Many a Business Wreck

Dates its ruin from a lost single day. Just a little too late can be read between the lines on the gravestone of many a man who has failed.

A short space of time makes all the difference between victory and defeat, success and failure.

But we are always on time with our seasonable goods. You need rubbers now the snow is flying and we have them. Remember the express is not always on time and if you wait til they arrive from T. Eaton & Co. you may get your feet wet and contract a severe cold and in the end will cost you more than if you had bought a half a dozen pairs. Come and buy any time--not one time.

LOCAL NEWS.

Wm. Gallup is now in Silver City, Idaho.

Rev. Marshall held services in Creston Thursday.

Mrs. Elmer went to Wardner today on a visit.

Ed. Taylor, formerly a miner at the St. Eugene, is now in the hotel business in Kimberley.

The members of the fire brigade will turn out next Monday at 1 o'clock and fix the fire hydrants for the approaching cold weather.

Presbyterian service will be held in the hall every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock until further notice, instead of at 7:30 o'clock in the evening.

Nothing definite has been learned regarding the result of the St. Eugene meeting held in Toronto last week. It is generally believed that all of the officers and directors will be re-elected.

Prof. S. W. Murphy came up from Michel Thursday and returned the same day. He and Prof. "Berney" Wilson furnished the music for the dance at the Australian hotel in Morrissey Wednesday.

Grant & Sheady's horses and outfit arrived here this week from Flemming, Assa., where they were used in railroad contracting during the past summer. Grant & Sheady have again secured the contract of taking out logs for the Moyie Lumber Company.

A MORAL.

I once knew a dear little mother,
With a beautiful blue-eyed boy.
She constantly bathed and brushed him,
And when he had tired of toy
She would take it and scald it and scrape it
And lay it away in the sun;
And that is the way she took care of
His playthings, every one.

Pent up in his own little playhouse
The baby grew peaked and pale,
And there were the neighbors' children
All dirty and happy and hale.
If the baby went out for an airing
The nurse was to understand
That none of the neighbors' children
Was ever to touch his hand.

But they did, and the injured mother
Brought the dear baby inside
And shut him up in his playhouse,
Where the little one fretted and died.
Then the torn heart turned to the Virgin
And this was the weight of her prayer:
"Oh, Mother dear, don't let him play with
The other angels up there."

MOYIE FIRE BRIGADE

The New Organization Is Complete in Every Respect.

The Moyie Fire Brigade has been practically reorganized, and a set of new bylaws adopted. Everything is again in smooth working order. It is safe to say that there is not a better organized band of fire fighters in South East Kootenay.

At the last meeting of the brigade it was decided to add 50 feet of hose, a nozzle, two fire axes and a torch to the present excellent equipment.

The following officers were elected: C. A. Foote, chief; P. F. Johnston, assistant chief; F. J. Smyth, secretary; J. P. Farrell, treasurer.

For the benefit of all concerned the Leader publishes the bylaws of the brigade in full.

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, in all well regulated societies certain laws are adopted, as necessary to maintain order therein, therefore we, the members of the Moyie Fire Brigade, of the city of Moyie, B. C., do adopt and mutually agree to support the following as our constitution and bylaws:

ARTICLE I.

This brigade shall be known as the Moyie Fire Brigade, and shall consist of not more than active members.

ARTICLE II.

Sec. 1. There shall be one chief, one assistant chief, one secretary and one treasurer.

Sec. 2. The nominations for the offices of chief, assistant chief, secretary and treasurer shall take place on the first Thursday in May of each year.

Sec. 3. The election for those offices shall take place at the regular annual meeting of this brigade, which shall be held on the first Thursday in June, and the officers elected shall take command of their offices at once.

Sec. 4. The majority of all legal votes cast shall be necessary to elect.

ARTICLE III.

Sec. 1. There shall be a regular meeting of this brigade on the first Thursday of each month commencing at 8 o'clock p. m. for the transaction of business.

Sec. 2. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

Sec. 3. All members are requested to be present before roll call.

Sec. 4. Upon the request in writing of five members in good standing it shall be the duty of chief to call a special meeting at any time. Or the chief may call a special meeting at any time.

Sec. 5. No business shall be transacted at a special meeting except that for which the meeting was called.

ARTICLE IV.

Sec. 1. The chief shall preside at all regular and special meetings of this brigade; shall control and have a general management of the brigade while on duty. He shall settle all disputes between members while on duty; his decision to be final.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the chief to examine the apparatus and buildings of the brigade as often as necessary to convince him that they are having proper care and are in serviceable order; and, if any supplies or repairs are needed, to report the same at the regular meeting.

Sec. 3. The assistant chief shall assist the chief in the discharge of his duties, and in his absence shall have all the powers of the chief.

Sec. 4. The secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of all meetings; keep a correct account of all fires with the loss and names of owners of buildings destroyed or damaged, and amount of insurance on same; he shall keep a correct list of all the members; he shall call the roll at every meeting and after every alarm of fire.

Sec. 5. Every member not present at roll call after an alarm of fire shall be fined the sum of 50 cents, unless he furnishes a reasonable excuse.

Sec. 6. The treasurer shall make a written report to the brigade every six months.

Sec. 7. The chief shall appoint an auditing committee on the first meeting in May, which shall report at the following meeting.

ARTICLE V.

Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of all members to proceed to the fire hall at every alarm of fire to report for duty.

ARTICLE VI.

Sec. 1. Any officer or member may be expelled from the brigade for wilful neglect of his duty or disorderly conduct while in the service of the brigade. A two thirds vote of the members present at any meeting shall be necessary for such removal or expulsion.

Sec. 2. The members of the brigade will not obey any orders except coming through the officer in command.

Sec. 3. Any member absenting himself from the regular meetings three times in succession shall be reported by the secretary and be liable to be expelled.

Sec 4. No member shall leave in time of fire without permission of the chief.

Sec. 4. All business of the brigade transacted in the room shall be strictly private.

Sec. 5. That in all cases which may arise for which there is no bylaw it shall be competent for the brigade to decide upon a two thirds vote of the members present.

Sec. 6. After the passing of these bylaws all former bylaws, rules and regulations shall be null and void.

Sec. 7. No rules or bylaws shall be altered, amended or suspended at any meeting except by a majority of the full brigade.

Sec. 8. A motion to adjourn shall always in order after the regular business is done.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Roll Call.
2. Reading minutes of previous meeting.
3. Resignation of members.
4. Propositions for membership.
5. Communications and new business.
6. Reports of officers and committees.
7. Election for membership.
8. Election of officers.
9. Unfinished business.
10. Miscellaneous business.
11. Adjournment.

'TWEEN LOVE AND DUTY.

A Novel by Annie Thompson.

The two pedestrians reached at last a bend in the road, where, being on an eminence, they could see Feldrossan clearly. The Manse was the nearest building to them; beyond it was the cottage which for years John and Alice had called their own. When Kate saw it, she turned impulsively to her companion with her hand outstretched. Her eyes was filled with tears, her voice was unsteady as she said: "Oh, John! it must be so hard for you to see that house again, and know that Alice is not there."

He took her hand, and looked blankly at her for a moment. His expression seemed to her to indicate dumb grief; in reality, he was shocked and amazed. Scarcely a thought of Alice had crossed his mind, so entirely had his remembrance of her been dwarfed by his remembrance of another. Kate's imagination had misled her utterly. His gravity and preoccupation were caused by thoughts of the living, not of the dead. The landscape, the familiar landmarks, had suggested to him Mary Forester, not Alice. He saw the dyke that had been rebuilt, and thought of the days long passed when it had been covered with moss and bluebells, bracken and heather, and when he had transplanted many ferns from it to die a lingering death in that corner of the Manse garden which Mary called her own. He saw the spot at which Katie expected him to stop, and remembered only Mary's admiration of the view of it. When the bend in the road was reached, he saw nothing but the Manse where Mary lived. He was thankful that Kate walked on without seeming to expect any response to her sympathetic words. He felt himself to be a hypocrite; of course he should have been thinking only of his sister, and Mary had altogether filled his mind.

Mr. Ferris, impatient for Kate's return, was standing at the Manse gate that he might catch the first glimpse of her. He prided himself on his long-sightedness, but when he saw her familiar figure in the distance, he was puzzled because she was not alone. Who could she have with her? He adjusted his eyeglasses and peered through them, with the result that roses beside him became abnormally large, while all further objects grew misty. Then he bent his head and peered over his glasses; and this time he recognized Kate's companion. He was not very much astonished. He had lived through many surprises, and now accepted the unexpected with a calmness that rather aggravated his juniors. His niece and John Cayford came toward him with smiling faces. "It is as it should be," he muttered to himself, "they make a handsome couple. Well, well, I shall have to learn to do without Kate."

The welcome received at the Manse was after all incomplete; Mary Forester was not there. She and her uncle had been paying calls in the afternoon, and had found one lady so poorly and dispirited, that Mary had offered to stay and take tea with her. When the tea was over at the Manse, and there was some cessation in the rapid outpouring of information by which the seven years of absence must be bridged over, John Cayford proposed that he should walk to Mrs. Melvin's cottage, and bring Mary home.

"Ay, lad, do," said Mr. Ferris. "You and I, Kate, will see to our accounts while he is gone. Draw up the blind a little higher, John; my old eyes need all the light they can get."

John raised the blind, and wheeled the minister's chair nearer to the window; then he handed him the newspaper he had brought from town. Mr. Ferris pushed it away. "Duty before pleasure, sir," he said severely. "Don't put temptation near me, I have work to do."

Nevertheless, when Kate came into the parlor a few minutes later, her uncle was engrossed with the paper. She was not sorry to find him occupied, but she wondered that he could become interested in anything so trival on such a night as this. She laid aside her writing materials with a sense of relief. Her thoughts drifted back to that supreme moment in the day, when she had become conscious that a new and wonderful feeling stirred within her heart. She did not want to look at it closely; there was not time yet, at any moment she might be disturbed. But she let herself be absorbed by it. It was as though she stood with closed eyes in a flood of sunshine, enjoying to the full its thrilling glow and warmth, and yet not daring to look up into the blinding glory.

An hour later, her uncle finished his exhaustive study of the newspaper; he had read even the advertisement columns. He tossed the sheet to one side and saw Kate.

"Dear me, child! where have you been? I have been waiting for you to help me with the accounts."

"I am ready, Uncle. I thought you were busy."

"Busy! not at all. I was merely glancing at the paper; there is nothing in it, nothing whatever. Shall we set to work now?"

"Yes, Uncle," said Kate gently.

CHAPTER IV.

The turnpike road that passed through Feldrossan, continued by the sea for many miles until it reached Stranraer. Just beyond the village, a high wall to the right of the road, surrounded the Parish Church and graveyard; and further on, there were a few isolated cottages. These stood at irregular intervals, and had a depressing suggestion of failure about them; they looked as though they had strayed out from Feldrossan with the vain hope of finding it to the next village, which lay miles further south. These cottages had been built without any attempt at ornamentation and were indeed positively ugly; each of them seemed to raise its two chimney stacks upwards in mute protest against the grandeur and beauty of ornamentation lavished on the outlines of Ailsa, Arran, or Cantyre. The most dejected looking cottage belonged to Mrs. Melvin at whose tea table Mary Forester presided this afternoon. Mrs. Melvin was old, her eyes were dim, her complexion colorless, and her steps languid. She wore an obtrusive air of resignation; her eyebrows were invariably elevated, and the corners of her mouth depressed. She thought the worst of every one, and was rather aggravated when her gloomy forebodings were not realized.

"You can stay to tea, if you like, Mary," she said ungraciously. "There was some tea bread in the cupboard, but no doubt Janet has made away with it, as usual."

"Oh no, Mrs. Melvin! I am sure Janet would not take it without leave," cried Mary, who could not bear to think ill of any one. The cupboard was opened, and Janet's character vindicated. Had the cakes vanished, Mrs. Melvin might have been faintly cheerful; as it was, she raised her eyebrows higher than before, and observed that every piece on the plate looked smaller than it had done last time.

Mary had exercised a good deal of self-denial in offering to stay with Mrs. Melvin; she wanted to be home when Kate returned. Kate might have seen some one, or heard something interesting. Mary was at best living in a state of restless expectation. It was at no time pleasant for her to be with this old lady. Those who make ill-natured remarks never guess what acute suffering they inflict on the sensitiveness of a charitable hearer. Usually Mary contrived to infuse a little of her own over-flowing love into every one with whom she came in contact, but Mrs. Melvin seemed love-proof. To-day her tongue was more venomous than usual, and after enduring its stings for two hours, Mary rose to go, her nerves quivering and her tender heart outraged.

"Oh—oh—oh!" she gasped, as she closed the cottage door behind her, "how can people think such wicked things, when God has given them such a beautiful place to live in?" To talk scandal in a dirty town was perhaps excusable; but how any one could live within view of Arran, and be spiteful, passed Mary's comprehension. It will be seen that her comprehension was exceedingly limited in some directions. She was twenty-five years old, and so carefully had her guileless soul been nurtured that lies were the blackest form of iniquity with which she had any practical acquaintance. The hints, innuendoes, and evil suggestions poured forth by Mrs. Melvin, affected her as fear affected her—making her heart beat quick and her cheeks burn, filling her mind with a vague dread of she knew not what; causing her to shrink away in painful terror from an intensity of darkness which she could not fathom. She clasped her little hands tight about her throat to ease the aching pain there, and hurried away from Mrs. Melvin's cottage, that she might be free from the suffocating atmosphere of suspicion. When she reached the churchyard she entered it, and flew with eager steps to a grave in the far corner, before which she knelt, sobbing out her grief. "Oh, Alice, dear! you always believed in people; you always said God wanted us to think lovingly of them even when they do wrong. It isn't true that they are all so wicked. You were good, dear; you were good. Oh, why did you go away from me?"

Her words, her thoughts were incoherent; gradually her sobbing spent itself, her tears ceased, her sorrow became less acute. There were roses blooming all round the grave; as her sight grew clearer she saw that one and another was withered, and began tenderly to detach the faded flowers. She was thus occupied, when John Cayford, who had seen her enter the churchyard while he was yet at some distance, came near her. The mossy turf had deadened the sound of his footsteps; she was not aware of his presence until, having finished her work, she rose to her feet, turned away from the grave, and saw him. Instantly she was by his side, clinging to his arm.

"John, my dear, dear John — you have come back at last!"

He looked down into her face. It was so sweet, so pure, so child-like; the eyes shining with happiness, the lashes still wet with tears. Was there another face in all the world as lovely?

"And it is seven long years since I saw you, Mary!"

"Yes," she said, "seven long years. When you went away, Alice and I thought the time would never pass. Oh, if she were here now, John—if she were only here! We talked so often about you. So often we walked to the corner milestone, and half persuaded ourselves that you were coming down the Feldrossan road. She gave me a great many messages for you when you should come home."

"You must tell me all of them, Mary."

"I will," she said, "I will. I wanted to write to you, but I could not. You did not think hard things of me, because I sent no letter?"

"I never had a hard thought of you in my life, Mary."

"I knew Uncle and Kate could tell you everything so much better than I. I tried to write, but it was all so terribly dark and sad, and words seem such cold things in a great trouble. It was so sudden, too. I did not know she was dying until she asked the doctor herself how long she had to live, and he told her 'only a few hours.' Think what it must have been to have such a thing said to you! It was the evening, and she asked me to stay with her. I lay down beside her and we talked together. She said that she only wanted to live for your sake, and that when you come home I must be all to you that she would have been, I will, John, if I can. I will. Then she spoke of heaven, and I scarcely dared breathe lest she should stop. We were so peaceful and happy, it seemed as if life were beginning, not ending. The hours flew fast, the candles burned dim, the day broke. She would say a few words and then rest, and then speak again; and when she spoke, I feared to lose a syllable—and when she rested, I thought over all she had said. So her dear voice grew fainter and fainter, and I heard more and more plainly the dull thud of the waves on the beach outside; and presently I could hear nothing but the waves. Then I knew that she would never speak to me again, never, never, never!"

"Mary, you must not cry so, dear; you must not, it is not right. This is not the welcome Alice would have had you give me."

She dashed away the tears, and tried to steady her quivering lips.

"I have missed her so much, John."

"My poor little girl, I know you must have. Did Kate not help you?"

"Oh, yes, but she is older; and then — she is so clever, I always think she is laughing at me."

"Well, Mary, you have me now."

"Yes," she said, with a long sigh of satisfaction, "I have you now."

They left the churchyard, and, by common consent crossed the road, preferring to walk home by the shore path, which though rougher and longer was more solitary. They lingered on the way, and were unconscious that they lingered.

When they reached the Manse gate, Kate raised her eyes from her work and saw them. The brilliant colors of the sunset had faded out of the sky, but a pale yellow light was diffused around, which seemed to illuminate every object with startling clearness. The expression of perfect happiness in Mary's face was good to look upon; when Kate saw it, her own lips parted with a sympathetic smile. Then her glance wandered to Mary's companion, and her smile vanished. She read more than perfect happiness in that face.

"Kate," said Mr. Ferris, pushing toward her a paper covered with figures, "I can't make your reckoning and mine agree. Do you think you can have made a mistake?"

Kate turned her head from the window, and looked at him vacantly.

"I shall know when they come in," she said.

They came in before Mr. Ferris had time to reflect that Kate's answer was strange.

"Oh, Uncle," cried Mary, "is it not delightful? How surprised you must have been. I think you are very kind to let John bring me home. What are you and Kate doing? Accounts? Who could look at bills to-night!"

"My dear," said Mr. Ferris reprovingly, "these things must be attended to. Do you see your mistake, Kate?"

"Of course she sees her mistake," cried Mary gaily. "Say 'yes' Kate, quick, and let us put the horrid papers away."

Kate's "yes" was almost inaudible, and did not refer to the figures at all, but it satisfied her uncle.

A Theory About Man's Beard.

There is a theory favored by the disciples of Darwin that the beard is merely the survival of a primitive decoration. Man, according to this view, was originally as hairy as the opossum itself, but as he rolled down the ages he wore the hair off in patches by sleeping on his sides and sitting against a tree. Of course the hair of the dog is not worn off in this way, but a great theory is not to be set aside by an objection so trifling. By and by our ancestors "awoke to the consciousness that they were patchy and spotty," and resolving to "live down" all hair that was not ornamental they with remarkable unanimity seem to have fixed on the eyebrows, the mustache and—unfortunately, as the self scrapers mostly think—the beard as being all that was worth preserving of the primitive covering.—English Magazine.

An Anecdote of Renan.

Renan while traveling alighted at Naples. One morning a servant of the hotel came to him and said that as she had heard the preacher at the cathedral make use of his name many times she would be thankful if he would choose for her a number in the lottery about to be drawn. "If you are a saint," said she, "the number is sure to be a good one; if you are a devil, it will be still better." Renan smiled and chose a number, but he never knew if the servant was lucky.

Red and Inflamed Eyelids.

Red and inflamed lids, lids which look as though the person had been keeping very late hours, says a recent periodical, and lids which have little crusts formed during the night at the root of the eyelashes, are usually an indication of a low degree of astigmatism. In some cases no relief is had for this condition till proper glasses are procured. A large proportion of the cases, however, will be cured by the following ointment: Yellow oxide of mercury, three grains; yellow vaseline, one-half ounce; mix thoroughly and apply a very little to the edge of the eyelids each night.

Too Cool.

"Oh, Major Bloodgore," said girlish gusher, "they say that during the war you were always cool in action."

"Cool!" declared the major. "Why, my dear girl, I was so cool that when I shivered people insinuated that I was trembling."

Assisted.

Sarah—Mr. Rippler says that he is a confirmed bachelor.

Susie—But he didn't say that every girl in town had assisted in confirming him, did he?

THE OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS CO., LIMITED

The Largest Flour Mills in the British Empire and the Palace Flour Mills of the World.

To be the greatest milling concern in the British Empire is certainly a distinction for any industry. To have this industry in Canada is a matter of pride and congratulation to Canada and Canadians.

This is the centenary year of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., and its history during 100 years has had to do with the growth and prosperity of the wheat producing and flour consuming population of Canada.

Magnificent as its past has been, its magnitude today, and its provision for the future are so great that a sketch of this company will prove of more than passing interest to our readers.

NEARLY ONE HUNDRED ELEVATORS

Ninety elevators scattered over the vast wheat areas of Western Canada receive the bulk of the finest wheat grown in the world.

The buyers are men who have been identified with the Ogilvie Company for many years. They are thoroughly trained in their duties and know both the requirements of the company and the quality and character of the grain. The most friendly relations have always existed between the Company and the farmers of the Northwest. No complaints have ever been made that advantage was taken of local conditions to compel farmers to accept an unreasonably low price for grain. How much the development of the Northwest is due to this great pioneer company would be hard to estimate. The production of a crop, no matter how great, is of small moment, unless there are purchasing, receiving, and shipping depots.

This wheat in turn is ground in the different mills of the company, which aggregate a daily output of 7,500 barrels of flour. It is difficult to realize the immensity of this amount. Great as it is, the management are preparing to add still another great mill, increasing the capacity to the astonishing quantity of over 10,000 barrels daily.

THREE GREAT MILLS.

There are now three mills in operation. The Royal Mills at Montreal, the Glenora Mills at Montreal and the Winnipeg Mills.

A visit to any one of these mills is a pleasure and an education. The writer visited the Royal mills at Montreal, and his preconceived ideas of a great flour mill were destroyed.

The first thing suggested is immense capacity, the next, perfect system, and last, absolute cleanliness.

The Royal Mills and the Glenora Mills are both situated on the Lachine canal, where enormous water power privileges belong to the company, and day and night, except Sunday, without break or cessation the work goes on.

Almost noiseless in its operation the giant power carried and crushed and ground and sifted until the transforming process was completed, and from the choicest wheat in the market the finest flour in the world is made.

The wheat is received in a steady stream from the elevators and the flour is shipped in waiting cars and vessels to the markets of the world. Nothing but a visit to any one of the mills conveys any adequate idea of how Ogilvie's Flour is made.

Even figures convey a very imperfect idea of the magnitude of the work, of the ground area, the millions of bushels of grain bought and the millions of barrels of flour sold. There is an army of employees, including the office staff in the head office, Montreal, the managers and workmen in the mills and elevators, the experts and the buyers, the carters and men in other capacities, and there is a feeling of intense loyalty to the interests of the company amongst these employees most of whom have been identified with the company for many years.

The great rooms are spotlessly white and clean, not a mark on the floors or walls, and most surprising, not a particle of flour or dust floated in the air. So attractive are the mills as show places that no less than 3,000 ladies have visited the Winnipeg mills of this company during the past 18 months.

APPRECIATED BY ROYALTY.

The most distinguished of these visitors was H. R. H. the Duchess of York—now Princess of Wales. So charmed was she with the surroundings that the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. have been appointed by Royal Warrant, millers to the Prince of Wales, and bakers in the royal household are commanded to use no other flour than the product of the company's mills.

There is a triple compliment in this appointment, to the country, to the company and to the product. The attention that is naturally directed to Canada by such unique distinctions as this does not affect simply the one line, but kindred lines, and generally speaking all the agricultural products of Canada. Practically the whole of the Dominion gains by the position occupied by the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., apart from the great sums of money spent by them in Canada.

The Prince of Wales' three feathers on each bag is a distinguishing mark. Very few customers are unacquainted with the trade marks and registered design, every bag being sewn with red, white and blue cords.

WELL KNOWN BRANDS.

The two brands sold throughout Canada and the flour importing countries of the world are Ogilvie's Glenora Patent and Ogilvie's Hungarian Patent. All that science and mechanical knowledge combined could do for the perfecting of flour making has been applied to the manufacture of Ogilvie's Flour, and as they led in the past, so have they the advantage of the future.

The evolution of flour making from the primitive grinding of grain in the East thousands of years ago through all its mechanical and scientific gradations to its present condition as indicated in the Ogilvie mills, produces these two brands which are the perfection product of the chief of cereals.

While the buyers of the wheat in the West are amongst the most expert in the world, having had a long connection with the Company, and while the wheat selected is only the best, yet the most exacting tests are continuously made as the flour passes through final stages to see that its quality is maintained. Experts are employed for this work alone, and a standard of uniform excellence is maintained.

THE COMMERCIAL STANDARD OF CANADA.

Ogilvie's is practically the standard by which flour is graded in Canada, and we notice the Toronto Globe and other papers base their quotations on Ogilvie's brands.

Consumers whether large or small should understand that it is to their interest to use this flour in preference to inferior qualities, and in getting Ogilvie's they may rest satisfied that they have the best.

It is a deduction simply made from the facts that it would be impossible to produce a better flour than Ogilvie's. The conditions and circumstances are so largely in their favor that it would hardly be reasonable that any other manufacturing concern should claim an equality of product.

The bakers of Canada are the best judges amongst Canadians of the properties of flour and they recognize the advantage of using the very best flour and accept Ogilvie's as giving the greatest satisfaction.

The success of a business can be made or marred according to the good or bad quality of a material used, and when the best can be obtained it shows only reasonable commercial instinct to select the best in preference even to second best.

OGILVIE'S ROYAL BREAKFAST FOOD AND OGILVIE'S OATS.

At the present time we are deluged with a multitude of breakfast foods, and many of uncertain origin and still more uncertain value. A great many of these are imported, so that the item of duty is added to the original cost, and consumers in Canada pay fancy figures for them. The basis of a breakfast food is the quality of its constituent parts. This is supplemented by the process it undergoes. Ogilvie's Royal Breakfast Food is produced from the best selected wheat, carefully and scientifically prepared to retain its nutriment and present it in a most palatable and digestible form.

Ogilvie's Royal Breakfast Food has all the good qualities claimed for the best of them and the fact that it is Ogilvie's is the best guarantee of its purity, its value and its excellence. Amongst breakfast foods this one has a value on a par with the value of Ogilvie's flour amongst other flours.

"Ogilvie's Oats" is an old-time favorite for the breakfast table and is known throughout Canada. It is simply a preparation in which the best qualities of the grain are preserved and which has stood the test of years.

THE MANAGEMENT AND ITS AIMS.

The guiding spirit in this vast concern is the Vice-President and Managing Director, Mr. F. W. Thompson, who has been associated with its success for the past twenty years, and who now in the prime of his life is projecting plans for improvement and development that the marvellous growth of the country justifies.

The objective point of Mr. Thompson and those associated with him, is to make the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. not only the largest in the British Empire but one of the largest in the world is likely to be realized at no distant date. The pride with which all classes of Canadians view the progress of this great representative concern should be some return for the untiring energy and commercial genius of the man on whose shoulders rests the success of the industry.

A Canadian Tenor's Predicament.

Mr. Whitney Mockridge, the Canadian tenor, tells the following quaint story against himself:

It was my second or third appearance on any stage—my debut being made at Blackpool—and this place was Dublin. I was singing the tenor part Thaddeus in Balfe's "Bohemian Girl." As you know, the opening scene is the inner court of Count Arnheim's, and the poor tenor, in fleeing from the pursuing Austrians, finds himself in this court, not knowing where he is as to security until he espies the Austrian flag floating over the castle wall. Of course, finding that he is in the very midst of the enemy, he makes good his escape, which, the evening before, I had no difficulty in doing. But "someone had blundered" most fearfully in setting this scene, for there was no place of exit left. My time being long past for getting off the stage, I, in the meantime having looked all over for an opening of some kind, had to endure all sorts of scathing remarks from those in charge behind the scenes, including Carl Rosa himself. Knowing that the murderous band of Austrian soldiers in quest of me were long overdue on the scene, and the orchestra having been too-tooting on one note for some bars, I got desperate, and, seeing a wee slit in the (canvas) stone wall at the back of the stage, I thrust my fingers through it and tore nervously and violently a hole sufficiently large to get out. Well, the house was thrown into such confusion from laughter over the idea of such a Herculean deed on the part of a young tenor being wrought before their very eyes that was more than half an hour before we could proceed. Had I continued in opera I think this would have immortalized me in Dublin.

Two Mighty Feasts.

In the days when George III. was King of Great Britain the baronet of Wynnstay Park, Sir Watkins William-Wynn, entertained 15,000 guests of his estate. Three coachfuls of cooks journeyed to Wynnstay from London. There were on the table 300 oxen, pigs, and sheep, 300 chickens, 421 salmon, 37 turkeys, 109 lobsters, 720 trout, 200 crawfish, 60 barrels of pickled oysters, 166 hams, 110 ox tongues, 350 fruit and meat pies, 100 plum puddings, 300 bushels of potatoes, 6,000 bundles of asparagus and hundreds of pounds of meats and fruits of various kinds. There was drunk 6,000 gallons of ale, 50 gallons of milk and 100 quarts of cream.

Twenty thousand Mayors of France dined a few months ago in the Paris Tuileries gardens. Twelve tent kitchens, each with a staff of thirty chefs, cooks and potboys, were established for the mayoralty feast and the army of waiters was 3,000 strong. Four hundred huge Lyons sausages were cut up into 44,000 slices, 3,000 fowls and 2,500 ducks were roasted; without counting 500 sirloins of beef, 1,800 pheasants, 5,700 pounds of salmon, 18,000 pounds of butter, 6,600 pounds of grapes, 18,000 peaches and 15,000 pears. Fifty thousand bottles of wine, champagne and mineral waters were ready in case any of the 20,000 Mayors wanted a drink.

Two Remarkable Echoes.

In a cave in the Pantheon the guide by striking the flaps of his coat makes a noise equal to that produced by firing a twelve pound cannon. In the cave of Smellin, near Viborg, Finland, a stone thrown down a certain abyss makes a reverberating echo which sounds like the dying wail of some wild animal.

HOW RELIEF CAME.

An Interesting Story From An Icelandic Settlement.

From the Logberg, Winnipeg, Man.

The readers of Logberg have long been familiar with the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through the well authenticated cures pubished in these columns each week. Many of our readers are also able to vouch for cures which have come under their own observation. This week "Logberg" has received a letter from one of its readers, Mr. B. Walterson, a prosperous farmer living at Bru, in which he gives his own experience in the hope that it may benefit some other sufferer. Mr. Walterson says: "Some years ago I was suffering so greatly from rheumatism in my limbs that I was for a long time unable to do any work. I tried in many ways to obtain a cure, both by patent medicines and medicine prescribed by doctors, but without obtaining any benefit. I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised in the Logberg as being a cure for this trouble and determined to give it a trial. I bought a dozen boxes and before half of them were used I felt a great change for the bette This improvement continued from day to day, and before I had used all the pills I was completely cured. Since that time I have never had an attack of this trouble. After this I used the pills in several other cases and no other medicine has been so beneficial to me. I feel it my duty to publicly give testimony to the merits of this wonderful medicine so others similarly afflicted may be led to try it."

If you are weak or ailing; if your nerves are tired and jaded, or your blood is out of condition, you will be wise to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which are an unfailing cure for all blood and nerve troubles. But be sure you get the genuine, with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Snowballs Brought Water.

"Speaking of drinking water," said one of a group of men waiting for a shower to pass over, "the best I ever drank was on my uncle's farm.

"We lived on top of a clay hill and had a well very deep, sixty feet, I reckon, but it never had any water in it until ten years ago. A heavy snow fell that winter, and uncle filled the well with snow. He rolled up balls until they were large enough to go into the well cleverly and then dumped them in until it was packed to the top. They were packed so closely that they did not melt until late the following summer, but when they did they produced a supply of water I never saw surpassed for purity, softness or coolness. It was delicious.

"Strange to say, this well, always dry before, has produced a plentiful supply since. The water, while not as good as that from the snowballs, is still excellent and celebrated throughout the neighborhood."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

WHEAT—A steady stream of wheat has been moving eastward this week, at the rate of 250 to 300 cars per day, which appears to be as fast as the railways can handle it. Farmers are pushing their fall plowing work as much as possible, otherwise there would be more wheat marketed at country points than has been coming in. As it is, however, several country markets are still blocked this week, the elevators being full, cars not being available not fast enough to keep them clear. It is therefore just as well that the pressure to market grain is not heavier. Threshing was interfered with by the rains, which were general at the close of last week, this being almost the first break since threshing started. Very fine, mild weather, however, prevailed this week. Threshing is well advanced, and promises to be finished in good time. The quality of the wheat continues to show up extra fine, being nearly all No. 1 hard and No. 1 northern, with a little No. 2 and No. 3 northern, but scarcely anything in the other grades. A prolonged storm on the upper lakes at the close of last week and the beginning of this week interfered with shipments by water from our Lake Superior ports, and led to a rapid increase in stocks there. Elevators A and B and Fort William were filled up and elevator C was called into requisition for a time. Later the boats were able to move again, and on Thursday it was reported that no less than seven steamers were loading wheat at Fort William that day. Receipts of wheat of this crop at Fort William and Port Arthur up to October 15 amounted to 6,557,000 bushels, compared with 3,964,000 bushels for the corresponding period of last year. Shipments by water from the ports named for the same period were 5,150,000 bushels. Approximately 13,500 cars of wheat of this crop have been inspected to the end of this month, or equal to about 11,500,000. This represents the total movement of the crop eastward from country points, not including flour. The official figures have not been made up yet, but this estimate is close to the actual amount. This shows much the largest movement on record here. An estimate of the crop by the local Grain Dealers' association places the total at 64,283,000 bushels of wheat for Manitoba and the Territories, or equal to an average yield of about 24½ bushels per acre. There has been a good demand for spot wheat at Fort William to make up cargoes, at firm prices. There has been an advance on the week of ½ to 1c in value, and at the close of Friday's business prices were 1 hard, 72½c and 1 northern, 70½c, immediate delivery; 71¾ and 69¾c delivery first half November, and 71½ and 69½ delivery last half November, all in store Port Arthur or Fort William. 2 northern is 4c, 3 northern 6c and No. 4 wheat 10c under the price of 1 hard.

OATS—The market has not changed perceptibly since a week ago, so far as prices are concerned. There is, however, a firmer feeling in sympathy with the bullish advices from Toronto and Montreal of the past week, coupled with the fact that cars are short here which makes it difficult to keep stocks moving freely. Moreover farmers are seemingly not very anxious to seel at present prices. These influences have created the firmer feeling noted, which manifests itself in the shape of an advance in the quotations which some dealers make for their oats. We have not heard of any trading at the higher figures, as feed merchants and others seem to be able to secure what oats they want on the old basis. No. 2 white oats are worth 26¾ to 27c per bushel at Fort William. At country points farmers are getting 20c per bushel at central points.

BARLEY—Receipts are light. Dealers are paying 33c per bushel for carlots of malting grade on track here, and 27 to 30c for feed.

FLAXSEED—The market has declined. Dealers are now paying 97c to $1 per bushel to farmers at country points.

SPELTZ—The market holds steady at 30c per bushel of 50 pounds, delivered in Winnipeg.

HAY—$6 to $7 per ton for fresh baled in carlots on track, Winnipeg.

POTATOES—30c per bushel.

BUTTER—Creamery—The season is becoming advanced, and the make is falling off. Local creameries are getting as high as 23c per pound for choice creamery, and the market ranges from 20 to 23c per pound.

BUTTER—Dairy — Jobbing houses are buying most of the receipts outright, and are paying 14 to 15c net for best grades. Seconds are worth 12 to 14c net.

DRESSED MEATS — Beef, city dressed, 5½ to 6½c, country stock, ½c less; mutton, 8 to 9c; lamb, 11½c; hogs, 9 to 10½c.

POULTRY—Spring chickens, 40 to 60c per pair, alive; fowl, 60 to 70c ducks, 9c per pound; turkeys, 10 to 11c, live weight.

CHEESE—The price is firmer at 13 to 13½c per pound.

EGGS—18c per dozen.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The export season is advancing, and while there is no cessation in the movement as yet it is true that a number of western districts are now through shipping. Advices from the east and the old country note a weaker market, but this is not the case here so far as we can learn, as buyers are still quoting the prices of the past several weeks for both export and butchers' grades. Best export steers are worth 4c per pound, port of shipment, and prices range from 3½ to 4c. Butchers' cattle are steady at 3 to 3½c.

"WELL, THANK YOU."

A Granton Man is now Able to Make this Answer.

Inquiring Friends did not always get such a Cheery Reply because for Many Years Mr. Fletcher Suffered with Lumbago.

Granton, Ont., Oct. 12. (Special)—Mr. John Fletcher, a well-known farmer of this place who suffered for a long time with Lumbago and Kidney Trouble, has at last found a cure.

Now, when his friends inquire as to his health, he cheerily tells them that he is well, something which he has not been able to do for a long time, till quite recently.

Mr. Fletcher tells the story of his illness and how he was cured, as follows:

"I was troubled for a long time with Lumbago and Kidney Trouble. My urine was of a very red color. I tried many medicines but could get nothing to help me.

"I consulted the best medical doctors in Granton and St. Mary's, but they could do nothing for me.

"At last one day a druggist in Granton suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills as a cure for my Lumbago. I purchased a box and began to take them right away. The first box helped me and I kept on till at last I was completely cured.

"I am now as well as ever I was, and have not any trace of Lumbago about me. I am perfectly sound and I thank Dodd's Kidney Pills for it.

"I recommend them to all my friends, and as for myself I never intend that my house shall be without them, for I believe them to be the greatest medicine in the world."

Mr. Fletcher is a man who means every word he says and is prepared to substantiate the truth of every statement made above.

There seems to be no case of Lumbago, Backache, Kidney Trouble, or Rheumatism that Dodd's Kidney Pills will not cure.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea in one remedy for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and different seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one all in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state a remedy for many and grievous ills. In its gradual and unobtrusive use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. SATURDAY, NOV. 22, 1902.

The late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone once said: "Nothing except the mint can make money without advertising." This is why Gladstone is remembered as the Grand Old Man.

A miracle was performed at Ottawa. Says the Slocan Drill. For the first time in history the Dominion postoffice department has accumulated a surplus amounting to about $5,000. It is a small, but nevertheless a pleasant surprise, and now that they have got on to the combination the surplus may expand. Canucks have always regarded an $800,000 deficit each year as the peculiar heritage and birthright of the postal authorities, and it will take them some time to get used to the new order of things. Local customers of Timothy Eaton are responsible for the surplus.

Gray hairs in the felon's cap are always calculated to remove pity. William Stuart, the old counterfeiter now in the Toronto jail, presents a figure of great human interest. At the age of 75 he is about to pass into the penitentiary under a sentence which practically means life imprisonment. In spite of the old man's mild manners and pleasing address, the indications are that he is no stranger to crime. He readily confesses his guilt, but steadily refuses to incriminate his associates. In fact, the old man does not appear so much concerned over his imprisonment as he does being separated from his violin. Confined to a cell, he is, in his distress over the absence of his beloved instrument, indifferent to his surroundings. For the violin he pleads without apparent thought of liberty. His soul craves the charm of the instrument and its soothing notes. Stone walls and prison bars inspire no terror as compared with that loss. What evil agency could have cast the lines of a gentle old man in criminal paths? The picture is a painful scene to contemplate, and illustrates the contrary forces which surround a human being.—Toronto World.

THE HOBO.

He came from where he started,
And was going where he went.
He hadn't had a smell of food,
Not even had a scent.

He never even muttered once
Till he began to talk,
And when he left the kitchen door
He took the garden walk.

He said: "There's no one with me,
Because I am alone;
I might have scintillated once;
My clothes have always shone.

"I got there 'fore the other ones
Because I started first;
The reason I look shabby is Because I'm dressed the worst."

Then I asked him where he came from—
This was just [illegible]
