Last Night's Meeting.

The Conservative field, held in Joyce's hall, the meeting was held in Eagles' hall, and every seat was filled. It was in every way as good a meeting as was held here in the interest of Mr. Galliher some few weeks ago. On the platform were Messrs. H. MacIntosh, J. A. Harvey of Cranbrook and Wm. Blakemore of Nelson. A. P. Macdonald officiated as chairman and introduced the different speakers.

Mr. Harvey opened the meeting and spoke for about 30 minutes. He said that notwithstanding the result of the Thursday vote the Conservatives were still contending for a principle, and also in times gone by there was no time when a man fought so hard as when his back was against the wall. He pointed out that both the mining and lumbering industries needed protection and proved that the Liberals of B. C. were as anxious for a higher tarriff as were the members of his own party, though they could not expect to get it under a Liberal administration. Mr. Harvey dealt with the Grand Trunk Pacific question and closed by asking the voters to cast their ballots on the 22nd of November for Mr. MacIntosh.

Mr. Blakemore spoke next and dealt with about the same issues as Mr. Harvey.

Mr. MacIntosh has a pleasing personality and is an interesting speaker. He is an old politician and has a clean record. He made a good talk and had several tilts with J. C. Drewery and Alfred Parr in which he had little difficulty in holding his own.

Mr. Parr took the platform in behalf of the Liberals and spoke for 15 or 20 minutes. Parr is a miner, and is as much at home on the platform as when working on a machine. He has a good delivery, is witty, and can well hold his own with little difficulty.

The meeting was closed by Mr. MacIntosh.

Gun Was Loaded.

An accidental shooting occurred at Kitchener yesterday. A man named Small was handing a 22 calibre rifle to Wm. McGregor when the gun accidently discharged. The ball passed through McGregor's right groin and lodged in the left hip. Dr. Harvie went down to Kitchener and took the injured man to the hospital at Cranbrook. He will recover.

Three Big Dances.

There are three big dances in sight. The Eagles will hold theirs on November 17th. The Miners' Union will give one on December 12th, and the Odd Fellows are planning to give one about December 23rd.

C. P. R. Improvements.

The C. P. R. have been making some more improvements this week around the Moyie station. New telegraph poles have been put in and considerable grading has been done around the platform.

A Big Shipper.

Even with all sorts of difficulties with which to contend, the St. Eugene was the largest shipper of silver-lead ore in the Kootenays during the month of October.

Teachers' Convention.

The first South East Kootenay teachers' institute will be held in Cranbrook next week. The Moyie school will be closed all of next week.

Mill Is Running.

Some record breaking work was done in installing the new 240 horse-power engine at the St. Eugene concentrator. The engine arrived here Tuesday morning and it was unloaded and put in place and was running inside of 20 hours. Ordinarily it would have taken from three to five days to have done this work. The new pump is on the way from the east and it will be only a matter of a short time until it will be here. With the engine and pump another closedown is not likely to occure for a good long time. Most of the miners have been put back to work and everything is running as before.

In New Quarters.

J. Crawford and E. G. Gwynn are now occupying the corner store in the Farrell block. Crawford is running the barber shop and Gwynn the cigar, tobacco and confectionery store. Both are popular young men and are deserving a good share of the public patronage.

Rose Chains

By IZOLA L. FORRESTER

Copyright, 1900, by Izola L. Forrester

It was late when Rosemary arrived. The other guests were rising, and dinner had been announced. She had barely time to toss aside her furs and exchange a few hurried words with Mrs. Creighton.

Thing was one thing certain, she decided after a glance at Helen and the rest. They had not heard yet, and she was glad of an hour's respite. After the scene with Dean last night, followed by the solemn one in the morning with her mother, and finally the reproaches and condolences of four younger sisters, each with her individual opinion on the fitness of the engagement, it was a relief to breathe freely without fear of conversational dissection of her case.

"Who is to take me in?" she asked at the door of the studio, but Helen was already leaving and smiling to another guest as she answered:

"You're always late, dear, aren't you? No excuse, though, please. Don't you see the senator looking helpless and alone over there? He's to take me in and thinks I'm lost."

"But"— Rosemary stopped short and went upstairs to the dressing room with a little sudden heartache. For a whole month one only had had the right and privilege of claiming her, and now she was free again. She hoped Helen would not give her to any one brilliant and strenuous tonight, who would bother her by trying to make an impression. She didn't want to be impressed. In a measure she blamed impressionism for her engagement to Dean. He was a royal comrade, clever and responsive, but not too clever or too responsive. There was a difference. Looking back on the joyous days of the month, she decided that it had been this element of chumship, of mindful affinity, which had been responsible for the whole thing.

As a comrade Dean was splendid, but as a lover in the role of prospective husband to be wedded to for life she had suddenly discovered that he was exacting—most exacting.

Any man who was engaged to a girl and positively forbade any other man falling in love with her was exacting. Moreover, it was foolish, because really, it was in the abstract a compliment to his own good taste.

She could not help Jack Stowell telling her that he loved her. Of course he loved her. He had told her so on an average of twice a month for over a years. And he was a dear, dear boy.

She smiled contentedly at the mirrored image of herself in the dressing room as she paused to tuck in a few refractory hairpins. Who could help loving her? Even Dean had called her the dearest girl in the world. It was sweet to remember that. Of course he had behaved inexcusably about Jack, but when a man is in love—

She laughed softly and buried her lips caressingly in the heart of a single long stemmed La France rose that lay lightly on her breast.

The last trailing gown was vanishing beyond the heavy velvet portieres of the dining room as she came down stairs. Only one lone figure awaited her coming in the wide hall, and she wondered who it could be. Not Jack, Mrs. Creighton did not approve of Jack. In fact, she had once called him a cub. Mild, but irritating to Jack. The figure turned suddenly at the sound of her coming. It was Dean himself. Half unconsciously she hesitated, her head lifted a trifle higher than usual, her lashes drooping obstinately over telltale eyes.

He was terribly grave and dignified.

"I am to have the pleasure of taking you in, Mrs. Creighton said. She evidently does not know."

"I had no idea that you would be here," she spoke indignantly. It was almost like silence of him, when only last night he had told him she never wished to see him back at his house.

"I could hardly help myself, after accepting the invitation a week ago. We will probably be the same place at the table, and I'm the lucky man who is assigned to take you in. At present it is impossible to guess what is happiness."

His speech, or rather sarcasm, was interrupted under the circumstances. She resolved not to speak to him again, and Mr. Rathburn sat at her other hand, and she devoted herself to him with some force. He was interested in a plan for the irrigation of the great American desert by means of huge spinning hose nozzles to be operated from balloons.

"But you'll have to get the water up there before you can get it down," objected Rosemary anxiously for the seventh time. She knew that Dean was smiling amusedly. "Unless you attach it to the clouds."

Mr. Rathburn was silent, and she felt withered by a sense of his displeasure, and she hated the theory of irrigation by balloons or any other way.

Dean was talking across the table to Eleanor Lee, and she suddenly classed Eleanor with irrigation and other unpleasant topics. Next to Dean was Mrs. Chadwick. Her gray curls were just visible beyond his brown ones. She was congratulating him, Rosemary knew. She had been in Europe all summer and had only heard of the betrothal a few days ago. It seemed to Rosemary that she was unnecessarily rapturous and voluble on the subject.

"It is the sweetest time of your life," she was saying. "The betrothal hour when we laugh and love and let Cupid bind us in rose chains and drive us at his dear, capricious will, spun of fancies"—

"It's generally tarnish, Mrs. Chadwick," said Dean, with merry scorn. "There must be a leader, you know, and a chief's law is ladies first."

"All but they are only rose chains, Dean." The gray curls were shaken at him reprovingly. "And they break so easily. Once married, they are rose chains still, but some wise fairy has slipped links of steel beneath the petals."

"And if we break them now?" Dean paused.

"Then there are only scattered petals in the dust and Cupid weeps, and Rosemary—for remembrance—may it never come to you." She smiled at four young faces. "Memory is dear but not when all it brings to mind are the broken rose chains."

There was a momentary hush. The sweetly modulated old voice had carried to the far ends of the table, and all were listening. Rosemary's gaze rested on her plate. She dared not meet Dean's eyes. The hush passed, and there was the low, light babel of voices again. She heard him speaking to her and held her breath to listen.

"Isn't she an old darling to say that?"

"She doesn't know they are already broken." He could hardly catch the half whisper.

"But are they? Only last night, and no one knows, and it was all a mistake." He bent, with pleading eyes, toward her. "Rosemary, my Rosemary."

"For remembrance?" She laughed a low, tremulous little laugh that was the first sign of surrender.

"For life. Roses are sweet, but they need the steel."

She hesitated, her eyes full of questioning doubt.

"Jack didn't mean anything," she said hurriedly. "He didn't really propose. He knew that I was engaged, of course. He only said that he had always loved me, and, after all, he's only a boy. It couldn't matter in the least his loving me when"—

"When what?"

His tone was full of the old imperative, proprietary command, and she met his glance for one swift, losing instant.

"When I loved you."

Mrs. Creighton was rising. As he drew back Rosemary's chair he whispered:

"Broken rose chains can be rewoven, can't they, dear? Forgive me."

He caught a fleeting glimpse of her face as she passed on in the wake of Mrs. Chadwick. She was tall and sweet as a young lily in her white lace dinner gown, and he felt a wild, sudden longing to crush her to his heart before them all and win the world of forgiveness.

She was gone, still he was unanswered, but the La France rose lay in his hand, and Rosemary was smiling as she accepted Mrs. Chadwick's congratulations in the drawing room.

The Personal Equation.

Mr. Ames entered with his nose unequivocally turned up. "Those people in the flat below are cooking onions again," said he. Mrs. Ames lowered one of the windows before she replied.

"I wish you wouldn't say 'those people,'" she said. "Their name is Watson."

"There!" said Mr. Ames, lowering another window.

"I don't think the odor is so very disagreeable," she said cheerfully.

Mr. Ames looked at her amazed. "Why, I thought you couldn't bear the smell of onions!"

"I don't really like it, of course, but it is such a little thing to be disturbed over."

Mr. Ames looked indignant and injured and felt so he could not understand his wife's attitude. "I wish you had felt that way sooner," he said drily. "Last week you made me tell the janitor that if those people didn't stop cooking onions every night we should move."

"Yes, I did," said Mrs. Ames candidly; "but that was before I knew Mrs. Watson. We have exchanged calls this week, and I like her very much."

Mr. Ames made a curious noise which his wife was able to interpret.

"I expected you'll take it that way," she said. "But even you must admit that there's a great difference between the smell of a fellow's onions and those of people we don't know."—Youth's Companion.

A Tough Old Invalid.

In England the purchase of an advowson, or the right to succeed to a vacant church office, is not uncommon. There is a story told of a country vicarage whose incumbent was, though but middle-aged, very infirm. His tenure of the position being thus uncertain, the living was advertised for sale. The auctioneer who at the time had the disposal of all church preferments mentioned as a special advantage to intending purchasers that the then holder could not last long. To put this prospect to the test several possible buyers went down to the village to look over the vicar. A father and son attended the Sunday services at the church. A servant led in the ailing vicar, but the latter managed to get through a very earnestly delivered sermon lasting half an hour. In the afternoon he again conducted service, baptized children and preached for fifty minutes. Service in the evening was to follow. But the man who had come to buy had seen enough. "My son," he said, "that old jock ain't a-goin' yet; I am," and he forthwith departed. In the end a young parson bought the place for himself. The invalid outlived by twenty years the man who had bought his living. He lasted fifty years beyond the sale and died of sheer old age at ninety-two.

A CASE OF LUCK.

How the Lack of a Nickel Won a Good Paying Position.

Little Mrs. Tyler sighed as the trolley car whizzed past her.

"To think," she mused, "that I should have come to this—too poor to spend 5 cents for car fare! If I could only get more music scholars. Then I could have the beefsteak and the tribe he needs—dear, patient Robert!"

Time was when Frederick Tyler's piano playing had won her many a social triumph, but that was before she had married the penniless Robert Tyler, to be buffeted adrift across the continent. Now that he was sick they lived only the pittance her pupils brought her.

Today Mrs. Tyler was very tired. No wonder she had sighed when the car had sped past her, and home was a mile away. Snatches of Hegdal's "Last Thought" by Grieg" drew her back to a music store. Music always lured her. A girl was playing upon a grand piano and several persons stood about. Mrs. Tyler stroll[illegible] their way.

One after another took a turn at the instrument. The new comer was too interested in the playing to question wherefore. Finally a man approached her.

"It is your turn now," he said.

She was about to explain his mistake when the humor of the situation appealed to her, and she was seized with a desire to carry out the joke. Accordingly she took her seat and began Paderewski's "Love Song." She did not know for what she was playing, but she vaguely felt that it was a test of some sort, and she threw her soul into her fingers. When she ended there was a little burst of applause, and "something else" was called for. She responded with Liszt's "Schubert's Serenade" and then with Chopin's "Cradle Song."

A sheet of music was placed before her, and a lady came forward to sing. If there was one thing in which Mrs. Tyler excelled it was in accompaniments, and now she did her best. The face of the man who had invited her to play was one broad smile as he inquired deferentially:

"May I ask whom we have had the honor of hearing? You have distanced them all, my dear madam. The place is easily yours."

Mrs. Tyler looked at him in bewilderment, then she laughed and explained. He explained too.

She had unwittingly taken part in a trial of applicants for the double position of accompanist for a singing master and piano player for the music shop. A salary was named that left the little woman nearly dumb with surprise, so amply it fitted her present needs. She wanted to dance all the way home. Fatigue was forgotten.

"I'm glad you didn't ride," remarked Robert Tyler whimsically.

"Oh!" cried his wife, and the exclamation was a thanksgiving.—Youth's Companion.

The Family Tree.

A pleasant pastime, literally, for those who have no more pressing duties and wish to get outside their environment at least in thought will open up before her who begins to mount a family tree. Tracing one's genealogy may become—probably will become—a matter of absorbing amusement and attention, for it entails a thread gathered up here, dropped there, a letter to write, a book to read, a register to consult. To the self absorbed, the despondent, the listless, one may recommend this diversion as certain to suit even rather morbid conditions of temperament, and yet as certain to gently force the mind away from itself to other persons and things in opening up a wider and wider field of reflection.

Quaint Prayers.

The chief of the Leslies is said to have prayed before a battle: "Be on our side. An gin ye canna be on our side, aye lay low a bit, an' ye'll see thae carles get a-hidin' that must please ye." An old covenanter, who ruled his household with a rod of iron, is said to have prayed in all sincerity at family worship: "O Lord, hae a care o' Rob, for he is on the great deep, an' thou holdest it in the hollow o' thy hand. An' hae a care o' Jamie, for he hae gone to fight the enemies o' his country, an' the outcome o' the battle is wi' thee. But ye need na fash o' yersel' wi' wee Willy, for I hae him here, an' I'm capable o' lockin' after him myself."

Careless of Honors.

Pastor Kneipp, the famous discoverer of the "barefoot cure" who was appointed chamberlain by the pope, cared little for the honor. He did not even take the trouble to open the letter announcing the appointment and first learned of the honor conferred upon him by the arrival of a deputation at the Woerishofen cloister to congratulate him. He declined to be addressed as "monsignore." It was with difficulty that he was persuaded to leave his retreat to go to Rome to thank the pope.

Basis of His Esteem.

"It is proper to respect an office under the government," said the patriotic citizen, "even if you do not happen to approve of the man who holds it."

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "It is to the office that the salary and perquisites are attached, not to the individual."

Mean.

Husband—My, but I wish I had your tongue! Wife—So that you could express yourself intelligently? Husband—No; so that I could stop it when I wanted to.

Good breeding is the result of much good sense, some good nature and a little self denial for the sake of others.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS

A series of articles describing their lives, their aims and their influence.

Dr. Adam McMillan.

DR. ADAM McMILLAN,
Editor and Proprietor of the Virden Advance.

Mr. Adam McMillan, the proprietor and editor of the Virden Advance is in some respects one of the most interesting figures in Western Canadian life. Dotted throughout the many phases in the life of the West are to be found traces of the variety and the success of his activities. He has been a blacksmith, a surgeon, a soldier and an editor, and in intervening intervals many other things besides. In most of these he has been conspicuously successful, and even in those in which good fortune was not so pronounced no absolute failure can be recorded against him. Adventurous, but level-headed, progressive, conservative by temperament. Specialized by the position taking little or nothing on faith, whether in the realm of mind or matter, his habit of mind is as essentially Greek and modern Greek as his courage is unquestioned. Mr. McMillan is a picturesque figure from whatever aspect of his personality he is regarded. It is undoubtedly as a soldier that he has hitherto talked farthest in the public imagination. The family of which Mr. McMillan is a member is, in some respects, a remarkable one. His name is known throughout Canada under his pen name of "Harold." No great or noted enthusiasm for the United Empire Loyalist cause can be found in all Canada that the Hon. Mr. Sifton, the capital Canadian Scotch peer of the West, represents, in which he does not find an independent paragraph given over to it in the Brandon Sun. The migrating of the race has enlarged both their views and their sympathies, without for one whit impairing the strength of the loyalty to the land of their nativity. Hence in all references to the "land of brown heath and shaggy wood," the large opportunity, the broader hope, the better destiny of the Land of the Maple is acknowledged and appreciated.

Among the Knights of the Bessemer Hayseed's sonnets and rhymes are perhaps the most popular on the continent, and at outlying smokes and other high festivals of the fraternity they are quoted and sung with enthusiasm. Nor are the comments on current events by the sagacity Scotch farmer and his sonsy Kirsty to be forgotten. Many a bit of pointed criticism and yet courteous comment is to be found in these dialogues which are worthy of more permanent preservation than the fugitive issues of a daily newspaper.

Of such parentage, it is no wonder that "Hayseed's" children should betray inclinations towards paper work. As a matter of fact it is doubtful if in Canada there is any other parent who can boast of having so many sons and daughters "editing" or "reporting" or "sketching." Adam, the subject of the present sketch, is editor of the Virden Advance, one of the most influential of Manitoba papers. A younger son is publisher and editor of the Trehorne Times, and another son is publishing a paper in the Yukon.

Mr. McMillan was born in Glengarry, Ontario, but his parents moved to Canada. He was [illegible] when he came with his family to the West, and learned the blacksmithing trade under his father. He aspired, however, to something better, and decided to take the regular course in the Toronto Veterinary College. He graduated in 1890, and returned to Manitoba to practice his profession, locating at various times in Carberry, Virden, Oak Lake and Brandon.

He was in the Wheat City at the time of the outbreak of the South African war. Another brother held the rank of sergeant-major in the first contingent, and this fact, combined with his naturally adventurous position and his patriotism, drew him toward enlistment. He received the non-commissioned office of farrier-sergeant with Strathcona's Horse. Within a few weeks after his arrival in South Africa he was promoted to a lieutenant's commission, through the illness of his superior officer. After seeing months of service with the now historic Strathcona Horse, Mr. McMillan was transferred to the commander-in-chief's body guard, with the rank of veterinary [illegible] After nine months' service with that corps—during which its [illegible] conduct won marked praise from Lord Kitchener—Captain McMillan returned home to Canada by way of England. After spending the winter in Manitoba he again volunteered for service in the reorganization of the 5th regiment of Canadian Mounted Rifles under command of Lieut.-Colonel [illegible], D. S. O. He was given entire charge of the veterinary department with the same rank as that under which he retired. The war was concluded by the time this contingent arrived in South Africa, and the troops returned home by way of England, the which many Anglo-Indian officers served some years before a return to Canada.

It will thus be seen that the editor of the Advance has had a distinguished career, in that warfare which has been of the most just and humane character waged, and which made the cause of Colonial Federation a reality for hundreds of unimportant parts. He and those from the others colonial nations who served with him on the veldt, personal with a [illegible] of distinction not possessed by any other portable of Englishmen or Canadians in the issues of state which happily ended the war. They returned, not alone to Britain and the Colonies, but to the world at large, that the British Empire is not, as are other European Governments, a machine operated and an institution for the benefit of ambitious statesmen, but an Association, in which, with mutual support and confidence, the world-wide subjects of the Crown could come together for all purposes, fiscal and Imperial, in which all were interested.

On returning home, Capt. McMillan took a practice in Virden. In a few months he bought the Advance. Under Captain McMillan's control the Advance became much more independent but lost none of its influence.

The instinct to write inherited from his father, and hitherto dominant because without opportunity for expression, asserted themselves as soon as Mr. McMillan took hold of the practical management of the Advance. He became deeply interested in the paper's success, and soon placed it of such a substantial footing that he was recently offered a large figure for it, and, after due consideration he accepted the offer. In a week or so, he will forsake the editorial chair he has filled with such promise and devote himself entirely to his practice. There are many, however, who predict that ere long Mr. McMillan will leave the curing of the ills of agricultural stock, in order to again prescribe for those of the body politic, and that hereditary instincts and family affiliations will ere long triumph over the arts of healing. Should this be, the ranks of western editors will be swelled by an able recruit, and newspaperdom in Manitoba and the Territories be that much the gainer.

COTTON SPINNING

The Scheme by Which a Man Kept His Bobbins Clean.

The father of the famous Sir Robert Peel was a cotton spinner in a comparatively small way and he early went straight ahead of all competitors. The earliest cotton spinning machinery gave serious [illegible] through filaments of cotton [illegible] to the bobbins, thus involving stoppages to clear the machine. The wages of the operatives were [illegible] by these delays, but it was not one man in the works always [illegible] pay. His loom never stopped.

"The only [illegible] are always clean," said Mr. [illegible] him one day.

"Aye, they be," said the [illegible] name was Dick Ferguson.

"How do you manage it, Dick?"

"Why, you see Sir Robert, it's a secret. If I tuned you [illegible] wise as I am."

"That's so," said Peel, [illegible] response to Dick's request, "I'll give you something [illegible] Could you make it the [illegible] smoothly as yours?"

"Every one [illegible]."

"Well, what shall I give [illegible] secret, Dick?"

The man smiled [illegible]

"Well, Dick, what's it to be?"

Superfluous Hair

Removed by the New Principle

De Miracle

It is better than electrolysis because it does not scar, and because it does not blister than X-ray because it does not burn, scar or injure the tissues under the skin. Better than depilatories because it will not cause blood poisoning or produce eczema, which is so common with depilatories and does not leave the hair thereby increasing its growth.

Electrolysis, X-ray and radiating are offered you on the force word of operators and manufacturers. DE MIRACLE is not. It is the only method which is indorsed by physicians, surgeons, dermatologists, medical journals and prominent magazines.

DE MIRACLE will be mailed to any address, sealed in plain wrapper for $1. Your money back without question if it fails to do all that is claimed for it.

Our booklet—the most complete treatise on Superfluous Hair ever published—containing the testimonials of numerous physicians and surgeons and those of hundreds of others—will be sent free, in plain, sealed envelope, upon request. A SOUND STOMACH MEANS A CLEAR HEAD.—The high pressure of a busy life which business men of the present day are living must, to give the best results, be accompanied by good health. Various contrivances have been tried to replace the Pellets in regulating the liver, bowels and stomach, but the Pellets still remain the most popular and most effective [illegible]

Pale, Weak and Languid Girls

It is to Your Best Interest to Know about the Extraordinary Restorative Powers of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood, creates new nerve force and actually adds new flesh and weight. When you have read the letter quoted below we believe that you will be satisfied that this is the very treatment you need.

Miss Lena Hiebert, Lowe Farm, Man., writes:—"I had suffered for two years with dizzy spells, pains in the back, cold hands and feet, nervousness, jerking of the limbs, sore tongue, soreness of arms and shoulders, and general exhaustion. About seven months ago I became so nervous that I could not rest or sleep and could not do the least bit of work without suffering dreadfully from pains in the back. I could hardly walk, could eat very little, and felt that people were always watching my body twitch.

"I tried several medicines with little effect, and was a mere skeleton of skin and bone about to give up in despair when I heard of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and began using it. I have used in all fourteen boxes of this preparation, and it has built me up until I am now strong and well again. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me a world of good, and I feel that I cannot recommend it too highly to persons who suffer as I have."

Mrs. Welcher, wife of Conductor Welcher, of the G. T. R., 147 Congregation Street, Montreal, Quebec, states:—"My daughter was not at all well. She had no appetite, was pale and weak, her nerves were unstrung and at times she suffered a great deal from headaches. I got her a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and since the use of this treatment for some time she has been thoroughly restored to health. This preparation has given her a good appetite, she has a much better color, and is stronger and healthier in every way. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food certainly is the best tonic which we have ever had in the house."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1904.

What about a board of trade for Moyie.

If the government has expended a dollar on Moyie's streets this year the Leader is not aware of it.

The Cranbrook Herald is putting in a typesetting machine, the first one in East Kootenay. Simpson is nothing if not up to date.

Hallowe'en was very feebly observed last night. The occasion has lost much of its old time significance. The eve of All Saints' day, which took its origin from the conversion in the seventh century of the Pantheon at Rome into a Christian place of worship. It was first celebrated on May 1, but the date was subsequently changed to November 1. The evening of October 31 and the festivities that are associated with it has little to do with the church day. On the contrary, the observances of Hallowe'en seem to be a relic of pagan times. Long ago it was regarded as the time when supernatural influences prevail which set apart the night for a universal walking abroad of spirits. In time it came to be held as an occasion for sports, practical jokes and general merriment, such as nut cracking and bobbing for apples.

There at least two classes of literature which should be in the home of every man who lives in the country the local paper and a really good agricultural journal; one which in the fullest way meets the requirements of the country in which it is printed. The Nor'-West Farmer, Winnipeg, claims to be the best agricultural paper for the Canadian West, and in its advertising announcement, elsewhere in our columns, quotes some facts so forcible as to be worthy of the attention of all our readers. Its subscription offer is a very liberal one. Look it up.
