recently Mr. Means was visited at his handsome home overlooking the valley of Honey Creek, near Reedsville, where he made the following statement:

"Before I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I had been treated for a long time by my home doctor who pronounced my trouble creeping paralysis. I always believed that to be my trouble and I do yet believe so. I had also spent five weeks in the University Hospital in Philadelphia without the treatment benefiting me and had returned home to die. I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in 1897, but did not give a statement of my case for publication until I was sure that I was cured. After returning from the hospital I did not take any other medicine for my trouble and I owe it to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and to them alone that I am able to be about to-day. Since my cure, as related in my statement of April 17, 1901, I have never suffered any relapse nor had occasion to employ a physician except for minor troubles such as coughs, colds, etc. I endorse Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as fully and heartily to-day as I did five years ago."

Signed, FRANK A. MEANS.

JACOB KOHLER, Justice of the Peace.

Justice Kohler, of Reedsville, before whom the above affidavit was made, voluntarily gave and signed the following statement:

"I have personally known Mr. Frank A. Means for the past forty-five years and know that any statement he makes is entirely reliable. I personally visited him when he was confined to bed and utterly helpless. I now see him daily and now him to be in as good health as most men of his age."

Signed, JACOB KOHLER.

Mr. Daniel W. Reynolds, postmaster at Reedsville, Pa., stated that he had received many inquiries from all parts of the country concerning Mr. Means' marvellous cure, and he cheerfully added his confirmation of the truth as follows:

"I certify that the facts stated in the testimonial of Mr. Frank A. Means are absolutely true. I knew him when he was unable to move and I see him every day now on the streets and in my office."

Signed, DANIEL W. REYNOLDS.

Here is evidence that must convince the most skeptical. But because many of the cures accomplished by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are so marvellous as to challenge belief, the following offer is made:

Surprised the Astronomer.

Dr. Flamsteed, who was astronomer royal in Newton's time, was rather tickled by the belief of his neighbors in his powers of consulting the stars about terrestrial affairs. An old washerwoman at Greenwich who had been robbed of her linen came to consult him about its recovery. So he set about drawing squares and circles and suggested that if she went into a certain field he would not be surprised if she found her lost linen in a ditch. But when she came back "with haste and joy" and a half crown in her hand for his fee he was not only very much surprised, but alarmed. "Good woman," he said, "I am heartily glad you have found your linen, but I assure you I knew nothing of it and intended to read you a lecture on the folly of applying to any person to know events not in human power to tell, but I see Satan has a mind I should deal with him, and never will I attempt such an affair again so long as I live."

CLARENCE KING.

CLARENCE KING,

Editor of the Times, Brandon, Man.

The causes that influence a man in the selection of his life occupation are many and various. Personal inclination is often neutralized by many considerations of immediate economic necessity, but, in the main, a man's occupation resembles his character, in that it is the product of heredity, education and environment. There is in humankind an insensible, but well nigh irresistible, tendency to settle on doing the things with which one has long been identified or associated. The nature becomes subservient to what it works in, like the "master's hand", as Shakespeare noted centuries ago, and it takes strong influences to force a break away from habits, ideals and conditions and habits of life and work, with which a man has for years been closely connected. The unwisdom, and the increased risks, assumed by those determined to make a change in their modes of life or conditions of livelihood have become proverbial. "Let the shoemaker stick to his last," says the homely English proverb, and human experience is strewn thick with the wrecks of once promising and successful careers, clearly traceable to the neglect or defiance of this elementary business principle. The cases of men making a marked success of totally new occupations entered on in or after middle life are rare. Western Canadian journalism can show some examples, but the overwhelming bulk of evidence points the other direction.

In the case of an established business, the chances are strong that some member of the proprietor's family will be trained and equipped so as to carry it on in the event of the death or retirement of the owner. Every city has its examples of families that for generations have been in the same business or profession. And there have been generations of lawyers, and merchants and divines, and there have been generations of newspaper men. The mantle of the father has fallen on the son, and the traditions of policy have thereby perpetuated through many years.

Western Canadian journalism is too young to furnish many examples of the editorial pen being passed on from sire to son. In the west there are some instances. The Jauries, père and son, have been associated with the Battleford Herald ever since that paper, the oldest in the two provinces, was established. Walpole Murdoch, of the Hartney Star, is a newspaper man by heredity as well as by instinct, for his father conducted the local paper at Birtle, and was associated with others, until his death. And in the city of Brandon, Clarence King, the editor of the Times is also a journalist by lineal descent, succeeding to the editorial chair on the death of his father, under whom he learned practically all he knew of the business.

Mr. King is certainly one of the most forceful writers as well as youthful figures in Manitoba journalism. He has all the excellencies, and some of the defects, characteristic of energetic, earnest minded young men. He is dynamic, magnetic, exuberant, the possessor of a strong will and a vivid imagination. Somewhat prone to impulse, with high ideals and large views, he is apt to be more concerned with results rather than processes, and often disregards the calls of caution and policy in the pursuit of whatever he deems the proper course to pursue. Not the desirable or the merely expedient, but the right, is what he aims at. On matters involving principle he will neither truckle nor compromise, and his downright forthrightness sometimes loses him friends and allies that a more cautious and experienced man would utilize in the advancement of the views he desired to prevail. Mr. King is a man of positive personal opinions, and is not afraid to give them expression. He has the combative intellectual temperament, and enjoys a controversy as an Irishman enjoys a fight. He wants to "see something doing" all the time, and when those seasons of deadly dullness which his soul abhors come along, and they do come in a newspaper, as in every other business, he can generally be relied on to galvanize the neighborhood into interest by stirring up some question, old or new, that touches the minds, or hearts, or pockets of the people who read his paper. He has the true professional instinct of the journalist. He would much rather see and hear himself and his paper abused and grossly maligned and misrepresented than not be spoken of at all. He would much prefer to be libelled than ignored.

These characteristics suggest strong individuality, and this is amply borne out by closer acquaintance with the editor of the Brandon Times. Beneath those traits of impetuosity and assertiveness that have made him detractors, and even enemies, are qualities of sterling worth and excellence. If he sometimes errs on the side of haste in coming to conclusions, his tenacity in holding them, and his resourcefulnes in defending them, compel admiration and respect. Though he is apt to forget the first part of Polonius' advice to Laertes, "Beware of entrance to a quarrel", none can accuse him of failure to practice the second, "But, being in, so bear thyself that the opposed may beware of thee." With strong personal, and sometimes original views, with good powers of expression, a forcible style, a good working knowledge of the principles of government, and familiarity with the questions that constitute the issues of Manitoba and Western Canadian politics, it is no wonder that Mr. King occupies a high position among the younger generation of western newspaper men, nor that his friends predict for him a career for which his present position is but the prelude.

Before assuming the editorship of the Brandon Times, Mr. King was for some years editor of the Brandon Independent, the paper founded by his father. Mr. King, sr., was a journalist of the British school, and endeavored to transplant to Western Canada the professional ideals of the motherland. He edited the Independent with marked ability, but, naturally, it did not appeal to a Canadian as it would have done to a British audience. Under the management of his son, after his death, it became more adaptable, though to a large extent the editorial traditions were worthily perpetuated. When Mr. Purcell, for some years the manager and editor of the Times, joined the staff of the Brandon Sun, the Times and the Independent amalgamated, the combination forming a strong paper, and to Mr. Clarence King was given the task of guiding its destinies. The present acknowledged position the Times occupies in Manitoba is the best possible tribute to the efficiency of his management. Typographically the Times has ever since it came under the control of Mr. E. L. Christie, been one of the best papers in Western Canada.

THE POSTMASTER TELLS HIS SECRET

HIS HEALTH MAINLY DUE TO THE USE OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

Postmaster Lee Looks Ten Years Younger Than His Seventy-Six Years and He Gives the Credit to the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Tabusintac, Camberland Co., N.B. Feby 10th (Special)—Horatio J. Lee, postmaster here, is now in his seventy-sixth year, but so bright and healthy does he look and so energetic is he in his movements that he would easily pass for ten years younger.

"How do I keep young looking," the postmaster says. "Well I attribute it largely to my good health and my health is mainly due to the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I first learned the value of this Kidney Remedy some years ago. I was then suffering from Kidney Disease. My feet and legs swelled and I had to rise eight or ten times in the night because of urinary troubles. Six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills restored my health at that time and I have used them at intervals since.

"To anyone afflicted with Kidney Trouble I say 'Dodd's Kidney Pills are all right.' Try them and you will be sure to find a benefit."

HOW TO MAKE BABY SLEEP.

The baby that cries half the night does not cry for nothing. It cries because it is not well, and the chances are the trouble is due to some derangement of the stomach or bowels, which would be speedily relieved if a dose of Baby's Own Tablets were given the little one. These tablets make children sleep soundly and naturally, because they remove the cause of crossness and wakefulness. They are a blessing to the little one, and bring relief to the tired, worried mother. Mrs. A. C. Abbott, Hudson's Heights, Que., says: "I have found Baby's Own Tablets a splendid medicine for stomach and bowel troubles, from which my little one was troubled. Thanks to the relief the Tablets have given my baby now sleeps quietly and naturally, and is in the best of health." And the Tablets are absolutely safe—they always do good—they cannot possibly do harm. They will cure the ailments of a new-born baby or a well-grown child. TWO YEARS FOR INCENDIARISM.

Alberta Lumber Yard Set on Fire to Get Insurance—Good Work of the Mounted Police.

How quickly and how thoroughly the Northwest Mounted Police bring lawbreakers to justice was never better exemplified than in the conviction they secured against John B. Johnson of Lavoy, about seventy miles west of Vermillion in Alberta. Johnson was engaged in the lumber business and was a member of the firm of Johnson Bros. & Stewart. On the 18th of December last he made application through a local insurance agent for protection to the extent of $4,000 upon a stock of lumber. On the first of January, or less than two weeks later a fire took place under rather suspicious circumstances. Without waiting for any instructions the mounted police appear to have taken the matter right in hand investigated all the circumstances, and within six weeks had Johnson convicted and sentenced to two years in Stony Mountain for setting his own lumber yard on fire with the apparent purpose of defrauding the insurance companies. The latter are usually very active in following up any offenders who try to defraud them but in the territories, or what must now be called the two new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan the police act a good deal quicker than the vigilant insurance companies.

The facts concerning this case are briefly as follows. On the 18th of December Johnson made the application for insurance to the local insurance agent. On the 1st of January following the fire took place. On the 8th of January the police issued the warrant and arrested Johnson. On the 9th of January, the day following, he was examined before a magistrate at Vigreville and by the magistrate was committed to the gaol at Ft. Saskatchewan awaiting trial, bail being refused. On the 10th of February he was committed to Stony Mountain. This is carrying out the law with promptitude and speaks volumes for the efficiency of the mounted police.

The circumstances surrounding this fire were as said at the outset, very suspicious. At the trial, a witness, Thos. S. Bronton, deposed that he and others were called out of bed with the report that the lumber yards were on fire. When they reached Johnson's lumber at Lavoy they found it blazing in three places. It had been alleged that the train had started the fire but the evidence clearly showed that this was impossible as the yards are situated on the south side of the track and a strong wind was blowing from the south so that it is obvious that any spark from the train would have blown on the opposite side of the track to the one upon which the lumber was situated. The next morning Bronton along with others, made an examination of the scene of the fire and found footprints in the snow leading from the yard. The track of these circulated across the prairie and back to the railroad towards Vegreville. Bronton followed the track for about half a mile and found a watering can which had contained coal oil. Along with four others he drove to Vegreville and about a mile from this point they saw a "man track" on the railroad similar to the one they had seen taking a circular route on the prairie from the scene of the fire. They measured the foot-print with a stick and reported the result of their investigations to the mounted police.

Bronton's evidence proved almost conclusively that the fire had been the work of an incendiary. It remained to find out where the watering can that had been used for carrying coal oil had come from. The police were not long finding this out. They visited several stores with the result that a storekeeper at Vegreville E. L. Poulin, swore that between the 20th and 26th of December Johnson, the accused, bought from him ten gallons of coal oil which he put in a ten gallon whiskey keg. He also bought a second hand watering can. When bought the can had a hole in it which Johnson had mended. Johnson apparently had shared an office with another party by the name of McNeill and when he purchased the coal oil and the watering can he explained that McNeil was out of coal oil and that he wanted a sprinkler for his office floor. Judge Scott before whom the trial was heard was not satisfied with the prisoner's explanations and he therefore sentenced him to two years in the penitentiary.

The Free Press commenting editorially upon the case said:

The action of the mounted police as brought to light by the recent trial at Edmonton cannot be too highly commended. Arson at any time is a crime that is difficult to detect and punish. The trial and conviction of the Lavoy incendiary at Edmonton within the short space of six weeks is all the more deserving of praise. Ther action compares very strikingly with the administration of the law in Manitoba. Some three years ago a case of incendiarism was reported from Emerson. In the absence of any attempt on the part of the provincial police to locate the cause of this particular fire the insurance companies themselves employed at very great expense outside detectives, who succeeded in establishing evidence that led to conviction.

At the present time the companies find it necessary to make very close enquiry into the origin of many fires, and usually have detectives of their own at work. The evidence they have in many cases obtained makes it quite clear that certain fires of recent occurrence are of incendiary origin, but the evidence necessary to secure a conviction was not sufficiently exact and uncircumstantial. While the insurance companies are making these efforts to reduce the loss from incendiarism, the public should also bear in mind that it concerns them quite as much as it does the companies. The public pay for all the losses, not the companies. This fact appears to be lost sight of. If incendiarism increases so will the insurance rates.

FOR ANAEMIA YOU MUST HAVE IRON

And Anyone Can Use Iron, As it is Combined With Other Ingredients in

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Anaemia or bloodlessness is indicated by paleness of the lips, the gums and the eyelids, and is most frequently found in girls and young women.

Other symptoms are deficient appetite, impaired digeston, irritable temper, shortness of breath, dizziness, fainting, headache, easily fatigued depression and despondency.

The blood is lacking in the life sustaining power which is necessary to the proper working of the bodily organs, and can only be restored by the use of iron, as any qualified physician will tell you.

But iron alone cannot be taken into a weakened stomach. In Dr. Chase's Nerve Food iron is combined with certain nerve restoratives in such a way as to be easily assimilated into the blood and thus afford immediate and lasting benefit to the system.

And more than this, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, through its action on the nerves, sharpens the appetite and aids digestion, so that help is also afforded in deriving the full nourishment from the food taken into the body.

On account of these two ways in which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food enriches the blood and builds up the system, it is beyond doubt the most effective treatment for anaemia and similar wasting disease that was ever compounded. Note your increase in weight while using it.

Mr. Albert Saunier, Willow Bunch, Sask., writes: "I received the two Boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food which I ordered from you and have found it to be an excellent medicine. It has proven a splendid treatment for headache and a run down system and I have recommended it to many people."

Impurities in the Blood.—When the action of the kidneys becomes impaired, impurities in the blood are almost sure to follow, and general derangement of the system ensues. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will regulate the kidneys so that they will maintain healthy action and prevent the complications which certainly come when there is derangement of these delicate organs. As a restorative these pills are in the first rank.

The Montreal Water and Power company which supplies Westmount with water has entered a suit for $50,000 against the Montreal Herald for articles printed alleging that the water caused the typhoid epidemic.

Don't Dye the Old Way.

The same package of DY-O-LA can be used for silk, wool, cotton, mixed materials, etc.

It's a new and better dye.

Absolutely fast colors—rich and beautiful.

"DY-O-LA dyes more and better than any other dye I have ever used," writes Mrs. J. Webb, Mill River, P.E.I.

No poisons or acids in DY-O-LA. Use with common salt—and common sense.

Easy as washing. Same directions apply to every colour. (Be careful about discharging the old colour).

At the druggist's. Insist on getting DY-O-LA.

One package instead of three. Price 10c.

Commenting on the washy colors of British postage stamps, the Pall Mall Gazette expresses a wish that the British government would use "such excellent dyes as are in use in America and other countries, whose stamps are a pleasure to look at, instead of being an eyesore, like our own."

One Short Puff Clears the Head.—Does your head ache? Have you pains over your eyes? Is the breath offensive? These are certain symptoms of Catarrh. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder will cure most stubborn cases in a marvellously short time. If you've had Catarrh a week it's a sure cure. If it's of fifty years' standing it's just as effective.—57

All British ship owners are being asked to co-operate in the naval manoeuvres of the fleet.

A Cure for Rheumatism.—The intrusion of uric acid into the blood vessels is a fruitful cause of rheumatic pains. This irregularity is owing to a deranged and unhealthy condition of the liver. Anyone subject to this painful affection will find a remedy in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Their action upon the kidneys is pronounced and most beneficial, and by restoring healthy action they correct impurities of the blood.

London is undoubtedly leading the world in the matter of women's clubs. Twenty-one years ago there was not a single institution of the kind; now there are thirty, with a total membership of over 20,000. There are also several mixed clubs of which the women members number about 1,000.—The London Woman at Home.

A Curious Fact.

A man who had determined to kill himself went down to the river to commit suicide, and when he began to write a final message to his wife he could think of nothing to say except that some butter which he had ordered would be found at a certain grocery. His message bears out a certain fact discovered by realists—that in the supreme and soul terrifying moments of life the most ridiculous and trivial things often come uppermost in the mind.

Kingdon Gould was blackballed by members of a college society for refusing to be hazed. However, Kingdon is alive now, which is some consolation.

The demand for houses in Moyie is greater than ever. Here is an excellent opportunity for some person with a little capital to make a safe and profitable investment.

When two preachers met at Richmond, Va., a few days ago they hugged each other so fervently that one of them retired with a broken rib. This shows that even brotherley love can go too far.

Over in Grand Forks the "lid" is on tight. The instructions are that no liquor shall be sold in any hotel or bar between the hours of 11:30 p. m. of each day and 6 a. m. the following day. Saloons and hotel bars are closed tight on Sunday, and liquor must not be sold to an intoxicated person.

There is probably no other town in Canada for its size so prosperous as Moyie. The employees of the St. Eugene, who constitute nearly half the population, drew last month an average of $100 a month. We doubt whether there is another town in Canada in which an average of $100 a month is paid to such a portion of the population.

A clean sweep of American silver from Canada will begin on March 1st. The finance department has completed arrangements with all the Canadian banks for the collection of all the foreign silver in circulation. The banks will begin gathering it in and forwarding it to Ottawa at the beginning of next month. From there it will be sent to Washington and exchanged for gold. It is calculated there are $800,000 of United States silver circulating in Canada.
