A NEW GOVERNMENT AGENCY

Fernie Is in District by Itself.

M'MULLIN GOV. AGENT

Mr. Armstrong of Cranbrook will Act as Gold Commissioner.

Fernie Free Press: A government agency has been established at Fernie to commence May 1st, and Chief Constable McMullin has been appointed government agent. This step was taken by the executive council at Victoria last week, and W. R. Ross, M. P. P., J. H. McMullin and Government Agent Armstrong, at Cranbrook, were immediately notified.

For the present Mr. McMullin will continue to fill the position of Chief Constable of the district, and probably Chief License Inspector as well. Mr. Armstrong will also continue to be Assistant Gold Commissioner and Assistant Land Commissioner for the Fernie district for a short time. These matters will gradually be adjusted. Taking over these commissions will entail a lot of work.

Change In The Schedule.

Sunday 6th May the Can. Pac. Ry. summer time schedule will take effect. The double transcontinental fast service between Montreal and Vancouver, with complete equipment of coaches, diners, tourist and standard sleepers will be resumed, main line connection from Crow's Nest territory east of Dunmore and west of Revelstoke will be with the favorite train the Imperial Limited. From Vancouver the magnificent S. S. Princess Victoria will make the through trip to Seattle via Victoria. Boat service will be resumed on Kootenay Lake through to Nelson and on Columbia river between Robson and Arrowhead. Through passengers for Vancouver, etc. will go up the Columbia connecting with through sleepers at Arrowhead. Locally the train will leave Moyie, east at 14:35, west at 11:20 daily including Sunday.

Good for B. C. Lumber.

British Columbia lumber is to be admitted free of duty at San Francisco during the rebuilding of that city. This means that the price of lumber in this province will advance and that every mill in B. C. that can do so, will get after the business to be done in Frisco. B. C. mills will be running night and day to satisfy this demand and to keep pace with the demand in Alberta.

Enlarging Moyie Tunnel.

H. Y. Parker, resident engineer for the C. P. R. at Cranbrook, is calling for tenders for enlarging the Moyie tunnel on the upper Moyie lake.

MOYIE WILL PLAY BALL

Grounds Selected And Surveyed.

WILL MOYIE CELEBRATE?

Time to take Up Dominion Day Celebration if Day is Observed.

Moyie is to have something it never had before—a good baseball ground. The Moyie Athletic Association got busy this week and selected a piece of ground in the north end of town, had it surveyed and are now calling for tenders to have it cleared. Bids for this week should be submitted to G. A. Clothier, president of the association. There are some good ball players in Moyie, but they have had no grounds upon which to play or practice.

The Athletic association deserves every encouragement. Those who are behind in their dues should pay up at once. The dues have been reduced to 50 cents a month.

In this connection it is not out of place to mention that if Moyie intends celebrating Dominion day immediate action should be taken by the citizens. To have a good celebration there is plenty of work to be done, and there is no time to lose.

Doings at Creston.

Bruce Attwood, after putting in some time on his farm near Creston, spent a day or two in Moyie with his parents before going back on the road to work. Bruce is enthusiastic over the future prospects of Creston, and judging from the improvements going on there he has reason to feel that way. A farmers' institute has been organized there and is found very beneficial to the community. James Compton is president. A government bridge is being built across the Goat River, as is also a road from there to port Hill. Geo. Munro is building an addition to his hotel. A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Crawford recently. Mayor Fred Little has a new buggy, and when not engaged in executive duties spends his time riding over the country.

Miners Licenses.

All Free Miner's Certificates expire on May 31, and should be renewed before that date. F. J. Smyth is the deputy mining recorder for Moyie and vicinity and is the proper person to apply to for these certificates.

April's Business.

The St. Eugene's output for the month of April was 2,860 tons.

On next Thursday, April 10th, the employees of the mine will receive their wages which will amount to $10,000.

Mackenzies Returning.

The Mackenzie-Glover company, who have been meeting with popular favor in West Kootenay, will play a return engagement in Moyie next Saturday evening, May 12th.

Had Large Turnout.

The Odd Fellows of Moyie celebrated the 87th anniversary of the founding of their first lodge in America by parading and attending Presbyterian service Sunday evening in McGregor hall. The hall was packed, and Rev. Findlay was at his best. He preached a stirring sermon, which was listened to with marked attention. He paid the Odd Fellows the highest possible tribute: "The peculiar features of Odd Fellowship outside of the fraternal are its pecuniary promises to its members whether rich or poor, high or low, learned or unlearned, they are each alike entitled as a right to be visited when sick, to receive a specified amount each week as sick benefits or funeral expense, and their widows and orphans shall be cared for. No Odd Fellow's body has ever been pressed into a pauper's coffin or buried in a pauper's grave, nor have any of the widows or orphans of a deceased brother ever 'gone over the hills to the poor house.' Over $100,000,000 has been willing, liberally and fraternally contributed for carrying out the command of our laws, 'visit the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead, educate the orphan.'"

The singing by the the choir was better than usual, and it was augmented greatly by Mrs. Patrequin, who sang two solos, and by Prof. Wilson with his violin.

Representatives Elected.

Hugh Cameron left today for Nanaimo, where he goes as representative of the Moyie lodge of Knights of Pythias. The grand lodge convenes next Tuesday, May 8th.

At the meeting of Wildey Lodge I. O. O. F. Tuesday evening F. J. Smyth was elected as representative to the grand lodge, which meets at Victoria on June 13. A. G. Monkhouse was elected alternate delegate.

Julian went to her and turned her over.

"Dead!" he said. "Dead, quite dead. It was a pity you stayed, pussy! But it would have killed a man, to say nothing of a cat—" He stopped suddenly with his eyes fixed on the unfortunate cat. "It would have killed a man, unless he were protected as I am. Killed a man!"

He took up the cat and examined it closely. It was rigid with death, its eyes staringly open, its teeth showing.

"No one could withstand it," he muttered. "A cat has nine lives, so they say, a man only one. Poor puss!"

Suddenly he started. There had come a knock at the door. He stood staring above his bandage from the cat to the door. Then he caught up the dead animal, tossed it unceremoniously into a cupboard, opened the ventilator to its widest, removed the protective muslin from his face and, after watching the fumes disappear through the ventilator, opened the door.

"Oh, it's you, Vane," he said, casually. "Come in."

"Phew!" said Vane. "What an infernal stink! What on earth have you been doing?"

"Only an experiment, quite an ordinary experiment," answered Julian. "Come in."

CHAPTER XVII.

Success is sweet, we are told, but the sweet was embittered to Nina by the sight of Judith at the theatre, though she tried to be grateful to the Providence which had rescued her from poverty, given her so good a friend as Polly, and, ah, best of all, provided work for her.

Blessed work! The curse which we have changed into a blessing; and not more blessed to any man than the artist, whose one prayer, after he has finished one task, is, "Give me strength for the next!"

Nina sprang at Mr. Harcourt's suggestion that she should write a long play, and she set to work at it at once with feverish energy, for she knew that only by brain toil, the toil the artist delight in, could she escape from brooding over the past, and the fate that had linked her to a man who was in love with the beautiful creature she had seen in the box at the theatre.

But if Nina's joy was dimmed, Polly's shone brightly.

"I can see your future as plainly as one of those fortune-telling people in Bond Street," she declared solemnly to Nina. "You are going to be a famous authoress and play writer like—" She mentioned two or three of the ladies who have scored success as dramatists and so broken the spell which has so long rested upon women writers for the stage. "You are going to be famous, Decima. Why, you are famous already! Haven't you had most wonderful notices, and aren't the stalls almost full when the first piece begins? A thing unheard of till 'The Betrothed.' And wouldn't you like to have better rooms, and have a maid of your own, like Miss Tracey?"

But Nina shook her head and laughed.

"No, no, Polly. Let us go on as we are. Who knows? This next play may be a failure, and then—then we should have to go back to the millinery business."

"Not you! You've seen the last of bonnet-building!" retorted Polly, confidently. "But, oh, I do hope you won't be so silly and wicked as to overwork yourself. You are looking pale and thin—no, it's no use your denying it; I can see quite plainly. You don't take enough exercise, and I'm sure you want it. I've read somewhere that literary people ought to spend nearly all their time in the open air."

"You're thinking of consumptives, I fancy, Polly," said Nina; but she knew there was sound sense in the suggestion, and she went out more frequently.

There are worse places in the early autumn than the London parks—one sometimes wonders whether Londoners are as intimate with those parks as they ought to be—and Nina found, in this, the dead season, that they were almost as lonely as a country lane. There is one part of Hyde Park—which wild horses shall not induce me to indicate—where one could wander to and fro for hours without meeting a fellow human being; and it was here she found the plot of her new play and worked out its characters and scenes, coming home in the afternoon to put the thing on paper. During these hours she was almost happy; it was at night, as she tried to sleep, and in the early hours of the morning when she lay awake counting them as they were boomed by Big Ben, who hath no pity upon the sick and the sleepless who lie within hearing of his loud and insistent tongue, that her unsatisfied heart cried, "I am ahungered; give me food!"

Now and again she stole to her seat at the back of the upper circle at the Momus and looked at her little play, and of course she saw its many faults more plainly each visit, and learned the lesson which can only be learned by these faults of ours.

Sometimes she stayed to the end of the musical piece and went round to the stage door to wait for Polly; and one night she had what Polly would have called an adventure.

She was standing in the passage near the doorkeeper's den, the piece was just over and some of the men and women already leaving the theatre. As a rule they were all too tired or too much engaged in talking and laughing among themselves to notice her as she stood in a corner, but to-night a super, who had been drinking, caught sight of her and, stopping, eyed her with a tipsy smile.

"Waiting for me, miss?" he asked.

Nina glanced towards the glass box, but the man had gone away for a moment. She turned her head away as if she had not heard, but the fatuous young fellow approached her with what he considered an ingratiating smile and offered his arm.

"Come along with me," he said. "Come outside where we can talk, miss."

Before he could say another word or touch her, there came a light, firm step along the passage, and a gentleman hurried down it. He was a young man, with a handsome and pleasant face, in which a pair of frank and boyish blue eyes were the most noticeable feature. They were quick, as well as good-looking eyes, and he saw in a moment what was going on. Without a word his hand fell on the man's shoulder and he swung him round towards the doorway as if he were a skittle, and not a heavy one at that. The man looked round with an angry oath, but it died on his lips, and with a sullen "All right, my lord!" he went unsteadily on his way.

The young fellow was about to follow, when, hesitatingly, he stopped and raised his hat.

"I'm afraid the man was making himself a nuisance," he said, and his voice was as frank and pleasant as his eyes. "You—you have not been frightened, I hope?"

"Not in the very least," Nina replied. "He had only spoken a few words before you came up. But I am very much obliged to you for sending him away."

She did not color, or seem a whit embarrassed, but met his gaze of frank but quite respectful interest with the conventional case which is the lady's birthright.

"I am very glad," he said, in the tone in which one addresses an equal. "Are you waiting for anyone? Shall I go back and bring them up?"

"No, thanks," said Nina. "I am waiting for—ah, here she comes!"

He looked round and saw Polly hurrying down the passage.

"Oh! Miss Bainsford!" he said, and he raised his hat. Then he added, after a pause, "This lady might wait in the green-room, Miss Bainford."

"Oh, thank you, my lord!" said Polly, gratefully.

"Thank you," Nina also said, "but I shall not come again."

He raised his hat once more and left them.

"Well?" said Polly as they got into the cab. "Aren't you going to ask who that was?"

"I wasn't, but I will," said Nina with a smile. "Whoever he is, he was very kind. A stupid man spoke to me and—"

"Lord Sutcombe knocked him down! It's just what he would do!"

"It's just what he didn't do, I'm glad to say," said Nina, smiling. "That would have been too severe a punishment for a piece of unconscious impertinence."

Polly stared at her. "Lor'! I should have thought you'd have been glad if he'd done it! What a strange girl you are! But I see! Of course you wouldn't like the fuss. Yes, that was Lord Sutcombe. He's the son of an earl or a duke, or something."

"And what may a son of a duke be doing behind the scenes at the Momus?" asked Nina, but without any great interest.

"Oh, they say he's backing Mr. Harcourt—got a share in the theatre. And he's fond of the stage; there's a good many swells like him; they're never happy unless they're behind. But he's not a stage-struck idiot like some of them. He's a gentleman, and all right, and doesn't spend his time flirting with every girl about the place. Didn't 'The Betrothed' go well to-night, dear? Did you hear the hand I got in that last speech of mine? And the 'House Full' boards were up quite early. Oh, how glad I shall be when the new play's finished! If you'd tell me what the man was like, I'd get Mr. Harcourt to discharge him."

"Then I certainly sha'n't tell you," said Nina. "Don't think any more of it. It won't happen again."

Lord Sutcombe walked away from the theatre briskly, but suddenly he stopped, and, with a gesture of impatience, strode back.

"Who was the young lady who was waiting for Miss Bainford?" he asked of the doorkeeper.

"That was Miss Wood, sister of the author of the first piece, my lord," he replied. "I've heard that one of the supers has been annoying her. I'd only turned my back for a moment. I'll find out who it was, my lord—"

"No matter," said his lordship. "For the future take Miss Wood to the little room adjoining the green-room."

"Yes, my lord," said the man. "I'm sorry it should have happened—"

Lord Sutcombe nodded and went out again. His rooms were at Eversleigh Court on the Embankment, and all the way he thought of Miss Wood with a persistence which annoyed him.

"A beautiful girl—and a lady. She ought not to be hanging about a stage-door! Miss Wood—then the brother must be a gentleman. But that's not in any way remarkable; that first piece is full of refinement, and the touches of a cultured brain. Should like to see him. I wonder whether Harcourt knows more about them—him—than he pretends."

He was still thinking of Nina as he went up the stairs to his flat, and entered a handsome and delightfully furnished drawing-room. On a settee by the fire a young girl was lying with a book in her hand. She was his sister, Lady Vivienne, and an invalid. A fall from a horse, when she was a child, had injured her spine, and consigned her for the greater part of her time to a couch. She could walk only a few yards with assistance, and that assistance she preferred from her brother. Between the two existed an extraordinary affection, which dated from their childhood and deepened every day. Vivienne regarded her brother as the handsomest and the best man in the world, and Sutcombe was sure in his own mind that Vivienne was the sweetest and noblest of her sex. They had lived together in a London flat, in a hotel on the Riviera, at a cottage up the river, since the death of their parents, and, strange to say, Sutcombe had no secrets from her, from which fact the reader will gather that he deserved Polly's description of him; for the man who can lay his life open before his sister must possess a pretty clear record.

"Home early, Sutcombe. I'm glad!" she said, smiling at him through eyes that were a reflection of his own. "I thought you were going to a dinner at the Savage?"

"I was, but I changed my mind," he said, standing before the fire and looking at it absently. Her soft eyes rested on his face with gentle scrutiny for a moment or two, then she said, in a low voice:

"What is it, Sutcombe?"

He started slightly and smiled at her rather shamefacedly. It did not occur to him to evade the question, to conceal the cause of his preoccupation.

"Something that happened to me to-night," he said; and he told her of the little adventure.

"Such a beautiful girl, Viv! Coming along I tried to describe her to you, but I can't. For the life of me I couldn't tell you the color of her eyes, grey, I think, or violet. And her voice—somehow it reminded me of yours, you don't mind?"

"Not in the least, for I can gather that it was a nice one. And a lady, Sutcombe?"

"Emphatically so!" he returned, promptly. "I know a lady when I sees her."

"Did she look—poor? I mean, was she shabbily dressed?" asked Lady Vivienne going to the—feminine—point.

"No; certainly not. She was very plainly dressed, but in perfect taste, and, like a lady. I labor the point, don't I? But what I mean is that she was as quietly dressed as any other lady, and that there was nothing suggestive of the theatre about her."

"She may be poor and yet dress with refinement and taste," said Lady Vivienne, shrewdly. "And her brother is the author of the first piece, and is going to write the new play. And a cripple—poor fellow!"

She did not sigh with self-pity, but Sutcombe drew a little nearer and laid a hand gently on her hand.

"I should like to see him—and her, of course," she said, acknowledging the caress of his hand by a touch of hers.

He shook his head. "So should I. But I don't see how it could be managed, Viv, you know that I—and you, too—hate intruding on other people. I mean that because this lady is connected with the theatre there is no reason why one should force one's self on her—them. And, to tell you the truth, I don't think it would be easy, any easier, indeed, than it would be for them to intrude upon us. By George, not so easy for she was, in a way, more dignified and—and aloof than you are, Viv!"

"You are very interested in—them, Sutcombe," she said very softly.

He colored and bit his lip, but he did not turn away from her.

"I'm so interested in—let's be candid, Viv!—her, that I can't get her out of my mind. I'd give a great deal to see her again."

Lady Vivienne was silent for a moment. She knew her brother as few sisters know their brothers, and was aware that Sutcombe was not a susceptible man, indeed, that he was rather unimpressionable. There had been a fleeting fancy or two in his life, but it had been a fancy only and had been as transient as it had been superficial; he had never displayed an interest in any woman as the interest he was confessing to-night. Had he really fallen in love at last, had he at last met the "one woman in the world?" she asked herself, and if so, how would it be with him? A girl he had met at the theatre! With a sister's loving anxiety she had always been afraid of Sutcombe's connection with the stage; plenty of good women are to be found there, but there, also, are Sirens who have wrecked many a fair barque and devoured the crew body and bones. She leant on her arm and gazed at the fire musingly.

"You will see her again, Sutcombe?" she said at last, almost prophetically.

"I shall try," he said. "I must. Don't laugh at me; but you won't, Viv—"

"No," she said in a still voice, and with a smile that was pathetic. "I am more likely to—cry. Forgive me, dear! It is only jealousy, the jealousy of the poor girl who has had you to herself for so many years."

"And who will have me to herself for very many more," he said in a low voice. "What nonsense we are talking, Viv! I shall forget her before the morning."

"I hope so!" she responded fervently; "for—for, Sutcombe, dear—a girl at the theatre—"

"No!" he said, quickly. "She has nothing to do with the business—By George, you're right, Viv! She is connected with it, is—is—out of our set! Oh, I know all you're thinking, and—of course you're right. We'll say no more about her."

And, of course, five minutes afterwards he came to the door from the adjoining room where he had been smoking and returned to the subject.

"See, here, Viv. It's not at all unlikely, as you say, that they are badly off. I might help her brother in the matter of this play, might see that he gets fair terms from Harcourt—"

"And so earn the sister's gratitude," she said, with a smile. "Come in here and sit down, and let us talk about her. It's better than your brooding by yourself in there dear!"

Dean Swift Did Marry Stella.

The discovery of an unpublished letter in the library of Christ Church, Oxford, clears up the literary mystery of Dean Swift's relations with Stella. The letter was written by the Rev. Dr. Evans, Bishop of Meath, to Archbishop Wake, and is dated July 27, 1723. The Bishop writes:

"There was reported to be a promise of marriage between a young woman named Miss Van Omrig and the Dean. She designed to give him all her fortune, which was about £5,000, but on discovering that the Dean had already been married to Mrs. Johnson, daughter of Sir William Temple, she became indignant and made a new will."

The letter corroborates in detail the information as to Stella's announcement of the marriage and her wish that the correspondence with Dean Swift should be published, a request with which her executors refused to comply. Altogether the letter makes the evidence of Dean Swift's marriage too strong to resist.

The Caspian Sea.

The largest body of water in the world having no outlet in the ocean is the Caspian sea, it being 18,000 square miles in extent.

500,000,000 YEARS.

Age of the World as Stated by Prof. Darwin in the Heart of the Dark Continent.

Prof. George Howard Darwin, second son of the late Prof. Darwin and professor of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy at Cambridge, England, addressed the British Association at the meeting recently held at Johannesburg South Africa, on the subject of celestial evolution.

Prof. Darwin said the German astronomer Bode long ago propounded a simple empirical law concerning the distance at which the several planets move about the sun, and his formula embraced so large a number of cases with accuracy that they were compelled to believe it arose in some manner from the primitive conditions of the planetary system.

There were certain perpetual orbits in which a meteoric stone or minor planet might move forever without collision, but when such an immortal career had been discovered for our minor plant it still remained to discover whether the slightest possible departure from the prescribed orbit could become greater and greater and ultimately lead to a collision with the sun or Jupiter, or whether the body could travel so as to cross and recross the exact perpetual orbit, always remaining close to it.

If the slightest departure inevitably increased as time went on the orbit was unstable; if, on the other hand, it led to only a slight waviness in the path described it was stable. They thus arrived at another distinction. There were perpetual orbits, but some, and indeed most, were unstable, and these did not offer an immortal career for a meteoric stone; and there were other perpetual orbits which were stable or persistent.

If a complete solution for our solar system were attainable we should find, said the professor, that the orbits of the existing planets and satellites were numbered among the stable perpetual orbits.

After discussing in some detail the nebular hypothesis, Prof. Darwin sketched the evolution of a rotating liquid planet like the earth, which was the first stable species of our family, and dealt with the influences of tidal oscillations. In the retrospect both day and month were found continuously shortening. The system might be traced back to a time when the day and month were identical in length, and were both only about four or five of our present hours.

The identity of the day and month meant that the moon was always opposite to the same side of the earth; thus at the beginning the earth always presented the same face to the moon, just as the moon now always shows the same face to us.

Moreover, when the month was only some four or five of our present hours in length the moon must have been only a few thousand miles from the earth's surface — a great contrast with the present distance of 240,000 miles.

Prof. Darwin said that if at every moment since the birth of the moon tidal friction had always been at work in such a way as to produce the greatest possible effect, we should find that sixty million years would be consumed in this portion of evolutionary history. The true period must be much greater, and it did not seem unreasonable to suppose that 500 to 1,000 million years might have elapsed since the birth of the moon.

Dealing with the different estimates of the physicists and the geologists, Prof. Darwin said that from a calculation of the sun's total output of heat it seemed to be imperatively necessary that the whole history of the solar system should be comprised within some twenty millions of years.

Now we know, he said, that the earth contains radioactive materials, and it was safe to assume that if forms in some degree a sample of the materials of the solar system; hence it was almost certain that the sun is radioactive also.

Names in Ireland.

The Cornish names in Ireland are few and far between, but evidence of an extensive Welsh immigration is forthcoming in the fact that at the present day the name Walsh — pronounced Welsh—is to be met with in nearly every county in Ireland. The curious settlement of Welsh colonists in the baronies of Forth and Bargy, in County Wexford, who maintained their ancient manners, customs and language for some 400 years, no longer deserves the title of a "peculiar people," given to them by S. C. Hall in 1841, the Forth dialect having practically died out, though many of the old family names—Codd, Sinott, Rossiter and Walsh—are still very common in the neighborhood.

The Huguenots were granted letters of naturalization in 1674 and founded colonies in Dublin Kilkenny, Portarlington, Waterford, Cork and Lisburn. Many prominent, distinguished Irishmen have borne and still bear Huguenot names, among whom mention may be made of the La Touches, Trenches, La Fevres, Lefroys and Lefanus, of the last of whom one may say, in the best sense, that they are Hibernis ipsis Hiberniores.—London Spectator.

His Fears Realized.

After acquiring a considerable amount of money in the United States a young Manchester man returned home and decided to give his old father a treat by taking him to London to see the sights. It was a great event for the father, who had never been in a train before, and he commenced the journey with trepidation and many outspoken anticipations of dire events to follow. All went well until the train suddenly dashed into a tunned. Bang went the old man's fist on his son's nose as he cried: "I told you something would happen, you young villain! I'm struck blind!"—London Mail.

Births in Britain.

The British birth rate has been steadily declining in recent years, and the latest report shows the lowest rate on record—27 per 1,000 for London and 29.2 per 1,000 for 75 large towns. This scarcely exceeds the death rate, which must become the greater within a few years. Sanitation has reduced the death rate, particularly among infants, and this alone has postponed the beginning of race decline beyond the present time. The falling off in the birth rate, due partly to selfishness and love of pleasure, and partly to our strenuous modern living, is most serious among the middle and upper classes.

Olives.

If half an inch of olive oil is poured on the top of a partly used bottle of olives and the bottle well corked the olives will retain their flavor indefinitely.

The Best Steer.

A steer that produces the choicest beef is the one that is not only fat, but also well supplied with lean. Tallow often secures the prize at fat stock shows in preference to meat that is intimately interspersed with lean and fat. Weight does not always indicate quality of flesh.

THE WORD STAPLE.

How It Came to Be Applied to Articles of Commerce.

The word "staple," applied as an adjective to distinguish certain articles of commerce, had its origin in England in the early part of the thirteenth century. The merchants of the staple were the first and most ancient and were so called from their exporting the staple wares of the kingdom—namely, wool, leather, skins, lead and tin. The king's staple was established in certain towns, and certain goods could not be exported without being first brought to those towns and rated and charged with the duty payable to the king. The grower of wool contented himself at first with the sale of it at his own door or at the next town. Thence arose a class of men who bought it from him and became a medium between the grower and the foreign cloth merchants. In 1319 the company had the legal form of a corporation and was the oldest mercantile corporation in England. Edward II. had for the better collecting of duty on wool ordained that the staple for it should be a certain town in the Netherlands, and Antwerp was fixed upon. It was afterward successively removed to St. Omer's, Bruges, Brussels, Louvain, Mecklin and Calais. In 1353 the staple was fixed at Westminster, which caused so great a resort of traders that from a village it was raised to the dignity of a town. In 1378 it was removed to the place still named Staple Inn, in Holborn. Hence "staple goods" are such as have been duly appraised and have paid the regular customs duties.

MILLET'S INFLUENCE.

A Host of Painters Followed Him In Depicting Peasant Life.

In his own words Millet tried to depict "the fundamental side of men and things." His subject was the peasant life—not the representation of it such as one sees in opera or the pretty, sentimental aspect of it, but the actual drama of labor continuously proceeding through the four seasons, the "cry of the soul," echoing in the hearts of the patient, plodding, God fearing toilers. Everything was typical. We have spoken of his "Bower." Of another picture the critic Castagnary wrote: "Do you remember his 'Reaper?' He might have reaped the whole earth!"

Everything that Millet did was full of a deep seriousness and sincerity. He never was an "easy" painter, so that his greatness as an artist is perhaps more clear in the black and white than in the colored subjects. Certainly in his crayon drawings, lithographs and etchings he proved himself to be one of that limited number of artists who may be reckoned master draftsmen. Moreover, the character that he expresses is of that grand and elemental quality which sometimes reminds us of Michael Angelo.

Millet's influence produced a host of painters of the peasant, among whom the strongest are the Frenchman L'Hermitte and Israels, the Dutchman. These, like him, have represented their subject with sympathy and with understanding also.—St. Nicholas.

The British Speaker.

Not only does the speaker of the house of commons enjoy the material benefits of a lordly residence at Westminster palace, a salary of £5,000 a year, £100 a year for stationery and two hogsheads of claret and 2,000 ounces of plate on election, but he enjoys the less substantial advantage of taking precedence of all other commoners. By an act of 1689 it was provided that the lords commissioners of the great seal, not being peers "shall have and take place next after the peers of the realm and the speaker of the house of commons."—London Chronicle.

An Eye Test.

Most people believe that they see the same with both eyes. That this is not the case one can easily convince himself, by the following simple experiment: Cover one of the eyes with a hand or a bandage and let the experimenter attempt to snuff out a candle suddenly placed within a few feet of him. He will almost invariably miss the flame, either overreaching, underreaching or putting the fingers too far to the right or left of the flame. With both eyes normal and open the accommodation for distance and direction is instantaneous.

A Curious Tablecloth.

The German emperor owns a curious tablecloth presented long ago by the women of Sleswick-Holstein. It is entirely worked over with moral sayings that include the following: "Do not believe all you hear; do not say all you know; do not do all you would like." "Wilt thou here have spass (fun)—be careful with thy glass." "First weigh and consider, then dare." "German house, German land—guard it, God, with mighty hand." "Contentment is a rare art."

A Strong Swimmer.

The shark holds the record for long distance swimming. One of these creatures has been known to cover 800 miles in three days.

A CAMPBELLTOWN BUILDER SPEAKS

HE FOUND NOTHING TO EQUAL DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS FOR THEY CURED HIM OF HIS TROUBLE.

Mr. W. H. Wallace is a Well Man To-day, But he was Pretty Bad Before he got Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Campbelltown, N.B., April 23 (Special).—"It was cold started my trouble," says Mr. Wallace, of this place. "I am a contractor and builder and my work causes me to be out and exposed to all weathers so I suppose it was in that way I got cold. Anyway it settled in my kidneys and made me pretty sick. I got Lumbago in the back, cramp in the muscles, pains in the loins, shortness of breath, a dragging pain at the loins and my urine was thick with dark sediment. Then I knew the kidneys were to blame so I took Dodd's Kidney Pills and they soon put me in shape and cured me so that I have had no trouble with my kidneys since."

IDEAL PLANS FOR RESIDENTIAL PARK

Winnipeg's New Suburban Site the Most Beautiful in the Canadian West.

Winnipeg's new residential sub-division, Tuxedo Park, which has been talked of considerably during the past few months will shortly be placed on the market. This is the most pretentious and most elaborate sub-division ever made in Winnipeg, and in fact excels anything of the kind yet attempted outside of the old and most aesthetic cities on the continent. The first authentic announcement obtained regarding Tuxedo Park was made recently by Mr. Rickson Outhet, of New York, and Montreal, who is one of the most celebrated engineers and designers in America and makes a specialty of laying out city plots. Mr. Outhet spent over a month in Winnipeg, and previous to his departure for the south he was induced to disclose the purpose of his visit. In an interview with a newspaper man, he said: "My visit was entirely of a professional nature. My services were retained by the Tuxedo Park Co. of Winnipeg, and I have been engaged in preparing plans which are intended to convert the Wright farm which lies east of the new City Park in St. Charles and has the agricultural college in its midst, and is skirted on the north by the Assiniboine river, into Tuxedo park, which, in my opinion, is destined to be the suburb beautiful of your city.

"Nearly three years ago," continued Mr. Outhet, "Mr. F. W. Heubach, the managing director of the company called at my office in Tuxedo Park, New York, and gave me a rough outline of the lay of the land, its extent and manifold advantages as a residential district, and asked me to prepare a plan for its subdivision. This I did and in a month or so forwarded my sketch for approval. The sketch was submitted to the board of directors of the Tuxedo Park Co. last fall, and did not prove entirely satisfactory. Some changes were deemed necessary. These I made and again returned the plans. About six weeks ago I received a wire to come to Winnipeg, and since my arrival have been busily engaged upon the ground preparing a new plan, which I am confident will not only satisfy the directors of the company, but also strongly appeal to the progressive views of your citizens. No, I cannot show these plans. They are hardly yet in shape to be examined by the press. I can merely say that the Tuxedo Park of Winnipeg will be in advance of anything before attempted in the west.

"The Wright farm, the property in question, as you know, runs for a mile along the prettiest part of the Assiniboine river, and back to the tracks of the Canadian Northern Railway. Further west it adjoins the new city park, while the Manitoba agricultural college property is surrounded on three sides by this magnificent tract. These two features alone insure rapid development of Tuxedo as a residential district, and guarantee large profits to the wise investor.

"The system of diagonal avenues is sure to be immensely popular. The idea is copied principally from the lay-out of Washington, D. C., one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and although instituted so long ago as 1791, to-day represents one of the most popular styles of landscape architecture ever adopted. Of course this system uses up considerable more land, but the directors of Tuxedo park have not economized, either in this way or any other way, and I believe their efforts to make this new subdivision the most beautiful in the west will certainly meet with the approval of all residents of Winnipeg who are seeking a suburban home. Among the other features is a large reserve for athletic purposes and an admirable golf links. A parkway drive, 140 feet in width, will wind along the course of the Assiniboine, and all riverside houses will be required to face in this direction. Another point is that all sewers, gas pipes, water mains and electric light wires will be laid in the lanes. Thus the streets and avenues, once asphalt is laid, will always remain intact and presentable.

"Probably the most advanced idea is that of the speedway, which runs almost around the suburb. It is laid out so as to provide, (1) regular roadway; (2) bridle path; (3) horse speedway; (4) automobile speedway, besides boulevards, walks, etc. The speedway is the longest straightaway course in the world, and is a private road without any intersection. It is therefore entirely under the control of the Tuxedo company, and no limit can be fixed by either municipal or civic authorities upon the speed of those using the same. Certainly this should prove one of the greatest summer attractions to those interested in out-door sports. In a word, I firmly believe that Tuxedo park, as it is now being developed, will prove one of the most attractive, the most accessible and most pleasure giving suburbs in America. The plan is ideal; the method of carrying it out the most progressive."

Mr. Outhet expressed both pleasure and surprise at what he termed "this great Winnipeg," and the hope that the work he had already done here would result in his early recall to put the finishing touches on the plans for the suburb beautiful.

"Madam," said a nervous passenger to the mother of a howling imp in the express train, "is there anything any of us can do to pacify your little boy?" "O, thank you, yes," said the mother of the spoiled child. "You see, the dear little pet just wants to throw his jam tart at the passengers, and I was afraid they wouldn't like it. Please to stand where you are. Now, stop crying, darling. This kind gentleman wants to play with you."

CHILDHOOD'S PERILS.

The so-called soothing medicines contain poisonous opiates that deaden and stupefy, but never cure the illnesses of childhood. "Baby's Own Tablets are guaranteed to contain no opiate, they act on the stomach and bowels and thus remove the cause of nearly all the ills that afflict little ones. In this way they bring natural, healthy sleep, and the child wakes up bright and well. Mrs. A. Weeks, Vernon, B.C., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets, and can cheerfully say that I have found them all you claim for them." These Tablets are good for children of all ages from birth onward. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25c a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Vice-Admiral Cervera has been appointed Spanish naval commander at Ferrol on the Bay of Betanzos.

"Perfectly Trustworthy" is the character of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It can be used with the utmost confidence that it will do what is claimed for it. It is sure in its effects, as the use of it will clearly demonstrate and can be relied upon to drive a cold out of the system more effectively than any other medicine. Try it and be convinced that it is what it is claimed to be.

German papers deny that Germany is working against the United States in connection with the Hague peace conference.

A Medicine Chest in itself.—Only the well-to-do can afford to keep a medicine chest, but Dr. Thomas Eclectric Oil, which is a medicine chest in itself, being a remedy for rheumatism lumbago, sore throat, colds, coughs catarrh, asthma, and a potent healer for wounds, cuts, bruises, sprains etc. is within the reach of the poorest, owing to its cheapness. It should be in every house.

Another Idol Tottering.

Another famous saying is now disputed. Dr. Miller Maguire contends that the Duke of Wellington never said, "Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton." Wellington himself knew very little of the playing fields at Eton. It is quite true that he was for a brief period at the famous school, but when his mother discovered that he was making no progress whatever there, either at games or at lessons, he was removed at about the age of fifteen, and sent to another school in Brussels, where he learned most of what he knew. At least a score of the leading officers of the British army who were the Duke's contemporaries knew even less about Eton than he did.—N.Y. Tribune.

CURED HIS WIFE of LA GRIPPE

Quebec Man tells how the Great Consumptive Preventative was an all-round Benefit

"My wife took La Grippe when she was in Ottawa," says R. N. Dafoe of Northfield Farm, Que., in an interview. "She got a bottle of Psychine and after using it for a few days she was quite well. I took a cold and am using it and am getting all right. I think Psychine is one of the best tonics on the market to-day."

There you have the whole matter in a nutshell. La Grippe and colds are among the forerunners of consumption.

This man had one, his wife had the other. Psychine not only cured both but it built them up so that their bodies are strong enough to resist disease. All seeds of consumption are killed by

S. N. WYNN.

Managing Editor of the Yorkton Enterprise.

Of a verity the Canadian West is the young man's country when the managing editor of a leading newspaper in an important town, the centre of a prosperous district, is not yet twenty-one years of age. In truth, the young man who holds such a responsible position, competently, and to the satisfaction of a large list of subscribers, must be beyond the ordinary in skill, shrewdness, business ability, and knowledge of men and things.

Mr. S. N. Wynn, of "The Enterprise," a newspaper of more than passing influence and typographical appearance, published in the town of Yorkton, in the newly created Province of Saskatchowan, was born November 26, 1885, and although a few months have yet to pass before he is legally entitled to register his vote in public affairs, still he exercises considerable voice in matters of general interest in the Province and district where he has made his home and place of business.

He is a native of the Province of Ontario, having been born in the town of Palmerston.

After obtaining a good English education at the Public and High schools of his native province, he began the printing business seven years ago as devil in the office of the Tribune newspaper of Toronto Junction, where his father and family reside.

The young novitiate in the art preservative of arts quickly realized that the day of the typesetting machine had arrived in the publishing business and he took every available opportunity to become a skilled and expert operator. When this was accomplished he looked beyond the comparatively limited opportunities afforded a skilled operator of a typesetting machine in the printing office of an eastern Ontario newspaper and realized the chances offered in a country where lack of years was an advantage rather than a drawback where more than anywhere else in the wide world was recognized the truth of the saying that youth must be served. And Mr. Wynn came to Western Canada. Two years ago he went to Yorkton which he shrewdly believed would give him an opportunity of advancement beyond the manipulation of a typesetting machine.

A progressive town, the market place of an extensive and splendid agricultural district which was becoming rapidly settled by enterprising and intelligent farmers, Yorkton gave every opportunity for the growth and expansion of a well-conducted local newspaper, and for a large and lucrative job-printing business.

A year ago, one year after his connection with the paper, Mr. Wynn was appointed managing editor of the Yorkton Enterprise, which is considered one of the most successful and one of the liveliest newspapers of the country press of the Canadian West, and has since added 150 names to the subscription list, which has now passed the 1,000 mark and is still increasing. The Yorkton Enterprise is not only a brightly written weekly newspaper covering the news of a well-settled, prosperous district, but has in connection with it a well-equipped job-printing establishment where, largely through modern machinery and the modern ideas of the managing editor, who is also the practical manager of all the departments, the highest class work of a well-appointed provincial printing office is turned out to supply the growing needs of one of the most progressive sections of Western Canada.

Dogs Eat a Church.

From the loneliest mission station in the world, on an island 700 yards broad, in the remote Arctic regions north of Labrador, the Rev. E. J. Peck has reached England after a perilous voyage in a 60-ton schooner. The missionary's first church at Blackwell's Island, Baffin Land, was made of seal skins, but met with an untimely fate, being completely devoured by Eskimo dogs. In spite of privations Mr. Peck and his colleague, Mr. Bilby, gave regular teaching to the neighboring Eskimos, and translated the New Testament and Genesis into Baffin Land Dialect.

Where the Douma Will Meet.

The Tauride Palace, in St. Petersburg, which has been appointed by the meeting place of the Russian Douma on May 10, is being rapidly put into a condition to receive Russia's parliament. The whole central portion of the palace will be occupied by the representatives. It is a hall about as large as the House of Representatives in Washington, and is entirely decorated in white and adorned with frescoes from Potemkin's time. While behind the President's seat and facing the representatives is a large bow window looking out on a garden.

The seats and desks of the representatives have been arranged around the hall, tier on tier, as in a theatre. The tribune from which the members will address the house is in the center, and on each side of it are two seats for the Secretaries of the Douma. The president's chair is behind the tribune, as are also the places for the Ministers and their assistants and the press. There are 561 seats for representatives, and under each is a ventilator.

The desks have sliding tops, which will thus do away with the banging of lids, to which turbulent Parliament artists might resort. No place has been made for ink wells, which are not to be permitted, and the representatives will have to make pencil notes.

The Tauride Palace was built in 1783 and was presented by the Empress Catherine II. to Prince Potemkin, the "hero of Taurus," after the conquest of the Crimea. When the prince died in 1791 it became Crown property, and has since then been used as an exhibition hall.

SPRING ADVICE.

Do Not Dose with Purgatives and Weakening Medicines—What People Need at this Season is a Tonic.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That's the spring feeling. You are easily tired, appetite variable, sometimes headaches and a feeling of depression. Or perhaps pimples and eruptions appear on the face, or you have twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order, that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble. Don't dose yourself with purgative medicines in the hope that you can put blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system, and weaken instead of giving strength. What you do need is a tonic medicine that will make new, rich, red blood, build up the weakened nerves and thus give you new health and strength. And the one medicine to do this speedily and surely is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose of this medicine makes new, rich blood which makes weak, easily tired and ailing women bright, active and strong. If you need a medicine this spring try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and you will never regret it. This medicine has cured thousands and thousands in every part of the world and what it has done for others it can easily do for you.

Medicine dealers everywhere sell these pills or you can get them direct from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

The New Pard Gets an Option.

Fired with an exalted opinion of his own worth, and laden with the burden of what he did not know, a youthful disciple of the science of mining blew into cobalt recently. His garb was what convention ruled—he had corduroy trousers and his leggings were of tan leather. He even carried a little pick, so that all might know he was a mining man. Had not the good people at home sent him forth to make his fortune, assuring him of ample funds should he find a property of worth upon which to exert his energies?

Bill and Joe, "pardners," were standing on the street when he walked up the hill. They knew the breed.

"I say it's quartz," said Bill.

"It's calcite," said Joe.

"No, it ain't," "No, it ain't," said Bill again, and he waved a piece of Cobalt silver ore all covered with bloom before the eyes of the new arrival.

The man who had a tender heart for the ignorance of others stopped hesitated, and finally walked towards the disputants.

"Say, pard," said Bill, "know anything about rock?"

"Well, I should," said the learned one. "I've been to the School of Mines."

"You're the man we want," said Joe; "tell us whether this is quartz or calcite."

The immaculate youth finally decided the rock was calcite, and then went on to remark: "This is the decomposition produce of cobalt. Cobalt bloom, easily recognized by its delicate pink color. If one heats it it becomes blue. Where did you get it?"

"Found it a month ago on a claim of which we just got a record. We're holding it at $100,000."

"Oh, I can negotiate a hundred thousand for a claim if its worth it."

"You bet your boots this one's worth it," said Bill; "but we don't want no fooling with this option business."

"But if you give me an option I will pay you for it. I must have an option before I can make a deal."

"Well," said Joe, "you give us fifty dollars for a ten days' option on this property and we'll sign."

"Not with me," said Bill. "Make it $100 and I will go you."

So the terms were agreed upon, and the youth became the holder of a piece of paper.

The following day, perspiring, he floundered from the woods on the shores of Sasaginaga Lake, where he found a couple of fellows hitting a drill.

"Could you gentlemen tell me the locality of the Anaconda mine, being the southeast corner of the north half of lot 7, in 6th concession of Coleman?"

The miners thought for a while, when one of them said: "Well, pard, from what I know of this locality, I guess it must have been sunk in the bottom of the lake out there in the year one."

"Oh, that cannot be," said the youth. "I have an option on it. I must hunt up the men who are to sell me the property and find out about it."

Up to date he has not found them.—Toronto Globe.

Over $117,000 has been given this year by the Presbyterians of Canada for work in the foreign fields. The amount contributed for home mission work was over $150,000. BRONCHITIS GROWS CHRONIC

And returns year after year or develops into Asthma or Consumption, the Cure is

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine

Bronchitis is too serious a disease to trifle with.

Children are most likely to contract bronchitis, and if neglected, it becomes chronic and returns year after year until it wears the patient out or develops into some deadly lung disease.

Chills and fever, nasal or throat catarrh, quick pulse, loss of appetite and feelings of fatigue and languor are among the first symptoms.

The cough is dry and harsh. There are pains in the chest, which are aggravated by deep breathing and coughing. Expectoration is of a frothy nature, stringy, tenacious and sometimes streaked with blood.

Pains in the limbs or joints and extreme depression and weakness result from continuation of the disease.

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is, we believe, the most effective treatment for bronchitis that money will buy.

It is the most effective treatment for bronchitis because it reaches in its effect on the whole system, not only loosening the hard, dry cough, but actually and thoroughly curing the disease so that it does not return.

Mrs. Richmond Withrow, Shubenacadie, Hants Co., N.S., writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine with good success. My second daughter was troubled with bronchitis from the age of three weeks. Oftentimes I thought she would choke to death. The several remedies we got did not seem to be of much use, but the first dose of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine brought relief, and further treatment made a thorough cure. This trouble used to come back from time to time but the cure is now permanent. Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has saved us many doctor's bills, and I would not be without it in the house for many times its cost."

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, 25 cents a bottle; family size, three times as much, 60 cents, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

To Electrify C.P.R.

It is learned that the Canadian Pacific Company has decided to await the outcome of experiments by the New York Central and New York New Haven & Hartford Railway Companies before taking steps for the electrification of any part of its system. Both the latter railways are spending enormous sums upon experiments, the former with a direct current and the latter with a single phase alternating current. The alternating current has perhaps the advantage of cheaper installation. It does not yet seem to be clear which system is preferable, and while there is so much doubt and uncertainty the C.P.R. prefers to let electricity alone. Once the electrification of steam railways on a large scale has passed beyond the experimental stage however, there is little doubt that the C.P.R. will be prepared to adopt the system. They have accumulated a lot of data on the subject, and will be prepared to act at the earliest possible moment. The line from Montreal to Quebec will in all probability witness the first installation. All the electric power necessary can be obtained from Shawinigan Falls, providing the price is satisfactory. That, however, it is presumed, can easily be arranged.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75c. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

"My Physicians Told Me I Must Die, but South American Kidney Cure cured me of that awful Bright's Disease." This is a sentence from a letter of a well-known business man in a western town who through overwork and worry had contracted this kidney pestilence. It will relieve instantly and cure all kidney diseases.—102

Churchill and Victoria.

When Lord Randolph Churchill was leader of the house of commons he was a somewhat unconventional occupant of that exalted post, according to a story in the biography by his son.

"I am commanded by the Queen," said Lord Iddesleigh, writing to Lord Randolph from Balmoral, "to say that her Majesty was greatly amused by the contents of your despatch box last night. I suppose you won't understand this message without some explanation—there was a liberal sprinkling of tobacco in it!"

Her Weak Point.

The dream of suffrage had been realized. There were female police. After a desperate struggle one of the brave lady cops had arrested two porch climbers single handed.

"Don't dare to resist," she hissed; "if you do I shall shoot."

There was an ominous click.

"Don't shoot, lady," said one of the porch climbers suavely; "we won't resist, but I just wanted to tell yer dat during de row yer head got mussed and yer hat aint on straight."

The lady cop flushed with embarrassment.

"Gracious!" she exclaimed. "Where can I find a mirror? I could never think of going along the street like this. Wait here until I return."

And the porch climbers slipped off in the shadows, while the lady cop went to find a mirror.—Chicago News.

Pale, Thin, Nervous?

Then your blood must be in a very bad condition. You certainly know what to take, then take it—Ayer's Sarsaparilla. If you doubt, then consult your doctor. We know what he will say about this grand old family medicine. Sold for over 60 years.

This is the first question your doctor would ask: "Are your bowels regular?" He knows that daily action of the bowels is absolutely essential to recovery. Keep your liver active and your bowels regular by taking laxative doses of Ayer's Pills.

The War on Mosquitoes.

The U. S. Mosquito Extermination society is in session in New York and some interesting statements were made. President Mathewson, in his opening address said that a large percentage of the population of the country yearly lost their lives, or are incapacitated by disease from mosquitoes. There are over 100 species of mosquitoes in the United States. Mosquitoes require one to three weeks to develop from eggs to winged insects. Some species lay as many as 300 or 400 eggs at a time. Only few mosquitoes live a month. Rigid tests prove that certain species are the only natural means of transmitting malaria and yellow fever. Mosquitos are a needless and dangerous pest. Their propagation can be prevented.

Awful Experience with Heart Disease.—Mr. L. J. Law, Toronto, Can., writes: "I was so sorely troubled with heart disease that I was unable for 18 months to lie down in bed lest I smother. After taking one dose of Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure I retired and slept soundly. I used one bottle and the trouble has not returned."—89

The number of cases of swine fever in Great Britain has been reduced from 3,140 in 1901 to 817 in 1905.

Do Not Delay.—When through debilitated digestive organs, poison finds its way into the blood, the prime consideration is to get the poison out as rapidly and thoroughly as possible. Delay may mean disaster. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a most valuable and effective medicine to assail the intruder with. They never fail. They go at once to the seat of the trouble and work a permanent cure.

A Fine Bird.

There is a man in Bangkok who keeps a goose as a watchdog. He has trained the bird to imitate a motor car hooter whenever a stranger approaches. So realistically does the feathered histrion enter into its part that it has been arrested on several occasions for exceeding the speed limit.—New York Tribune.

Thomas Sabin of Eglinton, says: "I have removed ten corns from my feet with Holloway's Corn Cure." Reader, go thou and do likewise.

Encouraging Prospects.

"What are your prospects for making a living for both of us after we are married?" Bent Murdock quotes a brown-eyed widow in Eldorado as asking a big fat widower, who was insisting that they be made one. "Well, answered the widower, "I have a good scheme of managing a laundry in sight." "That is to say," she answered, "I am to take in washing to support us?" "That is about the size of it," he answered, as he took her in his arms—and they were made one.

A Speaking Silence.

"What makes you think that Bilkins is in love?"

"I was in the next room to him and his girl, and overheard one of their silences."—Life.

A Gladstone Story.

A story of Mr. Gladstone was told by the late Mr. Rhinelander, president of the United States Museum of Art. A miniature painter had been employed to paint a picture of Mrs. Gladstone in her old age. It was intended that it should be a present for Mr. Gladstone on one of his birthdays. Mrs. Gladstone was particularly well pleased with the portrait, but some of the grandchildren had opinions of their own about it. One or the younger grandsons drew Mr. Gladstone to one side, and asked him if he did not think that the portrait was somewhat flattering. "It isn't much like grandmother, is it?" he asked. "My boy," replied Mr. Gladstone, in his beautiful voice, "it is the truth beautifully told. That's all."

Before the Looking Glass.

How much time does a woman spend before the looking glass? A German estimates that a girl of six to ten years spends an average of seven minutes a day before a mirror; from ten to fifteen, a quarter of an hour is consumed daily; and from fifteen to twenty, twenty-two minutes. A woman of seventy, it is estimated, has spent 5,862 hours before the glass; in other words eight months, counting night and day.

A Bret Harte Joke.

Sam Davis of Nevada once made a wager that he could successfully imitate the style of any living or dead poet, and do it so thoroughly that the difference was not discernible; and that the public, the press, and the critics would not detect the fraud. As a result he wrote "Binley and 46," to which he signed E. Bret Harte's name. The fake was put out in a publication known as "The Open Letter." It described an engineer who took his train through a snowstorm in the Sierras, dying at his post.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific the poem was copied. "Binley and 46" was given a full page in "Leslie's Weekly," with a portrait of Bret Harte, and described as "the best short poem of the decade."

It was many years before Mr. Harte denied the authorship. The poem has since been incorporated in several books of popular recitations, notwithstanding that Binley freezes to death beside a roaring locomotive furnace with one hundred and fifty pounds of steam up and two cords of wood within reach.—"Success Magazine."

Their Complete Home Cure Post Free to Readers of This Paper for Limited Period Only.

A handsome illustrated treatise, giving full description of Rheumatism and Paralysis, with instructions for a complete home cure, describing the most successful treatment in the world, recommended by the Ministry and endorsed by medical men. This highly instructive book was written by W. H. Veno, a gentleman who has made a special study of these diseases. The preface is by a graduate of the University of Wurtzburg. Send postal to-day and you will receive the book free by return.—Address, The Veno Drug Company, 24 King Street West, Toronto.

Cure for Tuberculosis.

Professor L. Gaurrigue, a prominent French physician who has recently made some important discoveries in the treatment of tuberculosis, is soon to be a visitor in New York. Georges Dupuy, of the Matin, who arrived in New York last week, said that Dr. Gaurrigue is coming to demonstrate the effectiveness of his cure. One of the odd ingredients of the physician's antitoxin is the juice of a certain kind of ant. According to Mr. Dupuy, Dr. Gaurrigue has cured some of the most advanced cases of tuberculosis that the French academy of Medicine could find.

A Story with a Moral.

An English manufacturer of pottery is the subject of a joke told in the Liverpool Post. While on a continental tour he purchased a Sevres vase, for some hundreds of pounds, and brought it home most carefully. Thinking that the foreman of his works might gather some hint from the design, he called that gentleman in and showed him his treasure. "How do you like it?" he asked. The foreman took the vase in his hand, turned it over and returned it with the brief reply, "I don't think that I can learn much from it." "Why not?" asked the manufacturer. "I don't like telling you, you, sir." "Come—out with it." "Well, I designed that vase myself. It is a foreign imitation of our own work, and is worth £5 at the outside."

A syndicate is now being formed at Selkirk to send a prospecting expedition to the Cobalt silver region.

Warrior Woes.—Through damp, cold and exposure many a brave soldier who left his native hearth as "fit" as man could be to fight for a country's honor, has been "invalided home" because of the vulture of the battle ground—Rheumatism. South American Rheumatic Cure will absolutely cure every case of Rheumatism in existence. Relief in six hours.—93.

Salting Babylon.

The great productiveness of the ruins of Babylon in the way of ancient coins has aroused the suspicions of visitors. An American who was going around with a guide became distrustful of the case with which these relics could be disinterred. Accordingly he remarked to his guide, while they were searching about the Tower of Nimrod, that he particularly wished to find one coin with a special design. On the one side was a horse's head, with some sticks placed roughly between the ears, and on the other side a bull and a fowl in the act of crowing. The guide requested him to draw on paper a picture of the two sides of the coin, which the traveller did. About a week afterward, the very coin came to light. There was no doubt of its genuineness, for on the obverse was a mare's nest and on the reverse a cock and bull.

Prevent Disorder.—At the first symptoms of internal disorder, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills should be resorted to immediately. Two or three of these salutary pellets, taken before going to bed, followed by doses of one or two pills for two or three nights in succession, will serve as a preventive of attacks of dyspepsia and all the discomforts which follow in the train of that fell disorder. The means are simple when the way is known.

The first trees to be shipped from the forestry farm at Indian Head were sent to Lethbridge.

"I believe it to be the most effective remedy for the Stomach and Nerves in the market," is what Annie Patterson, of Sackville, N.B., says of South American Nervine, for, she says, La Grippe and the complications which followed it left her next to dead with Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and General Nervous Shattering. It cured her.—100

"For years a martyr," is how Chas. H. Powell, of 105 Raglan Street, Kingston, begins his story. "A martyr to chronic constipation, but now I am free from it and all through the use of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill.

"I was induced to try Anti-Pill by reading the testimony of some one who had been cured of constipation by it. I had suffered for eighteen years and had taken tons of stuff recommended as cures but which made me worse rather than better. Doctors told me there was no cure for me. Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill cured me."

The girls, God bless them! They have their little peculiarities, don't you know. When they are small they they won't go into the parlor at night without a light, because there might be a man there, but when they grow older they won't have a light there because there is a man in there! Queer, isn't it.—Ex.

People are ever chasing new mining camps and following the lure of the boom. At the present writing honors are about even between Tonapah and Cobalt. Miners are quitting their jobs and going to the new Eldorado, and prospectors are flocking there each believing that he will be the one out of a hundred to strike something. But it was ever thus.

Golden Star: Last week the Moyie Leader reached its ninth birthday, and just to celebrate the event Editor Smyth swept the office and installed a new towel. The Leader is all right, editorially, locally, printo ially, and looks good financially. May the Leader continue to prosper until it reaches its ninetieth milestone.

For more than 20 years Mr. J. B Massey, 3322 Clinton St., Minneapolis, Minn., was tortured by sciatica. The pain and suffering which he endured during this time is beyond comprehension. Nothing gave him any permanent relief until he used Chamberlain's Pain Balm. One application of that liniment relieved the pain and made sleep and rest possible, and less than one bottle has effected a permanent cure. Mr. Massey relates his experience for the benefit of others who may be similarly afflicted. If troubled with sciatica or rheumatism why not try a 25 cent bottle of pain balm and see for yourself how quickly it relieves the pain. For sale by the Moyie Drug & Stationery Co.
