Mill Engine Breaks Down.

IT WAS OVERTAXED

A New 200 Horsepower Engine will Be Ordered at Once.

The engine which became disabled at Eugene mill broke down Friday afternoon and as a consequence it was necessary to close down some of the workings and let some of the men go. It will probably take five or six days to repair the damage and to get the mill in operation again. Owing to the scarcity of water the engine has been used to run the mill. It is an 80 horse power engine and has been doing the work of 100 horsepower engine. It will be repaired and a new one ordered which will be of 200 horsepower. With the new engine and new pump it will be possible to operate the mine regardless of the water supply from the flumes.

Liberal Reoganization.

The Moyie Liberal association has reorganized with the following officers: J. C. Drewry, president; J. S. MacEachern, vice-president; J. P. Farrell, Secretary and treasurer. The following is the executive committee; A. T. Clark, Jos. Wiederstadt, D. Martin, Wm. Laird, John McDonald. The Liberals will hold a public meeting on Monday evening, Oct. 24, which will be addressed by W. A. Galliher, J. C. Drewry and Alfred Parr.

Why Not Reorganize?

An effort should be made by the people of Moyie to reorganize the board of trade. There are several matters that need immediate attention, and the board of trade is the proper body to look after them. The old waterworks system which was a source of expense to a few individuals, has been done away with and a new one installed, which will give good satisfaction to everybody interested. Another matter that needs looking after is the cemetery. A new site should be selected or the present cemetery cleaned and fixed up. This matter has been under discussion for several years, but the same condition exists now as at the outset. Moyie at one time had a good, energetic board of trade and much good was accomplished by it. The same material is here today and it should be reorganized.

Government Agent Armstrong has issued an order to the effect that all placer mining claims legally held are laid over from October 12th until the 1st day of June, 1905.

The Howe Carnival Company played last Friday and Saturday evenings in Morley hall to good audiences.

The new Methodist church will be formally opened tomorrow, and the service will be conducted by the Rev. S. J. Thompson of Cranbrook.

Prof. Chase gave a very successful dance in the Morley hall on Thursday evening of last week. It was the first dance held in the hall since it was remodeled, and it goes without saying that those present enjoyed the change.

Railway Rules.

The railway companies of the Dominion have agreed among themselves in response to a circular from the railway commission to draft a uniform code of rules to govern the operations of trains. Mr. Blair and his colleagues are of opinion that the enforcement of uniform rules will prevent frequent accidents involving loss of life and property. The roads will be compelled to introduce the block system wherever the business is heavy enough to make it necessary. Automatic switch devices will be insisted upon so that the semaphore will first show the danger before a switch is opened. The land and light signals will be made uniform on all the roads, and a rule will be introduced that no train hand shall work more than a specifield number of hours each day whether he wants to or not.

Baker's Chances.

Nelson Tribune: It is rumored James A. Baker of Slocan City will be put up by the Socialists to contest Kootenay. Mr. Baker is one of the executive of the Western Federation of Miners, and because of that alone he would poll a good vote, for the Western Federation and the United Mine Workers have together close on to 1500 members who are registered voters in Kootenay.

Creston Items.

For a town of its size there is not a busier place on the Crow's Nest line than Creston. One has really to stop off and remain in the place awhile to thoroughly grasp its possibileties. It has three substantial industrie, farming, mining and lumbering. The climate is equal to that of California, and it is simply wonderful the amount of fruit and vegetables raised here each season. Land that was purchased for farming for $2 an acre now readily sells for $50 an acre, and it is worth it.

Between 20 and 25 men are employed at the Alice mine near here. The concentrator and tramway are working well and about 50 tons of ore are treated daily.

It seems to be the prevailing opinion that the sawmill will again be operated this fall as soon as there is sufficient water. The mill is now in the hands of coast syndicate and all of the legal entanglements have been straightened out. The mill when running employs about 40 men, all of whom board and live in the town.

Messrs. Fade & Crawford have the mercantile business all to themselves, and they are prospering, as they well deserve.

Geo. Munro has repainted his hotel and is making several improvements on the interior. He is employing a good business, as is also Sam Miller who runs the other hotel, the Creston House.

J. Wilson, constable, has been granted a six weeks leave of absence and he and his family are visiting in Manitoba. He will not leave Creston until next Spring.

There are 45 children attending the Creston public school. Miss Jessie Moore, formerly teacher in the Moyie school, is the teacher.

Ed Mallandaine is the most versatile man in Creston. He is townsite agent, justice of the peace, manager of the sawmill, coroner, civil engineer, mining recorder and school trustee, and fills all the positions with dignity and credit. Besides attending to all of these duties he found time to get married last summer and is now a good type of a settled down family man.

"No," said Constance in a tone of unshakable conviction as she lay, her chin propped upon her hands, amid the subdued richness of the oriental pillows. "No; I might love a convict or I might love a Hottentot, but a widower, never!"

Her cousin, Mary Singleton, a practical young woman more given to jests than sentiment, eyed her curiously, but did not speak.

"Just fancy," Constance continued, with scornful derision, "being a man's second choice, listening to a rehash of his first lovemaking! Gracious!"

Her tone implied that the thing was well nigh unimaginable, but her cousin only laughed a bit skeptically and took the other side of the question.

"Do you mean to say that because a person has loved once he—or she, for that matter—cannot love again without feeling that it is a rehash of the old love?" she asked, with a yawn. "My dear girl, you're all wrong. The second love is simply a different matter."

"The average human being," she continued shrewdly, "is capable of a good many loves. I don't at all believe in these one love individuals—the sort who mourn forever, you know. That sort of thing is simply emotional poverty."

Having delivered herself of this worldly observation, she glanced at the clock and began to coil up her loosened hair in a way that signified that it was time that she went to her room to dress for dinner.

"Soulless creature," taunted Constance, with an indulgent but gently superior air. "Defend widowers if you choose, but none of them for me."

"You girls with fine sentiments," Mary retorted teasingly, her hand on the doorknob, "are just the ones to look out for." And she passed out, smiling, into the hall. A moment later she opened the door again and, thrusting her head into the room, said in an enigmatical manner:

"By the way, Con, be sure to tell Douglas Stane that when he asks you!" Then, before her cousin could reply, she vanished, slamming the door behind her.

Constance stood in the middle of the room for a moment perfectly motionless, wondering if she could have heard aright. Douglas Stane a widower! For of course that was what Mary meant. Douglas Stane a widower! And in the four months in which they had been growing daily fonder of each other she had never before heard the fact mentioned.

With a quick movement she glided toward the door and locked it. Then, with her hands clasped with painful tightness, she stood in the middle of the room and repeated with growing incredulity: "A widower! Douglas Stane a widower!"

"It can't be true—it can't be—it can't be!" she protested, with a moan. His likeness rose before her—tall, broad and a bit stern of face. Then, going hot and cold by turns, she sank down upon the divan once more and buried her head in the pillows.

"Her lover!" That was what her heart cried out, and, though she would not permit herself to say it, there was a wild, sweet bliss in the thought. Subtly she had known it almost from the first. But a widower!

She shivered now at the very remembrance of things that had once thrilled her—the unconscious softening of his keen eyes when they met hers, the elusive but unmistakable tenderness of his touch when he helped her over a rough place or held her wrap. Time was when the caress of his glance made her blood tingle. Now she remembered it with a sort of loathing. Had his eyes not softened for some other woman?

Thus she wrestled with love and pain until the striking of the clock reminded her that the dinner hour was at hand. Jumping up, she began to dash cold water over her flushed face and wet eyes, while she tried to steady her surging emotions.

"Everything went wrong," she apologized when she appeared at the dinner table rather flurried and breathless. "Couldn't get my hair up right, hooks wouldn't hook, and buttons wouldn't button."

Her cousin smiled.

"Methinks the lady doth protest too much," she thought to herself.

"Dick just telephoned," she announced, feeling rather small and guilty as she noted Constance's flushed face and feverish eyes. "He and Douglas Stane are coming up after dinner to take us down to the Spouting Rock."

Constance opened her lips with the evident intention of declining, but before she could speak her cousin continued glibly:

"I just accepted for both of us because I knew you would like to go." Then she continued under her breath: "Poor old Douglas! Wouldn't I like to hear what she says to him! How shall I ever make my peace with them, I wonder?"

When, the dinner over, they sat on the broad piazza in the twilight she half regretted her prank and decided to speak, but before her good intention crystallized into words Constance spoke to her, and at the studied indifference of the latter's voice and the marked ennui of her manner all her love of mischief returned.

"I never before heard you mention that Mr. Stane is a widower," she said, patting her lips with one of her fingers to discourage a yawn.

"Didn't you?" queried Mary innocently. "Perhaps I never did mention it." Then at the sound of footsteps on the gravel she added rather hurriedly, "Don't lay it up against the poor fellow, though."

Two dark figures were approaching from the foot of the lawn. If Constance jumped at the conclusion that Douglas Stane was a widower just because she had said, "Tell that to Douglas Stane when he asks you," it was her own fault.

Meantime that young lady's greeting to Mr. Stane was a trifle stiff, but no one but her tormenting cousin noticed it. The gentleman himself seemed utterly unconscious. He had determined to learn his fate, and in the grip of that mighty resolve all minor things escaped his notice.

Miss Singleton seemed bent upon aiding him, for she and her fiance were lost to sight around a bend of the road. Stane "Hoo-hooed!" after the manner of the cottagers in the neighborhood, but no answer came back.

"Deserted us already," he laughed, his voice a little shaken by the great question that trembled on his lips.

"Let's hurry, and catch up with them," suggested his companion.

"How extremely unflattering!" came his answer. "I was just longing to have you all to myself."

He tried to speak lightly, but eagerness vibrated in his voice. They had emerged from the grove and stood at the edge of the rocks.

"My dear, dear love!" He took both of the small hands in his own and stood looking down at her, struggling to speak calmly.

"You know—you must know," he went on eagerly, "that you are the only woman on earth to me. How I've lived all these years without you I do not know. I can't face life without you any longer. I never knew what it was to live until I met you."

A quick change came over Constance's face; even in the dim light he saw it and wondered, and she wrenched her hands away.

"For shame!" she said hotly. "For shame! Do you think any woman will love you better for ignoring her—that other—the one who in other years was 'all the world' to you?"

She stopped, unable to go further, because the tears were choking her. A look of blank amazement overspread Stane's face, and he stared at her with eyes that were a concentrated interrogation.

"Oh, it seems to me," she went on passionately, "that if I were a man and had once loved a woman well enough to marry her, and she had died, I'd be a little bit true to her memory! If I wanted care, companionship, whatever it is that men remarry for, I'd say so, instead of pretending that I had never really loved before!"

Had she been less wrought up by her feelings, she might have noticed that during this tirade several expressions fluttered like shadows across her lover's face. Astonishment gave way to understanding, and that in turn to a grim determination.

"I see," he said slowly, but in a voice whose ring made her look up at him with the conviction that he was no longer a suppliant for her favor. "You reject my love because"—

"Because you have been married before," she finished stubbornly.

"Jealous of a dead woman," he mused, looking at her through eyes narrowed to a mere slit. "Ah, me!"

Then, as if the episode were closed, he asked quietly, "Shall we return to the house?"

She felt suddenly terrified, bereft. She had expected something very different—expostulation — self justification. A mighty struggle was going on within her. But above the din of contending feelings she heard one clear cry, "I love him! I love him!" and she held out her hands as beseechingly as a child.

"You poor, silly little girl!" he whispered in a voice of great content as he swept her up in his arms. "Who ever told you that absurd tale? But I've proved to you that you would have loved me even if I had been!"

Once There Was a Man.

Once there was a man who complained that unworthy men were too frequently elected to office.

"Do you attend the primaries?" asked his hearers.

"I do not," he said.

"Then you have no right to kick," they told him. "It is the duty of every good citizen to attend the primaries and see that the best men are chosen as candidates."

Whereupon he began attending the primaries.

He worked faithfully for the nomination of sober, honest and reputable candidates.

But it did no good.

The other fellows turned out in greater numbers and outvoted him, and bad men were nominated and elected to office as before.

He felt that he had a right to kick this time, and he complained again.

"Do you attend the primaries?" his hearers asked him.

"I do."

"Then you ought to keep your mouth shut," they said. "You are a part of the crowd that nominates these bad men, and you are responsible for them."

STEPHENSON'S ROCKET

STORY OF FIRST LOCOMOTIVE TO DRAW A PASSENGER TRAIN.

Man Who Acted as Fireman on That Epoch-Making Trip 75 Years Ago Lives at Des Moines, Ia., and Grieves That He Cannot Go and See the Model at St. Louis of the Engine Here Pictured.

A model of the famous Rocket of George Stephenson, the first engine to draw a passenger train, stands in the Transportation Building of the St. Louis Exposition, and the man who acted as fireman on the epoch-making day, seventy-three years ago, lives in a humble cottage in East Des Moines, Ia., and when he thinks of his inability to visit the Exposition and see the Rocket moistens tears come into his eyes and course down his cheeks.

"I'd give anything I possess just to see and handle it again," he said recently, as he told the story of that memorable trip. "But I'm old now and feeble. I'm not the lad I was when Stephenson gave me a word of cheer and I climbed into the locomotive and we started on our trip."

Edward Entwistle was a lad of sixteen when the trip was made. He was recommended to Stephenson by the duke of Bridgewater, whose steward declared that Entwistle was the best mechanic in his shops.

It was in September, 1831, that the Rocket made its trip. Stephenson had triumphed over many difficulties and the test was to be made. He had completed his plans, obtained a charter for the railroad between Liverpool and Manchester and laid his track.

Stephenson had one strong friend, the Duke of Newcastle. When he heard that Stephenson was to appear before the committee he saw Stephenson and bade him be careful of his answers, lest the committee refuse the charter. Mr. Entwistle, in telling the story of the Rocket, says:

"George heeded well the instructions of the duke. The committee asked him all sorts of questions, but the answers were always cautious and hard headed. In particular they tried to find out what the capacity of the train was to be in the way of speed and the handling of freight. 'It will travel fast enough and pull freight enough,' answered Stephenson, 'to pay the interest on the money invested.' That was all they got out of him, but the charter was granted. Work was begun on the road at once, but there were ten miles that were a bog, and gravel and dirt had to be hauled in, so that it was four years before the rails could be laid.

"The Liverpool and Manchester road was the first road to be built with flat, smooth rails, to act in conjunction with flanges on the wheels. In the north of England a short road had been built a year or two before Stephenson completed his line, but it was used only for hauling coal cars, and there were flanges on the track and the wheels fitted into these.

"Well, there were engines run on the road before the Rocket, but they were of a different type. They were construction engines for the most part. The Rocket was built to enter a competition for a prize of $2,500, offered by the Government for a high speed engine for passenger service.

When the track was completed and Stephenson was ready to enter the competition he was without a fireman. He applied to the Duke of Bridgewater and was sent by the latter to his machine shops. Here Stephenson repeated his request to the foreman of the shop. The latter replied:

"I haven't a man to send, but that lad will serve your purpose if you care to take him and get an order from the steward."

Stephenson was in need of a helper. The order from the steward was not long in coming and Edward Entwistle, a machinist's apprentice, went on the Rocket.

Stephenson took Entwistle out the following Sunday to let him try his hand at the throttle. They ran the engine down to the bog, a distance of fifteen miles, and return. Stephenson was more than pleased. The next day was the day for the competition. Entwistle, speaking of the trip, says:

"I don't remember much about the weather. All the days in England are pretty much the same and along the seacoast there is always more or less of a fog. The thirty-one miles were what might be called level country. Where the bog had been filled in, of course, was level. It was slightly down hill between Manchester and Liverpool. The country was not rough.

"I don't remember the time we made on the trip, but it didn't mean much, as the trip was marred by a fatal accident. We were about half way down when a stop was made. The Duke of Wellington was talking to Mr. Huskisson and they were standing on the second track. Suddenly a construction engine came around the corner and bore down on them. Wellington jumped and escaped safely, but Mr. Huskisson was struck down and the wheels passed

WALTER SCOTT.

WALTER SCOTT, M. P.

President of the Leader-Times Publishing Company.

Of all the newspaper men of the Canadian West, perhaps none is personally more popular or has proved professionally more successful than Walter Scott, M. P. for West Assiniboia and president of the company owning the Regina Leader and the Moose Jaw Times. This is in no sense remarkable, save the characteristics of the man one knows, for they are characteristics that necessarily compel success and inevitably attract friends. Quiet, cheerful, disciplined enthusiasm, tireless industry, calm judgment, broad outlook, abounding charity—these are the outstanding qualities impressing every one who meets Mr. Scott. He has his own opinions, opinions reached after mature thought, and which he advocates and defends reasonably and reasonably. But among those holding contrary views he has hosts of friends, and none ever heard him attack any man on personal grounds. It is doubtful if any one has ever heard Mr. Scott at any time say a word in dispraise or depreciation of any man whatsoever. Envy, hatred, calumny, malice, uncharitableness—these are all utterly foreign to his nature and disposition. If he cannot praise, he never blames. While Mr. Scott fearlessly criticizes what he considers wrong policies or courses of conduct, and in no sense can be considered a mere acquiescer, he appears to have the unusual faculty of looking at things from a detached, impersonal point of view, and of not including the person holding views from which he differs in the condemnation he gives to the opinions they hold. Both in his journalistic and political debates, he attacks and defends principles, rather than men. His method of public conviction is based on no appeal to any consideration of either person or sentiment but rests his case wholly on grounds of logic and reason. He compiles, arranges, relates, and presents facts and evidence impossible to dispute, points to the conclusions these facts have compelled him himself to reach, and leads his readers or his auditors by the same process of reasoning, to arrive at similar conclusions. But as a writer and as a speaker, Mr. Scott indulges in no "frills." Elegance of expression is in every case subordinated to a businesslike presentation of facts, or issues. After he is through the dullest reader or hearer understands Mr. Scott's position, knows how he has reached it, and in all probability is disposed to agree with him therein.

Mr. Scott is another instance of a successful professional man hailing from the farm. He was born in October, 1867, in London township, Middlesex county, Ont., and until the age of seventeen had little or no opportunity for education. At those infrequent intervals, when his services were not urgently required on the homestead, he attended the nearby country school, where he learned to read and write. But almost every minute of his early years he did the duty of chore boy or hired man at home. He picked the potato bug, pulled ragweed, followed the harrow and the plow, rode the sulky rake and the reaper, bound sheaves by hand, learned to swing both the scythe and the cradle, hoed the corn, pulled turnips, chopped wood, and studied at close range the disposition of the cow, the temper of the horse, and the life-purpose of the pig. From the quizzical humor with which Mr. Scott relates the experiences of those days, his friends infer that he loved not the occupation of pioneer farming, but, despite this, he feels an honest and pardonable pride in the fact that whatever measure of success he has attained has been due, not to extraneous help or accidental advantages, but to personal effort in overcoming personal disabilities.

In March, 1885, a lad of seventeen, Mr. Scott came west, landing at Portage la Prairie, and starting work as a driver in the delivery wagon of a firm of general traders there. After five months of this, he joined the staff of the Manitoba Liberal as "devil." In a few months he received promotion to "the case," and in December, 1886, accompanied C. J. Atkinson, the then proprietor of the paper, to Regina, where the Journal was founded. For six years he was working printer and writer with The Standard and the Leader, with a winter's interval at Winnipeg job offices to gain further experience.

In 1890 Mr. Scott returned as mechanical foreman to the Journal, which the following year was acquired by a local company under the presidency of the present Judge Scott of Edmonton. Two years later, in partnership with J. K. McInnis, he bought the Regina Standard, and, two years later still, disposed of his interest to Mr. McInnis, and bought the Moosejaw Times. He conducted the paper personally for a year, and in 1895 purchased the Regina Leader from W. F. Darin, M. P., and again returned to the Territorial Capital. Shortly afterwards the Leader-Times Company was organized, with Mr. Scott as president, and both papers entered on an enlarged sphere of usefulness.

The Leader, of which Mr. Scott, prior to the engrossing attention necessitated by public affairs, was more closely in control, has an enviable reputation among western newspapers. In the Territories its position corresponds somewhat with that occupied by the Toronto Globe in Eastern Canada. It is able, progressive, sound and sane. It gives the news when it is news, and on matters of Territorial interest has had the enterprise to institute and conduct personal investigation. The campaign of information it has within recent years carried on in connection with railway blockades, and general inefficiency and inadequacy of transportation facilities throughout the region in which it circulates is one that has attracted attention throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and that has earned for itself the enthusiastic support of the farmers whose grievances it exposed. Its editorial opinions are weighty and well considered, always regard public questions from the Western point of view, and are free from partisan rancor or hysteria, while typographically the Leader is one of the handsomest papers in the West.

Mr. Scott's reputation has been founded on his journalistic and parliamentary career, and hence it is not generally known that he is one of the best amateur ball players in the West. He was a playing member of Regina's first nine for eight years, and can play any position. For several seasons he was pitcher, and for two was behind the bat. In 1895, the year of the Territorial Exhibition, when he was living at Moose Jaw, he played second base with the local nine that won the championship of the Territories against several clubs, with imported batteries. Mr. Scott has also won several curling trophies. He is not a "jiner," and has but few associations in fraternal societies, but is a member of Camp Balmoral, Sons of Scotland. As might have been expected from his Scotch ancestry, he is a Presbyterian.

Perhaps among the editors of the West Mr. Scott's chief title to popularity was the highly efficient manner in which, in 1899, he acted as president of the Western Canada Press Association. During the term of his presidency the first, and perhaps the most enjoyable and successful, of the ambitious series of excursions which have marked the successful career of the W. C. P. A. was inaugurated. The editors, with their sisters, and their cousins and their aunts, went through to the Coast and down to Washington State points, being tendered many banquets, receptions and other entertainments en route, at all of which Mr. Scott was the Association's protagonist, he and his umbrella—which no one ever saw him without—well and worthily maintaining the honor and dignity of Western Canadian journalism.

Four years ago Mr. Scott was nominated for the Commons in West Assiniboia, and, after an exciting election, defeated his opponent, the brilliant Irishman, Nicholas F. Davin, by hundreds of votes. At Ottawa Mr. Scott has made for himself an enviable record for so young a man. He has paid great attention to the subjects of grain trade and inspection, has resolutely stood for discontinuance of land grants to railway companies, and on the general questions of railways and transportation has displayed great activity. Among the many local benefits he has succeeded in securing for his constituency was the inducing of the Dominion Government to deed to these towns blocks of lots which had been held for years in a Town Site Pool, so escaping taxation.

Of all the young men in the Ottawa House, there are none whose utterances command more respectful attention, both from his leaders and his opponents. As quiet of voice as he is of manner, Mr. Scott depends for the effect of what he says rather on the matter than the manner of his remarks, but few speeches delivered in the Commons are more persuasive than his closely reasoned, fact-full addresses. Last January Mr. Scott was re-nominated by a convention which had delegations from every corner of the constituency, and which offered him the nomination on the first ballot with absolute unanimity.

Mr. Scott is one of the West's rising young men, both as a citizen, a journalist, a politician. His tact, his courage, his industry mark him for future honors, and Western newspaper men may felicitate themselves that among their number is one with such promise of a career so distinguished.

At Montreal the executive committee of the Lord's Day Alliance, composed of Rev. T. Albert Moore, Toronto, secretary, Rev. J. Pedley, Rev. J. L. George and Mr. Crombie, addressed a session of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, and asked the Congress to support a bill to prohibit work on Sunday, which is to be brought before Parliament. The delegation received a tremendous ovation, and the request will probably be granted.

JUST THE THING THAT'S NEEDED—A pill that does its work quickly and yet is so compounded that the ingredients of it preserve their virtues, act upon the intestinal canal and clear them of excreta, the result which cannot but be beneficial, looked for by the medical profession, was found in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are the result of much study, and are scientifically speaking a laxative and an alterative.

Commercial Traveller Talks of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Valuable Advice to Those Who Ride Railroad Train Frequently.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 26.—(Special)—H. Ireland, one of the old-best known commercial travellers on the road, has come out with a statement for the benefit of fellow travellers.

"With pleasure," says Mr. Ireland, "that I indorse Dodd's Kidney Pills. While on a trip through the Provinces Dodd's Kidney completely cured me of a severe backache that had bothered me for some time. The first dose went right to the spot and cured the trouble so effectually that it has not and is not likely to return.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills are just as good," Mr. Ireland concludes, "for those to stay cured."

SUCCESSFUL MOTHERS.

Will always find that the medicine most successful in bringing the babies of hearty, healthy children are those who are careful to note the first evidence of illness and treat it at once. The wise mother gives her children Baby's Own Tablets at the first symptom of any ailment, and almost at once the little one is all right. Mrs. Stevenson, 13 Bishop street, Halifax, N. S., says: "I gives me pleasure to be able to speak of the great value of Baby's Own Tablets. I always give them to my baby when they are ailing in any way and they speedily make them well. I would advise every mother to give the Tablets in the house." These tablets allay teething irritation, regulate the stomach, destroy worms, prevent stomach troubles, prevent fevers and break up colds. They are given safely to a new born babe. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Stanstead Junction, P. Q., 17th Aug. 1903.

MESSRS. C. C. RICHARDS & CO.—Gentlemen—I fell from the bridge loading from a platform to a loaded car assisting my son in unloading a load of grain. The bridge went down as I fell on my back and struck the ends of the levers, causing a pain very hard to describe. Only for its very hard wood I would have broken it. I commenced using MINARD'S LINIMENT, and the third day went to Montreal on business, and got about well by the use of a cane. In six days was near well. I can sincerely recommend it as the best Liniment that I know of in use.

Yours truly,

AUGUST EMIGRATION.

Liverpool Daily Post: The number of emigration to Canada from this port during August, 1903, has been 27,500 against 19,000 in August, 1902, and 29,712 in August, 1901. Of the substantial number of emigrants who sailed for Canada last month, 17,000 were Canadian, for it is not generally realized that the Canadian is less than one-third of the Canadian direct to Canada.

MISS CORELLI PLAYS "CARNEGIE."

Marie Corelli is now engaged in a novel in which Andrew Carnegie is said to figure prominently and unfavorably. The authoress has a poor opinion of Mr. Carnegie's character, owing to his action respecting the free library for Stratford-on-Avon, and even does not give him credit for making his own fortune, which he therefore tells you he lost by his luck.

Scarlet fever is reported to be very prevalent in Montreal, and many people are taking their children away to the country. The disease is said to be very virulent, and many people are taking no chances. The complaint is highly spoken of by those who have had it. The proprietors claim it will cure any case of cancer or stomach trouble.

Harry Anderson and James King, caught by an Iowa posse, are now believed by the police of Winfield to have had no connection with the Rock Island train hold-up.

"One foot in the Grave."—If the thousands of people who rush to so worthy a remedy as South American Nervine as a last resort would get it as a first resort, how much misery and suffering would be spared. If you have any nerve disorder you needn't suffer a minute longer. A thousand testimonies to prove it.—36

Sciatica put him on Crutches.—Jas. THE SERVANT PROBLEM ENDS; SPINSTER HAS A PLAN.

One of the many schemes which have been suggested in London as a possible solution of the domestic servant problem, probably the latest in the most ambitious. The idea, which had its inception in the mind of an unmarried daughter of a country clergyman, and which has been largely discussed in the London press, is that of the formation of a co-operative joint-stock company, to be known as the Spinsters' Registry, Limited, with a National Register, Limited, with a capital of £100,000 in £1 shares, to be allotted to obtain as many of the thousands and thousands of unmarried women in the country to be on the register. A town or district Secretary will be appointed, who will be taught to organize domestic service in her district. The work is to be carried on by a board of directors, all of whom are to be unmarried women.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF CONTRABAND QUESTION.

Russia's position on the question of contraband will be officially promulgated in the form of decisions of the Admiralty Court in the cases of the Calchas, Arabia and Allanton, when they come up on appeal, says a St. Petersburg cable. Prof. de Martens, president of the commission which decided that this or that description of the contraband, will appear on behalf of the Government, thus inspiring the acceptance of the principles formulated by the commission. It will be in possession of the British and American notes, and the conclusions of these Governments will be practically before the courts. Russia's position has been authoritatively stated as follows: Russia does not desire to interfere with Great Britain's legitimate commerce with Japan, but she has the right to, and must, protect herself as far as possible against shipments which may aid the enemy in prosecuting the war.

Could Not Eat Without Suffering

Sixteen Years of Great Distress from Indigestion and Liver Trouble—Doctor's Failed—Cure Effected by

Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills.

In most cases of chronic indigestion the liver and kidneys are at fault as well as the stomach, and because of their combined action on these organs, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure when all ordinary means fail.

The case of Mrs. Husband is not unlike scores and hundreds which are repeated to us. There can be no better evidence as to the thoroughness and effectiveness of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mrs. E. Husband, Moore street, St. Catharines, Ont., states: "I was seriously afflicted with indigestion and stomach trouble for sixteen years. Finally I became so bad that I could scarcely eat anything without enduring terrible distress. Gradually I grew weaker and more emaciated, and though treated by three doctors and a specialist I received no benefit.

"After a time a pain began in my right side, which medical men said was liver trouble. I never got relief until I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they helped me at once. By using about a dozen boxes I was entirely cured. I owe my cure entirely to this treatment, and make this statement with the hope that some poor sufferer may benefit by my experience.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

If the possession of dress suits is any sign of prosperity, then Spokane is on the high road to wealth, says the Spokeman-Review. The possession of a dress suit is said to be a sign of money. But the check of the man who disports himself in evening dress is not always good. While dress suits cost all the way from $35 to $125, they can be rented for a couple of dollars and if one has a friend he can borrow one for less. Dress suits are always desirable to have because, if they are not worn any pawnbroker will lend money on them. The pawnbroker has a sinch, for he not only gets interest from the man who soaks the suit, but he can rent the suit to another who may have a desire to shine in society. Evening dress is to be the proper thing for society functions. It is generally also insisted on for waiters at hotels. White vests are also in style in smart functions. It has also been noticed that barbers and bartenders have lately shown an overwhelming desire to corner the white vest market. This all goes to show that man is but an ape.

A white shirt is generally a desirable thing to wear with evening dress. The best authorities maintain that the shirt should be clean, but then this is a minor detail. The best of authorities agree that a red flannel shirt is not appropriate with evening dress. There is some difference of opinion as to the kind of a collar to be worn with a dress suit. Some of the most stylish dressers agree that a standing collar should be worn, while others do not wear any at all. The more economical do not wear collar and a tie at the same time.
