MINERS' CHIEFS ARE INDICTED

Moyer and Heywood Must Stand Trial.

ARE TO APPEAR TODAY

All the Men Accused of the Murder of Stunenberg Are Held.

Boise, Idaho, March 8.—In the district court at Caldwell the grand jury returned indictments against all the men held on the charge of murdering Frank Steunenberg, with the possible exception of Steve Adams. It is understood also to have indicted J. L. Simpkins and another man whose name has not been learned, these two being still at liberty. Bench warrants were ordered issued. No information was given out respecting the indictments, and there will be nothing said officially until the defendants shall have been arraigned. Three of there Charles H. Moyer, W. D. Heywood and George E. Pettibone are to be taken to Caldwell tomorrow morning for arraignment. Others may be taken down, but no positive information has been secured excepting to the three. It is stated that these three are all included in one indictment and that an indictment was found against Orchard. Whether the indictments are separate or joint is not known. It was stated that so soon as the men are arraigned the defense will ask that they be given a speedy trial. This statement was made by Attorney Fred Miller of Spokane. It has been formally announced that Canyon county has retained W. E. Borah as assistant county attorney to assist in the prosecution of there caser.

Served Him Right.

Phoenix Pioneer: A man named Bennett drew his time at the mines Tuesday, and tried to get out on Wednesday's Great Northern train without paying his numerous bills. His creditors were one too many for him, and he was arrested on a vagrancy charge, brought before the beak and given 20 days in the Nelson jail, to think the matter over.

Afflicted with Rheumatism.

"I was and am yet afflicted with rheumatism," says Mr. J. C. Bayde, editor of the Herald, Addington, Indian Territory, "but thanks to Chamberlain's Pain Balm am able once more to attend to business. It is the best of liniments." If troubled with rheumatism give Pain Balm a trial and you are certain to be more than pleased with the prompt relief which it affords. One application relieves the pain. For sale by the Moyie Drug & Stationery Co.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES.

Canada leads the world in dairy export.

Canada has the most valuable nickle deposits in the world.

An effort will be made in Cranbrook to establish a high school.

A $500,000 Court house will be built at Vancouver this spring.

Next year the Provincial board of School Trustees will meet in Nelson.

Lumber business at Vancouver is reported to be better than ever before.

A big vein of zinc ore has been struck in the upper workings of the Payne.

F. Augustus Heinze is reported to have lost from $2,000,000 to $6,000,000 on Wall street.

A wood pulp and paper mill is among the possibilities of future Spokane industries.

Two crews are laying rails from the boundary line towards Bonners Ferry on the Corbin line and trains will be running over the road by April 1 and to Sandpoint by July 10.

The Blairmore hotel, which was lately destroyed by fire, is to be rebuilt. D. C. Drain, the proprietor, will erect an hotel building 48x60 feet, two storeys high and containing 21 rooms.

The Canadian Pacific railway has closed a contract with the Dominion Steel Car Co. for the construction of 500 steel drop bottom gondolas to be used on the Crow's Nest Pass line. These will be the first steel cars ever built in Canada.

A thriving bustling city of 5000 souls, the product of six weeks' growth, is what Manhattan, Nevada, boastfully presents to the mining world today. One mile of solidly built streets, erected, in three weeks and one and a half miles in six weeks, is probably the record for rapid construction.

P. Burns & Co. have started a strictly cash meat market at Calgary. They have no delivery and no bookkeeper and the difference in the expense will be taken from the price of the meat. The move is an experiment in the way of selling meat for cash and may prove a great success.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

Polly tossed it to her, and leaning back in her chair, watched her as she twisted the feather this way and that and arranged and rearranged the ribbon. At last Nina held it out deprecatingly, and Polly tried it on.

"Oh, you dear," she exclaimed, joyfully. "That's splendid! It isn't quite like the one in the shop, but it's twenty times more pretty and stylish. I've never had such a hat; it's a duck and a darling! And how quickly you did it! Why, I've been hours and hours fumbling at it!"

"I'm glad you like it," said Nina. "I used to trim my own hats and make my own dresses—"

"And no wonder, if they were as good as this!" said Polly. "Why!"—she stopped suddenly and pursed her lips—"I'm going to rehearsal in that hat, and if I don't knock the rest of the girls with it, well—I'm afraid I must go now, dear. You won't feel lonely while I'm away? And you won't fret? Promise!"

"I sha'n't feel so lonely if you will leave me something to do," said Nina. "Isn't there another hat, for instance, or a blouse or a dress that wants mending?"

Polly dragged a blouse from a box under the bed and slipped it on.

"That was made for me, if you please!" she cried with infinite scorn. "Observe the fit! You can't tell the back from the front, can you? And I paid twenty-two-and-six for it, I did, indeed!"

"It wants taking in here," said Nina.

"It wants burning!" retorted Polly, indignantly. "You don't mean to say you can alter it?"

"I can try. Let me, while you are away, Polly."

She set to work at it immediately. Polly had gone, and in her pleasure and satisfaction in doing even a little for the girl who had not only befriended her but bestowed her affection upon her, she found some relief of mind and spirit. She tried to think only of the present and her terribly vague future, but every now and then, in the quietude of the room, the picture of the past rose before her, and one man's figure stood out prominently in it.

Polly was away about three hours, and when she returned she carried a hat-box in her hand. Her face was flushed; her eyes were sparkling.

"Not done the blouse, really?" she cried.

"Oh, yes, some time ago. Slip off your jacket and let me try it on. Is that better? Oh, I hope so!"

"It fits like a miracle!" said Polly, solemnly. "I tell you what it is, Decima, you are a born genius! And look here! What do you think I've got here?"

She whipped out a hat and some materials.

"See that! I told you I should knock 'em! Why, the girls were like a flock of bees round me the moment I stepped on the stage. Oh, what a pretty hat, Polly! Where did you get it? and that sort of thing. They were positively green with envy. Then I worked the idea that struck me just before I went out, and I told 'em I'd get as pretty a one for 'em for twelve-and-six. They wouldn't believe at first; but Lessie Green said she'd trust me and fished out the money there and then. I told 'em my terms were cash, you know. So I bought the things as I came home—the same shop; it's a cheap but stylish one—and here you are. Hat and materials cost eight-and-nine; profit, three-and-three. But perhaps you don't think it's enough—" doubtfully.

Nina actually laughed up at her.

"Give it to me!" she said. "Why, it will take no time. And how pretty it is! Oh, I do hope I shall trim it to please her!"

Polly snorted. "Trust you for that! Jessie's bound to like it; and see here, Decima, if she does, the other girls will want to have their hats trimmed, for she's one of the best-dressed of our lot. I told her I'd get a swell milliner who'd do the things for us on the cheap."

"What a clever girl you are—notwithstanding the 'oh,' said Nina, laughing again. "I think this ribbon ought to go like this."

"It won't go any way until you've had some lunch," said Polly, taking the hat from her. "Oh, I know your sort at sight; you're one of those girls who'd work themselves to death if they weren't stopped at it. You've done a hat and a blouse to-day, and that's—oh, don't color up and look at me like that; I'm not going to offer to pay you for them!"

"I should think not!" said Nina, indignantly.

Polly allowed her to go to work soon after lunch, but, though the hat was finished, Polly refused to take it with her to the theatre that evening.

"Not much!" she said, knowingly. "What! Give the show away! No, no! Friend so full up with work that she couldn't think of even looking at the hat to-day. Oh, no. If you want to get on in any business, you mustn't make yourself too cheap; you must give yourself airs and put on frills. Why, don't you know that real swells, ladies and duchesses, have gone into the millinery business? Some of 'em run afternoon tea shops. Last would suit me better; more change and society, don't you know. But perhaps you wouldn't like that so well?"

"No, I think not," assented Nina.

"So I thought. I know your sort. You're the humble violet shrinking in the shade. There ain't many of 'em about nowadays," added the shrewd Polly, "more's the pity!"

She brought home another order—a toque this time—and Nina worked at it—for some reason, inexplicable to the male mind, a toque is a more elaborate performance than a hat—all the next day. Polly approved of it, but looked at Decima with stern scrutiny.

"You're working yourself to death. And you're thinking all the time," Nina colored quickly. "Look here, you want a change. Come to the theatre to-night. I'll pass you in."

Nina shrank from the offer for awhile, but finally gave in. Polly got her a seat in the upper circle—a back seat with a pillar to dodge—and went off behind.

Nina felt strange at first. She had never been to a theatre alone before, and the troublous times she had passed through made her nervous and self-conscious. But presently she grew calmer.

Mr. Harcourt was a liberal manager and had "presented" a first piece to his audience. "Presented" is not altogether inappropriate; for certainly the one-act "comedy" was not worth paying for. It was supposed to be sentimental, with a touch of comic humor and pathos. Unfortunately the comic and the pathetic changed places now and again, and the sentiment either irritated Nina or made her want to laugh. The rest of the audience stared at it with an Arctic indifference or guyed it under their breath, and when the curtain fell upon the forced situations, the forced dialogue, and the wooden acting—for not the best actor or actress alive could talk the stuff set down for them and remain flesh and blood—the people yawned and the male part promptly went to the bars for the refreshment they sorely needed. But it was very different when the band struck up the overture to the musical farce. The thing was well done, and Nina enjoyed it. She recognized Polly amongst the chorus, and once or twice caught a scarcely perceptible nod from her in the direction of the upper circle.

"Well, what did you think of it?" asked Polly, when they got home. "All alive, isn't it, and it goes with a bang, eh?"

Nina expressed her admiration for the big piece, but was silent about the first; and Polly nodded, as if Nina had criticized it.

"Yes, the first piece, 'For a Sister's Sake,' is feeble, isn't it?"

"Yes," said Nina, with deference. "The idea is a very pretty and effective one, but they talk—"

"Like people in a book, one of the old trumpish books, I know."

"And they're never surprised at the most extraordinary coincidences," continued Nina, warming to her subject. "Nothing astonishes them. When the man comes back from America with a million of money nobody asks him how he made it in four months; when the heroine gives up her sister to the hero they all take it as a matter of course, as if it didn't matter—"

"And it doesn't—to the audience," said Polly.

"And the little girl—"

"Shall I be a hanged when I die, mother?" quoted Polly. "Yes; if any sensible mother had a child like that she'd put its head in a bucket."

"How is it that Mr. Harcourt, who must be a clever man, puts on such a silly first piece?" asked Nina.

Polly shrugged her shoulders. "Oh, they don't think of anything but 'My Lady Pride.' Anything's good enough to play the people in. It's only the pit and gallery, and a sprinkle in the upper circle."

"Poor people! What have they done that they should be bored to death?" said Nina.

"Oh, well," responded Polly, "perhaps it makes 'em all the keener to see the big piece. See? But all the same I'm sorry for the people who play in it. Miss Tracey, for instance—who plays the idiotic sister—can act awfully well if she has a part to suit her."

The toque was as great a success as the preceding "confections" Nina had turned out, and nearly every day Polly brought home a fresh order. She put the price up, of course, and the joint earnings of the two girls enabled them not only to live better, but to go for little outings in the day time; so that Nina's face began to lose its sharpness and something of the old light began to creep back to her eyes. Polly made her promise not to work at the millinery at night, and Nina passed the time while Polly was at the theatre in reading—and dreaming of the past. One night Polly asked her to go to the theatre to see Miss Tracey, who wanted a new hat, and insisted upon giving the instructions herself. "We can't have her here; they'd all want to come." Nina hesitated, but at last consented. "Behind the scenes" is always somewhat awe-inspiring to the novice, and Nina made a nervous grab at Polly's hand as they passed amongst the forest of wings and "back cloths" to Miss Tracey's dressing-room.

That young lady was making up for the idiotic first piece; but, after a stare of something like surprise, she received Nina in the friendly "hail fellow well met" fashion of the profession and explained what it was she wanted. The call-boy summoned her in the midst of her elaborate description.

"Don't go yet; wait till I come off again, Miss Wood," she said. "P'r'aps you'd like to go to the wings and see the play. I'll put it right with the stage-manager."

She got the permission and Nina went up and stood out of sight. She'd seen the play once too often; and instead of listening to the vapid dialogue she let her mind wander. It wandered in so strange a direction that she roused herself with a start.

"Well, silly thing, isn't it?" said Miss Tracey with a moue of disgust. "I wonder they stand it. But it's wonderful what the Great B. P. will stand. About the hat, Miss Wood," etc.

Nina could not sleep that night. The idea that had come to her as she stood at the wings haunted her; and the next evening she almost mechanically got a pen and some paper and began to write. She was so absorbed in her task that she lost count of the hours, and had only just time to snatch up the many sheets she had covered and thrust them into a drawer as Polly came in.

The next night she took them out and fell to work again, read what she had written, and was going to tear it up; but something held her hand, and, with a grimace she put them away in the drawer again.

Faith

You cannot be expected to have faith in Shiloh's Consumption Cure, the Lung Tonic, as a cure for Colds, Coughs and all diseases of the air passages, if you have not tried it. We have faith in it, and we guarantee it. If it doesn't cure you it costs you nothing. If it does it costs you 25c. That's fair. Try it to-day.

Shiloh has cured many thousands of the most obstinate cases, and we do not hesitate to say that it will cure any Cold, Cough, Throat or Lung trouble. If we did not believe this we would not guarantee it. Shiloh has had an unbroken record of success for thirty years. It has stood every possible test without failure. Further is found in the many testimonials of those who have tried Shiloh and been cured. Mrs. Archie Taylor, Asaph, Pa., writes:—"I bought a bottle of Shiloh's Consumption Cure and found it very beneficial. I have two children, and they had a terrible cough. I gave them everything I could think of, but they got no better, until one evening my husband bought a bottle of Shiloh. We gave it to the children when they went to bed, and they slept all night. It cured them completely. I shall always keep it in the house." 603

A Winged General of the Seas.

One of the most extraordinary specimens of the fish family is the "nam hal gnan," or great general of the south sea, an animal of the whale species, which has its home in the Indian ocean. A full-grown nam is upward of thirty-five feet in length, pure black in color and has eyes as large as a saucer. Besides the above characteristic features, which may be said to be whalelike, with the exception of the eyes, the nam has two immense tusks which resemble those of the elephant, both in size and color, and two queer winglike membranes extending along its sides from the side fins almost to the tail. The old nams have a curious habit of marshaling their kind to do battle with the whales and the sharks, and old mariners say that they maneuver with so much intelligence and sagacity that they are known to all the islanders by names which signify winged generals, winged warriors or winged chiefs of the seas.

The Heliotrope.

Although the heliotrope is a tender plant, extremely sensitive to cold, it is one of the best plants for cultivation indoors. It seems to have few diseases and is usually free from insect enemies, while with abundant water and sunshine and sufficient artificial heat it will bloom all winter long year after year and is so tenacious of life that when cut down to a mere stick it quickly shoots forth luxuriant new wood. In addition to this the more the plant is pruned the more luxuriantly it blossoms. The blossoms should be cut with a considerable length of the new wood upon which they grow, and if at once fully immersed in water and then placed deep in a well filled vase they remain fresh and odorous for many days. The plant is a little difficult for amateurs to propagate from cuttings, though with plenty of water and sun and some bottom heat the young cuttings quickly root and prosper.

A Pat Reply.

President McKinley once had an applicant for the post of minister to Brazil who brought with him a petition signed by 7,000 Chicagoans. It seems that he was a picture framer, and as he went about canvassing for orders he was in the habit of collecting signatures to his petition. President McKinley listened respectfully to the applicant, questioned him as to his qualifications and finally explained that before he could give the matter serious consideration he would have to confer with the senators and representatives from Illinois.

"You know that we have to select big men for these big places," said the president kindly as he bade his caller goodby.

"Won't I be just as big as any of 'em if I get the job?" was the retort.

Father of the Weather Bureau.

The father of the weather bureau service was Increase A. Lapham, a modest and retired but ripe scholar, who lived in Milwaukee. He was the first to note by telegraph the progress of the wind currents and storms and to predict their appearance in specified neighborhoods. On the strength of a weather dispatch from Omaha in 1869 or thereabouts he announced the first storm on Lake Michigan that ever was heralded twelve hours in advance of its arrival. The first work of the weather bureau was under his charge in Chicago. It was on the small beginnings of Dr. Lapham that the entire system of the signal service was based. Dr. Lapham died in 1875.

The Dear, Worn Hand.

Few things are capable of touching one with a deeper sense of pathos than the shrunken, blue veined hand of one who is near and dear. Nothing brings a sharper pang of foreboding and a harder lump in the throat than the first time it strikes us that the gentle hand that soothed our childish pains and griefs and has gladly worn away its softness and beauty in our service is thin and withered, with purple veins that stand out like whipcords when it lies at rest. Such a hand ought to look more beautiful to those for whom it has toiled, whose suffering it has charmed away, than the fairest hand ever modeled by a sculptor.

Think the Earth Is Hollow.

According to a queer belief in existence among the Icelanders, all waters which flow toward the north are drawn thitherward by a suction created by the oceans tumbling downward through the hollow which, they firmly believe, penetrates our globe from pole to pole. Their authority for this curious belief is the "Utama Saga," a semisacred work, written early in the fourteenth century.

Holding Hands.

AN ALBERTA FOSSIL.

Bones of a Prehistoric Monster Found Near Bantry, Alta.

While on a hunting trip recently H. A. Crofton of Alberta came across some fossilized bones. From the few specimens at hand it is impossible to make a surmise as to what species of extinct monster the animal belonged, but the size must have been enormous.

The find was made in Dead Lodge Canyon, and the attention of Mr. Crofton was arrested by some of the original bones protruding from a cut bank. Investigation showed them to be embedded in a standstone formation, and it was necessary to obtain tools and put in some hard work before the body was even partly uncovered.

Work was started in from the bank, and the developments were watched with great interest. When the excavation proceeded far enough a large portion of the remains of some extinct monster were revealed.

Owing to the difficult nature of the work it was not found possible to uncover more than a small portion of the remains, but the vertebrae and ribs were laid bare.

According to Mr. Crofton, the backbone is as large as a man's body, and the portion exposed is about seven feet in length. Attached to the vertebrae were eight ribs of enormous size, measuring three or four feet in length, some of them a foot or so in width. There has been no time for further investigation, but three of the fossilized bones have been brought in by the discoverer.

They are all broken, but can be easily fitted together. As to what portion of the body of the animal they are from is purely conjecture. Judging from appearance, one which is broken into three pieces is probably a section of the tail. It is about ten inches in diameter and four inches thick. Through the centre is an opening which possibly contained the spinal cord.

Another, which is also broken, has the appearance of having been connected with one of the joints. One large piece, the only one which is whole looks as though it was a hoof.

A bone which has the appearance of a thigh bone has been forwarded to authorities in the east for examination and their opinion will be awaited with interest. If the remains are all recovered and in fairly good condition, Mr Crofton has made a discovery which should be of value and interest to scientists.

Dead Lodge Canyon, where the discovery was made, is one of the most weirdly interesting places in the Territories. It is situated between 22 and 25 miles northeast of Bantry, on the Canadian Pacific Railroad main line, which is its nearest point from the railway, and on the banks of the Red Deer River.

A CANADIAN FOREST.

Unique Reproduction at a Recent Dinner in Brooklyn, N. Y.

The New York Herald, of the 11th Jan., says: Unique among Brooklyn functions was a Canadian dinner given last night by Alfred Van Derwerken at his home, No. 295 Berkeley place, for his son, Alfred Van Derwerken, Jr., of Quebec. In the centre of the large table was an exact reproduction of a camp in the Canadian forest near Lake Alexander, where Mr. Van Derwerken and his friends hunt every fall. It was Mr. Van Derweken's sixty-third birthday.

Jacques Cayer, a French-Indian guide, made the hut with his knife. It was nearly three feet square, and in every detail was an exact reproduction of a log cabin used in the camps as headquarters. On the sides of the little cabin were miniature fishing rods, snowshoes and skins of animals.

At either end of the cabin were ponds of water representing the lakes that surround the Canadian camp. Floating on the little ponds were tiny ducks and loons, carved by the guide, and canoes modelled after those used by the Brooklyn men on their hunting trips. In the ponds were goldfish. Surrounding the ponds were rows of Canadian twigs, representing the forests, and partly concealed among these were various kinds of birds and animals.

Lining the dining room were rows of evergreen trees, such as abound in the Canadian forests. Partly concealed behind a little grove of trees, was seen the head of a big caribou, which was recently shot by Mr. Van Derwerken. There were stuffed animals in the room that were killed near the camp. Many of the courses were served in log cabins, canoes and on small snowshoes, all whittled out of trees in the Canadian camp.

Noted Speech of By-Gone Days.

Hon. Joseph Howe, of Nova Scotia, speaking in 1864, thus firmly laid hold on the kernel of Imperialism:

"If then, Mr. Chairman, the British and Colonial statesmen of the present day, cordially co-operating, do not incorporate this people into the British Empire, or make a nation of them, they will, long before their numbers have swelled so much, make a nation of themselves. Let me not be misunderstood, sir; I say nothing here that I would not utter in the presence of the Queen. If disposed to declare our independence tomorrow, I do not believe that Her Majesty's Government would attempt to prevent us by force. If they did, they would fail.

"But what I want them to understand is this, that they lost one-half of this continent by not comprehending it; and that just so sure as they expect the sentiment of loyalty to attach the other half to England, while the people of two small islands divide the distinctions and the influence of the Empire among them, they will, by any by, be awakened by the peaceful organization of a great country, whose inhabitants must be Britons in every sense of the word, or something more."

Leper Colony on D'Arcy Island.

Ottawa—Dr. Bryce, chief medical officer of immigration, on his recent visit to the Pacific coast visited the leper colony on D'Arcy Island, near Victoria, where about a dozen Chinese lepers are segregated. The outcasts are housed in two buildings. One contains six rooms, the other two. Each apartment is furnished with a bunk and bedding, cook stove and utensils. Ample provisions, such as rice, Chinese condiments, including cured fish, flour, pork, fresh meats and fish, are provided in abundance, besides, the inhabitants own two dozen fowls, and have under cultivation nearly an acre of cleared land on which they raise vegetables.

Pitiful as their lot may appear to those unacquainted with their conditions of existance, it is nevertheless the opinion of inspector Wilson, who has for the past seven years attended to their needs, that the Chinese after the first few weeks reconcile themselves to their enforced exile. The lepers range in age from a youth of 22 to men of about 45 years. The longest resident on the colony has been there for nine years, the last arrival was landed two weeks ago. Between occupying their minds at gardening and carpentering, their household duties and the preparation of their frugal meals, the inhabitants frequently amuse themselves and incidentally supply the community larder by shooting sea gulls.

The station is maintained by the Province of British Columbia, but a movement is on foot to have it taken over by the Dominion Government.

T. H. BELYEA, P.M., PROVES THAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURE PERMANENTLY.

Some Years Since He Used Them Now and He Has Had Good Health Ever Since—Story of a Well-Known New Brunswick Man.

Lower Windsor, Carleton Co., N.B., February 26—(Special)—"Yes, I have good health ever since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills." The speaker was Mr. T. H. Bulyea, postmaster here, and one of the most highly respected men in this part of the country. Asked to give his experience with the great Canadian Kidney Remedy Mr. Belyea continued:

"I had been troubled with my kidneys for a number of years. I tried several kinds of plasters and other kinds of medicines, but did not seem to get any lasting benefit. Hearing Dodd's Kidney Pills so highly recommended I decided to try them and they made a complete cure of me. That is two years ago now and as I said before I have had good health ever since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure once and for all. There is no stage or form of Kidney Disease that they do not cure completely and permanently.

The Pastor's Robe.

A story is told of the late Dr. Peddie, a Scotch minister, to whom his congregation had presented a pulpit robe. He had never worn a robe, and, after acknowledging the gift, he said he would wait in the vestry five minutes after service to hear any objectors to the innovation. Nobody appeared, but one old lady, who, on being asked what her objections were, answered that she had read the epistles of St. Paul and could not find any reference to the apostle wearing a gown. "What epistle did you read?" asked the doctor. "From Romans to Hebrews," answered the old lady. "Well, Janet," said her minister, "I have read from Romans to Hebrews also, and I could never find any reference to the apostle wearing the breeks. What would you think if you saw me going into the pulpit without breeks?"

SUFFERING WOMEN.

Find Health and Strength in the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Every growing girl and every woman nearing the middle life suffers from ailments peculiar to her sex. At these times the health and happiness of every girl and woman depend upon the richness and regularity of her blood. Look at the young girl whose blood is weak and watery. Her face is pale, her lips and gums bloodless. Her head aches and her back aches. She has no energy, no life, a poor appetite and no desire for exercise. She complains that even to walk upstairs leaves her breathless. And the woman in middle life—she is nervous, irritable and depressed — liable to sudden attacks of pain and distress that only a woman knows of. She turns from food; horrible dizziness, hot and cold flashes, make her life miserable. But Dr. Williams' Pink Pills banish all this misery, because they fill the veins with rich, strong, healthy blood which gives tone and strength to every delicate organ. The case of Mrs. Geo. Danby, of Tilbury, Ont., is one of the many that proves that no medicine can compare with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in curing the ills of womankind. Mrs. Danby says: "I think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a blessing to suffering women. For a long time I was a great sufferer from the ailments that effect so many of my sex. I was extremely nervous at all times, suffered a great deal with headaches and indigestion. In fact I was in a thoroughly miserable condition when I began the use of Dr. Williams Pink Pills, but after taking them a short time I began to improve, and through their further use, I am now feeling like a new woman. I am sure if all sick women would take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills they would be convinced of the great good they can do."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can make every ailing girl and suffering woman in the land strong and healthy if they are given a fair trial. But great care must be taken to see that you get the genuine pills with the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers everywhere or sent by mail at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

GEORGE HARPER.

GEORGE HARPER,
Editor and Proprietor of the Standard, Carman, Manitoba.

When a man has stood the wear and tear of the newspaper business for over thirty years and still retains virility, and love of sport sufficient in his make-up to annually hunt the bounding buck over the prairie or follow the squawking wild goose to its lair, according to the statutes in such cases made and provided, there is a case of cause and effect somewhere in the problem.

It may be that the satisfaction which the running of a successful provincial newspaper in Western Canada gives Mr. George Harper, editor and proprietor of the Carman Standard, enables him to follow joyously and successfully the trail of the sandhill stag, or it may be that the sound of the "honk-honk" of the wavy is a change from the clatter of the printing press and relieves the nerves of a newspaperman conducting an enterprising country paper and a large job printing establishment. Whatever may be the cause and whatever may be the effect in such a problem is a matter of indifference, for the editor of the Carman Standard is well known, and his many friends in the province of Manitoba are not worried as to whether a first-class newspaperman naturally becomes a sportsman or the lover of rod and gun becomes necessarily a good angler for business or a tireless pursuer of a political opponent. As a matter of fact, the combination is unusual and Mr. Harper is an exception to the general rule.

It was in the order of things that Mr. Harper should have been born in the county of Huron, the birthplace of many prominent Canadian newspapermen of the provincial press. He was born in Goderich. When he was seven years old his father with his family removed to the city of Hamilton and under the circumstances it is to be supposed that the future editor of the Carman Standard felt it a duty to go with them. Educated in Hamilton, he at an early age developed a taste for printer's ink in comparison with which the desire of the man-eating tiger for human blood is a passing fancy. He entered the printing business in the office of the Hamilton Spectator where he learned his trade as a compositor and for thirty years worked either in that office or the office of its rival, the Hamilton Times. The newspaper offices of the two well conducted, clever Hamilton papers were good schools of bright, up-to-date journalism and there is evidence of the brightness of the Spectator and the solidity of the Times in the Carman Standard of to-day. Thirty years train a man whose only holidays are a few weeks' fishing and shooting every year.

Mr. Harper didn't respond to the call of the West until 1893. Western Manitoba hadn't developed sufficiently before that time. The shooting excellent though it might be was not sufficient to lure Mr. Harper from the shadow of the Hamilton mountain and the charm of a newspaper situation dominated by John Robson Cameron until an opportunity came to buy out the Carman Standard. Mr. Harper bought it. There are several reasons that would lead one to believe that Mr. Harper has not regretted his western move in 1893. The town of Carman has doubled in population since his taking charge of its principal paper. Mr. Harper probably does not claim any particular credit for himself as to this, any further than the fact that a bright, newsy newspaper and an up-to-date job printing office are not supposed to be drawbacks to a town's growth and prosperity.

The Carman Standard is conducted on independent lines politically. Mr. Harper is himself a Liberal-Conservative and in the stress of political war when the battle wages fiercely all along the fighting line it is not to be wondered at if an occasional article in the Carman Standard would lead the casual reader to believe that Mr. Harper is giving his political predilections an outing. Political opponents have, however, little or no reason to cavil at the political attitude of the Carman Standard. Straightforward and fair, Mr. Harper is as much a sportsman in the political field as in the field of sport. He shoots on the wing and when the political flight is past disdains to fire at a sitting bird.

An enthusiastic sportsman by field and stream, Mr. Harper is a capital shot with the rifle or fowling piece and devotes the major portions of a newspaperman's few holidays to hunting and fishing trips and is looked upon as one of the most successful lovers of the rod and gun in western Canada. He occasionally goes far afield and has just returned from a successful sporting trip to the Okanagan Valley, the sportsman's paradise of British Columbia.

Some day when the stress of life in Carman becomes too strenuous and the rewards of a long, faithful and fearless newspaper career are evident in a magnificent bank account, Mr. Harper may make his lodge in the happy hunting grounds of the Okanagan Valley. In the meantime he will edit the Carman Standard, run a first-class job printing office and be satisfied with the ducks, geese and prairie chicken in the neighborhood of Carman.

Mr. Harper is married. His wife was Miss Russell, of Brandon. He has a family of one son, William J., Insurance Manager, Winnipeg, and one daughter.

It is well known that pure quartz glass possesses the property of transmitting very abundantly the so called chemical rays of light, by means of which photographic effects are produced, and it has often been attempted to make photographic lenses of quartz alone. Unfortunately quartz also possesses the property of double refraction, so that unless the opening of the lenses is very narrow good images are not produced. Recently a French optician, E. Morin, has succeeded in making small photographic lenses of quartz glass, in which some of the difficulties have been avoided, and the lenses show great rapidity of action. Still, the problem confessedly has not been entirely solved, and the new lenses are recommended by their inventor only for special purposes. Astronomers are particularly desirous to obtain photographic lenses possessing the peculiar permeability to the actinic rays that characterize quartz.

Creeks' Medicine Man.

The medicine man of the Creeks will not eat anything scorched in cooking. In treating a gun or arrow shot wound he as well as the patient will fast four days, only drinking a little gruel.

He will not allow a woman to look at his patient until he is well or dead. If his patient dies, the medicine man takes a lot of medicine himself in order to cleanse himself from the fumes or odor of the dead. The pallbearers, as we might call those assisting in the burial, also take the same cleansing process.

And, again, when an Indian committed murder, even in self defense, he went to the medicine man and took the cleansing remedy, claiming the remedy appeased the crime and the trouble to his mind.

At the full of each moon it was the custom of the bucks to drink medicine made by the medicine man to cleanse their systems. In camp the Indian killed nothing which was not eatable.—Indian Journal.

Reconciled Science and Religion.

A clergyman is quoted in Everybody's Magazine as confounding an advanced young woman who was demonstrating to him that science had disproved religion with this little parable. "Madam," he said, "I once knew a member of your sex who perfectly reconciled science and religion. She is a prominent member of the Young Women's Christian association, and she was making an address to a large gathering of women, which was interrupted by a terrific thunder shower. She shared with many the awful fear of thunder and lightning, and, with the others, she trembled in silence for a few moments. When a blinding flash was swiftly followed by a frightful clap of thunder she struggled to her feet and begun to pray, 'O Lord, take us under thy protecting wings, for thou knowest that feathers are nonconductors.'"

The Men of Turkey.

With the exception of the Mussulmans the men of Turkey are laborers, one and all. Usually in the villages (for there are no farms as we understand the term) and every one lives in a hamlet or a city) the men own the property in common with the rest of the family. When a girl marries she goes to her husband's home to live and when her children become old enough they take their turn in tilling the fields and marketing the produce. Agriculture is the main occupation everywhere, and it is of the simplest form. The farmer rises with the dawn and in company with his wife, sons and daughters repairs to the fields. One woman only remains at home to prepare the meals and set the house in order.—Southern Workman.

December.

"Nobody is worried nowadays by the fact that the twelfth month of the year is called the tenth, December," says a writer, "and no doubt even the ancient Romans soon got used to the anomaly when the new year was shifted back from March to January, though the old names of the months were retained. But there was one of them who made ingenious use of it—Licinius, a rascally procurator at Lyons under Augustus. He insisted on having certain monthly payments made fourteen times a year, arguing, when December came round, that as it was the tenth month of the year and there ought to be twelve there must be two more to be accounted for."

Democratic Norway.

Norway, with all its preferences for a monarchical form of government, seems to be the most democratic country in Europe. The king is not "your majesty." He is addressed, with sturdy indifference to formality, as "Mr. King," just as in this country we say "Mr. President." Haakon accommodates himself cheerfully to the democratic spirit and is to be seen walking about the streets of Christiania in a most unpretentious manner, carrying his baby boy in his arms. The civil servants of the state wear no uniforms, simple evening dress after the American custom being prescribed for state occasions.

A Tradition Dishonored.

The Choctaw Nation is humiliated because one of their number has broken his word. A Choctaw's word has been as good as a white man's bond. This honorable tradition of the tribe has, however, been violated. Robert L. Folsom, a full blooded Choctaw, was charged with murder and the time for his trial fixed. Then he was released; and when the trial day came he did not appear. He was finally arrested in Utah and taken to Durant, in Indian Territory, where he will be tried. Folsom is said to be the first man of his tribe to flee from justice.

She Played the Spy.

A Viennese baroness, recently murdered, carried the art of being at war with servants to the highest degree of perfection. She had a secret system of tubes leading from her sitting room to the kitchen and servants' rooms. By means of these she was able to hear all manner of uncomplimentary references to herself. She enjoyed this strategic advantage very much, for she was always hailing her servants into the courts, and she slept with a loaded revolver under her pillow for fear of assassination.

Strengthening Deficient Faculties.

Few people are well-balanced, well-rounded. A great many have splendid ability in certain lines, good education, fine training, and yet have some deficiency in their make-up which cripples the whole life and dwarfs the results of their utmost industry. Many of us have some little, contemptible weakness which offsets our strong qualities and ruins their effectiveness.

What a pity to see a giant in possibility tied down by some little, contemptible weakness which cripples what might have been a magnificent career! If parent or teacher would only point out to a child a weakness which, perhaps, will be fatal, if not remedied, and teach it how to guard against it, how to strengthen the defective quality by mental exercise, what a tremendous help it would give to the child, perhaps preserving it from failure.

It is pitiable to see a young man bowing to what he calls fate, which he thinks has been fixed by the contour of his brain or in his hereditary tendencies. Why should we drag on weaknesses through life, when a little common sense, a little right thinking in fixing new habits of thought would soon remedy them?

If you are conscious of a mental weakness, a deficient faculty, using a little concentration, thinking in the opposite direction, and dwelling upon the perfect faculties or qualities you desire, would soon put you in a normal condition. It is normal thinking that makes the normal life.

But if you leave your weak faculties alone—do not try to exercise them, do not try to enlarge them, do not think it worth while—how can you expect them ever to become strong? You can not develop a symmetrical body by simply exercising the arms. The same is true of the mental faculties. Those which are not used deteriorate. If you long for a thing and strive for it with all your might persistently enough and long enough you cannot help approximating it; you must get what you wish in some degree.—Success Magazine.

WORRIED MOTHERS.

Much of the worry which every mother of young children undergoes, would be spared if the mother kept Baby's Own Tablets on hand, and gave an occasional dose when the child was fretful, cross or feverish. Nearly all the ailments of childhood can be traced to the stomach, bowels or teething. For these troubles no medicine can equal Baby's Own Tablets, and the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that this medicine is absolutely safe. Mrs. Kenneth McInnis, Lakefield, Ont., says:—"Baby's Own Tablets are a perfect medicine in every way. There will be no sickly children in the homes where they are used." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Take No Risk With a Cold.
Further Developments May Prove Fatal.
There is Cure For You in
Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine

If you could depend on a cold passing off of its own accord it would be all very well to let it run its course. The risk is too great.

Consumption and pneumonia always have their beginnings in a cold. If you take prompt means of curing you will never be a victim of these or other fatal lung troubles.

Did you ever wait to think of it that way?

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is best known on account of its extraordinary control over croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, asthma and severe chest colds.

As a means of overcoming ordinary coughs and colds, throat irritation and the many diseases of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs it has made an enviable reputation for reliability.

Pleasant to take, thorough and far-reaching in action, and certain in its beneficial results, Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine should have a place in every house as a safeguard against consumption and other fatal lung diseases.

Mrs. R. T. Turner, Broadview, Sask., writes:—"We have seven children and have used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine for every one of them with good results. We get four bottles at a time and find it a good remedy to break up a cold on the lungs."

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, 25 cents a bottle, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every bottle.

THE CUCKOO.

How This Selfish, Restless Bird Gets Its Eggs Hatched.

A popular fallacy tells us that a cuckoo lays eggs in another bird's nest. She does not. She lays eight eggs on the ground. The eggs are in size, color, spots and shape in accordance with the information obtained, say, in Leigh woods: Out of the eight eggs five or six would closely resemble the hedge sparrow's. The other two might be those of a titlark, a wren or a linnet. Her male friends—about three or four to each lady—now come forward, select each an egg and carry it in its mouth to the nest of the prearranged foster mother. Only one cuckoo egg is placed in one nest. If he finds a cuckoo has preceded him on the same errand he seeks another cradle, knowing in a moment amid all the eggs present the cuckoo pedigree.

The deluded mother hatches the intruder with her own brood, and the interloper, having the faculty of being hatched sooner than the others, is of course the first to come out of his shell. He manages to wriggle underneath his brothers and sisters and presents them as a heave offering to the expectant rodents, mice, rats, stoats, and what not, and within twelve hours of his existence is the supreme occupier of the nest. He keeps his black mouth wide open continually, which the father and mother of the departed chickens as constantly fill until his body is too big for his home, and he departs therefrom forever.

The cuckoo leaves the last week of July. He is a restless being. After leaving Europe he begins in the north of Africa and ends at the Cape of Good Hope, whence he returns to Europe in the spring. Why does he go away and why come back? Food—the food he loves—the hairy caterpillars. He will eat other grubs, but these are his hourly bread.

It has been estimated in round numbers that out of every 100 hairy caterpillars that wriggle into life 99 are devoured by cuckoos. Everywhere nature is careful to maintain her balance. The cuckoo keeps down the millions of billions of hairy caterpillars and preserves our cornfields from being eaten up by hedge sparrows. The cuckoo is a born conservative and as long as he lives returns annually to the neighborhood of his birth.—Western (England) Press.

Breeches, Pantaloons and Trousers.

"Breeches," in the strict meaning of that term, were worn by the semicivilized men of the east long ages before a single page of the New Testament was written, having been quite common among the Medes and Persians, the Phrygians, the Gauls and the Teutons. Breeches were very "brief" articles of apparel scarcely covering the hips in the majority of instances and never reaching nearer than six inches of the knee.

"Pantaloons" were exaggerated forms of stockings reaching from the hips to the ankles and as tight-fitting as a pair of knit drawers. They were usually of three different colors—black at the hips, red from hip to knee and blue to the termination at the ankle. They came in vogue during the first half of the fifteenth century at Venice and were worn by the devotees of the patron saint, Pantaloon. Such garments were always called pantalini by the Italians.

"Trousers," the only proper word to express the existing styles in "pants," followed closely after the "knee breeches" of the Revolutionary period, being first worn in England at Oxford and Cambridge in 1812.

Remarkable Feat.

Recently an Indian fakir appeared at a circus in Berlin, where he astonished the audience by lifting a boy with his eyelids. The boy made himself as small as possible and was put into a net to which was secured a string that was provided on each end with a little cup just large enough to fit over the eye. The fakir pressed these little cups over his eyes, where they held fast, then threw his head back and slowly straightened his body, thus lifting his burden, which he then carried about, his arms being outstretched all the time, and finally lowered it slowly to the ground again. How is it possible for any man to do this? The only explanation is that the cups were fitted into the eye sockets so that they held on the edges of the sockets, but it is not likely that the trick will be imitated by even those prestigitators who consider themselves very expert.

Curious Singapore Law.

There is a unique law in Singapore which makes the coroner lots of trouble. That official complained the other day to this effect: "In this settlement Indians can burn any dead body they like without any written authority from any one. It is also a fact that no one can be buried without a doctor's certificate and a burial order. This is a beautiful state of affairs and one to which I have frequently called the attention of the authorities. I remember on one recent occasion I had to hold an inquest on an Indian at the mortuary, and on my arrival there I found that the body was already on the pyre ready to be burned, and I had to send the usher of the court to have the body brought back. The danger of crime arising from this state of affairs is obvious."

BREAD is never better than the flour it is made of.

Often it is not nearly so good, but that is the fault of the bread-maker.

Without good flour, good bread is impossible, no matter how skilfully it is handled.

Now, good bread must be good to eat, as well as good to see or to taste. Good-to-eat bread is bread that nourishes.

In the matter of nutriment,

Royal Household Flour

is supreme. It represents the best that is in the wheat, ground to a snowy whiteness and purified by electricity.

It produces bread that is light, easy to digest and best of all—nutritious. Ogilvie's Royal Household is to be had at all grocers.

Speech and Intellect.

A man who has, by disease or injury, lost the faculty of talking is generally also unable to write, and it is only in exceptional cases that one of these functions persists while the other is in abeyance. Cases of this latter kind show, however, that there are really two separate centers for the two faculties which are lying very close together and therefore generally suffer at the same time. If the disease affecting them be still more extensive the faculty of intelligent pantomime or gesticulation is likewise abolished. Persons who have entirely lost their language may still be able to play chess, backgammon and whist, and they have been observed to cheat at cards with some ingenuity. They may also be sharp in business matters, facts tending to show that speech and intellect do not run in identical grooves.

The Struggles of a Sculptor.

Augustin Rodin, the French sculptor, had a great struggle with poverty and adverse criticism in his youth. Of an episode of this early period a writer says: "With that inflexible will and singleness of purpose that never failed him throughout his career the young sculptor set himself to express in clay, marble or bronze his conception of life and art. He used his leisure in working at nighttime in a deserted stable he had transformed into a studio, at his wonderful mask of The Man With the Broken Nose. After eighteen months of hard and patient labor he finished this mask and sent it to the salon. It took the hanging committee fourteen years to discover any merit in the work, for it was rejected in 1864 and finally accepted only in 1878."

Odd Epitaphs.

A correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald contributes a few odd epitaphs from cemeteries in various parts of this country. The following is found on a tombstone in a cemetery at Trenton, N. J. Although the fact is not stated in the inscription, it would appear that the subject was a scale-maker or had something to do with weighing machines:

His ways were ways of pleasantness
In all life's fitful dream;
He struck a balance with the world,
And then he kicked the beam.

In the cemetery at Copp's Hill, Mass., is found the following epitaph:

Sacred to the Memory of Hannah,
Beloved wife of R'd Garlick.
She slipped her wind
After doing a week's baking.

The Three Heaviest Men.

The three heaviest men of whom any mention is made in history were Miles Darden of Tennessee, Lewis Cornelius of Pennsylvania and Daniel Lambert of England. Darden died in 1857. When in health he was seven feet six inches in height and weighed over 1,000 pounds. There is no record of the date of the death of Cornelius, which occurred in Pike county, Pa., but the account says that he was born in 1704. When in his prime he measured eight feet two inches around the waist, was six feet tall and weighed 645½ pounds. Daniel Lambert was an English freak of the early part of the century and died in June, 1809. He was of average height, but weighed 739 pounds.

"This Indenture."

The phrase "this indenture," which appears so often in legal papers, is of curious origin. In the early days parchment was used for legal documents because it was cheaper than paper. The leaves were not cut evenly, but scalloped with a knife, becoming "indented." Papers are now cut on straight lines, but "this indenture" still remains.

Beauty From Within.

There are faces so full with expression, so flushed and rippled by the play of thought that we can hardly find what the mere features really are, says Home Notes. When the delicious beauty of linements loses its power it is because a more delicious beauty has appeared—that an interior and durable form has been disclosed.

His Suggestion.

A well known author, according to Harper's Weekly, was once introduced to a fascinating but frivolous widow in Philadelphia. That evening the fair one had been indulging in tender reminiscence of the departed. "Ah," she sighed, "no other man can ever fill dear Jack's place. I loved him from the bottom of my heart."

"True," suggested the writer, who was aware of the lady's weakness, "but, remember, there's always room at the top!"

Saved.

"You say both his legs were shot off?"

"Yes."

"How did he ever get home—seven miles away?"

"Why, he said the shrieks of the wounded made his flesh creep so that he got home in a very short time."—Harvard Lampoon.

A Distinction.

"Things have come to a pretty pass," stormed the legislator whose request for free transportation had been refused.

"No, there is no pretty pass this year," responded the railroad official, who, while a person of humor, was withal a stickler for accuracy.—Philadelphia Press.

$100 REWARD $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

We need more houses.

Live and let live is the motto of all fair minded people.

To make Moyie a "city beautiful" should be the watchword.

Nicholas Longworth is now known as "Miss Roosevelt's husband."

Twenty-five houses could be rented in Moyie as soon as they were built.

Cranbrook complains of having too many useless canines. So has Moyie.

A man who evidently knows says that a "friend in need is a friend to steer clear of."

Attorney for Defence—Have you ever been cross examined before?

The Witness—Have I? I'm a married man.

Moyie has the only ideal summer resort in East Kootenay. An effort should be made to induce the C. P. R. to turn the traveling public's attention this way.

Toronto World: The C. P. R. has just paid the Province of Quebec a seven million dollar debt, this being the first time on record that a railway corporation has ever given up anything.

Vancouver World: The undertakers, grave diggers and monumental stone cutters are about to petition the legislature to throw out the anti-patent medicine bill, being a direct menace to their business. They contend that with all the opportunites offered by Peruna and other compounds for early graves, the average death rate is not as large as it should be in a population of 50,000, and should the patent medicine traffic be stopped neither calling will be worth following.

Eugene V. Debs says: "The arresting of Chas. Moyer and W. D. Heywood is a foul plot; a damnable conspiracy; a hellish outrage. Personally and intimately do I know Moyer, Heywood, Pettibone, St. John and their official co-workers, and I will stake my life on their honor and integrity; and that is precisely the crime for which according to the words of the slimy "slueth" who "worked up the case" against them, "they shall never leave Idaho alive." Let them dare to execute their devlish plot and every state in this union will resound with the tramp of revolution. If they hang Moyer and Heywood, they've got to hang me."

Always Keeps Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the House.

"We would not be without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is kept on hand continually in our home," says W. W. Kearney, editor of the Independent, Lowery City, Mo. That is just what every family should do. When kept at hand ready for instant use, a cold may be checked at the outset and cured in much less time than after it has become settled in the system. The remedy is also without a peer for croup in children, and will prevent the attack when given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, which can only be done when the remedy is kept at hand. For sale by the Moyie Drug & Stationery Store.
