Enderby Doings

The Quadrille club will hold their regular weekly dance Friday evening.

Geo. Bell is jobbing off the balance of his Ashcroft stock, in the old store building.

Messrs. Durston and Glenn, of Boissevaine, Man., arrived at Enderby on Monday.

A large crowd attended the stereopticon show at the Orange Hall on Saturday evening.

Miss Calvert, of Salmon Arm, spent Saturday and Sunday, visiting Miss Mohr, of Enderby.

J. R. Brown, of the Summerland Fruit Co., returned from a trip to his old home in the Territories this week.

The ice on the log slough is in excellent condition, and many have enjoyed the skating the past day or two.

A number of Enderbyites attended the anniversary concert given by the Presbyterian church at Armstrong last night.

The Enderby Trading Co. is presenting its customers with a valuable barometer in remembrance of the holiday season.

The stones for the Enderby Curling Club arrived from Winnipeg this week and the boys are getting the ice in shape for the first "go."

There must be something warm about Enderby. Sleighing is good in any direction to the town limits, while in town the snow barely covers the ground.

Jas. Jarrett, carpenter and finisher, whose handiwork was shown in the finishing of the Bell block, has opened a jobbing shop in the rear of the Hancock block.

The skating rink will be thrown open to the public tomorrow night. The ice is in good condition. Season tickets will be sold, or you may pay the admission fee at the door.

J. C. English has tastefully curtained his show windows and otherwise arranged his stock of furniture so as to give the interior of his establishment a very attractive appearance.

The cocoanut girl attracts the attention of the boys who spend their money at Chas. Metcalfe's. She wears a bonnet that fits like frills around a ginger snap, and has a most prepossessing appearance.

The Kamloops Lumber Co. shipped four cars of lumber this week, from Enderby to the Northwest. Five cars are also being shipped from Kamloops. The lumber market continues quite dull, but the outlook for spring business is bright.

The molasses limited was loaded on Monday by wealthy Manitobans, going to the south end of the Valley to purchase land. Some of the enterprise of J. M. Robinson, of Summerland, is needed to induce these land-seekers to stop off at Enderby.

W. Jones will open his feed and flour store in the Bradley block in a few days. The report that he has bought an interest in the hardware business of R. P. Bradley is incorrect, nor is Mr. Bradley associated with Mr. Jones in the feed business.

The Bank of Montreal has not taken any step to carry out its promise to establish a branch at Enderby, though the report is current that negotiations are under way looking to the purchase of the livery stable corner and the erection of a bank building thereon.

The Huppel Brothers have added a fine steel range to their kitchen, and their chef d'cuisine is all smiles tonight, love. They have a wayside house, 25 miles from Enderby, where the lumber boys pass many a quiet hour, going and coming to and from the camps around Mabel lake.

Eugene Rhian, publisher of the Herald, Ponoka, Alta., is spending a few days in the Valley.

Buy B. C. grown nursery stock if you do not want the delay, expense, and damage of inspection and fumigation. Henry's catalogue tells you all about it. See his ad in another column.

Carpenters are busy on the interior of the new postoffice block. It will soon be in readiness for the transfer of the boxes and fixtures. Mr. Harvey will make further improvements in his store block—improvements that will add room for the display of goods and facilitate the handling of his increased business.

When the C. P. R. wants to, it can move things very rapidly. Last month it brought a car of furniture from the factory in Ontario to Enderby in just twelve days. It was for J. C. English. Agent Robitaille got track of the car by wire and, with the aid of the Vancouver office, pulled it through without any long delays at divisional points. It sometimes takes half that time to get a piece of freight from Okanagan Landing to Enderby, a distance of 28 miles.

M. K. Rodgers, manager of the Nickle Plate mine, Hedley City, passed through Enderby on Monday, on his way home from Ashcroft, where he spent some time looking over the company's property. While at Ashcroft a contract was let for a 50-foot tunnel. If this proves satisfactory, extensive developments will be undertaken next summer.

Enderby L. O. L. No. 446, held their annual installation of officers last Friday night. The officers elect are as follows: W. M., A. E. Roberts; D. M., Jas. F. Dale; Chap., O. Rosoman; Rec. Sec., Ernest Bennett; Fin. Sec., A. E. Hale; Treas., J. R. Bunce; D. of C., E. Bennett; lecturer, A. Dale. This lodge has shown a healthy growth during the past year, the membership having more than doubled in that time.

Mr. Wylie of Tregarva, near Regina, N. W. T., and Mr. Hilliard of Regina, were among the passengers in the crowded coach on Monday, on their way to the lower lake points. These gentlemen are looking for a home in the Okanagan. Mr. Wylie recently sold an extensive and well-cultivated wheat farm in the Northwest. He has experienced enough severe winters and intends to spend the balance of his days on a small fruit farm in this Valley.

It isn't often in a town of the size of Enderby that one finds a store fitted up so well as that of the Enderby Trading Co. Last week a complete set of brass-topped counter-stools was added, together with nickle-plated window settings, patent ribbon show-cases, hat cases, floor centre-pieces, hose hangers, and counter pieces. These attractive settings give the store a very nobby appearance, and add a metropolitan atmosphere to the surroundings.

Relics from South Africa

Al. Fulton stacked arms in the hardware window of R. P. Bradley last week, and spread before the public gaze of Enderby a number of relics of his visit to South Africa at the time of the Boer war. He showed views of a hugh hippopotamus shot by him on the great Zambesi, of the Orange river bridge destroyed by the Boers, of a specimen of the hyderbeast, similar to the antilope. He also has a shambok, a short, stiff whip made of the hide of the hippopotamus, a lion's tooth knocked out of the head of a beast just killed, and minature asigaris, spades, spoons, knives, cut out of ivory by the natives. The most interesting curio is a photo taken of two Yowa women, of a tribe living near lake Niasa. These women wear earrings like their more civilized sisters, and in addition, they wear ornaments in their lips. It appears that these ornaments increase in size with the age or beauty, or inclination, or talking proclivities of the wearer. They are of a tin-lead composition, and are kept brightly polished. It looks as if the handle had been broken off of a ladle and the spoon hooked lengthwise into the upper lip. These ornaments are worn in season and out of season, apparently causing the wearers no inconvenience. It may be noted in passing that the art of kissing has not been developed there, and debating societies and sewing circles are unheard of.

FOR SALE: A black fur coat; nearly new. Will be sold cheap. Apply at THE EDENOGRAPH office.

WANTED: A gentle driving horse. Apply to H. C. Fraser, Salmon Arm, B. C.

Stagnation and Filth

Either the Department of Education is woefully short of funds, or is woefully ignorant of the conditions, or our local board of school trustees are woefully negligent in their duty. The condition of the floors of the Enderby school is beyond all conception of cleanliness. It is said by those who know that the floors have been scrubbed but once since the school was built. Of this there isn't any certainty. They show no evidence of it. While the government is passing such stringent measures relating to cleanliness in the barn yard, it should not forget the school house. Attention was called to this matter six months ago, but the school board has ignored the request, and with 80 to 100 children housed in the rooms the place has weekly grown more filthy. The man who is most bitter in the fight against town incorporation lives in the same house with the man who opposes cleanliness in the public school. It is time the public wrested the power out of the hands of such people—the power to keep the town and its institutions in the groove of long ago. Give us a clean school house, clean sidewalks, clean dooryards, a clean town—things looking spick and span—and we will have something inviting to men of wealth and family.

SALMON ARM ITEMS.

Geo. Smith, of Revelstoke, is moving on the farm purchased from S. M. Currie.

Mrs. Pettipiece of Revelstoke, was visiting Mrs. McCallum last week, and left for home Monday morning.

Braden & Johnson have their new saw mill ready to start and expect to be turning out lumber in two days.

The last few days' frost has made good skating along the lake front, and the young folk are having good sport.

The annual meeting of the Farmers' Institute was held Saturday. The officers reported the Institute in a flourishing condition.

R. Davis, of the Big Eddy Lumber Co., Revelstoke, has been spending a few days here looking up his old friends. He has also purchased a 120 acre farm on Salmon river.

The matter of municipal incorporation was reported as progressing, and the final touches have been given. We may expect to see Salmon Arm doing business on its own account early in the year.

Prosperity, and What We Are Doing to Meet It

Speaking of the Okanagan as "the garden spot of the rich interior," the Columbian's special edition says: "The opening of the Okanagan Valley to the incoming settler has but begun. This year has been marked by a very great advance because many large tracts hitherto held in single holdings, and devoted to grazing, have been broken up and resurveyed in small holdings, which have been placed on the market and sold to prospective settlers whose object is to plant orchards, and make homes where they can live in the enjoyment of an almost perfect climate, and yet, on comparative limited area, produce by their own exertions, as good a living as if on a larger farm in some of the other parts of Canada.

"While it cannot be said that there has been anything of the nature of a boom on in the lands of the Okanagan district, it is certainly true that there has been a remarkable rush of people to the Valley. Not at only one point has the influx been noted, but from Enderby and Armstrong, on the line of the Shushwap & Okanagan railway, to Vernon, Kelowna, Peachland, Summerland and Penticton, at the lower extremity of Okanagan lake has the movement been felt. At all these points the summer has seen many new arrivals, and nearly all of these have purchased lands in greater or less extent, with the intention of settling down

"Many of these newcomers have already made considerable beginnings. At some points, where clearing was necessary there has been a vast change in the face of the country. Timber has been cleared away, new homes have been built, and many small orchards have been planted out. The advantages of small holdings for settlement are very apparent when one sees a dozen homes where a year before there was but a single farm, perhaps a single field. It the up-building of all the public utilities, schools, roads, etc., in a district the benefits arising from numbers will enable the settlements to quickly secure excellent advantages, which could not be obtained for many years in more scattered settlements."

Every progressive man knows the full truth of what the Columbian says. In view of what the influx of men and capital into Enderby will mean, and to meet the demands that will be made on the town, in the way of public utilities, the matter of incorporation was taken up some months ago. But a few of the disgruntled property owners can not see it that way.

The most unfortunate thing that could befall Enderby at this time would be the success of the disgruntled few to block town incorporation. The past season saw the commencement of the best era in the history of the town. The promises for this spring are still brighter. All that is necessary is for the town to get in shape to act as a corporate body in matters of public need. Incorporation was considered the best way to do it. This all recognized—all but a few who so badly frightened themselves by pessimistic dreams of increased taxes that they could not see any good to come out of it. And, inspite of the fact that the committee, Messrs. Harvey, Bradley and Bell, succeeded in getting nearly seven-eights of the property owners on the petition before going ahead with the business, these disgruntled few have persistently fought the forward step. Every string that could be pulled they have secretly tightened, until, it is learned from Victoria, there is much uncertainty about the Enderby petition being granted.

Attorney Billings has sent the following communication in the matter: "I am in receipt of a letter from Messrs. Bodwell & Lawson as to incorporation. It is as follows: 'We saw the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works this morning and discussed the question of incorporation of Enderby with him. He informs us that the matter has not yet come before the Executive, as he understands that some of the petitioners are desirous of having their names removed from the petition, for what reason we cannot learn. He informed us, however, that the matter will not be considered before the return of the attorney-general, which will be about the 10th inst."

The action of those opposing Enderby's advance will strangle the life out of any community if persisted in. Only one other instance of a like character can be recalled in B. C. When Port Moody applied for incorporation the same tactics were applied. A disgruntled Swede, owner of considerable property, went around like a thief in the night and undermined the good work of the progressive. When the matter came before the Government a counter-petition was filed. The Executive, seeing a chance to deny the petition, did so. Port Moody has been dead ever since. Enderby's case is not an exact parallel. Enderby will not quit; but it is such work as this that retards and makes progress exceedingly slow and doubtful.

MAKING MONEY CHANCES

We do not know of any part of the Okanagan Valley that offers such opportunities for making money as the district about Enderby. Here farming, grazing and fruit land—the best in the Valley—can be bought for $10 to $50 an acre, while in other sections land that is not any better, if so good, is sold for $100 an acre and upwards. To the south of us, the movement in land sales has been brisk for two years or more, but about Enderby it began only last year. The sales have not been enough to push the price of land up to any extent, and much property can be had at a very low figure.

Discussing this phase of the situation the Columbian of New Westminster, says: "There is still a large area of unimproved lands available for incoming settlers, and this land is suitable for dairying, fruit, and grain farming. Much of it fronts on the Spallumcheen river, which is a very great advantage. There has, perhaps, been less movement in the sale of lands to newcomers in this district, but that does not for a moment indicate that there are any disadvantages. On the contrary, there is some of the finest land of the Okanagan to be secured at Enderby, and there is an additional consideration, that the prices asked for land here are really the lowest of any section in the Okanagan. Some large ranches and holdings, improved and otherwise, are to be subdivided and placed on the market at prices ranging from $7 to $100 per acre, while it is to be noted, that $100 is in many parts of the Okanagan the minimum price, and is readily obtained for the lands. Some day there will be no $7 land near Enderby."

IGNORING CONTRACT

The C. P. R. officials responsible for the imposition of the tri-weekly jerk-water service over the S. & O., seek to defend their position by claiming that they are living up to the contract under which they are operating the road. This is not so. One of the conditions of the contract reads: "The company will during the said term provide and run over the said railway duly equipped trains as frequently as shall be necessary for the traffic of the country through which the said railway is constructed."

This part of the contract the railway company is ignoring. It needs no argument to prove that a tri-weekly train service is not sufficient to handle the traffic of the country as it should be handled when the population of the district numbers five or six thousand people, and there are four growing towns dependent on the road for their only means of transportaion. Common business sense declares the service is not what it should be. Every man in the Valley knows it is not. The C. P. R. knows it is not. The government at Victoria knows it is not. The postoffice department at Ottawa knows it is not. Why, then, is the railway company permitted to override the contract? If the government is not responsible, then who is? The government pays the road a yearly subsidy of thirty or forty thousand dollars. According to Mr. Marpole's figures, given before the Railway Commission, this subsidy alone amounts to several thousand dollars more than the annual cost of operating the road.

If the government pays for operating the road, is it unreasonable to expect the government to see that we are given an up-to-date service? And, if the government knows the railway is imposing a jerk-water service on this Valley—and the government at Victoria does know it—then that government is unfaithful to the trust placed in it, be it Conservative or Liberal, if it fails to exercise the power that every government under the British flag has got, to compel the C. P. R. to faithfully carry out the letter and spirit of the contract. If the company will not, the government has no right to pay the subsidy, and is as guilty as the railway company of grossly abusing a public trust.

It is up to Premier McBride and his colleagues to do something.

THE VOTER'S LIST

Either by intent, or through sheer carelessness, many voters of Enderby were robbed of their vote in the recent election of a representative to the Dominion house. If there is to be a provincial election soon and the same practices are allowed, the same results will follow: men will be cheated out of their vote. If the lists used in the late election are to be used in the election coming on, supplementary lists should be provided at every polling place, showing the names of voters transferred between the date of closing the list and election day. To close the lists, without permission of transfer, six months before an election is held, is an injustice and an absurdity.

BY-O-LO.

Baby, wonder-eyed and wee,
Lying on your mother's knee
As the evening shadows fail,
As the homing-birdies call,
Listening to your mother croon,
That old, world-old, by-lo tune,
In the years to come they'll seem
Like the memory of a dream;
Mother singing "by-lo-by,"
And your father standing nigh,
And the casement opened wide
To the sky where high doth ride
The pale moon that yestere'en
You did cry to hold between
Your wee hands. Dear, you'll recall
As a dream the night and all.

You'll recall, dear, how you lay
In her arms at close of day,
And the rocking to and fro,
And the tuneful by-o-lo,
Just as I who look on you,
Just as I who hear you coo,
Do remember how I laid
In my mother's arms, and prayed
At her knee when night came down
Over hill and mead and town;
How my father tall and strong
Held me; now I hear the song,
That same song—now you're asleep,
God in Heaven, watch and keep
This our baby—to and fro—
In the land of By-o-lo.

—J. M. Lewis, in Houston Post.

Two Paths.

There is a path that seemeth passing fair,
With portals open and with entrance broad;
But danger and destruction hover there,
To lure the feet from safety and from God.
There is a path so narrow and so straight,
That to the pure alone is entrance given;
Happy the man who enters at that gate,
To tread the path that leadeth up to Heaven!

—Emily Houseman Watson, in Ram's Horn.

Motor-Car for the Pope.

According to the Giornale d'Italia, the pope has decided to purchase a motor car for use in the shady groves of the vatican gardens in place of the traditional light carriage drawn by funereal-looking horses.

PITHY AND POINTED.

A young man may die but an old man must.

Continued cheerfulness is a manifest sign of wisdom.

Maids of honor are those who do not indulge in flirtations.

From the mother's point of view an ugly baby is an impossibility.

The woman question for centuries has been: "What did she have on?"

It is no credit to a man to keep his word because no one will take it.

HANK REKLAW IN THE DARK WOODS.

COMMUNITY, the world, does not need—does not want—the patronizing, superior, man or woman. Such persons do exist, 'tis true, and occasionally we see them thrust into positions they should not occupy, but they are not needed—the community is better without them. I have in mind a dear old lady, surprisingly clever, kind, motherly and so considerate. And she was the plainest, simplest person that ever smooth the troubled brow of sorrow's waif. Simple! why, bless you, sweetheart, she was simple as mother—so simple she was misunderstood. There came before that grand womanly soul a young, talkative thing with patronizing air, who knew so little she did not have to think. At a little social event, the young woman brushed rudely by the old lady with her proud head thrown back and lips set in disdainful mockery. As she drew near a second time, leaning on the arm of an escort with an air of superiority betokening ignorance, the dear lady leaned forward and smiled. That's all she did. But there was such simple kindness—such mother love—such nobility of character behind that smile that the proud vixen was brought very low and for the moment became a child again.

It is simplicity this old world needs. We want men and women who can rise above jealousy, malice, hate, whim, envy and fear—whose lives are pure as the atmosphere of the snow-capped hills—who live, and want others to live, their lives up to their highest and best. We want men and women who will say the word of encouragement to the heart-sick soul, and will turn every sorrow bright side up—who will meet every disappointment, every difficulty, thoughtfully, without fear and unabashed. We want men and women who will believe that the man who follows the plow is as good as the man who sits at the desk of the ruler of the nation—provided the man behind the plow is as simple, as honest, as frank, as natural, as God-loving as the man at the head of the nation.

Bucking the Trust

By W. Y. SHEPPARD

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

LANGLEY had a cigar store on Locust street. It had taken him two years to raise the business to a point where it could support itself and Langley. When it arrived at that point his sole ambition was to raise it one notch higher; that is, to where it could support itself and Langley, and at the same time pay off each month part of the debt which had descended upon them during the period of nonsupport.

For a time it seemed as if Langley would succeed, as he was an enterprising, energetic young fellow, shrewd beyond his years. Then one day Mr. A. P. Rockway, the local representative of the cigar trust, blew into his store.

He had heard that Langley was pushing a local brand of cigars to the detriment of the trust goods.

"Look here, Langley," said the trust's man, "this has got to stop. I like you well enough personally; but business is business."

Langley tried to explain that the increasing demand for the local cigars was not due to any effort of his. But Rockway knew better.

"You've got to cut Turner & Co.'s goods out," he said, "or we'll cut you."

Now Langley was not a man to be dictated to, and he fired up right away.

"If you think you can do it, go ahead," he retorted. "I've got the only cigar store in the block. And what's more you can't rent a store in this block. They're all leased except Miss Child's the millinery shop, next door; and she owns that. Now, if you think you can run me out, try it."

"We'll try it, and we'll do it," snapped the trust man, as he flung himself out of Langley's store.

Two days later Langley was greatly surprised and a good deal chagrined at seeing a big transfer wagon loaded with glass showcases halt in front of the millinery store next door. Before night the cases had been installed and filled, every one of them with trust cigars. Miss Childs, now no longer a milliner, stood behind the counter, dispensing cigars and smiles in a way that made Langley feel sick at heart.

During the next week Langley's trade fell off distressingly. And no wonder, when the shop next door was selling five-cent cigars three for ten and ten-cent cigars four for a quarter, to say nothing about the smiles that were given so lavishly with each purchase.

Of course, Langley met the cut in prices; but the half-hearted grin he gave away was not nearly so valuable to the smokers as was the charming smile they received next door. The natural consequences were that Langley's trade dropped off more and more each day; and the business soon fell back to a point where, instead of supporting itself and Langley, it supported neither.

It was just four weeks after Langley's defy to the trust that Rockway again blew into the store.

"Business pretty good, Langley?" he asked, after answering the young man's surly nod with a broad smile.

Langley did not condescend to reply. So the trust man went on:

"Heard you wanted to sell out. I'd like to make you an offer, but can't, you know. We've made a contract with the young lady next door to supply her with cigars at the market price for ten years. By-the-way, a pretty shrewd business woman she is, too. Made us agree not to sell anyone else in this block for the whole term of the contract. But that's all right, I guess. She's doing a dandy business; that's what she is. Oh, well, old fellow, if you don't care to discuss it—ta-ta. I think I see your finish, and pretty soon, too."

Langley spent a bad night. There were two notes falling due next month; and he had heard from good authority that they had been bought by Rockway. Truly Langley found bucking the trust a very unprofitable occupation.

Next morning he started for the store early. As he was in the act of passing the one-time millinery shop, he heard an energetic banging at the door. Turning, he saw a sweet, though rather flushed face bending over a lock while two white, dimpled hands were making vigorous, yet vain, efforts to turn a key.

For a moment Langley did a very ungentlemanly thing. He felt glad that his neighbor and rival was in trouble. But this was only for a moment. Another instant found him saying:

"Allow me, madam." He took the key from her hands, and after a mighty wrench threw open the door.

"Thank you, very much, Mr. Langley," smiled the young woman, who had now recovered her breath, but on whose face the blush still lingered. "I don't believe I ever would have opened it. Will you not come in? It's too early for any busines yet awhile."

Langley stammered an excuse for not accepting the invitation; then, strange to say, walked right in.

No wonder trade had left Langley. It was worth the price of several cigars just to enter the dainty little shop. Everything was spick and span. There were flowers blooming on the counter, and tall rubber plants and ferns setting in the corners. Inviting leather-cushioned chairs were standing against the wall, which was dotted here and there with cute little pictures. And there were curtains, lacy-looking curtains, at the windows. That was why Langley had never been able to see inside the place before. Now that he had seen, it was no longer a mystery to him why his customers, even some of the most anti-trust ones, had forsaken him. To tell the truth, Langley did not blame them, either.

"Won't you sit down, Mr. Langley?" asked the young woman, after enjoying his evident astonishment for a short time.

Langley sat down. It certainly was a comfortable chair. And the cigar that she gave him—he did not know that the trust made such good cigars. Langley took three or four long draws; then he sighed. The trust man was right. He saw his finish.

After that day Langley formed a new habit, which was to come down early every morning. And it was strange how often the little used-to-be milliner had trouble unlocking her door. Of course Langley had to stop and help her. Nearly every morning she vowed to have a new lock put on before night. But for some unaccountable reason the old lock remained.

After unlocking the door, Langley would often sit down in one of the comfortable chairs almost surrounded by rubber plants and ferns, and smoke a trust cigar which the young woman had given him. While he smoked they would talk. He couldn't help from telling her something about his troubles, she was so sympathetic. And Langley always sighed heavily when the time came to leave the comfortable chair for his own unattractive shop.

One day, however, Langley stayed a full hour later than was his custom. And he forgot to sigh when he left. Instead, he hummed merrily to himself all the time he was sweeping and dusting out his store.

Trade was even duller than usual that day; but Langley didn't seem to mind one bit. He even bowed and smiled genially to his old friends whenever he saw them going in or coming out the shop next door—a thing Langley had never done before, for he had grown to look on all who traded there as his enemies.

About three o'clock that afternoon when there wasn't a soul in the store except himself, Langley saw Rockway, the trust's agent, coming down the street. He stopped for a moment, with a satisfied smile on his face, before the shop next door. Then he came on to Langley's.

"Hello," he cried, as he stepped in, noting at the same time that there was not a single customer in the store. "Business pretty good?"

"Well, it might be worse," Langley answered, with a smile. "How are they doing next door?"

"Oh, fine. That little woman's got the best business head on her shoulders I ever saw. And she's mighty pretty, too—don't you think so?"

"Very," replied Langley. And his smile broadened.

"I'm glad we got her to go into that ten-year contract. To tell the truth, that was our last hope. You'd have had us but for that. And say, Langley," the trust man went on, "I heard you were going into a new business. What is it this time?"

"Matrimony," replied Langley, jerking his head toward the shop next door. "No ten-year contract, either. This one's for life."

Well, to Rockway's credit let it be said he took defeat with a good grace and danced at Langley's wedding with as light a step as the bridegroom himself.

Mosquito Bite Remedies.

Not only in America, but in Europe as well, have mosquitoes been exceptionally abundant this year. Ammonia, the remedy commonly used in this country, is condemned by a German physician, who says it does not prevent the effect of a bite from remaining several days. He recommends holding the place bitten for a few seconds, and repeated in hot steam, which, he says, promptly relieves the itching and pain. Another remedy superior to ammonia is alum dissolved in alcohol and rubbed in vigorously. To keep mosquitoes away at night, rub the face, neck and hands with lemon juice.

Under The Olive Tree

WITH HANK BEELAW

Little Bob writes us like this: "Dere daddy Hank. I wisht you was hear wif us. Weve got a skin game going here. a skin game is a game what skins you. When I writ you a long time ago and said 'woulon't that skin you,' that's what I meant. The doctor says its the scarlet fever, but it's jest only a skin game, kause it skins you. It akts worst on boys an' girls. Old folks and lobsters also get it when they get into hot water. It makes them what get it look like lobsters and them what dont get it akt like lobsters. First when you get it it makes you read all over and your throat soar. Then, if you get it real good, it gives you the shivers an' makes you feel lazy; you get wrestless and dont have no appetite to eat, and you feal sick in your stommick, an' maybe you'll vomit. That's a bad sign. Anything what makes you vomit is a bad sign. It's a sign that you put something there that you shouldn't, Granma says. Then you get awful read, and they put you in a room by yourself an' make y' stay there. Sometimes you die and everybody cries. Then people are scared.

"Ma says she wishes you was home, Pa. Gess she wants you to get skinned or quarantined. That's a big word for me to youse, aint it? It means what the doctor does to them what lives with them what get it and don't get it. I tell you, dad, it pays to get it. You'll be skinned anyway, and its better to be skinned by the fever than by the doctors and them what makes you wear stinky close and wash in poisoned water. When you're quarantined you can't do nothin' nor go no place, and nobody can come an' see you. Editors ought to be quarantined all the time, shouldn't they, pa. Then there wouldn't be no scarlet fever nor nothin' and everybody would be skinned. When the doctor quarantines your house, he makes part of you stay in and part stay out. Everybody can't be skinned at once nor in the same way. You can skin part of the people all of the time, all of the people part of the time, but you can't skin all of the people all of the time. Not unless you have a molasses train run by 'contract.'

"It seams to me, dad, that the people haven't risen much above the practices of scapulimancy. When scarlet fever, and sech things are around everyone gets scared and buys things what smell bad from the drug store. Then they sprinkle it about the house or over their clothing until they smell like a house afire and think they won't ketch nothin'. And when a man has to do this thing to be in the game at all, the people who smell him on the street, hold their breath and back up like a lobster. It seams to be part of the game, don't it, dad. Instead of a man being known by the company he keeps, he's known by the smell he wears—while the quarantine is on.

Dere Daddy; i will now clothes. Hoping you will eskape being skinned, and that you will never look or have to akt like a lobster, i am your son in the process of skinning.—Bobby."

"N. B.—This letter has been through the stink, and will have to go to you over the S. & O. so by the time it reaches you the bacteria will have starved to death and you won't ketch it.—Bob."

In the Pulpits

What the Local Pastors Talked About Sunday

Rev. Mr. Roberts occupied the pulpit Sunday morning in the Presbyterian church, Rev. Mr. Campbell being occupied at Armstrong where anniversary services were held. The subject of his discourse was Eden, and man's efforts to attain it, taking his text from Gen. 2:8 and Rev. 2:7. Much as men may differ in their ideas of Eden this fact remains, that human kind the world over has a belief in the Eden of the past and the Paradise of the future. The primitive faiths of savage tribes all include Paradise. Man, everywhere, has put his start in Paradise—he began with God. Not content with that, man looks forward to another Paradise; while he believes in one behind, he ever creates one in front. But in all his searching man misses the thought that the world itself as God made it is a paradise. Here is everything man needs. Go where you will, the world is a paradise to the man whose soul is in tune, and who has eyes to see. Man spoils the paradise, God does not. Man lives in sin, greed and selfishness here, and, finding life unsatisfactory, he looks ahead of him for Paradise.

The paradise of God is spiritual; it is within ourselves, not in the outer world. There is no heaven outside of goodness; we cannot find it if we have not the spirit to see it. Without the spirit, we turn from the feast of earth's plenty unsatisfied, and find satisfaction in the simple meeting of the redeemed.

At the evening service in the Methodist church, Rev. Mr. Roberts took for his text Joel 3:14, and the subject, the Valley of Decision. After a brief sketch of the book and its author, the speaker said that the Valley of Jehosaphat mentioned in verse 12 had been localized and a deep ravine separating Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives was accepted as the scene of the great judgment predicted by the prophet. Hence this valley is lined with the graves of departed Moslems and Jews, waiting for the great day. There is a valley of decision in our lives. It is a good place to be in at the beginning of the year; it is a place of opportunity. We must decide for either good or evil, for God or Satan. The question that comes before each of us is, will you adhere to sin or will you renounce it? Will you accept Christ or will you refuse him? It is folly to continue to live in the valley. We do not deceive God by our indecision, we do not deceive the Prince of Evil, but we may deceive ourselves. The mountain top of joy and service awaits us. Decision is action, and every time we decide for the right we must carry out the principle of right in our lives. What does reason say? If the Lord be God, then follow Him. The day of the Lord is near in the Valley of Decision, nearer than we think. Let us make the decision of our lives tonight, not merely a feeble wish but a right out and out decision for God and for good.

Homely but Beautiful.

We all know the homely girl. She isn't pretty, has no parlor tricks, could not do a skirt-dance to save her life, and never can learn to score at bridge.

But it's surprising what an uncommonly good time some simple, kind and homely girls manage to have. The homely girl gets most charming country house invitations because she never spoils sport, and she is like one of the family. If a man is paying attention to a daughter of the house, she doesn't try to "cut her out"—"like that little cat, Ella, who shall never be asked again." The kind, homely girl isn't too grand to help her hostess in simple domestic matters.

If anybody in the house is ill she is such a help in her quiet, unobtrusive way. Convalescents ordered to charming health resorts to recruit ask the homely girl to go with them. She is a jewel in a plain setting. She never patronizes anybody, and will enjoy the most simple pleasures without an air of "I have been used to much grander entertainments." You are never ashamed to set a picnic scramble meal "because cook is ill or making jam," before the homely girl. When she leaves your house you know she won't make ill-natured remarks. If she discovers the skeleton in the family closet, nobody will ever hear of it. Smarter girls are like brilliant, scentless flowers, which attract attention. But people don't want to possess them because they have no perfume. The homely girl twines like honeysuckle about people's hearts. And she often marries remarkably well.

Solomon Oaks

A queer old fellow is Solomon Oaks;
He belongs to the good-natured order of folks;
He sings and he whistles about the work
And nobody has ever known him to shirk.
And he makes you think, with his blithe good cheer,
Of the merry blackbirds when spring is here.

If they come to him with a doleful tale
Of a neighbor's faults, they always fail
To rouse attention to what they tell.
At such a time he can't hear very well;
But if they praise up a neighbor—then
He can hear as well as the best of men.

He always indorses the good things said
By his friends of the living as well as the dead.
If he's asked what he thinks of a man gone wrong,
He'll pause, perhaps, in his cheerful song,
And say: "I'm sorry, but there must be
Some good to his credit, it seems to me."

"I haven't time to keep track," says he,
"Of the sad things and bad things that I might see.
If I was to look for them, so I try
To shut my eyes as I pass them by,
And see only good things along the way—
And I find a lot of them every day.

"By always having something to do
I keep out of trouble and mischief, too.
I stick to my business, as best I can,
And keep on good terms with my fellow-man—
And the better I treat him, it seems to me,
The better my fellow-man treats me."

A queer old fellow, this Solomon Oaks,
With his merry laugh and his pleasant jokes,
And his faith in his fellows, said or sung,
He's a host of friends among old and young.
He makes them and keeps them by smile and song,
And the world that helps us when things go wrong.

His life holds a lesson 'twere well to learn,
Shut your eyes to the bad, all the good discern;
Keep your face cheerful, and aim to make
This old world better for your sweet sake.
Queer? Well, it may be; but this I say:
More of such queerness we need to-day.

It's Dangerous to Hurry

There is a great difference between hurry and energy. The man who is always in a hurry, says one, seldom accomplishes what he sets out to do. He eats in a hurry and gets dyspepsia. He walks in a hurry and gets appoplexy. He talks in a hurry and gets the lie. He does business in a hurry and gets broke. He marries in a hurry and gets a divorce. He makes his will in a hurry and leaves a sop for the lawyers. He dies in a hurry and goes to hell. Don't hurry!

It is a wise man who watches himself as well as his children.
