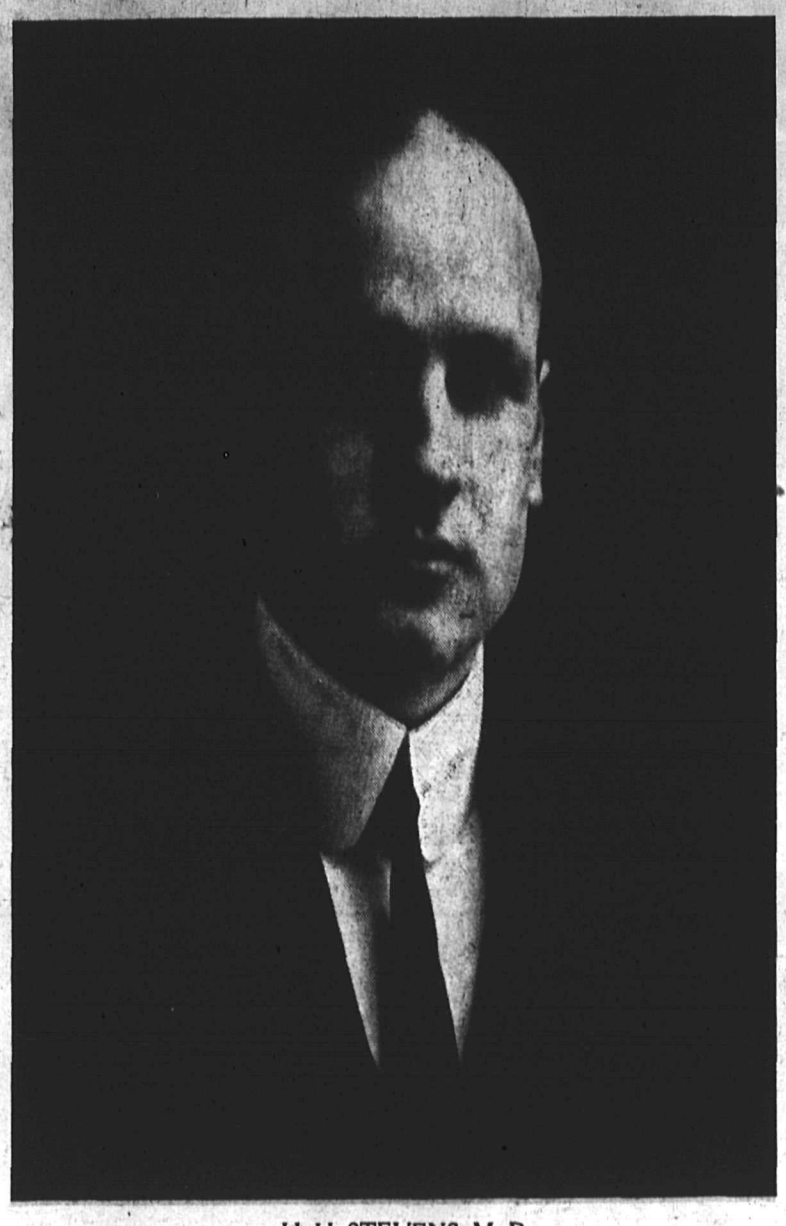
Volume 12 — North Vancouver, B.C., Friday, September 22, 1911 — Number 5



H. H. STEVENS, M. P.

The new member-elect for Vancouver riding has the honor of representing what may fairly be said to be the largest and most important constituency in Canada. Were the basis of representation throughout the Dominion the same as it is in Vancouver at present, the House of Commons at Ottawa would consist of only about fifty members instead of two hundred and twenty-one. The member for this riding therefore represents about four average Canadian constituencies.

Inasmuch as the probability is that the final returns will give Mr. Stevens a majority of over three thousand, he enjoys the further honor of representing the premier constituency of the Dominion in this particular.

Now that the contest is over, the new member will doubtless be followed by cordial wishes for a career of conspicuous success at Ottawa by all public spirited citizens, irrespective of the manner in whch they marked their ballots yesterday.

SOUSA.

The great and only Sousa was at the Vancouver Opera House last night, conducting, with his many famous mannerisms, his fine band of fifty-two. Despite the critical stage of governmental affairs and the excited conditions that prevailed in the crowded street, John Philip's baton was watched by a huge audience, which chuckled now and again when the famous march king poked at the air and plucked daintily at nothing, in order to bring out a desired effect.

As usual, the items most popularly received were Sousa's marches, some of which, because of their energy and originality, have been hummed and whistled in all quarters of the globe. There may be a noticeable sameness in their compositions, but it is a very tolerable sameness, not the kind that characterizes the opening choruses in almost every musical comedy. And

Dominion Election Returns

Late returns with reference to the Dominion elections held yesterday go to confirm the reports previously received and to further increase the magnitude of the disaster which overwhelmed the government. The present indications are that when the house is finally constituted, Robert L. Borden will have a straight majority of about sixty.

The government lost ground in practically every province, while in Ontario the results wetre particularly notable, the opposition practically sweeping the province. The expected gains of the government in the prairie provinces did not eventuate, the opposition having accomplished slight gains in that quarter. While the government succeeded in securing a majority of the seats in Quebec, the results are in strong contrast with the relative standing of the parties in the former house from this province, the government contingent of 54 having been reduced to 36, and the opposition 11 being increased to 27. Ontario, however, has given the opposition its greatest numerical increase from any one province, the previous standing of 51 Conservatives and 35 Liberals having been altered to 73 Conservatives and 13 Liberals. The full results by provinces as at present received are as follows:

	Lib.	Con.
Ontario	13	73
Quebec	36	27
Nova Scotia	10	8
New Brunswick	8	8
Prince Edward Island	2	2
Manitoba	1	9
Saskatchewan	7	3
Alberta	4	1
British Columbia	0	7
Totals	81	135

The Conservative majority, according to the above, is 54, but there are several deferred elections to be held as well as the vacancy that will be created by the resignation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier from one of the two constitutencies by which he was returned, and it is safe to conclude that from the results of these sources will somewhat increase the Conservative majority.

The reported defeat of R. L. Borden in Halifax has not been confirmed, the most reliable reports declaring that he has been elected by a small majority.

British Columbia is the only province in which an absolutely clean sweep was made, the prediction of Premier McBride having been fulfilled in that this province has returned a solid seven supporters for Mr. Borden. The result in Comox-Atlin was in doubt until this morning when returns from Prince Rupert, Hazelton and others of the more important points in the riding showed Mr. Clements leading in each place, with the result that his election is assured.

The results in British Columbia are as follows:

Vancouver — Stevens (Con.), 6870; Senkler (Lib.), 3893; Kingsley (Soc.), 942. Majority for Stevens, 2977.

Victoria—Barnard (Con.), 2803; Templeman (Lib.), 2339; Brown (Ind.), 291. Majority for Barnard, 494.

New Westminster — Taylor (Con.), 2686; Oliver (Lib.), 1037. Majority for Taylor, 1649.

Comox-Atlin—Clements (Con.) elected over Ross (Lib.). Probable majority, 150.

Nanaimo — Shepherd (Con.), 1468; Smith (Lib.), 981. Majority for Shepherd, 487.

Kootenay — Goodeve (Con.), 1819; King (Lib.), 1344. Majority for Goodeve, 475.

Yale-Cariboo—Burrell (Con.), 1724; McDonald (Lib.), 722. Majority for Burrell, 1002.

Yukon—Election deferred. Former member, Congdon, majority 260.

This is a gain of two seats for the Conservatives, Nanaimo having been represented in the former house by Ralph Smith (Lib.), and Comox-Atlin by William Templemen (Lib.), both of whom have been defeated. In all but one instance the five Conservative constituencies gave greatly increased majorities for the opposition candidates, Goodeve's majority in Kootenay having been reduced from 936 to 475.

The detailed report of the voting in Vancouver is as follows:

Vancouver Proper—	Stevens.	Senkler.	Kingsley.
Ward 1	1562	932	86
Ward 2	1291	778	154
Ward 3	679	409	206

Province of Optimism

Some Facts About British Columbia.

No one who is closely in touch with business conditions as at present obtaining throughout British Columbia, and more especially in the Coast cities of Victoria, Vancouver and New Westminster, and also with conditions throughout the neighbor states of Washington and Oregon with their cities of Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, requires to be told that there is a vast difference to be noted by even the most casual observer.

At home, in this favored Canadian province, good times prevail. Prosperity and progress are in evidence on every hand. The people are contented and comfortable and the spirit of sanguine optimism pervades the country. The financial position not only of the Province as a province, but of the country generally, is exceptionally strong. The sterling worth of British Columbia's natural resources is everywhere recognized, and on their account and because the discriminating business world approves the policy on the lines of which and under which provincial development is now going forward, and moneyed men are ready and eager to invest their capital in British Columbia enterprises.

Railway construction activity marks every part and section of British Columbia. Immense coal and metalliferous mines are being opened, and the capacity and output of existing mines increased. Gigantic timber mills are operating full time and overtime to keep pace with a live demand upon them. Great pulp and paper-making establishments are on the eve of opening, representing investments at Ocean Falls and Powell River alone of upwards of $6,000,000 during the past eighteen months, which establishments already employ upwards of two thousand five hundred white workingmen.

In the British Columbia towns and cities an exceptionally large proportion of the working class (indeed of the entire population) own their own homes and are proud of them—because they are worth being proud of, with their pretty gardens, their substantial and artistic architecture, their tasteful and complete furnishings, even to the pianos and other items of luxury as well as all modern essentials of convenience and utility which are

LYNN VALLEY NOTES.

(Express Special Correspondent.)

Mr. H. Heartcott has leased the hotel in Lynn Valley and is to furnish and operate a temperance house.

Mr. Needham of North Vancouver has opened a general store in the valley, corner of Centre and car line. Mr. Needham expects to be open for business this week or the beginning of next.

A number of small houses are being erected for small families. The aim of the company building them is so a man can buy a house and lot on a small cash payment, the rest as rent until paid for, thereby doing away with the custom of rent.

Mr. and Mrs. Snow of Frederick Road have moved to Ninth Street, Mt. Pleasant, Vancouver.

The brother of Mr. J. F. M. Barker is on a visit to Lynn Valley from the Old Country.

Mrs. Frank McCarty of Port Kells has been visiting her mother in Lynn Valley this week.

Mr. Simon Monohan of Langley, great grandson of Simon Fraser, the great explorer, was a visitor in Lynn Valley last week looking up old friends.

Mr. Townsley, North Vancouver, conducted the service held last Sunday evening owing to the indisposition of Mr. Weir, who has a severe cold.

BUSINESS ABILITY AND FAITHFULNESS REWARDED.

Mr. L. H. Williams, of upper Lonsdale, has disposed of his grocery business to Messrs. McAllister Bros., and intends leaving this week for his former home in Boston, Mass., to remain there permanently. Mr. Williams is one of these capable men of business who have proven to a demonstration that right methods and close attention to business are bound to succeed in this city. Starting business in a most modest way over two years ago, Mr. Williams steadily built up an excellent family trade, which continued to enlarge with the result that three times he found it necessary to seek enlarged premises, and a few months ago he removed into the excellent quarters which are now occupied by the business. Mr. Williams has always transacted business on a strictly cash basis, and is able to boast that when he sold to the present owners the total outstanding accounts did not exceed half a hundred dollars. The actual value of the goods on the shelves, together with the value of the business on the basis of the monthly turn over—all the product of a little over two years' work—is such that Mr. Williams finds himself in position to return to his old home and to establish himself in a comfortable way in that city, upon a permanent basis. The purchasers of the business are men of extended experience who will develop the business on the same trustworthy lines along which it has been built up and Mr. Williams requests for his successors a continuance of that valued patronage which the business enjoyed under his proprietorship.

NORTH VANCOUVER FERRY COMPANY NOT TO BLAME.

Action for Damages Dismissed.

The action brought against the North Vancouver Ferry Company by Mrs. S. A. Clements, to recover $10,000 for personal injuries alleged to have been received through the company's negligence, came to a close on Wednesday morning, when Mr. Justice Gregory dismissed the case.

It was contended that the plaintiff slipped on a line of hose on the North Vancouver wharf one day last summer and sustained injuries which she claimed to be permanent.

Judge Gregory observed that wharves and quays could not be expected to be kept clear of all incumbrances.

The plaintiff was represented by Mr. C. M. Woodworth and the defendants by Mr. C. W. Craig.

It is expected that an appeal will be made against this decision.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

A very interesting meeting was held at the St. Andrew's Christian Endeavor on Tuesday evening last. The topic was "Christ in the Home." Mr. Stevens brought out some good points in this lesson. An interesting meeting may be looked forward to next Tuesday. Mr. D. Hutchinson will speak on the topic.

A Swede named Olaf Saville, described as a vagrant and a "perfect perfect nuisance," was on Monday morning sentenced by Magistrate Kealy to do a month's hard labor.

The number of telephones in use at North Vancouver on August 1st, 1911, was 334. The number of toll calls outward for the month of July was 4,876. The figures are taken from "The Telephone Talk," the organ of the B. C. Telephone Co., for September.

The Theosophical Society meets in North Vancouver in Room 4, 67 Lonsdale Avenue (entrance next to Welcome Parlor) every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Attendance is entirely free and carries no obligations whatever. You are invited. Theosophical study and questions.

DANIEL IN THE LIONS' DEN

Religion qualifies rather than unfits for affairs of state. The Ethiopian after his conversion was the better prepared to resume his charge of all Candace's treasure. So there was nothing incompatible between Daniel's piety and his discharge of the duties of prime minister of the mightiest nation on earth for half a century. . . But his religion did not shelter him from the shafts of envy. His uprightness was a constant rebuke to his fellow officials. Their peculations were likely to be unearthed any time by this incorruptible and fearless Hebrew. When the king took steps, looking toward a civil service reform, and meditated making Daniel chief of the bureau, self preservation as well as jealousy suggested a conspiracy against his life. . . The hate was well suited to the king's vanity and weakness.

Obedience to the decree suggested, it would be a conspicuous recognition of the fact that he not only reigned by divine right, but that he himself was divine, a figment of antiquity which survived to our day in the divine nature accorded until lately, to the Mikado. . . Not when Daniel knew, but though he knew, in spite of his knowledge of the decree, he continued his habit. Not in the spirit of bravado, not because he was reckless and headstrong, but because a principle was at stake, and he was the most conspicuous representative of his captive race, as he did, so would they. The power of a thousand sermons would be concentrated in his conduct in the emergency. Great in the council chamber he was greater in the closet of prayer.

"Do you see the Hebrew captive kneeling
At morning, noon, and night to pray?
In his chamber he remembers Zion,
Though in exile far away."

The weakness of Darius makes a foil for the courage of Daniel. If he had not the adage, "A bad promise is better broken than kept," he had at least the principle which underlies it, for that is perennial. The promise to do an unjust and inhuman thing is best kept in the breach of it. Or, if this fiction of remediless penalty must be observed, then Darius should have gone to the den in Daniel's stead. . . The Palace and the Den!—what a contrast! : In that building, the marvel of mankind, the monarch of the world was restless and unhappy. He loathed the dainties of his banquet room, nor would he listen to music. Sleep forsook him. An upbraiding conscience and a consciousness of unkingly weakness were his companions. . In the den Daniel had the indescribable joy of an approving conscience, void of offense toward God and man. He had the fulfillment of the promise: "He shall give His angels charge concerning thee" His security was complete, his companionship angelic. . . The steadfastness of Daniel, and his consequent deliverance, was the finishing touch in the providential process of preparing the Hebrews for their exit from bondage. The circumstance had a powerful educative effect upon the heathen also.

THE TEACHER'S LANTERN

Religion not impracticable. Nothing in it inimical to true success. On the contrary, the best preparation for business, professional, social, political and domestic life. Instances: History, sacred and profane, ancient and modern. . . . The meanness of envy. The despicable means it will take to accomplish its end. . . . . The elevation of weak and vain men to office a public misfortune. . . Incidental evidence of the authenticity of Scripture. Casting into a lions' den a mode of capital punishment in vogue in Babylon. . . The use of providential crises, where by a heroic stand, one can do a lifetime o fgood in a few moments. . . Examples of the habit and spirit of prayer in those occupying high position. . . . Bad promises; the folly of making them, and what to do with them when once made. . . . The desirability of a good conscience, which can transmute a lions' den into a safer and happier place than a royal palace.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

A Missionary Journey Around the World.—Africa.

The most realistic and pathetic scene in the great pageant, "Darkness and Light," was the meeting of Stanley and Livingstone. Native converts in the background are in the act of building a house—startling evidence of the entrance of civilization in the heart of the Dark Continent. In the foreground the adventrous seeker after the lost missionary strikes hands with him in an appeal for him to return to England. With pitiful yearning Livingstone repeats, "Home! Home!" and then exclaims, "I can not go until my work is done!". It is a subtle unveiling of missions—the sacrifice and fortitude required.

NORTH VANCOUVER, B. C. September 22, 1911.

A GREAT ISSUE DECISIVELY SETTLED.

British Canadians scored a tremendous victory at the polls throughout the Dominion yesterday. To attempt to describe the verdict rendered by the people as a mere party triumph would be to entirely lose sight of its true nature and significance. It is quite true that the Conservative party was the medium through which the victory was won, but it is really likewise true that the influences which induced the Canadian citizenship to rally in such an overwhelming manner to the support of the position of that party far transcended any merely party considerations. The issue involved was one not only of national importance but of imperial significance and of world-wide import. In its negative significance, the people of Canada have intimated to the United States, in an emphatic manner, that they do not wish to enter into any partnership with that nation in matters pertaining to the tariff, and in a positive sense they have declared in a manner that the world at large need not misunderstand that they do not propose that the process of disintegration shall be set up within the British Empire, but that Canada shall remain in the Empire as the keystone in the arch, and that so far as Canada can accomplish such a result, the Empire shall strengthen and solidify. The latter is a question of world meaning and historians one hundred years from today may be able to give their generation an approximate idea of the real significance of the event which transpired in Canada on September 21st, 1911.

AN EPOCH-MAKING CAMPAIGN.

The election campaign which was concluded by the exercise of the ballot yesterday by the electors of Canada will take its place in history as one of the greatest and most momentous in the annals of the Dominion, either past or future.

The issue upon which the campaign was conducted was one of the greatest importance, not only because it had reference to a radical departure from that tariff policy under which Canada has prospered for many years, but even more forcibly because of its fundamental character, influencing as it must the entire trend of Canadian progress for the future, and likewise the national destiny.

The campaign was notable as being characterized by one of those great upheavals of popular sentiment in which the old party lines are burst asunder and the electors rise to that more exalted plane of citizenship in which they espouse the cause which appeals to them as serving the interests of the country at large, irrespective of their previous party affiliations.

The superlative importance of the issues involved was evidenced by the strenuous manner in which the campaign was conducted and the determined fight which was put up by both the opposing camps throughout the entire Dominion. The most outstanding leaders of public thought and the most eminent speakers that Canada can produce were active participants in the platform discussion of the issue, while in practically every constituency throughout the length and breadth of the land each side had a candidate in the field in whose interests a most stubbornly contested battle was fought.

It is only occasionally that conditions develop among any people to carry the entire citizenship of the country to such a pitch of fervor as that which has characterized the Canadian people during this crisis period of their history and it is at once a great privilege and a great responsibility which fell to the lot of the present generation of electors in exercising their right of franchise at yesterday's polling. That the result will be shown in the light of future history to have directed the pathway of the progress of the Dominion in those channels which were designed to secure for Canada the largest place and the widest influence which it was possible for our country to attain amongst the nations of the earth, will be the belief of all who exercised their franchise against the Reciprocity pact and also the fervent wish of all loyal Canadians, irrespective of the opinions which they held and the vote watch they cast upon the memorable 21st of September, 1911.

The editor is in receipt of a communication from a correspondent signing himself "A Competitor," having reference to the call for competitive plans, etc., for the new St. Andrew's church. We can only inform our correspondent that the Express does not depart from the rule that the signature of the writer must be printed at the bottom of every letter that is published in these columns.

HARDWOODS.

Canada is dependent for its lumber supply on the soft woods of the forest much more than is the United States, as seen from the 1910 Forest Products report compiled by the Dominion Forestry Branch and shortly to be published. Of the 1910 Canadian lumber cut, amounting to nearly five billion feet, only one-twentieth consisted of hardwoods or broad-leafed trees, worth barely five million dollars; on the other hand, almost one-quarter of the lumber cut in the United States consists of hardwoods, which country had far greater hardwood forests than ever did Canada. Canada is already feeling a shortage of the hardwood supply and makes up the national deficiency by importing annually from the United States hardwood lumber to the value of seven and a half million dollars. Thus the value of the hardwood imported into Canada during 1910 exceeded by fifty per cent. the value of the hardwoods manufactured into lumber. Nearly all of these imports are from the United States and consist of the most valuable species, such as oak, hickory, tulip or yellow poplar, chestnut, gum, walnut, cherry and a large amount of hard pine which is so frequently used as a hardwood. From these above figures it is seen that we are becoming more and more dependent upon the United States whose available supply for export is surely and rapidly decreasing. Whatever can be done to improve the resources of Canada by the elimination of wood waste, and particularly by the development of the small wood lots of Ontario, Southern Quenec and the maritime provinces should be done with all possible speed.

GROUSE MOUNTAIN SCENIC INCLINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Under the supervision of Messrs. Waddell & Harrington, the surveyors are hard at work on the final survey of the incline portion of the railway and it is expected that a considerable saving in the cost of construction will be made by the new route as well as being an improvement on the former projected route. As soon as the survey is complete it is the intention of the company to push forward the work of construction as rapidly as possible.

INDIAN CASE CONCLUDED.

After two adjournments, the case against James Kelly, involving a charge of giving whiskey to an Indian named Louis Julian, came to a close on Wednesday evening. Kelly still pleaded not guilty and was represented by Mr. Bull, who pointed out to the court that certain details in the evidence were inadmissable and had no bearing on the case.

Magistrate Kealy imposed a fine of $25 and costs or two months in default.

PLAINTIFF LOSES CASE.

Jury Returns Verdict in Favor of B. C. E. R. in Claim for Damages.

A county court jury brought in a verdict in favor of the B. C. E. R. yesterday afternoon in the suit brought against that company by Mr. Isaac Charles Mills, a resident of North Vancouver. Mr. Mills sought to recover $200 as damages for alleged injury to property.

The plaintiff was driving a wagon in Lynn Valley on May 25th when a tram collided with it. The wagon was damaged and one of the team of horses injured.

Mr. L. G. McPhillips, K.C., appearing for the defendants, successfully contended that the plaintiff had been negligent. Mr. A. Alexander appeared for Mr. Mills.

A HEROINE OF THE WEST.

When speaking of a heroine of the West, it does not refer to that fascinating dare-devil type of minx whose full-blooded mare dashes nightly across the screen of the moving picture show. Nor does it refer to the audacious cowgirl who is discoverable in every other book on ranch life (the kind of book, by the way, which enamantes, as a rule, from the pen of one who has happened to witness a round-up from a C.P. R.train). No. When the term "heroine" is used the desire is that it shall suggest something more than temporary heroics. It should summon before the imagination's eye a womap whose life and qualities are really worth applauding, whose resource and determination, are of the kind that historians should make a note of.

There is at the present time living in Oklahoma an interesting and wealthy woman known locally by the unromantic name of Jane Applebee, but universally spoken of in Texas as the "Cattle Queen." Many years ago she married August Captain, a Washington interpreter, and her troubles and ultimate triumphs date from the death of this her first husband. She was left with no fewer than fifteen mouths to fill and the wherewithall was miserably scanty. Optimistic in temperament, she kept her mind strenously fixed upon that silver lining which is said to characterize every cloud, and after long months of very hard and badly paid work, she had sufficient cash to pay for one cow. This and the insignificant looking calf which presently appeared were the commencement of the cattle queen's prosperity.

Now, tidings of this woman's prosperity as well as her determination reached the ears of the cattle men of Texas. They recoguized her pluck, and paid their rough tribute to it in a very practical way. They told her she could have all the motherless calves that she could find. This was a great concession, and Jane took immediate advantage of it. She roamed about the countryside day and night, and the number of motherless calves that she secured can only be estimated from the fact that in a comparatively short time she had quite a decent little ranch.

Just as mighty rivers evolve from a mere trickle on the mountain side so did this woman's ultimate two and three thousand head of cattle originate in the above small manner. She was always a hard worker, and achieved a reputation for honesty in all business dealings, which is as unperishable today as George Washington's reputation for truthfulness. It is said that in commercial matters Jane was quite masculine, that she combined the keen eye of a veterinary surgeon with the shrewdness of a born cattleman. She shipped her stock to Kansas, St. Louis and elsewhere at the rate of ten thousand dollars' worth per year, till presently she acquired what almost amounted to a monopoly and was given the regal title of the "Cattle Queen."

None will blame her nowadays for ridiculing the peevish cry of pessimists who point out the absolute impossibility of "making good" in this life unless one is supremely educated in some special branch or in possession of a goodly amount of capital. If only the women who are clamoring for the political franchise could obtain a few thousand recruits of the stamp of Jane Applebee their voices would soon be echoing in the rafters of the House of Commons.

Homage is due to such women as the Cattle Queen, who have the stamina to go on blindly believing, despite the bitterness of the times, that the darkest hour really does precede the dawn. And don't for a moment imagine that the case of Jane Applebee is one of exceptional good fortune.

"He explained that he was a sort of Bohemian in his way; fond of life and pleasure; that he had a circle of particular friends with whom he preferred to devote most of his time. And this, he explained was just where I came in.

"He stated that he had evolved the peculiar and unheard of idea, for the eccentricity of which he apologized profusely, of employing some gentleman of refinement and grace — and here he was very suave and flattering — to take his place at the unpleasant, uncongenial affairs that took up so much of his time. This would leave him free to enjoy himself as he would.

"He confessed frankly that he got the idea from one of the local dramas. At any rate, he wanted to try the experiment and wished to know if I was willing to aid him in what could be termed merely a harmless deception. He said that it could not possibly hurt me—he was a man of first class reputation, and had no entanging alliances—and he put it to me straight, whether I would materially increase his enjoyment of life by helping him play his part in the world of fashion.

"It was a queer proposition, gentlemen," continued the witness, "and at first it staggered me. I thought it over a long while before accepting but two things decided me. One thing was my love of adventure and harmless practical jokes; and the other was my desperate strait.

"It may be, too, that my will was materially weakened by the privations I have suffered—it undoubtedly was. At any rate, I heard what he had to say, and his argument was convincing. I thought it over a long while. But, after all, I considered that there was no harm in it, and that if it did involve embarrassment I could drop the thing at any time. There was adventure and excitement in the scheme—and more than all, it might, and probably would, lead to something better.

"You must remember, gentlemen, that I had reached the end of my tether—that notwithstanding the fact that I was a good business man, I could not command employment, and there was nothing before me but absolute starvation. I determined to accept his proposition.

"When he told me his name I recognized it at once as the name of a man well known in the town and in every way reputable and refined. Even I, who had been here but a short while, recognized that fact. If I had had any reluctance, any hesitation before, it disappeared with the mention of his name.

"That, gentlemen, was my first acquaintance with the prisoner there—Mr. H. Stanleigh Strome."

The speaker inclined his head once more in the direction of the defendant. The prisoner again sprang from his chair, where he had been sitting continuously, in the same extraordinary state of excitement.

"Your honor," he exclaimed again, this time almost imperiously, "I — I must be heard. This man——"

"Silence!" roared the judge. "Sit down, sir. Your counsel will speak for you."

Two officers stepped to the back of the prisoner's chair, and there took their stations to prevent any further outbreak. The prisoner again yielded.

"Gentlemen," continued the witness, "all this happened about eight months ago, and never until recently have I had occasion to suspect for an instant that this man was other than the gentleman whom he made pretensed to be.

"By prearrangement, I called upon him before we concluded our negotiations, not once or twice, but a dozen times. He stated that he desired to emphasize the fact that he was eccentric and peculiar, and that he had some ideas to which he desired me to conform which to me might seem highly ridiculous, but upon which he must insist.

"He said in the first place that he had always discouraged any attempt on the part of any of his friends to discuss with him his own private affairs—he preferred never to be the subject of conversation. He desired me, whenever and wherever I might represent him, never to talk personalities. This seemed reasonable enough, but the request that followed was indeed peculiar.

"He made me promise, gentlemen, as solemnly as though I took an oath, that while I was associated with him in this way I would never read the daily papers, and that I would never discuss the daily news. I asked him why, and he gave some reason — said than in a fit of anger once he had sworn to forswear the reading of the press; he had had some violent quarrel, or some bitter experience—said that his antipathy to the daily papers was well known among his friends, that they all laughed at it, but respected it; said that newspapers were the most monumental liars, that they could make or unmake a reputation in an hour—in short, he became so explosively violent upon the subject of the press that I assumed he had some well grounded dislike to it. I promised lightly, and I found out later that he had indeed a well-grounded reason for his request.

"Gentlemen, I entered into a compact with this man that I would do anything consistent only with adventure and consistent also with honor that he should ask me to do. It may seem queer to you, sitting here dispassionately in judgment upon the fellow, and indirectly upon myself—it may seem queer that I could consistently impersonate another man, even as a practical joke; but at that time it seemed perfectly consistent to me, and I agreed to attend such functions as he might request, and be to all intents and purposes on such occasions H. Stanleigh Strome himself.

"It required not a little preparation and expense. He furnished me with money and with clothes of the same cut and pattern as his own. I lived in ease and luxury at the other end of town with a suite of rooms all to myself; he had rooms there which he occasionally occupied; the name H. Stanleigh Strome was on the door.

"Where he lived when not at my apartment I never knew. I know not now. His method was this: Whenever he desired me to attend a function in his stead he handed me a brief note of the people I should meet— they were generally the same people ,and I soon became acquainted with them and with some of them I became better acquainted than did Strome himself.

"In fact ,there are certain persons in this town—I know of one in particular,"—here he flushed slightly and stopped in an embarrassed way—"who knew me as H. Stanleigh Strome, and yet who never had met the man Strome himself.

"Strome directed me to make new acquaintances, as many as I could, and he asked only that I keep him informed of their names and of my relations with them, whether cordial or only merely formal."

He flushed again.

"I obeyed him to the very letter. I followed his instructions implicitly. His special instructions were always written and generally mailed to me; they were minute as to detail, stating when and where to go, what to do and say, and all about it. It seemed to me more trouble to arrange all this mild deception than it would have been for Strome to go himself, but that was his affair.

"I found when I entered society that Strome had been in town for about three years and that everybody understood and humored his harmless eccentricities, which were attributed rather to his ancient strain of aristocracy than to anything about the man himself. Strome was regarded, I found, as intellectual and refined; he was brilliant and popular—extremely so, and with all classes of people.

"I was honest with him, for I considered him a benefactor, peculiar and whimsical and exacting enough, but still my benefactor. I attended on an average one or two functions a week. I ran the round of the clubs. I met many people and enjoyed myself."

The witness paused again.

"Fortunately for me," he said, "I have kept these written instructions that he gave me. There are a great many of them; there they are."

He passed them down to the prosecutor, who offered them in evidence. They were admitted and read to the jury.

"You see, gentlemen, that there were, therefore, two H. Stanleigh Stormes ,but that these two were never seen together or by the same people. Apparently they kept apart.

"And I say to you, gentlemen, solemnly, that I never knew what this man's real motive was. I never knew that he was a criminal of the deepest dye until early on the evening of the Dreddlington dinner, with which you are familiar. This may seem the strangest of all strange things, but no one spoke to me about the crimes —I who was supposed to be H. Stanleigh Storme myself — and I read nothing of them.

"This city is a large one, and I venture the opinion that if anyone of the jurymen should fail to read the local dailies for a week, he will never hear of some of the most important occurrences that happen here. I did hear something, but little, and in a way that never excited my suspicions, of the former trial that took place here; but as all that I heard was accompanied with boisterous laughter, and had all the earmarks of a joke, I paid no attention to the talk.

"The first thing that I did hear, however, was of the Dumont robbery —on the night after it took place. It was the night of the Dreddlington dinner.

"I had been requested by Storme to attend that dinner. I made up my mind that I would not do so. I sought Storme out and upbraided him —told him he had wronged me beyond all reparation—that I would expose him. I found him in a state of dreadful agitation, which I know to be assumed.

"He begged me to attend the dinner —stated that he would make a full breast of the matter, and that he would leave town and never bother anybody again. Begged me, whom he had befriended—befriended, gentlemen—not to give him up. That all he wanted was twelve hours to arrange matters in—gave me his word that all was not as bad as it looked.

"When H. Stanleigh Storme talks, gentlemen, there is no answer. I went reluctantly, but I went, nevertheless. I would have hesitated to give him up. I hoped there would be some way out of it.

"Gentlemen, you know what happened. I was the man who sat in the poker game on the night of the Mordaunt robbery, and the man who was guest of honor at the Derddlington dinner on the night when the First National was robbed.

"The man that sits there, gentlemen," he continued dramatically, "the man H. Stanleigh Storme, was the man who committed each crime and all the others that have been so much deplored, and who upon each occasion, without my knowledge, was able to prove an alibi.

"I have come here," added the witness, "to make what reparation I can for my innocent share in those two crimes by revealing to you the exact state of affairs as it exists. That is my story, gentlemen," he concluded, pointing to the prisoner, "and that is also his."

The prisoner sat spellbound, looking at the witness with a fascinated gaze in which desperation, wonder and admiration struggled for supremacy.

CHAPTER XVII

The Biggest Surprise of All.

The witness waited for the cross-examination. But there was none. He then stood up and addressed the judge.

"Your honor has my address" he said quietly, "and I can be found there at any time if I am wanted. Is there any reason why I should not now go?"

The judge looked at both lawyers, then shook his head.

"You may go," he said

The witness stepped down from the stand, and the crowd made way for him as he walked slowly down the center aisle. He had almost reached the door when the prisoner roused himself.

"For heaven's sake!" he exclaimed wildly, "you are not going to let that man go! Your honor, I will be heard—I must be heard,' he cried insistently. "I am not——"

"Silence!" roared the judge again. "Sir, if you interrupt the course of this proceeding in this manner again," he continued severely. "I'll have you bound and gagged. You have counsel. You will have an opportunity to be heard when your time comes. But you must not interrupt the court."

The man who had passed down the center aisle smiled slightly to himself, and then stepped out through the doors. The prisoner took his seat with a resigned air.

"Let it be upon your own head then, your honor," he said quietly, "it matters but little to me."

"Proceed," went on the judge, ignoring him.

"That's our case," said the district attorney with a note of triumph in his voice. "We rest."

"Proceed with the defense," exclaimed the judge.

Now the counsel for the prisoner had been doing some tall thinking during the testimony of the last witness, and in spite of the startling nature of the evidence he was pretty well prepared.

He knew one thing—than the resemblance between the two men, having deceived many people before, would constitute a strong argument with the jury in the defendant's favor. For it was just as likely that the witness Warburton had robbed the bank as it was that the prisoner himself had done so.

He had a dim recollection of the capital that had been made out of the resemblance of Charles Darnay and Sydney Carton in Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities," and he purposed to avail himself of a similar advantage here. The more he thought of it the better he liked it.

He had had ,of course, no inkling of this from his client, and he had been unable to prepare himself for it. In fact, his client's whole demeanor had changed from the instant the other man had appeared. He had ignored his counsel and kept his eyes fixed upon the witness and the court. He had not even confided o his counsel what it was he had wished to say.

But the lawyer was pretty sure from the present insistent attitude of the prisoner that he could trust him without further preparation on the stand. His client was no fool.

He touched the prisoner on the arm.

"You take the stand," he said.

The prisoner looked at him, but did not move.

"You heard your counsel," said the judge with some asperity. "Take the witness stand."

the rule rather than the exception in British Columbia homes.

Building is going forward everywhere—substantial, honest building that is "for keeps"; and, stupendous as is this constructive activity, the accommodations of each new building and block are requisitioned practically as soon as it is completed, if not bespoken in advance; while empty residence houses are few and far between and only remain empty as a rule because they are deemed old-fashioned, out-of-date, not up to the high standard which the prosperous community insists upon and is able to pay for.

Taxes are paid in British Columbia as a rule ahead of time and the cash discount taken—this applying equally to the cities, the towns and the unorganized districts of the province. There is plenty of money in the savings banks, although a large proportion of the working class here is able to invest in real estate and other solid securities and make money thereby. Collections are easy and business failures a rarity.

The crux of the explanation of British Columbia's present unexampled prosperity, of the readiness of capitalists of the Old Country, notoriously conservative ,to become partners with our own people in the development of their heritage, and of the rapid influx of industrial population is herein found.

There are at present under actual construction or contract, or assured, something more than one thousand six hundred miles of new railway within British Columbia's boundaries. Of this one-third at least is being built with the co-operation of the people of British Columbia under direct cash subsidy or bond guarantees to the extent of $35,000 per mile. There is abundant reason to both hope and confidently believe. that these new railways upon their completion will prove the material factor in promotion of infinitely greater additions to population, augmented industrial activity in every direction, and a broadened and profitable many-sided export trade, as well as in the making of a self-contained and self-supporting British Columbia through the settlement and cultivation of the arable lands of the province to the end that these may shortly produce more than sufficient in locally cultivable foodstuff staples to meet all domestic demands, with a possible margin for exportation.

Of these lines at present under construction there may be mentioned the Canadian Northern Pacific, the Grand Trunk Pacific in the north, the Kootenay Central, the Portland Canal Short Line (hereafter to be known as the Canadian and North Eastern), the V. V. & E. (Great Northern), the Kettle River Valley, the Cowichan Lake and Alberni extensions of the E. & N., the Howe Sound & Pemberton Valley, with others already surveyed of which the British Columbia & Alaska (from Lytton to Fort George) is an example.

The tiller of the soil properly receives first consideration under this statesmanlike scheme of provincial upbuilding, and for his benefit more particularly, virtually one-third of the Province has been placed under reserve—an area approximating 125,000 square miles, or 80,000,000 acres. For his benefit there were surveyed by the local government last year—to say nothing of private surveys, probably trebling the total acreage—no less than 800,000 acres, which area will be greatly added to during the present season. For his benefit there are at present held available roughly 355,840 acres in northern Cariboo to the south of the Nechaco, 384,000 acres along the south fork of the upper Fraser, 350,000 acres in the great loop of the Fraser's south fork and in the Willow river valley, similarly extensive areas in the Salmon and Stuart river country, tributary to Stuart lake, along the Nechaco, and in the territory draining to Francois, Ootsabunket and Cheslatta lakes, together with approximately 375,000 acres from Hazelton through the Bulkley Valley to Fraser lake, and 460,000 acres in other sections of the new north of the Province—a total of 3,325,640 acres of prospective farming and ranching country thoroughly capable of producing all the foodstuff essentials for British Columbia's support during all time to come. It is very largely to make these great areas populous and to secure their utilization in the production of all British Columbia's requirements in agricultural products that these railways are being built, under such rate-compelling conditions as will enable the consumer to obtain foodstuffs of provincial origin at a minimum price, while keeping their money-worth in circulation at home to mutually assist all classes in the making of a great and ever greater British Columbia. British Columbians will have made an excellent investment in their railroads and these roads will find sufficient traffic to more than pay their way.

SOUSA.

then again, when one has wearied of the two-four march rythm, there is always Sousa to watch.

Apart from being musically enjoyable, this Sousa concert was interesting as a display of discipline. Not a moment was lost from beginning to finish. No sooner had the curtain ascended than Sousa was tapping his music-stand and the men's instruments were in position. Tzing-boom! and they were off, in a unity of sound that was delightful to hear. That famous overture, "1812," descriptive of the French Revolution in all its phases, thrilled the audience into silence. Sousa worked this masterpiece up to a frantic finish, the last few bars being celebrated by a perfect pandemonium of brass and church bells. Similarly, in the excerpt from Sullivan's "Golden Legend," one could almost hear the demonical chuckles of Vulcan and the shrieks of the tortured spirits. Sousa is great at that sort of thing. He evidenced his keen sense of humor by an arrangement of that modern classic, "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" The air was produced in variations in almost every conceivable manner, the instruments seeming to separately answer the international query in a way which greatly amused the audience. Sousa believes in giving his men every opportunity for individual success. After the intermission, they returned in clusters of two, three and four, and each man rendered a brief solo, from the piccolo to the mammoth bassoon. One of the most attractive fragments was "Sweet and Low," arranged as a quartette for French horns.

It is impossible to mention every feature of last evening's concert. It should be sufficient to mention one—the personality of Sousa. There is no doubt whatever that this wonderful little man infects his bandmen with that same thoroughness and precision which have made him famous as a conductor and composer. A Sousa concert is like no other. It is a display of musical calisthenics, carried out with great technical excellence and almost military discipline.

One word more. It appealed to certain sections of the audience as being just a tiny bit humorous that an announcement from the stage to the effect that the reciprocity advocates were hopelessly defeated should be followed by "The Stars and Stripes."

BRITISH COLUMBIA IN 1910.

In farming and horticulture, 1910 was by far the biggest and best year British Columbia has ever had, a gain in the total value of home-produced agricultural products of not less than $5,899,090 being recorded—or more than fifty per cent. upon the immediately preceding twelve-month, the total being $8,500,000 in 1909 and $14,399,090 last year. In this connection the following statistics for 1910 included in the last Provincial Budget, are decidedly interesting. The imports totals here given, it must be borne in mind, include all imports from the Eastern and prairie provinces of Canada as well as from abroad, the former being much the heavier:

From the above it will be seen that the value of home agricultural products even now reaches no inconsiderable total, with such items for the one year as cattle, $1,136,000; poultry, $385,375; butter, over $1,000,000; fruit, nearly $2,000,000; hay, almost $4,000,000; and grain almost $1,500,000; bacon and hams, over $360,000, and milk, cream, etc., over $2,500,000. What is even more significant, however, is that already the home production of products of the soil has all but caught up with the imports total, the farmer representing $14,962,904 last year and the latter $14,399,090. The figures show also, incontrovertibly, that there has been a great increase in population recently. If one allow but $80 as representing the consumption of agricultural products per head of population, and allow for the increased price of farm products, it means between 75,000 and 100,000 added to the provincial population in 1910, or a number equal to the entire population of British Columbia twenty-five years ago. A glance at the figures of imports of poultry and eggs convince one, too, of the great future there is in British Columbia for this important branch of agriculture. The dairying industry is also on a very progressive plane at present, the total dairying output amounting last year to about $950,000, and it is anticipated the success of this important phase of agricultural industry will secure for the dairyman the highest market prices possible to secure by an individual or organization in competition anywhere throughout the Dominion, and this should prove a great incentive towards the rapid development and further increase of creameries throughout the Province.
