A SNOW STORM

The Russians Accuse Lord Salisbury of Insincerity in His Lord Mayor's Day Speech.

Mr. Parnell's Action Against the "Times" for Libel Adjourned till Spring.

SNOW BLOCKADE.

DENVER, Col., Nov. 11.—The snow blockade on the Denver, Texas & Fort Worth R.R., which was broken Saturday after lasting eight days, by the arrival of the first through train from the south, reports a sad condition of affairs along the line, as entire towns and ranches within a radius of fifteen and twenty miles were short of supplies and some entirely cleaned out. It is pronounced by stockmen the heaviest ever experienced any season in the south. The loss of cattle and sheep has been enormous. The depth of snow has averaged over three feet on the level. The reports of loss of life among cowboys and sheep herders continue increasing. At Ralon, N.M., the loss of cattle alone will reach 10,000 and several companies will be ruined.

ATTEMPTED ESCAPE.

FRESNO, Cal., Nov. 11.—While the prisoners in the city jail, numbering 20, were in the corridor Saturday night, they attempted to escape but were frustrated by the prompt action of the jail officials, and returned to their cells.

ANGRY DAUGHTERS.

CHARLESTON, S. C. Nov. 11.—There is trouble in the order of the King's Daughters here. The royal chapter, which is composed of delegates from various circles in the state, met here yesterday and was slimly attended. The small attendance was attributed to the publication in the newspaper of a card, supposed to have been written by a prominent member, and in which the writer urged the King's Daughters to get up a petition to Queen Victoria for the pardon of Mrs. Maybrick. It is said the publication of this letter kept many of the delegates from the meeting. The matter was not formally discussed, but the ladies who were present were angry at the publication.

A PRINTERS' QUARREL.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 11.—Two printers, Frank D. Romayne and T. M. Hughes, type setters in the Tribune office here, met in front of the office yesterday afternoon and renewed a quarrel which had been going on for two weeks. Both were armed and Hughes fired five shots, one shot going through Romayne's body, killing him in a few minutes. Hughes was arrested.

BEAT THE RECORD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 11.—The str. Oceanic arrived from Hong Kong and Yokohama this morning, thirteen days, fourteen hours and four minutes from the latter port, the fastest time on record.

PASSENGER LIST.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 11.—The str. Walla Walla sailed for Victoria and Puget Sound ports this morning with the following passengers for Victoria: S. Fell, W. Edmiston, G. Edmiston, Miss L Wickham, Miss J. Wickham, M. Lenz, Mrs. G. Leiser, M. Bates, Jr., and wife.

UNFORTUNATE JOHNSTOWN.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Nov. 11.—The long bridge connecting Cambria and Millvale was entirely demolished this morning by the high water and driftwood in the Conemaugh river. The loss of the structure will greatly retard the removal of dead bodies from Millvale cemetery to their permanent resting-place in Prospect cemetery. Last night the Christian church, Main street, was badly damaged by fire.

MODJESKA AND BOOTH.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Madame Modjeska indignantly denies the truth of the article published this morning to the effect that she would apply for the annulment of her contract on account of Booth's ungentlemanly conduct. She says she is, and always has been, friendly with Booth, and has no doubt will continue so till the end of the season.

THAT BLOODY COTTON.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—The first witness this morning in the Cronin trial was Dr. Belfield's stenographer, who testified that Capt. Schaack gave Dr. Belfield some bloody cotton on the morning of May 6th. This was to trace the connection of blood from the trunk to Belfield.

THE CATHOLIC CONGRESS.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 11.—The Catholic congress began its session this morning. The delegates, numbering 1200, assisted at solemn pontifical high mass in the morning, celebrated by Archbishop Corrigan of New York. The sermon was preached by Archbishop Grosse, of Oregon. He welcomed the delegates and gave a brief outline of the history of the church in America for the past hundred years. At the conclusion of the sermon the delegates marched to Concordia opera house. The congress was called to order at 11:15 a. m., by Wm. J. Onahan, of Chicago; Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, prayed that the light of the Holy Spirit might be shed on the deliberations of the congress. Mr. Onahan next read a message from the Pope, whose name was greeted with tremendous applause. The message read: "Having made known to the Holy Father the expressions of devotion conveyed to him on the part of the Catholic congress to be held in Baltimore, His Holiness graciously bids me to say he offers his affectionate blessings to all the members. (Signed). Cardinal Ranagolla." Mr. Onahan then welcomed the delegates of foreign countries as well as of the United States, and hoped that in 1892 they would have the pleasure of welcoming them to the International congress. Among those on the stage were Bisnops Virtue, of England, Foley, of Detroit, Father Hayburn, of Mexico, and many other prelates, priests, etc. Governor John Lee Carroll, of Maryland, was then elected temporary chairman, and the following secretaries appointed: Leo Hamilton, of Georgetown College; G. F. Edwards, of Notre Dame University, of Indiana; W. S. McDonald, of Boston College; J. P. Fisher, of the Immaculate Conception College, New Orleans; Romity Rayberg, of St. Louis College, and John M. Duffy, of Chicago. A long list of vice-presidents from each state was also read.

SPECIE DECREASED.

BERLIN, Nov. 11.—The specie in the Imperial Bank has decreased 640,000 marks during the past week.

TO REORGANIZE.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The associated Amsterdam and London committee of the Missouri Kansas and Texas R.R. securities have decided on a reorganization plan for converting the various classes of bonds into new 4½d voting trust has been created.

VERY PROBABLE.

PARIS, Nov. 11.—The Saliel says the recent interview between the Czar and Bismarck resulted in a decision to oust Ferdinand from the Bulgarian throne.

AN ARTIFICIAL SPEAKER.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 11.—The Nove Vremya says Lord Salisbury's speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet on Saturday night displayed optimism that was artificial and insincere, and his prediction of unbroken peace, as the outcome of present tendencies, incredible.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.

BELGRADE, Nov. 11.—Considerable excitement has been aroused here by the mysterious disappearance of M. Cristitely, formerly Servian minister at Berlin. He has suddenly dropped out of sight, and no one seems to know what has become of him.

WILL COME OUT AN OLD MAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.—Julian Portilli, who murdered John Mefeutt, his partner in the chicken peddling business, was sentenced to thirty years in the state prison to-day.

MORE HANGING NEEDED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.—Inflammatory circulars are being quietly distributed to-day by local socialists, announcing that a memorial meeting will be held Monday evening next to commemorate the anniversary of the execution of the Chicago anarchists, and urging all workingmen to attend.

TO PREY AGAIN ON SOCIETY.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 9.—George Bell, alias Williamson, one of the most notorious forgers in America, was released from the Maryland penitentiary to-day, having completed a ten years' sentence. He was the accomplice of Chas. O. Brockway, the prince of forgers, in doing forgeries by which they got $10,000 from Baltimore banks.

LIBEL ADJOURNED.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Mr. Parnell's action for libel against the Times has been adjourned until spring. Mr. Gladstone, upon being questioned as to whether his proposed Irish parliament would have power to endorse Roman Catholic educational institutions in Ireland, said the Irish parliament should not have that power and that denominational education ought to be abolished in Great Britain. But this would not please sectarians of England and Scotland.

CHURCH MATTERS.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Mr. Spurgeon has severed his connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, with the intention of forming a Tabernacle Society to send independent missions abroad. Dr. Parker has accepted the presidency of the Congregational Union of 1890.

NEW THEATRICAL CLUB.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The active managers of the London theatres have formed a club society which is to be exclusively of their own. The committee consists of Augustus Harris, Abud, Hollingshead and Greet.

MR. PARNELL'S HEALTH.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The reports as to Mr. Parnell's ill health are happily unfounded. He is in much better health than at this time last year and regards this coming session with more interest than any preceding one of this parliament. It is his opinion that the government will fall, not, perhaps, in the next session, but in that which follows. Mr. Parnell seems to have a very clear opinion as to the present duty of the opposition; that the government should now be resisted and opposed on the ground that it has no valid claim to represent the country. It has never represented Ireland, Scotland or Wales and now that England too has turned against it, the time has arrived when quite at the beginning of the session its claim to legislate for the people, who have intimated a want of confidence, should be stoutly denied. There is good reason to believe that these opinions are not held alone by the Irish leaders, but also by the liberal leaders generally, and that in February they will be acted upon with a view to forcing the government to make an appeal to the country. It is already practically agreed that at the opening of the session the whole weight of the opposition will be given to the amendment to the address directly challenging the position of the government.

WILL LIVE AT COBURG.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and their daughters have gone to Coburg. The duke is preparing to reside there permanently.

THE PREMIER'S SPEECH.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Lord Salisbury, speaking at the Lord Mayor's banquet in the Guild Hall to-night, congratulated the country on the expansion of its trade, warned the labor agitators that in pursuing their course they undertook a great responsiblity and advised the employers to be cautious, as imprudence on their part would jeopardise their interests. The prosperity of Ireland, he asserted, was increasing, and disorder was consequently disappearing. The government had not indulged in any wild theories of Home Rule, but was ready to further any practical and satisfactory policy for Ireland's good. The government's Egyptian policy remained unchanged, Egypt, at present, being unable to protect herself without British assistance. The tendency of Europe was peaceful and the great powers were of one accord in wishing to avoid a conflict.

A RADICAL OPINION.

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Nearly all the members of the government attended the Lord Mayor's banquet to-day. A number of other Tory members of parliament are also in the city, and those are clearly of the opinion that the re*verses which the government have suf*fered in the recent elections will incline the party in power to hold on firmly to the end. "Two more sessions and perhaps three" is the reply in the mouths of ministers to the question whether the government will remain in power. But when the question is put to them, "What will you propose or do in order to justify such a retention of power?" there is no response. Except that something will be proposed about the Irish land question next session, there is a general belief that Lord Salisbury and Lord Hartington are both opposed to any relaxation of the policy of coercion and to any large scheme of local government. The heavy-weights of the government are certainly disposed to go with Lord Selbourne in objecting to a very heavy programme for next session. There are minor members of the government who think that there will be do difficulty whatever in resisting such invitations as those of Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Courtenay to a voluminous programme. The Tories do not think that any of the dissentient Liberals will really try to "bolt" just yet. Such an attempt may happen, they say, later on in the life of this parliament when the critical time of a general election is near at hand. But for the moment the sentiment of a common danger is upon all the ministerialist party and their first impulse is to hold together and go on for a time. That the government will fall to pieces whenever it enters upon a new Irish policy, is an opinion on which the leading Tories and the leading Liberals and Mr. Parnell himself are all agreed.

FUNERAL SERMON

At Holy Trinity Church, yesterday morning, the Venerable Archdeacon Woods preached the funeral sermon of the late Robert Dickinson to a large and deeply affected congregation. The text was taken from Hebrews 4th chap. 9th verse: "There remaineth therefore a rest." The Venerable Archdeacon said: In the closing words of chapter III., it is shown that entrance into the rest of God stands over, remaineth, for the Christian. Our second lesson for this morning shows in what sense we Christians enter into His rest—the rest of God. The warning drawn from the 95th psalm against hardening the heart is repeated—lest a promise being left of entering into His rest any should come short of it. The rest of God is explained to us—the rest of the place where He dwells. His rest: because it is which He enjoys, that which He alone can confer. The promise is that there is to us admittance to the enjoyment of peace and rest where God dwells. But there is added very emphatic exhortation to diligence in striving after it; let us labor, let us earnestly strive. There is a rest, the attainment of which is worth all effort. Many have failed of reaching it because of their unbelief—that evil heart of unbelief against which warning is given in Hebrews III chap., 12th verse—to there is danger that we may fail, and failure must be irremediably awful. Let us labor, therefore, to enter into that rest.

Rest: Has it not been, is it not the aim and hope and longing of the human heart from the hour when the first lullaby soothed to sleep the all but unconscious babe on its mother's breast, to the hour when wearied by the labors and conflicts and ceaseless round of toil which has worn out his life, the man full of years longs to lay down the burden. The child looks on to the day when as a youth he shall be freed from childhood's cares and restraints, and so find what he fondly hopes will prove rest—only to find that years bring with them tasks of greater difficulty, and work more wearying, and that he has not yet found rest. But when youth has merged into the freedom of manhood, then surely will come rest! But manhood has its yoke—God forbid that it be the yoke of indulged sin—by no means easy, and its burdens far from light; but when manhood shall have reaped the rewards of success, through labor of whatever kind, of hands or brain, or heart, then comes rest? No! rest is not yet reached, for the very success which promised rest—and what shall be said of failure—has but multiplied labor, made the yoke less easy and the light burdens heavy. But by and by as age creeps on, when labor and cares, when work and affairs, of necessity, cease to occupy man; at last, will come rest. Why, then, are the evil days, when men shall say I have no pleasure in them, when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves; when fears shall be in the way, when the grasshopper shall be a burden and desire fail. No! there is no rest this side the grave but to those who read into the text, the concluding words. "There remaineth, therefore, a rest;" but to whom? To the people of God.

To the people of God all time, all labor, every burden, every yoke is rest, else were Crist's own words without meaning: "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." He gives us burdens, but He gives us strength to bear; He fits the load to the strength and the strength to the load, and gives more power as he adds more weight. Those who cheerfully bear the burden He lays upon them are brought near to Him, and learning to know Him better, love Him more. They learn to look upon the burdens He lays upon them as pledges that He is training them for a service of perfect freedom, of perfect joy and of perfect rest. On the other hand, bear the burden lan*guidly, complainingly, murmur* at having to bear it, and it will weigh you down.

There is a joy in sorrows borne
Where the Saviour trod,
When the path of pain is worn
By the feet of God.
There is a rest when hour by hour
As the will obeys
Comes divine almighty power
Failing strength to raise.

Let those who have burdens to bear—and who is free?—pray for more faith, more love, more hearty will to submit to His will, more entire readiness to say, "not my will but Thine!" and He will give you rest—rest here in this life, rest when weighed down with work and care and weariness, rest when tried sore with heaviest grief and deepest sorrow; rest to the heart when even tears bring no relief and sleep no forgetfulness; rest when what seems a dark impenetrable cloud seems to have risen between you and all that was bright in the world. Rest and light. Rest when hope seems dead because He your loving Father still, has sent you the message so hard for human heart to bear: "I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke." Rest and light and peace; rest here in this life, and in the life beyond. Who can find words to express the rest, the peace, the victory, the glory.

Crowns for the valiant, to weary one rest,
God shall be All and in all ever blest.

St. Paul speaks in calm, sober words of sure confidence when he says, "to die is gain." Gain! to exchange the wearying strain of work for the reward of work well done—the watch and fight with sin—for the peace and rest of righteousness—while he looks forward to the resurrection as the time of coronation. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day."

It can hardly be but that the thoughts of many have taken throughout the week that is past something of the direction which is emphasized to us in this second lesson for to-day. You know how frequently from this place I have urged the wisdom of accepting the lessons of each day as the Word's teaching in His own school.

One has been gathered to rest; one whom we all knew and all esteemed. The better he was known the more he was loved. I shrink from saying much, lest personal esteem and affection—extending over many years—tempt me into exaggerated expression. Will it not be enough in this church, and in this congregation, where, and amongst whom, he has worshipped for so long, to remind you of the honorable and straightforward man of business—of the citizen always ready to advance the welfare and true interests of your city, at whatever cost of labor to himself, even when those most intimate with him knew how much he stood in need of rest—of the politician who sought no bye ends, but acted always straight and clear according to his convictions, ever ready to give time and thought and honest work when called on. To those who knew him best I need not, indeed, I could not, speak fully of his generous, ungrudging, unstinted, ever ready help to all in need. I do not think he knew it himself, for in such help he only counted the need, never the help. His loved ones, his own, must always hold in dearest memory the devoted husband, the affectionate father, the true and trusted friend. If in a few words I tried to express the unanimous judgment of all who knew him, I think I might say that Robert Dickinson was, in all the relations of life, the best loved man in New Westminster.

"Much must be borne which is hard to bear,
Much given away which it were sweet to keep,
God help us all who need indeed His care,
And yet we know The Shepherd loves his sheep."

For myself I would like to say that at a time when I was not a little cast down, troubled by many conflicting anxieties, it was a bright gleam of sunshine to see him kneel at the Lord's table on last Easter day, and how his his presence at St. Mary's, Sapperton, cheered me in my new work when he received from me what proved, I believe, his last communion. May we not hope that the "Comfortable Words" came home to him in power: "Come unto me all ye that travail and are heavy laden and I will refresh you, I will give you rest." His death was unexpected, but not on that account sudden in the sense of not finding him ready.

To all each day of life leads on to the day of death. How and when each is to go hence none but God can tell. Man is sure of one thing—that some time, some day he shall die, and the world with all its sorrows, all its joys, all its labors, all its cares, all its successes, all its failures, shall be left behind. Others must die, but is death appointed unto me? Shall the sounds of earth grow faint, while strange voices reach me from another world? Shall the spirit leave the body—helpless, still, dead? Shall friends think of me as gone, and my place know me no more forever? Yes! An end is coming to my life here, but not an end of me—not an end of what I shall do. I shall go on living and acting in a new state which shall not end.

Oh, let each and all strive to die to sin, to die in heart to all that harms the soul. Let Christ be our life now, and in the hour of death we shall fear no evil, for He shall be with us and in us. The lesson of the day is: "There remaineth a rest to the people of God." The lesson of the past week, and of every week and of every day and hour is: "Let us fear lest a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it," and again, "Let us labor to enter into that rest."

Almighty and Eternal God, teach me to live as one who must die; kill in me all that would kill my soul. May my life on earth prepare me for life with Thee; my work on earth for the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

POLICE COURT.

(Before T. C. Atkinson, P. M.)

Johnny McGee, a Thompson River Indian, deposited $5 for being drunk and incapable, and forfeited the same by non-appearance this morning.

Johnny, a Hydah Indian, for having an intoxicating liquor in his possession, was remanded one week for sentence.

John Grant, the man who supplied the liquor, was also remanded for a week.

Edward Lowell gave officer Terhune heaps of trouble in running him in yesterday. Lowell was drunk enough to bring out all the ugliness of his character, and before the stalwart officer took hold of him swore there were not three policemen in Westminster who could arrest him. In the police station he made a terrible disturbance. Fined $32.50 in all, on three charges.

This afternoon court sat again on a charge of assault perpetrated by Stickeen Charley upon John Anderson. It came out in evidence that Anderson had taken away Charley's kloochman and kept her as his kloochman. Jenny, the lady above-mentioned, was in court and looked very respectable. Charley was fined a dollar and costs.

Tommy, a Hydah Indian, who was with Charley when the assault occurred and kindly relieved Mr. Anderson of two shirts and a hat, was bound over to appear to-morrow to receive sentence. Mr. McTiernan told Charley if he would bring one of the tyees of his tribe he would get him his klooch again.

Daily British Columbian

Monday Evening, Nov. 11, 1889.

It would appear that the Governor-General during his tour through the Northwest was the recipient of an address, amongst the numerous documents of welcome, from the Mormons of the Northwest Territories. The address was kindly and loyal in its tone. It declared devotion to her majesty the Queen and good feeling for Lord Stanley. "Our prophet Joseph," it added, "hath discerned that of all the kingdoms of the world, the British principalities, by reason of their high integrity and their judicial purity, will be the last to fall; and it is for this reason, as well as from an affectionate admiration of her own womanly virtues, that we invoke the blessing of heaven upon the sovereign of these vast realms." His Excellency's answer to the Mormon deputation has been made public. The Governor-General, according to a report of the address-presenting ceremony, "replied very happily, heartily welcoming the Latter-Day Saints to Canada, saying that the country was free to all creeds, and to as many of their people as desired to come." An eastern cotemporary thinks, not altogether without reason, that there is considerable room for difference of opinion as to the advisability of throwing open the door and cordially inviting the Mormons to come in. If the Mormons are those of the non-polygamous sort, says our cotemporary, and if, in addition, they are peaceable and industrious, Canadians generally will not object to the hearty welcome extended them, or to the invitation offered to other Mormons to make this country their home. But it is pointed out that, although the Mormons in the Canadian Northwest have been officially reported to be all hard-working, non polygamous settlers, themselves denying that they are polygamous, it is to be questioned if they are not simply holding the obnoxious doctrine in abeyance till a convenient time arrives for putting it in practice. To judge from the frequent printed ebullitions of the irrepressible Maitland Stenhouse, whilom M.P. P. for Comox in this province, and now high-priest of the North west Mormon colony, he, at any rate, is determined to exercise the salient privilege of Mormonism and involve himself in a double knot. The latest proposal of the astute Stenhouse, who, it appears, is still a bachelor, is to take unto himself a plurality of wives at once and thus try and evade the technical objection of the law against bigamy. Maitland will evidently bear watching, and so, undoubtedly, will the entire colony of his co-religionists in the Northwest. If they can be prevented from transgressing the laws of the country in the direction to which they are most liable, the Mormons, with their industrious, hard-working habits, will be an acquisition to the Northwest. Judging, however, from the experience of our American neighbors with these people, they are far from being an unmitigated blessing to any country.

The Liberal-Unionists are just now discovering that, as an eminent statesman put it, "England does not love a coalition." Things are rapidly regaining the old equilibrium, and already, practically, the country is again Liberal and Tory. It is evident from recent speeches that both Lord Hartington and Mr. Chamberlain perceive, although they refuse to own it, that Liberal-Unionism is an unknown quantity, except on the floor of the House of Commons, and exists there only by reason of the Septennial Act, which permits a member to sit long after his constituents, have no further use for him. While the recent by-elections have emphatically shown that the opinion of the people is for Home Rule in Ireland, the Tory newspapers have begun to grumble ominously at the relative positions of the two wings of the Tory-Unionist army. Their complaint is not without reason. "Why," in effect say these prints, "why is it that our side (the Tories) have to bear all the blame? You Liberal-Unionists who are helping us by your votes should also share your responsibility by representation in the cabinet." But the seceders from the old flag are cunning as serpents, if not quite as harmless as doves, and hesitate before committing themselves so far. There may come a time, and before long, when questions of moment will open up, upon which all Liberals who have a shred of Liberalism left will be able to fight shoulder to shoulder, and should that day come, the men who have sheltered themselves in the fancied security of the Tory cabinet will find it well nigh impossible to do as they would wish. Just now the Liberal-Unionists appear to have proved the truth of the adage that "between two stools you are likely to come to the ground." Something, however, has to be done if these gentlemen are to continue in political life. Goschen has already chosen. He is in the Tory net, and will never be wanted again by thorough-going Liberals. Hartington is too good a man to be lost for ever to the Progressive Party, and it is unlikely he will so far commit himself as to take office in a Conservative cabinet. Chamberlain is the Judas of Liberalism, and the Radicasl, whom he has wantonly betrayed, will never trust him as they once did. He was once the grand young man of the Liberal hope; to day he is hated by the rank and file, distrusted by his late colleagues, and despised by the Tories, who, now they have no further use for him, are only anxious to see him shelved out of the way. It seems as though he perceives all this, for, like a libertine, one day all boisterous recklessness, the next depressed almost to madness, he first of all dreams of a great "National Party" (to be led by himself of course).

"When none are for a party,
But all are for the state;
When the rich man helps the poor
And the poor man loves the great"

And then the vision fades, and he talks of retirement. Poor Chamberlain! he seems to have lost his political balance ever since he was deprived of the support afforded by Sir Charles Dilke's skirt tails. It is a melancholy picture to see the man who once was the most advanced in the conquering Liberal host, now reduced to such pitiable plight that there are "none so poor to do him reverence."

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

The oldest medical work, an Egyptian papyrus dating from 1500 years or more before Christ, and containing prescriptions then old, has been translated by George Ebers, the German novelist.

A new botanical garden in the Alps of Valais is situated on a cone-shaped knoll about 200 feet high, at an altitude above sea-level of more than 5,600 feet. Plants from all the alpine regions of the globe will be cultivated.

Mr. C. R. Williams has pointed out a possible example of what evolutionists might term reversion to the fossil type of toed horses, Suetonius having recorded that "Cæsar made use of a remarkable horse, with feet almost human, and hoofs divided in the manner of toes."

The latest report states that twenty-one observatories are now engaged in the international undertaking of photographing the entire heavens. Each observatory will have to take about 700 photographs in the zone assigned to it, and it is hoped to finish the work in three or four years.

A Great Weapon.—The largest gun in existence has been sent by Messrs. Krupp to Cronstadt. It is of cast steel, weighs 235 tons, has a barrel 40 feet long, a diameter of 6½ feet in the largest part, and a bore of 13½ inches. Its range is over 11 miles, and it will fire two shots per minute, each shot costing from $1250 to $1500. In a trial of the war monster, the projectile—4 feet long and weighing 1800 pounds, and propelled by a charge of 700 pounds of powder—penetrated 19½ inches and went 1312 yards beyond the target.

Mental Capacity of Spiders.—Experiments on the mental powers of hundreds of spiders have been made by Messrs. G. W. and E. G. Peckham. Evidence was given that the faculty of smell is fairly developed in all but three out of twenty-six species, but the position of the organ of smell was not found and it is not known. Loud sounds were apparently unperceived; the Epeirids were sensitive to the sound of a tuning fork, while the spiders that do not make webs gave no heed to it. Love of offspring was mnnifested in all spiders by eagerness to receive black cocoons within twenty-four hours, though few recognized them after a longer period, and none seemed able to distinguish their own cocoons from another spider's or from pitch-balls of the same size. Sight appeared to be good, though from familiarity only through touch, cocoons were found with difficulty even when within three-fourths of an inch. The color-sense seemed fairly developed, with preference for red. The authors discredit the notion that spiders feign death, accepting Darwin's explanation that the habit of lying motionless has been acquired in different degrees to serve different purposes.

Compressed Air Power.—As the result of detailed investigations, Prof. A. B. W. Kennedy, F. R. S, reports that the compressed air transmission system in Paris is now being conducted on a large commercial scale in such fashion that a small motor four miles from the central station can indicate in round numbers 10 horse power for 20 indicated horse power at the station itself, allowing for coke used to heat the air, or for 25 indicated horse power if the air be not heated at all. Larger motors may work somewhat more, and smaller motors somewhat less, economically. The present compressing engines at the central station indicate more than 2000 horse power, but the plant is being greatly enlarged. Most of the air supplied is used for working motors, of which the great majority are more than two miles away, and of ½ to 50 horse power. A novel feature in the use of this power is that the exhaust can be made to supply ventillation and cooling. This is an important advantage for any large city, but in tropical countries—where cooling appliances are rather a necessity than a luxury—we might have the apparent paradox of a motor worked essentially for its exhaust, the work being a by-product and the cold air the principal thing.

FOR LIFE OR DEATH.

How a Cholera-Stricken Soldier Obtained a Drink in India.

I came to India in 185— as a private in the —th regiment and my company formed part of the garrison at Arcot, says a writer in Blackwood's Magazine. Life in barracks in India is very dull, and it was with great satisfaction that we heard an order had been given for our company to march to Vellore to strengthen the garrison there, which had been very much reduced by cholera.

It was then about the middle of March, and consequently later than is usual for moving troops, as the days begin to get very hot on the plains in the Carnatic about that time of the year. But ours was special duty, and, as we should only march in the very early morning, we did not fear the inconvenience of the mid-day heat.

It was on the second day after leaving Arcot that, late in the afternoon, I was listening to a description of Vellore by one of our fellows who had been there, when suddenly I felt spasms and sickness.

"Hollo! old fellow, how blue you look!" remarked a companion sitting next to me, and as he spoke my comrades shrank terror-stricken from me. It needed no doctor to tell what was the matter. The cholera had seized me!

I was hastily conveyed to the temporary hospital, where our assistant surgeon already had several cases of the disease under treatment, and I was laid on a charpoy. I rapidly passed from the first to the second stage of that malady, and by nine o'clock at night the incessant vomiting and purging had reduced me to a condition of weakness approaching insensibility. I was consumed by a burning, raging thirst, but the dresser disregarded all my entreaties for a drink of water. The system of treatment for cholera in those days allowed the patient nothing more than just to have the lips moistened occasionally with weak brandy and water, and this simply aggravated the torture of thirst. Nowadays champagne is given, and the sufferer is allowed to drink pretty freely.

The hospital was, of course, only a pandal, hastily constructed with palmyra-leaves, with a large cuscus-mat at the entrances at each end. Two large chatties of water were placed just outside each entrance.

I had begged, sworn and menaced at intervals, but no one paid the slightest heed to me, and I was sinking into that condition of torpor which is the immediate precursor of the third and fatal stage of cholera, when I heard voices in the pandal. The assistant surgeon was making his last round for the night, accompanied by the hospital-dresser. With a violent effort I roused myself, and eagerly listened for their approach. I wanted to hear my fate pronounced.

They stopped at length where I lay, and the doctor examined my body.

"Mottled," I heard him remark to the dresser; "he is insensible already, and will not last long. So Wetherall will make six!"

"Make six!" I said to myself; "make six what? Six corpses, of course, for burial at daylight to-morrow morning."

They had gone and the place was in darkness, save for the glimmer of a cocoanut-oil lamp. I heard the scratching of mumooties just outside, made by the camp-followers, who were digging a common grave for six of us.

I felt utterly stunned and quite indifferent as to my fate. My tongue was like a piece of dry leather in my mouth, which had long since ceased to yield any saliva to relieve the agonizing burning of my throat and palate. I could not have made any sound had I attempted to do so; but I did not try, for the attendants were all stretched on the ground fast asleep. I felt I was deserted—left to die.

I was beginning to wander, I think, and was back again in the bright, green, English meadows, picking daisies with my little sister, and so I should have passed away. But just at that moment, the coolies, who had finished digging the grave—my grave—passed the entrance of the pandal; and one of them threw a pannikinful of water on the matting screen.

It was like a galvanic shock to me. I resolved to have a drink at any risk. I had to die, so what matter if I hastened my death an hour or two by drinking cold water?

I tried to get up, but I was too weak to stand, and fell down at once. Then I reflected that I was more likely to be seen if I walked, and if detected in my attempt I should be brought back and perhaps be strapped down to die. So I tried to crawl. I was about ten minutes dragging myself from my cot to the entrance, and I wriggled under the screen.

There were the chatties before me!

The first I seized was empty, and the disappointment nearly made me swoon; but the second was brimful. I threw my arms around it and dragged myself to it. I plunged my head into the delicious, limpid water, and devoured, rather than drank, huge mouthfuls of the cool and heavenly fluid. I felt my stomach swelling with the enormous draughts I swallowed; but I laughed and drank again and again. I recked naught of life or death then.

At length I could drink no more, and then discipline asserted itself. I knew I had no right to be out there, and I thought if I were missed from my cot I should be reported. So I crept back the way I had come, and shortly after fell into a profound sleep.

It was broad daylight when I awoke and saw the assistant surgeon and dresser standing beside me.

"How is this?" asked the doctor; "Wetherell ought to have been dead!"

"Please, sir," said I, "I am feeling much better, and have no wish to make the sixth this morning."

"There were six without you," said the doctor, sadly.

I rapidly recovered; and as I had never indulged in the pernicious country arrack sold to soldiers out here, I was soon quite strong again. But it was some time before I told any one how I recovered from my attack of cholera. However, I told the doctor one day all about it; and though he said the cold water ought to have killed me, I observed the poor fellows who were in hospital with cholera got an extra allowance of water.

The Queer Profession Carved Out by an Enterprising English Woman.

Absolutely the latest importation from England established herself yesterday on Upper Broadway, says the New York Herald. She is a tall and rather hard-featured woman from Manchester, who displays the extraordinary sign on the door of her flat: "Disciplinarian of Children." Her sister established the particular "profession" which she follows in London nearly two years ago, and it is now transplanted to New York. The mothers and fathers of families will probably be able to judge whether the idea is worth encouraging or not.

"My sister," said the Manchester woman who has established herself here, "realizing that the majority of mothers love their children too much to punish them severely, conceived the idea of setting herself up as a public disciplinarian. She is a woman of great force of character and unerring judgment in all matters concerning children, and she had extensive experience as a visiting nurse before adopting her present business. It is her idea that children are more severely punished when they are frightened than through any physical means. To slap a child in the heat of passion while the child is excited and unruly does not have half as salutary an effect as the more mature and considered punishment in a dark wardrobe or sending the little one to bed without supper. Better than this is to threaten the child with a visit from the bugaboo. The dread of the arrival of this awful personage will act as an incentive to good conduct with the most fractious children in the world. My sister is a bugaboo, and that is about what I am. The fee in England for visiting a house and disciplining the children is two shillings. This involves medical advice drawn from the fund of considerable experience in the world, besides whatever suggestions the condition of things may naturally lead up to. Besides this part of my business I hope to teach, doctor and nurse the little ones. Of course there are points of antagonism between these different functions, but the effect is good upon the children."

MEN WITH LONG HAIR.

St. Paul held that it was a shame to a man to wear his hair long, and so he tells the Corinthians in his first epistle to them. On the other hand, Huychius, patriarch of Jerusalem, A. D. 600, declared the outward, visible signs of manly perfection to consist in an ample beard and in hair flowing down the shoulders. In remote ages the Persians, who now have their heads shaven, wore long hair. Darius had a most luxuriant poll, and Alexander, who conquered him, probably paid few visits to the hair-cutter's in the course of his life. Alcibiades and his clique of roues introduced the effeminate fashion of hair into Greece. Before their time the Athenians were roundheads, and it is fair to presume that Aristides the Just, who did not pride himself above measure on his devotion to the graces, sported a good crop of bristles and ignored a comb.

Herodotus relates that in token of mourning the Persians were wont to cut off not only their own hair but the manes of their horses. The same historian tells that the Ayrians, being defeated by the Lacedæmonians, made a sacrifice of their locks, and vowed that they would remain shorn as long as they had not reconquered Thyræ.

At Sparta, Lycurgus had decreed the wearing of long hair; but this law, to which Plutarch alludes, was never much obeyed. The Spartans, when they attained their sixteenth year, did as the young Athenians, and burned their hair upon the altar of either Diana or Mars. The fact is, all the barbarians who used to come from across the seas in those times wore flowing locks, and the Greeks had no wish to resemble them, says the Boston Traveller. Our primitive ancestors, the Britons, and like them, the Gauls, allowed their hair to grow undisturbed. It often reached below the waist, and men like Caractacus must have looked curious. Conquered by the Romans, the Gauls and Britons were ignominiously clipped. In his enumeration of the Gallic tribes led into captivity by Cæsar, Lucian speaks of the Liguses, "now shorn, but erewhile possessed of an abundant mass of hair." Those of the Gauls who obtained their liberation hastened to let their hair grow again; in order the more to mark the importance they attached to flowing locks they took to shaving their slaves.

In France when a nobleman was convicted of any felonious offense the razor was invariably applied to his pate. Clotaire I., King of France, caused his own son, Gondeband, to be shorn for conspiring against him; and, by way of adding to the disgrace of his sentence, he immediately afterward issued an edict condemning to the severest penalties any one who should by stealth or violence cut off the hair of an honest man. The hair question assumed disquieting proportions in France, for in the year 1201 Pierre Lombard, Archbishop of Paris (whose head left much to be desired in the matter of capillary adornment), was prevailed upon by the malcontents to become their champion. He was a learned and good man, and no doubt he had often pondered upon the unseemly appearance of his close-clipped crown in the silence of the closet, until he took up the cudgels like a man determined to win.

The King of France at that time was the gallant Philip II., generally known as Philip Augustus. After giving the matter his most attentive consideration he signed the magna charter of capillary liberty, at about the same time his royal compeer, John of England, was making a dismal face over the charter of Runnymede.

Generally speaking, the English follow the French in the matter of personal adornment, but in this case the English were beforehand. So early in the reign of Henry II. our plebeian forefathers had obtained exemption from the obligation of having their hair cut, and they obtained it without much ado.

We hear nothing more about short hair until the sixteenth century. From the time of Philip Augustus to that of Francis I. every one, lord or lumpkin, let his hair fall down his back.

Historians and chroniclers speak a great deal about oils and ointments that were used by the wealthy and noble of the middle ages, and it appears to have been a pretty prevalent custom to powder one's locks with gold dust.

Every one knows how long hair and short hair had a marked political significance during the war of Charles I. against the Pretender. It was no joke then to be caught with bristles in Prince Rupert's camp, and to have come with curling locks under Cromwell's eye would have been to run the risk of being sent, not to the hair, but to the headcutter's.

Charles II. brought back the fashion of long cavalier locks, but these were soon superseded by the towering wigs introduced by Louis XIV. He had a very poor head of hair, thin, lank, and of a dirty buff color, and his barber devised a most voluminous perique to meet the emergency. The fashion remained in use until the middle of Louis XIV.'s reign, when it gave way to the famous powdered wig. The great republic swept away the wigs and many of the heads that were in them. It was then that the pig-tail fashion came in for both high and low, and lasted long enough to be remembered by some men of the present day. Nopoleon I. mercilessly cut off the pigtails of his republican soldiers, and nearly caused a mutiny among the army of Egypt by so doing. Similarly, immense discontent was excited in the British navy when the Admiral abolished the pigtail some seventy years ago. So we come down to the present time, when we gratify our individual tastes in the matter of our heads of hair, unless, indeed, we are private soldiers or paupers or convicts, or are put into a reformatory, when, for the general good, we must yield to sanitary cropping laws.

Human Nature as Seen in One of New York's Large Caravansaries.

"Human nature, as seen in a big hotel, is rather envious, isn't it?" a New York Sun man queried of the day clerk as he leaned on the counter.

"Y-e-s," he slowly and dryly replied.

"For instance," the reporter continued, "I have a chandelier with five burners in my room, but three of the burners are plugged up and can't be lighted. The soap is cheap and poor, the looking-glass is cracked, the marble-topped stand is stained with ink and one leg of the lounge is broken. How's that for hotel nature?"

"My dear sir," he replied, as he paused for a moment from his work of pigeonholing the noon mail, "I was obliged to put you in a room just vacated by a Western merchant and his wife. He got drunk and broke the lounge and cracked the glass. She took away with her two towels and two cakes of fine soap. He is responsible for the ink-stains, and he stuffed two table napkins into his pocket and carried them off, and she broke a dollar pitcher and a seventy-cent pane of glass. We plugged up the burners because they lighted the whole five and went off to the theater. I think he carried off one of the keys to the door, and I know she cribbed a bouquet holder from the parlor. How's that for traveling human nature!"

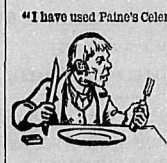
"Here are half a dozen telegrams and a score of letters from men who will call around in due season and inquire for them, or want them forwarded to points in Maine or Texas, and give me my trouble for the profits. And perhaps you'd like to buy some of these dozen worthless checks for ten cents on the dollar, or take some of the score of trunks in the store-room and settle the bills for which they are held. Oh, yes—oh, yes! This human nature is a big thing, and the longer you live the more you will be convinced that all the advantage is not on the hotel man's side."

The Builder and Wood-Worker remarks that many of the losses of fingers and hands sustained by operatives of small saws in factories could be obviated by following what is called the golden rule: "Never put your hand back of a running saw." The temptation to reach back to remove or straighten something is natural and difficult to resist. But a man can never afford to get careless around a saw or any cutting tool. Precautions against accidents could be taken to much greater extent than they are.

It Makes You Hungry



"I have used Paine's Celery Compound and it has had a salutary effect. It invigorated the system and I feel like a new man. It improves the appetite and facilitates digestion." J. T. COPELAND, Princus, S. C.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1888-89 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians, Recommended by Druggists, Endorsed by Ministers, Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. Dow, Burlington, Vt.

Paine's Celery Compound

is a unique tonic and appetizer. Pleasant to the taste, quick in its action, and without any injurious effect, it gives that rugged health which makes everything taste good. It cures Dyspepsia and kindred disorders. Physicians prescribe it. $1.00. Six for $5.00. Druggists.

The str. Princess Louise arrived from Victoria this morning with 25 passengers and 130 tons freight. She left on the return trip this afternoon on the arrival of the Pacific express.

The reception to Bishop Stillitoe, on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of his consecration as bishop of this diocese, will be held in the Opera House on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, instead of the Oddfellow's Hall as at first intended.

Bev. Mr. Hadden, of St. Paul's (R. E.) church, preached the funeral sermon last evening of Frank Emerson, the young man who met his death by the runaway accident last week. A large congregation listened to the impressive discourse delivered.

The Governor-General's reception on Saturday evening was very fairly attended considering the disagreeable weather and the hour at which it was held. About 100 people attended and were introduced to their excellencies. Shortly after 8 o'clock the train bearing the vice regal party, left for the east.

The Runaway Wife.

The above play as presented by the McKee Rankin Company at the Opera House Saturday night, was one of the best dramatic entertainments ever put on the stage in this city. Mr. McKee Rankin, as Arthur Eastman was powerful, his paroxysms of rage and despair, and passages of love and tenderness being as natural as life. The acting of Miss Mabel Bert, as Lady Alice, was most pleasing, and as an emotional and polished actress she is certainly in the front ranks. Miss Larena Atwood, as Lillian, did perfect justice to her part. She is both graceful and pretty, and has a freshness of manner that is quite satisfactory. Miss Wood, as Hester, was all that a terrible old woman could be expected to be. Mr. C. T. Arper, as Hon. Talbot Vane, was scarcely up to the mark, there being room in his part for much finer actiug than was displayed. Mr. Crosbie, as Dr. Prescott, was good, and so was Mr. Harry Sedley as Sir Launcelot Travers. The same may also be said of Mr. Chas. Wyngate who played the difficult role of Arthur Vere.

A Lively Meeting.

Yesterday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. rooms there was one of the liveliest meetings that ever occured there. Secretary Davie during the usual service rose and called for subscriptions for the benefit of the international committee. Dr. Kent, who was present, immediately rose and asked when the international committee and this association came into partnership. Before Mr. Davie could reply Dr. Kent began a very bitter tirade against the committee and the association, and accused Mr. Davie of being an imposter for trying to collect funds for the international committee. He said Mr. Davie was hired to do secular work, and finished up by saying the association was run by the Methodist church, and that Mr. Fisher or any other clergyman, had no right to be hired by the association to conduct the services during the week of prayer. Dr. Kent sat down amid a storm of hisses, and seizing his hat he got up and left the room. Outside he was met by Mr. Fraser, who spoke very plainly to him, and said such conduct had a worse effect on young men than the writings of "Tom Payne" or Bob Ingersoll. The service was conducted to the end after the departue of Dr. Kent, but there was considerable excitement throughout the meeting.

THE NOMINATIONS

Only Bring Two Candidates to the Front and Pass off Quietly.

The nomination of candidates for the election of a member to the provincial parliament, to fill the vacancy at present existing, caused by the elevation of Mr. Bole to the bench, took place to-day, and passed off very quietly. When the time for receiving nominations had expired, Mr. Chas. Warwick, government agent, read the following nominations: Gordon E. Corbould, barrister, proposed by Chas. McDonough, seconded by Henry Elliott and assented to by I. B. Fisher, Wm. McColl and L. F. Bonson. Thomas Cunningham, proposed by David McNair, seconded by Chas. J. Fagan, and assented to by Alex. Ewen, J. C. Armstrong and John Reid. A poll was called for the 25th inst., at the court house.

On motion Capt. Scoullar was called to the chair and requested the candidates to lay their views before the meeting.

Mr. Corbould was the first called on. He said it was his intention to call a public meeting at an early date, and would therefore present his views very shortly on this occasion. The first important question he considered was the re-distribution of seats. Victoria had four representatives in the house, while Westminster had only one. The time had come when this must be changed, not only for this city but for the whole district. It should be the duty of the member elected to see that the whole mainland was properly represented. Roads and bridges throughout the whole district were urgently needed, particularly a road to the North Arm and to Maple Ridge. The improvements of roads throughout the country cannot but prove beneficial to the city, consequently no effort should be left unturned to bring the roads into good condition. The time had come when Westminster should have a court house not only suitable to its present wants, but large enough to fill the requirements for some years to come. Westminster was an important city and should be at the head of the cities of the mainland. He felt certain the government could be induced to furnish the city with a proper court house in accordance with its importance. If elected, Mr. Corbould promised to urge the government for assistance to build a free traffic bridge across the Fraser at Westminster, which would open to our merchants the unrestricted trade of a large outlying farming district. He would contend for the usual government vote of $1,000 to the agricultural society on the mainland, should the island set up a society of its own. The fostering of industries, by government support, would also have his heartiest assistance. Concluding, Mr. Corbould said it had been rumored he had bought land in Vancouver; this was true, but he had sold over half of the property and every cent of the proceeds had been spent in Westminster and not one cent in Vancouver. He owned more land in Westminster than Mr. Cunningham, his residence was here, and that did not look like deserting the city. He hoped the contest would be conducted in a friendly spirit, and not give rise to hard feelings. Mr. Corbould was frequently interrupted by applause.

Mr. Cunningham was next called to the platform. He said his views had been laid before the public at a previous meeting. He would support the present government just so long as it does justice to this city and district, but his hand would never be raised against any measure he considered just and right. He had no interests, except a little land up the river, outside of Westminster; it was therefore easy to see he would work faithfully for this city if elected to the house. He had been working for several years to unite Westminster city and district, for they should be strong allies. He was for Westminster city and district first and always, the rest of the province had proven able to care for itself. As in the past he would urge the erection of a new court house commensurate with the wants of the city. New schools were badly required, and if elected he would insist upon the government giving our children the proper accommodations. Victoria and Vancouver were well supplied in this way, while the Westminster schools were fifty years behind the age. The question of a free traffic bridge across the Fraser he had supported in the past, and would work in the same direction in the future. He thought the government could be induced to give a liberal assistance to the proposed bridge. The roads generally throughout the district require much improvement, and new roads were required, particularly a trunk road through the centre of Lulu Island from the Gulf of Georgia to New Westminster. The Yale road also was sadly in need of repair, the settlers were suffering for want of good roads by which to get their produce to market, and if he was elected he would heartily support road improvements on a large scale. The time had arrived when a fruit canning and packing establishment was necessary in Westminster, or the fruit growers of British Columbia would suffer much loss Much canned fruit was imported and this might as well be supplied by home industry. If elected he would urge that a government bonus be given to the first fruit cannery. He would bring in a measure, if elected, to make the registration of voters compulsory on the part of either municipality or government. Mr. Cunningham concluded by saying he had the promotion of other industries in view, but which would be bad policy to make public at present. He wanted to go to parliament to strike heavy blows for Westminster, and would do so if elected. With Mr. Corbould he wished the contest to be friendly throughout. Mr. Cunningham was liberally applauded at the conclusion of his address.

After passing a vote of thanks to the chairman the meeting adjourned.

"Oh! My!"

When H. M. S. Amphion struck the sunken rock at 7 minutes to 12 o'clock on Wednesday noon, Lady Stanley, Lady Alice Stanley, Mrs Coville and Miss Lister were enjoying the comforts of the ward room. At the time the jar from striking was felt, Lady Stanley exclaimed "Oh! my!" a natural feminine expression. It was afterwards proposed by Lord Stanley to name the spot "Oh! my!" which was accordingly done. The ship was three-quarters of an hour near the spot, during which time Miss Lister took several photos with her camera.—Times.

COMMENDABLE.

All claims not consistent with the high character of Syrup of Figs are purposely avoided by the Cal. Fig Syrup Company. It acts gently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the system effectually, but it is not a cure-all and makes no pretensions that every bottle will not substantiate.

A Great Record.

The str. Active left Hastings mills, Vancouver, with the barque George in tow on Friday morning last at 11 o'clock and reached Esquimalt harbor at 9 o'clock the same evening; left for Westminster at 10 p.m. and reached this port at 5 a.m., making the run in seven hours. This is a record difficult to beat by any tug on the coast, but, of course, the Active is as fine and swift a vessel as any in the towing business.

The Amphion Accident.

The Times has received the following letter concerning the accident from Mr. Frederick Villiers, the noted war correspondent: "On reading the account of the accident to H. M. S. Amphion published Thursday morning in the Colonist, as I was an eye-witness of the accident I was much surprised to read "that confusion reigned" even for a moment "among the distinguished passengers." I have had the misfortune to be in other situations of the same kind, but never have I experienced such perfect coolness exhibited by passengers distinguished, or otherwise, as during yesterday's disaster. The behavior of the ladies of the vice-regal party, who exhibited the greatest calmness from the first moment of the accident and throughout the trying period when the waters were slowly but surely gaining upon us, was simply the admiration and talk of all on board. The Colonist reporter must have been ill-informed on that score, or more likely introduced into it a little 'local color.' He was also wrong regarding the site of the accident. This can be excused, for no doubt it was difficult when he visited the ship to get accurate information. When a rift through the fog showed us our danger a moment before we struck, I noticed we were running close in shore parallel to a precipitous height, which was afterwards found to be the Keelet bluff. Evidently the strong current at this point drove the vessel from the true course, which the density of the fog obscured. She seemed to have ripped her starboard side along the bluff. On looking back over the anxious period that followed, one thing seems to have brightened the dreary time and even to make the fog less dismal, and that was—the splendid discipline exhibited, the coolness of the captain and officers, and the steadiness of the men of H. M. S. Amphion."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Whom Should We Elect?

EDITOR COLUMBIAN.—Sir:—In deciding who should be returned to the provincial parliament by New Westminster city we should realize the general duties and necessary qualifications of such a member; secondly, who among us is available, most able and willing to subserve our interests.

The time has arrived in the history of New Westminster when she must assert herself politically in order to secure that influence and legislative favor which her rapidly increasing industries demand, and to accomplish this she must be represented by men who are not only zealously alive to the questions affecting her future interests, but who possess the ability to forward those interests, whose unyielding efforts and highest ambition will be ably directed in securing to this city in, part, at least, her long neglected wants and political rights, and whose ambition will be to make their public record, and not the position, a stepping stone to future preferment. This is a high and praiseworthy ambition, the only one that merits public favor, and when a candidate possesses it, I see no reason why his ambition should be maligned.

I believe Thomas Cunningham is such a man, and that he possesses traits of character, ability and ambition which peculiarly qualify him for a high and valuable service as our representative. His past efforts in the public service have stamped him as a man of political character, strong convictions, clear foresight, and decisive action. He has shown an untiring determined energy in pursuing to a successful issue the public measures he has undertaken. He has shown himself thoroughly and zealously alive to the interests of this community. His intimate acquaintance with public measures, and public men, his broad scope of knowledge on subjects which will arise in future, and which will affect both the former, will arm him with a power which must be felt in the interests of this community.

It is this vantage ground, the strong individuality of the man and his tenacity of purpose, which will force a hearing in New Westminster's interests and crown Mr. Cunningham's efforts with success when urging her claims as representative.

OBSERVER.

Still Unsquelched.

EDITOR COLUMBIAN.—Sir: I have purposely delayed a reply to the letters of Messrs. Major and Gamble which appeared in your issue of the 6th inst. till after the visit of the governor-general and party. I am sorry to be involved in this unpleasant and unprofitable controversy at all. It is unseemly at any time, but much more so would it be unwise to parade our differences while distinguished strangers are amongst us. I would prefer to suffer in silence than have unfavorable impressions carried away at the expense of this community. Now that the vice-regal party have gone, I feel it is due to my friends and myself to correct some statements contained in the letter above referred to. I would state, first, that I had no intention to deadbeat my election address, as Mr. Major insinuates. When I handed my letter to your city editor I distinctly stated that I desired the publishers of THE COLUMBIAN to charge for the space occupied at the usual rates. Mr. Glover will bear me out in this statement, and if you had not been advised of this, the fault is not mine. When I published my first card in Truth I made the same request. So there was no attempt whatever to deadbeat.

My first charge against the friends of Mr. Corbould was this: In circulating the requisition to that gentleman, they were misrepresenting facts and misleading my friends in stating that I had withdrawn in Mr. Corbould's favor. In proof of this I beg to submit the following statements from four gentlemen, either of whom is as much entitled to credence as either Mr. Major or Mr. Gamble; in fact, much more so, for these gentlemen have no schemes to foster or interests to boom at the expense of New Westminster; they are simply independent electors, and state as follows:

We the undersigned were persuaded to sign a requisition to Mr. Corbould by the friends of that gentleman, Messrs. Major and Gamble, assuring us that Mr. Cunningham had withdrawn in Mr. Corbould's favor.

I have no hesitation in stating that I was induced to sign Mr. Corbould's requisition by representations being made at the time that Mr. Cunningham had withdrawn in Mr. Corbould's favor.

(Signed): G. W. GILLEY.

Now, sir, I am sure that my contention is proven, and that I had just cause for charging Major and Gamble for doing that which any gentleman would consider discreditable. I used no harsher term; and having proved my case, I can afford to let the rest go.

Had I known that Mr. Major, in his eager haste to evolve his own political schemes, could so far forget himself as to bring along a VOLUNTEER witness to involve me in an endless controversy, I would have "fired" both of them much more unceremoniously than I did. Mr. Major declares that he did not seek a quarrel with me. Why did he, with his man Friday, seek me at all? Why did he intrude where he was not invited? His eager haste betrays his scheming, and, I may add, the whole management of the Corbould business, in first pushing out an innocent, inoffensive young man, then trying to use our late departed friend, and, finally, in bringing out Mr. Corbould, shows them up in no enviable light. The desperate straits to which they are reduced should open the people's eyes.

Yours Unsquelched,
THOMAS CUNNINGHAM.

Election Address.

To the Electors of New Westminster City:

GENTLEMEN:—As you are aware, I have, in reply to a very influentially signed requisition, come forward as a candidate for the representation of this city in the Legislature of the Province, and now beg most respectfully to solicit the vote and influence of every elector.

As New Westminster is the natural centre and distributing point of the district, it will be the duty of your representative to assist in every way within his power the efforts of the district members to secure the construction of the many public works, especially roads and bridges, which the great and growing importance of the district makes necessary. In this connection I would specially mention the roads needed to connect us with the North Arm and Maple Ridge settlements, and as I intend heartily to support and hope to work cordially with the Government, I trust that, if elected, I shall be able to render important services in this direction.

Within our own constituency several important matters in the same line will demand the special attention of your representative. A court house of the size and style suitable to the dimensions which our city will certainly attain in the near future must be erected during the coming year, and it will, in my opinion, be the duty of the Government to assist materially by subsidy in the construction of the free traffic bridge which must shortly connect us with the southern bank of the Fraser, as that bridge is certainly a work of provincial and not merely of local importance.

But the most important question is one of a different nature, and one, happily, in the treatment of which your representative will be largely favored by circumstances:—I allude to the redistribution of seats. The time has fully come when that question should be dealt with in a broad and general way. In any such redistribution of this question will affect our interests, representation by population must be made the basis of readjustment. It will be the duty of your representative to see that this city is given its full rights in this matter, and as the settlements for years to come, I pledge myself, if elected, to spare no effort to secure full justice to both city and district in this respect.

Should a division of the British Columbia Agricultural Association take place, it will be the duty of your representative to see that there is no reduction in the grant made to the association in aid of the Exhibition in this city; indeed, looking to the growing importance of the exhibitions, the Government should give favorable consideration to the question of increasing that grant.

The Government should, in my opinion, deed to the city all public lands within its limits not actually required for the use of the Government.

As the representative of a growing and progressive city, it would be my endeavor to watch every opportunity of attracting to New Westminster new industries and new means for the development of wealth; and to obtain for such any necessary assistance from the Government.

As this is the closing session of the present parliament, I need not detail my views as to general legislation; but there is one point which demands immediate attention. An act should be passed conferring upon every citizen the right to bring suit against the Government. As the law now stands the consent of the Government must be obtained before any such action can be brought and this confers upon the Government power that they should not possess.

With this brief expression of my views, and again soliciting your support, I am gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,
GORDON E. CORBOULD.
