SUBURBAN NEWS

CRANBROOK

William Rollins has gone into the Cariboo country to propagate religion amongst the aborigines.

There is no truth in the rumor that the local golf club will play the inmates of the New Westminster asylum on July 1.

When beef is so expensive and brains are so cheap, it's a wonder the city doesn't economize by substituting the latter for the former in its council.

Cranbrook girls want the boys to wrap handkerchiefs or old sacks about their hands when dancing. The girls say the boys' hands are rough on clean shirtwaists.

Great anxiety is felt in town. Chief Police Dow has not vagged a man this week. If this thing keeps up much longer, the chief is liable to drop dead from heart failure.

The ladies of this town now use fine stationery with their monograms embossed on it. When it comes to knowing how to do the proper thing, Cranbrook isn't so far behind Toronto after all.

Enie Small is fixing up his Canal Flat summer resort hotel. It will be run on the cosmopolitan plan. The millionaire with his roll of bills will be as welcome as the laborer with his roll of blankets.

Found in front of the Herald office today: "Vancouver, Feb. 1, 1907.—We will sweep Vancouver. Liberal landslide assured. (Signed) W. W. B. McInnes." This will be rather chilly reading for liberals.

The first straw hat of the season has just been seen on Baker street, and great excitement prevails. The fire department has been called out; chief of police Dow has sworn in 21 specials, and the W. C. T. U. and Licensed Victuallers are preparing for action.

Picked up on Armstrong avenue: "My darling Fred: I swallowed the postage stamp that was on your last letter, because I knew that your lips had touched it, and O, Fred, I felt so happy afterwards. Put a dozen stamps on your next letter."

Sergeant Dunc MacLean, one of the city's aggregation of handsome police, is doing good cartoon work for the Herald. He has all the Canadian caricaturists backed over the dump. Dunc is too bright a man to be in the arresting industry. He could hold a job on one of the great dailies.

Ere the snow flies or the geese-lets wend their way southward, this city will have a brand new, up-to-now tavern. V. Hyde Baker is going to erect a large stone and brick house for Hoggarth & Rollins on the site occupied by the Cranbrook hotel. The new tavern will be the best in the interior.

It is stated the mayor believes that the new city hall now being erected will be too small for city purposes, and that he is in favor of putting another story on the city part of the combination hall and court house. As the Crow bard warbled:

We must have before next fall
A new top story to the city hall;
But who, in answer to a public prayer,
Will put a new top story on our mayor.

The police court is a good industry. It is a dividend payer. During the month of May the fines collected amounted to $415. Besides this the prisoners worked 347 hours clearing streets, etc. At the rate of wages paid in town the prisoners earned $115.63¼ during the month; making the grand total $560.63¼. As a financier the new chief is a second Pierp Morgan. He has made the police court a good asset for the city.

The chief of police was instructed by the city council last Wednesday night to secure a jailer, who shall also act as policeman and poundkeeper, and caretaker of the council chamber and fire hall, at a salary of fifty bucks a month. Seeing that the salary offered is large the council should have included scavenger, blackening the mayor's shoes, and all round flip flop of the city, on the bill of fare. Aldermen Hickenbotham and Jackson, the mover and seconder, must be native sons of the ninth concession of the cent belt.

CARELESSNESS

On the Part of the C. P. R. at Cranbrook Causes Death of Switchman

On Wednesday, June 5, at about 2 o'clock in the morning, Percy Stringall, night yardman at the C. P. R, Cranbrook, met with a sudden death while switching a train. He stepped between two cars that were moving slowly, to turn the rod that throws out the coupling pin, and one foot was caught between the guard rail and the main rail, rendering escape impossible. His body was pulled down beneath the car, and there in the darkness, with no one to see him as he fell, the unfortunate man was crushed beneath the wheels of the freight car. One leg and a portion of the groin was badly mangled before the car stopped. When the body was discovered a few moments later life was extinct.

A jury was subpoened at the request of coroner Mallandaine, and the following intelligent (?) verdict was returned:

CRANBROOK, B. C., June 5, 1907.

The verdict of this jury is that the deceased, Percy Stringall, met with his death on the morning of June 5, 1907, in the yards of the Canadian Pacific railway at Cranbrook, through his foot being caught between the guard rail and main rail, between switches two and three, in west end of yard, and we consider that there ought to be more attention paid to the packing between these rails and all other rails in said yard.

Signed by the following jury: J. A. Arnold (foreman), V. A. Rollins, George R. Leask, R. W. McAuley, Devere Hunt, A. Doyle, F. Mallandaine (coroner.)

Pilgrim, just gaze upon the seven men who composed the jury and coroner, and then upon seven infants, and you will come to the conclusion that the latter could return a more intelligent verdict.

Not a word in the verdict how the unfortunate young man met his death; not a word about the C. P. R. being guilty of infractions of the Railway Act; not a word about the attorney-general's department not enforcing the law against the C. P. R.; etc. etc.

Had the deceased been an engineer, who had been on duty 72 hours, and happened to take a nap for a couple of seconds, and his engine collided with another, this aggregation of mental lightweights (coroner's jury) would have censured the engineer and his arrest would follow. Later on in the game the engineer would get a year or probably nine in the penitentiary.

Now, the Railway Act says that all frogs should be properly blocked and guarded; but in Cranbrook the act is ignored.

By the death of Stringall the officials of the C. P. R. should be up on a charge of murder.

Attorney-General Fulton is a solicitor for the C. P. R.; coroner Mallandaine and Devere Hunt are employes of the same company. If they censured the company they would lose their meal tickets. So what can you expect.

Beverly of Graustark

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON, Author of "Graustark"

Copyright, 1904, by Dodd, Mead and Company

Beverly Calhoun sat on the balcony with the princess long after midnight. The sky was black with the clouds of an approaching storm. The air was heavy with foreboding silence. Twice from their darkened corner near the pillar they saw Baldos as he paced steadily past the castle on patrol, with Haddan at his side. Dreamily the watchers in the cool balcony looked down upon the somber park and its occasional guardsman. Neither was in the mood to talk. As they rose at last to go to their rooms something whizzed through the air and dropped with a slight thud in the center of the balcony. The two young women started back in alarm. A faint light from Beverly's window filtered across the stone floor.

"Don't touch it, Beverly!" cried the princess as the girl started forward with an eager exclamation. But Beverly had been thinking of the very object that now quivered before her in the dull light, saucy, aggressive and jaunty as it was the night when she saw it for the first time.

A long, slim red feather bobbed to and fro as if saluting her with soldierly fidelity. Its base was an orange, into which it had been stuck by the hand that tossed it from below. Beverly grasped it with more ecstasy than wisdom and then rushed to the stone railing, Yetive looking on in amazement. Diligently she searched the ground below for the man who had sent the red message, but he was nowhere in sight. Then came the sudden realization that she was revealing a most unmaidenly eagerness, to him as well as to the princess, for she did not doubt that he was watching from the shadows below. She withdrew from the rail in confusion and fled to her bedchamber, followed by her curious companion. There were explanations—none of which struck speaker or listener as logical—and there were giggles which completely simplified the situation. Beverly thrust the slim red feather into her hair and struck an attitude that would have set Baldos wild with joy if he could have seen it. The next day, when she appeared in the park, the feather stood up defiantly from the band of her sailor hat, though womanly perverseness impelled her to ignore Baldos when he passed her on his way to mess.

The Duke of Mizrox came into the city hours after the time set for his arrival. It was quite dark when the escort sent by Colonel Quinnox drew up at the castle gates with the visitor. The duke and his party had been robbed by brigands in the broad daylight and at a point not more than five miles from Edelweiss! And thus the mystery of the signal fires was explained. Count Marianx did not soon forget the triumphant look he received from Beverly Calhoun when the duke's misfortunes were announced. Shameless as it may seem, she rejoiced exceedingly over the acts of the robbers.

Mizrox announced to the princess and her friends that he was not an emissary from the Axphainian government. Instead he was but little less than a fugitive from the wrath of Volga and the crown adherents. Earlier in the week he had been summoned before Volga and informed that his absence, for a few months at least, from the principality was desirable. The privilege was allowed him of selecting the country which he desired to visit during that period, and he coolly chose Graustark. He was known to have friendly feelings for that state, but no objections were raised. This friendship also gave him a welcome in Edelweiss. Mizrox plainly stated his position to Yetive and the prime minister. He asked for protection, but declined to reveal any of the plans then maturing in his home country. This reluctance to become a traitor, even though he was not in sympathy with his sovereign, was respected by the princess. He announced his willingness to take up arms against Dawsbergen, but would in no way antagonize Axphain from an enemy's camp.

The duke admitted that the feeling in Axphain's upper circles was extremely bitter toward Graustark. The old time war spirit had not died down. Axphain despised her progressive neighbor.

"I may as well inform your highness that the regent holds another and a deeper grudge against Graustark," he said in the audience chamber, where were asembled many of the nobles of the state, late on the night of his arrival. "She insists that you are harboring and even shielding the pretender to our throne, Prince Frederic. It is known that he is in Graustark, and, moreover, it is asserted that he is in direct touch with your government."

Yetive and her companions looked at one another with glances of comprehension. He spoke in English now for the benefit of Beverly Calhoun, an interested spectator, who felt her heart leap suddenly and swiftly into violent insurrection.

"Nothing could be more ridiculous," said Yetive after a pause. "We do not know Frederic, and we are not harboring him."

"I am only saying what is believed to be true by Axphain, your highness. It is reported that he joined you in the mountains in June and since has held a position of trust in your army."

"Would you know Prince Frederic if you were to see him?" quietly asked Lorry.

"I have not seen him since he was a very small boy and then but for a moment—on the day when he and his mother were driven through the streets on their way to exile."

"We have a new man in the castle guard, and there is a mystery attached to him. Would you mind looking at him and telling us if he is what Frederic might be in his manhood?" Lorry put the question, and every one present drew a deep breath of interest.

Mizrox readily consented, and Baldos, intercepted on his rounds, was led unsuspecting into an outer chamber. The duke, accompanied by Lorry and Baron Dangloss, entered the room. They were gone from the assemblage but a few minutes, returning with smiles of uncertainty on their faces.

"It is impossible, your highness, for me to say whether or not it is Frederic," said the duke frankly. "He is what I imagine the pretender might be at his age, but it would be sheer folly for me to speculate. I do not know the man."

Beverly squeezed the Countess Dagmar's arm convulsively.

"Hurrah!" she whispered in great relief. Dagmar looked at her in astonishment. She could not fathom the whimsical American.

"They have been keeping an incessant watch over the home of Frederic's cousin. He is to marry her when the time is propitious," volunteered the young duke. "She is the most beautiful girl in Axphain, and the family is one of the wealthiest. Her parents bitterly oppose the match. They were to have been secretly married some months ago, and there is a rumor to the effect that they did succeed in evading the vigilance of her people."

"You mean that they may be married?" asked Yetive, casting a quick glance at Beverly.

"It is not improbable, your highness. He is known to be a daring young fellow, and he has never failed in a siege against the heart of woman. Report has it that he is the most invincible Lothario that ever donned love's armor." Beverly was conscious of furtive glances in her direction, and a faint pink stole into her temples. "Our fugitive princes are lucky in neither love nor war," went on the duke. "Poor Dantan, who is hiding from Gabriel, is betrothed to the daughter of the present prime minister of Dawsbergen, the beautiful Iolanda. I have seen her. She is glorious, your highness."

"I, too, have seen her," said Yetive, more gravely than she thought. "The report of their betrothal is true, then?"

"His sudden overthrow prevented the nuptials which were to have taken place in a month had not Gabriel returned. Her father, the Duke of Matz, wisely accepted the inevitable and became prime minister to Gabriel. Iolanda, it is said, remains true to him and sends messages to him as he wanders through the mountains."

Beverly's mind instantly reverted to the confessions of Baldos. He had admitted the sending and receiving of messages through Franz. Try as she would, she could not drive the thought from her mind that he was Dantan, and now came the distressing fear that his secret messages were words of love from Iolanda. The audience lasted until late in the night, but she was so occupied with her own thoughts that she knew of but little that transpired.

Of one thing she was sure. She could not go to sleep that night.

(To Be Continued)

Why Men Fail in the Ministry.

"Well, I have to tell you that, as a rule, men do not fail from want of brains or lack of intellectual ability. They fail from sloth or from lack of sympathy with others, or from an exaggerated sense of their own dignity, or from lack of common sense, which is denoted by the expressive Scotch word "thrawness."

"We have to bear the yoke in our youth; we are set to work, and kept at it—often at work which is disagreeable, and for which our young wisdom fails to see any kind of use. If we fail or grow lazy, there is always schoolmaster or professor, and board regulations, and examinations, and a whole lot of goads, often disagreeable enough, by which we can be prodded from behind, and kept at it.

"But when we get free from them all, and are left largely to the freedom of our own wills—not the happiest of states, if we are to believe the shorter Catechism—then comes the time of testing; and then many a man breaks down. He gets lazy, or at least he does not see the need of doing uncongenial work; and he becomes a failure, and goes to swell the scrap heap of humanity."—Prof. Lindsay.

A Strange Mode of Life.

In a railway carriage, perched on a cliff overhanging the Severn, near Bridgnorth, England, lives Henry Hudson, a man who has traveled extensively, published more than one novel and written for scientific magazines. He adopted his strange mode of life partly from a love of nature. He builds coracles, which he sends to Norway, and has invented socks made from wood, which are being considered by the British military authorities.

THRILLING SEA STORY.

Three Survivors of a Crew of Twenty-Two.

A thrilling story of the sea was told, when the collier transport J. Duncan arrived at Devonport from Gibraltar with three survivors of the steamship Andalusia on board, viz., Captain McCarthy, Mr. Duncan Miller, chief officer, and Francis Camelle, a colored seaman. The Andalusia foundered in the Bay of Biscay, and nineteen of the crew were drowned. On the morning of the 13th inst., while the J. Duncan was on a voyage from Penarth to Gibraltar, the skipper espied several men in a small boat. The J. Duncan steamed towards it, and found Captain McCarthy, a colored man, and the body of another man in it. Later they discovered Miller astride a raft. Captain McCarthy, in describing the loss of his vessel, said that at 1.30 on the morning of the 13th he was called on deck by the chief mate, who reported heavy squalls.

Washed Over the Side.

At 3.45 a tremendous sea carried the two port boats overboard, and the ship took a list to port. Seeing that the list was rapidly increasing, I ordered the starboard boats to be got ready and the engines to be stopped. Several of the crew got round the forward starboard boat, and I told them to unhook the davit tackles and cut the lashings, as it would be impossible to launch the boat to windward. I called upon some of the men to go with me and clear the starboard lifeboat. Just before the boat was launched somebody shouted, "Take to the water!" When the lashings were cut the boat dropped into the water, the ship then being on her beam ends. I scrambled on to the ship's side, and got my boots off. Almost immediately afterwards I was either washed over the side or the ship went down. When I came to the surface again the ship had disappeared. I then struck out for the lifeboat, which was at a little distance, bottom up, with a sailor and fireman clinging to the keel. These assisted me to clamber up on to the keel. The chart-room was floating close by with the chief officer on it, and he threw his overcoat to the fireman.

Clung to the Keel.

I clung to the keel of the boat for about an hour, when a heavy sea washed the carpenter and myself off. I struck out for the boat, and found her right side up, with the sailor and fireman on her. I drew myself in, and we then drifted helplessly on, the fireman and myself being several times washed overboard, but we always managed to get back again. Each time we got back the fireman told me he was getting weaker. At last he became delirious, and I had to hold him. He died in my arms at eight a. m. Two steamers passed us before we were picked up by the J. Duncan.

MAN VERSUS PANTHER.

A Wrestling Match In an Indian Jungle.

A plucky native who wrestled with a wounded panther and overcame the beast is the hero of a story that came from Indian recently.

It was in the Banda district that a native, hearing that a panther was in the neighborhood and had taken refuge in a hole on the river bank made his way thither. Looking into the hole he fired and wounded the panther in the jaw. The infuriated animal flung itself upon the native's attendant, and the native, with the greatest bravery, rushed on the panther and tried to drag it off his servant.

After being driven off once the panther made another rush at the native, and for 20 or 30 minutes the man and the beast wrestled together.

Ultimately the panther was brought to the ground, and its end accomplished by a hatchet-blow from the servant.

The plucky native has many wounds on his arms, but none on his body, and both he and his servant are doing well in hospital.

One of the "Six Hundred."

At Abney Park Cemetery, London, the funeral took place recently of Sergt.-Major Edward Venables, of "Cumberland House," Finsbury Park, who, throughout the Crimean War was attached to the 11th Hussars. He was at Alma, Inkerman, Sebastopol, while he rode with the glorious "Six Hundred" at Balaclava. He came out of the trying ordeal scathless, but immediately afterwards sustained a wound at the hands of a Russian infantryman to whom just previously he had given a drink of water, thus showing the "ingratitude of war. The veteran—one of the rapidly decreasing few of "all that was left of them"—was 75 years of age, and he was esteemed alike in the North of London and by the tradesmen of the Central Meat Market, with whom he had been associated for many years. Among the floral tributes which covered the coffin and crowded a special carriage was one of especial interest: its black-bordered card contained the following words: "Edward Venables (sergeant), A Troop, Prince Albert's Own Hussar. From Horace Montague (captain), with much esteem for his good services 1859-64."

English Scarlet Flowers.

There are only two scarlet flowers native in England, the poppy and the scarlet pimpernel, and both these flourish best on dry and sunny spots. Nearly all other scarlet flowers are imported.

Perpetual Sunshine.

Perpetual sunshine occurs on the coast of Peru, where, although it may be misty occasionally, the blue sky is always visible through this whitish veil. Perpetual sunshine when the sun is above the horizon also exists in the Sahara, the great desert of Africa, and in the other rainless regions of the earth.

All Three Guilty.

A St. Louis physician telephoned an order to a drug store which was received by the druggist's son, a boy of fourteen years. The boy misunderstood the order and sent an overdose of a drug which killed the doctor's patient. The coroner's jury held the physician, the druggist and the boy responsible for the death.

Tripoli Powder.

A grain of Tripoli powder contains the skeletons of 187,000,000 animalculae. It is used in the making of dynamita.

LONDON IN A FOG.

I remember once I was on a Cheapside bus going toward the bank. It had been pouring, and little streams of water were still running on the street. The lanterns reflected darkly on the pavement. Suddenly the off horse went down, kicking the near one's feet from under him. In their struggles to get up they swung the bus' head around, and we lay broadside to the street. I looked to see a snarl of wagons, the bus hemmed in by jeering cabmen, a gaping crowd and the driver jerking at his fallen horses. Not so. Six bobbies were already on the spot. As if by magic a space was cleared about us and the traffic checked. Under the steady hand of the driver the horses were soon up, trembling and mud-bespattered, but otherwise none the worse for their tumble. The policemen lowered their hands and Cheapside again resounded with the London roar.

When a black fog comes down the city vanishes. From your seat on the bus beside the driver you cannot make out the horses' heads. The street lamps shimmer dimly, sound seems deadened, and when you speak your voice is strange and unfamiliar. Your face looks like a chimney sweep's, your chest burns as you breathe, and near you on the bus you hear some people coughing. You wonder what they look like. Down on the street somewhere there is a thud, and some one curses violently. The driver laughs. "This 'ere's th' blackest kind," he says. "I guess we're fixed 'ere for a bit. Yer kin just bet your bloomin' 'ead I won't budge till I see th' 'orses. Last time I knocked down a bloody bobby with th' pole an' most ran into th' Thames." Every little while it seems to lighten, the horses take a step or two, and then once more the world is buried in suffocating blackness. Your eyes sting as you strain them through the fog. All at once it begins to lift, and in the zenith the sun appears, large and strange and red. The buses begin to move again. You can see them loomly dimly, crowded with ghostly passengers. Then as it grows still lighter you see the gleaming helmet of a mounted sentinel and a clock tower rising black behind. It is Whitehall. You have been two hours on the bus and have gone 200 yards. —Thornton Oaxley in Metropolitan Magazine.

BANDITS' CAPTIVE.

English Youth Ransomed In Turkey For $75,000.

Once again Turkish bandits have extorted their toll from the British Government, who have been compelled to ransom a deaf and dumb young Englishman to the tune of $75,000.

The captive, Mr. Robert Abbott, aged 18, lives with his father, Mr. Alfred Abbott, in the outskirts of Salonica, with the open country just half an hour's walk beyond. The British Consulate is on a slight eminence near Mr. Abbott's mansion, and there is a police-station within shouting distance, while General Emilio di Giorgis himself, the Italian officer who is inspector-general of the so-called "reformed" gendarmerie of the district, lives close by.

Robert Abbot was coming home from the city by the tramway which passes his father's gate one night a little while ago at 10 o'clock. The young man alighted from the tramway car, and had just passed inside the gate of the carriage-way, bordered by high shrubs on one side and trees on the other, when the hiding brigands ambushed him and carried him off in a carriage.

The brigands had all the advantage, because Robert Abbott, though robust, is deaf and dumb. His walking-stick was found in the roadway. The brigands had left behind only a few handkerchiefs, dropped probably in the binding-up process.

After a time the band of brigands demanded ransom, fixed at $120,000, which they afterwards reduced to $75,000.

Sir Edward Grey communicated with Constantinople, but the Turkish Government refused to pay, so the British Consul-General at Salonica handed over the ransom demanded. Robert Abbott was permitted to return to his father's house then.

Local Superstition.

A remarkable story is told of a farmer who lives near Ilfracombe who traveled to Exeter to see "The White Witch" respecting the death of three horses. The animals died in a mysterious manner, in the first place sitting on their haunches, and then lying on their sides. Two veterinary surgeons were unable to say what was the nature of the disease, and, after the death of the third horse, the farmer made the journey to Exeter. The woman known as "The White Witch" visited the farm, and told the man that he had undoubtedly been "witched." The farmer firmly believes that such was the case. In answer to interrogations by a press man as to whether he really believed in the superstition, he replied definitely that he was sure that it was right, adding, "And it was a good job I went, or else I should have lost everything. I lost all my horses, and it was awful."

London's Reservoirs.

London has recently opened two new reservoirs, the Bessborough and the Knight, the construction of which was begun in 1901. The Knight, or western reservoir, has a capacity of 480,000,000 gallons and a water area of fifty-one and a half acres, and the Bessborough, or eastern reservoir, has a capacity of 718,000,000 gallons and a water area of seventy-four acres. With the completion of these reservoirs London possesses sixty subsiding and storage reservoirs for unfiltered water, having a total area of 1,435 acres, with a capacity of 8,834,000,000 gallons. This storage would be sufficient to provide a supply equivalent to about forty days of average consumption for a population of 6,750,000 without drawing on the Thames or any other source of supply.

Nation's Loss Through Drink.

Sir Thomas Whittaker, M.P., was one of the chief speakers at the annual "At Home" of the Keighley and District Chamber of Commerce, held in the Temperance Institute, Keighley, Eng., recently. Speaking before the large gathering of the commercial and trade leaders of the district, he gave some striking illustrations of the large expenditure of the nation on drink. He said: "The £175,000,000 we are now spending on intoxicants represents an enormous drain on our national resources, in view of the increasing keenness of present day competition. To illustrate: This same amount of money would either pay for all the flour, bread, milk, butter, cheese, and eggs we consume; or it would pay all the rates and taxes that we levy; or, if we preferred it, the amount would suffice to pay everybody's rent; or it would frank us all over the rails and trams and leave £60,000,000 over. Our people cannot afford to throw away their money on liquor. No wonder we have overcrowding, under-feeding, sickness, poverty and incompetence. Invested from the age of 20 years the same expenditure would provide at the age of 60 not a pension of 5s a week, but one of £2 for life."

Deadly Common Plants.

The things that give the most pleasure in life frequently can also cause the greatest pain. Among flowers, for instance, the beautiful snowdrop, the hyacinth, jonquil and narcissus are all poisonous, and to eat the smallest part of the root of either of them would produce fatal results, while the juices of the leaves will cause violent vomiting. The berries of the yew tree have killed many people, and the opium obtained from poppies has also claimed its victims. Lady's slipper and lily of the valley are both dangerous, and if the blossoms of crocus are chewed they will cause vomiting. Flowers from bulbous roots, however, seem to be the most dangerous, and it might not be out of place to dealers in these to label them with a skull and cross and mark them poison.

Average Wages In Canada.

The Census and Statistics Bureau has issued a blue book as to wage-earners in Canada by occupation according to returns of the last decennial census. The average yearly earnings at regular work of all classes of occupations is $387.16 for males and $181.98 for females. Trade and transportation pays an average wage of $503.62 for every male employe. Professional men, including clergy, Government employes, musicians, teachers, engineers, etc, earn $676.88 per year on the average. Average earnings of males employed in manufacturing, $403.14; in agriculture, $207.55 in domestic and personal service, $272.46. Of the whole number of wage-earners, 814,930, the males constitute 81.75 per cent., and the females 18.83 per cent.; and, comparing the totals of all wage-earners of both sexes by classes with the totals of all classes, it is found that the agricultural class gives employment to 8.93 per cent., the domestic and personal class to 25.61 per cent., the fisheries class to 0.91, the forestry and lumbering class to 2.02 per cent., the manufacturing class to 33.83 per cent., the mining class to 2.93 per cent., the professional class to 6.34 per cent., and the trade and transportation class to 19.37 per cent.

Dealing With Strikes.

The coal mines peril from which the community has for the time, and be it remembered, for the time only, escaped, was ended, not by legislation, but by negotiation. That strikes should be ended or averted by legislation seems impossible. You cannot force a free laborer to go on working, much less to go on working well. The breakdown of the compulsory arbitration system in New Zealand is apparently complete. It seems possible that something might be done by engagement for longer terms, the payment being deferred, partly at least, to the end of the term. But it appears that an evil spirit has for a time possessed the body of industry, and it is too likely only by rueful experience to be cast out. To abuse new-born power we are all of us prone, and the power of the unions is new-born. Many of their members, moreover, are fired, not only with industrial, but with social and political revolution. There is even an unhappy appearance of sympathy with murderous violence in the interest of class. The competition of eastern industry, which is free from these troubles, may before long begin to be felt. —Goldwin Smith in Weekly Sun.

The Saucer Oath.

Some Chinese witnesses were called recently during the hearing of an Admiralty case. The Chinese mode of administering an oath, the breaking of a saucer, was gone through. The words of the oath are, "I tell the truth, and, if not, as the saucer is broken may my soul be broken like it."

Cold in the Chest Seemed to be Unmovable, but Cure was Soon Effected by

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine

It is waste of time to use ordinary cough mixtures for serious colds on the chest, and time is of infinite value when the lungs are in danger.

The risk is too great, especially when you wait to think that Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is for sale in nearly every store that keeps medicines at all.

This letter gives you some idea of the effectiveness of this great medicine:

Mrs. A. Barnum, Ingersoll, Ont., writes: "My husband had a very severe cold on his chest and got so bad he could not speak above a whisper. The cough medicines he tried seemed to have no effect and reading about Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine I sent for a bottle. In two days he was cured and is very grateful for such a medicine. He says we will never be without this medicine in the house."

The very name of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is sufficient to explain the simple and yet powerful and well-known ingredients of which this great medicine is composed.

While linseed sheathes the mouth, tongue and throat with a protective coating to prevent injury from hard coughing, turpentine disinfects and stimulates the ulcerated parts of the bronchial tubes and lungs and is almost specific for bronchitis.

Other ingredients, which along with these go to make up Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, soothe the nerves, loosen the cough, aid expectoration, and by thorough action on the whole system completely cure coughs and colds, bronchitis, asthma, whooping cough and sore throat.

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, 25 cents a bottle, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every bottle.

Venerable Teeth

Teeth have been worshipped, and, in fact, are venerated as relics in some religious shrines. Buddha's tooth is preserved in an Indian temple. The Cingalese worship the tooth of a monkey, while an elephant's and a shark's tooth serve a similar purpose among the Malabar Islanders and the Tonga Islanders, respectively. The Siamese were formerly the possessors of the tooth of a sacred monkey, which they valued highly. In a war with the Portuguese they lost the holy grinder, along with much gold and many precious stones.

This is the first year "out" of a certain pretty little Baltimore girl, but she is promising. Not long ago at a dance a young man who had been an ardent but bashful admirer succeeded in getting his nerve up to the point of asking her to sit out a dance with him in a little nook beneath the stairs well screened by a bank of palms.

"I—I don't know whether I should do that," she said, twisting her fan in her hands and looking up at him from beneath long lashes; "but—yes, I will."

"Why—er—you don't think it would be improper?" he said, blushing.

"N-no," she hesitated; "but the last time I sat there with a young man—he kissed me."

PREMIER BOND PROTESTS.

Says Newfoundland Is Sacrificed to American Interests.

Sir Robert Bond, Premier of Newfoundland, contrary to expectation, succeeded in getting the Newfoundland fishery question before the Colonial Conference.

Sir Robert moved a resolution to the effect that if the Home Government failed to support the colonies in carrying out local statutes, but suspended or abrogated them at the instance of a foreign power this act would constitute a serious infringement of autonomous rights.

He argued that the assent of the crown should be given to the act of 1906; that the colony should not be fettered by any modus vivendi in carrying out laws approved by it, and that the Home Government should proceed to define the rights of American citizens under the treaty of 1818, which, he declared, Newfoundland did not want to limit in any way, she merely sought justice.

The resolution was placed on the records of the conference.

The Mail says that Premier Bond pleaded earnestly with Lord Elgin for nearly two hours, saying, "Unless something is done, we shall starve." Elgin, however, refused the "pathetic appeal of Newfoundland." The Mail continues that Bond instantly jumped to his feet, saying, "It is gross humiliation and neglect, which you would not dare to offer to a colony powerful enough to give effect to its resentment.

"It is most unjust, and I repeat again that you are deliberately neglecting us for the sake of American interests."

Gathering up his papers, the Newfoundland Premier left the room without uttering another word. A few minutes later the other Premiers emerged, excitedly discussing the incident. The general feeling was that Bond has been badly treated.

The Standard corroborates The Mail, saying the Home Government will do nothing in connection with the Newfoundland fisheries. An editorial article strongly supports Bond's action

SUFFRAGETTES ON STAGE.

"Votes For Women" Received by an Audience With Enthusiasm.

"Votes for Women," a new play by Miss Elizabeth Robins, who terms it a dramatic tract, was received with thunderous applause at the Court Theatre, London, recently. The story briefly told is that of a beautiful young suffragist wronged in earlier days by a rising politician. She finds him engaged to a niece, well brought up girl, and as compensation for her personal wrong gets him to espouse the cause of the suffragists by resigning his seat in the Cabinet.

The feature of the production is the marvelous reproduction of an open air meeting in Trafalgar Square in support of women's suffrage. The Tribune says: "Looked upon as a work of art, 'Vote for Women' is clever throughout, brilliant at times and on the whole disappointing. Miss Wynne Matthison brings the charm of her personality and admirable elocutionary art to the interpretation of the character of the heroine."

Marvel of Realism.

The Morning Post says of the second act, in which the Trafalgar Square meeting is reproduced: "It is a marvel of realism. It may, however, prove a good deal more than that. It may advance the cause of female suffrage more than any number of meetings in Trafalgar Square could do. As the play, 'Votes for Women,' is of little value as a preachment, the second act may have an influence on social and political life such as no play has had in this generation."

A Born Fighter.

The Daily Mail says: "Miss Robins is a born fighter. In the eagerness of her championship she even sacrificed that precious thing, her art. 'Votes for Women' wilfully misses being a very fine play. It is full of beautiful writing and the sense of the theatre that rare gift inspires every scene. The characters are deftly drawn and their temperament and will animate the whole, and all this is thrown away on a topic that in comparison with the purpose and value of art must be considered transitory. For sheer stage management the Trafalgar Square scene beats anything we can remember on the London stage."

FILL COAL BINS IN SUMMER

Timely Advice Given on the Fuel Subject by W. H. Aldridge

W. H. Aldridge, manager director of the Pacific Coal Co., in an interview yesterday said:

"The difficulties in the western coal fields have been settled for two years, and it is only a question of getting sufficient men to enable the coal companies to amply supply the public, the industries and the railways. Some of the coal companies are short of men at the present time, but it is hoped that this shortage will be made up during the next month or two.

"One important cause for the coal shortage last winter was due to the public waiting until fall before laying in their winter supply. During last summer a number of the mines did not have sufficient orders to operate over three or four days a week, and in the fall the coal companies had more orders than could possibly be filled.

"The severe weather later in the season made it impossible for the railways to handle all the traffic and supply sufficient cars, and it was equally difficult for the coal companies to operate to their fullest capacity under the severe weather conditions.

"If the public will, so far as possible, take their coal supply during the summer months, when weather conditions are favorable for both railways and mines, there need be no fear of any coal shortage during the coming winter."—Manitoba Free Press, May 22, 1907.

"I see where your new enterprise has gone into the hands of a receiver."

"Why?"

"So I could hang up the receiver."—Baltimore American.

PALE AS A CORPSE

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Brought Back the Ruddy Glow of Health

Thousands of young growing girls have pale, pasty complexions, distressing headaches, backaches and sideaches. Sometimes they are unable to sleep; their nerves are unstrung; they are languid, breathless, and the heart palpitates violently at the least exertion—that's anaemia—and it may develop into consumption unless promptly attended to. Anaemia means bloodlessness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make pure, red blood—that's the secret of their success. Miss Winnie Allen, Montreal, Que., says: "I was so weak and run down that my friends thought I was going into consumption. I was as pale as a corpse, had no appetite and did not sleep well. The least exertion tired me out and if I walked a few blocks I was almost breathless. My sister advised me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and after using them for a few weeks I am again enjoying good health and have a good color. I think every weak, sickly girl should take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new, rich blood and in this way strike right at the root of such troubles as anaemia, indigestion, rheumatism, St. Vitus' dance, the secret ills of girlhood and womanhood and a host of other everyday troubles, and cure them. But you must get the genuine with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around every box—imitations never cured anyone and sometimes they do much harm. If your dealer does not keep the genuine Pills they will be sent at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Canada's Name.

How did Canada come to be called Canada? Just how many people could answer that simple little question on the spur of the moment? Very few, it is safe to say. Yet Canada is one of the most prized jewels in the British Crown.

The name of Canada comes from a Red Indian name, meaning a collection of huts. Rather a funny appellation for a country bigger than Uncle Sam's very own United States!

It is interesting, and even fascinating, to consider how some of our possessions came to get the names which they bear nowadays. Newfoundland was the first of all the British colonies and its name speaks for itself. It was not merely the first British colony, but the first bit of the "New World," as America was called in the days of its discovery, which Britons took possession of.

Home of the Icebergs.

Almost all of the icebergs seen in the North Atlantic during June are products of the coast of Labrador, formed from the ice field that had filled the indentations of that coast the previous winter. July's icebergs come from farther north, in the vicinity of Baffin Land, those of August come from still farther north, and though fewer in number than those of the earlier summer are larger individually. From the coast of Labrador may be seen an endless procession of these ice mountains coming out of the north, and taking their way majestically southward until they lose their being in the warmer waters and climate of the South Atlantic.—Marine Journal.

If you stand a palm in the window be careful that you turn the pot around every day, so that one side of the plant does not get the sole benefit of the sun's rays.

Our Bodies Are Machines.

How many people, I wonder, ever pause to consider that their bodies are merely machines to do work, furnaces in which necessary fuel is burned, workshops in which wornout parts are supplied and storerooms in which fuel and food are laid away for use when needed? Further, like any other piece of apparatus, the body works better under certain circumstances. Its fires burn better with fuels of certain sorts, mixed in certain proportions, and it cannot keep in perfect condition unless furnished with proper materials. Man thinks he eats because he is hungry; he really eats because his body is crying out for building materials with which to repair the waste that is always going on and for fuel to keep itself warm, and it is rather "finicky" as to the supply it wants for each of these purposes. At a pinch it can use almost anything digestible for either, but it groans and complains and punishes its unfortunate possessor if it is not properly treated.—Crittenden Marriott in St. Nicholas.

Drawing Room.

A curious and regrettable revival of the word "draw" in the sense of "withdraw" occurs in "drawing room." Here the original meaning of the word is lost because of its lamentable pronunciation by the uneducated. Nobody, hearing it mentioned as "droying room" at its best or as "droring room" at its worst," would suspect it of being a room to which to withdraw for relaxation. Most words of the kind, though, have no better claim to our admiration, and many have a worse one to our sense of language. "Parlor" is an ugly growth from the old monasterial "parloir," or room where speaking was allowed, and "boudoir," that early Victorian expression of gentility, began by being a room to sulk in. "Sitting room" is a strange instance of the confusion of cause and effect, and so is "living room." We come back to "drawing room" as to honest words, at least.—London Notes and Queries.

Du Maurier and the Fenian Leader.

When John O'Leary, the Fenian leader, was released from prison in 1870 after spending five of the twenty years to which he was condemned for a felony he went to Paris, where he spent the next fifteen years of his exile. The revolutionary leader used to tell how when crossing in the packet to France he met Du Maurier, then a young man, going to Paris to study art. They became warm friends, lodging together in the same building, where they became acquainted with two other artists, whom Du Maurier afterward made famous in his popular story "Trilby" as The Laird and The Baronet. It was to O'Leary, who had been a medical student in Paris long before he threw in his fortunes with the Fenian movement, that Du Maurier owed his first glimpse of bohemian life in the French capital.—Westminster Gazette.

Liquor Laws in Norway

New Norwegian liquor laws are successful. The Sondag system gives power to municipalities to grant all the retail spirit licenses which they deem necessary to a company which would bind itself to carry on the traffic in the interests of the community, with a fixed annual return of not more than 5 per cent on its paid up capital.

In establishing the system the question of compensation does not appear to have presented much difficulty. The allotments of the profits are as follows: To the state, 65 per cent; to the municipality, in lieu of larger license duties, now abolished, 15 per cent; to objects of public utility operating as counter attractions to the public houses in towns, 10 per cent, and in the surrounding districts, 10 per cent.

The profits of the trade under these restrictions have contributed $7,000,000 for objects of public interest since the founding of the system. During the last eight years the proportion accruing to the state has been increased and set apart until 1910 to form the nucleus of an old age pension fund, which amounts now to $2,300,000. The most remarkable fact in the history of Norway sobriety is that the consumption of alcohol per inhabitant has decreased about 45 per cent in the last fifty years. The decrease has been most marked since the establishment of the Sondag system.

The aims and principles of the Sondag system are these: The elimination of private profit and securing the monopoly value for the public; insuring highest quality of liquors sold; the reduction of the number of licenses; the easy enforcement of the law; the destruction of the power of the spirit trade, and the furtherance of all progressive measures of reform.—Chicago Tribune.

Minard's Liniment Used by Physicians

"That is no defence at all," said Senator Curtis, during a discussion of emotional insanity at dinner. "What you have just said, sir, is as weak a defence as the young automobilist's.

"The young man's father said to him:

"'Look here, I am ashamed of you. You spend all your time chooooing around the country in a motor car.'

"'Not all my time, father,' said the youth, gently; "only half of it.'

"'And the other half?' asked the mollified old man.

"'That is passed underneath, sir, with a monkey wrench.'"—San Antonio Express.

A Spanish Brigand

Strange tales are being told in Cordova, Spain, of the exploits of the brigand Pernales, who holds entire villages to ransom and extracts money by the most amazing tricks, which include the assumption of wizardry. Not long ago he took up a position of observation about a mile and a half from the village of Rue, not far from Cordova, and, noting a group of peasants at field work, coolly walked up to accost them in the tone of a captor.

Knowing that the men were the servants of various proprietors, he ordered them to bring him a sum equivalent to $30 from each, and intimated that he would hold all the plows and other implements against the money. Strange as it sounds, the men are said to have gone off quietly to execute the command, and the proprietors as tamely sent the money, which the brigand spent the rest of the day collecting as it was brought to him, while he lounged smoking cigarettes.

A still more amazing exploit of the brigand is reported from Villau, where he successfully extorted not only money but a night's hospitality and safe keeping by posing as a wizard. He declared that if any harm came to him a curse would fall on the crops, then suffering from drought, whereas if he was treated honorably as a welcome guest he would bring down the rain so much needed.

'Tis Well to Know a Good Thing, said Mrs. Surface to Mrs. Knowwell, when they met in the street. "Why, where have you been for a week back?" "Oh, just down to the store for a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil," and Mrs. Surface, who hates puns, walked on. But she remembered, and when she contracted a weak back there was another customer for Eclectric Oil.

ONTARIO-QUEBEC COBALT MINING CO., LIMITED

Have Secured Options on Adjoining Properties, Thus Causing Considerable Comment in Cobalt Circles

The Ontario-Quebec Cobalt Mining Company, Limited, has not issued much information lately as to the condition of their properties in Bucke township, and they now claim that this action has been part of a coupe which the officers have had up their sleeves for months past. The veins that were uncovered during the earliest operations looked so good and the reports of the various mining engineers and experts who examined the property were so promising that the officers decided to maintain secrecy until they could obtain options on the properties immediately surrounding their mines. These options have now been secured, it is understood, at reasonable figures, and recent reports are being made public. The company's chief engineer, Mr. A. E. Hogg, M.E., in his latest report recommends that the main shaft be at once sunk to the 150-foot level, where the richest ores in the section have been encountered, and the directors have practically decided to follow his recommendations. The Hon. L. J. Labrosse also inspected the Ontario-Quebec Cobalt properties a few days ago, and his report is extremely gratifying to the directors of the company. The officers of the company expect the Ontario-Quebec Cobalt Mining company to become a heavy shipper in the near future. Machinery ordered during the winter is now on the way to the property, and will be in working shape within a few weeks. At the present time, in addition to the superintendent and chief engineer, there are twenty-four miners constantly at work at the mines.

They Never Knew Failure—Careful observation of the effects of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills has shown that they act immediately on the diseased organs of the system and stimulate them to healthy action. There may be cases in which the disease has been long seated and does not easily yield to medicine, but even in such cases these Pills have been known to bring relief when all other so-called remedies have failed. These assertions can be substantiated by many who have used the Pills, and medical men speak highly of their qualities.

SAFETY FOR CHILDREN

Baby's Own Tablets contain no opiate, no narcotic, no poisonous drug. The mother who uses these Tablets for her children has the guarantee of a government analyst as to the truth of these statements. This medicine can therefore be used with absolute safety, and it always cures such troubles as indigestion, sour stomach, constipation, diarrhoea and colic. The Tablets cure simple fevers, break up colds, destroy worms and make teething easy. Mrs. W. H. Young, Roslin, Ont., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets as needed for more than a year and would not be without them in the house. They are just the thing for teething babies and other minor ailments." The Tablets cost only 25 cents a box and may be had from medicine dealers or by mail from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"I'll bet my case of samples," he said, "that I have the hardest name of anybody in this room."

"Ye will, will ye?" he drawled. "Wa-al, I'll have to take ye up. I'll bet $10 against your samples that my name'll beat yourn."

"Done!" cried the salesman. "I have the hardest name in the country. It is Stone."

The old man was game.

Nobody Ever "at" London.

A case of irregularity occurs in a cablegram that announces from New York the residence of a certain accused person "at London." You will perceive at once the absurdity of those words—"at London." A New Yorker may want to get at London, but those who live there live "in London." And it is one of the triumphs of London and language (though most irregular) that no one is ever "at" London. You can drop off "at" Paris on the way to anywhere, and you may spend the winter "at" St. Petersburg or "at" New York. You may change cars "at" Chicago. But there comes a moment when the English language gets irregular. Is it when the fifth million is passed? No Englishman was ever "at" London. It would be as irregular as being "at" Asia or "at" heaven.—London Standard.

SIMPSON FOR SENATOR

British Columbia is to have two more senators—one for east and one for west Kootenay. There are many aspirants in west Kootenay for senatorial honors; but in east Kootenay only one man is mentioned, and that is Fred E. Simpson, editor of the Cranbrook Herald. We differ with Mr. Simpson politically, but as the senators to be appointed will be liberals, we would like to see the Grand Old Man get the appointment. There's no man in British Columbia who has fought and worked harder for the prosperity of east Kootenay and the province as a whole. He has been a true friend to the party in power at Ottawa, and has spent time and money in order to do a good turn for that party, and it's now up to the liberals to reciprocate. You certainly deserve the senatorship, Old Man.

EDITORIAL SHORT STOPS

In order to try and clear himself of a dozen murders, gun plays, plots and a hundred dynamite outrages, Harry Orchard is trying to indict three innocent men—Haywood, Pettibone and Moyer. With all his lying he will never do it. As a state witness, Orchard is certainly the limit It's a disgrace to any state to call a witness of Orchard's caliber.

George G. Meikle will publish at Fernie shortly the Crow's Nest Monthly, devoted to literary and humorous subjects. It will contain, according to the prospectus, 80 pages of stories and special articles, illustrated with fine halftone and pen and ink sketches. If Meikle can make an 80-page magazine a go in Fernie at 50 cents a year, he has the Chinese backed off the board.

While residents of Nelson, Victoria and other jim-crow villages are asking that the head tax be taken off Chinese entering Canada, Moyie is prospering pretty well, thank you, without the presence of these monkey-faced pirates.

"Moyie is certainly in the bamboo belt. Its climatic conditions are perfectly suitable for the cultivation of this giant grass." A traveler from Yokohama made the above remark Wednesday.

The total amount spent by Americans for alcoholic liquors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, was $1,450,000,000. This is thirty cents more than the people of Cranbrook spent.

His royal nibs, Prince Fushimi of Japan, arrived in Quebec City last Saturday, and just to show the general benevolence of the cent belters, they gave the prince three cheers.

New York city boasts of its millions of population, with only half a million unemployed; but Moyie can boast of 1000 population and not an idle man in town.

The posters for the Blairmore race meet, to be held on July 4, are out. If the meet is to be anything like the posters, it will be a pretty punk affair.

An exchange says the burden of great wealth is heavy. If this is thusly, the Leader editor is willing to take chances of getting round shouldered.

If a knocker would only put the energy that he devotes to moving his tongue into working a pick and shovel, think how useful he might be.

According to government statistics rats eat up $100,000,000 a year. That is where the Leader editor's millions have gone.

The two assassin governors, Bachtel and Gooding, would be a great pair to draw to. You would probably catch a skunk.

Moyie has no corral dust peddlers or hot air artists. Every man attends to his own business.

Winnipeg is to have a 16-story office building. The rents will be just as high.

All the commandments in one—Moyie is the richest mining camp on earth.

Come to Moyie for all the purity and richness of nature.

Keep your optics on the bamboo belt.

Demonstration Postponed

On account of the burner of the furnace being burnt up, Beale & Elwell had to postpone the demonstration by the Cranbrook Fire-Brick and Terra Cotta Co., Ltd.; but as soon as the new furnace arrives, which will be in a few days, a public demonstration will be held in Moyie.

Put Up, or Shut Up

Through the columns of the Herald the Cranbrook aggregation of hot air printers (composed of printers, machinists, editors and deck hands) have challenged the world to a game of baseball. Now, if this gang of manure peddlers mean business, the printers of Moyie will play them here on Dominion day for any amount from $10,000 to $100,000 a side. P. S.—This is not hot air.

He's Getting There

A wireless to the Leader from Nanaimo yesterday states that F. J. Smyth, editor of the world's greatest family journal (the Leader) has been appointed grand conductor of the grand lodge of British Columbia, I. O. O. F. It wouldn't surprise the present management of the Leader to learn that the governor-general of Canada had called upon Mr. Smyth to form a cabinet. It's hard to keep a good man down.

His Lordship's Visit

His lordship Bishop Dontenwill of New Westminster arrived in Moyie last Saturday and was present at the services in the Roman Catholic church Sunday, at which several persons were confirmed by the bishop. Before early mass a song of welcome was sung and the bishop presented with an address. The singing by the choir, especially Mrs. Patrequin's solo, was the best ever heard at any service in Moyie. His lordship left Sunday afternoon for Cranbrook.

Board of Trade Meet

The weekly round-up of the board of trade was held Wednesday night, 16 members attending. The business before the board was election of officers and report of committees. The reports of the various committees were adopted. The fire hall committee reported having collected $361 towards the purchase of lot. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, R. Campbell; vice-president, J. P. Farrell; executive committee, V. Desaulnier, W. P. White, P. F. Johnston, H. Dimmock, A. E. Hill and A. P. Macdonald. It was decided that from now on the board would meet on the first and third Wednesdays of every month.

Swipped $300

Tuesday night about 9 o'clock Bill Ringek entered the room of Steve Marisk while he was at work in the mine, and stole $300. Constable Routh was informed Wednesday morning of the theft and immediately took up the trail, following Ringek to the boundary line. The constable then wired Marshal Howland of Bonners Ferry to look out for him. The same evening Mr. Routh received word that Ringek had been caught and was in jail. Ringek will be brought back to Moyie. This petty larceny parasite will no doubt get a long term in the pen. Mr. Routh deserves credit for running this man down. Such men as Ringek will not be tolerated in this camp.

LATER—He was brought back to the boundary line as an undesirable by American officers, and as soon as he put his foot on Canadian soil was arrested by Constable Routh and brought back to Moyie.

Moyie's Big Celebration

After the board of trade meeting Wednesday night the celebration committee met. H. Dimock, chairman pro tem, called the meeting to order. The first move was the election of officers. The following hustlers were elected to do their utmost to carry out the big program to a successful finish: H. Dimock, president; P. F. Johnston, vice-president; E. A. Hill, secretary-treasurer; W. P. White, E. O. Kamm, J. W. Fitch, James Roberts, C. A. Foote, H. Steuart, and G. W. Orchard were appointed an executive committee. Messrs Fitch and Dimock reported having collected $284, and $115 more promised; and stated they expected to raise $800. The executive were instructed to arrange a program and have it published so that the world at large will know that Moyie is there with the biggest attraction ever held on the Crow. A public meeting will be held in the board of trade rooms next Monday night at 8 o'clock to complete all arrangements.

Do Not Neglect the Children.

At this season of the year the first unnatural looseness of a child's bowels should have immediate attention. Every Man His Own Doctor.

The average man cannot afford to employ a physican for every slight ailment or injury that may occur in his family, nor can he afford to neglect them, as so light an injury as the scratch of a pin has been known to cause the loss of a limb. Hence every man must from necessity be his own doctor for this class of ailments. Success often depends upon prompt treatment, which can only be had when suitable medicines are kept at home. Chamberlain's Remedies have been in the market for many years and enjoy a good reputation.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea remedy for bowel complaints.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for coughs, colds and whooping cough.

Chamberlain's Pain Balm (an antiseptic liniment) for cuts, bruises, burns, sprains, swellings, lame back and rheumatic pains.
