VOLUME I. NUMBER 46. ENDERBY, B. C., MARCH 29, 1905. PRICE, $2 A YEAR

Enderby Doings

An effort is being made to organize a gun club in Enderby.

Chas. Hancock is expected home from Victoria this week.

Ira C. Jones is building a cottage on George street for Jas. Dagg.

The hills and roadsides are white with Mayflowers and yellow with Buttercups.

The masons are preparing to start work on the foundation for the Bell hotel block.

Painters are adding beauty to the scenery in the dining room of the Enderby hotel.

The construction crew to build the bridge over the river at Enderby has not yet shown up.

Barnes & Allen are building a handsome veranda to the Gaylord residence on Russell street.

The Kamloops Lumber Company continues to send out three cars of lumber every other day.

The household effects of C. C. Poyntz arrived this week and were taken to his country home.

A work train runs over the S. & O. on Sunday, to make up the loss of time when the Molasses was cold.

Miss Stoughton, professional nurse, has removed from Armstrong to Revelstoke, where she will locate.

A bed of crocuses in the garden of the Harvey home makes a walk up Belvedere street one worth taking.

A boy wanted. To learn printing. Must know enough to sweep the floor—clean. THE EDENOGRAPH office.

A splendid program has been prepared for the concert tonight by the Literary Society, in Orange hall, Bell block.

Joe Bradley has finished the walls of his two-story brick residence on George street and the roof is now being put on.

F. Pyman has added a handsome show case for the window to his jewelery store, and is installing a large jeweler's safe.

Sam. Ball returned to Enderby last week, accompanied by his brother, Wm. H. They are thinking of starting a butcher shop.

George Bell is building a southern wing to his residence on Cliff street. It will be two stories and designed to match the north wing.

C. W. Layton the past week received a high priced stereoscopic camera and has secured some excellent views of Enderby for the stereoscope.

The Haynes brothers are putting in a number of fruit trees and berry bushes on their homesteads in Mable Lake Valley; also a quantity of garden seeds.

A small black bear cub was brought into town on Monday by Big Louie and entertained the boys and girls in the carriage shed of Matthews & Evan's livery stable.

Graham Rosoman and family moved into town this week, after wintering in Mable Lake Valley. They occupy the cottage just finished by Ira C. Jones on Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Hendrickson is his name. He is tonsorial artist par excellence primus inter pares, or words to that effect, and manipulates the razor and hair-clippers at A. J. Young's barber shop.

The Enderby Trading Co. has protected its windows by hanging a huge awning the length of the store front. Wm. Hutchison supplied the iron work and J. C. English made and hung the awning.

Dan McLachlan of Trout Lake, spent a few days in Enderby this week. Dan is on a tour of the Valley. He is too canny to say much, but he doesn't try to hide the fact that he likes the Okanagan.

The local K. of P. lodge is rapidly gaining in membership. The charter will close on March 31st. At the meeting Monday night two firsts and a third were given, and seven applications received.

Jack Regan leaves this week for the East. He goes to Bruce, thence to Buffalo and New York, and thence across the main to the land o' the shamrock, where a bunch of wealth awaits him.

Geo. R. Lawes complains of the careless, mischievous cutting of foliage and trees on his hill property, and calls attention to the law respecting the same which makes the offense punishable by a fine of $25.

W. E. Truesdale went to Sicamous last Thursday to meet an excursion of land seekers from the East. They were ticketed for the lower valley points and looked out of the car windows at Enderby.

Wm. H. Hutchison has had the front of the furniture store finished up. Jas. Jarrett doing the work in his customary up-to-date style. Jas. R. Linton and his painters are putting on the finishing touches.

The revenue of the Enderby postoffice last year was $1,053, more than three times that of the year previous. Postmaster Harvey has prepared to meet the requirements of the increasing business, in providing Enderby with as convenient a little postoffice as there is in the province.

Constable Gardom is receiving well-merited praise for the strong case he worked up against Flood and Pollard. He followed the culprits closely and let drop nothing in the way of evidence to place the guilty.

In the shooting scrape of a fortnight ago, a stray bullet put a hole through the ear of one of the mill-fed hogs of the Columbia Flouring Mills. This is the kind of evidence that the lawyers refer to as "irregular, irrelevant and immaterial"—it's in a pig's ear.

A. E. Taylor, of New Denver, will be the manager of the Bank of Montreal at Enderby. P. DuMoulin, of Nelson, will handle the branch at Kelowna. Mr. Cornwall, of Victoria, succeeds Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Du Moulin will be succeeded by H. G. Fisher of Greenwood branch.

Jas. Jarrett has the contract for setting up the bank fixtures in the Wright block and will soon have them ready for the oilers. The fixtures are all of cedar, made at the Vernon sash and door factory, and when set up and hard-finished will make the interior look like the Bank of England in levant covers.

Major Jas. Sheppard, who will address the Farmer's Institute meeting at Enderby on Saturday, April 8th, is an authority on fruit trees, with long experience in fruit growing and vegetable culture. Mr. Wianks, who accompanies him, is an authority on dairying. These Institute lectures are meant to be of vast benefit to the fruit grower and dairyman, and should be attended by all who wish to learn.

Matthews & Evans moved into their new livery block the past week. It is 30x93 feet and is fitted up with all the latest improvements. Its stall capacity is 14 singles and 6 doubles, with robe and saddle rooms, carriage room and feed bins. Messrs. Matthews & Evans are always on hand when a rig is wanted or a team is to be taken care of, and because they are their livery business is very satisfactory.

Constable Gardom took the prisoners, Flood and Pollard, to Kamloops last Wednesday to await trial at the May assizes in Vernon. Pollard badly implicated himself in his testimony at the preliminary hearing, and Flood testified that he and Pollard had used Pollard's gun Saturday afternoon, and that Pollard was in the room when he took Pollard's gun and his own from the trunk and placed Pollard's in his inside coat pocket and his own in his hip pocket, just before the shooting took place.

The city election went off quietly. The hotel bar was closed, and by close attention to business, the voters managed everyone of them to vote between the hours of opening and closing the polls. The following were elected: Geo. Bell, mayor: J. W. Evans, Geo. R. Sharpe, R. P. Bradley, E. T. Smith, N. H. Kenney, aldermen. A meeting of the council was held on Saturday, but no business was done beyond fulfilling the requirements of the law, and calling for tenders for the position of city clerk and tax collector.

As regards holding the local show, it is felt that we cannot afford to drop it. It is always a hard matter to start a thing of this kind. There are some who say it will not pay, and others will tell you that people will not take enough interest in the show to make it a success. At the present time, when the residents of the district are awakened to the fact that neither contention is correct, and there is talk of putting up an exhibition building, it would probably prove disastrous to drop it for a year.—Armstrong Advertiser.

For Sale: Nine-year-old work-horse; splendid worker and in good condition; weight about 1300. Apply to S. Waby, Enderby.

FOR SALE. 100 acres, adjoining the railway station, and 40 head of cattle. Part cash, time on balance. Apply to H. C. Fraser, Salmon Arm, B. C.

Two good milch cows for sale. Apply to S. Teece, Enderby.

20 Feet of Coal

Judging from all indications at the Enderby coal mines, the Okanagan Valley will soon have a cheaper fuel than wood at $3 a cord. At the bunk house the men use the coal for cooking and heating, burning it in an ordinary wood stove. Last week we were invited to toast our chins at the first coal fire made in Enderby with Enderby coal. It was in an open, straight front wood heater, but the coal gave a clear, hot blaze, and left no cinders.

This week the men cut through the coal seam at thirty feet below the surface exposure and find at this level the coal seam is twenty feet thick, with three 3-inch layers of fire-clay running with it. Work has temporarily stopped to await the arrival of the company's expert to map out future operations. He will be here in about a week.

The company is not in a position to make any statement as to its plans until the expert's report has been considered. It is believed, however, that one does not have to look far into the future to see a long string of coke ovens burning near Enderby, and the big mines in the Similkameen district supplied with fuel taken from the Enderby coal fields. There is every probability that the C. P. R. will start work this year on the proposed line to Hedley through the Lower Okanagan. This will bring the coal pit within one day's travel of the Nickle Plate.

Co-Operation in Farming

At the last meeting of the Farmers' Central Institute the most practical resolution passed by that body, says the Victoria Colonist, dealt with the subject of co operation among farmers. This is something which has been talked about for some years, and is discussed in an academic way in the reports of the Department of Agriculture; but with little practical result so far. Efforts are now being made to give tangible effect to the views expressed.

The only feature of co-operation which has been successful in Canada is that of dairy. In this respect, farmers were driven to co-operation. For instance, in the making of cheese it was necessary for a number of farmers to unite in order to obtain the necessary plant and to manufacture on a scale which would adequately supply the market. In the same way creameries have developed and thus the dairy exports of Canada have become a substantial feature of its trade.

A movement is now on foot to extend the system to fruit-growing, and undoubtedly the application of the principle to the industry will lead to as good results as were obtained in dairying.

In British Columbia, the field for co-operation in agricultural pursuits is a wide and promising one. Both the dairying and fruit-growing industries are rapidly expanding and industrial progress has reached that stage where co-operation is practically a necessity.

MARA NEWS.

The Rothesay Lumber Co.'s mill is now running full swing, and is turning out a splendid grade of lumber. About 20 men are employed in the mill.

Local farmers are now busy with their Spring plowing; also setting out fruit trees, of which some large shipments have been received.

The 17th of March was celebrated by a dance, at which a very pleasant time was spent.

Mrs. H. B. James, of Enderby, is visiting at the home of her mother, Mrs. Cadden, for a few days.

Jas. Kelly, who has been residing here for some months, left on Friday for Nelson.

B. Rosoman and wife are leaving shortly to permanently reside on their ranch, about five miles from here.

Kelowna's Growth

The past year has undoubtedly been the most successful in the history of Kelowna, says the Clarion. Not only has the town and district come before the public as never before, but its material prosperity has been unprecedented. Two large ranches in the hands of the Kelowna Land and Orchard Co. and the Okanagan Fruit and Land Co., have been split up and placed on the market, with the result that large numbers of settlers have been attracted from the East and have located either in town or in the vicinity. Over forty buildings, exclusive of stables and other outhouses, have been added during the year.

PONY FOR SALE. Broken both to saddle and harness. Gentle—has been handled by ladies and children. Reasonable price. Graham Rosoman, Enderby.

An Island Park

The suggestion dealt with at some length in these columns last week by "Citizen," is worthy of earnest consideration by every citizen who has the welfare of Enderby at heart. If the proposition to make use of the Western island is at all feasible it would be the cheapest, and, under the circumstances, perhaps the best, recreation ground that Enderby could get. And there are many who believe the scheme is feasible. Let us repeat what "Citizen" said: "The western island is not, like the eastern one, flooded at high water, but is at all times high and dry. It is near the mainland, and access to it could be arranged for very easily and inexpensively. This island, either a part of it or the whole, would make an ideal sports ground and public park, where we could hold our annual celebration, where foot-ball, etc., could be played, and where the ladies could walk with their baby carriages in the afternoons.

"But," we are told, "you could never get it; the government throws the greatest difficulties in the way of the alienation of 'Indian lands.'" Very true; but this would not be alienated. It would still remain Indian reservation."

"Citizen" has resided at Enderby many years and can speak with authority. If, as he states, the Western island does not overflow, a better site for a park and recreation ground could not be found, provided the Indians would allow it to be used for that purpose. No one is in a position to say whether it could or could not be so used, until an effort has been made to get it. At present it is useless to anyone. The Indians do not use it and will not, and the whiteman cannot. Perhaps nobody has set foot on it in years, and yet it is only a stone's throw from the railway track on this side of the river. There are many excellent reasons why some effort should be made to make use of this island.

Valley Songster

By The Mountaineer. March 4, 1905.

As the coral rays of sunshine glinted o'er the mountain side,
And the southern zephyr 's warning of the coming young spring tide,
The Blue Bird and the Red Breast trilled a chorus of their glee,
To announce their joyful presence on Mount Ida's sunny lea.

You look weary, worn and tired, after journeying from afar,
Yet your soft, contagious love notes so sweetly fill the air
That we cannot help but love you, so a grateful welcome deign,
As to joyous days of childhood you bring us back again.

The happiest of our lifetime, brave and hopeful, strong and true,
Our air-castles and ambitions of the future calmly view,
So blissful in our ignorance of the struggle, cruel, keen,
Awaiting on the journey farther on—ordained unseen.

For this, ethereal minstrels, alone to you we owe
A heart of tender sympathies, and to you let them flow;
Timid little sunbeams, still flutter 'round our homes,
Bring music, peace and beauty with your voice and gaudy plumes.

Flit and flutter 'round the tree-tops, on the fence and on the eave,
Sing a carol to the morning, and another ere you leave
The lofty tree-top for your bower, when the sun has dropped from view;
Enchanting, little warbler, is the plaint of your adieu.

SPALLUMCHEEN FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

THE regular Spring meetings will be held at Enderby, Saturday, April 8, Armstrong, Monday, April 10, and Mara, Tuesday, April 11.

WE'RE OFF!

Quietly, and without any friction, our first mayor and set of aldermen were elected Wednesday last. The property owners desired an election by ballot and they had it, though it made no material difference in the final result, as was forseen from the start. The result of the ballot was in support of the committee's selection, so far as the men stood for election. Mr. Lawes withdrew from the original slate to run for mayor, and Mr. Hancock withdrew for reasons quite apart from any personal feeling in the matter.

These men were the choice from the first, for aldermen, and would surely have been elected had they stood. The council is made up of good aldermanic timber, and with Geo. Bell in the mayor's seat, there need not be any difficulty in safely riding the little squalls that must occasionally sweep over the civic sea.

The mayor and aldermen are now our "city dads." Upon them will fall the brunt of all incorporation troubles. Let us give them our solid, undivided support. There is work to do to make Enderby the commercial centre of the Valley. Already it has been remarked by a business man who knows the Valley from end to end, that at Enderby more capital is centering than at any other point in the Okanagan,—having reference to the wealthy men operating the Kamloops Lumber Co., and the Enderby Coal Mines.

Enderby's growing time is just commencing. In another year it will have got in position to do something for itself in the way of public improvements.

ARE YOU CLEARING?

Little more than a year ago, J. B. Gaylord built the cottage now the property of H. Worthington. It was the first building to be erected in Enderby in eight years. Since then the population of the town has more than doubled.

So much for the town. Can we say as much for the country about Enderby? In one sense, yes; in another, no. The population of the country has rapidly increased, but the improvements have been slower. And yet, they have been rapid, too, considering the amount of work to be done. Turn which way you will and you will see a new clearing in the woods, and acres of ground newly brought under the plow, and planted in fruit trees. But there is much yet remains to be done, and it will require long, steady hard work to do it. It will pay to do it.

Just now Enderby district is up against a hard proposition. It has not enough cleared land on the market. Buyers go to the south end of the Valley and pay $200 an acre for land that is cleared, and yet which is not so good as that at Enderby. The land can be cleared for $50 an acre, and can be purchased at from $20 to $50. So it can readily be seen that better opportunities are open to the buyer here than there. Yet it is difficult to make men see this. The time will come, however, when they will see it. Then Enderby district will get the attention it deserves.

WHAT'S THE USE?

The Armstrong Advertiser tritely asks: "What is the use of making grand displays of fruit in the great centres of the Northwest, if prospective purchasers from those districts find, when they arrive here, only a few scabby, uncolored and undersized apples displayed in the home stores?"

It has been said that "we must go away from home to get the news." In the Okanagan we paraphrase that familiar quotation. Here we say, "we must go away from home to get the apples." There isn't a town in the Kootenays where one cannot find better Okanagan apples on the market than can be found here. Indeed, there isn't much in the way of fruit and vegetables of any kind that cannot be bought in the mining camps of the Slocan, of a better quality and quite as cheap as the same can be bought here.

THOSE SCHOOL CLAUSES

The Vancouver World says of Sir Wilfrid's educational clauses, which he proposes to incorporate in his Northwest autonomy bill: "These clauses it seems, are merely intended to perpetuate the present dual school system of Alberta and Saskatchewan, re-enacting, as they do, the legislation of 1875. The most objectionable feature of the original draft bill (that section providing a landed endowment for the separate schools) has been entirely eliminated; and to this extent the bill is improved. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that the measure in its present form will probably go through the house with the concurrence of both government and opposition we feel that our original position was the correct one, and that no educational clauses whatever should have been embodied in the autonomy act. Canada's constitution had already provided all the necessary safeguards for the interests of those supporting the minority schools; and, automatically, the provisions of the B. N. A. act would have corrected matters were an injustice to this minority threatened at any time. Consequently, there is no pressing need for the re-opening of a question that is bound to precipitate vexed strife every time it enters the public arena."

With The Owl

HANK BEKLAW IN THE DARK WOODS.

WHAT is this passion we are pleased to call jealousy? May it be anything more than the germ of ignorance nursed in an atmosphere of lust? Ignorance surely, and lust beyond a doubt. None but a fool would allow it to grow in the heart. It unfits a man for any place except a prison cell or an insane asylum, because it burns out his heart and consumes his reason, and leaves only the brute. What consumate idiotcy it is to attempt to pardon, condone, excuse this consuming passion! As if it were a natural, a commendable thing for a man or a woman to "be jealous"! Someone has even gone so far as to say that where there is no jealousy there is no love! No love of a kind, perhaps, we will admit—no sentimental dribble—but where there is jealousy there can be no real love. The proof of the plum duff is in the eating. If you want to try it, get jealous.

The man or woman does not live that is good enough, or bad enough, or pretty enough for another man or woman to get jealous about. I know, the Good Book says God is a jealous God, but I don't believe it,—i. e. in the manner in which jealousy is generally understood. If he were St. Peter would better change the reading of the sign board to: "This way to hell," for jealousy is war in the heart instead of in Manchuria.

We do not keep a medical expert in this department to give advice, and you can take this for what it is worth, but the best cure our medical advisor would prescribe for jealousy is a strong physic, and a reasonable amount of horse sense taken at regular intervals in the sunshine, with one of the opposite sex if convenient.

Jealousy turns the soul into clabber; the heart into green cheese, and the head into sour dough.

George Verney's Pictures

By DOROTHY MAYNARD.

SOME 12 months after the purchase by Henry Bellamy of young Verney's picture, "The Worship of Bacchus," the artist had been asked to dine at the banker's house and had met Grace Bellamy. That first meeting, in which the sympathy of the two young people was instantaneous, was the prelude to many others—to duets sung in the twilight, to long discussions upon art and pictures, and, finally, to a question and answer.

In the conservatory, under the fronds of a white feralike palm, George Verney had spoken, in accents which trembled in spite of his effort to control them, of his love, and with one quick, crimson flush from neck to brow, one look of trust and love from the beautiful blue eyes, Grace Bellamy's fair head had nestled to the young painter's shoulder, and their lips had met in one long lovers' kiss. Ten min*utes later George Verney left the* house after a short but stormy interview with his love's father.

"I have other views for my daughter, Verney," Henry Bellamy said, firmly, but not unkindly, "and it will be better for you not to visit her again until she marries."

For some time after this there was almost a quarrel between the banker and the daughter, whom he loved so passionately. For many days the girl, who had never known what it was to have a single wish ungratified, treated her father as a harsh and cruel tyrant, and refused almost to speak to him. Then, one afternoon, she had apparently thrown off her sense of injury, had conversed with him on topics which interested both of them, and had, he thought, with pleasure, forgotten Verney. He was mistaken. She had married him. For many months they kept their secret well, and the married lovers met by stealth, without the knowledge of the banker. One day Mrs. Verney left his house, went to her husband once for all, and wrote to tell her father that she had done so.

Four years later Grace Verney died at Perugia of typhoid fever, and the young painter was left alone in the world with one little girl to remind him constantly of the sweet companionship which he had lost so soon. During the four short years of that sweet intercourse George Verney had worked but little, and his work had not been good. The pictures he had painted, three in number, had all been purchased by a New Yorker.

After his young wife died, Verney worked hard and almost desperately. He sold his work to a dealer, and this man alone of all the art world knew that the real buyer of George Verney's work was Bellamy, the banker. The dealer thought, as Verney himself might have perhaps believed, if he had known the purchaser's identity, that the pictures were bought up by Bellamy, not so much as an investment, as for the purpose of providing his little grandchild with the necessaries of life; but even so, it came as a surprise to picture-lovers when Bellamy one day threw open his gallery to the public for an hour or two a week, and it was found that George Verney's pictures, with the exception of the three inferior works which had been bought by the New York collector, were all upon its walls. Then came the reconciliation. How the two men had met nobody knew, but meet they did, and it was a great surprise to all who knew the stern, unbending character of Henry Bellamy when he took George Verney and his little daughter into the great, lonely house, and to all intents and purposes made a son of him.

Ease and comfort, unfortunately, were not good for the young artist. Never a strong character, the actual need of work had spurred him to great effort, and the double necessity of providing for his little girl and of working to forget his sorrow had urged him to paint.

After his return, however, his work fell off considerably. The few pictures which he produced while he was living at his father-in-law's were good in their way, but they lacked the vigor of his earlier efforts, and one after another he destroyed them. "I want," he said to Bellamy, one day, when the old man had asked him, with that grim smile of his, why he destroyed work that, although below the standard of his best, he could undoubtedly have sold, "I want the name of little Gracie's father to be remembered only for his finest work. I shall never paint again as I have painted, that I know, but until I can do something worthy to rank with what I have already done, I shall destroy my pictures." Then illness came. George Verney grew languid and dispirited, and gradually, although the doctor could put no specific name to his disease, sank into a decline.

Before the last great weakness grew upon him he had painted one great picture. It was a portrait of his dead wife as she had been in the days of her joyous girlhood. The day after it was finished George Verney took to his bed, and the doctors warned Mr. Bellamy that his son-in-law's last day was drawing near.

A few days later, while Henry Bellamy sat by the bedside of the dying man, a telegram was brought to him. He read the few words it contained, and held it crumpled in his hand a moment.

"George," he said, "the doctors tell me you are sinking. Would you like, while you have yet the strength, to take one last look at your pictures?"

"Ah, if I could," gasped the dying man.

"You can. I have bought them all. that is, excepting three—the three which you would destroy if you could as not being worthy of your gift. They are in New York."

"How—how can I thank you?" murmured Verney, the hot tears rolling down his cheeks.

"Do not thank me. Summon up all your strength for this afternoon, and we will have you carried on a couch into the gallery," and Henry Bellamy went from the room smiling. It was an ugly smile to see if any one had seen it.

That afternoon the dying man was carried carefully into the long picture gallery, and feasted his eyes upon the lifework which would soon be all that would be left to little Gracie of her father. Again he turned to Bellamy to thank him. It was a wondrous thing, this gift of forgiveness, the sick man thought.

In taking Grace Bellamy from her father's house, as he had done, George Verney felt that he had caused the rich man bitter sorrow, and knew that he had done him grievous wrong, for father and daughter had never met again. "Sir," he said, "how can I thank—" But the last word faltered on his lips as he saw the old man's face, for he had *never seen so diabolical a look be*fore.

"Thank?" answered the millionaire, with bitter emphasis. "Do you think the milk of human kindness urged me to buy your pictures from you, to take you into my house and pamper you when you were ill? Remember the words you spoke to me before I turned you from my door Before you enticed my daughter from her father's house, you told that father, proudly, and with head erect, that there was one thing his money could not buy—your name!' Well, I have bought it. Read that. And Verney read a telegram from New York with the words: "Accept Hoskins."

"I do not understand," he said.

"I will explain. Here, as you see, I have all your pictures. They are good. I know that. But you have painted three of which you are ashamed. Those three I have just bought from Hoskins, paying more for them than the best here cost me. Why, do you think? For my revenge."

"Revenge?

"Yes. On the day you die every one of these canvases of which you are so proud will be cut from its frame and burned, even that last one. They shall perish as you taught my daughter's love for me to perish. Few people, or comparatively few, know of your work except by hearsay. After your death the world shall judge of it—by those three daubs which I have bought from Hoskins at ten times their value."

The dying man, white to the lips, looked up at his tormentor in speechless agony. Was this to be the end? After his years of toil, after the hopes, which he had formed that his little Gracie should go into the world armed not only with her mother's, or rather grandfather's, millions, but also with the name which he, her father, would bequeath to her, was that name to be a laughing stock to the artistic world? The thing was too diabolically cruel. He could not believe it. And yet he slowly realized that Henry Bellamy, in acting thus, was taking a revenge which was an almost just one. He, George Verney, had taken the daughter from the father. The grandfather would take the daughter from her father, too.

"Good night," said the old man, turning on his heel. "I will send the servants up to carry you down to bed again."

Just then a patter of toddling footsteps came down the long gallery, and little Gracie, blue-eyed and golden-haired as her mother had been, toddled towards them on her unsteady feet.

"Kiss Gracie," she demanded, imperiously, holding up her rosy mouth to the stern old man. "Now kiss father," she added. Bellamy drew a step away from the couch, and the lines round his mouth tightened. "No, dear, men never kiss," he said.

"But, gran'pa, G'acie will be naughty if you don't," the child insisted.

"What do you mean?" my child?"

"Before mamma went away to the garden"—it was thus that George Verney had described his wife's burial to her little daughter—"she took me into her arms in bed, and said that I was to make you kiss papa for her sake, when we came to see you. Papa didn't want to promise, but she made him, too, and I—I forgot it till this afternoon, when Nursie said it would be too late soon." And though she did not understand what she was saying the blue eyes filled with tears.

Henry Bellamy answered no word. He placed the child down beside her father and gazed at them and at his daughter's portrait overhead.

"Is she not like—her, sir?" said Verney, brokenly.

The stern old man burst into uncontrollable sobbing, and clasped the wasted hand convulsively.

"This time, sir, I may thank you?"

A kiss to Gracie was the only answer.—Chicago Tribune.

WITH HANK REKLAW

Pull out the plug of selfishness and let the Sonlight in.

No, no; you won't find God by looking for Him where there is not any work to do.

It is spiritual death to put one's trust in established rules of worship, and neglect the simple life.

Many a man sets up his ideal and wins it after years of passionate toil; then he finds it is only a woman.

If religion is not a matter of individual inspiration then it is worse than nothing. Dogmatic belief is imprisonment of the soul.

Better to love your neighbor, and show that you love him by being kind, than to prate about his weaknesses and condemn his evil practices.

How in the name of reason do you expect to see God if you don't see Him in and through your fellow man, who was made in the image of God.

How many flower gardens are being planted in Enderby? Here is a chance to do some practical work—work that will lift the soul out of the weeds of contention into the realm of Love.

Pile up your gold, hang your draperies, spread your Brussels, and lay your beds of roses, but if to accept it one must be deprived of the privilege to think and to express his thoughts he were better dead.

How many of the church grounds in Enderby lift up their voices in praise to God? Preaching and praising one day a week within the church walls is good. But the voice of flowers planted without the walls would turn more hearts in praise to the Master.

Spinoza was a man so modest, patient, kind and free from all petty whim and prejudice that he was not willing to trade upon the priestly "law" of his day. And because he left the church the priests cursed him. Here is the document: "By the sentence of the angels, by the decree of the saints, we anathematize, cut off, curse, and execrate Baruch Spinoza, in the presence of these sacred books with the six hundred and thirteen precepts which are written therein, with the anathema wherewith Joshua anathematized Jericho; with the cursing wherewith Elisha cursed the children; and with all the cursings which are written in the Book of the Law; cursed be he by day, and cursed by night; cursed when he lieth down, and cursed when he riseth up; cursed when he goeth out, and cursed when he cometh in; the Lord pardon him never; the wrath and fury of the Lord burn upon this man, and bring upon him all the curses which are written in the Book of the Law. The Lord blot out his name under heaven. The Lord set him apart for destruction from all the tribes of Israel, with all the curses of the firmament which are written in the Book of the Law. There shall no one speak to him, no man write to him, no man show him any kindness, no man stay under the same roof with him, no man come nigh him." What a tender-hearted, lovable lot of guys those saintly priests were!

If "Made in Canada" is a good motto for Canada, then "Made in Enderby" should be a good motto for Enderby.

Worthily Commended

We congratulate the McBride government on the course they took in turning down the demand of the Grand Trunk Pacific for a land grant for the section through this province. The next thing for the government to do is to cancel the charter which the Grand Trunk has already purchased if the British Columbia section of the road is not commenced within reasonable time. The people, through the government, have the cinch, and in view of what has already been attempted, the government should not hesitate to exercise it when necessary to protect the public interest, and they will find the people will back them up in that course.—Kootenay Mail.

Bravo, McBride! All honor to him and his government, who sent Mr. Morse, the minion of the Israelitish mendicant G. T. P. back home, empty handed and with a flea in his ear. It is still up to Senator Templeman and Minister Prefontaine to square themselves with the people of British Columbia for the representations made last fall.—Hedley Gazette.

The latest stand for high principles is that which has just been announced in connection with the attempted hold-up of the province by the G. T. P. Strong influences have been brought to bear to force the Government into compliance with the unjustifiable demand for a land grant, but Mr. McBride has stood firm, the company's agents have been dismissed eastward, and British Columbians everywhere are congratulating themselves that principle has proved stronger than mere business expediency.—Vernon News.

My Prayer and My Confession

Prayer.

Lead me blessed Jesus
Through this dark vale of tears,
Vanquish my enemies,
Banish all my fears.
Fill me with Thy wisdom,
That I may ever be
Wise unto salvation,
Wise to follow Thee;
Ready e'er to journey
O'er mountain, moor and sea,
Bearing Paul-like witness
In sincerity.

Confession.

Sometimes my heart is wayward
And selfish, and inclined
To murmur, and be fretful,
And tarry far behind;
'Tis then, O blessed Jesus,
Thy face I need to see,
That Peter-like, and contrite,
I may weep my way to Thee.

RAILWAYS TO BUILD

According to advices from Princeton two great railway companies, the Great Northern and the C. P. R., are engaged in high strategy in the Similkameen and Lower Okanagan. There is reason to believe that the Great Northern will resume construction this spring in the Boundary as well as west from Midway towards the Similkameen and the coast. On the other hand the C. P. R. has had its engineers in the field and there is ground for the presumption that as soon as the Great Northern rails begin to stretch westward the C. P. R. will push eastward from Spence's Bridge, in which event a most exciting track-laying contest will be witnessed in this section.

Chief Engineer Kennedy of the V. V. & E. R., and three engineers have been busy at Midway since Tuesday week "tieing up the loop" connecting the Curlew-Midway section with the survey extending up Boundary creek to the smelters and Greenwood, and beyond to its connection with the Phoenix branch of the Great Northern on Providence creek. It seems to be settled that the rails will be laid this spring on the completed roadbed between Curlew, Wash., and Midway and that the construction of the line up Boundary creek as far as Greenwood will also be undertaken this summer. Simultaneously the main line will be extended west towards Hedley with all possible speed. Hedley, where the Nickle Plate mine is located, is an important objective as it will provide a large tonnage.

The C. P. R. realizes that it must be prepared to abandon its waiting game and be ready to offset the Great Northern's move. This is evidenced by the fact that Mr. Callaghan, a C. P. R. engineer from Winnipeg, has just completed an inspection of the Great Northern survey made last fall. This survey was undertaken with the object of getting a more direct, withal a more expensive route, to the mouth of the Similkameen river. It will also render unnecessary the construction of a sinuous line running in and out of American territory. It is known as the Whitcomb survey. It will, however, run in American territory from Sidney lake to the point where the boundary line crosses the Similkameen river, 16 miles below Keremeos.

First Lesson in Jiu Jitsu

Jiu Jitsu is all the rage. We cannot pick up a magazine that does not contain an advertisement of its merits. A young man living two ciphers less than a thousand miles from Enderby sent for a course of the exercises. They came, but somebody to practice on was not sent with them, and therefore the course is valueless.

Here is one lesson, however, in this wonderful Japanese art of self-defence that might be made useful at this season of the year.

For instance, in case a large brindle bull attacks you in the central portion of a 15-acre field. Ordinary means of self-preservation are practically useless. Clearly, nothing remains but jiu jitsu. Of course, the most ardent advocates of this wonderful Japanese art will be required to obtain the bull's consent to fight according to these rules instead of the Queensbury, to which he is assustomed.

But, as in many other things, much has to be entrusted to the cleverness, resourcefulness and presence of mind of the person employing the art. First, take hold of the bull by one horn and the tail. Pull gently on the latter, so as to attract his attention from the former. Then, when he is completely bewildered and off his guard, give his head a sudden twist and dislocate his neck. This will so embarrass and cowe the bull that he will leave you entirely unmolested during the remainder of your stay in the field.
