The Crime of Hallow-E'en:

—OR—

THE HEIRESS OF GRAYSTONE HALL.

By LAURA JEAN LIBBEY.

Author of "A Broken Betrothal," "The Heiress of Cameron Hall," "Parted at the Altar," Etc.

As it was, on this night in question, he rode hard, and arrived breathlessly at the police station; and by the workings of a cruel destiny, it happened that the chief had just come in accompanied by India Margrave's lover, who was railing bitter at the utter failure of both the police and the detectives to unearth the hiding place of the murderer of his beautiful sweetheart, "whose spirit could never rest," he declared solemnly, "until her murderer had been brought to justice."

It rather piqued the chief, too, that a girl, scarcely more than seventeen, and her young husband, should be able to baffle so completely the most skillful men of the profession.

The sergeant who had been listening intently to the old sexton's story suddenly excused himself and held a short, hurried consultation with his chief; and in a moment of time the secret wires in the private office were working, flashing the news to every police station in the city that the hiding place of Le Roy Pierpont's young bride had been brought to light at last, of her illness and recovery, and of her sudden escape which followed on the heels of it.

Every man on each beat throughout the city was cautioned to be on the sharp lookout for the fair fugitive.

The sergeant at the desk, in listening to the sexton's story, had instantly divined the startling truth as he noted the description of the lovely young stranger found in the graveyard on that identical night on which beautiful, desperate Bonnylin, flying for her life, near this particular point, had so successfully eluded them.

Small and petite, rounded, dimpled cheek and dimpled chin, beautiful, curling, golden hair, and eyes dark blue and sparkling, veiled by long, curling, golden lashes.

And then her dress—white satin, like grand ladies wore to balls — a white kid glove on one hand, reaching quite up to the elbow; dainty white kid slippers, so small Cinderella, with her trim little foot, might have worn them.

Ah, yes, they knew—even before they had examined the lovely robe and the pretty trifles that made up that fatal ball room costume—that it was hapless Bonnylin.

Of all places in the city and around about it, they had never dreamed of searching for her here in their very midst, as it were. Their chagrin knew no bounds when they thought of their own stupidity.

But she was at large somewhere close at hand, and—ah, the pity of it!—for paltry, shining gold every man of them determined to hunt the poor, pretty creature down to her doom.

With teeth fairly chattering with terror, the old sexton took his wife aside, and told her the startling news he had heard at the police station; who the lovely stranger was who had lain unconscious under their roof, and of the fearful charge upon which the officers were searching for her.

Slowly, and with sublime dignity, his old wife turned to him, brushing away the fast gathering tears from her dim eyes.

"John," she said in solemn voice, "I am not a learned woman, but I can judge a human face. I am old, and in my lifetime I have seen every phase of character that goes to make up a world, rich and poor, high and low, innocent and guilty, and I tell you if an angel came down from Heaven and cried out trumpet-tongued that that young girl was guilty of so horrible a crime, I should not believe it. Do you hear me, John Anderson? I should not believe it, I say. I would stake my soul upon her innocence. Her heart and soul, and those little white hands that have clung so piteously to mine, are as pure as the spotless snow outside. The evidence against her is overwhelming, you say. Human beings before to-day have been hung upon circumstantial evidence. God preserve the poor, pretty creature from the wretches that are hunting her down to her doom. And, oh, John, you set the whole pack loose upon her track, like a troop of hungry wolves—but you did not know!"

"Don't be hard upon me, Jenny," he cried, humbly. "Of course I believe her innocent, too. Why, she wouldn't have harmed a canary, that poor child. I'd a-cut my tongue out rather than have betrayed her; but as you well understand I didn't know to what it would lead. Of course they'll take her, Jenny; nothing can save her now."

All night long the good, motherly woman, who had grown to love Bonnylin's sweet, winsome face, with all a mother's tenderness and compassionate yearning, paced the floor weeping as though her heart would break, refusing to be comforted.

All night long the pitiless search went on.

When early dawn broke they felt confident of finding the beautiful fugitive.

She might elude them in the intense darkness of the night, but she must certainly be discovered when the morning came.

They debated among themselves as to what had become of the handsome young husband.

Had he deserted her in the hour of her greatest peril? It looked strangely like it; but those who knew Le Roy Pierpont well could not bring themselves to believe it.

He was of the kind of men who would defend the woman they love to the death.

This seemed to be generally accepted as the solution of the deep mystery:

When the officers had shot down the horse from under the fugitives, that one of the bullets must have mortally wounded the young husband and that by superhuman effort the poor girl had dragged him into the brushwood out of their reach; that he had died there; and mad with frenzy, Bonnylin had fled on in the darkness, and reaching the graveyard, had fallen down there in a dead faint.

The next morning whole columns of the daily press teemed with the affair.

Women read it with bated breath and paling cheeks; but in spite of all, how they wept for beautiful, hapless Bonnylin!

"The ill-fated bride, who, crazed by jealousy more bitter to bear than the tortures of death, had taken the life of her cruel foe," for so the despatches asserted.

The terrible deed must be sternly condemned; but even while they condemned, they wept pitiful tears of sympathy for her.

About noon there was a great commotion on the street; extras were out, and the whole city was thrilled to the core as they read the startling headlines, which read as follows:

"Found! — The Beautiful Fugitive Tracked Down at Last! — Found in a Sleigh Near the City Limits!"

CHAPTER XX.

The extras which flooded the city were of startling interest to men, women, and children, and were eagerly bought up as a consequence.

As they read on, they discovered that the headline of the extras was slightly deceptive. Beautiful Bonnylin had been discovered in a sleigh, but the vigilant police had not succeeded in making an arrest.

It had happened in this way: While the search was at its height, a horse and sleigh dashed past the searchers, who were on foot. They saw by the feeble light of their lanterns that the sleigh contained two persons—a man heavily muffled to the chin, supporting the figure of a woman in his arms.

In the nervousness of passing them, and owing to the slight shying of his spirited horse, the covering which he was holding about Bonnylin's golden head was wrenched from his grasp, and fell to her shoulders; and in that instant her face was turned toward them.

There was a loud cry. Half a dozen or more recognized her instantly.

"Look! There is Pierpont's bride!"

Grasping the reins with his left hand, and seizing the whip with his right, Fenton brought it down with stunning force over the head and shoulders of the foremost man.

"Back!" he shouted hoarsely, "every man of you! Attempt to block my way or touch that horse at your peril!"

By a sudden manipulation of the reins, the iron-gray horse wheeled around in a flash, and in a trice had turned back upon the road it had so lately traversed, and covered with foam, vanished like a meteor in the intense darkness which preceded the breaking of the early winter morn.

Fenton was quite right in the belief that they had not recognized him or his team, and the blanket which he had thrown over his horse as he saw the waving lights in the road ahead, had performed the same service for the animal.

"I'm afraid it's all up with us now," muttered Fenton, pityingly, when he stopped to take breath and wrap his coat about the bare, golden head of the still unconscious girl. "What in Heaven's name is to be done now? Poor, hapless Bonnylin, God help and protect you in this awful hour—and you, Pierpont, when you hear of this."

Was it only his fancy, or did he hear some one calling his name? He drew rein and listened intently.

"Mr. Fenton," said a tearful woman's voice, "is that you?"

He saw in the struggling morning light that he was just passing the old sexton's house, and the figure standing knee-deep in the snowdrifts at the gate was the sexton's wife.

"Have you heard the terrible story——"

"Of the beautiful young girl who was in your house and of her sudden departure?" he cut in, hastily.

"Yes," sobbed the sexton's wife, piteously. "Have you heard all about her? I cannot, I will not believe it, sir. I will stake my soul on her innocence, and shield her with my life if I could, and it were in my power."

"Would you?" cried Fenton, a sudden thought shaping itself in his mind as a last desperate resort.

"Yes," she answered, "I would, sir, Heaven knows."

In a moment Fenton had sprung from the vehicle, bearing Bonnylin in his arms. She had seen the muffled figure on the seat beside him, but she had never dreamed it could be the lovely young stranger.

"Tell your husband to put up my horse and sleigh—get them out of sight quickly—then come to me in your little sitting room. Here is the poor helpless creature; I have brought her back to you to cast her upon your mercy. It is life and death to her. Tell me, in Heaven's name, can I depend upon you to save her?"

"Yes," answered Mrs. Anderson, trembling with excitement. "You may trust me, sir."

Ten minutes later the good woman had heard Bonnylin's story from beginning to end from Fenton's lips. She had been told that he himself took Bonnylin bodily from her house by stealth, that they might not discover who it was that they had sheltered, to place the lost bride who had been separated from her frantic young husband by the cruelest of all cruel fates, in his arms again.

The old sexton, to repair the great error he had done, was only too glad to do all in his power to aid Bonnylin to evade the searchers, for he believed fully in her innocence, as he would have believed in the innocence of an angel from Heaven.

"I shall remove her from here this evening under cover of darkness," said Fenton, taking his leave after being repeatedly assured they would atone for the poor little bride's pitiful peril which they had unconsciously brought upon that golden head, with their very lives if need be.

In all the fiery ordeal through which she had passed, Bonnylin did not regain consciousness, owing to the powerful narcotic which had been previously administered her. It was certainly a mercy to Heaven that she did not.

Fenton left the house on foot, making his way by a circuitous route back to the city.

As he crossed the threshold of his bachelor apartments, Le Roy Pierpont—white and haggard—sprung to meet him.

"You have been out all night, Fenton!" he cried, in a husky voice of repressed excitement. "Have you found any trace of my wife, or—or —— In God's name don't keep me in suspense, Fenton! You know what I would say!"

How eagerly his dark eyes devoured his friend's face. His lips twitched, and his whole frame trembled.

"Can you bear up under great, good news, my boy?" cried Fenton, cheerily. "Joy never kills, they say. Are you prepared to hear wonderful news—good news, I mean?"

"Yes—yes!" cried Le Roy. "Tell me at once. Oh! Fenton, you — you have found my little Bonnylin—is it not so?" he cried breathlessly. "In God's name answer me — yes or no!"

Fenton nodded.

"I have found her, my boy!" he said, "alive and well, and —— Here —hold on—wait!"

"I cannot!" panted Pierpont, struggling to free himself from his friend's grasp, and to rush madly to the door.

"She is not here; I did not bring her with me," said Fenton, pityingly. "You will realize when I tell you how and where I found her, and all about it, that I was wise in not bringing her with me. You shall go to her, but not until after dark to-night, remember."

"Do you think I could stay here, away from my poor, hapless darling all the long hours that will intervene until dark?" cried Le Roy, desperately. "I should go mad. I am well disguised, Fenton; why may I not go to her?"

Fenton pushed his friend into a seat.

"I will tell you all, and then you shall judge for yourself," he responded quietly. "Promise me you will hear me through with forced calmness and without interruption, and I will tell you all. Be a man of iron nerve, Pierpont, and control your emotion."

Le Roy Pierpont looked up with a forced smile.

"Let it be as you say, Fenton, but, in Heaven's name, speak quickly. I have suffered too much to bear one additional moment of suspense."

Quietly Frank Fenton began at the beginning, and told him all—all that the reader already knows.

The young husband scarcely breathed as he listened, so great was his powerfully repressed excitement and emotion.

"Now you see why you cannot go to her there," he added in conclusion. "With a little strategy, I shall be able to take her away from there to-night, and bring her to you."

This Le Roy saw plainly enough was the only practicable plan to pursue. And while the long hours of that never-to-be-forgotten day dragged themselves wearily by, Le Roy Pierpont and his stanch, noble friend mapped out a course of procedure for the future.

He was so gay and bouyant, talking so cheerily of the golden, sunny days ahead, when this dark cloud should have blown over, that he infused the forlorn young husband with something like the cheery spirit of happier times.

Fenton bought one of the extras, and affected to laugh heartily over it, declaring that the very shrewd officers had not proven themselves the smart men they took themselves to be; and that the last place they would think of looking for their victim, would be the place from which she was supposed to have fled so summarily.

Le Roy admitted that this was quite true. As soon as young Dr. Montgomery heard the startling rumor, with a white, troubled face he hurried at once to Fenton's rooms, and he in turn heard the truth, and together the two mutual friends devoted themselves to cheering Le Roy up and laughing down his fears and pledging solemnly anew their friendship and united efforts to the end.

"Did ever a man have truer, warmer friends?" said Le Roy, gratefully. "If the time ever comes when I can repay you for this, I will spill my heart's blood to do it. You have both stood so nobly by poor little Bonnylin and me; and I thank you more than weak words can tell, for your repeated assurances of your belief in her innocence. No one can look into her sweet face and those clear blue eyes and doubt her, Heaven bless her!" he added, fervently.

CHAPTER XXI.

As the shades of night drew near Le Roy with beating heart set out with his friend Fenton to the old sexton's home.

They were obliged to go on foot, and by such a circuitous route, it was nearly ten o'clock at night ere they reached there.

"Will she be expecting us, do you think?" asked Le Roy, in a tremulous whisper, as they passed through the gate.

"Yes," returned Fenton; "Mrs. Anderson will have prepared her for our coming."

"Come right in, gentlemen," she said, leading the way. "She's been at the window straining her eyes watching for you since dusk," she whispered, turning to Le Roy, whom she knew must be the young husband Fenton had described. "Step this way, sir."

She opened the door to the right, and with a bound he cleared the threshold.

They heard a joyful, startled cry: "Oh, Le Roy, Le Roy," and a hoarse ejaculation of: "Bonnylin, my love, my darling thank God—oh, thank God!"

Then the door quickly closed, and Fenton and the sexton's wife were shut out from all sight, all sounds.

Half crying, half laughing, she led Mr. Fenton to the cozy sitting-room across the hall.

"We will leave them to themselves for a little spell, sir," she said; and to this arrangement Frank heartily agreed.

At length it became evident that Le Roy and his bride had certainly forgotten the flight of time, and how much remained to be done while the darkness lasted.

"Le Roy must be reminded," he told himself, smilingly, as he crossed the hall and tapped lightly on the door.

He found them as he entered, in response to Le Roy's glad, "Come in Fenton," sitting on the chintz-covered lounge, clasped tightly in each other's arms, exchanging love's blissful kisses.

"Come in, Fenton," said Le Roy, heartily. "I have just been telling Bonnylin what you have done for us, and her poor little heart is too full for utterance."

"Never mind speaking about that, old fellow," said honest, good-hearted Frank Fenton, with a blush of embarrassment, and turning to Bonnylin with a low reverential bow; "remember, we must not cry 'hallo! until we are out of the woods,' as the old saying goes. Have you explained to your wife how much remains to be done yet?"

"He has told me that we are to adopt disguises and go to tenement rooms and occupy them, pretending we are brother and sister, and that we may be forced to seek employment in one of the woollen mills to guard against suspicion. Oh, Mr. Fenton, isn't it hard to do all this when one is innocent?" she asked, raising those big blue eyes piteously to his face.

"It is, indeed," responded Fenton, promptly. "But then, you know, Mrs. Pierpont, it falls to many a person's lot to do many a disagreeable duty brought about by force of uncontrollable circumstances. You are only to do this until the real assassin can be brought to justice, which we hope soon to do—only until then."

"Does any one really believe I did it?" cried the poor little bride, in the most piteous horror.

"No, indeed!" declared Fenton, hastily; "every one knows better," he said, thinking it by far the best plan to utterly deceive her in this, to give her courage, "but all the same, you would have to be put in custody of—of—the law until your innocence could be proven, and you know that takes long months, and to see you there would break your husband's heart, don't you see?"

"Yes; I think I understand," said Bonnylin. "Of course I ought to go forth and declare my innocence before the world; it almost kills me to think of such a charge as that being made against me—it hurts my pride; but still I will do as Le Roy thinks best."

"That is the right spirit," declared Fenton, cheerily; "it is by far the most prudent and wisest course."

"I shall have to go and see Le Roy's mother first," she said determinedly; "how frightened she must have been at my mysterious, unaccountable absence. I could scarcely credit the fact that I have been lying ill in this strange place long weeks."

Again Fenton took subterfuge in evasion.

"Has not Le Roy told you his mother is not at home, and that the house is closed?" he asked innocently.

"Why, no," said Bonnylin, turning her wondering eyes upon the confused face of her husband, "but then we have had so much to talk about no doubt he forgot all about it."

"You are to consider this only as a very romantic little affair, Mrs. Pierpont," said Fenton, unfolding the disguise he had brought with him, and forcing himself to laugh, as though this terrible matter which meant life or death to the poor little soul, were only a fine joke or "a romantic affair," as he phrased it.

"Am I to put on that thing too?" cried Bonnylin, throwing up her little white hands in comical dismay.

"Of course, darling," said Le Roy; "either that or stain these golden curls black, whichever you prefer."

"I'd rather color my own hair than wear a wig," declared Bonnylin; "why, do you know, dear," she cried, with a merry laugh that cut his heart, like a knife, "sometimes I'd be sure to forget to put it on—what then?"

"She'd better color her own hair, Le Roy," said Fenton, decisively. "We have the dye with us for the eye-brows and face, you know. Time is flying, you must apply it for her at once, Le Roy," he said warningly. "I will step across the hall and leave you, to order the horse brought around. You must have everything completed within half an hour, so we can take our departure."

In less time than he had anticipated, Le Roy led Bonnylin forth.

Even Fenton could not repress the cry of surprise that broke from his lips as he beheld them.

They were only amateurs at disguising, still they had managed to perfection.

Fenton might have passed them on the streets, and never recognized them—never dreamed of their identity.

Le Roy was a perfect representation of an Italian—brown of skin, hair raven black, and a black moustache and goatee, perfecting his general make-up. He made as handsome an Italian as one would care to see.

And Bonnylin. Who would have dreamed that the little dark creature, whose round, dimpled face was framed in the darkest of curling hair, and whose arched eyebrows and long lashes were inky black, was the little, fair, golden-haired creature of an hour before?

The eyes alone, so beautifully, softly blue, were the only features that remained unchanged.

No power on earth could change those lovely, blue-bell eyes.

The Toe Nails.

Never cut the nails below the level of the end of the toe or suffer them to grow much beyond this level. If nails grow in at the sides, scrape them at the top and cut them often both there and at the corners.

A LETTER FROM OVER THE SEA

Which Will Prove of Interest to Canadians.

Tells of Good News Received from Calgary, Alta., which Brought Joy Into His Life.

Here is a sincere and unsolicited letter from an Englishman who was almost led to take his own life on account of what he suffered from itching piles. He had doctor's advice and remedies to no end, and after sixteen years' of suffering was without hope of recovery. He tells in his letter how he accidentally heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

114 Milton Road,
Margate, England.

Edmanson, Bates & Co.,
Toronto, Can.,

Dear Sirs,—I feel it my duty to write to acknowledge the great good Dr. Chase's Ointment has done for me. I had suffered from itching piles for over sixteen years, and suffered badly at that. There have been times when I could and would have put an end to it all if it had not been for the thought of meeting God. Some people may think I am stretching it a point, but those who have suffered as I have will know.

At other times I have felt I could take a knife and cut away the parts until I came to the bottom of the evil, but thank God it is all past. It was quite by accident that I came to know of Dr. Chase's Ointment. I have had doctors' advice and remedies to no end and could not say how much I spent in that sixteen years. I had a Calgary paper sent to me and there I saw your Ointment advertised. It just met my case, as it said for itching piles and saved painful operations.

As I could not get Dr. Chase's Ointment from my chemist, I wrote to my brother, Mr. H. Shelley, of Calgary, Alta., and he sent me one box. Before I had used one-third of the box I was perfectly cured by this ointment.

I am sure you will be surprised to get this letter from this corner of the world, but I felt it my duty to acknowledge the great good Dr. Chase's Ointment has done for me. You are at liberty to make use of this letter as you see fit. All I should like to say to anyone who suffers from this dreadful complaint is I know it cures. With many thanks, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
T. Shelley.

If you enclose a stamp for reply, Mr. Shelley would no doubt gladly answer any question about his case. But there are similar cases among your own friends and neighbors with whom you can have a personal interview. If you are not acquainted with the merits of Dr. Chase's Ointment you will be surprised at the cures which are being brought about in your own neighborhood. No preparation has ever been more heartily endorsed by people who have used it and none has ever been so successful in curing piles.

FOR THE FARMERS.

The Imperial South African Association, to encourage British agriculturists to emigrate, says a London cable, will offer to educate them as to the conditions of the country on Government farms, where, under the supervision of a Government manager, each man will cultivate a portion of land, which will ultimately become his own. Food, implements and seed will be supplied from Government sources.

COAL MAY BE SCARCE.

A telegram from Pottsville, Pa., Sept. 29, says: The temperature dropped below the freezing point here to-day. Operators at the anthracite collieries say that if the present weather conditions continue and an unusually early fall sets in, all calculations as to the production of coal necessary to keep the market supplied will be upset, as premature cold weather will cause an additional consumption of half a million tons weekly, and dangerously lower the present surplus coal on hand.

MUST BE ADAPTED TO SUIT THE COLONIES.

A cablegram from London says: Messrs. Montagu and Herbert, in summing up the views of the leading schools of Canadian opinion, and reviewing Canadian conditions say that unless British manufacturers modernize methods and adapt themselves to colonial requirements they will, with or without preference, lose the Canadian markets. The authors' chapter suggests state-aided immigration and the removal of the embargo on cattle.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS

No. 7.

GEO. PATERSON, B. A., L. L. B.

GEO. PATERSON, B. A., LL. B.

Proprietor and Editor of the Deloraine Times.

The proprietor and editor of the Deloraine Times, George Paterson, B. A., LL. B., is one of the very numerous illustrations the Canadian West can offer of distinct success achieved in professional life by men reared on a farm. Till he was nineteen years of age Mr. Paterson went through every grade of farm work, up to the full dignity of doing a man's work in the field. The task of hewing out a home from the primeval bush of Old Ontario was one that developed a sturdy race, both intellectually and physically. The conditions of life were such as to bring out those qualities of adaptability and resourcefulness, self-reliance and self-discipline, best calculated to make big of frame and broad of mind. The men reared under such conditions were in every sense those best qualified to lay the foundations of the new Canadian Empire of the West, when, some three decades ago, the people of Eastern Canada became seized of the illimitable wealth of opportunity offered in the rich prairie lands west of the Great Lakes. Of these men Mr. Paterson is in many respects a representative type. His predominating characteristics are those more generally associated with the simpler life of the farm than the strenuous life of the city. On the business side he is frankly direct and forthright, and withal shrewd and farseeing. Socially he is of such a genial companionability that his friends include practically all who know him. A live editor, a good lawyer, a capable business man, a public-spirited citizen, with troops of friends, Mr. Paterson is indeed in a position commanding the friendly envy of many of those who know him, and the hearty respect of all.

Though none would so suspect from his figure and activity, from his hearty whole-souled boyishness of manner, Mr. Paterson is 47 years of age. He seemed somewhat surprised at the fact himself, when questioned about it, and when his interviewer looked incredulous, he went over the calculation again, to make sure that he hadn't slipped in another ten years. "I guess that's right," he said, ruefully, after some mental figuring. "I was born in '57, and I don't see that I can be less than 47. But, honestly," he added, brightening, "I don't feel near that old." And certainly he doesn't look it.

It was in the township of North East Hope, in the county of Perth, Ontario, that Mr. Paterson first saw the light of day. On both sides he was of Scotch descent, his father having emigrated to Canada from Roxburghshire, Scotland, in '37, and some time after, meeting and marrying his (George's) mother, who was also of Scotch parentage.

Mr. Paterson's early education differed no whit from that of other youths brought up in those pioneer days under similar conditions. He attended the log school with the other farm boys of his neighborhood, his attendance being, like theirs, somewhat broken and interrupted by the exigencies of sugaring, seeding, haying and harvest. The outstanding incident of this early part of his life is the fact, which Mr. Paterson yet recalls with pride, that at the age of eighteen he took the first prize at the provincial plowing match held at Stratford.

Until the age of nineteen Mr. Paterson stayed on the farm. Then he went to the collegiate for eighteen months, proving a ready and indefatigable student. He obtained certificates as third and second-class teacher, and then for three years taught school near Stratford. In 1882 he went to Collingwood to prepare for the University course, and subsequently entered Toronto University, where, in 1886, he graduated, and in the following year took the LL. B. degree.

In 1885, at the time of the Northwest rebellion, Mr. Paterson, with many another of the Toronto University students, volunteered for service. He joined the Queen's Own Rifles, and was ordered to the front. Here he was "a corporation sol-di-er at 50 cents a day," as the famous university ballad has it, but none of these valiant and adventurous youths had an opportunity to smell powder burned in anger, having thier full share of the hardships of the campaign, but little or none of its glory.

After taking his degree, with but $20 in his pocket, but with the high heart and courage of youth, Mr. Paterson left college and went south. From Toronto he went "by easy stages," as he himself says, to Chicago and down to Kansas City. When pressed as to how he travelled so far on such limited resources, Mr. Paterson said, quizzically, "Well, I said I went 'by easy stages'; I didn't figure on paying railway fare —at least, not unless I had to. I rode in box cars, and on coal trucks, and with all sorts of freight. No, I never tried a trip on the brake beams, but I've had some pretty wild rides. Often I'd be put off, and then I'd 'hoof it' along the track till I could jump the next freight. It's an experience worth living through, though. You meet all sorts and conditions of men when you are stealing a ride on a freight, from young college chaps, like I was, to the broken down gentleman or the professional hobo. There's a sort of Freemasonry among them, too, and the help they give each other would surprise one unacquainted with the customs of the fraternity."

"Of course I could," he answered to a question as to some details of this tour. "Of course I could tell you a whole lot of experiences, but I don't know that they'd be specially entertaining, and then, besides, you'd go and give me away in print. But one day I was completely 'strapped,' and had been put off by a conductor I couldn't do anything with, at a wayside station twenty miles from anywhere. A farmer's wagon was hitched up to the fence across from the track, and an old man and a younger—his son—were in it. I walked over to them and said, 'Do you want a hired man?' 'Yes,' said the younger. 'Then take me,' I said. They asked me what I could do, and I told them, but the old man shook his head unbelievingly. 'Been fired off the train, eh?' asked he, and I had to admit that I had. 'Got any money?' he asked again, and I had to tell him I hadn't. They held a consultation, and at last they told me to jump into the wagon and come along. I worked for them for two months, when I had enough money to carry me afresh on my travels. The old man wanted me to stay very badly. He said I was the best hired man he ever had, and he'd give me good wages if I'd agree to stop a year. He told me, too, that was the greatest disappointment he'd ever had since he'd been on a farm. He had sized me up for a dead beat, and had thought I wouldn't earn my board. He'd noticed that my hands were soft, and it was only because they were stuck that he consented to engage me. However, the work soon cured that, and the old man was delighted when he found I could plow and pitch as well as any man on the farm.

"It was too hot down there to suit me, and so I started for the north. I gave $1 to a brakeman, and he put me as far as Minneapolis. Then I engaged to work in a railway gang at Crookston, and paid $2 for my transportation thither. There were some thirty of us in the party, and when we got to Crookston one of the foremen, and nearly all the men, skipped out. I wasn't very hungry for railroading, so I kept on to the north. When I got to Gretna I was in too big a hurry to wait for the train—nobody knew when a train would run in those days—so I set off, walk, and tramped across the prairie to Morden. I hired out to a farmer there, and afterwards worked on a threshing gang. Then for nine months I taught Belmont school, and from that I went to Portage la Prairie, and went into the office of a law firm. In 1889 I went to Winnipeg, going into the firm of which the present Judge Richards was the head, and in 1892 took my final law exam, and went to Deloraine."

Since his removal to Deloraine Mr. Paterson has built up a splendid law practice. Five years ago he bought the Deloraine Times from Mrs. Daubrey, who had managed it since her husband's death. Under Mr. Paterson's charge it quickly developed into one of the best country weeklies in Manitoba. It has been a consistent advocate of Liberal principles, and its comments on current events are regarded as among the most well considered and weighty of all the papers published in the smaller towns of the provinces. As far as local news is concerned, all that happens in the vicinity of Deloraine that the paper does not cover is not of sufficient importance to be chronicled. The esteem in which the Times is held by the local business men is best evidenced by its large advertising patronage.

Since his removal to Deloraine Mr. Paterson has received marks of the esteem in which he is held by his townsmen by election to several offices of public trust and confidence. At the last general provincial election he contested the seat in the interest of the Liberal party, but was defeated. His personal and political friends were not dismayed by his defeat, however, but have since selected him as the standard bearer of Liberalism in the more important contest for the Dominion seat of Souris. Nobody can predict the result of the contest, as his opponent is of undoubted strength, but many of his friends are confident that Mr. Paterson will win. Should this be the case, the West will have, in the person of Mr. Paterson, a representative thoroughly familiar with its needs and requirements, and one who may be relied on to do his utmost to advance its interests.

Cynical.

"Why," said the sweet girl, "do they say that love is of the heart?"

"To show," said the old bachelor—"to show that the brains have nothing to do with it."

England's Milk Bill.

The laborer, it seems, is content with 5 gallons of milk, 9 pounds of cheese and 15 pounds of butter in the twelve months. Artisans and mechanics have 12 gallons of milk, 11 pounds of cheese and the same quantity of butter. Each member of the upper class, however, drinks on an average 31 gallons of milk in a year, eats 10½ pounds of cheese and 41 pounds of butter. A member of the upper class drinks rather more than six times as much milk as a laborer, eats just a little more cheese and uses three times as much butter.

Old Laws of Scotland.

On the statute book of Scotland is still an act passed in 1825 ordering that "na man play futeball," because it is "esteemed to be unprofitable sport for the common gude of the realme and defense thereof." There is also a statute against alien immigration, passed in 1426, and authorizing "all his majesty's subjects" to "take, apprehend, imprison and execute to death the said Egiptians (gypsies), either men or women."

Probably It Would.

In a Sunday school the class was under a question on the sacraments. The sacrament of matrimony was taken up, and a seven-year-old startled her teacher when replying to a question as to the necessity for this sacrament by answering: "No. Matrimony is not necessary to salvation, but should a favorable opportunity afford it would be sinful to neglect it."

"It will be a comfort to me if by making my case public I can lead some other sufferer to find relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills."

BALFOUR TO THE RESCUE.

Premier Balfour and Lord Lyttelton rescued several small boys the other day off the Scottish coast, says a cable from London. They were playing golf at Earl Wemyss' links, when they were interrupted by the loud cries of the boys, whose boat was being rapidly carried seaward. The Premier heading the rescue party, they launched a heavy surf boat, all wading up to their waists to shove it clear. The boys were saved.

TIRED AND DEPRESSED

The Condition of Many Young Women in Shops and Offices.

Thousands of young women have to depend upon their own efforts to gain a livelihood, and to these, whether behind the counter, in the office, the factory or the home, work means close confinement—often in badly ventilated rooms. There is a strain on the nerves; the blood becomes impoverished; the cheeks pale; there are frequent headaches; palpitation of the heart and a constant tiredness. If the first symptoms are neglected it may lead to a complete breakdown — perhaps consumption. What is needed to restore vim and energy and vitality, is a tonic, and absolutely the best tonic in the world is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They actually make new blood, and bring health and cheerful energy to tired and depressed girls and women. Miss Viola Millett, Robinson's Corners, N. S., says: "I was a great sufferer from headaches, heart palpitation and troubles that afflict my sex. My blood seemed almost to have turned to water, and the least exertion left me weak and depressed. I used seven boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and they have made a remarkable change in my condition. I can truly say that I feel like a new person, and strongly recommend these pills to all weak, ailing girls."

These pills cure all forms of blood and nerve troubles, but you must get the genuine with the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Ask your druggist for them, or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Speaking of the recent automobile accidents, according to the New York Herald, Winthrop E. Scarritt, President of the Automobile Club of America, predicted in an interview that if an immediate curb be not placed upon the spirit of lawlessness possessed by many chauffeurs, a long suffering public would take matters into its own hands and scenes similar to those of the French revolution might be witnessed.

RELIC FROM THE STONE AGE

A Body From the Prehistoric Burying Places of England.

In Somersetshire, England, may be seen many "barrows," burying places of prehistoric man. Long ages ago, when the elephant and rhinoceros, the lion and bear, the hyena and wolf, the great elk and the reindeer were among the common animals of England, primitive man and savage beasts lived in caves in this region.

At the entrance to these caves the aborigines, clad in skins, kept fires burning for warmth and for protection from the wild beasts. It was here that they made flint hatchets, knives and arrowheads. Not long ago a trench was being dug within the mouth of one of these caves for the purpose of draining.

It was found necessary to break up a stalagmite floor of two thick layers. Between the layers was a deposit of cave earth and stones, in which was discovered the skeleton of a man of very great antiquity in an excellent state of preservation. With it were found several flint knives and flakes. Experts who made a careful examination of the skull, which has projecting brows and receding frontal bone, have decided that it belongs to the stone age and is of a type intermediate between the paleolithic and neolithic ages.

Apparently the body had been placed in a small passage leading off from the great passages to the stalactite caves and had been prevented from disturbance by stones piled around it. The stalagmite floor had formed over it all, effectually preserving it to the present day.

ANIMALS IN BATTLE.

The Gorilla's Powerful Arms Make It a Formidable Foe.

Fish fighting is a most popular sport in Siam. The two fish, trained from the age of six months to fight, are placed in a large glass bottle. It is most curious to note each fish's attitude when it becomes aware of its adversary's presence in the bottle. Swelling with rage and pride, they sail around and around the narrow space, pretending not to notice each other until suddenly one fish makes a savage dart at its unwelcome companion, biting its fins and body. The fight continues until the referee sees that the issue is no longer in doubt, when the contest is stopped.

Horses use either their teeth or their hoofs as a mode of defense. A curious instance of the effectiveness of these weapons once occurred at Sheffield park. A bulldog, barking and snarling, chased a horse turned loose around and around a meadow, not with angry intent, but purely from excess of high spirits. After galloping around the field several times the horse stopped dead and, turning sharply around, lashed out at the yelping dog, with a fatal result, for its skull was cloven.

The gorilla is a most formidable opponent in battle, its great strength lying in its powerful arms. Few animals of the forest have the slightest chance of overcoming a gorilla. A python has been known to encircle its coils around the gorilla's body, only, however, to have its own body torn open by its adversary's hands.

Waste of Energy.

If you hold your fist as tight as you can hold it for fifteen minutes the fatigue you will feel when it relaxes is a clear proof of the energy you have been wasting, and if the waste is so great in the useless tightening of a fist it is still greater in the extended and continuous contraction of brain and nerves in useless fears, and the energy saved through dropping the fears and their accompanying tension can bring in the same proportion a vigor unknown before and at the same time afford protection against the very things we feared. The fear of taking cold is so strong in many people that a draft of fresh air becomes a bugaboo to their contracted, sensitive nerves. Drafts are imagined as existing everywhere, and the contraction which immediately follows the sensation of a draft is the best means of preparing to catch a cold.

Sermon of Three Hours and a Half.

Charles II. was wont in his humorous way to say of his chaplain, Dr. Barrow, that "he was the most unfair preacher in England because he exhausted every subject and left no room for others to come after him." It was indeed too much the doctor's way. When he got hold of a topic he never knew how to leave anything unsaid about it. One of his best discourses, that on the duty and reward of bounty to the poor, actually took up three and a half hours in delivering.

Luck.

Persons who believe in luck and signs will doubtless agree that it is unlucky to be struck by lightning on Monday, or take hold of a circular saw in motion on Tuesday, or tumble downstairs with a coal scuttle on Wednesday, or be hit by a trolley car on Thursday, or fall overboard on Friday, or marry on Saturday, or be one of thirteen to dinner on Sunday when there is food for only ten.

Groundless Fear.

Cholly—I did think of going in for politics, but I was afwaid I wouldn't know just how to tweat my infewiahs, don't y' know. Peppery—Your inferiors! Oh, you wouldn't be likely to meet any of them.

The Sword.

A sword is out of place in time of peace, and it is of very little consequence in time of war, except to adorn a big general or a lodge man in a parade.

True independence is to be found where a person contracts his desires within the limits of his fortune.

A Wholesome Drink.

A wholesome drink for persons afflicted with inordinate thirst is made by pouring a little more than two quarts of boiling water over two tablespoonfuls of pearl barley and a quarter of a pound of loaf sugar. Add the peel of a fresh lemon, let it stand all night and strain in the morning.

Columbus' Voyage.

FOUR YEARS FOR FORGERY.

Francis H. Reid, of Toronto, who worked Montreal under the name of Mitchell, investment broker, was sentenced the other day to four years in the penitentiary, charged with having forged a cheque on which he secured $820 from the C. P. R. steamship office. He was also convicted of attempting to obtain diamonds under false pretences from a prominent dealer, but sentence was suspended on that charge.

CRYING BABIES.

Babies do not cry unless there is some good reason for it. The cry of a baby is nature's warning signal that there is something wrong. If the fretfulness and crying are not caused by exterior sources, it is conclusive evidence that the crying baby is ill. The only safe and judicious thing to do is to give Baby's Own Tablets without delay. For indigestion, colic, teething troubles, constipation, diarrhoea, worms and simple fevers these marvellous little Tablets have given relief in thousands of cases and saved many precious lives. They are guaranteed to contain no harmful drug. Mrs. John Dobie, St. Andrew's East, Que., says: "Baby's Own Tablets are a splendid medicine for the cure of constipation and other ills that afflict children. I consider it my duty to recommend them to all who have little ones." The Tablets are sold at 25 cents a box by all druggists, or may be had by mail by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MULLAH'S LAST RAID.

A London cable says: The Mullah is still in the far eastern end of the Nogal, says Ruter's correspondent at Burao. His people have lost all faith in him, and are daily deserting. He now has very few followers. The great majority have either gone away and rejoined their own tribes or have come in and settled in Burao, Berbera, Sheikh, and other posts. They are quite peaceably disposed. The Mullah is very short of food, and is sick of fighting. At present his only desire is to bring off one raid to replenish his larder, and then go to the south and live in peace with his tribe.

ATTEMPTED ALIBI FAILED.

Frank Janack, of Matilda Township, Ont., was sentenced at Cornwall by Judge O'Reilly a few days ago to seven years in Kingston penitentiary for stealing a horse, buggy and harness from William and Arnold Johnson, of Dixon's Corners, Dundas county, a month or so ago. Janack, who recently served six months for bringing stolen goods into Canada, made an effort to establish an alibi, but the evidence against him was too strong.

AS THE OIL RUBS IN, THE PAIN RUBS OUT.—Applied to the seat of a pain in any part of the body the skin absorbs the soothing liniment under brisk friction and the patient obtains almost instant relief. The results of the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil have surprised many who were unacquainted with its qualities, and once known it will not be rejected. Try it.

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

TESTIMONIAL from the late SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the famous Nile Explorer. "Newton Abbot, Devon. Dear Sirs—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effect of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

"For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout and life had lost its attraction owing to the uncertainty of health and sudden visitations of the enemy which prostrated me for months, or weeks according to the virulence of the attacks.

"Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"For the last twenty months I have been comparatively free, as one or two attempted visitations have been immediately stamped out by the assistance of Blair's Pills.

"Truly yours (Signed) Saml. W. Baker.

Underwear a Farmer Needs

Regular weights won't do for the farmer. He must be warmer clad, because his work about the farm and long drives to town keep him out in the cold so much.

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

comes in special weights, especially for farmers. Special weights don't mean clumsy, bulky garments. Stanfield's Underwear is so warm because of the peculiar knit of the garments. It's pure Nova Scotia wool, that has been treated to take out the shrink and leave in the softness. We—and your dealer—both guarantee Stanfield's to be unshrinkable.

AFTER SEED WHEAT IN CANADIAN WEST.

About one of the best advertisements for Western Canada that the country could desire is given through the action of the business men of Fergus Falls, Minn., who have started a movement to induce the Government of the United States to admit Canadian wheat free of duty to be used as seed for next season. The wheat crop in the State is such that the farmers of Minnesota believe that the wheat must be brought in from somewhere, and they are inclined to favor the product grown in the Canadian Northwest. Already the matter has been brought to the attention of Senator Nelson and Congressman Steenerson, and they will take the matter to the Government, so it is quite likely that the seed for next year will be furnished from this country. The farmers are satisfied that a better quality of grain can be secured in Manitoba than elsewhere.

BIG SHIRT

That's the reason why the H.B.K. "Big" Shirt never chafes the armpits, is never tight at the neck or wristbands, is always loose, full and comfortable and wears well.

Each shirt bears a tiny book that tells the whole history of the "Big" Shirt, and also contains a notarial declaration that the H.B.K. "Big" Shirt contains 39½ to 42 yards of material per dozen.

TELEPHONES FACE AS WELL AS VOICE.

A telephone arrangement by which a person speaking may also see the face of the person at the other end of the line has been invented by J. B. Fowler, of Portland Ore. Two months ago Mr. Fowler conceived the idea which, followed out, resulted in an apparatus which he exhibited last week for the first time. How far it will be possible to see the faces over the wire is yet to be demonstrated. To the observer appears an apparatus much resembling the front end of a large camera. There is also a telephonic transmitter. To see over the wire one puts his eyes to the tube which corresponds to the lens of a camera.

The car men on the Canadian Pacific east of Fort William have received an increase averaging 7 per cent. The rules for the government of the men have also been amended to their satisfaction. For weeks the joint protective board of the car men have been in Montreal holding conferences with General Manager McNichol. The C. P. R. strikers in the Winnipeg shops all returned to work quietly on Thursday morning, all departments going on as usual.

Vancouver, B. C., Dec., 10, 1904.

ACTIVE campaign work for City election has started, and from every indication it will be a spirited contest.

It has been usual in Vancouver to give the Mayor a second term, and we incline to the belief this year will prove no exception in the matter.

It has been stated that Dr. Brydone-Jack will not stand for re-election in Ward V., which is regretted by this section of Vancouver which the Doctor has served faithfully. Alderman Morton will be a candidate again, and though we have not agreed with him in his stand on many questions, he certainly has looked after Mt. Pleasant's interests zealously. Mr. W. Davis is out as aldermanic candidate and has many friends who are anxious to see him elected.

ALTHOUGH we have always opposed abolishing the ward system, we would heartily endorse the move to abolish equal expenditure in all wards. There is no doubt that Fairview and Mt. Pleasant need far more street improvement, electric light extension and water service than the other sections of the city, as both these wards are rapidly growing and being settled. Heretofore the wards in the down-town part of the city have share sliked in the appropriations but we believe the time has come when greater discrimination in this matter should be exercised.

The children of the North Arm Public School are busy preparing for a Concert and Xmas Tree to be held in their school on Tuesday evening December 20th. A committee of five have been appointed to canvass the neighborhood to secure funds to decorate the tree with presents Not content with this they have also studied the needs of the children for that particular evening. They know that if their boys and girls are going to speak and sing well they must be provided with well-filled stomachs and accordingly they have arranged to have refreshments for them.

HOW TO WIN A HUSBAND.

Woman's sphere in this 20th century is not limited any more than is man's. She can occupy almost any business position or profession, and yet the popular view of womanhood is that she best fits the position of wife and mother and head of the household. Every girl should know her heart and also know that her womanly system is equal to the strain of marriage. If a girl is nervous and irritable ten chances to one it is due to some trouble peculiar to womanhood.

Cupid has no place in a girl's heart if she is nervous and irritable, feels dragged down, worn out for no reason that she can think of. The weak back, dizzy spells and black circles about the eyes are only symptoms. Go to the source of the trouble and correct the irregularity. Stop the drains on the womanly system and the other symptoms will disappear. This can be done easily and intelligently. So sure of it is the World's Dispensary Medical Association, the proprietors of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, that they offer $500 reward for women who cannot be cured of leucorrhea, female weakness, prolapsus, or falling of the womb. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

"Your 'Favorite Prescription' cured me of ulceration and inflammation, from which I suffered for many years," writes Mrs. Delphia Wheaton, President Santa Barbara Lawn Tennis Club, Arlington Hotel, Santa Barbara, Calif. "Health was completely broken down when I began its use and I was in dreadful pain most of the time, but ten bottles cured me."

"Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well. Accept no substitute for the medicine which works wonders for weak women.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the most desirable laxative for delicate women.

A By-law to raise by way of Debentures the sum of $100,000.00 for the extension and improvement of the water-works system of the City of Vancouver:

WHEREAS it is deemed experient to raise by way of debentures $100,000.00 for the extension and improvement of the Water Works system of the City of Vancouver:

AND WHEREAS it is necessary for the purposes aforesaid that the City should raise by way of debentures a loan of $100,000.00, repayable on the 1st day of February, A. D., 1945, with interest in the meantime payable half-yearly at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, such loan when raised to be applied for the purposes aforesaid;

AND WHEREAS for the payment of the said debentures when due, and for the interest thereon during the currency of the said debentures, it will be necessary to raise and levy each year the sum of $5,270.00.

AND WHEREAS for the payment of the debt when due it will be necessary to raise and levy in each year the sum of $1,270.00 by special rate sufficient therefore in each year on all the rateable property of the City of Vancouver;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the whole rateable property of the City of Vancouver, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is $24,138,225.00.

AND WHEREAS the total amount of the existing debenture debt of the city is $3,050,951.20, irrespective of debts incurred for local improvements, of which none of the principal or interest is in arrears;
