REPORT OF THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARIAN TO SENATE

1962/63

A report of the activities of the Library for the fiscal period ending 31 August, 1963 is submitted herewith. The year was characterized by a continuing heavy use of library facilities and by unprecedented demands for additional books and periodicals which, despite encouraging increases in funds, could not be fully met with existing appropriations. These and other notable library developments are described below.

Growth of Collections

The Library's resources were increased by 35,792 fully catalogued books and periodicals during the year. With these additions, the Library's holdings now consist of 560,720 volumes and uncounted numbers of government documents, micro-reproductions, maps, manuscripts, newspapers, pictures and prints. To obtain these materials, the record sum of $292,247 was expended -- an increase of some $50,000 over the previous year.

Many individuals, societies, organizations and business firms also contributed to the growth of the book collections during the year. Mr. Walter Koerner, Dr. H. R. MacMillan, the Leon and Thea Koerner Foundation, Mrs. E. T. Rogers, Mrs. B. T. Rogers, and many other perennial benefactors of the Library continued their much appreciated good work. There were also new friends, such as Mr. Alfred Blundell who has begun the strengthening of our collections on Slavic law. In addition, the Library received books from several estates: a collection of 2,000 volumes, rich in agricultural publications, from the late George Hampden Crabtree, for many years associated with Buckerfield's Ltd., and a resident of Abbotsford; an excellent collection of Canadian poetry from the estate of Annie Charlotte Dalton, Canadian poet and grandmother of Dr. A. D. Scott of the Department of Economics; and, a collection of several hundred well chosen volumes on history, literature, biography, and current topics of interest from the estate of Mrs. Margaret Jane Boulton.

Use of the Library

The rapidly changing nature of our University has produced in recent years a greatly increased demand for and use of library services. The inauguration of new and expanded graduate programs, the acceleration of faculty research, improved teaching methods, larger enrollments, and a general intensification of student effort have all contributed to this development.

The number of books charged out by students and faculty reached an all-time high -- 653,091. This represented a ten per cent increase over the previous year and about a forty per cent increase over the past two years. Circulation figures, of course, represent only a part of the reading done by our students and faculty. Also substantial is the reading resulting from the direct consultation of the books on the open shelves.

Much of the use made of our resources involves the direct assistance of the librarians in the various subject divisions of the Library -- giving instruction and assistance in the use of library materials, finding specific information, preparing bibliographies and other library aids, answering requests for information by correspondence, and arranging for inter-library loans.

In-Print Buying Program

A program with great potential for the improvement of the Library's book resources was successfully inaugurated during the year. After full consultation with library representatives of departments and faculties, a sum of money was set aside for the support of an In-Print Buying Program of books in the English language. Under the arrangements, the Library selects and purchases immediately after publication all books published in the United States and the United Kingdom falling in certain categories. Emphasis is placed upon scholarly works within fields covered by the present program of research and instruction. Excluded are introductory texts covering broad subject areas, popularizations, juvenile and children's literature, inspirational works, propaganda, fiction and poetry of minor or unknown contemporary authors.

The In-Print Buying Program gives promise of many advantages, both for faculty and students and for the Library. Since books can be purchased immediately after publication and the cataloguing process begun at the same time, it is hoped that in most instances books will be in the Library and on the shelves by the time they are needed. It is also hoped that the Library will acquire a broader coverage and a better selection of books published in the English language. The tendency to pass over expensive books or books which fall between the interests of departments has resulted in the loss of many useful acquisitions to the Library in previous years. Another advantage is that faculty time can be diverted from the routine selection of new English language books to the more specialized out-of-print and foreign language book markets. Finally, the Library will be able to save clerical time since, formerly, it was not unusual to receive four or five requests for the same book from different departments.

Centralized Administration of University Library Funds

With the increased blurring of the boundaries between the traditional academic disciplines, the difficulties of organizing libraries along faculty and departmental lines have increased. Recognizing this, the Committee of Academic Deans recommended, and the University Senate approved, "that the budgeting for all Library services should be under the supervision of the Librarian, and that all estimates for Library requirements should be submitted by the Librarian and not included in the Faculty budgets submitted by the Deans".

Reconstitution of the Senate Library Committee

At an early meeting of the University Senate, a plan for the reorganization of the Senate Library Committee was proposed. This Committee, which is charged with the responsibility of advising and assisting the Librarian in the formulation of library policy, has for many years consisted of representatives from each of the faculties, three nominees by the Chairman of Senate, and the University Librarian. The Committee had become rather large and unwieldy, and it was believed a smaller group, selected upon the basis of competency to deal with library matters rather than upon faculty membership, would function more effectively. The plan was approved and a Committee of six members of faculty appointed, all with broad university responsibilities and demonstrated concern for the Library.

Meetings of Departmental Library Representatives

Periodic meetings of members of the Library staff with representatives from the various faculties and departments were instituted during the year. These meetings provided a most useful liaison between the Library and its users, especially since the Senate Library Committee, as reconstituted, no longer was representative of faculties. In order to obtain similarity of interests and the informality of smaller groups, separate meetings were set up with the representatives of each of the broad subject groupings -- fine arts, social sciences, biomedical sciences, humanities, applied sciences, and pure sciences. The first meetings were devoted to a consideration of the many problems in ordering books and periodicals for our collections. Later meetings dealt with the inauguration of a systematic program for the purchase of currently published books in the English language.

New Facilities

The Library is presently engaged in one significant addition to its plant and will shortly begin a second. Construction has begun on the Woodward Library which will serve Faculty and advanced students in the health and biological sciences. The building, which will cost about $1,000,000.00 will seat 300 students and house over 100,000 volumes. It is expected to be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1964.

Construction is expected to begin shortly after the completion of classes next spring on a $500,000.00 bookstack addition to the General Library. This new facility, occupying eight levels and 50,000 square feet, will eventually house 500,000 volumes; initially, however, it will be used in part for the seating of students. In this stack addition, it is hoped to accomplish three things: additional book space, additional reader space, and a simplification of the General Library building. The present building can be made less complex if the heavy-traffic functions of reserve book and general circulation are removed from the second floor of the Library to the first, and if a sharper line is drawn between public and staff areas, thus permitting the removal of many fences and cages now obstructing passage in the stacks.

Planning is also well under way for substantial library facilities in the projected Music, Engineering, and Agriculture-Forestry buildings.

Internal Improvements

In addition to the foregoing developments, the Library introduced several internal improvements in its routines, which it is hoped had a beneficial effect upon its services. Leading the list was the installation of a Xerox 914 copier which enabled faculty and students to obtain excellent copies of selected pages from books and periodicals at the low cost of ten cents per exposure. Striking evidence of the use to which they put the copier was furnished by the $10,000 in receipts which accrued during the year. A second copier was installed in the Library as the fiscal period drew to a close.

Other advances in the Library were the adoption of new routines intended to shorten the time materials sent to the Bindery are absent from the shelves; the installation of a simpler procedure for charging books from the College Library; the preparation of a complete card catalogue for the library materials in the Curriculum Laboratory; the compilation of a public card record of all the books shelved apart from the central collection; the dissolution of the Library's extensive collection (10,000 volumes) of paper bound books by sending a portion directly to the bindery and the remainder to their normal location in the bookstacks.

Resignations Among the Clerical Staff

Modest progress was made during the year on a long-standing Library problem -- resignations of clerical staff. With the cooperation of the Personnel Department, several positions were upgraded, salaries improved slightly, and the qualifications for the various clerical grades revised to permit the gradual progression of employees through the ranks. The Library also continued, whenever possible, to fill vacancies by promotion of employees on the staff.

Expansion of the Bindery

It has been increasingly obvious for some time that the Library's small but excellent bindery would have to be enlarged. Despite a maximum effort by the staff, the backlog of unbound materials continued to mount. Toward the close of the year, the bindery area was increased by almost 500 square feet through the removal of a wall separating it from an adjoining corridor. This has permitted the addition of three new staff members and will increase our annual productive capacity by almost 7,000 volumes.

Goals for the Library

In the formation of goals for the Library, a single consideration dominates all others -- the development of our graduate and research programs. As long as the University was primarily an undergraduate institution, our library needs could be met with the expenditure of relatively small sums of money. But, with the advent of the graduate program, all this has changed. Two or three new doctoral programs, particularly in the social sciences and the humanities, frequently require more books than are needed for an entire undergraduate program. Providing these new facilities will require large expenditures of money and, just as important, time. Specifically, then, it is suggested that the Library adopt for itself three primary goals to be achieved by 1970, each concerned with a major aspect of its operations -- collections, building, staff.

Collections. The Library's collections now total slightly less than 600,000 volumes. This is, admittedly, a large number of books and it might be asked why more are needed. Our scientists and scholars would reply that they cannot work effectively on the frontiers of their fields without access to most of the important literature. If we consider that the University either now has, or intends to have soon, scholars doing research in most of the recognized disciplines, we are committed to providing access to most of the scholarly literature of the world, published and unpublished. This involves something like 30,000,000 titles. Although our scholars would ideally like to have them all, how many must they have right here on campus in order to carry on? The experience of other institutions with large graduate and research programs and with reasonably adequate libraries should help us. There are no fewer than forty university libraries in the United States and one (Toronto) in Canada with collections of over 1,000,000 volumes. It is not coincidental that in these same institutions, nine-tenths of the really significant faculty research is carried on and nine-tenths of the substantive doctoral degrees awarded. If we are sincere about wishing to become a first-class graduate institution, our immediate goal should be quite clear --a collection of 1,000,000 volumes, and the sooner the better. A brief prepared by the Faculty of Arts and Science calls for a collection of 1,200,000 volumes, to be obtained through progressively larger appropriations for books until, by 1970, approximately $1,000,000.00 is being expended annually. This sounds like, and is, a large sum, but more than a dozen institutions in the United States are spending this sum; and, for the most part, they merely have to keep up already good collections, while we have the additional task of remedying past omissions. It is pleasant to report that, with the increase for the current year and that requested for next year, the Library is pretty much on schedule with its program to reach 1,000,000 or more volumes by 1970.

It might be well to consider what the consequences will be for the University of British Columbia if the collections goal is not met. First, the Library places a real limit on the possibilities for development of the entire University. A first-rate University is impossible without a first-rate Library. It is equally true that a university with a first-rate Library can scarcely escape being itself first-rate, which should be encouraging to the University of British Columbia for it is well on its way toward having a good library.

Second, without adequate collections, outstanding scholars will be reluctant to come to and to remain at our University. Paul Buck, long-time scholar and administrator at Harvard University, has estimated that their Library is worth from $3,000 to $5,000 in salary discussions with prospective professors.

Third, any form of "quality" education, or "excellence", even on the undergraduate level, requires extensive collections of books. Unless our collections are strengthened, the University's efforts in this direction will be blocked.

Finally, inadequate library collections do not particularly inconvenience our less able and less dedicated faculty and students; rather, it is the top ten or fifteen percent that are frustrated. Thus, once again, any aspirations we have for excellence would be blunted.

Building Space. The second goal for the Library is adequate space to house its collections and to seat its readers. It has already been stated that, by 1970, our collections should number 1,200,000 volumes. By that same date, our student body will most certainly be not less than 17,000 and, hopefully, less than 20,000. As a university with a large off-campus student population that comes out to the campus for the entire day, we must be able to seat not less than one-third of them, i.e., 6,000 students. Thus, by 1970, we will need space for 1,200,000 volumes and 6,000 readers.

How much of this space is presently available? In the General Library, we now have space for 550,000 volumes and 1,800 readers. In other campus library facilities we have space for another 50,000 volumes and 700 readers. The Woodward Library currently under construction will provide space for 100,000 volumes and 300 readers. The new bookstack addition will initially house 300,000 volumes and 700 readers. In all, the University has either now or in immediate prospect space sufficient for 1,000,000 volumes and 3,500 readers. Thus, to meet our 1970 goal for building space, we need only to provide for an additional 200,000 volumes and an additional 2,500 readers.

This additional space can probably best be provided in two ways, -- through the creation of substantial branches of the University Library in locations convenient to those departments that would use them, and through the provision of reading rooms and study halls in academic buildings being newly erected. The reasons are these:

First, the General Library building is quite unsatisfactory. The central portion was erected in the 1920s and is typical of the style of building then in vogue. The first wing was added in about 1950, the second ten years later. Unfortunately, the central unit dominated both additions, with the result that the entire building is quite dated, although two-thirds of it is less than fifteen years old.

It would be quite unwise to attempt to make anything other than stack additions to the present building.

Second, as campuses become more complex, both academically and physically, it becomes increasingly unsatisfactory to render all library service from a central building. A physical decentralization of the University of British Columbia library collections is obviously in order. If this is done deliberately and according to plan, the results can be quite satisfactory. It is true that the decentralization of libraries requires additional money; however, when the convenience and time of faculty and students are considered, the decentralized library may well be an economy from an all-University point of view.

Third, the best interests of neither the General Library nor the students are furthered by the former's attempting to provide all needed study space. By serving primarily as a study hall, the General Library compromises its ability to assist students and faculty in the serious use of its resources. Equally serious, by requiring students to come from distant academic and classroom buildings to the Library each time they wish to study, much time is wasted.

Staff. It is discouraging to faculty and librarians alike that large expenditures for books require large expenditures for staff to process and service these books. The sixty largest university libraries in the United States and Canada spend, on an average, $2.00 for staff for every $1.00 for books. The University of British Columbia Library's expenditures for staff (55%) are somewhat below average, which may explain some of our work arrearages.

In our budget requests for 1964/65, an even smaller proportion is scheduled for staff; nevertheless, we are making inroads on our backlogs. Between now and 1970, we shall have to expect to spend at least one dollar for staff for every dollar spent for books.

Acknowledgements

During the past year, the Library profited from the counsel and support of many individuals and groups: Dr. John B. Macdonald and the University Senate, who saw with rare clarity the importance of the Library to their plans for a developing university; the University faculty, who gave full support to requests for additional funds for the Library; Chancellor Ross and the Board of Governors, who honored these requests; and, perhaps most of all, the Library staff, who carried on under admittedly trying circumstances to transform this increased support into improved library service.

* * * *

The Library was deeply saddened twice during the year by the untimely and tragic deaths of two of its number. Mrs. Barbara Edmonds, a graduate of our School of Librarianship and a member of our Serials Division, was killed, with her husband and daughter, in an automobile accident. A short time later, we were shocked again by the death of Miss Audrey Malin of the Social Sciences Library.
