QUEBEC SOCIETY

Again Outraged by the Quarrel of Two Well Known Society Ladies in Public.

And Now the Husbands Are Look for Each Other with Death-Dealing Weapons.

Two Weeks Have Been Wasted In the Cronin Trial and Still No Jury.

SOCIETY SCANDAL.

QUEBEC, Sept., 9.—Quebec society is agitated over an encounter that occurred an evening or two ago in the presence of the governor-general between two well known society ladies of this city, one the Countess De Londier, the wife of the chancellor of the French consulate of Quebec, and the other the sister of the attorney-general of the province of Quebec and the wife of a prominent French journalist. Two angry looking husbands, each claiming to be well armed, were looking around for each other, but whether a tragedy will result from their meeting may well be doubted.

GREAT RAIN FALL.

TUSCON, ARIZ., Sept 9.—An unprecedented rain occurred here on Saturday doing much damage. Three inches and four hundredths fell within two hours.

HANGED THE THIEF.

MATTOON, Ills.,—Word has been received from Tower Hill that the mob that took the alleged horse thief, S. S. Tate, from the officers last night hanged him.

NO JURORS YET.

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—The Cronin murder trial commenced its second week this morning with no jurors yet selected. The work of securing the jury was resumed.

BURNED TO DEATH.

RIDDING, Cal. Sept. 9—R. Chenowitz, ten years of age, was fatally burned while playing with several other children in his father's work house yesterday. The children ignited some matches which set fire to a can of coal oil. The burning oil flew in all directions, little Ray's clothes catching fire.

NATIVE SONS.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Sept. 9.—The Native Sons of the Golden West celebrated admission day here by a parade of 2,500 strong. It was reviewed by Governor Waterman and his staff.

CAILFORNIA'S CELEBRATION.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9. To-day is the 39th anniversary of California's admission into the union. Business is generally suspended and the day is quietly celebrated here.

BALTIMORE'S CELEBRATION.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 9.—The celebration of the 76th anniversary of the battle of Fort Henry began to-day with the opening of the Maryland exposition, at Pimlico. President Harrison, Secretary Proctor, Post-master-General Wannamaker, Gov. Briggs, of Delaware, and other notables were present. A committee of citizens escorted the president and party to Baltimore this morning. The principal feature to-day was the grand street parade, which was at once patriotic, historical, industrial, agricultural, mechanical, military and civic.

LARGE BEQUESTS.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 7.—By the death of Mrs. Ellen Giffore, the last surviving heir of the late Philip Narett, who came to this city from Boston in 1864, at her home in this to-day, the estate, valued at $26,000,000, which was held by her in trust, reverts to local institutions, as follows: Connecticut hospital, income to be used in supporting free beds, $120,000; city of New Haven, $120,000, income to be used for indigent and infirm persons not paupers; Yale College, $120,000, income to be used for scholarships in academized department; New Haven orphan asylum, $60,000; St. Francis orphan asylum, $60,000; city of New Haven, $60,000, to aid public library; state of Connecticut, $60,000, to be used for the support of the institution for idiots and imbeciles.

CHINESE NEWS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 7.—The str. City of Rio Janerio, which arrived from Hong Kong and Yokahama this morning, brings the following advices. The governor of Kiang Su has urged the construction of a railway towards the Russian frontier in order to be able to transport troops there in case of an invasion from China's northern neighbor, which he dreads. He is convinced of the necessity of railways, and also advocates a line to Yunan, to develop the copper mines and to secure the northern frontier. He thinks it might be desirable to push the iron road to Kashgar.

Messrs Russell & Co., an English concern, are said to be negotiating for the concession of the Kilung coal mines, for twenty years. The native management has been a failure.

Some additional information has been obtained regarding the new outburst of the Red river. The district flooded covers half the country between Chi Nan Fri and the sea. The cause of the disaster was the filling up of the mouth of the river. After being unable to find a free outlet the water spread over the low land on both sides sweeping away one village after another, drowning people by the wholesale and turning the whole country into an enormous inland sea.

Counterfeit coins of various countries are being manufactured in large quantities in Anan.

GIGANTIC PURCHASE.

ST. PAUL, Min., Sept. 7.—A private cablegram this morning says the sale of the Hamm brewery and other brewing interests of this city, has just been consummated in London. The price paid for the Hamm brewery is said to be $1,000,000, half in cash and the other half in stock of the new concern.

The sensation caused in Toronto by the sudden disappearance of the fifteen-year-old daughter of Judge Ferguson, who ran away to go on the stage, is the talk of the city. The matter was placed in the hands of detectives, who traced the girl to Buffalo, whence she was brought back Saturday night.

INTERVIEW HON. MR. DEWDNEY

The City Council and Board of Trade Present a Number of Important Matters to the Minister.

On Saturday afternoon the members of the city council and a number of prominent members of the board of trade waited on Hon. Mr. Dewdney, minister of the interior, at the Dominion land office, to lay before him some matters affecting the interest, of this city and district. His worship the mayor introduced the members of the deputation, and called, upon the city clerk to state, on behalf of the council, the matters relating to the city which were to be brought before the minister.

First, it was requested that the four reserves lying on the river front in the western part of the city, and Poplar Island, should be conveyed to the city, or restored to the provincial government in trust for the city. A good many years ago Indian Commissioner Sproat set apart three reserves as a place to be occupied by Indians who were visiting New Westminster, as at that time small-pox prevailed extensively among the natives and it was feared their presence within the city limits might lead to serious results. As a matter of fact, however, Indians have scarcely ever availed themselves of the reserves, and as they now lie wholly within the city limits, and are no longer required for the purposes for which they were handed over to the Indian department, and as that part of the city is being settled up by white people, it was claimed that these properties should revert to the city, or to the provincial government to be handed over to the city authorities.

The council likewise asked for permission to extend Clarkson street from Lorne to Begbie sts., through lot 3, which belongs to the Dominion government. The extension of this street, it was pointed out, would improve adjoining property, and the part of lot 3 asked for was not now being used for any public purpose. It was also suggested that lot 1, adjoining the Oddfellow's block, should be sold.

The council also claimed that the rent of $50 a year now paid by the city to the Dominion government for the C.P.R. right of way through the reserve in front of the penitentiary was excessive, and ought to be reduced. When negotiations were being carried on for the right of way through this property the government intimated that a nominal rent only would be asked; but when the lease came to be submitted the consideration named therein was found to be $50 a year. The city derived no benefit whatever from the property, and was not at liberty to re-let any portion of it.

The subjects having been fully discussed, the secretary of the board of trade was called upon to present, on behalf of the board, certain other matters. First, the question of river navigation. It was pointed out that the recently issued chart of Fraser River contained such inaccuracies as to destroy its usefulness as a guide to navigators, as the position of the channel in some places was misrepresented and the depth of water in many places made to appear considerably less than what actually existed. The board asked the minister to have this chart withdrawn, and to urge upon the government the importance of having a new chart issued as speedily as possible, prepared from more recent and accurate soundings. The rapid increase in the shipping of the river, and the erection of large new mills on the river were put forward as substantial reasons why very reasonable facilities should be afforded to shippers seeking charters here. It was also requested that provision should be made for taking soundings periodically in the channel for the information of ship owners.

The board also asked that a subsidy be provided for a mail service between the city and settlements on the North Arm of Fraser River. This was the original mail route, but a few years ago the subsidy was discontinued, and the city itself was forced to subsidize the route, which was regarded as a hardship. The settlements along both sides of the river were extending nearer the city every year, and the mail route via Vancouver did not meet the wants of a great part of the territory. Complaint was also made respecting the unsatisfactory character of the mail service between the city and Victoria, via Fraser River, and the minister was asked to require better time to be made on this route.

The board also suggested that the lands on Maria Island, set apart as an Indian reserve, should be open to settlement. There are nearly 10,000 acres of first-class land on this island, and it is occupied by only one Indian. Insomuch as nearly all the government lands within the district have been taken up, and many intending settlers are drifting across the boundary, and the lands reserved on Maria Island are lying waste, it was taken to be in the public interest that they should be made available for purposes of settlement.

The deputation was received most courteously by the minister, who listened attentively to the various representations made, and it is certain whatever can be done towards securing the objects desired will be done by Mr. Dewdney.

Blaine's Big Bonus.

Joseph W. Dorr, editor of the Journal, is in Seattle on business. Blaine being situated upon the forty-ninth parallel, the northern boundary, the Journal is the most northerly paper published in the United States, exclusive of Alaska. Mr. Dorr states that the largest bonus ever given to a railroad by an unincorporated town in Washington has been offered by Blaine to the Bennett road, 400 acres in Blaine that will be worth $250,000 the day the road is assured.—Post-Intelligencer.

The electric current used at night for lighting a hotel at Samaden is put to use during the day for heating the kitchen range. Resistance coils of German silver are brought to a red heat by the current, and make it possible to perform all the ordinary cooking operations without fire. The electricity is generated by power from a waterfall.

SEARLE WINS.

The Great Sculling Race for the Championship of the World and $5,000.

O'Connor Leads Till He Catches a Crab, When Searle Overtakes and Passes Him.

The London Dockyard Owners Generally Agree to the Demands of the Strikers.

THE GREAT RACE.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—The sculling race between Searle of Australia and O'Connor of Canada was rowed over the championship course on the Thames this morning, and was won by Searle. At Hammersmith bridge, 1¼ miles from the start, Searle led by two lengths. He crossed the line an easy winner by six lengths. The betting was 5 to 4 on O'Connor. Searle won the toss for choice of course, and took the Surrey side. O'Connor had the better of his opponent in getting away, and led by half a length to the boat-house, to which point his time was 8:38. Searle's time was 22 minutes and 42 seconds. The wind blew in occasional squalls, and off Surrey the water was slightly lumpy, but otherwise the conditions were excellent. The weather was perfectly clear. Betting was even, starting 20 to 21 on Searle, which was readily taken, and finally turning 5 to 4 on O'Connor. The start was by mutual consent at 12:30 p.m. O'Connor started off at a terrific rate of speed, but shortly afterwards "caught a crab," when Searle overtook him and gained the lead, rowing splendidly, but slackening his speed beyond Walden's. After this Searle apparently worked without effort, and rowing 29 strokes gained half a length, which he gradually increased, O Connor looking anxiously over his shoulder to observe the distance between them. At Hammersmith Bridge O'Connor looked a trifle distressed. At Thornycraft both men appeared to be in good form, but a troublesome wind was encountered in Cheswich Beach, which bothered O'Connor considerably, though it did not effect Searle, who was then three lengths ahead. From Cheswick Point the race was a procession. O'Conner rowed splendidly throughout, but he seemed to be over trained. Both men kept to the course remarkably well. The attendance at the river side was very large for a professional race.

MORE CONCESSIONS.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Several wharfingers in addition to those conceding the demands of the strikers on Saturday, announced this morning that they had decided to accept the terms of the men. The strike fund was augmented to-day by £1,500 received from various sources.

A LIBERAL GOVERNMENT.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—The government has consented to allow the prefect to receive the candidacy of General Boulanger and M. Rochefort, and to permit the display of their placards, etc., in Montmartre and Belleville. The Boulangists are jubilant over the government's change of front, considering it as a sign of vacillation. M. Ferry is, on the other hand, furious. President Carnot will come to Paris to attend a cabinet council on Monday, and endeavor to restore harmony. It threatens to jeopardise the government's success in the elections.

THE CHURCHES.

Summaries of Some of the City Sermons Spoken Sunday.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

At the Reformed Episcopal church yesterday morning the Rev. Thos. Hadden discoursed on Psalm 27 4v. "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple." He said substantially as follows: There is a great deal in singleness of aim. The reason many are not successful is because they have no settled purpose, their energies are divided on several objects and, thus weakened, there is nothing special accomplished. Take the leading orators of the age, or the leading statesmen, poets and inventors, they are successful because they centre their energies on one particular purpose or work, a kind of master passion. David had a master passion; he wanted to be complete in one thing, he had been a successful warrior against his foes, as a ruler he possessed vast power over the most interesting people the world ever knew, as a poet God had blessed him, his compositions have been sung by millions in the ages that have rolled by, and will be sung down to the end of time, cheering and comforting many a weary pilgrim with their pathos, and tend to develop their Christian life; but what was it he preferred above all these achievements that had only been incidental along the line? David draws the veil aside in the words of the text and we see as it were a three fold cord, three wishes centered in one. To dwell in the house of the Lord did not mean a residence, but constant habitual attendance at the sanctuary, and David wished never to lose the desire to worship God. How different the desire of many to-day, if they were compelled to speak their preference, it would be, to keep away and in this how mistaken they are; they say they can serve God in their own houses: but do they? As a rule they do not, and furthermore, they deliberately disregard the command "Not to forsake the assembling of yourselves together." It was for the purpose of assembly and united worship that the temple was built. David saw in the services of the temple, fellowship with God; he desired to behold the beauty of the Lord: he might have said: "Here is my palace, I can worship God here;" he did worship God in his home and so do all good Christians, but he felt it his duty to go habitually to the sanctuary where God was wont to reveal himself in a larger manner because of the unity of worship; unity is strength and without it very little is accomplished. What if there was no united action in the political or moral world, why there would be nothing done if there were no council, and it is necessary to band a number of men together into a governing body and that they assemble to transact business for the good of society and for the good of the country. So it is with the church of God; its purpose is to save men from sin and bring them to God, instruct them in their duty, and develop Christian character, and thus help each other in the divine life; all this needs organization, attention and a stronger love for religion than any other society. No society or work should be placed in the fore front of our affections in preference to religion. Many of the societies of to-day are formed to help the body, and to insure religious liberty, but the religion of Jesus Christ should come first as it gives liberty for this life and also the life to come. I am some times grieved to hear it said that temperance societies are doing more good than the church; inasmuch as they only deal with one evil, whereas the church of Christ seeks to put down evil in every form, intemperance included, therefore my love for the church of Christ is greater than for anything else because it covers the ground of dealing with all man's needs. There are many temperate men who will never get to heaven, but if he is a Christian he will be temperate in all things. The object of religion is to make us happy in this life and free us from all sin and elevate our character, and all good organizations spring from this inate Christian desire and are for the most part carried on by Christians, and without this foundation upon Christianity there is very little, if any, success. Then David desired to dwell in the house of the Lord so that in the manifestation of God he could get food for his soul. David desired to be an enquirer, and we can still do this and by constant waiting on God enquire His will concerning us. The text then teaches a model life, continual consecration and a religious desire for God's house; will you not learn the same lesson and make David's master passion your own; come to-day unto the sweet fellowship of communion with God and then at His coming you will see the King in His beauty in the great heavenly temple.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH.

Rev. Thos. Scouler, of the Presbyterian church took his text last night from Hebrews 5 c. 7. v.—"Who in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared"—and continued: The reference in this verse is to our Lord Jesus Christ. The object of the verse is to show that Christ had the qualifications that were needed for the office of the priesthood. One important qualification for that office was that He should be able to have compassion on the ignorant and those that were out of the way, and that He should be able to sympathize with the weak and the suffering. Christ possessed these qualifications in a pre-eminent degree. Another characteristic of the priest was that he should feel how entirely dependent for help he was upon God in the discharge of his duties. Hence we find our Lord constantly repairing to the throne of grace that he might ask His Father for that help which He felt that He stood in need of. Christ was pre-eminently a man of prayer. How often do we read of Him retiring alone to pray, as for instance when He went up into the mountain and spent the whole night in prayer. Then we read of His agonizing prayer in the garden of Gethsemane, and of His wonderful intercessory prayer, in which we all have an interest. Christ's prayers were always heard and answered, because he asked those things which were agreeable to God's will. So we should come to God by prayer, expecting to receive those blessings which we need. Notice the spirit in which prayer should be made, with strong crying and tears. Oh, how intensely in earnest our Lord was in all His prayers and applications. Would that we had the same earnest spirit in our approaches unto the throne of grace. We should remember that it is only the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man that availeth much. You will notice that our Lord presented His prayers not only with strong crying, but with tears. Tears are the visible expression of the heart's grief. Christ knew what it was to suffer. We read of Christ shedding tears on several occasions The cause of these tears was mental suffering. So many tears are shed on account of mental suffering. There may be those here who are trying to keep a cheerful countenance, who are carrying a load greater than they can bear. Those tears that Christ shed were also tears of sympathy, as at the grave of Lazarus. Let us seek to follow Christ in these respects. Our sins often wound Christ and cause Him pain. God help us to walk in the straight path that He has marked out for us.

A remarkable air-wave of Jan. 31 has attracted much attention from meteorologists, who are still unable to explain the phenomenon. At several stations in Central Europe the barometer recorded a sudden dip of about four hundredths of an inch, followed by a corresponding rise a few minutes later. Dr. E. Herrmann has traced the disturbance from Pola to Keitum, seperated by about five degrees of latitude, the rate of translation between these places having been about seventy-one miles an hour. In an easterly and westerly direction the disturbance was confined to narrow limits. There was no earthquake in Europe.

Who shall say how much or how little the moon has to do with the freaks of frail humanity? The prevalence of incendiarism is found by Franklin Webster to vary with the season. In the four years ending with 1886 there were more criminal fires in January than in February, an increase in the number through March, April and May, a falling off in June, further increase untill November, and a falling off again in December. The number showed a remarkable regularity for the first half of the year, while in the second half it was much greater but much more fluctuating. In farming districts incendiarism was most frequent in busy periods, especially at harvest.

The new paper in its Sunday morning issue states that the people of New Westminster are "a narrow-minded community." Whether such an imputation, about either an individual, a society or a community, is worth resenting—whether, in fact, it might not prove to be in a large measure complimentary—depends very much upon the standpoint from which the reflection is made and upon the status and character of the person making it. For example, one accustomed to perfect freedom and even license in speech and manners would no doubt denominate the most learned, cultured, refined, and truly liberal-minded society in the world, "narrow-minded," because, perforce, it frowned upon his vulgar solecisms and outlandish behavior, but such strictures would only serve to advertise the fact that a really narrow-minded and ignoble person had been properly, and necessarily, snubbed, and did not have the discretion and good sense to swallow the diserved rebuke and profit by it. We do not say that we have a parallel case in the spectacle of the new paper reviling its constituency yesterday morning, but leave our readers to judge for themselves. As to the truth of the assertion itself, we cannot agree with the journalistic embodiment of undoubted veracity published on Church street. Critical, the royal citizens are, to a fault, perhaps, and particular to fastidiousness, it may be, in some things, but intelligent and reasonably fair in forming an estimate, and as for breadth of mind and general culture, the community will not suffer by comparison with the most enlightened and forward on this continent.

An American cotemporary deprecates the periodical effusions of gushing rhapsody about "our sister republics of Central and South America" indulged in by second-rate American journalists and statesmen, and states that as a matter of fact many of those countries are in nothing but the name republics. In that name the faction for the time being dominant practises despotism, tyranny and spoilation of the most lawless and the cruelest character. True, observes our cotemporary, they all have written constitutions professing to guarantee freedom and representative government, but an appeal to the party in power to respect those guarantees is in many of those countries treated as but a grim joke. In support of these statements, an article in the September number of the Cosmopolitan, by William Eleroy Curtis, who is evidently well informed on the subject, is cited, which gives a graphic account of recent grossly unrepublican government in the fantastic so-called "Republic of Colombia." At an election held in that country in April, 1888, which was held under the supervision of six thousand armed soldiers distributed at the most important polling places, Doctor Joseph Nunez was elected president, and members of congress were chosen who were in league with him. At his dictation this congress passed laws which conferred upon him the power, which he has vigorously executed, of suppressing the liberty of the press, of arresting, trying and punishing, even to the extent of inflicting the death penalty, any person he may suspect of conspiracy, which means any person opposed to his government or his methods. He may, in time of peace, and simply at the bidding of his own sweet will, confiscate private property for the use of his government, which he has construed to be for his own use, and this without judicial procedure or any compensation. He can expel from the country, and deprive of all political rights and all possessions any person whom he deems "unworthy of the confidence of the government." He can depose from office any judge or legislator, and appoint their successors at his will, and withou court-martial can remove any officer of the army. He has absolute control of the finances, and can increase or decrease taxation at his pleasure. He can impose fines and penalties against citizens at his pleasure, and collect them by military force. This is how things are done in some of the republics of South America.

The difficulties in the way of constructing a really practicable air-ship appear almost insurmountable, and still the effort after the all but unattainable goes on, and ever and anon some daring æronaut causes a momentary thrill of horror throughout the civilized world by dashing himself to splinters and jelly by a fall from the clouds to the cruelly hard earth, or dropping into mid-ocean from stormy skies, whither the treacherous winds have whirled him in the ungovernable chariot to which he has rashly—almost insanely—committed his life. Such was the sad fate of Professor Hogan, as the result of his attempt to navigate the famous Campbell ærial vessel, from which so much was expected in the way of being independent of air currents and contrary winds. The ascent, as our readers may remember, was made from Brooklyn, N.Y., on the 16th of July last, and was witnessed by thousands of spectators, who saw the dauntless navigator speedily loose control of his complicated air vessel (some of its parts becoming detached and falling to the earth) and he and his great oval shaped balloon were hurried far out over the Atlantic Ocean, and were seen no more. Referring to this latest sacrifice to science, or folly, a writer reflects as follows: "When human ingenuity can match the product of nature; when it can make a machine possessing as much power and endurance to the ounce of weight as that of the homing pigeon which lately flew from Detroit to Buffalo (225 miles) in less than four hours; when it can so arrange and automatically shift a series of vanes like shifting feathers in a hawk's wings, which suspend it in the air for hours almost without apparent motion, when it can solve the problem of how this same hawk drops like a bullet from the dizzying height of a half mile, and checks itself unharmed above its prey, then it may learn to travel in the air." Machines for navigating the air, it might be stated, may, so far as the science of æronautics has progressed, be divided into three classes—flying machines without gas-bags, ordinary balloons propelled by the wind alone, and air ships of gas-envelope and car containing propelling machinery. The idea of combining the flying machine with the balloon, affirms Mr. J. E. Watkins, contains, in the opinion of modern æronauts the one element of hope for the future for successfully navigating the atmosphere. To meet the views of this author, the practical air ship must be provided with life boats and parachutes, must have light and powerful engines, with a reserve set for accident, must have ample generators for making gas en route, must have a rigid gas-envelope of a form to offer the least resistance to head winds, must be air and moisture tight and little affected by heat and cold, and must be divided into compartments so that an accident would liberate only a portion of the gas. Such an air ship could scarcely compete with railways and steamships on short lines, and the dreams of the most enthusiastic æronauts have led them only to hope for an arrangement for rapidly passing over long distances. On local lines of 100 miles or less in length, it is thought, however, that some system of electric air ships, sliding at a height of 50 or 100 feet along a double track of guiding wires, might be devised, and would offer many advantages in thickly populated districts.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Loch Katrine works, which have supplied Glasgow with water for more than thirty years, are now found to be inadequate to the wants of the city, so they are being duplicated, at a cost of about two millions, and when the work is completed a hundred millions of gallons will be drawn from the lake every day. To meet this, the level of the lake is to be raised so much that it has been necessary to place the MacGregor tombstones on a high platform.

A paymaster in in the United States navy gives an exchange the following account of the "red tape" that must be gone through in making purchases for a man-of-war:—Supposing that a paper of tacks is wanted on board a United States ship on a foreign station the following is the routine actually required under general order No. 48:—Four requisitions are made out as follows:—Officer making the requisition, four times, captain eight, paymaster eight, and admiral four. Bids are sent out to five merchants, which are signed by pay officer five times; merchants bidding, five; acceptance of bid, paymaster, one. Bids are then made out in quintuplicate and are signed by the captain fives times; paymaster, ten, senior officer of the board of inspection, five; and persons receiving the money, five. A report is attached by the senior officer of the board of survey in duplicate, two signatures, and the officer who made the requisition signs a receipt on the bill five times, when it is complete, with more than half a hundred signatures.

Says the London Standard of a late date: Professor Charcot of the Saltperriere Hospitals in Paris is at the present moment much engaged with the case of a young girl of 14 or 15, who is afflicted with a curious and, it appears, extremely rare form of hysteria, consisting of a special monomania, the victims of which not only believe themselves to be cats, but actually move about and act as if they belonged to the feline species. The patient in question, who is described as an attractive and interesting girl, when the fit comes on moves about on her hands and feet with really amazing agility, purring or hissing, as may happen to be, precisely as a cat does. If a hospital student throws her a ball of paper, she will play with it on all fours, running and jumping at it in the manner peculiar to a cat, putting up her back, licking her hand as though it were a paw, and passing it over her head to smooth the fur which the patient conceives to be there. Each of these strange fits lasts about twenty minutes, and is infinitely painful to witness for the spectators, though for the patient herself they leave no trace, the poor girl, on recovering from them, being quite astonished on seeing her hands covered with scratches, and her clothes torn and soiled, and having not the slightest recollection of her twenty minutes' transformation.

TOO OLD TO LEARN.

I am sumthin' of a vet'ran, just a turnin' eighty year,
A man that's hale and hearty and a stranger
few all fear;
But I've heerd some news this mornin' that has made my old head spin,
And I'm goin' to ease my conshuns if I never speak ag'in.

I've lived my four score years of life, and never 'till to-day
Was I taken for a jackass or an ign'rant kind o' jay,
Tew be stuffed with such durned nonsense 'bout them crawlin' bugs and worms
That's a killin' human bein's with their microscopic germs.

They say there's "microbes" all around hunt-
in' for their prey;
There's nothing pure tew eat or drink or no safe place to stay.
There's "missamy" in the dewfall and "malary"
in the sun;
'Ta'n't safe to be outdoors at noon or when the day is done.

There's "bactery" in the water and "trichee-noy" in the meat,
"Ameeby" in the atmosfeer, "calory" in the heat;
There's "corpussels and pigments" in a human bein's blood,
And every other kind of thing existin' sense the flood.

Terbacker's full of "nickerteen," whatever that may be,
And your throat will all get puckered up with
"tannin" in the tea;
The butter's "oily-margareen," it never saw a cow,
And things is gettin' wus and wus from what they be just now.

Them bugs is all about us, jest a waitin' for a chance
Tew navigate our vitals and tew 'naw us off like plants.
There's men that spends a lifetime huntin'
worms, jest like a goose,
And tackin' Latin names to 'em and lettin' on
'em loose.

Now, I don't believe soch nonsense, and don't intend to try;
If things has come tew such a pass I'm satisfied to die.
I'll go hang me in the sullar, for I won't be sech
a fool
As tew wait until I'm pizened by a annymally-cool.

TRAVELING IN INDIA.

Hotel and Railway Life in Victoria's Eastern Empire.

A Country Where Nothing Is Done for Hotel Guests Unless They Are Willing to Pay for "Extras"—Description of an Eastern Railway Car.

Your train stops at a station where you wish to spend a day and you are about to step from the car when from three to six coolies block the door, all wishing to grab some parcel from the car. They have no baggage-car in India, says a correspondent of the Buffalo Express, and every one must take his baggage into the car where he rides and look after it himself. Perhaps you may have four parcels; if so, then at least eight coolies, who have blocked your door, will endeavor to handle it as it is taken out of the car and put into a "gharri," or carriage. When you come to settle with them at least ten will want to be paid, and in order to get away from the mob (for they will literally mob you) you pay three times as much as you ought, and yet feel thankful that it is as well with you as it is.

On arriving at your hotel you are booked at the office and shown to your room, when the same rush for your baggage is repeated by the coolies, only their number is less. In due time your four bundles are safely deposited in your room and the coolies have disappeared. Now comes a time for reflection and you drop into the first chair you come to. One of the first objects that attracts your attention is the bed. You proceed to examine it closely and take an inventory. First there is a hard mattress; second, one sheet; and these comprise the whole thing. You put in an appearance at the office and make inquiries as to bedding and room-boy. You are told by the clerk with one of his most bland expressions that this hotel does not furnish bedding nor servants to look after your room; but in a quiet tone, just above a whisper, he will inform you that a servant will be sent to your room, but you must pay him. By this time you are in a condition to say "yes" to any thing, and you say: "All right, send him on."

The boy puts in an appearance and you try to make him understand your mother-tongue; but it is of no earthly use. If you chance to have a little smattering of French or German you try them in succession, also to no use. Then by motions and gestures you make him understand that you wish to wash. Water is brought, but you have neither towel nor soap furnished. But you may have had an inkling of what you might expect, so you open your valise and bring them forth.

It is the same with your rugs and bedding; and after all are brought to light you motion to the boy to make up your bed and he does it with alacrity. Your seven-o'clock dinner is announced and you proceed to the dining-room. After being shown a seat you naturally look around for something to eat, or perhaps more particularly for some one to wait upon you; but no one comes. Waiters are passing and repassing on your right and left and there you sit with "cusswords" running through your mind swift and fast. You can not help it and you are not to blame for what you can not help. Finally when you think forbearance has ceased to be a virtue, you look about the room for the "head man," as he is called in India. You beckon him to your side and, in tones of smothered indignation, say to him that you want something to eat.

He will pleasantly say to you: "We have an abundance to eat but do not furnish table-waiters; I will send you one if you like, but it will be charged in your bill."

The servant comes to do your bidding, but can not understand a word you say. However the courses are designated by numerals, 1, 2, 3, etc., on the menu cards, so you say bring this or that number. You ask for tea or coffee and are informed that neither is furnished at dinner. At the same time you hear the report occasioned by the opening of wine, beer and champagne bottles, which, by the way, is quite suggestive to one—that is, if he be a prohibitionist. In this manner you manage to get through with your several meals. After remaining twenty-four hours you wish to go to the next objective point or city, and in order to make the most time you ride at night. You order your bill sent to your room, and at the same time you order your "gharri" to take you to the station in time for the eight p. m. mail train, which is always on time and is the best train to ride on in India.

As the room-boy comes in followed by half a dozen coolies you are made aware that the "gharri" is at the door. Now each coolie wants a job and will come for his backsheesh whether he does any thing or not, so you let the six coolies carry four pieces of baggage. You give the room-boy the amount thought necessary to pay all and shout to the driver to go.

The station is just reached in time, and by the help of the station watchman and a large number of coolies you are quickly stowed away in the car, a room eight by twelve feet. Your car door is beset by coolies as well as the watchman, all asking for backsheesh, and, after distributing all your loose change to those you think earned it, they still clamor for more. For the life of you it is impossible to tell one from the other, for they dress, or, rather, undress, alike.

Up to this time no one else has come into the car, which is calculated to carry at least four persons. The train moves out of the station, and you find yourself the sole occupant. You look for the bell-rope in case of accident, and then for the short cord on the side of the car with which to set the air-brake, and are unable to find either. Then the car doors are locked on both sides, and you find yourself shut in with no visible means of escape, and, as you have nothing else to do, you unroll your bundle and make up your bed or couch. Now, if you do your duty you will commend your spirit to the God who gave it and retire to your virtuous couch, and in the morning be thankful that your unprofitable life has been preserved through the night.

NOT TO BE FOOLED.

How Honest Matthew Riley Protected His Mistress' Premises.

Mrs. Hallowell was a very pretty and amiable widow, but, says the Detroit Commercial Advertiser, she had a sorrow. She had arrived at a critical period when age shows its marks upon the face, and especially in the frost it sprinkles upon the hair. She resolved to dye the latter, and for that purpose made arrangements with a certain tonsorial artist, Mr. Donegan, who, at her request, was to meet her at ten o'clock at night, to avoid observation, and, in the privacy of her own boudoir, restore her hair to a jet-black hue.

She had agreed to attend a party that night, and, of course, was anxious to have her hair-dyer prompt. At ten o'clock she was awaiting him, eager for his appearance.

The bell rang, but the hair-dresser did not present himself before her. She sent down her maid to make inquiries of Matthew Riley, the Irish footman, who also officiated as attendant at the door.

"Who was it rang?" asked Charlton, the maid.

"A blackguard," replied Matthew Riley.

"Who?" said Charlton.

"An impudent blackguard," said the footman. "Bedad, if it wasn't for fear of the police, I'd tache him better."

"What did he want?" continued the maid.

"Want, is it? Want! Sure, I'll be after telling ye, as ye'er so curious, for it's meself asked him the question," replied Riley.

"Well," said Charlton, "go on."

"'Well,' says I, 'what do you want at this time o' night, my fine fellow?' 'I'll tell your missus,' said he. 'Divil a bit,' says I, 'till ye've told me first.' 'My business is with the lady,' says he. 'It will keep warm till to-morrow, then,' says I, 'for divil an inch you'll get in till I know what you want.' 'Can you keep a saycret?' says he. 'Can a duck swim?' says I. "Upon that he came close to me, and says he—. But, arrah, you won't belave me."

"Indeed I will," said the maid.

"'Well, then,' says he, 'I come to die hare.' 'Die hare!' says I. 'Yes,' says he. 'And whare would you wish to die?' says I. 'In your missus' room,' says he. So with that I kicked him down-stairs."

"Indeed, then you have done wrong!" said Charlton, ready to die with laughing.

"But, bedad, he came back again just now," resumed Riley, "and says again, as part as may be: 'Tell your missus I'm come to die hare.'"

"Well, and what did you say?" asked Charlton.

"What did I say?" exclaimed Matthew. "Sure I said what every honest man would."

"And what was that?" she asked.

"'Be jabers,' said I, 'ye're nothin' but an idiot, and yo'll not die hare. Go somewhere else and die, you scamp of the world! Die hare, indeed!' So, for the second time, I knocked him down the stoop, and, bedad, I'm thinking he'll niver come here again to die."

The mistake was so ludicrous that even Mrs. Hallowell laughed at it, although to her it was a serious disappointment.

IT CALLED IN VAIN.

How a Locomotive's Plaintive Cry Affected the Helpless Engineer.

A railroad round-house was in flames. Fire had leaped, apparently in a self-born demon, out of the waste box, and before a hand could be found with the skill to "pull out" its waiting locomotives, some of them with boilers full of water and low fires, it was too late. For it was a small round-house in a small town, says the Des Momes Leader, and a lone watchman had been left to care for it, and it was nigh midnight. His loud call summoned a concourse of citizens in breathless haste, but all they could do was to stand and see the great sheet of fire from the pitched roof and how the inflammable materials inside made every locomotive stall a caldron of fire, and all the windows glared, all the doors poured out smoke, and roar, and long flames. There stood the steam giants plainly visible vibrating in the intense heat, unapproachable as though set in the infernal regions. Still it was a fire where the element of human danger was all missing. Suddenly, long and dolorous, one of these engines began to sound the danger signal. Heat within and without made its boiler shake with the leap of fiercely boiling water. A bit of falling iron bent and pulled downward the lever moving its escape valve so that it could and did sound ceaselessly. Loud, thrilling, it was a note of terror. It awed every hearer. Listen, some day, thoughtfully, to the danger signal of a locomotive. Even in the broad and peaceful day it is the keenest and strongest, the most terrible sound man has invented. It reaches the dull intelligence of lowest beasts as a warning. The solemn power, then, of this cry, apparently raised by the will of the engine itself, in the midst of its torture, was indescribable. It was hard not to feel that it was a sentient thing pleading for help. It pealed on, an urgent monotone, the tremulous voice of senseless force. One man heard it, distressed by it beyond telling. He was its engineer. The engine he loved with the peculiar attachment these men have for the thing of power they control seemed to be crying to him voluntarily with the appeal his hand had often evolved from it. He wanted to plunge in to its rescue. The fiery furnace of the Hebrew children was matched by its surroundings, and he could only listen and tremble and let it call in vain. It was all a curious bit of pathos, evolved wholly from material things by chance, and costing not a pang to its source, yet it touched and saddened every soul that heard it. But none of them could quite comprehend the feeling of its driver or know how pitifully the next morning he touched his gray, burned-out, ruined giant that had poured its shriek into his ears for that long half-hour.

LUXURIES FOR DOGS.

New Things in Leather and Toilet Articles for Household Pets.

That ancient proverb, nothing new under the sun, finds its refutation in the canine toilet case, without which no aristocratic dog in high life can be truly fashionable, says the New York World. Dogs in high life are given a bath once a week and a shampoo daily. As a comb and brush are deemed necessary to dress the Skye tresses, some wide-awake person has just put upon the market a set of bristles and bone for doggie's own precious self, done up in a satin-lined case with clasp and seal like the one on Beauty's toilet stand. The comb is shown in shell, celluloid and bone, and the brush is long and narrow, with a kennel scene of some sort stamped on the handle. Done up in leather boxes prices range from $5 to $7, while the leatherette, another name for paper, can be had for half the money. What is known as something extra nice that a man generally buys when sent on the errand, because it is the first thing offered, has a rubber comb rimmed with silver and with the same plate the brush is bound. Set into the lid of the box is a medallion head of some prize dog, also in plate, or a groove is stamped out to receive intaglio the portrait of the favored brute. The firm that deals in furnishing goods for dogs take orders for cameos and fill them, too, just as they provide for having the animal's teeth, ears, or ills attended to.

Another innovation is a pair of kid socks into which Mr. Dog's hind feet are put and securely gartered with whatever colored ribbon is most becoming to his complexion. These little brown stockings sell at fifty cents, and are thought to be a restriction when the pampered brute takes a notion to scratch himself bald. Dog-hampers for traveling can be had in rush, willow and cane varnished to represent boxwood. In one side is an invisible slide, which, being open, supplies air and saves the maid or mistress the trouble of opening the cover. The medium sizes are provided with pockets in which grass, oaten cake and an appetizing bone can be carried.

Dog-collars are counted among the staples in leather and jewelry stocks. Some are as plain as a trunk strap and others rival the belts so much admired by lovers of outing costumes. For toy terriers chain bracelets are considered the proper styles and the young man who makes morning calls and is received in the family sitting room is just as likely to find the antique jewel of smoke silver, for which he surrendered 20¢, passed about the neck of a 22 ounce blackjack as the slender wrist of the girl he adores.

The foot of the Exhibition Fund list in this paper is the place of honor just now, paradoxical as it may seem, and two more of our solid citizens have won diplomas by getting to the bottom, to-day. There are a few more vacant seats near the door. Come down out of the gallery, gentlemen.

Passenger List.

The str. Rithet arrived from Victoria this morning with 135 tons of freight and the following passengers: Miss English, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Rich, Miss Green, Miss Hough, Mr. and Mrs. Steves, J. Black, E. J. Gardiner, Capt. O'Neil, Gen. Martin, E. M. Johnson, W. Wilson, J. D. Carscaden, J. Martin, J. Fort, J. Enson, C. Green, Striven, Jno. Reed, London, H. Kirkland, J. Kirkland, W. Savage, T. McDonald, Deboureaux and 23 steerage.

First Shipments East.

The first large shipments of this year's pack of canned salmon to eastern points, via C.P.R., were made to-day. The str. Irving brought down from Leidlaw's cannery 2000 cases and a similar number from B. Young's packing establishment. These were unloaded at the C.P.R. wharf and transferred to cars for shipment east. The salmon is consigned to parties in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and London. Several other large shipments will be made within a few weeks.

The Tennis Tournament.

The tennis tournament is growing more interesting as the final games approach. On Saturday afternoon five matches were played, in three of which Mr. E. M. N. Woods greatly distinguished himself, disposing of his opponents in turn with comparative ease. The play at times was brilliant, and certainly the games were the best played since the commencement of the tournament. Mr. J. S. Clute beat Dr. Bentley 6-5, 6-2; Dr. Fagan beat Mr. Eckstein 6-2, 6-0; Mr. Woods beat Mr. Brymner 6-3, 4-6, 6-2; Mr. Woods beat Mr. Fraser 6-3, 6-4; Mr. Woods beat Mr. Bell 6-3, 6-4. Only three more matches remain to be played.

A Ferocious Lunatic.

The lunatics temporarily quartered in the provincial jail while the asylum improvements are in progress, are giving the governor and his jailers a great deal of trouble and annoyance. Yesterday one of them, a Chinaman, made a most sudden and desperate attack on another lunatic, named Robertson, and was beating him terribly when Turnkey Lister went to the rescue. No sooner did the turnkey make his appearance than the crazy man turned on him ferociously, and with his long nails tore Lister's face pretty badly before he could be overcome and put him in a straight jacket. Occurences of this kind go far to make the life of the jailer an unhappy one.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria

The Minister's Movements.

Mr. and Mrs. Dewdney, at the invitation of Mr. T. E. Ladner, went down to the Landing this morning and spent the day visiting the different canneries, driving over the rich delta lands and generally seeing all that is to be seen in that beautiful district. To-morrow Hon. Mr. Dewdney leaves for Victoria and will spend the remainder of the week in that city.

Boom of Logs Lost.

The tug Topic arrived in port last night from the north, minus the boom of logs with which she left Bute Inlet. Yesterday morning a heavy gale sprung up on the gulf against which the tug battled all day, but towards evening the sea became much rougher and the captain of the tug was forced to cut the boom loose and let it go in order to save his vessel. The boom was cut adrift near point Roberts and the wind at that time was blowing on shore, so it is just possible the logs will be saved. The Topic left port to-day and will endeavor to pick up her tow again. The boom contained 150,000 feet of logs and was the property of the Brunette Saw Mills Co.

A Notable Presentation.

This morning Hon. Edgar Dewdney, minister of the interior, was presented with a fine large oil painting by Mr. W. H. Vianen. The picture represents Mr. Vianen standing beside the largest salmon ever caught in the Fraser river, and which weighed some 75 pounds, measured 3 feet 6 inches in circumference and almost 5 feet in length. Some 30 years ago Hon Mr. Dewdney and Mr. Vianen together caught some of the first salmon ever taken by whitemen from the Fraser river, and it is in memory of this event, and for "the days of auld lang syne" that the presentation was made. Hon. Mr. Dewdney was delighted with the gift, which he will take to Ottawa and give a place among the articles he most greatly treasures.

Off for Kamloops.

The members of the Westminster lacrosse team left by the 1 o'clock train to-day for Kamloops, and were given a right hearty send-off by the hundred admirers who gathered at the railway station to see them depart. Every member of the team was in excellent spirits and fully confident of victory. Besides the team, about 30 Westminsterites also left for Kamloops to see the great lacrosse match and witness the tournament. At the Junction a Pullman was in waiting, and into this the Royal City contingent was transferred. The team consists of J. C. Whyte, W. J. Corbett, M. M. Mowat, J. R. Polley, R. B. Lister, C. C. Stewart, Jas. Gow, Thos. Hill, L. A. Lewis, Thos. Carrie, J. A. McMartin, and H. F. Thompson.

Splendid Results.

Mr. Thos. Cunningham received a letter to-day from one of his numerous customers in the Northwest, written in most enthusiastic terms, and asserting what THE COLUMBIAN has always claimed, that British Columbia fruit will one day find an immense market in the territories. Among other things the writer says. "Your shipments of fruit have come along all right, good in condition and quality. Most of the fruit I sent north, and it arrived at its destination in good condition after 5 days' journey by stage. Fruit is something I do not think we can grow in our territories, and in a few years more we are sure to be your greatest consumers. Send me some more grapes and pears, the last arrived all right." In this style the letter continues, every line of it a compliment to the fruit and to the fine condition in which it arrived.

Curious Phenomenon.

A curious phenomenon was observed from Ladners Landing this morning during the progress of the rain storm that was prevailing about 9 o'clock. Conflicting currents of air met on the south shore of Lulu Island and formed a funnel shaped column, which, commencing small at first, gradually increased in volume until it had attained the proportions of a heavy whirlwind. It moved in a northeasterly course across the island raising a dense cloud of dust as it went, and gradually disappeared in the direction of Vancouver. There being no telegraph connection with Lulu Island nothing could be learned as to the effect of the whirlwind, or the damage done by it, if any. It is not supposed, however, that any serious damage was done, or word would have reached the city concerning it. This most unusual phenomenon is a surprise to the oldest inhabitant, who cannot remember of a similar occurence.

Ante Mortem Statement.

Ah Yen, the Chinaman who was shot at Ladners last Sunday week by a countryman named Ah Lie, and who was supposed to be on the fair way to recovery, has taken a turn for the worse and his life is now despaired of. His condition was so serious to-day that Mr. Moresby considered it best to have his ante mortem statement taken down, which was done by Capt. Pittendrigh, J. P., in the presence of witnesses. Ah Yen gives a different story to that first circulated in regard to the shooting. His statement is to the effect that Ah Lie, Ah Yen and a number of other Chinamen were gambling, and Ah Yen won a considerable amount of money from Ah Lie. When the play was ended Ah Lie told Ah Yen to return him the money he had won, or he would kill him. Ah Yen refused to hand back the money and Ah Lie then drew a revolver, and stepping up close shot him three times, the second shot causing the wound from which it is likely Ah Yen's death will result.

Suicide or Lynching?

From a passenger who arrived from up river last evening by the steamer Irving, THE COLUMBIAN is informed of a supposed case of suicide near Sumas river. At a point about two miles above Frank Wade's ranch, on the south shore of the river, and directly opposite Nicomen slough, the body of a man was seen suspended from the branch of a large tree, swaying gently to and fro in the wind. At least a dozen people on the deck of the steamer saw the body, which appeared to be that of a large-sized man. The body was hanging about 15 feet from the ground, and the rope by which it was attached to the branch did not appear to be over 6 feet long. About 50 yards from where the body hangs is a small cabin, and it is supposed the suicide was the owner of it. Shortly before the steamer passed the spot, a small boat with one or more persons in it sailed down river in the direction of Frank Wade's ranch, and the occupants of it must have seen the corpse. Capt. Odin did not see the body, and it was not till the steamer was some distance down river that he learned of the circumstance. It was then late in the day and he could not spare the time to return. The authorities have been informed, and immediate steps will be taken to investigate the case thoroughly.

A Magnificent Organ.

Last week the congregation of the Methodist church received from Toronto, through D. Lyal & Co., agents, a magnificent new organ, known as the "vocalion." It was manufactured by S. R. Warren & Son, of Toronto, and is really a beautiful instrument. The organ was used for the first time in public yesterday, and the effect on the musical part of the service was quite marked. The peculiar construction and arrangement of the pipes enables the organist to produce a great variety of sounds, from the deep full tones of the bourdon (16 feet tone) to the faint whispers of the solo stops. Many of the combinations are very charming, and quite equal to those found in costly pipe organs. The "tuba" (16 feet) stop, which is one of the features of this organ, is very powerful, and free from the harshness usually found in powerful reed instruments, because it has the quality of tone belonging to the pipe organ. Besides the organ, the song service was further aided by a cornet, two clarionettes and a euphonium, played respectively by Messrs. Turnbull, King, Wilson and McMurphy. The effect of these instruments is exceedingly fine. The choir yesterday acquitted itself with great credit, the anthems especially were rendered in such a way as to charm everyone of the large congregation present, and it may be doubted if anywhere else in this province there can be found a better equipped and more efficient church choir.

Police Court.

(Before T. C. Atkinson, P. M., and P. McTiernan, J. P.,)

Charley, a Thompson river Indian, with a face closely resembling the skin of a leopard, pleaded not guilty to the charge of being drunk and incapable. Constable Smith and an Indian policeman both swore that Charley was very drunk, but the prisoner persisted that he was not as he had not absorbed sufficient fire water to do the work, and he knew his capacity. Fined $5.

Thomas Kelly, charged with being drunk and incapable, thought he had been intoxicated, but was not quite certain in his own mind. However, he decided to give the constable's charge the benefit of the doubt and was fined $2.50 and costs.

Moody, the chief of all vagabond Indians, graced the dock again this morning with his ugly countenance, on charge of being drunk. Last July Moody was ordered by the court to return to his rancherie on the Harrison river, there to remain three months in quiet seclusion as a sort of penance for his all round wickedness. As was expected, Moody failed to keep his promise, and although he got drunk repeatedly in a quiet sort of way, it was not till yesterday that the police caught him napping. When asked if he was guilty of the charge, Moody seemed greived that the court should put such a useless question and replied "Of course I was drunk." Fined $5.

The cases against Messrs. Raymond, Cash and Brennan for keeping open their bar rooms after hours were remanded till Wednesday.

Killed by a Falling Tree.

At 12 o'clock noon yesterday, at Mr. Robert Swan's ranch, about a mile distant from the Union Mine wharves, Mr. David Bruce, was instantly killed by a falling tree. The deceased in company with his brother John and Thomas Ariss was engaged in chopping down the trees on this farm. He was cutting one tree while an adjoining one was burning. His energies and attention were engaged on his work, and just as the chopped tree fell so did the burning one. The unfortunate man happened to be fairly in line with the burning tree, which in its fall struck Bruce to the ground, and crushing his body in a fearful manner, from the feet to the head. Death was instantaneous. His friends immediately removed the body from under the tree. On hearing the sad news, Mr. Frank Little, superintendent of the mines, sent a train to bring the body to the wharves, while Capt. Bendrodt considerably delayed the steamer for an hour, so as to convey the remains and sorrowing relations to Comox. The arrival of the Isabel, with flags at half mast, told the Comoxians the sad news. The deceased leaves a wife and two children, who were residing at the scene of the accident, to mourn his premature death. He was 29 years of age, and had resided at Comox for many years, where he was highly respected. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, under the auspices of the Comox lodge Knights of Pythias, of which lodge he was a member. The accident cast a gloom over the settlement, and great sympathy was expressed for the bereaved relations and friends.—Free Press, Sept 5.

Siwashes at the Driard.

It is amusing to note the human tendency to "put on airs," as soon as necessary dollars are obtained for doing so. Last evening four Siwashes who had being fishing and made big money at the Fraser river canneries arrived in the city. What do you think? With the instincts of a natural born epicure, a railway magnate or other monopolist, they made straight for the Driard House. Before registering, however, Skookum Charley took the precaution to inquire as to the necessary number of ducats to enable one to sleep under the roof of this high-classed caravansary. "Consig chickimin ickt polaklie?" or words to that effect, he inquired of the urbane representative of the hotel proprietors who stood behind the counter. "Five dollars for one night" replied the clerk, who was enjoying the joke and determined to test the pile of the opulent aborigine. "Five dollars one night," muttered Charley to his comrades, and they bolted through the door like sheep going through a gate, as if they were afraid they might do something in there that they would be taxed $5 for.—Friday's Times.

LATE CANADIAN NEWS.

The safe in the post office at St. Justin was blown open by dynamite Friday night, and $1,000 in cash and $500 in registered letters carried away.

There is said to be considerable uneasiness amongst Quebec politicians anent the general elections for the local house. It is hinted that Mercier would bring them on at once if he could find the sinews of war for the campaign.

GRATIFYING TO ALL.

The high position attained and the universal acceptance and approval of the pleasant liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs, as the most excellent laxative known, illustrate the value of the qualities on which its success is based and are abundantly gratifying to the Cal. Fig Syrup Company.
