BUREAU OF INFORMATION

The Joint Civic Advertising Committee held a meeting on Tuesday evening at which there was a good attendance of representatives. Two advertising propositions were submitted for consideration, neither of which met with acceptance. Mr. J. W. Donaldson brought forward a proposition which had been previously advocated at the Board of Trade by Ald. Henderson, namely that of establishing a local public bureau of information and in a comprehensive speech, pointed out the avenues along which such a bureau would operate and the immense benefits that would be derived therefrom. The proposition was discussed by the Committee and met with unanimous approbation. It was practically decided that the resources of the committee for this year be devoted in the first instance to carrying out this project, and the chairman, Mr. A. G. Perry, together with Aldermen McRae and Henderson were appointed a committee to approach the councils and to gather data to be submitted at a meeting to be held on Tuesday evening next.

With respect to the application of the Maple Leafs Limited, a Vancouver Lacrosse Club, playing under the name of the North Vancouvers, for a subsidy of one thousand dollars, which was referred to the Joint Civic Advertising Committee by the city council, the committee recommended that no action be taken.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

William Shakespeare's immortal play "Much Ado About Nothing," was presented this morning in the police court in a somewhat modified form when the alleged assault case against Mr. Myers of North Lonsdale was heard before J. P's. Woods and Foreman. The information was laid by Mr. Byers, a neighbor, that Myers has thrown a stone while he (Byers) was engaged in the peaceful occupation of measuring his lot. The evidence was in a measure contradictory. Mr. Bull, lawyer for the plaintiff, presented some brilliant arguments on behalf of his client. The wives of both parties involved and a Mr. Abel were also called upon to give evidence. After some consideration on the part of the court, Mr. Myers was bound over to keep the peace, ordering him to find sureties to the amount of $500.

Leroy, a speed demon, captured by Officer Gaudin on the Capilano Road last Sunday was fined $25 and costs.

IMPROVEMENTS IN FIRE FIGHTING APPARATUS

Fire Chief Turner, late of Calgary, has lost no time in recommending the much needed additional fire fighting apparatus to the fire committee with an urgent request that the same be purchased at an early date. The procuring of a motor chemical engine, combination with hose reel capacity, 50 gallons of chemical and 1,500 feet of hose; the putting into action of the combination wagon now at number 1 station; the installation of a Gamewell fire alarm system; that 5 or 6 more men be added to the staff; that two teams more of horses be purchased for the service and that either a runabout automobile or a buggy and horse, this latter for the chief, are the most important of the improvements in the present city service suggested by Chief Turner. The city council will deliberate on this matter at an early date.

The ceremony was performed at Christ Church Cathedral, Vancouver, by Rev. C. C. Owen, rector, on Wednesday morning in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The three hail from South Vancouver and ran away from home a short time ago. One of the boys intended to marry the girl and had brought the other boy along as groomsman. Parents of the girl were notified and last evening came and got her. The young men had a hearing before Mayor McNeish this morning charged with vagrancy. Both cases were remanded until tomorrow.

DISTRICT COUNCIL BUSY

Considerable business was transacted at the district council last evening. The entire council was present as well as an audience of ratepayers who had come to listen to the various deliberations of the Board.

Correspondence:

A resolution was received from the city council passed at last Monday's meeting for the widening of the Capilano Road, the city to control the right of way for pipe line on the road and will bear the expense of the widening to 1-3 of the cost, providing the third share does not exceed $2,500. In the event, however, of the cost of the road exceeding three times this amount the offer of $2,500 will still be held out.

Mr. Alex. Philip, president of the Board of Trade, wrote as a representative of that body and asked that a small wharf be erected at Eagle Harbor for the convenience of the Howe Sound steamers and residents on the harbor. This was referred to the B. of Works.

Robt. Reid, the road superintendent who has been the bone of contention between the acting-reeve and his council in the matter of the engineer, sent his formal resignation to the Board and asked to be relieved from his duties as soon as possible. The resignation was accepted and Mr. Reid will be relieved of his duties on the first of May.

In letters from the Lynn Valley Ratepayers' Association recommendations were presented that precautions be taken as to fire in the Valley. As previous action had been taken by the council in regard to this matter it was laid over pending reply to former correspondence which evidently had not been received.

A complaint as to the unsanitary conditions in the Lynn Valley schools was referred to the school board.

Coun. Loutet made the following recommendations: That re the widening of Lonsdale avenue steps should be taken for the two property owners who had refused to settle to appropriate. By motion of Coun. Bridgman the matter was referred to the Board of Works to see if an amicable settlement could not be arrived at.

That tenders be called for the widening to 80 feet of Lonsdale Ave. at the north-east end of the park site, with the proviso that the owners of two houses which would necessarily have to be moved be approached on the subject. The engineer was instructed to call for tenders forthwith.

That the B. C. Telephone Company be communicated with asking them to consult the council when telephone poles were to be erected in the district. Approved by the council

Also that a minimum price for rock through the district be $1.50 per ton, and that profit on works of local improvement nearer the city be expended in improvements in the outlying districts. In this matter the engineer was instructed to prepare estimates of the cost of rock crushing.

Coun. Ward recommended that the clerk proceed in the necessary formalities for the application of a water record at the Red Fir Lumber Co's. mill at Rocky Point. A motion to this effect was carried.

The matter of a donation to the promoters of the Horse Show was laid over until the next meeting of the council by motion of Coun. Bridgman.

It was decided to purchase lot 20, district subdivision 555, from Mr. Irwin for park purposes for the sum of $5,400 comprising about three acres on the recommendation of Councillor Thompson.

The local yacht club is desirous of having a few additional members to swell the number of their select few. A corking time in the way of pleasure will be the lot of those who belong to the club this summer, as a fine program has been prepared.

WELCOME PARLORS CHANGE HANDS

The Welcome Parlors, so successfully operated by Mr. John Dierrson for some time have been purchased by Mr. John Caverly, formerly of Port Hope, Ontario. Mr. Caverly has had the experience of 14 years in the grocery and confectionery business and may be expected to give the benefit of these previous years in supplying strictly first class goods to the householder of North Vancouver. The already commodious welcome parlors will be thoroughly renovated and new fixtures and facilities will be installed. When this is done a first class place for the young man to take his girl and indulge in the innocent and pleasurable pastime of a tete-a-tete whilst white-coated dispensers ply him with ice cream and soda water of a delicious order to cool his ardour.

Patrons of the Welcome Parlors in Mr. Dierrson's regime as well as others should give Mr. Cavelry a call and give the general excellence of his goods a try out.

THE GEM THEATRE

The program at the Gem for Friday and Saturday has the same carefully selected entertaining and moral tone of all the previous ones, which a personal selection by Mr. Venner warrants. It is just a trifle more interesting, a shade more entertaining or a bit funnier, that's all, and the 10-cent investor in a Gem ticket sure gets dividends from his investment which the dabbler in real estate or high finance never dreams of. The following are the carefully selected subjects to be presented tonight and tomorrow afternoon and evening:

"At the White Man's Door"—An Indian drama full of adventure and thrilling situations.

"Mr. Nix at Mardi Gras"—A comedy of the order which never fails to extract a laugh from even the most staid and solemn.

"Baby Bet" and "Foolshead Xmas"—Two rattling good comedies guaranteed to tickle everyone into the appreciation of these films.

"Wonders of Nature"—A series of scenic beauty taken from various centres of the globe.

ANNUAL METHODIST BANQUET

The annual banquet of the Metho-

The annual banquet of the Methodist church which was held last evening was a delightful function, thoroughly enjoyed by the large company which attended. The tables had been arranged by the Ladies' Aid and the senior Epworth League. They were laden with material for a choice repast and were tastefully decorated. After full justice had been done to the excellent supper, the toast list was proceeded with under the chairmanship of Rev. W. C. Schlichter, pastor of the church. Addresses were delivered by D. Scott, E. W. Leeson, E. W. Keenleyside, Geo. H. Morden, J. H. Kellar, B. C. Alexander and William Townsley. A special appeal for subscriptions to the general fund of the church met with encouraging response which will go far toward enabling the Boards to meet present obligations.

At a meeting of the yacht club last evening the date of the local race of the North Vancouver club was set for the 13th of May. The race will be over the inner course of the harbor.

A heavy truck belonging to McDougall-Jenkins, engineers, broke through a drain culvert on 1st street this afternoon and were detained some time before the wheels could be extricated.

Canadian Verse

THE CANADIANS ON THE NILE.

By William Wye Smith.

[Rev. William Wye Smith of St. Catharines was born in Scotland in 1827. He is chiefly known for his New Testament in Broad Scotch. He also wrote a volume of poems published in 1880, from which the following is taken.]

O, the East is but the West, with the sun a little hotter;
And the pine becomes a palm by the dark Egyptian water;
And the Nile's like many a stream we know that fills its brimming cup;
We'll think it is the Ottawa as we track the batteaux up!
Pull, pull, pull! as we track the batteaux up!
It's easy shooting homeward when we're at the top.

O, the cedar and the spruce line each dark Canadian river;
But the thirsty date is here, where the sultry sunbeams quiver;
And the mocking mirage spreads its view afar on either hand;
But strong we bend the sturdy oar towards the Southern land!
Pull, pull, pull! as we track the batteaux up!
It's easy shooting homeward when we're at the top!

O, we've tracked the Rapids up, and o'er many a portage crossing;
And it's often such we've seen, though so loud the waves are tossing!
Then it's homeward when the run is o'er! o'er stream and ocean deep—
To bring the memory of the Nile, where the maple shadows sleep!
Pull, pull, pull! as we track the batteaux up!
It's easy shooting homeward when we're at the top!

And it yet may come to pass that the hearts and hands so ready
May be sought again to help when some poise is off the steady!
And the Maple and the Pine be matched with British Oak the while,
As once beneath Egyptian suns the Canadians on the Nile!
Pull, pull, pull! as we track the batteaux up!
It's easy shooting homeward when we're at the top!

NEW SERVICE FOR MAY FIRST

Mayor Reproves Mr. J. Williams

The ferry directors met for the first time since that memorial event of last Friday and in spite of the terrible times which they have all experienced presented the familiar aspect of the same old smiling bunch.

The principal event of the afternoon was the submitting by the manager of the new time table to take effect on May 1st embracing the 20 minute service. The first boat will leave North Vancouver on week days at 6 a.m. At 7 p.m. the old schedule will be reverted to. Last boat, 12.45 a.m. Sunday—1st boat. 7.20, last boat 12.45. Vancouver—1st boat leaves on week days 6.20 a.m. Last boat 1 a.m.

Mr. H. G. Watt of Vancouver wrote asking that a separate cabin for the use of the laboring foreigner be installed on the boats owing to the inconveniences experienced by the other passengers of having their delicate senses disgusted with their proximity.

As this proposition was not considered feasible owing to the present stress of expenditure the letter was filed.

The manager reported that the clock purchased some time ago by the Board would be in position by the 1st of May.

Mr. Larson recommended that some provision be made for looking after the employees of the boats in a more considerate manner. The new schedule would make the already long hours of the crews longer and it was advisable that something be done in the matter. It was decided to take this up after the manager had made a report on it.

It was decided that after the few repairs to No. 3 ferry had been completed the old North Vancouver would be put on the ways and overhauled as her boilers were in need of repair.

In connection with the repairs to this boat the manager recommended that some alterations be made in the deck continuing the upper deck all the way round and dispensing with the gangway that now joins the fore and aft parts. Mr. Heard said that the repairs in connection with the boiler would cost in the vicinity of $300. A motion to the above effect by Mr. Larson was carried.

The manager was instructed to put permanent tops on the pontoons without further delay.

A request for a donation towards the Horse Show by the Horticultural Association was laid over until it was seen what the city and district councils would do in regard to similar requests.

Following Jesse Williams' remark that he thought the architect's report as read at the investigation last Friday was not the same as was shown to the press, Mayor McNeish presented indisputable facts to the director which made him retract this statement. The mayor also spoke to Mr. Williams about airing a colored description of complaints, etc., before any citizen that found time to listen to him on the public streets. "I tell you Jessie Williams that you are worse than an old woman for gossiping," were the mayor's words. He also asked Mr. Williams to present his grievances of this nature before the Board before taking them mysteriously outside and giving people an impression that there was something wrong. Mr. Williams, among other things, said in his defense that he would be a telltale if the occasion arose and spoke of his defense of Manager Heard at the investigation meeting as showing his fairness to the ferry board.

The minutes were conned of previous meetings to ascertain whether Mr. Williams' statement with regard to the secret sessions which he had accused the Mayor of having with the directors was well founded and it was found since the regime of the present chairman that one such committee meeting had been held. Representatives of the press present corroborated these facts.

By motion of Director Paine it was decided to forward a copy of the minutes of each meeting to the Ratepayers' Association. This was passed after objection by Mr. Larson that the 52 cents spent each year in postage was the people's money and as such should not be wasted.

Two vacuum cleaners as used in the Empress C. P. R. boats will be installed in both the St. George and No. 3, "cleanliness being next to Godliness" being the thought uppermost in the minds of the directors in the consideration of this matter. The installation of these two cleaners must remove much of the cause for the many complaints that have of late been received from different sources.

It stands on the south east corner of Lonsdale Avenue and First street and is really two buildings, the corner belonging to the Bank of Hamilton and the southern portion to Mr. J. C. Keith. The latter portion is now practically completed and Messrs. Pierce and Hall have taken possession of their suite on the first floor. Lynn Valley Notes

(Express special correspondent)

Mr. Keely and family are occupying their new home on Frederick Road.

Mr. Wm. Wilkinson has moved in to his new residence on Centre Road.

Mr. Archibald's new house on Doran Road will soon be ready for occupation.

Relatives of Mr. J. McIntyre are on a visit to the Valley for a few weeks.

Miss Hardy, it is expected, will resume her duties in Lynn Valley school next Monday morning.

Mr. Hayter and family have moved back to the Valley, taking up their residence in the cottage on Fromme Road.

At last Westover Road is coming into its own. Some heavy blasting has had to be done as the going is heavy.

The quarterly board meeting of the Methodist church will be held at the home of Mr. Sugden next Saturday evening.

A large number of people visited the Valley last Sunday, some to spend the day with friends, others out for a good airing and not a few looking up real estate.

A number of houses are being connected with the electric service now being installed through the Valley. Mr. Calliphronas is making a specialty of wiring houses or stoves for electric service.

Mr. Crawford's saddle horse met with an accident on the Pipe Line Road last week, being cut in the foot, but we are able to report that the valuable animal was in no way injured, the cut only penetrating the flesh.

Plans are drawn for a 5-room bungalow to be built for Mr. Albert Goodall in the vicinity of the car line at the head of Hoskin Road. Quite a settlement is building up near Mr. Goodall's property. Several applications are in for city water service.

Last Saturday afternoon a very successful birthday party was held on the spacious lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Magennis in honor of their young daughter, Madeline. The grounds presented an enlivened appearance with the throng of young folks enjoying themselves in all kinds of games which were held during the afternoon until supper time. A part of the lawn was reserved for tables which were prettily decorated and held many good things much to the delight of all the young folk. A number of very useful presents were received by the young hostess from her many young girl friends. The happy event closed in time to allow the children to reach their homes before dark.

BOOTLEGGER SENTENCED

Two cases were heard before J. J. Woods J.P. and Mayor McNeish this morning, the most important of which was that of Edward Bu s ch r ed with supplying liquor to Indians. The man was arrested by Constables Prime and Shannon in an Indian's house on 17th street with liquor on the table in front of him. The evidence of Mary Cole, Queen of the False Creek reserve, in defence of Buss was that some unknown man had walked into the house previous to the arrival of Buss, laid the liquor down upon the table and departed with the observation that he would return shortly. On his arrest, however, Buss had admitted the ownership of a flask of gin and as Mary has sworn that this was left by the other unknown man her testimony did not carry much weight.

The Mayor, after administering a very severe reprimand to Miss Cole re her Annanias like tendency to dislocate the truth, pronounced sentence on Buss of $50 and costs or sixty days in gaol. The other case was John Drummond of Vancouver, charged with being drunk on the public streets. Mr. Drummond follows the calling of real estate vendor. On Monday he came over from his native burg to drink in the beauties of the Capilano and spiritus frumentii as supplied adjacent to that masterpiece of nature's handiwork and had evidently forgotten that his horse was hence. The mayor dismissed him with a caution re future infringements.

The BLACK BAG

By Louis Joseph Vance

r, 1908 by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"Partly—partly on my own. Let me put it to you fairly. When you forced yourself upon me, back there in London, you offered me some sort of employment. When I rejected it you used me to your advantage for the furtherance of your purposes, wh ch I confess I don't understand, and mad me miss my steamer. Naturally when I found myself penniless and friendless in a strange country I thought again of your offer and tried to find you to accept it."

"Despite the fact that you're an honest man, Kirkwood?" The fat lips twitched with premature enjoyment.

"I'm a desperate man tonight, whatever I may have been yesterday." The young man's tone was both earnest and convincing. "I think I've shown that by my pertinacity in hunting you down."

"Well—yes." Calendar's thick fingers caressed his lips, trying to hide the dawning smile.

"Is that offer still open?"

His nonchalance completely restored by the frankness of the proposition, Calendar laughed openly and with a trace of irony. The episode seemed to be turning out better than he had anticipated. Gently his mottled fat fingers played about his mouth and chins as he looked Kirkwood up and down.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "that it isn't—now. You're too late, Kirkwood. I've made other arrangements."

"Too bad." Kirkwood's eyes narrowed. "You force me to harsher measures, Calendar."

Genuinely diverted, the adventurer laughed a second time, tipping back in his chair, his huge frame shaking with ponderous enjoyment. "Don't do anything you'd be sorry for," he parroted, sarcastical, the young man's recent admonition to the captain.

"No fear, Calendar. I'm just going to use my advantage, which you wouldn't dispute"—the pistol described an eloquent circle, gleaming in the lamplight—"to levy on you a little legitimate blackmail. Don't be alarmed. I shan't hit you any harder than I have to."

"What?" stammered Calendar, astonished. "What are you driving at?"

"Recompense for my time and trouble. You've cost me a pretty penny, first and last, with your nasty little conspiracy, whatever it's all about. Now, needing the money, I purpose getting some of it back. I shan't precisely rob you, but this is a holdup, all right. Stryker," reproachfully, "I don't see my pearl pin."

"I got it 'ere,' responded the sailor hastily, fumbling with his tie.

"Give it me, then." Kirkwood held out his hand and received the trinket. Then, moving over to the table, the young man, while abating nothing of his watchfulness, sorted out his belongings from the mass of odds and ends Stryker had disgorged. The tale of them was complete. The captain had obeyed him faithfully. Kirkwood looked up, pleased.

"Now, see here, Calendar, this collection of truck that I was robbed of by this resurrected Joe Miller here cost me upward of $150. I'm going to sell it to you at a bargain—say $50, 250 francs."

"The deuce you are!" Calendar's eyes opened wide, partly in admiration. "D'you realize that this is next door to highway robbery, my young friend?"

"High seas piracy, if you prefer," assented Kirkwood with entire equanimity. "I'm going to have the money, and you're going to give it up. The transaction by any name would smell no sweeter, Calendar. Come—fork over!"

"And if I refuse?"

"I wouldn't refuse if I were you."

"Why not?"

"The consequences would be too painful."

"You mean you'd puncture me with that gun?"

"Not unless you attack or attempt to follow me. I mean to say that the Belgian police are notoriously a most efficient body and that I'll make it my duty and pleasure to introduce 'em to you if you refuse. But you won't," Kirkwood added soothingly, "will you, Calendar?"

"No." The adventurer had become suddenly thoughtful. "No, I won't. Glad to oblige you."

He tilted his chair still farther back, straightening out his elephantine legs, inserted one fat hand into his trousers pocket and with some difficulty extracted a combined bill fold and coin purse, at once heavy with gold and bulky with notes. Moistening thumb and forefinger, "How'll you have it?" he inquired, with a lift of his cunning eyes, and, when Kirkwood had advised him, slowly counted out four fifty-franc notes, placed them near the edge of the table and weighted them with five ten-franc pieces. And "That all?" he asked, replacing the pocketbook.

"That will be about all. I leave you presently to your unholy devices, you and that gay dog over there." The captain squirmed, reddening. "Just by way of precaution, however, I'll ask you to wait in here till I'm off." Kirkwood stepped backward to the door of the captain's room, opened it and removed the key from the inside. "Please take Mulready in with you," he continued. "By the time you get out I'll be clear of Antwerp. Please don't think of refusing me. I really mean it."

The latter clause came sharply as Calendar seemed to hesitate, his weary, wary eyes glimmering with doubt. Kirkwood, watching him as a cat her prey, intercepted a lightning swift sidelong glance that shifted from his face to the port lockers, forward. But the fat adventurer was evidently to a considerable degree deluded by the very childlike simplicity of Kirkwood's attitude. If the possibility that his altercation with Mulready had been overheard crossed his mind, Calendar had little choice other than to accept the chance. Either way he *moved the risk was great. If he re*fused to be locked in the captain's room, there was the danger of the police, to which Kirkwood had convincingly drawn attention. If he accepted the temporary imprisonment, he took a risk with the gladstone bag. On the other hand, he had estimated Kirkwood's honesty as thoroughgoing from their first interview. He had appraised him as a gentleman and a man of honor. And he did not believe the young man knew, after all. Perplexed, at length he chose the smoother way and, with an indulgent lifting of eyebrows and fat shoulders, rose and waddled over to Mulready.

"Oh, all right," he conceded, with deep toleration in his tone for the idiosyncrasies of youth; "it's all the same to me, beau." He laughed a nervous laugh. "Come along and lend us a hand, Stryker."

The latter glanced timidly at Kirkwood, his eyes pleading for leave to move, which Kirkwood accorded with an imperative nod and a fine flourish of the revolver. Promptly the captain sprang to Calendar's assistance, and, between the two of them, the one taking Mulready's head, the other his feet, they lugged him quickly into the stuffy little stateroom. Kirkwood, watching and following to the threshold, inserted the key.

"One word more," he counseled, a hand on the knob. "Don't forget I've warned you what'll happen if you try to break even with me."

"Never fear, little one!" Calendar's laugh was nervously cheerful. "The Lord knows you're welcome."

"Thank you most to death," responded Kirkwood politely. "Goodby and goodby to you, Stryker. Glad to have humored your desire to meet me soon again."

CHAPTER XXII.

KIRKWOOD, turning the key in the lock, withdrew it and dropped it on the cabin table. At the same time he swept into his pocket the money he had extorted of Calendar. Then he paused an instant, listening. From the captain's room came a sound of murmurs and scuffling. He crossed to the port locker forward.

He had its lid up in a twinkling and in another had lifted out the well remembered black gladstone bag.

This seems to have been his first compound larceny.

As if stimulated by some such reflection, he sprang for the companionway, dropping the lid of the locker with a bang which must have been excruciatingly edifying to the men in the captain's room. Whatever their emotions, the bang was mocked by a mighty kick, shaking the door, which Kirkwood reflected, opened outward was held only by the frailest kind of a lock and would not hold long.

Spurred onward by a storm of curses, Stryker's voice chanting infuriated cacophony with Calendar's, Kirkwood leaped up the companionway even as the second tremendous kick threatened to shatter the panels. Heart in mouth, a chill shiver of guilt running up and down his spine, he gained the deck, cast loose the painter, drew in his rowboat and dropped over the side, then, the gladstone bag nestling between his feet, sat down and bent to the oars.

And doubts assailed him, pressing close upon the ebb of his excitement—doubts and fears innumerable.

There was no longer a distinction to be drawn between himself and Calendar; no more could he esteem himself a better and more honest man than that accomplished swindler. He was not advised as to the Belgian code, but English law, he understood, made no allowance for the good intent of those caught in possession of stolen property. Though he was acting with the most honorable motives in the world, the law, if he came within its cognizance, would undoubtedly place him on Calendar's plane and judge him by the same standard. To all intents and purposes he was a thief, and thief he would remain until the gladstone bag with its contents should be restored to its rightful owner.

Voluntarily, then, he had stepped from the ranks of the hunters to those of the hunted. He now feared police interference as abjectly as did Calendar and his set of rogues, and Kirkwood felt wholly warranted in assuming that the adventurer, with his keen intelligence, would not handicap himself by ignoring this point. Indeed, if he were to be judged by what Kirkwood had inferred of his character, Calendar would let nothing whatever hinder him, neither fear of bodily hurt nor danger of apprehension at the hands of the police, from making a determined and savage play to regain possession of his booty.

Well! (Kirkwood set his mouth savagely.) Calendar should have a run for his money!

For the present he could compliment himself with the knowledge that he had outwitted the rogues, had lifted the jewels and probably two-thirds of their armament. He had also the start, the knowledge of their criminal guilt and intent and his own plans to comfort him. As for the latter, he did not believe that Calendar would immediately fathom them, so he took heart of grace and tugged at the oars with a will, pulling directly for the city and permitting the current to drift him downstream at its pleasure. There could be no more inexcusable folly than to return to the Quay Steen landing and possibly the arms of the despoiled boat owner.

At first he could hear crash after splintering crash sounding dully muffled from the cabin of the Alethea, a veritable devil's tattoo beaten out by the feet of the prisoners. Evidently the fastening was serving him better than he had dared hope. But as the black rushing waters widened between boat and brigantine the clamor aboard the latter subsided, indicating that Calendar and Stryker had broken out or been released by the crew. In ignorance as to whether he were seen or being pursued, Kirkwood pulled on winning in under the shadow of the quays and permitting the boat to drift down to a lonely landing on the edge of the dockyard quarter of Antwerp.

Here all-hatless, he made the boat fast and, soothing his conscience with a surmise that its owner would find it there in the morning, strode swiftly over to the tram line that runs along the embankment, swung aboard an adventitious car and broke his first ten franc piece in order to pay his fare.

The car made a leisurely progress up past the old Steen castle and the quay landing, Kirkwood sitting quietly, the gladstone bag under his hand, a searching gaze sweeping the water side. No sign of the adventurers rewarded him, but it was now all chance, all hazard. He had no more heart for confidence.

They passed the Hotel du Commerce. Kirkwood stared up at its windows wondering.

A little farther on a disengaged fiacre, its driver alert for possible fares, turned a corner into the esplanade. At sight of it Kirkwood, inspired, hopped nimbly off the tram car and signaled the cabby. The latter pulled up and Kirkwood started to charge him with instructions, something which he did haltingly, hampered by a slight haziness of purpose. While thus engaged and at rest in the stark glare of the street lamps, with no chance of concealing himself, he was aware of a rising tumult in the direction of the landing and, glancing round, discovered a number of people running toward him. With no time to wonder whether or no he was really the object of the hue and cry, he tossed the driver three silver francs.

"Gare Centrale," he cried, "and drive like the devil!"

Diving into the fiacre, he shut the door and stuck his head out of the window, taking observations. A ragged fringe of silly rabble was bearing down upon them, with one or two gendarmes in the forefront and a giant, who might or might not be Stryker, a close second. Furthermore, another cab seemed to have been requisitioned for the chase. His heart misgave him momentarily, but his driver had taken him at his word and generosity, and in a breath the fiacre had turned the corner on two wheels, and the glittering reaches of the embankment, drive and promenade were blotted out, as if smudged with lampblack, by the obscurity of a narrow and tortuous side street.

He drew in his head the better to preserve his brains against further emergencies.

After a block or two Kirkwood picked up the gladstone bag, gently opened the door and put a foot on the step, pausing to look back. The other cab was pelting after him with all the enthusiasm of a hound on a fresh trail. He reflected that this mad progress through the thoroughfares of a civilized city would not long endure without police intervention. So he waited, watching his opportunity. The fiacre hurtled onward, the driver leaning forward from his box to urge the horse with lash of whip and tongue, entirely unconscious of his fare's intentions.

Between two streets the mouth of a narrow and darksome byway flashed into view. Kirkwood threw wide the door and leaped, trusting to the night to hide his stratagem, to luck to save his limbs. Neither failed him. In a twinkling he was on all fours in the mouth of the alley, and as he picked himself up the second fiacre passed, Calendar himself poking a round bald

NORTH VANCOUVER, APRIL 28, 1911

NORTH VANCOUVER BUREAU OF PUBLICITY AND INFORMATION

A forward movement of the very greatest importance in the progress of the development of North Shore interests will have been accomplished if the Joint Civic Advertising Committee is able to realize the latest project which they have taken in hand, namely the establishing of a local bureau of information in charge of a competent manager with a convenient office near the ferry landing.

In the prosecution of the purpose for which they were appointed, the members of the Joint Civic Advertising Committee have made a special study for over two years of matters pertaining to the pushing of North Shore interests through advertising and have become thoroughly convinced of the immense benefits to accrue from an energetic and persistent policy of civic publicity, relative to the city and the district of North Vancouver. The schemes which they have adopted and have been able to carry through have proven highly satisfactory and have yielded excellent results, but at the same time the limited means at their command have necessitated the rejection of very many propositions which might have been used to advantage as well as the laying aside of many projects which would have proven beneficial in the highest degree had the means been at command for their adoption.

The members of the committee are all busy men who, while devoting themselves faithfully to the interests entrusted to them, have been able to give only portions of their time to the actual prosecution of the work. For a long time it has been recognized by the committee that the work was being carried at more or less disadvantage and that in order to operate in the most economical and effective manner it would be necessary to employ a competent manager who would devote his entire time and energies to the problem of North Shore publicity and kindred objects. The work of the committee has now developed to such an extent that the immediate establishing of a local bureau of information is considered imperative and in planning their campaign for the ensuing year the committee have accordingly decided to devote all the means and energy at their command in the first instance to making that bureau a fact and to promoting its usefulness and success, believing that it is the one outstanding requirement at the present juncture for the promotion of the community interests of the North Shore in their relation to the outside public.

At the present time the conditions are ideal for reaching personally every newcomer who arrives at North Vancouver inasmuch as the ferry constitutes the gateway through which all but the merest fraction will enter. It is, therefore, only necessary to place the office of the bureau just outside the gates of the ferry landing, with a prominent sign attached, and the manager is at once placed in personal contact with practically all the new arrivals, whether they come merely as transient travellers, as homeseekers or investors.

Even on this basis the bureau would result in benefits, the volume of which would fully justify its maintenance from the civic standpoint in disseminating information of every kind to visitors, in placing in their hands literature descriptive of the North Shore from every point of view and in rendering strangers every possible assistance toward making their visit pleasant or profitable. Directing its efforts farther afield, the bureau could devise means of attracting the attention of the population on the south shore of the Inlet whether along the line of advantages as to residence or investment and could do a very great deal to stimulate interest upon the part of the desirable elements of the population of the entire lower mainland and beyond in North Vancouver. It could likewise very greatly increase the volume of travel toward the North Shore on a permanent basis and on special occasions. As an illustration of the latter, there are many occasions on which conventions are held in Vancouver or when large parties of tourists arrive in that city who would be very pleased to take a trip to this side of the Inlet if it were brought to their attention and ready facilities were provided. This the manager might take in hand with good results.

At longer range still it would be the province of the bureau to get in touch with the great avenues of advertising throughout the continent, in Europe and elsewhere. It would be its duty to get in line with the great transportation companies in this regard, with the immigration offices in England and in other countries and to make the very best use of all these avenues for the wide dissemination of useful information with respect to the North Shore.

The above outline is the merest indication of the general lines along which such a bureau would operate to the great benefit of the city and the district. It is quite evident that underneath this there lies an immense mass of detail which might be developed in an endless variety of ways and to a limitless extent as means and opportunity might allow, always for the single purpose of pushing the North Shore to the front in the public gaze and keeping it there as well as in procuring the greatest amount of tangible results of a practical nature therefrom.

The development of the work has now reached that stage at which in order to cope with it, such an arrangement as that designated is absolutely essential and the Joint Civic Advertising Committee, composed as it is, of representatives from the city council, the district council, the Board of Ferry Directors and the Board of Trade, constitutes an excellent organization under whose direction the scheme can be perfected. It is therefore, the intention of the Committee to approach the several bodies represented with the definite object of procuring the necessary support to carry the plan into effect.

LOCAL ATHLETIC SPORTS

The application of an outside lacrosse team operating under the name of North Vancouver for a bonus of one thousand dollars from the city council upon which the Joint Civic Advertising Committee has reported adversely, calls attention to the desirability of the Board of Aldermen devoting a small portion of their revenue this year toward the encouragement of athletic sports in the city. If the council could see their way clear to expend a few hundred dollars on levelling a portion of Victoria Park east, sufficient for lacrosse, baseball and similar games, it would prove a veritable boon to local athletics. The present athletic grounds are all right in themselves but those who have had actual experience in endeavoring to encourage athletics amongst our young men have proven very effectively that the location of the grounds exerts such a discouraging influence upon the most energetic efforts as to render it practically impossible to create and sustain the necessary enthusiasm to make any movement a success. If on the other hand a campus were provided in a location close in the clubs would have a much better opportunity of making a success of their efforts and the local public would take a much greater interest which would be of the greatest assistance. Victoria Park is splendidly situated for the purpose and the portion lying on the eastern side of Lonsdale Avenue is not utilized for any purpose at the present time. A comparatively small amount of expenditure with teams and scrapers would make a comparatively level ground of sufficient dimensions for the purposes of the clubs. What with the band concerts on the west side and the games on the east side, Victoria Park would become a favorite resort for the local public during the approaching summer evenings and the park would be made to serve the purpose of public benefit, for which it was intended. It is high time that North Vancouver took an active part in athletics on the lower mainland and any reasonable amount of money expended in order to encourage local athletic interests would be well placed.

GEO. H. COWAN, M. P. ON RECIPROCITY

Address Delivered at Sarnia, Ont.---A. S. Goodeve and Hon. W. J. Hanna Also Spoke.

The London, (Ont.) Free Press of Saturday, April 1st, contains an extended report of a meeting held in Sarnia on March 31st, which paper said was the biggest held to date in Western Ontario in opposition to the proposed agreement. The chief speakers were Geo. H. Cowan, M.P., for Vancouver and A. S. Goodeve, M.P. for Kootenay. Hon. W. J. Hanna of the Ontario legislature, also spoke briefly.

The report proceeds:

Geo. H. Cowan, M.P., was the first speaker of the evening. Liberal speakers, he said, were arguing that the present agreement was merely a resumption of the trade conditions existing from 1854 to 1876, and that it made trade equality between the two countries. It was true that natural products were allowed to exchange on equal terms, but there was no such condition with respect to other products. Here Canadian products faced a tariff twice as high as that which was held against the U. S. products.

From 1854 to 1866, under the old treaty, Canada had become a greater consumer of American goods than ever before; and the railways of the United States became the carriers of this great trade headed to Canada. Would this be the effect under the new agreement, he asked, and felt that it would. The new agreement let American shingles into Canada free, but Canadian shingles must pay 30 cents a thousand to enter the United States. This was but one instance of a policy of "selling a hide for a dime, and buying back the tail for a dollar." The whole tendency was to shift the carrying trade to the United States and to confine the employment of labor to the grind of producing the raw materials on the free list, to be later worked up by the high-priced labor of the United States.

Protection, he said, had increased the number of industries employing labor in Canada. The commodity of the laborer was his labor, the most perishable of all commodities, therefore, it must be the policy of the government to increase industries so that there might be plenty of labor. Wages had never been so low in Canada as from 1854 to 1866. The best gauge of a nation's prosperity was wages. Reduction of wages and reduction of profits was what constituted bad times.

"Do the workmen of this city want to see a return to the labor conditions that prevailed from 1854 to 1866?" asked the speaker. Labor and never received such wages as prevailed at the present time, but the result of reciprocity would surely be to reduce them.

COUNTRY'S HANDS TIED.

But some one might answer that if evil effects came, the tariff could be changed to protect industry. This had been tried by Canada in 1866, and the treaty had then been abrogated by the United States. Today Canada was in quite as bad a position as far as protecting its industries was concerned. The only instrument for protection of industries and labor was the tariff, to be raised or lowered according to the needs of the country, and yet Messrs. Fielding and Paterson had decided that the instrument should hang on the wall as long as the treaty endured. So if industry had suffered under the old treaty it would suffer still more under the new. The reciprocity agreement fixed rates of duty and the government had no power to change it.

The old treaty was abrogated in 1866. The United States then hoped that Canada would either enter the union or go into abrogation. She did neither one, though there were hard days following. But the peril of those days brought forward men of stout heart to meet the danger, men like John A. McDonald, George Brown, Alex. Mackenzie and others. What was their policy but Canadian resources for Canadian development, Canadian labor for Canadian production and Canada within the Empire. Confederation was their greatest achievement, the purchase of the west and the bringing in of Manitoba, British Columbia and Prince Edward, other steps in national development. They built the railways to bring producer and consumer together and create a demand for labor in Canada. This was accomplished through that greatest of all policies, the national policy. The result had been in Canada there had been developed an inter-provincial trade jumping from two millions to four hundred millions per year, far and away beyond foreign trade in value. Then there was city and country trade added until 80 per cent. of Canada's production was consumed at home, nine-tenths of the remaining 20 per cent. getting top prices in England. The small balance going to the United States was the cause of the present agitation in Canada.

Why should present circumstances in Canada be lost sight of and all arguments be based upon the reciprocity conditions of half a century ago. Canada of today was not the Canada of old. There was no valid argument that could be advanced in support of this betrayal of Canadian industry, labor and transportation and the sacrifice of the fruit men of North Lambton and elsewhere. Nothing but the mesmerism of Mr. Taft over Mr. Fielding and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But men who prated of the ripened fruit ready to fall from the parent tree," were fit subjects for the "Tafty crafty song of reciprocity."

WAIVING THE BRITISH FLAG—

The speaker said he might be accused of waving the British flag and beating the imperial drum, but knowing western conditions as he did, he felt that there was some need for waving the British flag and beating the Imperial drum. The old stock in the west was loyal, but there were many in the west who lately owed allegiance to another land, and they had not yet learned to love Canada as do Canadians. The old Ontario stock in the west would have to be the leaven in the lump. In such a time would it be the wise thing to still further sever the bonds binding east and west and turn the channels of trade to the land from which so many of the new settlers had but recently come. The British flag must mean something to Canada if the Dominion was to march down the centuries, the chief of a great company of nations united in the greatest of empires.

A. H. Goodeve, M.P., followed, also speaking on the reciprocity issue. Following along historical lines, he reviewed the way in which Canada had been developed from the landing of Champlain down to the present day.

Mr. Goodeve said that he had followed with much interest the pledges made by Sir Wilfrid when in the west and most prominent of all was the promise that the tariff would be changed only after proper examination by a tariff board. His actions were entirely at variance with this.

To illustrate the results which the National Policy had brought to Canada, Mr. Goodeve repeated the history of a typical Canadian industry which had been told to him by the founder on the train coming to Sarnia. Seven years ago this man had opened a small factory in Port Hope for the manufacture of enamelled ware in which 35 men were employed. Today that factory was employing 700 men and farm lands which seven years ago were worth from $40 to $75 an acre were now held at from $150 to $175 an acre. It did not look from this as if the farmers had been robbed in building up this industry. But how about prices? Previous to the establishment of this factory enamelled bathtubs sold for $35. That factory brought the price down to $17 and compelled the establishment in Canada of a branch of the Pittsburg plant, the largest in the world. This American branch, located in Toronto, was building a $600,000 plant and would employ 1,000 men.

The black rushing waters widened between boat and brigantine.

poll out of the window to incite his driver's cupidity with promises of redoubled fare.

Kirkwood mopped his dripping forehead and whistled low with dismay. It seemed that from that instant on it was to be a vendetta with a vengeance. Calendar, as he had foreseen, was stopping at nothing.

At a dogtrot he sped down the alley to the next street, on which he turned back—more sedately—toward the river, debouching on the esplanade just one block from the Hotel du Commerce. As he swung past the serried tables of a cafe whatever fears he had harbored were banished by the discovery that the excitement occasioned by the chase had already subsided. Beneath the garish awnings the crowd was laughing and chattering, eating and sipping its beer with complete unconcern, heedless altogether of the haggard and shabby young man carrying a black hand bag. Without attracting any attention whatever, indeed, he mingled with the strolling crowds, making his way toward the Hotel du Commerce. Yet he was not at all at ease. His uneasy conscience invested the gladstone bag with a magnetic attraction for the public eye. To carry it unconcealed in his hand furnished him with a sensation as disturbing as though its worn black sides had been stenciled "Stolen!" in letters of flame. He felt it rendered him a cynosure of public interest, an object of suspicion to the wide, cold world; that the gaze which lit upon the bag traveled to his face only to espy thereon the brand of guilt.

For ease of mind presently he turned into a convenient shop and spent ten invaluable francs for a hand satchel big enough to hold the gladstone bag.

With more courage, now that he had the hateful thing under cover, he found and entered the Hotel du Commerce.

In the little closet which served for an office, over a desk visibly groaning with the weight of an enormous and grimy registry book, a sleepy, fat, bland and good natured woman presided, a benign and drowsy divinity of even tempered courtesy. To his misleading inquiry for M. Calendar she returned a cheerful permission to seek that gentleman for himself.

"Three flights, m'sieu', in the front. Suit 17 it is. M'sieu' does not mind walking up?" she inquired.

M'sieu did not in the least, though by no strain of the imagination could it be truthfully said that he walked up those steep and redolent stairways of the Hotel du Commerce d'Anvers. More literally, he flew with winged feet, spurning each third padded step with a force that raised a tiny cloud of fine white dust from the carpeting.

Breathless, at last he paused at the top of the third flight. His heart was hammering, his pulses drumming like wild things; there was a queer constriction in his throat, a fire of hope in his heart alternating with the ice of doubt. Suppose she were not there! What if he were mistaken? What if he had misunderstood? What if Mulready and Calendar had referred to another lodging house? He passed down the corridor to the door whose panels wore the painted legend 17 and there knocked.

Believing that he overheard from within a sudden startled exclamation, he smiled patiently, tolerant of her surprise.

Burning with impatience as with a fever, he endured a long minute's wait.

Misgivings were prompting him to knock again and summon her by name when he heard footfalls on the other side of the door, followed by a click of the lock. The door was opened grudgingly a bare six inches.

Of the alarmed expression in the eyes that stared into his he took no account. His face lengthened a little as he stood there, dumb, panting, staring, and his heart sank, down, deep down into a gulf of disappointment, weighted sorely with chagrin.

Then, of the two the first to recover countenance, he doffed his cap and bowed.

"Good evening, Mrs. Hallam," he said, with a rueful smile.

CHAPTER XXIII.

NOW, if Kirkwood's emotion was poignant, Mrs. Hallam's astonishment paralleled and her relief transcended it. In order to understand this it must be remembered that, while Mr. Kirkwood was aware of the lady's presence in Antwerp, on her part she had known nothing of him since he had so ungallantly fled her company in Sheerness. She seemed to anticipate that either Calendar or one of his fellows would be discovered at the door, to have surmised it without any excessive degree of pleasure.

Only briefly she hesitated, while her surprise swayed her. Then, with a hardening of the eyes and a curt little nod, "I'm sorry," she said with decision, "but I am busy and can't see you now, Mr. Kirkwood," and attempted to shut the door in his face.

Deftly Kirkwood forestalled her intention by inserting a foot between the door and the jamb. He had dared too greatly to be thus dismissed. "Pardon me," he countered, unabashed, "but I wish to speak with Miss Calendar."

"Dorothy," returned the lady with spirit, "is engaged."

"I intend," he told her quietly, "to see Miss Calendar. It's useless your trying to hinder me. We may as well understand each other, madam, and I'll tell you now that if you wish to avoid a scene"—

"Dorothy," the woman called over her shoulder, "ring for the porter."

"By all means," assented Kirkwood agreeably. "I'll send him for a gendarme."

"You insolent puppy!"

"Madam, your wit disarms me"—

"What is the matter, Mrs. Hallam?" interrupted a voice from the other side of the door. "Who is it?"

"Miss Calendar!" cried Kirkwood hastily, raising his voice.

"Mr. Kirkwood!" the reply came on the instant. She knew his voice. "Please, Mrs. Hallam, I will see Mr Kirkwood."

"You have no time to waste with him, Dorothy," said the woman coldly. "I must insist"—

"But you don't seem to understand; it is Mr. Kirkwood!" argued the girl, as if he were ample excuse for any imprudence.

Kirkwood's scant store of patience was by this time rapidly becoming exhausted. "I should advise you not to interfere any further, Mrs. Hallam," he told her in a tone low, but charged with meaning.

How much did he know? She eyed him an insant longer in sullen suspicion, then swung open the door, yielding with what grace she could. "Won't you come in, Mr. Kirkwood?" she inquired, with acidulated courtesy.

"If you press me," he returned winningly, "how can I refuse? You are too good!"

His impertinence disconcerted even himself. He wondered that she did not slap him as he passed her, entering the room, and felt that he deserved it, despite her attitude. But such thoughts could not long trouble one whose eyes were enchanted by the sight of Dorothy confronting him in the middle of the dingy room, her hands, bristling dangerously with hatpins, busy with the adjustment of a small gray toque atop the wonder that was her hair. So vivacious and charming she seemed, so spirited and bright her welcoming smile, so foreign was she altogether to the picture of her worn and distraught, that he had mentally conjured up, that he stopped in an extreme of disconcertion and dropped the hand bag, smiling sheepishly enough under her ready laughmirth irresistibly incited by the plainly read play of expression on his mobile countenance.

"You must forgive the unconventionality, Mr. Kirkwood," she apologized, needlessly enough, but to cover his embarrassment. "I am on the point of going out with Mrs. Hallam, and of course you are the last person on earth I expected to meet here."

"It's good to see you, Miss Calendar," he said simply, remarking with much satisfaction that her trim walking costume bore witness to her statement that she was prepared for the street.

The girl glanced into a mirror, patted the small, bewitching hat an infinitesimal fraction of an inch to one side and turned to him again, her hands free. One of them, small, but cordial, rested in his grasp for an instant all too brief, the while he gazed earnestly into her face, noting with concern what the first glance had not shown him—the almost imperceptible shadows beneath her eyes and cheek bones, pathetic records of the hours the girl had spent since last he had seen her in company with care.

She was changed—a little, but changed. She had suffered and was suffering, and, forced by suffering, her nascent womanhood was stirring in the bud. The child that he had met in London in Antwerp he found grown to woman's stature and slowly coming to comprehension of the nature of the change in herself, the wonder of it glowing softly in her eyes.

The clear understanding of mankind that is an appanage of woman's estate was now added to the intuitions of a girl's untroubled heart. She could not be blind to the mute adoration of his gaze, nor could she resent it. Beneath it she colored and lowered her lashes.

"I was about to go out," she repeated in confusion. "I—it's pleasant to see you too."

"Thank you," he stammered ineptly. "I—I"—

"If Mr. Kirkwood will excuse us, Dorothy," Mrs. Hallam's sharp tones struck in discordantly, "we shall be glad to see him when we return to London."

"I am infinitely complimented, Mrs. Hallam," Kirkwood assured her, and of the girl quickly, "You're going back home?" he asked.

She nodded, with a faint, puzzled smile that included the woman. "After a little—not immediately. Mrs. Hallam is so kind"—

"Pardon me," he interrupted, "but tell me one thing, please. Have you any one in England to whom you can go without invitation and be welcomed and cared for—any friends or relations?"

"Dorothy will be with me," Mrs. Hallam answered for her, with cold defiance.

Deliberately insolent, Kirkwood turned his back to the woman. "Miss Calendar, will you answer my question for yourself?" he asked the girl pointedly.

"Why, yes, several friends—none in London, but"—

"Dorothy"—

"One moment, Mrs. Hallam," Kirkwood flung crisply over his shoulder. "I'm going to ask you something rather odd, Miss Calendar," he continued, seeking the girl's eyes. "I hope"—

"Dorothy, I"—

"If you please, Mrs. Hallam," suggested the girl, with just the right shade of independence, "I wish to listen to Mr. Kirkwood. He has been very kind to me and has every right." She turned to him again, leaving the woman breathless and speechless with anger.

"You told me once," Kirkwood continued quickly and, he felt, brazenly, "that you considered me kind, thoughtful and considerate. You know me no better today than you did then, but I want to beg you to trust me a little. Can you trust yourself to my protection until we reach your friends in England?"

"Why, I"— the girl faltered, taken by surprise.

"Mr. Kirkwood!" cried Mrs. Hallam angrily, finding her voice.

Kirkwood turned to meet her onslaught with a mien grave, determined, unflinching. "Please do not interfere, madam," he said quietly.

"You are impertinent, sir! Dorothy, I forbid you to listen to this person!"

The girl flushed, lifting her chin a trifle. "Forbid?" she repeated wonderingly.

Kirkwood was quick to take advantage of her resentment. "Mrs. Hallam is not fitted to advise you," he insisted, "nor can she control your actions. It must already have occurred to you that you're rather out of place in the present circumstances. The men who have brought you hither I believe you already see through to some extent. Forgive my speaking plainly. But that is why you have accepted Mrs. Hallam's offer of protection. Will you take my word for it when I tell you she has not your right interests at heart, but the reverse? I happen to know, Miss Calendar, and I"—

"How dare you, sir?"

Flaming with rage, Mrs. Hallam put herself bodily between them, confronting Kirkwood in white lipped desperation, her small gloved hands clinched and quivering at her sides, her green eyes dangerous.

But Kirkwood could silence her, and he did. "Do you wish me to speak frankly, madam? Do you wish me to tell what I know and all I know," with rising emphasis, "of your social status and your relations with Calendar and Mulready? I promise you that if you wish it or force me to it"—

But he had need to say nothing further. The woman's eyes wavered before his, and a little sob of terror forced itself between her shut teeth. Kirkwood smiled grimly, with a face of brass, impenetrable, inflexible. And suddenly she turned from him with indifferent bravado.

"As Mr. Kirkwood says, Dorothy," she said in her high metallic voice, "I have no authority over you. But if you're silly enough to consider for a moment this fellow's insulting suggestion, if you're fool enough to go with him unchaperoned through Europe and imperil your"—

"Mrs. Hallam!" Kirkwood cut her short, with a menacing tone.

—"why, then, I wash my hands of you," concluded the woman defiantly. "Make your choice, my child," she added, with a meaning laugh, and moved away, humming a snatch from a French song, which brought the hot blood to Kirkwood's face.

"The honor of an American gentleman."

But the girl did not understand, and he was glad of that. "You may judge between us," he appealed to her directly once more. "I can only offer you my word of honor as an American gentleman that you shall be landed in England safe and sound by the first available steamer."

"There's no need to say more, Mr. Kirkwood," Dorothy informed him quietly. "I have already decided. I

Important Dry Docks Contracts Awarded

Imperial Car Company's Correspondent in England Makes Interesting Report Today.

FINANCED IN LONDON

Steps Well Under Way for Consummation of This Company's Great Undertaking.

Important news was received by officials of the Imperial Car Company, Limited, this morning from Mr. Bullock, who, it will be remembered, was in Vancouver a short time ago in connection with the building of the dry-dock at Roche Point.

Mr. Bullock states that he has let a dozen important contracts for the company, the largest of these being to the firm of Swan & Hunter for the main structure. This immense dock will be built in sections in London and shipped to this city. Details are awaited with interest by citizens of Vancouver, to whom the magnitude and importance of the company's various undertakings has strongly appealed. According to the terms of th Dominion subsidy construction will begin next month.

SECOND NARROWS BRIDGE PROJECT

News-Advertiser, April 11th

Mr E. W. MacLean returned on Sunday from a six weeks' trip to the East, convinced that there is no city there to touch Vancouver. As regards the Second Narrows bridge project, the deputation on which he met at Ottawa, he considers the substructure work should be started in six weeks' time, before which time Reeve McNaught is expected back from England and will probably make a statement on the subject. Mr. MacLean thinks there is no question as to the federal grant.

Second Quarter. Lesson V. Jonah III. 1-IV :11 April 30, 1911.

GOD'S PITY FOR THE HEATHEN

The Book of Jonah is a ring of gold curiously graven with mystic device of ship and city, fish and gourd, but what gives it its great value is the solitaire with which it blazes. The gem which the ring clasps and shows to greatest possible advantage is the infinite love of God. Four centuries at least before John said it categorically Jonah said it in a pictoral way "God is Love!" That he should send his prophet out of Palestine to a heathen city reveals as in a diamond flash the wideness of God's mercy, that he cared at all to have an alien city repent, that he compassionated a condition of ignorance so pitiful that it could not discern right hand from left and that his tender consideration descends to the dumb brutes—none of the great religions of antiquity flash such light on the character of Deity! Scarcely any other part of the Old Testament does as much. That is what makes this booklet of four scant chapters, totalling only forty eight brief verses, one of the mightiest things ever done with a pen, making it "all mens' book" as Carlisle once called the Book of Job. That such a piece of literature could ever be the butt of coarse wit is a marvel. Yet no other book in the Bible has been so ridiculed. It has been considered the vulnerablest spot, weakest link which reduces the whole sacred volume to a rope of sand. If the average man had discriminated between the writing itself and the artificial theological framework which with the best intent it has been surrounded the results would not have been so disastrous. Men who should have been better employed have fallen to tithing mint and cummin, measuring whales' jaws and estimating the power of the human cuticle to resist the gastric juice of a fish and have neglected the weightier matter—the splendid message of the book—its declaration under a figure against the racial prejudice which would limit the divine pity to a single race. The flight of Jonah illustrates the inveterate and narrow-hearted prejudice from which even a prophet could not free himself. What happened to him shows in a dramatic way the futility of going contrary to the divine purpose. As well hurl oneself against pillars of Hercules. Heathen sailor and heathen citizen appear in better light than holy prophet. The sailors are not so prejudiced that they cannot pray to the God of Israel and the Ninevites repent. But Jonah's prejudice carries him to deeper depth. Nineveh's repentance disappoints him. He would rather die than see the city saved! Another object lesson must be given. The prophet is revealed to himself as more regretful over the withering of a gourd than a city, a gourd of one night's growth than a city crammed to its gates with men, women and children. The abrupt close of the book is its most impressive feature. It has been aptly said that Israelitish prophecy quits as victor in the severest struggle—that against itself!.

THE TEACHER'S LANTERN

In this instance spiritual truth is more important than historical fact. It is better to know that the love of God is all-embracing than that a human being could and did lie in a whale's belly seventy-two hours and live to tell the tale. To stake the credibility of the whole bible on the credibility of one incident in the smallest book—to say if this is not true then the Bible as a whole is not credible would seem unwise. Such method would not be adopted in other literature. The graphic style is well illustrated in the cry of the ship-master, "What meanest Thou, o sleeper? Arise and call upon thy God!" Heathen sailors showed less prejudice than the prophet. They prayed to his God. Jonah's prayer, which is also a psalm deserves place in ritual and psalter. No finer example of the conditional nature of prophetical announcement can be found. When Nineveh repented God repented. Heathen sailors had enviable traits like the "Goad Samaritan." St. Paul asks "What advantage hath the Jew?" and then answers his question, saying "Much! to him was committed the oracles of God!" But Jewry held the truth as an almoner. "God gave the word" but great was to be the campany of publishers! Jonah is a tract on foreign missions. Prof. McFayden of Toronto declares Jonah in some ways the greatest book of the old Testament. Prof. Cornill of Konigsberg says he has read Jonah one hundred times, but cannot take up the marvellous book without tears coming to his eyes. The fourth chapter is the climax. For its sake the preceding chapters were written. The question "Should not I have pity in Nineveh?" ends it. Nothing could surpass the effective progress. High water mark of prophecy is reached. Paternity within Creatorship—nothing need be added.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEVOTIONAL SERVICE—April 30, 1911. Isaiah LX:1-12. A MISSIONARY JOURNEY AROUND THE WORLD—Missions in Hawaii and the Phillippines.

Eight years and the centenary of missions in the Sandwich Islands will be celebrated. The evangelism of the Islands has been phenomenally rapid, accounted for in part by the fact that the local idols had been already discarded when the missionaries landed. Titus Coan is most conspicuous among the heroes of the field. He baptized twelve thousand converts during his ministry, receiving one thousand seven hundred on a single Sunday. He built the largest church in mission lands. The Phillippine Islands witnessed the equitable partition of territory between the seven great missionary denominations, thus avoiding the appearance of competition or duplication of work.

Banks, Railways and Millers Look for Record

Say That Outlook for Harvest This Year is Best Ever—Activities in Various Spheres on Account of Wheat Crop.

(From our own correspondent)

Montreal, April 27.—The banks, the millers, the harvest machinery manufacturers, the transportation interests, are all looking forward to the farmers of Canada making a record in the matter of the country's total wheat crop this year. The banks lend money on the crops and they are preparing to lend generously this year. The millers grind wheat into flour and they are expecting to keep their mills working overtime this year. The transportation companies handle the crop and they are increasing their rolling stock and fleets of vessels this year.

In connection with the harvest outlook an important announcement was made this week that interests closely identified with the Canadian Cereal and Milling Company, had purchased the International Milling Company and that a holding company was about to be formed which would direct the affairs of both companies. Mr. J. D. Flavelle, the president of the former organization is spoken of as the president of the new company. Both the Cereal and Milling Company and the International Milling Company stand high financially and commercially and the joining of the two will have no little effect on the handling of this year's crop. The Cereal Co's. mills are all located in Ontario, namely at Tillsonburg, Lindsay, Toronto, London, Fergus, Embro, Woodstock, Ayr, Galt and Highgate, and have a combined capacity of over 5,500 barrels per day of flour, rolled oats and oatmeal. The International, as its name implies, has mills on both sides of the boundary, four in the United States and one at Moose Jaw It was founded in 1896 by Mr. F. A Bean of New Prague, Minnesota, who started with one small mill. Today it has mills at New Prague, Walls and Blue Earth, Minnesota, and at Davenport, Iowa, and at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. In making these expansions not a dollar outside of the actual earnings of the organization has been spent. This year the International is enlarging the Moose Jaw mill, erecting a rolled oats mill at the same place and acquiring a string of elevators throughout the west. The new combination is in very able hands financially. It is understood that the directors of the new holding company will be chosen from both the International and the Cereal Companies' boards. It is also understood that A. J. Nesbitt, managing director of the Investment Trust Company Limited carried through the negotiations which led to the combination being formed.

The harvest machinery people are looking for an extremely busy year. All the new settlers will need new machinery and there is going to be considerable difficulty in outfitting every farmer or would-be farmer in time. The Sawyer-Massey people report that their factories are working day and night to provide for the demands which are coming from the west for ploughs, reapers, rakes and so on. They also notice that the demand for heavier machinery such as threshing outfits and traction ploughs is much greater than it was a few years ago, showing that the farmers are getting more prosperous and preparing for operations on a larger scale this year.

Early this winter the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern placed their orders for freight cars to be delivered this summer in time to help haul the harvest to Fort William. Since then additional orders have been sent in for a total of over ten thousand cars. Preparations are also being made for increasing the tonnage of the vessels plying on the lakes, most of them in the grain trade, and of the fleets of Atlantic steamers. As a rule the railways are not far wrong and it will be very surprising if their preparations for a bumper harvest are not justified.

Communication

Editor Expres:

Sir,—It is time that public opinion and sentiment should be stirred regarding two matters which should be of interest to all right-minded persons, and particularly "to all those who profess and call themselves christians."

The first is the open desecration of the Lord's Day. I will not refer here to the turning of this day into merely a working day or a secular holiday to the exclusion of all religious exercises or opportunity of worshipping God, for while I believe this to be wrong and will do all I can to point out the sinfulness and folly of it "yet will I judge no man, to his own Master he standeth or falleth." But no one should be allowed to do that which offends the sentiments or annoys the majority of his fellows and I ask that the pressure of public opinion be brought to bear on those responsible for our legislation in order that blasting of rocks and stumps be made illegal on the Lard's Day. While respecting the liberty of the individual the community has a right to demand that that liberty be kept within just bounds. For weeks those of us living in the vicinity of North Lonsdale have been annoyed by this blasting nearly every Sunday even Easter Day. I understand that no bylaw exists to stop this. I for one will never rest until this blot on a christian community is removed. The legislation of a country is the index to the condition of the national conscience. This axiom may also be applied to a community.

As I do not wish to encroach unduly on your valuable space I will leave the consideration of the other matter to which I referred in the first part of my letter until next week.

Thanking you in anticipation,
Yours truly,
T. E. ROWE.

LYNN VALLEY CHURCH OPENING

New Presbyterian Church to be Opened Sunday, May 7th, 1911

On Sunday, May 7th, the opening services of the new Presbyterian Church in Lynn Valley will be held at 11, 3 and 7 o'clock. The morning service will be a combined dedication and communion service conducted by Dr. Pidgeon of Westminster Hall. The afternoon meeting will be especially a young people's affair to which a hearty invitation has been issued for all adults to attend. At this meeting Mr. C. Fakeley, the Methodist missionary in Lynn Valley will be the speaker. In the evening at 7 o'clock Dr. MacKay of Westminster Hall will preach and at all of these services special music will be rendered by friends from Vancouver. On Monday evening the Ladies' Aid are putting on a banquet at which some excellent speakers and singers will be heard. Tickets for this are 50 cents each and may be obtained from any of the church workers. The managers of the church have published a souvenir of Lynn Valley containing excellent pictures of the beauty spots of this beautiful Valley which are on sale at 25c each from members of the Ladies' Aid. The edition, however, is limited and will not be increased, so early application is essential if copies are to be secured. Orders may be sent to A. Earle Waghorne or phoned to the Express office.

For those inclined to stroll around the views appearing herewith will suggest places to visit. Lynn Creek abounds with beauty spots and the two canyons and falls are so close in that visitors to the church opening can, if they wish, take these in and not unduly prolong their trip.

Suppose a customer is about to order something or other over your telephone. The operator finds your line or lines engaged. The customer must wait—or order somewhere else. Maybe he chooses to wait—calls again—again finds your line or lines busy. That means a possible loss of a customer.

The business man needs adequate telephone service for the accommodation of his business and his customers. When you lose customers through "busy" signals it has been proved that your telephone facilities are inadequate.

People who get business make it easy for their customers to get to them and have the number of telephone lines their business requires. The number should be determined by the amount of use at the BUSIEST time of the day.
